Looking for outgoing people.

$10 per hour min.

Photography at social events. No experience necessary.

Email
steve@visual-technology.com

Lewisburg Area High School Presents Fall Play 2000

Friday, November 17 8:00 PM
Saturday, November 18 Adults-$3.00
High School Auditorium Children-$2.00

The Wizard of

OZ

Proceeds benefit- MARIAH QUANT Memorial Fund
Tickets available at the door

A Dramatization in two acts by Anne Coulter Martens.
Produced by special arrangement with the Dramatic Publishing Company.

SIPA
COLUMBIA UNIVERSITY SCHOOL OF INTERNATIONAL AND PUBLIC AFFAIRS

Prepare yourself for leadership positions in the public, nonprofit, and private sectors.

With a curriculum unsurpassed in diversity and scope—from regional institutes covering the globe to programs focused on international finance and business, human rights, media, environmental policy, social welfare policy, public and nonprofit management, and other skill- and policy-based concentrations—SIPA trains tomorrow's leaders to meet the challenges of the 21st century.

SIPA's 10,000 alumni are at work managing organizations and shaping policy in local communities and around the world. Find out how you can join this dynamic, cutting-edge group of professionals.

Learn about our degree programs:

- Executive Master of Public Administration
- Master of International Affairs

For more information, please call (212) 854-6216.
sipa_admission@columbia.edu www.columbia.edu/cu/sipa

Ghezzi's
Restaurant Lounge

Fresh Seafood, Veal, Chicken, Steaks, & Homemade Pastas

Open Wed. - Sat. 5pm - 10pm
570. 648. 0180

Located on Rt. 61 - Between Sunbury & Shamokin

Selinsgrove 15 N. → 155 → Lewisburg
River → Sunbury
Rt. 61 → Ghezzi's → Rt. 61 → Shamokin
Rt. 187 → Bloomsburg
Catawissa

Approx: 30 min. from Bucknell & Susquehanna U.
40 min. from Bloomsburg U.

Complete Wine List - Cocktail Lounge

Every Wed. - 2 for $13.99

Every Thurs. - Italian Night

Early Bird - Thurs. thru Sat.
2 for $13.99 (5pm - 6pm)

Reservations Recommended

Sports

Bison hope a versatile attack can overcome inexperience

After losing five seniors, Bison hope to achieve Patriot League contention behind captains Brian Bailey and Jake Ramage

By Andrew Burr

With a Patriot League head coach Pat Flannery calls "more wide open" than in recent years, and with a very well-prepared freshman recruit class, the Bison have every reason to expect big things this season beginning right here Saturday night.

Despite losing five seniors to graduation in the off-season, including All Patriot League selections Dan Bowen and Valtor Karavanic from up front, Flannery believes his team this year is a more versatile group than was last year's. The team welcomes nine newcomers and, although co-captain Brian Bailey '02 is the only returning starter, four sophomores who each played in more than 20 games last season will add stability and experience to a very young team.

Additionally, guard and co-captain Jake Ramage '01 and forward Peter Santos '02 will be back on the floor after both suffered season-ending injuries last year. Santos, who broke his femur early last season, "has the bounce and quickness back we didn't see last year," according to Flannery.

A strong return for Ramage will be a key to early Bison success, as the once-dangerous three-point threat and newly appointed captain will be looked to this year not only for offense but also for leadership.

"It's an ongoing process," admits Ramage, who has been actively engaged in physical therapy during the off-season to help return strength, flexibility and endurance to the injury.

"There are times when he still gets a little tired but we couldn't be any happier with where he is," Flannery stated. "He gives us so much—we missed him a lot."

Despite a respectable 17-win season last year, the Bison and Flannery feel improvement is both a necessary and attainable goal. "We think a 20 win season is possible; we think we have a good shot at winning the division," Ramage said.

"The expectations never change," Flannery said. "Kids here expect to be very good—they didn't come here to be mediocre. We expect to be able to win any of those games on our schedule."

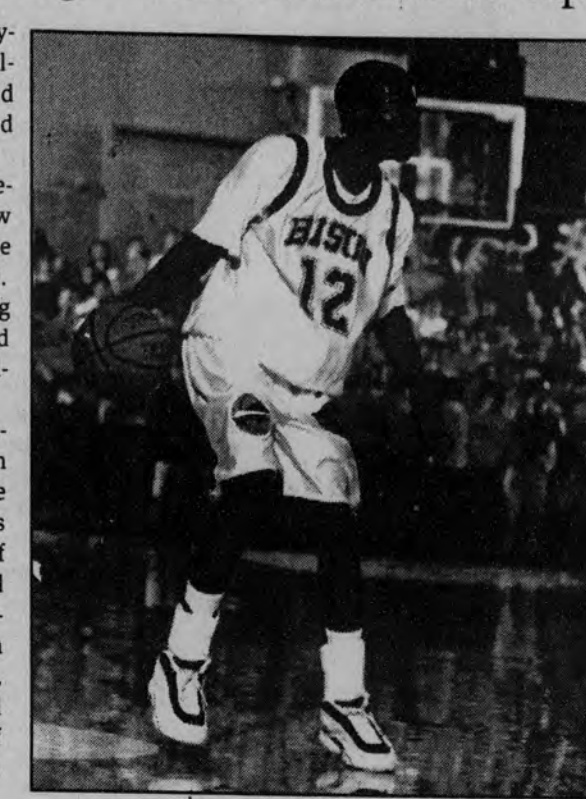

What's more, the players seem motivated by a less-than-generous fifth place ranking in the Patriot League Preseason Poll. Bucknell follows (in order) Navy, Lafayette, Holy Cross and Colgate. They were ranked ahead of only Lehigh and Army.

"The rankings are premature—they don't know the type of players we have in this gym," Ramage said. Flannery agreed, stating that the polling should "only make us work harder."

One of the biggest intangibles about the team and a large reason for the low preseason ranking this year is the abundance of youth this Bison team will rely on. An early scrimmage against the Lehigh Leopards, despite a loss, gave the coach a good chance to see how many of the freshmen looked on the court.

"Looking at our program, I am seeing lots of new faces," Flannery said. For success to come swiftly and easily this year, many of those new faces will need to make some sort of impact on the team early on. Seventy per-

Brian Bailey '02 is Bucknell's only returning starter.

But the transition for first year players to college ball is many times a live-and-learn process, especially at a school like Bucknell.

"It can be difficult at times to make the adjustment and be able to perform academically and on the floor," Jeremiah Bennet '04 said. "As a freshman, you want to come in and not show any weakness. Encouragement from guys on the team can mean a lot."

Flannery says that he sees "the right ingredients" in the team, and success this season will depend on how much the group matures and plays together. In the backcourt, the Bison will be paced by Ramage at off-guard and the point-man Bailey. Preseason injuries to Chris Zimmerman '03 (cyst in foot) and Matt Quinn '04 (high contusion) may mean bigger roles for Jack Namvov '04 and Mike Seek '01. Dan Blankenship '03 and Nyambi Nyambi '01 will continue to provide Flannery with experience off the bench for more flexibility during the game.

The forward positions, previously filled by departed seniors Dyrka Cameron and Valtor Karavanic, will be another heavily competed for slot. Santos will likely be one of the starters, but Boakai Lalugba '03, Jordan Hardenbergh '03 and Bennet will all be vying for the second start.

The team will begin the season without a designated center, said Flannery, in light of the broken hand Brian Werner suffered. "The cast is off, and we're hoping any day now he'll come back," Flannery said. In the meantime, the coach plans on possibly using Bennet or 6'11" freshman Davorin Skornik to station himself underneath the basket.

According to Nyambi, success this year will be a combination of many things. "We need to have the same common goals, be on the same page as a team and we need to maintain that," he said.

Flannery's hopes for the team, and the season as a whole, are high. "Any given day in this division you will see some very good, very competitive basketball," he said. "And we fully intend to get right in that mix."

Women set sights on the Patriot League championship

Return of four starters from second-place 1999-2000 squad has Bison confident that they can challenge for league title

By Carmen Mauriello

What is the formula for a championship team?

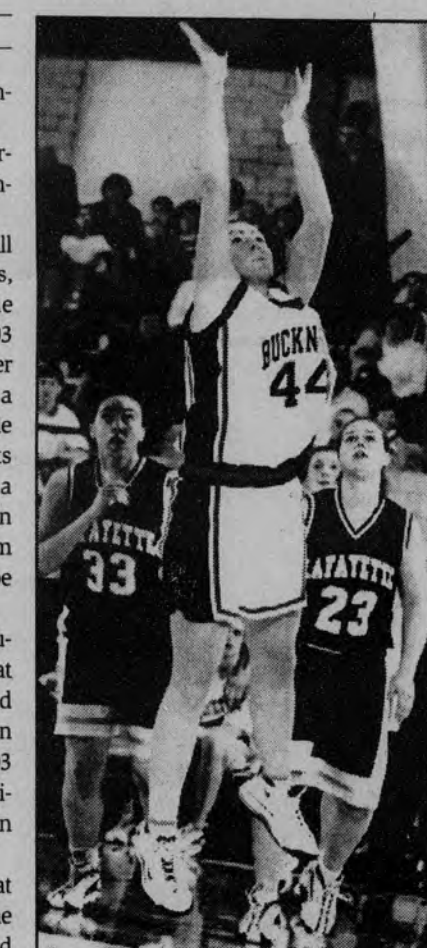

Key variables are definitely past performance, returning starters and chemistry.

The Bucknell women's basketball team hopes that returning four starters, including last year's Patriot League Rookie of the Year in Molly Creamer '03 and this year's preseason league Player of the Year in Vicky Quimby '02, from a team that advanced to the league title game will form the foundation of its championship formula. It hopes that a year's experience of playing as a unit, an intense offseason conditioning program and the addition of five freshmen will be the final pieces to the puzzle.

The Bison return with a strong nucleus from last year's 15-15 squad that finished second in the Patriot League, led by veterans Quimby, Creamer, captain Monique LeBlanc '02, Kate Franks '03 and Kate Rounsley '02. Although the Bison have a wealth of experience, a scan of their roster will find no seniors.

"I know that every season I say that we're young, and I know that at some point people are going to doubt me and say that we have to be getting older," Head Coach Kathy Fedorjka said. "But with no seniors on our roster, six juniors, two sophomores and five freshmen, we still are relatively young."

"But the good thing about that youth is that a good deal of our juniors and certainly our sophomore class is very experienced. So [our youth] is a bit deceiving."

Courtesy of Athletic Communications
Preseason MVP Vicky Quimby '02.

In the backcourt, the Bison will have to replace tri-captain and co-leading scorer Lori Houck '00, who Fedorjka called "one of the best players in Bucknell history." But the guard slots are left in able hands with the sophomore duo of Creamer (15.8 pts/game in 99-00) and Franks (9.6 pts/game), who could emerge as the most dynamic backcourt in the conference.

In the paint, the Bison are strong with two returning starters—LeBlanc at the small forward position and preseason league MVP pick Quimby at power forward. The 6-0 Quimby earned this distinction after a stellar sophomore campaign, where she averaged 13.1 points and a team-high 8.9 rebounds per outing.

Quimby is aware of the pressure associated with the title, but she's trying not to think about it with the conference schedule still so far away.

"I try not to focus on the accolades I've got," Quimby said. "I know other teams do, but I think that [both the team and I] will benefit from having a more balanced attack."

Fedorjka agreed that Quimby hasn't let the pressure affect her. "[Quimby's] played the best basketball I've ever seen her play since she was named preseason Player of the Year," Fedorjka said.

After the departure of senior tri-captains Jen Winhofer and Lyndsay Earhart, Rounsley will step into the starting center role after seeing time in 29 games last season. Seeing key minutes at center will also be freshman Jade Fleming, who averaged 14 points and 11 rebounds in her senior year at Kenmore East High School in Tonawanda, NY.

Fleming is one of five freshmen who promise to add depth to the Bucknell lineup. Fedorjka stated that three of the freshmen could be thrown "directly into the mix" for the Bison; Fleming, guard Desiree Almend and forward Kristin Valder.

The team's sights are undoubtedly set on the Patriot League crown, and its second-place ranking in the preseason Patriot League poll justified this goal. The preseason favorite was defending champion Holy Cross, who left the Bison with a bitter taste in their mouth in last year's title game.

"I watched that game three times this summer and saw how we buckled under the pressure," Creamer said. "Mentally we've got to get better to handle the full court press that they gave us."

Fedorjka believes that this year's Bucknell squad has closed the talent gap with Holy Cross, and may have the edge in the backcourt.

Bucknell's team chemistry is much improved after an intense summer workout schedule that gained the Bison valuable experience in playing as a unit.

"This postseason there was more of a team focus," LeBlanc said. "Everyone talked a lot about [out goals], and we expected more out of each other."

Fedorjka stated that the players' commitment has translated into improvements across the board.

"Our sophomores and juniors all returned better than they were last year, and you can't say that about every team," Fedorjka said.

The Bison begin their drive towards the Patriot League Championship by hosting future league foe American University this Saturday at 6:00 p.m. this Saturday. The team's 2000-2001 schedule consists of a steady helping of non-conference opponents until the New Year, followed by the team's "second season" of home-and-away series against Patriot League rivals.

"It's a challenging but realistic schedule, carefully planned with us having no seniors," Fedorjka said. "Every game will be competitive and will prepare us for conference play."

the BookStore AT BUCKNELL

Holiday Specials

For Your Traveling Pleasure!
20%-OFF Audio Books
Nov. 20th

20%-OFF Calendars
(In Stock Items Only)
November 27th thru December 2nd

Purity Candy Promo
Nov. 27th thru Dec. 1st
Don't know their size? Give a gift of Purity Candy!

JEWELRY PROMO
Nov. 29th, 30th & Dec. 1st
In LC MAIL
BU ID Accepted

Watch for the Bookstore's 2nd Annual (New & Improved!) Late Night Shopping brochure due out in early December.

20%-OFF all DVD & Recorded Videos
November 30th & December 1st only

Public Safety Log

November 22, 2000
ACT 64/CONFISCATED
DRUG PARAPHERNALIA—A University employee reported to a Public Safety that upon holiday room inspection, a bong was observed in a room at Vedder Hall. The paraphernalia was confiscated by Public Safety and Lewisburg Police was notified.

BU PROPERTY DAMAGE—A University employee reported that two construction trailers and parking signs were vandalized by placing toilet paper around the trailers and by pulling down the portable signs. The incident is under investigation.

November 23, 2000
INFORMATION/MEDICAL AIDED—Public Safety responded to a private home on Fraternity Road for the report of an ill visitor. The individual was transported to Evangelical Community Hospital Emergency Room by ambulance.

November 26, 2000
MEDICAL ASSIST—Public Safety responded to the Fieldhouse for the report of a student with a nose injury. A Student Health Services driver transported the individual to Evangelical Community Hospital Emergency Room for treatment and later the student returned to campus.

November 27, 2000
MEDICAL—Public Safety responded to Roberts Hall for the report of an employee with chest pains. The individual was transported to Evangelical Community Hospital Emergency Room for treatment.

November 28, 2000
MEDICAL ASSIST—Public Safety responded to the Fieldhouse for the report of an employee with a face laceration. A Student Health Services driver transported the individual to Evangelical Community Hospital Emergency Room for treatment and later returned him to campus.

PL From page 1

Despite the setback, the presidents pushed forward, contemplating the idea of taking their experience to the next level—a conference that would prioritize academics before athletics.

"No one involved wanted to compromise academic achievement for athletic success," Sojka said. "We hoped that we would be viewed as setting a tone for the nation that others might emulate. Not everything we wished for happened."

While the road to creating the Patriot League was bumpy, the presidents ultimately devised a prototype that spawned the current conference, which, despite numerous changes, places a paramount focus on academics while maintaining a formidable athletic alliance.

The presidents may not have fully accomplished their initial goals, but Sojka, despite the possible changes that may take place next month, speaks of the result with pride: "Bucknell can be very proud of the role it played in a noble experiment. And, in the long run, by rubbing shoulder pads with like-minded schools, it helped the University in its effort to build a national reputation."

Pollock believes that the member institutions will act responsibly no matter the decision.

With the recent release of John Feinstein's book, The Last Amateurs, which chronicles the 1999-2000 Patriot League men's basketball season, Pollock believes the student-athlete model will remain as the first and foremost priority for the conference.

"I'm not alarmed, because I think as The Last Amateurs most recently makes clear, the most striking and admirable thing about the Patriot League is the 'other thing' [the emphasis on the student-athlete]," he said.

"That is what I would protect with every fiber of my being," Pollock said.

When I hear the music, it reminds me of my grandmother.

I remember the way she'd make me feel secure. I want that same security when I invest my money. That's why I decided on U.S. Savings Bonds. I like knowing things are where I put them, and that they'll stay there. Savings Bonds are backed by the full faith and credit of the United States. And my Payroll Savings Plan lets me save something each payday.

Ask your employer or banker about saving with U.S. Savings Bonds. For all the right reasons.

A public service of this newspaper

If you don't pick up The Bucknellian next week, you're going to miss the BIG surprise

Gore won't back down in Florida

Refusing to recognize the recount certification, Gore continues legal challenge

By Brian Watson

Despite Florida's certification of Texas Governor George W. Bush as the winner of its 25 electoral votes, Democratic candidate Al Gore refused to back down.

Gore lawyers have prepared an appeal seeking a recount of disputed ballots, determined to reveal over 10,000 votes in Miami-Dade county that he believes will put him over the top.

Top-ranking Republicans have brought pressure on the Vice President to concede victory to Bush and have worked to influence Democrats to urge their candidate to stand down.

In addition, The Washington Post reported Wednesday that many top Gore aides were rallying for the Vice President to concede to Bush.

The Republican-dominated Florida legislature appears ready to step in at any point; the state's governor, Jeb Bush, the Republican candidate's brother, said he would sign a bill naming 25 new electors if Gore continues to dispute last week's certification.

While Democrats will certainly protest, the governor's intervention may be the only remedy to the seemingly never-ending courtroom drama.

Bush's former rival, Arizona Senator John McCain, resurfaced on "The Larry King Show" to support Bush. Referring to the ongoing contest as "bad fiction," McCain said that statements made by his close friend, Democratic Vice Presidential candidate Joe Lieberman, have been wrong.

He said that the legal disputes were not the correct solution: "...this is great fodder for the late shows and the comedians, but at a certain point it gets serious."

Despite the Florida certification, the General Services Administration, the federal agency charged with appropriating transition funds, has refused to do so until the election results are certified.

In response, the Republican ticket disclosed an address where funds can be sent to support its transition process.

Bush opened a transition facility in McLean, Va. yesterday as he prepared for a meeting with retired General Colin Powell, his likely nominee for Secretary of State.

The Associated Press reported that Powell's aides said he would accept the post if offered, adding more ammunition to a cabinet said to have more potential than any other in the past twenty years.

Weeks ago, students voted in the Weis Center, but today the election still hinges on disputed ballots in several Florida counties.

The Texas Governor has recruited the help of his father's former cabinet aides as well as many anti-Clinton Republicans who want to put the contest to an end, fearing that Bush would face formidable adversity if officially elected, much like Clinton faced following his impeachment proceedings.

Meanwhile, Democratic leaders rushed to Gore's aide—much more so than during his presidential campaign—to ensure a viable solution to the election crisis.

Despite preliminary efforts by the Bush/Cheney camp to recruit a prominent Democrat into their cabinet, Gore allies have grown in droves, pledging their allegiance to any decision the vice president makes regarding further legal contest of the Florida recount.

On NBC's "Today" show Wednesday, Gore maintained that he still has a 50-50 chance of winning the election. In an interview with CNN, the vice president said, "The people of Florida have the right to select the candidate for president that they want. If the politicians ever tried to take that away from the people, I think you'd see quite a negative response to it."

Oregon election officials declared Gore the winner of the state's seven electoral votes yesterday, as final recounts had the Vice President ahead by 6,765 votes. The Republicans can order a recount before Dec. 12, though the prospect seems unlikely.

Write for News

It's the coolest.

Call Laura, x7-4470

The first snowfall of the season hit campus this week—although the storm was short-lived, it is a sign that winter is around the corner.

CAMPAIGN From page 1

$18.3 million in order to strengthen the University's academic programs through new endowment. From the funding raised by the Campaign, the University has begun an endowed chair program to help attract and retain exceptional faculty.

The two endowed chairs established during the campaign are the Robert L. Rooke Chair in the Historical and Social Context of Engineering, and the William H. Dunkak Chair of Finance. According to a University Relations release, these positions provide the recipients with additional resources for "scholarly travel and research."

Other academic objectives, satisfied by funds from the Campaign, include the Equipment and Instrumentation Fund, the Undergraduate Research Fund, the Teaching and Curricular Innovation Fund, the Fund for the Bertrand Library and the Diversity and Outreach Fund.

Maybe the most conspicuous changes as a result of the Campaign are the new buildings and facilities. Opened this fall, the Sigfried Weis Music Building was the first of the campaign-financed projects to be completed. It has been a source of compliments all semester.

With a 176-seat recital hall, students and faculty have an on-site location for all their performances. The building also includes multimedia classrooms, a new computer music studio and an expanded music library. Practice rooms remain unlocked and the facility is open to all students, both music and non-music majors.

Continuing to expand the University's facilities, construction for The O'Leary Psychology and Geology Center is scheduled to begin this spring. It will be the last phase in the science complex, which currently includes the Rooke Chemistry Building, the Biology Building and Olin Science.

The University's nationally renowned psychology program will greatly benefit from the facility, which will bring all research facilities (except the private lab) and faculty offices closer together. The project should be finished by the fall of 2002.

Also making its debut in the fall of 2002 will be the Recreation and Athletics Center. This state-of-the-art facility will house a 54-meter Olympic swimming pool, locker rooms and offices, a new fitness center and instructional conditioning area, a new suite for sports medicine, and a new 4,000-seat gymnasium.

This new top-notch fitness facility will allow all students and faculty to maintain a healthy balance between scholarship and recreation. It will also help the University remain competitive in the Patriot League and in the recruitment of top athletes.

Lastly, but perhaps most importantly, is the increase in endowment for financial aid. Thousands of donors have allocated money to establish endowed scholarships.

Rogers said, "These scholarships have greatly strengthened our financial aid program and allowed us to increase 'preferential aid,' financial aid that is used in place of loans as part of our need-based scholarships."

Being the largest monetary sector of the campaign, financial aid endowment is also one of the fastest growing divisions of the University's operating budget.

The principal objective in increasing financial aid endowment was to build insurance so that all qualified students will have the opportunity to attend the University, no matter what their ability to pay. Over $71 million has already been donated to financial aid endowment, which has sparked 226 new scholarships, 184 of which are fully funded.

With one month remaining in the Bucknell Campaign, there are feelings of both success and inspiration. Many of the objectives of the campaign are perennial needs, such as endowed financial aid and annual support.

Although the heart of the campaign will conclude on December 31st, Rogers emphasized that, "Bucknell is a great university with a wonderful future in store for it. And, we need people's help. We need them to be a part of the Bucknell family. We need their support on an annual basis."

However, this new year will also be a time to commemorate the successes of The Bucknell Campaign and to be proud of being a Bucknellian. Kinney said, "Remember we can, in partnership, own an interest in the greatness of what we have built together."

World Briefs

Peace Prospects Uncertain as Israel Looks to New Election

JERUSALEM (CNN) — The coming tide of new elections in Israel set off a wave of speculation on Wednesday, as opposition politicians planned for a new prime minister and the incumbent, Ehud Barak, vowed to forge ahead with his efforts to find peace with the Palestinians. By telling the legislators on Tuesday he was ready for an early vote, Barak pre-empted the movement by the Knesset — Israel's parliament — to dissolve his government, which lost popularity as the peace process collapsed and the Palestinian conflict re-ignited.

Thousands riot after ex-Albanian president's arrest

TIRANA, Albania — Thousands of rioters have battled with police in Tirana during demonstrations over the arrest of former President Sali Berisha.

Police sent in reinforcements and also stepped up numbers in the northern town of Tropoja on Wednesday after Berisha's arrest before dawn in Tirana.

Berisha was briefly detained by police after his followers stormed a courthouse and set it on fire on Tuesday in Tropoja. Riot police responded by firing at the crowd.

43 fishermen missing after cyclone lashes India

MADRAS, India — Indian authorities said Wednesday that 43 fishermen were missing after a severe cyclone tore across India's southern Tamil Nadu state. No official casualties were reported after the tropical storm moved inland from the Bay of Bengal, tipping up trees and roofs across the coast near the port town of Cuddalore, 111.8 miles south of Madras. A government official in Cuddalore told Reuters by telephone that the missing fishermen had been at sea since Sunday.

U.S., Russia seeks arms embargo against Afghanistan's Taliban

UNITED NATIONS — U.S. and Russian officials are calling for an arms embargo against Afghanistan's ruling Taliban in an effort to shut down terrorist training camps and the flow of drugs.

A draft resolution could be introduced in the U.N. Security Council on Thursday, said Peter van Walsum, council president and The Netherlands' ambassador to the United Nations.

Washington hopes the measure would persuade the Taliban's leaders to turn suspected terrorist Osama bin Laden over to U.S. officials, who want him to stand trial in connection with terrorist attacks on two U.S. embassies.

Serbs capture strategic village from rebels

LUCANE, Yugoslavia — Serbian police have retaken a strategic village on the edge of a contested zone between Serbia and Kosovo from ethnic Albanian rebels.

There were no clashes with the rebels on Wednesday when police, backed up by two armored vehicles and armed with automatic weapons, entered Lucane.

Most of Lucane's 1,000 ethnic Albanians had earlier fled the village, leaving behind only elderly residents.

20,000 protesters in Manila urge Estrada to step down

MANILA, Philippines — Tens of thousands of Filipinos marched on the presidential palace in Manila on Wednesday, calling on President Joseph Estrada to quit his post before his impeachment trial begins in the Philippine Senate next week.

About 20,000 demonstrators cheered as they burned a six-meter (20-foot) effigy of Estrada, the former actor who has denied charges that he accepted bribes from illegal gambling syndicates.

Manila police were on alert as the protest began, ready with water cannon to remove protesters "should they block traffic with their sit-down lightning strikes," according to police director Arvelino Razon. Organizers of the protests, however, promised peaceful activities.

Gore to ask Florida's top court for immediate recount

As Al Gore pushes for an immediate hand recount of disputed Florida ballots, his legal team Wednesday plans to ask an appeals court to intervene, CNN learned from a Gore campaign source. Democrats, already in state court to contest the certified election results, will take the case to an appellate court, hoping to speed up the process. A related appeal is being filed with the Florida Supreme Court as well.

The development comes as election officials in Miami-Dade and Palm Beach counties are preparing to send thousands of disputed Florida ballots via police caravans to the state capital in Tallahassee, where a state judge may — or may not — order them recounted.

Investigators say controllers set planes on deadly course

BRADENTON, Florida (AP) — Air traffic controllers in different cities put a warplane and a Cessna on a deadly collision course and belatedly tried to warn them away, the National Transportation Safety Board said in a preliminary report.

Controllers in Miami told two P-16 jets to descend as they prepared for a practice bombing run, while controllers in Tampa instructed the Cessna to climb.

The Tampa controllers tried to warn Cessna pilot, Jacques Olivier, of the two military planes just before the crash, but got no response, Tuesday's report said.

FBI searching Los Alamos landfill for missing tapes

LOS ALAMOS, New Mexico (AP) — FBI agents resumed their digging in a snow-covered county landfill on Wednesday in a search for computer tapes containing nuclear weapons data from the Los Alamos National Laboratory.

The agents had used a bulldozer to move mounds of garbage Tuesday and erected a large floodlight to work late into the night in the search for missing tapes on which former nuclear scientist Wen Ho Lee downloaded the restricted information.

Lee has said he destroyed the tapes. If anything were thrown into the trash at the landfill, the landfill is one place it could end up, lab spokesman James Rickman said.

Compiled by Laura Day
Courtesy of CNN.com

Students push for extra reading days

By Heather Napolitano

The Bucknell Student Government (BSG) Committee on Academic Affairs is currently conducting a reevaluation process of the University's present reading day schedule.

The effort, which began in the spring of 2000, has primarily focused on eliciting student response to determine academic needs.

"A lot of people expressed concern [about the current schedule]," committee chair Michael Gross '03 said. "We wanted to find out what students really want."

Recognizing the need to address the issue, the committee distributed a questionnaire to students during the last academic year. The responses to that questionnaire were then used to formulate a survey distributed to students on Oct. 30 of this year.

According to BSG President Marsha Lewis '02, the committee took into consideration reading day scheduling at other colleges and universities.

"Our frame of reference schools generally have two to three days," Lewis said.

The survey proposed two potential options for alterations in the reading day schedule. The first would be to extend the reading day to Wednesday and Thursday and hold final exams from Friday of that week through Friday of the following week.

The second would, again, extend reading day to Wednesday and Thursday, but finals would be held from Friday to Thursday of the following week.

lowing week with exams held on Saturday as well.

Students were also given the option of selecting the current scheduling as most favorable.

Excluding the freshman class, who have not yet participated in the final exam process, 17 percent of students returned a completed survey.

"We found that to be a very good response," Gross said.

Of those students, 59 percent said that they would not yet participate in an extra reading day; 39 percent voted in favor of finals extending through Friday, while 20 percent voted in favor of finals on Saturday.

The latter, however, has since been removed as a potential option as some students have religious conflicts with taking exams on a Saturday.

The remaining 41 percent of students expressed a desire for the schedule to remain unchanged.

"Slightly more students wanted to see a change," Lewis said. "We had expected an overwhelming number of students to want an extra reading day."

BSG subsequently presented the information they had compiled to the Committee on Instruction

If the University did decide to institute these changes, Lewis felt they would ideally occur next semester.

Students have expressed a desire for an additional reading day during finals.

(COI)—a group composed largely of faculty that focuses on academic affairs at the University.

BSG has not yet approved a significant number of additional faculty members for input on this matter. According to Gross, the few who have responded felt it necessary for students to express a strong interest in altering the schedule if changes in the academic calendar are to be made.

ter, but would realistically occur next year. However, Gross does not expect to see any alterations made in the near future.

"At this point I don't think there will be any changes," he said. "We need a really strong response from a large majority of the student body for [the University] to seriously consider change. I don't think there is currently enough want for change to do anything about it."

Giving Tree project promotes goodwill

By Jennifer Jenchura

With finals looming and cold weather approaching, students looking to get into that holiday deliver gifts to nursing homes, state facilities and human services agencies.

Under the supervision of Associate Dean of Students Ruth

All are encouraged to sign out a flake and return the gift by Dec. 12. Requests from area agencies are limited to the $15-$25 range. "The flakes go as fast as we children in desperate situations around the world.

In some cases, the shoebox gifts sent are the only Christmas gifts these children receive. They asked members of the University community to donate such items as school items, personal hygiene items, gloves and scarves, dolls or small stuffed animals and even candy. Thanks to the University's generosity, earlier this month the Chapel Congregation sent out 22 boxes.

"The program provides an opportunity for individuals of all ages to be involved in a simple, hands-on missions project that reaches out to suffering children while focusing on the true meaning of Christmas," Rooke Chapel Congregation President Gina Conenello said.

The project is in collaboration with Franklin Graham's Samaritan's Purse organization. Franklin Graham is the son of well-known evangelist Billy Graham. In 1999, the organization collected over three million shoeboxes worldwide and distributed them to children in some 60 countries.

"The congregation began the program last year, and this year they invited the Bucknell community to participate too," said Service Coordinator for the Rooke Chapel Congregation Matt Fawcett.

"[The project] was a success. It seems likely that the Chapel Committee will continue this project in the future. It is unknown whether we will attempt to make it a larger project or keep it small."

Both organizations thanked the community for its overwhelming generosity.

Students can visit the Giving Tree in the LC lobby to pick from cards with requested gifts from local children.

spirit can visit the Giving Tree in the LC lobby.

Two campus organizations, the Rooke Chapel Congregation and the Community Service Team, are working to make the holidays happier for people around the world.

The Giving Tree has been an annual holiday gift-giving program involving over 500 faculty, staff and students.

Volunteers provide, wrap and can put them on. It takes about four hours to tie up every 100 flakes," said Community Service Team Member Michelle Payne '02.

Earlier this semester, the Rooke Chapel Congregation undertook the Operation Christmas Child project, under the supervision of University Chaplain Ian Oliver.

Their goal was to assemble shoeboxes full of presents for even a student broadcasting station.

CABLE From page 1

While the issue appears to have solid support from many community members, there are several obstacles that need to be carefully considered.

Day asserts that the main concern is the cost of the installation of cable—between $750,000 and $1,000,000.

Additional costs, including maintenance, upkeep and servicing would be negotiated between the University and the cable company.

While this is a substantial long-term investment that the University may choose to take, several community members are worried that television may soon be run via Internet lines, eliminating the need for a massive cable installation.

Representatives of Information Services and Resources (ISR) worry that the technology revolution could eliminate the need for such an investment.

The technology that could make the cable installations obsolete is anywhere from two to approximately 10 years away.

In addition to the overall cost of the installation and the technology concern regarding cable on campus, Ferraro was apprehensive about the individual student costs of the expansion.

In the negotiations with CATV, Day explained that the University would have four cable packages available to contract: the basic 15 channels, 50+ channels that are already in place in Bucknell West (Mods), 50+ channels including HBO and other premium channels and the last package includes Pay-Per-View options.

Whichever package the University decides to contract, it is unclear whether the students will be required to purchase cable per room or if the student will have the option to purchase the package in his/her respective room.

"I worry because some students do not have the discretionary income to be able to purchase these amenities," Ferraro said. "We do not want to hurt these students on a tight budget [by forcing them to buy the cable]."

However, the overall total cost to the University would be greatly reduced if the cable package to students were made a mandatory payment.

If the University were to install the new cable lines, Ferraro said that the cost would be a reasonable price for every student. According to the poll conducted by BSG earlier this semester, 67 percent of 400 students said they'd be willing to pay the cost of having the amenity in their own room.

While a historically popular issue on students' "wish-list," cable TV available "outside" of the Residence Hall lounges has the potential to become a tremendous achievement for BSG.

"BSG deserves a lot of credit—they have been doing a great job with this issue," Ferraro said.

BSG Executive Board elections to be held Tuesday

PRESIDENT

TAYLOR SCHREIBER '02

NATE SORBER '02

While Taylor Schreiber has no prior experience in the Bucknell Student Government, he has been an active member of the campus community in a variety of forums over the past several years. He has served as a member of the Residence Hall Association (RHA), as the secretary of Kappa Delta Rho Fraternity and currently as the chapter's vice president. Schreiber has also been selected as a member of the biology department's tenure committee.

"I will bring to BSG a fresh perspective, a new voice and the authority to articulate exactly what we, the students, require from the faculty and administration."

"I will bring to BSG a fresh perspective, a new voice and the authority to articulate exactly what we, the students, require from the faculty and administration."

—Taylor Schreiber

Nate Sorber has been an active member of the Bucknell Student Government for the past three semesters, first serving as a member of Congress and the Internal Affairs Committee and subsequently as the Executive Board's vice president of finance. Sorber has extended himself beyond BSG by serving on the Community Judicial Board, the Council on Greek Life, the University Planning and Budget Committee, and the Student Advisory Committee for the presidential search.

"I have learned that our student body has several different ideas in solving major issues, and I believe I am well qualified to bring those diverse beliefs together."

—Nate Sorber

"My ability to be open-minded in approaching issues will put me in an excellent position to be President," Sorber said. "I have learned that our student body has several different ideas in solving major issues, and I believe I am well qualified to bring those diverse beliefs together."

If elected, Sorber plans to follow through with current initiatives such as installation of cable television in campus dorms, improving the recreation sports, extending library hours and reevaluating the reading day scheduling. He further hopes to strengthen intercommunication between BSG and the student body to ensure that concerns are heard and met.

"I want to be available for the students when needed. I want to be looked upon as someone willing to listen who will be a strong voice for the students," he said.

VICE PRESIDENT FOR OPERATIONS

JEN COLLIER '03

JOE FLUTIE '03

MIKE GROSS '03

Jen Collier is in her third semester as a Class of 2003 congress member, where she chairs the Student Affairs Committee. She works on the Committee of Athletics and the Committee for Complimentary Activities. An active member of Pi Beta Phi sorority, Collier was one of two women chosen to attend the New Leadership Pennsylvania institute on women in politics.

"I have seen the way our student government works and I am excited to bring lots of new ideas to the executive board and to the position of VP of Operations," Collier said. "I am dedicated to BSG and motivated to get things done. As student affairs chair I have gained experience in knowing what the students want and understanding how to effectively work with the administration, faculty and trustees to see how it can get done, another key quality that the VP of Operations must have."

Collier, if elected, hopes to give BSG a stronger voice among the administration and trustees to help make student concerns a larger priority. She also wants to help make congress more "powerful and effective."

Although Joe Flutie has no previous BSG experience, he sees this as a plus. He believes that he can enter the Executive Board with "absolutely no bias or preconceived notions" toward members, clubs or other groups. He has served as treasurer of the Middle East Association, "small house" representative for RHA, a student athletic trainer, and an officer in Lambda Chi Alpha fraternity.

"As Vice President of Operations I would like to bring an end to the confusion that surrounds organizations being 'fully' or 'partially' recognized by BSG," Flutie said. "I would like to find logical and beneficial ways to use the some of the surplus that BSG will have next year and the years to come."

Most importantly, Flutie wants to give BSG a "more open feeling" toward the rest of the University community and make himself visible to help students and faculty with any concerns.

Mike Gross has been on BSG for three years, currently serving as the chair of the Academic Affairs Committee and vice president of the Class of 2003. He has also worked on the Committee on Instruction for three semesters. Gross has also been involved in the American Institute for Chemical Engineers, and now the Student Alumni Association.

Gross said, "I have a lot of experience on BSG and on numerous committees. During my time on BSG, I have seen where improvements need to be made and I am confident that I can lead BSG into these adjustments to a more productive student government."

If elected Vice President, Gross hopes to fix the discrepancy between fully- and partially-recognized organizations; he said it is BSG's duty to ensure that organizations have proper funding in order to function correctly.

ZERYAI HAGOS '03 did not reply to the questionnaire.

Candidates debate the issues

By Trevor Rutledge-Leverenz

While some people anticipate reading the news each morning to find out what is happening with the Florida recount, they do not realize that very important elections are happening right here on our campus in only a few days. It is time to vote for the executive branch of the Bucknell Student Government (BSG).

The open positions include President, Vice President of Operations, Vice President of Finance and Vice President of Administration. A debate was held Tuesday night at which candidates introduced themselves and answered questions from a small crowd of Bucknellians.

Katie Kohn '03 is running unopposed for Vice President of Administration.

Two students are running for Vice President of Finance, Jaynemarie Angbah '02 and Amir Sadaghiani '03.

Vice President of Operations, the liaison between the BSG and student organizations, has four candidates: Jen Collier '03, Joseph Flutie '03, Mike Gross '03, and Zeryai Hagos '03.

At the debates, each candidate had the opportunity to give a brief introduction explaining why they were the best for the job.

Hagos promised to "receive input from all the clubs and organizations, because that's what decisions should revolve around."

Gross stated that he "didn't like to leave things open ended," and continued that he would like to see policies "implemented while he's still in office."

Collier said she was "excited to bring new ideas to the job."

Flutie said that he would not make "promises or unrealistic plans," and that he would ensure that "clubs could come to [him] if they need help."

The last debate of the evening was between the two presidential candidates, Taylor Schreiber '02 and Current VP of Finance Nate Sorber '02, both presented their platforms and ideas for the upcoming BSG year.

Sorber promised to "look at all the ideas, from all the different constituencies and pockets, and leave at the door any notion that [his] ideas are always the right ideas."

Schreiber countered, saying, "there are issues that need to be dealt within the BSG. We need new ideas, a fresh start, and I would like to be that leader who brings the fresh start."

When asked what each would bring to the presidency, Sorber talked about his sense of humor, saying, "sometimes the meetings go on for hours, and people who are dinner together the night before are now at each other's throats. To deal with this you need a sense of humor, to keep the meetings as light as possible, and I can do that."

Schreiber told the crowd about himself, saying he was "a bit of a perfectionist," and that he is "an extremely dependable person who gets things done."

The elections will take place on Tuesday, Dec. 5th. Students can vote online at www.bucknell.edu or at computer stations in the Langone Center.

VP FOR FINANCE

JAYNEMARIE ANGBAH '02

Jaynemarie Angbah has worked one semester on BSG in the Appropriations Committee. She is the president of both the National Society of Black Engineers and the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People as well as serving on the Community Judicial Board and BASE.

"As a club leader, I feel that I understand the frustrations that many organizations face when appealing to the committee for funding or re-appropriating funds," she said. "Yet, while serving on Appropriations I have a greater understanding of the challenges that the committee faces when trying to distribute funds in a fair and equitable fashion."

As VP Finance, Angbah would try to make the Appropriations Committee more student-friendly so that organizational leaders will feel more comfortable presenting their concerns. She also hopes to gain a better understanding of each organization in order to distribute funds fairly and efficiently.

AMIR SADAGHIANI '03

Serving as a congress member for three semesters, Amir Sadaghiani has worked on both the Internal Affairs and Appropriations committees. A member of Phi Kappa Psi Fraternity, Sadaghiani helped found the Muslim Students Association and the Bucknell Jazz Machine in addition to participation in the Middle Eastern Association and RHA.

"I feel that I am very familiar with the working of BSG, especially the Appropriations Committee. I am a person who finishes what I begin. I am open to new ideas," he said. "I am willing to put the time in and work with the leaders of all student organizations, through what some see as a very confusing budgeting process."

If elected, Sadaghiani hopes to bring up inconsistencies in the budgeting process in order to ensure equal attention for every organization.

VP FOR ADMINISTRATION

KATIE KOHN '03

Katie Kohn, who runs unopposed for Vice President for Administration, has served as secretary/treasurer and congress member for the class of 2003 during her three semesters with BSG. Kohn also participates on the Writing Center Review Board and the Planning and Budget Committee, as well as working as a Residential Fellow to the Arts College and a DJ for WVBU. She will be traveling to Nicaragua this winter with the Bucknell Bridge.

gade.

"I feel like I am qualified for this position because of my experience, my leadership strength and a desire to make positive changes for our student body," Kohn said.

As Vice President, Kohn plans to better publicize BSG initiatives to bridge the gap between students and the organization as well as assist with internal matters.

To vote in Tuesday's BSG elections, go to: <http://www.orgs.bucknell.edu/bsg>

BUSINESS & POLITICS

Presidency goes to the courts

By Josh Guyan

The election was finally certified on Sunday with George W. Bush ahead by 537 votes, making him the winner of Florida's 25 electoral votes, and presumably the next President of the United States. HOLD IT. On Monday Al Gore officially contested the Florida election and filed lawsuits regarding the vote counting in three counties.

There is also the issue of the case before the United States Supreme Court filed by the Bush legal team. Bush filed the suit to challenge the decision made by the Florida Supreme Court, which extended the deadline for recounts to Nov. 26 from Nov. 21. The highest court in the land said it would hear oral arguments on Dec. 1.

Bush also sought to have the court declare unconstitutional the manual recount on the grounds that it was limited to a few counties. He intended to challenge that process on 14th Amendment Equal Protection Clause grounds. However, according to the Los Angeles Times the court turned down the constitutional argument preferring to rule on the issue in light of the Electoral Count Act of 1887.

The Act in question requires that, "any controversy" regarding the naming of electors to the Electoral College be decided based on "laws enacted prior to the day fixed for the appointment of the electors."

The Bush team claims the Florida Supreme Court violated that law when it extended the deadline because the court was, in effect, creating new law regarding the naming of electors. They say Florida law laid down a deadline of Nov. 21, which the court disregarded.

The Gore team obviously disputes that contention, saying the Florida high court simply was interpreting conflicting state laws. Florida law allows counties to do a manual recount, but the statutory deadline didn't give them enough time, so the court applied a remedy.

The Gore lawyers also point to a section of the Electoral Count Act that says if a state provides "judicial or other methods" for resolving election disputes, those procedures "shall be conclusive." They say the Florida high court's ruling was obviously a judicial method for resolving the election dispute.

The question that then presents itself is whether the U.S. Supreme Court decision will matter. If the court sides with Bush and rules that the vote should have been certified on November 21st then Bush wins. If it sides with Gore and upholds the Florida high court's deadline, Bush still wins. At most perhaps a ruling by Bush could give him some political legitimacy and could hurt Gore in the public relations war that will continue for the next four years.

The truly important lawsuits are those that Gore filed as part of his contest of the Florida election. Those could also end up in the U.S. Supreme Court, but they regard matters more consequential to the actual outcome of the election.

First, the contest in Miami-Dade County is over 388 manually counted votes that were discarded when that county decided to stop counting because it couldn't meet the deadline. The Gore team argues that counting those votes would involve a net gain for Gore of 157 votes.

Second, the contest in Palm Beach involves the fact that the county wasn't able to finish before Sunday's deadline. Florida Secretary of State Katherine Harris wouldn't accept the partial manual recount and wouldn't extend the deadline until 7:30 p.m. that night when the counting was finished.

According to Finding's Legal News Gore's people argue that accepting that recount would have added 215 votes to Gore's total. In addition, The New York Times reports that the Gore team will challenge "the standard used by the county board in judging dimpled ballots, which the Democrats have said discarded too many valid votes."

Lastly, the contest in Nassau County involves that county's decision to certify the original machine count from election night, rather than the legally mandated machine recount totals. Gore's team claims that decision robbed

Gore of 52 votes.

If Gore were to win all those contests and his numbers add up that would increase his vote total by 655 votes, giving him a 118-vote lead. This thing could drag on quite a bit longer. It does seem that public opinion is going somewhat against the vice president. In a recent Washington Post poll, almost 60 percent said they thought Gore should concede.

If public opinion continues to swing against Gore, his support among congressional Democrats could wane. They know at this point that a Bush presidency could be fantastic for their prospects in congressional elections in 2002. Democrats also believe Gore would have an almost automatic nomination as the Democratic challenger in the 2004 presidential election, but only if he doesn't alienate the public by dragging this election on too long.

Many Americans encourage Vice President Gore to drop his legal challenges.

Violence threatens to undo Barak

Weeks of violence have strengthened the Israeli opposition.

By Michael Boland

The most recent wave of deadly attacks in Israel may yet claim one more victim: Ehud Barak. Leader of the center-left coalition that currently governs, Barak's seeming inability to prevent terrorist violence has triggered a challenge from a rival political party and the real possibility of new leadership for the beleaguered Jewish state.

Though armed conflict between Israelis and Palestinians has been incessant since September, the violence leading towards the political challenge may be traced to incidents beginning on Monday, Nov. 13. On that day, four Israelis were killed in three separate drive-by shootings, prompting the Israeli military to close off borders to Palestinian-controlled villages located within Israel.

In response, Palestinian Authority leader Yasser Arafat declared a Palestinian cease-fire, but only in those areas controlled by Palestinians. The call to nonviolence, Arafat insisted, did not apply to Palestinians fighting in Israeli-controlled areas. With that in mind, a 30-year-old gunman with ties to Fatah (Arafat's political faction within the Authority) attacked an Israeli outpost the very next day. He murdered one soldier and wounded two others before Israeli forces killed him in a gunfight in Kfar Darom. The Israeli Cabinet, led by Ehud Barak, told the Associated Press that it was "considering" retribution but later decided against any direct response.

A horrific cycle emerged from this incident; death followed death as each side avenged lives taken by the other. Subsequent attacks, counterattacks and retaliations by both sides fell into a pattern, a gruesome predictability that borders on the mind numbing.

Nov. 19: an unsuccessful assassination attempt on an Israeli diplomat. No one claims responsibility. In a separate incident, two Palestinians die in a gunfight with Israeli troops. Nov. 20: a Palestinian mortar attack on a school bus full of children, wounding five Israeli children and killing two civilian Jews. The Palestinian Authority denies any connection to the attack; three fringe Muslim groups claim responsibility. This time, the Israeli cabinet authorizes retaliation, firing two dozen rockets into Palestinian-controlled Gaza City and wounding at least 20. Nov. 21: Israeli troops kill four Palestinians near a Jewish settlement in Gaza. As usual, Palestinians mourn the four as innocent civilians and Israelis claim that they were terrorists. Fatah explicitly vows to avenge these deaths. Just hours later, a bus in the Israeli town of Hadera is attacked by an exploding car, killing two and wounding 65 others. According to CNN, the bus was lifted off the ground by the force of the explosion and hurled through the front window of a bakery on the other side of the street. The Palestinian Authority again denies responsibility, and again Barak blames Arafat for the violence. Barak's Cabinet denounces the attack as "barbaric" but once more decides not to retaliate. Nov. 24: Palestinian militiamen kill two more Israelis, one soldier and one civilian. Nov. 26: one Israeli and four Palestinians killed. Violence spreads to the Israeli-Lebanon border, as Israel bombs Lebanese territories suspected of housing radical Hezbollah guerrillas. Nov. 27: Ramadan begins and a gunfight claims five Palestinians. Since September 28, 280 lives have been lost.

The Nov. 24 attack prompted Barak to explore publicly the possibility of a national emergency coalition that would include opposition leader Ariel Sharon. Sharon and his conservative allies in the Likud Party remained silent, but Arafat took the opportunity to reiterate that he would not negotiate if the hawkish Sharon were even at the table with Barak. Finally, on Nov. 27, Likud announced that it would petition the Supreme Court to force early elections. Sharon will not be joining Barak at the table, but he just might replace him.

Though Barak has offered extensive land-for-peace deals supported by the majority of Israelis, continued brutality and the bloodshed are a blot on the public image and legitimacy of his government. The course of future events in this region will hinge significantly on whether Barak maintains power or a more hawkish Likud administration prevails and tries a different track in dealing with Arafat. Barak himself may live on, but the longer the blood flows, the fainter grows the heartbeat of his political career.

During the recent violence in the Middle East, four Israelis were killed in three separate drive-by shootings.

Business & Politics is under new management! Tim is out, Mike is in! It's about time. That "subliminable" crack over there was his idea, I'm just indulging him as its his last week. I have nothing but respect for our president-elect, Bush, that is, Gore... enough, dude. God bless Ralph Nader. -MB

Clinton is the first U.S. President to visit Vietnam since 1969.

Clinton revisits ghosts of cold war

By Melissa Finklestein

Conflicting feelings met President Clinton in Vietnam on Nov. 19. The first U.S. President to visit Vietnam since 1969, Clinton arrived in Hanoi, greeted by thousands of Vietnamese. This trip signifies what could be the beginning of a new relationship between the United States and Vietnam: America's interests lie in democratizing this communist country and integrating it into the global economy. Vietnam remains torn between accepting and even appreciating a U.S. leadership role, and deeply resenting any American intervention.

Le Kha Phieu, chief of the Communist party in Vietnam told Clinton at their meeting, "We are still on our feet, we have reaffirmed socialism." According to The New York Times, Phieu believes that Vietnam's economy can get stronger without democratization. Clinton also met with a leader of Ho Chi Minh City, Vo Viet Hanh, who encourages an American presence in Vietnam. One can see why some Vietnamese may feel that it is in their best interest to benefit from American influence. The New York Times reported that more than 50 U.S. corporations sent representatives to Vietnam right behind Clinton. The benefits of global capital are undeniable for Vietnam's virtually untapped market. As reported by the New York Times, Clinton has made steps toward integrating Vietnam into the global system. In 1994, he lifted a trade embargo against the country, reinstating diplomatic relations. In 1996, the U.S. Embassy was opened in Hanoi, and in 1998 a waiver was issued for a law that had barred trade relations with communist states that did not allow citizens to emigrate. Further, an important trade agreement was recently signed with Vietnam.

Not only did Clinton's visit solidify efforts to improve economic relations with Vietnam, it was also symbolic due to the United States' past with this country.

Not only did Clinton's visit solidify efforts to improve economic relations with Vietnam, it was also symbolic due to the United States' past with this country. No other war so sharply divided Americans than did the conflict in Vietnam. Clinton himself was against sending American troops to this region just over thirty years ago. His visit is the beginning of a new era, as each respective country must attempt to move beyond its haunting intersection. The Vietnam War cost 58,000 American lives, and 3 million Vietnamese people were killed.

Clinton told The Associated Press, "The best thing that we can do to honor the sacrifice and service of those who believed on both sides that what they were doing is right, is to find a way to build a different future, and that's what we're trying to do." Despite resistance from some segments of the Vietnamese population, efforts are being made to reconstruct the relationship between the United States and Vietnam that is necessary in this globally connected world.

Quote of the week:

GOP Vice-Presidential nominee Dick Cheney says that if the Republican ticket was in Gore's shoes, it would have conceded by now. "If I were in his position, that's what I'd do," Cheney told CNN's Larry King Live. "We really think it's time to get on with the business of governing," Cheney said in the Tuesday night interview.

Subliminable? Perhaps if Dubya had written for B&P he would have been a bit more articulate. Don't make the same mistake. Call or email Mike for details. 075028 mboland@

Who would you most prefer to be the next president...?

Bush	42%
Gore	40%
No pref.	18%

CNN/USA TODAY/GALLUP POLL
DETAILS: PollingReport.com

George Washington University Summer
WE'VE GOT IT ALL

GW Summer Sessions offers programs from 70 different areas of study with over 500 courses from May to August

Sessions start May 23 and July 9

- Columbian School of Arts and Sciences
- School of Business and Public Management
- Graduate School of Education and Human Development
- School of Engineering and Applied Science
- Elliott School of International Affairs
- School of Medicine and Health Sciences
- School of Public Health and Health Services
- Law School
- Center for Professional Development
- Off-Campus Graduate Programs

REGISTRATION BEGINS MARCH 28

The George Washington University
WASHINGTON DC

website: www.summer.gwu.edu
email: sumprogs@gwu.edu (202) 994-6360

GW is an equal opportunity institution.

FORUM

EDITORIAL

I want my CATV

Two words that can bring a smile to any student's face: cable television.

Thanks to BSG's recent initiatives, every student residing in a residential room on campus may be smiling broadly within the next year. While the majority of students on campus are currently unable to attain any sort of television reception, further enclosing themselves within the "Bucknell Bubble," the future brings potential for change.

The most obvious benefit to obtaining cable in each room is the entertainment value it would provide. Students would rather watch Friends or the MLB playoffs in the convenience of their own room. Gone would be the days of fighting over the one television in the residence hall lounge.

But we foresee many additional benefits beyond the entertainment amenity of cable television.

The educational benefits stemming from the installation of cable should not be overlooked. Many academic constituencies on campus could take advantage of this added technological resource. Students would now have access to such beneficial networks as C-SPAN, CNN, The Discovery Channel and MS-NBC, and therefore would have a heightened awareness of local, national and international current events.

We believe the greatest added benefit to the proposal is the addition of up to five local-access channels that could be used and operated by members of the campus community. The University could take advantage of these channels to reach out to many facets of the community. Broadcast options could include: Bison athletic events (both home and away), a scrolling campus news listing, student productions such as concerts and plays, academic events such as lectures and panel discussions and course-required movies.

Most interestingly, the local-access channel is a great opportunity for a student-operated broadcasting network. Joining the ranks of various literary and poetry magazines on campus, WVBU radio station and The Bucknellian, the package would pave the way for a new media outlet on campus—news broadcasting.

Broadcast journalism would enable students interested in the communications field to gain experience while still studying to earn a degree in a liberal arts setting.

The Editorial Board at The Bucknellian would first like to commend BSG's recent efforts in looking into proposing to install cable in every residential room on campus. We applaud their dedicated proactive approach to this issue in order to make an informed and well-researched decision.

bucknellian@bucknell.edu

Next week is your last chance to write for Ops this semester! jancuk@ or fick@

Editors-in-Chief
Rebecca Rowland '02
Peter Van Emburgh '02

Managing Editors
Matt Albert '01
Matt Trunnell '01

Senior Editors
Brian Watson '01
Heather Napolitano '01

Business Manager
Carolyn Moser '01
Assistant Business Manager
Mark Langer '02

News Editor
Laura Day '03
News Layout Editor
Monica Montgomery '01

Business and Politics Editors
Tim Scheu '03
Rachel Laskow '03

Forum Editors
Kristen Jancuk '02
Maureen Fick '02

Features Editors
Katie Hays '03
Jim Leahy '03

Arts and Entertainment Editors
Meghan McGee '01
Natalie Casp '02

Letter to the Editors

Dear Editor,

Last week, my small community in Upstate New York buried three college freshmen girls. They were friends since childhood and shared likes and dislikes, laughter and tears. They were popular girls, always enthusiastic and optimistic, their smiles were contagious. They appreciated and cherished the special friendship they had, and were rarely seen apart from one another. On Nov. 11, 2000, the three girls died together.

It could have been any Friday night at any college campus; the girls were going out to be with friends and have a good time. After a long night of loud music, dancing and socializing, it was time to head back to the dorms. They faced a long walk, made more inconvenient by rain and cold temperatures. As they headed up the hill, an older student stopped to offer a ride and they eagerly accepted. He had been drinking, but the ride to campus was a short one.

Nobody fastened their seat belts. Less than a minute later, the Jeep Cherokee carrying seven young people crashed into an enormous tree, instantly killing the girls and another young man. Now, a community is in mourning and hearts are heavy, trying to cope with the tragic losses they have endured.

One would be extremely naive to think that something like this could not happen at Bucknell. Six months ago, I was a Bucknell student. I know that on some weekends, the walk from St. Catherine's Street to the uphill fraternities seems like a ten-mile hike.

I know that sometimes the easiest solution is to hitch a ride from another partygoer, or drive yourself. I know that college students think that they are immortal, that nothing will harm them—that this kind of thing only happens to other people.

These girls were just like you and me. Unfortunately, they cannot reverse the decision they made on that fateful night, but their deaths need not be in vain.

Though we cannot bring them back, we can learn a valuable lesson. As college students, we enjoy a greater degree of freedom than we ever have before. With that freedom, however, comes more responsibility.

Life is fragile, and each and every decision we make can bring consequences. Some may be minor; others can be life-altering.

The next time you face a tough decision, please step back and consider the impact your decision might have on you and those who love you. You may save someone's life, possibly your own.

Sincerely,
Kelly C. Wilson
Class of 2000

Students must communicate responsibly

By Erin Leigh Rosenthal

Most people when they first meet me think that I am extremely shy, but those who do know me, know that I am extremely outspoken.

I was in the Bison a few weeks ago quietly studying with a friend and my mind began to drift. I started eyes dropping on the table next to me—they were discussing scheduling. The two girls were discussing which teacher to take for a course.

One mentioned that she heard a certain teacher with a Chinese name, was particularly good and suggested that they take him. The other girl said no, but when her friend asked why, the girl simply said, "Because he's a geek."

She later explained that she was scared that the professor may not speak English clearly and that she would not be able to understand him and do well in the course. This incident is an example of an all too often occurrence, where people use terms for which they do not know the origin or intent. "Geek" is a derogatory name for Koreans, made up by racist American soldiers during the Korean War.

Such words should never be used because they are derogatory, racist and offensive.

Many people have heard derogatory terms every day growing up and go on to use them thoughtlessly, without knowing their meaning. People need to understand themselves and others.

There are thousands of different types of people in this world and by categorizing them and tainting them with derogatory terms you are marring the beauty of diversity.

Every day I hear these words around campus: "Chink," "Cook," "gay," "gypped," "J.A.P.," "renig." How many people are unaware that "gypped" is a derogatory term derived from the word "gypsy" and "renig" is derogatory against African Americans?

Everyday I hear students using the word "gay"—he is gay; she is gay; that is gay.

We need to understand that many people are gay and there is nothing negative associated with being gay. It is wrong to use this word in such a manner.

Every day people offend their friends, fellow students and professors, and most of the time they do not even realize what they are doing. We need to be careful about what we say and not use words that would be offensive to others.

We need to be more aware of, and sensitive to, words and their meanings in order to better ourselves, not hurt others, and to create a more accepting, caring, and inclusive learning community.

Science and Technology Editors
Lynne Waldman '01
Josiana Cetta '04

Sports Editors
Carmen Mauriello '02
Brooke Rea '02
Sports Layout Editors
Adam Haas '01
Andrew Burr '04
Sports Statistician
Matthew Herbert '02

Photo Editor
Paige Cull '01

Darkroom Manager
Chris Pizzo '01

Advertising Representative
Julie Bett '01

Online Editors
Eric Fair '01
Brendan Putnam '03

Circulation Manager
Brian Klotz '03

Head Copy Editors
Kim Luedee '01
Debbie Ruggieri '01

Production Manager
Mark Langer '02

Adviser
James F. Lee

THE BUCKNELLIAN

Founded in 1896 as The Blue and Orange

Volume 126, Number 11
C-3952 BUCKNELL UNIVERSITY
LEWISBURG, PENNSYLVANIA, 17837
(570)-577-1520

BUCKNELLIAN@BUCKNELL.EDU
HTTP://WWW.ORG.S.BUCKNELL.EDU/BUCKNELLIAN

EDITORIAL POLICY

The editorials of The Bucknellian reflect the consensus of the Editorial Board as to the topics and general position. If a consensus could not be reached, the opinions expressed are those of the Editor-in-Chief.

All other opinion material represents the views of the author and not necessarily those of the Bucknellian.

PUBLISHING POLICY

The Bucknellian is written, edited and published on 12 Thursdays during the academic year entirely by Bucknell students. The Bucknellian's fiscal affairs are overseen by an Advisory Board comprised of faculty, staff and administrators. All published material is chosen by the paper's editorial board without prior review by the Advisory Board, its adviser, the University, or Bucknell Student Government.

SUBSCRIPTIONS POLICY

Subscriptions are available $45 per year and $30 per semester. To subscribe, send payment and address information to: The Bucknellian Subscriptions, Box C-3952, Lewisburg, PA 17837. Subscriptions are mailed first-class on the Friday following publication. Please send change-of-address information to the above location as well.

ADVERTISING POLICY

The Editorial Board of the Bucknellian reserves the right to deny any advertisements if offensive, illegal or in bad taste. For advertising rates, please contact the advertising managers at (570) 577-1085.

Copyright 2000 The Bucknellian

FORUM

Election becomes a subjective contest

By David McGreevy

With the recent certification of a "final" vote count in Florida, it seems like we may, at last, have a reasonably good idea of who our next president is going to be. Maybe. Sort of. I guess.

At any rate, no one's packing his bags yet. There is still plenty more legal action planned in Florida, so it could still be quite some time before a genuinely definitive answer is available there, and there have even been rumblings that some members of the electoral college might vote against their parties to protest the handling of the election.

Perhaps the only comfort we can take is that in any other country the tanks and secret police would have been rolled out weeks ago.

I don't think it's much of an exaggeration, then, to say that something went terribly, terribly wrong in this election. When all is said and done, it will have taken at least a month to finalize the ballot count. The Canadians, I'm told, can get it done in about an hour.

There is a bigger problem here than slow counting, complex ballots, or ambiguous chad-punching, though. I can't help feeling that we as a nation have seen something we were not meant to see.

The TV hijinx on election night prove, as if it wasn't already apparent, that numbers can be deceiving. All the tracking and exit polls that the news teams could conjure up became a farce as the results of the election were reversed several times.

We expect this, though—polls work from a small sample and are not always conducted scientifically, so it's understood that their value is limited.

Statisticians learn to qualify everything they say with "depending on how you

Until we open the boxes and count the ballots, poor George Bush (or Al Gore, or even Ralph Nader) is like Schrödinger's Cat: he both is and isn't the most powerful man in the world, all at the same time.

By getting in there and adding up the votes, we can't help but impose our interpretation on the results—if it isn't somebody from the election board deciding which chads count as votes or which dots are properly filled in, it's a machine making the same judgments.

Like it or not, the outcome of the election (or any election, for that matter) is inherently a subjective thing.

Unfortunately, I don't see how anything can be done about this. We can certainly try to improve the quality of the count, though, and this most recent election will no doubt lead to progress there.

For many reasons than just "simple" objectivity, I think we should look more thoroughly into electronic voting, although it's pretty naive to think that something like that will solve all our problems. I don't know how much doubt the system can stand before it crumbles in the face of uncertainty.

It might be best if after this election is over we all agree to put our heads back in the warm security of the sand and pretend there can be such a thing as a truly definitive election victory.

Community needs University involvement

By Mike Molesevich

There is a new movement in college towns across the country to protect and revitalize neighborhoods.

Institutions of higher education are working collaboratively to preserve the neighborhoods surrounding campuses through university-community partnerships.

Rather than ignoring or contributing to neighborhood decline, colleges and universities are using their intellectual and financial resources to solve housing problems in adjacent neighborhoods.

Duke, Fordham, University of Pennsylvania, Yale, and many other universities are protecting and revitalizing their adjacent neighborhoods. From neighborhood reinvestment programs to university mortgage and down payment assistance, trustees and administrators are leading their institutions to higher levels of community involvement.

In January 1996, Trinity College announced a comprehensive $175-million neighborhood revitalization initiative for the community surrounding its campus in the heart of Hartford.

In 1994, the US Housing and Urban Development (HUD) established the Office of University Partnerships (OUP) to encourage institutions of higher education to make a difference in their communities through research, conferences, and grants.

Until the late 1970's, homes around Bucknell were mostly owner occupied. Lewisburg did not always have a student section. Neighborhoods around campus declined as Bucknell enrolled more students than it could house on campus. More students relocated into town, creating market demand to convert single-family homes to student rentals.

These conversions transformed traditional family neighborhoods to areas of late night, weekly parties, shoddy housing, alcohol-related problems, and trails of plastic beer cups. These frequent disturbances and conflicts forced families to sell their homes, one after another, until whole blocks consisted of rentals.

Many large historic homes were purchased and converted into multi-unit apartments by absentee owners with little concern for neighborhoods or historic preservation. Beautiful Victorian homes now deteriorate from overcrowding and poor maintenance, some to the point of condemnation, in what preservationists call "demolition by neglect." Attractive yards and gardens are now parking lots.

Working residents were displaced by students who pay little, if any, wage tax since few hold full-time jobs. While the local earned income tax base decreased, the demand for municipal services increased. Overcrowded rentals generate more refuse, police calls, and building code complaints. More student rentals and existing tax-exempt properties spread more tax burden on fewer full-time residents.

Because about 64% of Lewisburg's housing units are rentals, building code officials cannot keep up with rental inspections, thereby jeopardizing the health and safety of students and other residents.

When state and neighboring police departments are called to control large disturbances, related costs could exceed $100,000 per incident.

The problem is not that students live in town, it is that too many students live in town. Bucknell increased the number of student renters by about 500% over the past thirty years. The growth of a university should not be at the expense of its neighborhoods.

Bucknell's response to these problems off campus include reworking student conduct before living off-campus, establishing effective alcohol policies, and instituting periodic neighborhood clean-ups. Unfortunately, more homes are still being converted to rentals today.

Bucknell responded on campus, over the years, by converting single dorm rooms to doubles (called "dingles") doubling to triples, and lounges to living areas. Over-enrollment also affects faculty-student ratios, class size, maintenance, and security.

Bucknell then built the Gateways and Smith dormitory in 1986 to ease overcrowding on campus. Lewisburg residents were assured that enrollment would not increase, but enrollment increased again. This leads to where we are currently building more dormitories to match latest surges of over enrollment.

Three years ago, Bucknell admitted more than 100 new students beyond an already over-enrolled target. Less than one year ago, Bucknell administration promised that the number of students living in town would decrease in a few years. With the "2010 Plan," a new administration now promises fewer students in ten years. Waiting ten years is not acceptable.

Bucknell should critically study reducing enrollment to ease the pressure on campus and, subsequently in the Lewisburg housing market. This may be better than building more dorms. This strategy could save millions of dollars in avoided construction costs, and like other colleges, these savings could fund neighborhood re-investment programs. Will more dorms lead to even larger enrollment?

Concerns about creating a housing vacuum, by reducing student renters in Lewisburg, are unfounded. Rentals that were homes once before can become homes once again—with a serious commitment from Bucknell administrators and trustees.

Years ago, the University of Pennsylvania developed a neighborhood reinvestment program that helps its employees purchase, restore and live in homes in neighborhoods adjacent to campus. Penn realized the long-term advantages for its neighborhood and the university. When will Bucknell's trustees and administrators recognize such advantages?

Clemson University, from where President Rogers came, and about 100 other universities, are members of the OUP. For years, these institutions have been implementing programs and policies to improve and rebuild neighborhoods in their respective communities.

Other colleges and universities have already committed to effective community partnerships. It is past due for Bucknell's commitment to the neighborhoods of Lewisburg.

Mike Molesevich, MS, '87 is an adjunct lecturer in environmental studies, and an environmental consultant. He has lived in Lewisburg over 20 years, was the former Mayor of Lewisburg, and is President of the Lewisburg Neighborhood Association.

Legal battle carries election too far

By Gretchen Schrock

This weary nation finally has a president. On Sunday night, Florida Secretary of State Katherine Harris certified the results of the presidential election in her state, declaring Governor George W. Bush the winner of Florida's hotly contested 25 electoral votes and thus, the presidency.

However, despite this latest development, the legal wrangling and controversial rhetoric continues from the Democrats and Vice President Al Gore, who pleaded for public patience as he contests the election results.

Why not concede defeat gracefully and allow the nation to heal from the trauma of hearing both political parties fight over whether dimpled chads should be counted on national television, instead of taking the issue to every court in the country until one finds a sympathetic judge?

If you are Al Gore, you try to convincingly assert that named in the lawsuit as defendants.

During a high-stake political game, friends, once useful for the accomplishment of an aim, can easily turn into enemies if such a situation is possibly beneficial, as this turn of events support.

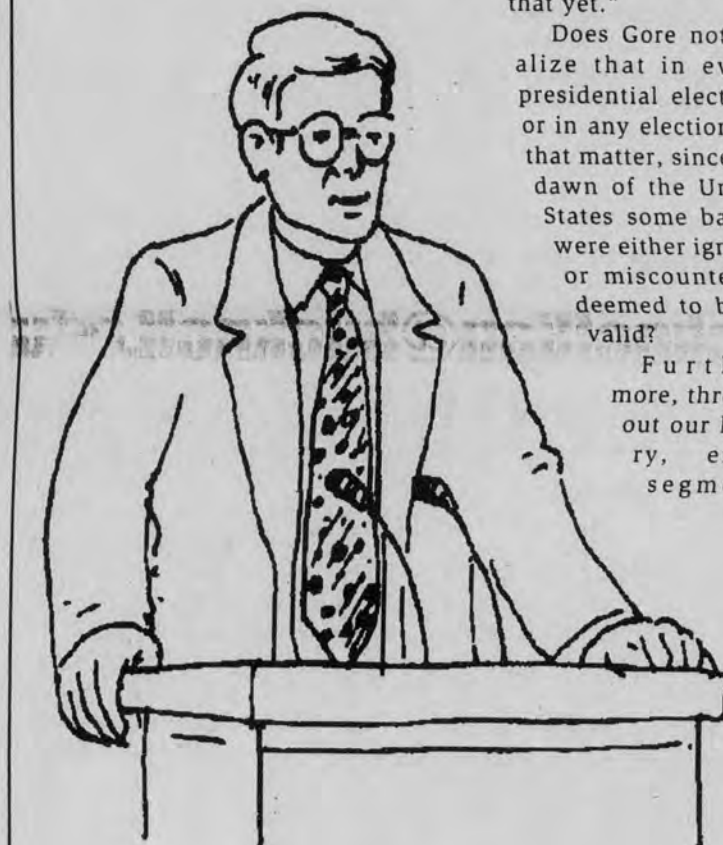

However, Gore, always maligning the Republicans, accused that "lawsuit after lawsuit" filed by his arch nemesis' legal team and that "organized intimidation" of local canvassing officials for the delay in the recounts that ultimately led to the ignoring of votes and his lawsuit.

"Ignoring votes means ignoring democracy itself," Gore said, "and if we ignore the votes of thousands in Florida in this election, how can you or any American have confidence that your votes will not be ignored in a future election?"

"That is all we have asked since Election Day, a complete count of all the votes cast in Florida. Not recount after recount, as some have charged, but a single full and accurate count. We haven't had that yet."

Does Gore not realize that in every presidential election, or in any election for that matter, since the dawn of the United States some ballots were either ignored or miscounted or deemed to be invalid?

Furthermore, throughout our history, entire segments you are not engaged in a struggle for power, but rather fighting to preserve "democracy itself" from the evil intentions of the Republican Party.

Gore is on a quest to save the ideals and principles of democracy upon which this country was founded, although the public opinion is far from agreement with him.

His legal team filed a lawsuit that stated that had all the votes in Nassau, Miami-Dade, and Palm Beach counties been counted, Gore would have been the victor, not Bush.

In a hearing on Monday, lawyers for Gore argued to Judge N. Sanders Sauls of Leon County Circuit Court that thousands of ballots from Miami-Dade and Palm Beach be sent to Tallahassee to be examined and recounted by the judge or a special master appointed by the judge.

Unfortunately, for Gore's holy crusade, Judge Sauls was appointed to the bench in 1989 by a Republican governor.

Sauls is considered the more conservative of all four judges on the circuit court, and is known as strict interpreter of the statutes.

In addition, the Democrats on the county election boards on which Gore's campaign was depending on to conduct all those time-consuming hand counts are now their adversaries because they are of American society have been excluded from the act of voting, such as women and African-Americans.

He acts as if this scenario of voices not being heard is new and appalling occurrence.

No matter which side wins this never-ending battle of the ballots, one can be sure the fight will continue with a sequence of appeals all the way to the steps of the Florida Supreme Court and then possibly those of the United States Supreme Court.

Thus, this country should prepare for a long, drawn-out legal struggle sure to envelop the national media.

Yet, as Al Gore commented in his nationally televised speech, "Two hundred years from now, when future Americans study this presidential election, let them learn that Americans did everything they could to ensure that all citizens who voted had their votes counted."

"Let them learn that democracy was ultimately placed ahead of partisan politics in resolving a contested election. Let them learn that we were indeed a country of laws."

On the contrary, we are a nation full of partisan bickering and law bending to achieve the necessary political end, and for Gore, the desired political end is Gore and Lieberman to take their places in the Oval Office.

FEATURES

Sirens brings womens issues to light

By Sandi-Jo Galati

What is your place in society? The answer to this question varies from year to year, semester to semester, and even from day to day, both on campus and in the outside world. Societal issues are brought into the spotlight, escalate, progress and die in an almost cyclical fashion. To confront these ever-changing needs of the community, Sirens was created.

Sirens was established by students of a Women's Studies Course, Janice Butler and the Women's Resource Center staff during the fall semester of 1999. Sirens' initial goal was to promote women's issues within the University. Since its activation, however, the group has become more concentrated, directing itself to raise awareness throughout the University on gender equality issues and their impact on women.

"Sirens started last year with a letter sent by Janice Butler to those who had taken a women's studies course. From there, a group of women met and decided what the campus needed, and what the group's role should be," Courtney Spohn '03, a current member, stated. Since its formation, the group has expanded its focus to include a wide range of concerns. Presently, the group is dealing with issues such as sexual assault, body image, eating disorders, women in advertising, alcohol use and date rape, all while attempting to emphasize the beauty of the individual.

"The role of Sirens is fluid and evolving and consists of whatever its members think it should consist of," Spohn said. This freedom and evolution is especially evident in the structure of the group.

Challenges of Work and Family," and advocating the Clothesline Project. Presently, the group is working on their fall film series, entitled "Respect: In Three Easy Swallow Dosages."

On Nov. 14, Sirens hosted the first "dosage" of their series. The film "I Wish I Could Have said the second film of the series, "Killing Us Softly," was shown this past Tuesday; the session aimed to increase campus awareness of the advertising industry's negative portrayal of women in magazine and television ads.

The remaining film of the series will address body image, and will be shown at 7:15 p.m. Dec. 5 in Rooke Auditorium. The film will also be followed by audience interaction facilitated by discussion and activity.

Future projects slated for the spring semester include a continuation of the short story and poetry readings and an international beauty display.

"The exciting thing about being a member of a new group is that it is established under whatever guidelines its members want. It provides a medium for all issues and activities on campus," Spohn said.

Sirens meets at 8 p.m. on Tuesday evenings in the Women's Resource Center lounge 200-B Roberts.

No" explored issues of date rape from the perspective of three college-aged women. Following the film was a discussion panel, in which the viewers were challenged to react on the attitudes of the women both in regard to men and sex. Participants were also asked to write a letter to themselves in which they recorded both their reactions to the film, past experiences, and also their planned course of action should a similar situation arise in the future.

For each group of 100 snowflakes they spend nearly four hours recording data and hanging up the flakes to prepare for the participation of the University community.

But for the rest of us, becoming involved in this effort is quite easy. As you pass through the Langone Center on your way to lunch or class, stop to take one of the many bright white snowflakes, each of which bears the name of a needy child or adult and his or her gift requests.

Simply sign out the flake on the sheet on the table to the right of the Giving Tree, and the work is almost done! All that remains is an excursion to downtown Lewisburg, Wal-Mart or the Susquehanna pine: it's the Giving Tree, the embodiment of a special service project that aims to spread holiday cheer by providing presents to disadvantaged children, senior citizens and other local residents.

The Giving Tree is sponsored annually by the University Community Service Office. After Lewis-

burg agencies provide the Community Service Team with a list of people in need of gifts, the students take the reins, setting up the tree, publicizing the project and handling all of the paperwork involved. These students are led by Gretchen Schrock of the Community Service club.

Michelle Payne '02, Community Service Administrative Intern and Giving Tree coordinator, urges all Bucknellians, organizations, teams, faculty and staff to help if they can. The Giving Tree is "quite a big deal for members of the community whose lives are probably not very sunny most of the time,"

Payne explained. "I don't know if students ever get to know what an incredible outcome it has; we play Santa Claus for nearly 600 troubled children, hospital patients and nursing home residents."

"During the weeks surrounding Thanksgiving break, life at Bucknell can be so harried and frantic, but none of our agencies ever go short of gifts. That's a real credit to the people here. Their generosity does not go unnoticed," Payne said.

The evergreen does, indeed, bear valuable fruit; the tree, as its name hints, attempts to spread the gift of giving. So, get with the program and take a flake.

Located on Rt. 61 - Between Sunbury & Shamokin

Sellinggrove 15N → 15S → Lewisburg
River → Sunbury
→ Ghezzi's → Shamokin
→ Bloomsburg
→ Catwissa

Approx: 30 min. from Bucknell & Susquehanna U.
40 min. from Bloomsburg U.

Complete Wine List - Cocktail Lounge
Every Wed. - 2 for $13.99
Every Thurs. - Italian Night
Early Bird - Thurs. thru Sat.
2 for $13.99 (5pm - 6pm)

Reservations Recommended

ON CAMPUS Physical Therapy Clinic
Monday - Friday 9 a.m. - 5 p.m.
Field House Athletic Training Suite
EVANGELICAL
SPORTS MEDICINE CENTER
577-1060
Physician prescription required. Please check insurance policy for restrictions.

ON CAMPUS Physical Therapy Clinic
Monday - Friday 9 a.m. - 5 p.m.
Field House Athletic Training Suite
EVANGELICAL
SPORTS MEDICINE CENTER
577-1060
Physician prescription required. Please check insurance policy for restrictions.

Physician prescription required. Please check insurance policy for restrictions.

Challenges of Work and Family," and advocating the Clothesline Project. Presently, the group is working on their fall film series, entitled "Respect: In Three Easy Swallow Dosages."

On Nov. 14, Sirens hosted the first "dosage" of their series. The film "I Wish I Could Have said the second film of the series, "Killing Us Softly," was shown this past Tuesday; the session aimed to increase campus awareness of the advertising industry's negative portrayal of women in magazine and television ads.

The remaining film of the series will address body image, and will be shown at 7:15 p.m. Dec. 5 in Rooke Auditorium. The film will also be followed by audience interaction facilitated by discussion and activity.

Future projects slated for the spring semester include a continuation of the short story and poetry readings and an international beauty display.

"The exciting thing about being a member of a new group is that it is established under whatever guidelines its members want. It provides a medium for all issues and activities on campus," Spohn said.

Sirens meets at 8 p.m. on Tuesday evenings in the Women's Resource Center lounge 200-B Roberts.

No" explored issues of date rape from the perspective of three college-aged women. Following the film was a discussion panel, in which the viewers were challenged to react on the attitudes of the women both in regard to men and sex. Participants were also asked to write a letter to themselves in which they recorded both their reactions to the film, past experiences, and also their planned course of action should a similar situation arise in the future.

For each group of 100 snowflakes they spend nearly four hours recording data and hanging up the flakes to prepare for the participation of the University community.

But for the rest of us, becoming involved in this effort is quite easy. As you pass through the Langone Center on your way to lunch or class, stop to take one of the many bright white snowflakes, each of which bears the name of a needy child or adult and his or her gift requests.

Simply sign out the flake on the sheet on the table to the right of the Giving Tree, and the work is almost done! All that remains is an excursion to downtown Lewisburg, Wal-Mart or the Susquehanna pine: it's the Giving Tree, the embodiment of a special service project that aims to spread holiday cheer by providing presents to disadvantaged children, senior citizens and other local residents.

The Giving Tree is sponsored annually by the University Community Service Office. After Lewis-

burg agencies provide the Community Service Team with a list of people in need of gifts, the students take the reins, setting up the tree, publicizing the project and handling all of the paperwork involved. These students are led by Gretchen Schrock of the Community Service club.

Michelle Payne '02, Community Service Administrative Intern and Giving Tree coordinator, urges all Bucknellians, organizations, teams, faculty and staff to help if they can. The Giving Tree is "quite a big deal for members of the community whose lives are probably not very sunny most of the time,"

Payne explained. "I don't know if students ever get to know what an incredible outcome it has; we play Santa Claus for nearly 600 troubled children, hospital patients and nursing home residents."

"During the weeks surrounding Thanksgiving break, life at Bucknell can be so harried and frantic, but none of our agencies ever go short of gifts. That's a real credit to the people here. Their generosity does not go unnoticed," Payne said.

The evergreen does, indeed, bear valuable fruit; the tree, as its name hints, attempts to spread the gift of giving. So, get with the program and take a flake.

Located on Rt. 61 - Between Sunbury & Shamokin

Sellinggrove 15N → 15S → Lewisburg
River → Sunbury
→ Ghezzi's → Shamokin
→ Bloomsburg
→ Catwissa

Approx: 30 min. from Bucknell & Susquehanna U.
40 min. from Bloomsburg U.

Complete Wine List - Cocktail Lounge
Every Wed. - 2 for $13.99
Every Thurs. - Italian Night
Early Bird - Thurs. thru Sat.
2 for $13.99 (5pm - 6pm)

Reservations Recommended

ON CAMPUS Physical Therapy Clinic
Monday - Friday 9 a.m. - 5 p.m.
Field House Athletic Training Suite
EVANGELICAL
SPORTS MEDICINE CENTER
577-1060
Physician prescription required. Please check insurance policy for restrictions.

ON CAMPUS Physical Therapy Clinic
Monday - Friday 9 a.m. - 5 p.m.
Field House Athletic Training Suite
EVANGELICAL
SPORTS MEDICINE CENTER
577-1060
Physician prescription required. Please check insurance policy for restrictions.

Physician prescription required. Please check insurance policy for restrictions.

Wink Thinks

Dear Wink,

I have a long distance relationship with a guy that I have been dating for a few years now. We met a few summers ago, and for some reason I just felt as though it was love at first sight, if there is such a thing. Now I see him about every other weekend and we talk on the phone or chat on AOL Instant Messenger pretty much every night. But while I care a great deal for my boyfriend, I have repeatedly done some things I regret.

Since the beginning of the semester I have cheated on my boyfriend several times, each time with a different guy. I have a pattern of cheating on boyfriends, even ones that I have truly cared about and I know that my adventures have ruined a few relationships. I don't really know why I cheated on my boyfriends in retrospect, but I do know that I want to stop. How am I supposed to control my emotions? Additionally, do you think there is any way that I can tell my boyfriend about my slip-ups without him getting upset?

Please help me, I don't want this to keep affecting my relationships. Sincerely, Cheating Chick

Dear Cheating Chick,

I think that while you may not realize it, the fact that you keep cheating on your boyfriends may be an indicator that you are not happy in your relationships. It seems to me that if you truly cared for your past and current boyfriends, as you say you do, you would not cheat on them. It's really not that complicated—when you are in a relationship you only hook up with the person you are dating. That's how it works. However, it seems to me that the only reason you would be hooking up with others is that you are in some way doubting your relationship, or it simply isn't as strong as you think.

By cheating, you are simply giving your boyfriend an easy excuse to break up with you. In my mind this is really a cop out—not only because you make yourself look like you are easy but because you can't face explaining your unhappiness to someone else.

Even though you say that you cared for your prior boyfriends it really seems to me that is a poor excuse to make yourself feel better. Cheating is not a solution.

Please note that "Wink Thinks" is meant to be instructional as well as entertaining. However, it is in no way a substitute for professional counseling.

Only one more full week of classes! Hang in there!

Tuesday is Bucknell Night at Imperial Lanes

9:30 pm - Midnight
Tuesday Nights
Bowl 2 games get 1 Free
With this Coupon

$8.00 per person with a minimum 4 persons per lane

Call 742-9211 to Schedule Private Parties

Sorority/Fraternity/Da Parties

Enjoy Rock-n-Bowl with Lane Quake Sound!

Leagues and Open Bowling Available

Jacqueline Flicker—The Bucknellian

ing on someone is the ultimate sign that you don't care for him anymore, because if you did you wouldn't cheat on him.

Finding an easy way to tell your boyfriend you cheated on him is a tough issue. Do you honestly think that he is going to react in a positive manner? It is really the ultimate slap in the face because you are essentially saying to him, "You weren't really doing it for me, so I decided to give Jimmy there down the hall a shot, but we can still date right?" I don't think so. Somehow your shopping around and your desire to stay together doesn't add up in my mind.

Although I would say that your cheating is really the result of your unhappiness in your relationships, I urge you to ask yourself why you keep doing it, and don't just say it's because you can't control your emotions, because you can. All in all, I would tell you just to realize that being in a relationship may not be exactly what you are looking for. If you want to go out with a bunch of guys and hook up with them, go for it. I am sure that there will be a lot of happy guys at Bucknell. However, I think that you have to realize that a relationship should happen once you have found the right person, not while you are still looking for the right person. I think that Tupac Shakur summed it up when he said, "Cause now I know you've been cheating, I'm a sucka for love."

If you are interested in writing to Wink there is no need to worry—all questions are confidential and answers are always thorough. However, please write questions that are decent because we can't include material that is libelous or an invasion of privacy. Questions or comments can be sent to Eli Winkler at box C2815, atth: Wink Thinks.

Once we landed in Madrid, the talking had ceased and we walked off the plane in silence, not knowing whether to speak in English or Spanish. When we met up with Bonnie and Santy, our two directors, we knew from that moment that we would be practically leaving our native language behind; they introduced themselves in Spanish and instructed us (again in Spanish) as to how to take taxis to the apartments of our señoras.

As I rode in the taxi, I got my first glimpse of the city that I would call home for the next four months. I noticed the impressive architecture of Madrid which made the spaciousness of the city seem so attractive. I could not help but smile when I saw the familiar McDonald's and Burger Kings lining the proud and stately streets of Madrid.

When the taxi driver stopped in front of the apartment in which I would be staying, I collected my belongings—two suitcases and a carry-

guage behind; they introduced themselves in Spanish and instructed us (again in Spanish) as to how to take taxis to the apartments of our señoras.

As I rode in the taxi, I got my first glimpse of the city that I would call home for the next four months. I noticed the impressive architecture of Madrid which made the spaciousness of the city seem so attractive. I could not help but smile when I saw the familiar McDonald's and Burger Kings lining the proud and stately streets of Madrid.

When the taxi driver stopped in front of the apartment in which I would be staying, I collected my belongings—two suitcases and a carry-

guage behind; they introduced themselves in Spanish and instructed us (again in Spanish) as to how to take taxis to the apartments of our señoras.

As I rode in the taxi, I got my first glimpse of the city that I would call home for the next four months. I noticed the impressive architecture of Madrid which made the spaciousness of the city seem so attractive. I could not help but smile when I saw the familiar McDonald's and Burger Kings lining the proud and stately streets of Madrid.

When the taxi driver stopped in front of the apartment in which I would be staying, I collected my belongings—two suitcases and a carry-

guage behind; they introduced themselves in Spanish and instructed us (again in Spanish) as to how to take taxis to the apartments of our señoras.

As I rode in the taxi, I got my first glimpse of the city that I would call home for the next four months. I noticed the impressive architecture of Madrid which made the spaciousness of the city seem so attractive. I could not help but smile when I saw the familiar McDonald's and Burger Kings lining the proud and stately streets of Madrid.

When the taxi driver stopped in front of the apartment in which I would be staying, I collected my belongings—two suitcases and a carry-

guage behind; they introduced themselves in Spanish and instructed us (again in Spanish) as to how to take taxis to the apartments of our señoras.

An abroad perspective: semester in Madrid, Spain

By Debbie Ruggieri

Churros. Toros. Flamenco. These are some of the most popular images that people often use to characterize Spain. They are also the images I carried with me as I boarded the British Airways Flight 176, not knowing what to expect. The hours that I spent in John F. Kennedy Airport before leaving my home country to embark on a new adventure were filled with a spectrum of emotions that ranged from apprehension to excitement.

As I said an uneasy goodbye to my family, their last-minute advice stuck in my mind: "don't walk the streets alone, and make sure you eat."

Though I had never visited Spain, I knew that my semester in Madrid would be teaching me so much more. I felt a sense of pride to be one of 48 students selected to be on the Hamilton College Academic Year in Spain program. I, along with five other Bucknellians, joined students from Hamilton College in upstate New York but with students from Tufts, Amherst, Swarthmore, Williams, Grinnell, Bates, Barnard, Bryn Mawr, Yale and Scripps College, in California.

While some of us had traveled the world and others had never left the United States before, we all eventually learned from our families, friends, classes and college life to immerse ourselves in and come to appreciate the uniqueness and vitality of the Spanish culture.

The flight we took required a stop in London's Heathrow Airport before we headed to our final destination—Madrid. During the plane ride, we tried to calm our nerves by getting to know each other. The director of the program informed us that we were to honor the Spanish-only pledge we had signed once we set foot in the Madrid-Barajas Airport.

Once we landed in Madrid, the talking had ceased and we walked off the plane in silence, not knowing whether to speak in English or Spanish. When we met up with Bonnie and Santy, our two directors, we knew from that moment that we would be practically leaving our native language behind; they introduced themselves in Spanish and instructed us (again in Spanish) as to how to take taxis to the apartments of our señoras.

As I rode in the taxi, I got my first glimpse of the city that I would call home for the next four months. I noticed the impressive architecture of Madrid which made the spaciousness of the city seem so attractive. I could not help but smile when I saw the familiar McDonald's and Burger Kings lining the proud and stately streets of Madrid.

When the taxi driver stopped in front of the apartment in which I would be staying, I collected my belongings—two suitcases and a carry-

guage behind; they introduced themselves in Spanish and instructed us (again in Spanish) as to how to take taxis to the apartments of our señoras.

As I rode in the taxi, I got my first glimpse of the city that I would call home for the next four months. I noticed the impressive architecture of Madrid which made the spaciousness of the city seem so attractive. I could not help but smile when I saw the familiar McDonald's and Burger Kings lining the proud and stately streets of Madrid.

When the taxi driver stopped in front of the apartment in which I would be staying, I collected my belongings—two suitcases and a carry-

guage behind; they introduced themselves in Spanish and instructed us (again in Spanish) as to how to take taxis to the apartments of our señoras.

As I rode in the taxi, I got my first glimpse of the city that I would call home for the next four months. I noticed the impressive architecture of Madrid which made the spaciousness of the city seem so attractive. I could not help but smile when I saw the familiar McDonald's and Burger Kings lining the proud and stately streets of Madrid.

When the taxi driver stopped in front of the apartment in which I would be staying, I collected my belongings—two suitcases and a carry-

guage behind; they introduced themselves in Spanish and instructed us (again in Spanish) as to how to take taxis to the apartments of our señoras.

As I rode in the taxi, I got my first glimpse of the city that I would call home for the next four months. I noticed the impressive architecture of Madrid which made the spaciousness of the city seem so attractive. I could not help but smile when I saw the familiar McDonald's and Burger Kings lining the proud and stately streets of Madrid.

When the taxi driver stopped in front of the apartment in which I would be staying, I collected my belongings—two suitcases and a carry-

guage behind; they introduced themselves in Spanish and instructed us (again in Spanish) as to how to take taxis to the apartments of our señoras.

After we ate, Ruthie insisted upon taking me out to explore the city that night. I was impressed by her proficiency in speaking Spanish. She was a year-long student on the program and she

guage behind; they introduced themselves in Spanish and instructed us (again in Spanish) as to how to take taxis to the apartments of our señoras.

As I rode in the taxi, I got my first glimpse of the city that I would call home for the next four months. I noticed the impressive architecture of Madrid which made the spaciousness of the city seem so attractive. I could not help but smile when I saw the familiar McDonald's and Burger Kings lining the proud and stately streets of Madrid.

When the taxi driver stopped in front of the apartment in which I would be staying, I collected my belongings—two suitcases and a carry-

guage behind; they introduced themselves in Spanish and instructed us (again in Spanish) as to how to take taxis to the apartments of our señoras.

As I rode in the taxi, I got my first glimpse of the city that I would call home for the next four months. I noticed the impressive architecture of Madrid which made the spaciousness of the city seem so attractive. I could not help but smile when I saw the familiar McDonald's and Burger Kings lining the proud and stately streets of Madrid.

When the taxi driver stopped in front of the apartment in which I would be staying, I collected my belongings—two suitcases and a carry-

guage behind; they introduced themselves in Spanish and instructed us (again in Spanish) as to how to take taxis to the apartments of our señoras.

As I rode in the taxi, I got my first glimpse of the city that I would call home for the next four months. I noticed the impressive architecture of Madrid which made the spaciousness of the city seem so attractive. I could not help but smile when I saw the familiar McDonald's and Burger Kings lining the proud and stately streets of Madrid.

When the taxi driver stopped in front of the apartment in which I would be staying, I collected my belongings—two suitcases and a carry-

guage behind; they introduced themselves in Spanish and instructed us (again in Spanish) as to how to take taxis to the apartments of our señoras.

As I rode in the taxi, I got my first glimpse of the city that I would call home for the next four months. I noticed the impressive architecture of Madrid which made the spaciousness of the city seem so attractive. I could not help but smile when I saw the familiar McDonald's and Burger Kings lining the proud and stately streets of Madrid.

When the taxi driver stopped in front of the apartment in which I would be staying, I collected my belongings—two suitcases and a carry-

guage behind; they introduced themselves in Spanish and instructed us (again in Spanish) as to how to take taxis to the apartments of our señoras.

As I rode in the taxi, I got my first glimpse of the city that I would call home for the next four months. I noticed the impressive architecture of Madrid which made the spaciousness of the city seem so attractive. I could not help but smile when I saw the familiar McDonald's and Burger Kings lining the proud and stately streets of Madrid.

When the taxi driver stopped in front of the apartment in which I would be staying, I collected my belongings—two suitcases and a carry-

guage behind; they introduced themselves in Spanish and instructed us (again in Spanish) as to how to take taxis to the apartments of our señoras.

As I rode in the taxi, I got my first glimpse of the city that I would call home for the next four months. I noticed the impressive architecture of Madrid which made the spaciousness of the city seem so attractive. I could not help but smile when I saw the familiar McDonald's and Burger Kings lining the proud and stately streets of Madrid.

When the taxi driver stopped in front of the apartment in which I would be staying, I collected my belongings—two suitcases and a carry-

After we ate, Ruthie insisted upon taking me out to explore the city that night. I was impressed by her proficiency in speaking Spanish. She was a year-long student on the program and she

guage behind; they introduced themselves in Spanish and instructed us (again in Spanish) as to how to take taxis to the apartments of our señoras.

As I rode in the taxi, I got my first glimpse of the city that I would call home for the next four months. I noticed the impressive architecture of Madrid which made the spaciousness of the city seem so attractive. I could not help but smile when I saw the familiar McDonald's and Burger Kings lining the proud and stately streets of Madrid.

When the taxi driver stopped in front of the apartment in which I would be staying, I collected my belongings—two suitcases and a carry-

guage behind; they introduced themselves in Spanish and instructed us (again in Spanish) as to how to take taxis to the apartments of our señoras.

As I rode in the taxi, I got my first glimpse of the city that I would call home for the next four months. I noticed the impressive architecture of Madrid which made the spaciousness of the city seem so attractive. I could not help but smile when I saw the familiar McDonald's and Burger Kings lining the proud and stately streets of Madrid.

When the taxi driver stopped in front of the apartment in which I would be staying, I collected my belongings—two suitcases and a carry-

guage behind; they introduced themselves in Spanish and instructed us (again in Spanish) as to how to take taxis to the apartments of our señoras.

As I rode in the taxi, I got my first glimpse of the city that I would call home for the next four months. I noticed the impressive architecture of Madrid which made the spaciousness of the city seem so attractive. I could not help but smile when I saw the familiar McDonald's and Burger Kings lining the proud and stately streets of Madrid.

When the taxi driver stopped in front of the apartment in which I would be staying, I collected my belongings—two suitcases and a carry-

guage behind; they introduced themselves in Spanish and instructed us (again in Spanish) as to how to take taxis to the apartments of our señoras.

As I rode in the taxi, I got my first glimpse of the city that I would call home for the next four months. I noticed the impressive architecture of Madrid which made the spaciousness of the city seem so attractive. I could not help but smile when I saw the familiar McDonald's and Burger Kings lining the proud and stately streets of Madrid.

When the taxi driver stopped in front of the apartment in which I would be staying, I collected my belongings—two suitcases and a carry-

guage behind; they introduced themselves in Spanish and instructed us (again in Spanish) as to how to take taxis to the apartments of our señoras.

As I rode in the taxi, I got my first glimpse of the city that I would call home for the next four months. I noticed the impressive architecture of Madrid which made the spaciousness of the city seem so attractive. I could not help but smile when I saw the familiar McDonald's and Burger Kings lining the proud and stately streets of Madrid.

When the taxi driver stopped in front of the apartment in which I would be staying, I collected my belongings—two suitcases and a carry-

guage behind; they introduced themselves in Spanish and instructed us (again in Spanish) as to how to take taxis to the apartments of our señoras.

As I rode in the taxi, I got my first glimpse of the city that I would call home for the next four months. I noticed the impressive architecture of Madrid which made the spaciousness of the city seem so attractive. I could not help but smile when I saw the familiar McDonald's and Burger Kings lining the proud and stately streets of Madrid.

When the taxi driver stopped in front of the apartment in which I would be staying, I collected my belongings—two suitcases and a carry-

After we ate, Ruthie insisted upon taking me out to explore the city

Arts & Entertainment

SAKUNTALA

Fine Indian Cuisine

Try us, it's wonderful!
Vegetarian Buffet Dinner: $6.95
Non-Vegetarian Buffet Dinner: $8.95
Open Monday thru Friday 12:00 noon to 9:00 pm
Saturday 4:00 pm to 9:00 pm
236 Iron Street, Lewisburg, Phone 389-0281
www.sakuntala.com

FOR THE DEFENSE
Rheam & Fortier, L.L.P.
Experienced Criminal Defense Attorneys

Felony / Misdemeanor / DUI / Drug Act
Alcohol Related Offenses
Record Expungement

CALL 524-2344 Rt. 15, Lewisburg

BIRTHRIGHT
of Sunbury

Free Pregnancy Test
Confidential Counseling
Pregnancy Support Services

Hours: Mon - Wed - Fri 12:30 to 4 pm

351 Woodlawn Ave.
Sunbury, Pa. 17837
570-286-8560
1-800-550-4900

COLGATE UNIVERSITY
Master of Arts in Teaching

We invite you to explore a career in TEACHING

Colgate University offers the Master of Arts in Teaching degree to liberal arts graduates interested in teaching high school science, mathematics, English, and social studies. Our highly personalized program includes close interaction with our faculty, generous financial aid is available for qualified students.

For application materials, or to learn more about our unique M.A.T. programs, please contact us. By mail: Colgate University, Department of Education, Joan Thompson, 13 Oak Drive, Hamilton, NY 13346-1398. By Phone (315) 228-7256. By e-mail: jthompson@mail.colgate.edu.

Explore the possibilities that await you.

Looking for outgoing people.

$10
per hour min.

Photography at social events.
No experience necessary.

Email
steve@visual-technology.com

Susquehanna Valley
Limousine Inc.

With a long tradition of quality service to the Bucknell Community, SVL offers:

Service to and from destination: door to door
Schedule your own shuttles to and from Airports
for trucks
Ride sharing network to cut down on costs
Many available vehicles: vans, town car
and limousine bus
Service 24 hours a day, 7 days a week

For more information or to make reservations
Call

1.800.685.5567

America's Leader
in Student Travel

Beat the price hike!

Get your rail pass at 2000 prices and travel in 2001

*Passes must be validated within 6 months from date of purchase.

Council Travel

1-800-2COUNCIL
counciltravel.com

"YOUR COMPLETE PROFESSIONAL CLEANERS"

Steininger's

LAUNDRY & DRY CLEANING

Selinsgrove-Hummels Wharf-Lewisburg-Danville

230 N. 7th St. Lewisburg

- Wash and Fold
- Drive-Up Window

Come Party at the:

ARIZONA CAFE

Outdoor Patio and Fireside Dining

Quesadillas Enchiladas
Chicken Soft Tacos Seafood
Monster Burritos Steaks

Most Meals $9 - $13 No Charge Cards (Checks Accepted)

Bring in this coupon for
1 Free
Quesadilla Appetizer with purchase of 2 Entrees

From Bucknell:
Take Market St. (Rt 45).
Cross bridge and stay
straight until ends.
Turn Right.
Exactly 4.0 mi on Left.

Open Tues-Thurs 11:30-9, Fri & Sat 11:30-10, Sun 11:30-8
Reservations Recommended

NOW OPEN IN LEWISBURG

SHORT STOP
"Touchless" Car Wash

Featuring TURTLEWAX Products

Safe! Gentle! Drive Thru!
Now 2 locations to serve you:

LEWISBURG
240 N. Derr Dr.
MIFFLINBURG
E. Chestnut St.

$200 OFF
ANY CAR WASH

With this coupon. Expires 12/31/00. *Not valid with any other offer.

When you can't see eye-to-eye with the IRS
get an ear

Fact is, most federal tax returns go through without a hitch. But for tougher problems, you have powerful help.

Now the Taxpayer Advocate Service is here to help taxpayers who can't resolve an ongoing tax issue through the usual IRS channels. Or those who face significant hardship unless relief is granted.

Your personal Taxpayer Advocate can review the situation from a fresh point of view - yours. The same person works with you until the issue is resolved quickly and fairly.

To find out if you qualify for a personal Taxpayer Advocate, phone toll-free 1-877-777-4778.

ADVOCATE

The Internal Revenue Service Working to put service first Buffalo Grill's

A GREAT PLACE TO CHILL
WE'RE HIP & WE'RE COOL

GRILL & SALOON
523-8900
654 RT. 15 Lewisburg

Tuesday is Ladies Night • 8 till Midnight
Pool Tournament Ladies Only

U-SAVE
AUTO
RENTAL

Low, Low Rates!

*We bill insurance companies direct.

*Major credit cards accepted.
*Must be 21 or older.

Earning the right
to serve you each and every time.

524-0000
Rt. 15 & Nth 7th St.
Lewisburg, Pa. 17837
Mon-Fri 8:00-5:00
Sat. 8:00-12:00

Arts & Entertainment

Concert Chorale serenades audience

The Concert Chorale performed music from all genres of the past two centuries

By Jennifer Johnson

The Sunday before Thanksgiving break, the University's Concert Chorale performed a montage of pieces from the past 200 years in the Weis Center. The group, which includes students from each class, is directed by Dr. William Payn and accompanied by David Cover on piano.

The montage included works from such genres as traditional folksongs, spirituals and jazz, and included works from composers such as Felix Mendelssohn Bartholdy and musical interpretations of poetry by Dickinson and Herrick.

It was the broad range of music and spirited performance of the students that kept the audience interested and attentive throughout the concert.

Renee Brody, a senior music education major and secretary for the Concert Chorale, had nothing but praise for Dr. Payn.

"He is a wonderful and inspirational conductor," she said. "He tells us before concerts that performing in front of an audience elicits an additional dimension of the music that mere rehearsal cannot. Through this I feel that we are all inspired to actually enjoy the concert and sing for the audience and ourselves."

Dr. Payn especially enjoyed the inclusion of other instruments in the pieces. One such piece was "Heart We Will Forget Him," which is poetry by Dickinson set to music. This work included, according to Payn, "the beautiful work of Dr. Kenny on the horn." "Shenandoah" was another piece that included instrumentation.

"It was a real joy to work with the student woodwind trio," Payn said. These students included Erin McLaughlin '01 on the flute, Brody on the oboe, and Mark Baillie '03 on the bassoon.

"Their playing was musical and secure and really added to the overall effect of this well-known folk tune," Payn said.

In addition, the final set of pieces labeled "Jazz!" used instruments such as a drumset, saxophone and guitar.

"Of course it is always fun to work with the jazz quartet for the final pieces. I believe this is the third season I have worked with them," Payn said.

Brody commented on the educational opportunities of performing with the quartet.

"I believe singing with instruments other than the piano is excellent for developing new singing styles and becoming flexible, well-rounded musicians," she said.

Amanda Robie '03 shared her thoughts on the concert overall.

"As the alto section leader, I felt that the concert went really well," she said. "It was a challenging repertoire, but we worked hard and performed with pride. We appreciate all of Dr. Payn's encouragement and leadership, and thank all of the friends and family who came to support us. 'RAY CHORALE!'"

Finally, Payn expressed his gratitude for his officers.

"I am grateful to my officers who work hard to make sure that all of the behind-the-scenes work is done before a concert or trip," he said. "I couldn't do it without them!"

The latest of these trips included a New York City excursion in October to perform Earth Mass by Paul Winter in the Cathedral Church of Saint John the Divine.

Free Cocktails this weekend

By Jennifer Johnson

The theater department will present a play directed by Jay Klaitz '01 entitled "What She Found There" at 5 p.m. this Friday.

Klaitz, along with actors Ian McNaughton '01 and Kim Sedgwick '01 will perform what is described by McNaughton as "a ten-minute glimpse at the meeting of a guy and a girl after a random sexual encounter, during which they discover that from opposite world views all they really want is the human connection they ultimately find in each other."

The play begins with the two characters after they have seemingly had sexual contact. Keeping the contact between the two actors dynamic and fresh was Klaitz's goal, as it is essential to the mood of the play.

"Jay had Kim invent a new way to come on to me every rehearsal to keep the scenes playful and new," McNaughton said. Sedgwick has good things to say about the director.

"Working with Jay is, well, cool. He's very serious about the play and he's great at getting us into character through many warm-ups, including yoga and spirals."

He's endless fun and laughs, but we always work hard, too," she said.

McNaughton has praise for both of his cohorts.

"Kim is wonderful, fairly fearless, and thankfully, open-minded," he said. "I've acted with Jay twice before, and find that he is surprisingly adept at seeing the entire play unfold without getting trapped in the details. I say 'surprisingly' because actors always get caught up in details, and pray that a kind and understanding director can get them out. The worst thing a Cocktail could become is routine, so Jay has the added task of coming up with fun new things to incorporate into rehearsals."

Sedgwick sums up the sentiment of the Cocktail.

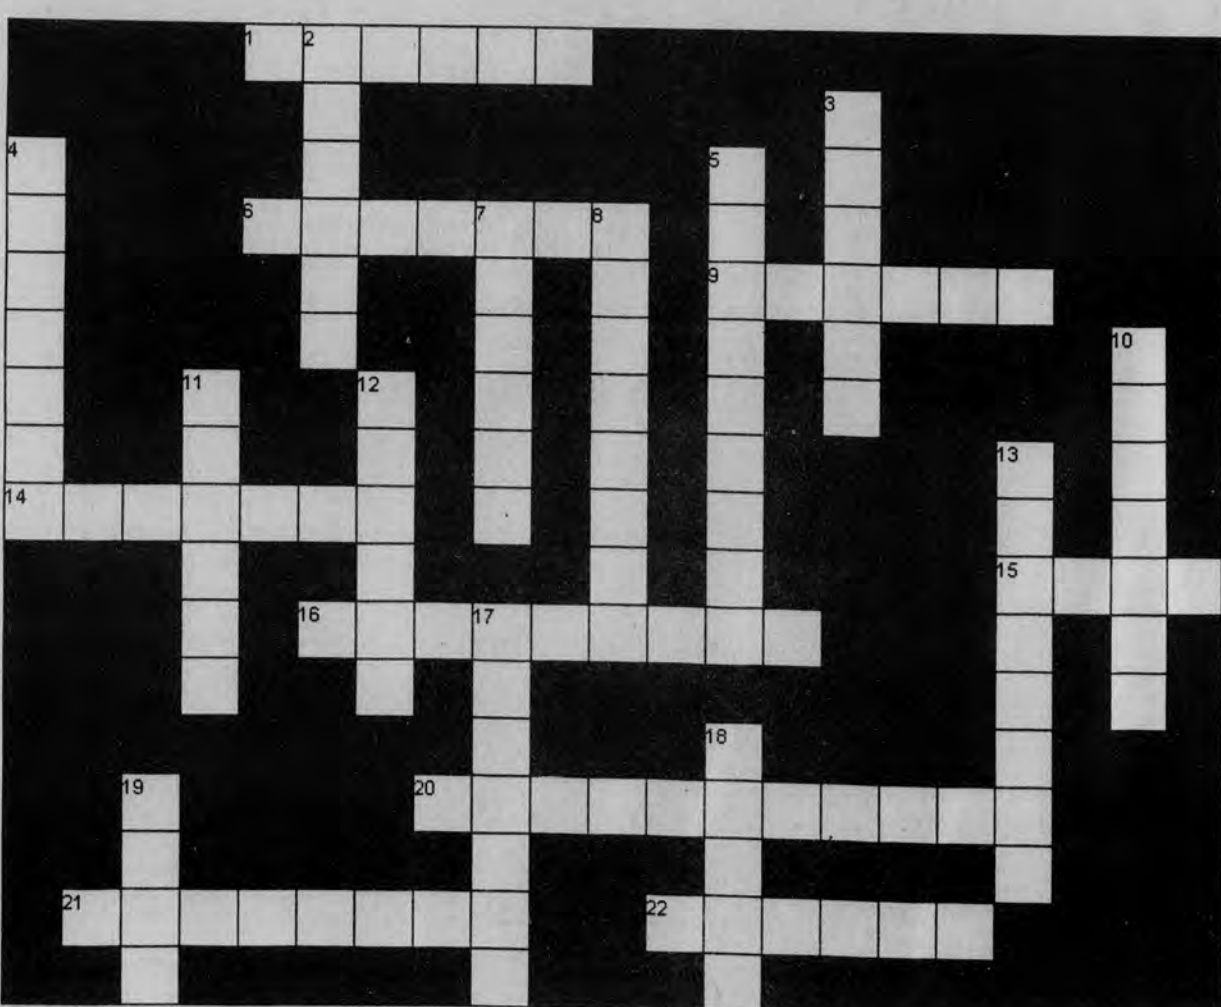

"I think the three of us really work well together," she said. "Definitely a great trio!"

Seniors Kim Sedgwick and Ian McNaughton will perform in a Cocktail this Friday.

Seniors Kim Sedgwick and Ian McNaughton will perform in a Cocktail this Friday.

BUCKPUZZLED?

ACROSS

- "Tree" in the LC
- Registered first career double-double in basketball against Drew this past weekend
- Capital Campaign surpassed its goal by _____ million
- Dessert eaten "con chocolate"
- Former name of the Environmental Club
- Bison volleyball will spike this school in the first round of the NCAA Tournament
- Shyamalan's newest thriller
- This volleyball player garnered two impressive Patriot League titles
- Only a freshman, this women's basketball player is leading the team in scoring

- Where you might find a "doggie in the window" (2 words)
- He stole Christmas
- Newest member entering the Patriot League next fall
- The concert before Thanksgiving
- Bucknell Club currently showing three part film series
- Romy and Michelle didn't invent it (2 words)
- Oil companies are dumping these into the Amazon basin
- He visited Vietnam...four decades too late
- BSG initiatives may bring this to the dorms
- University guests are sometimes treated to hospitality in this house on campus

DOWN

- They're having a new election
- Director of the upcoming Cocktail
- The Mammalian brain controls this limb

Send your completed puzzle to the Bucknellian box, C-3952 for a chance to win a CD

The Grinch steals the holidays

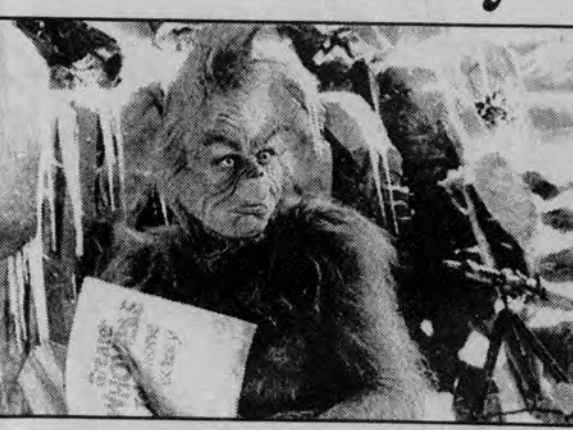

By Alex Costos

If you like elaborate set designs, amazing costumes and Jim Carrey, you will enjoy this year's Christmas blockbuster, The Grinch Who Stole Christmas. Yet, if you like thick plots, intricate story lines and good acting, you most likely will not enjoy The Grinch.

Don't get me wrong, Jim Carrey is an extraordinary actor; it was the other "Whos" in Whoville that had trouble acting. The basic story line followed the children's book by Dr. Seuss, which can be disappointing because we would expect a little bit of a twist or a change out of director Ron Howard.

The good qualities of The Grinch are limited but present. The set is the most expensive set that has ever been made, with the town of Whoville littered with snow, funny bright-colored shapes and disproportionately sized buildings. The audience gets the feeling that they're on the "It's a Small World" ride in Disney World where everything is happy, bright and brilliant.

The costumes are undoubtedly some of the best costumes I have ever seen. Jim Carrey's furry green suit with long fingers and a pointy tuft of green hair makes him nearly unrecognizable. The Whos wear costumes ranging from futuristic-looking suits to quaint, little pajamas speckled with miscellaneous Christmas decorations.

Courtesy Yahoo.com

The characters' hairstyles and make-up distinguish The Grinch from other typical holiday movies. From the Grinch's uncombed spike of green hair to Cindy Lou Who's foot-high bell-shaped hair-do, each character in Whoville exhibited a unique modern hairstyle. Spikes, curves and hair going every which way were the ideas for the innocent Whos, about to have their Christmas stolen by the Grinch.

The Grinch, an evil sinister oaf, steals Christmas in Whoville, but like in the cartoon version, he realizes that perhaps Christmas isn't what he thought it was. You tell me if it's worth seeing in the theatres. Otherwise, wait until video and save yourself a couple of bucks.

Willis, Jackson are Unbreakable

By Alex Costos

"M. Night Shyamalan, the director of The Sixth Sense, has done it again, this time in Unbreakable. With the provision of little clues throughout the movie, a surprise ending and the acting talents of Bruce Willis, Shyamalan has created another masterpiece.

Willis plays the sole survivor of a terrible train wreck. Willis' character becomes boggled when he not only survives the crash, but does so without a single scratch. He questions whether or not he has ever been sick or ever broken a bone.

I don't want to give away too much so I'll make this short and sweet. Go see the movie, especially if you have ever read a comic book in your life. It will be worth your time.

Still Puzzled?

Call Krista to write for A&E: 7-5255

SCIENCE & TECHNOLOGY

Mammalian brain controls robotic limb

By Parker Terrell

Scientists at Duke University in Durham, N.C., have successfully tested a neural system on monkeys, which allowed the animals to control a robotic arm using their brains. According to CNN and MSNBC, monkeys with specially implanted electrodes were able to control a robotic arm to perform the simple task of picking up a piece of food.

This advancement could pave the way for paralyzed patients to gain control of their own limbs and allow for more functional prosthetics for amputees.

Led by neurobiologist Miguel Nicolelis, the team of researchers at Duke University recorded information from many different neurons and then combined their information using a computer algorithm in a process known as "multi-neuron population recording."

The experiment was first carried out with rats controlling a small arm to bring water to their mouths. In this experiment, the rats had to perform the action with their own arms while they controlled the robotic arm. However, after much practice and conditioning, the rats could produce the brain activity solely, thereby controlling only the electric arm.

Duke researchers set out to improve the experiment by factoring angle and position into the arm movement while using monkeys, a closer genetic make-up to humans, instead of rats. Two owl monkeys received arrays of as many as 96 electrodes, each no larger than a human hair, implanted in their brains.

The monkey's brain activity was recorded while they were performing basic movements, such as reaching for a piece of food, and then was analyzed to find patterns. All data collected from many different repetitions was then processed into a computer in the hopes that a formula could be found to predict the trajectory and real time movement of the monkey's hand.

After many trials, the scientists developed a program that could reliably predict the arm movement of the monkeys and allowed them to perform 3-D movement from over 600 miles away.

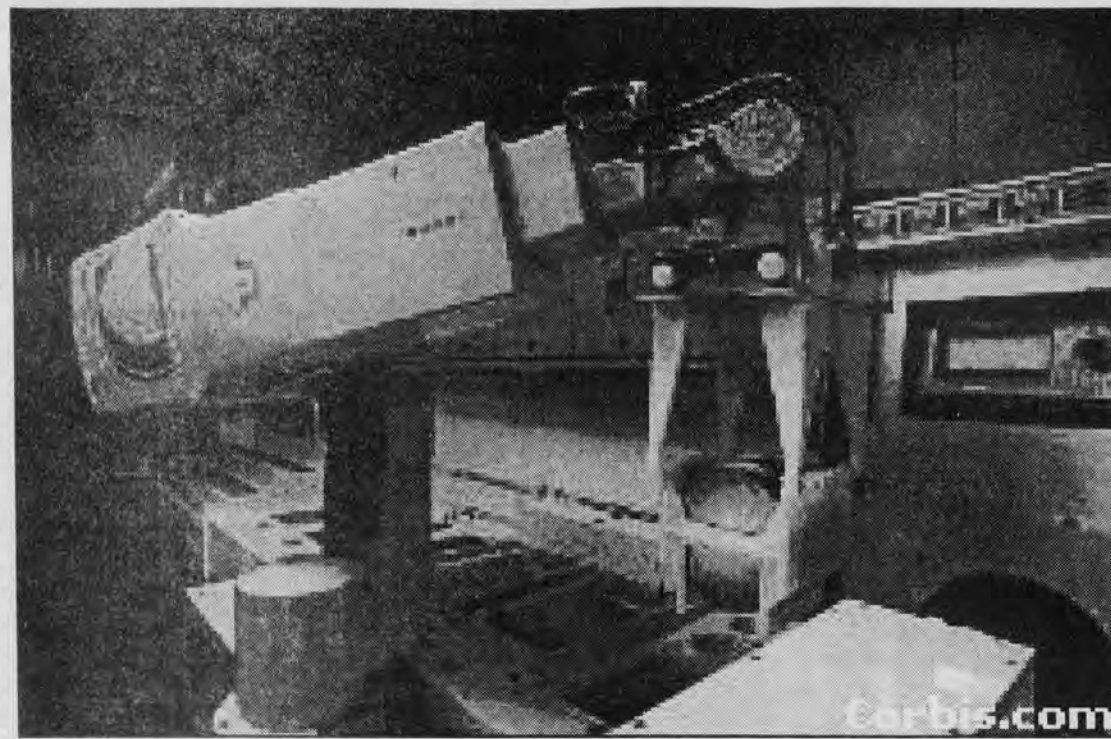

The signals were transmitted over a standard Internet connection to control a similar robotic arm in MIT's Laboratory for Human and Machine Haptics.

"The reliability of this system and the long-term viability of the electrodes lead us to believe that this paradigm could eventually be used to help paralyzed people restore some motor function," said Miguel Nicolelis of Duke University.

The analysis system created by the Duke Researchers is capable of incorporating adaptive brain changes associated with learning. The scientists are now beginning work on a robotic arm that could actually transfer information back to the brain such as pressure and temperature.

"This system also offers a new paradigm to study basic questions of how the brain encodes information. For example, now that we've used brain signals to control an artificial arm, we can progress to experiments in which we change the properties of the arm or provide visual or tactile feedback to the animal, and explore how the brain adapts to it. Understanding such adaptation will allow us to make inferences about how the brain normally encodes information," Nicolelis said.

As part of this expected advance, Nicolelis says that there are plans to increase the number of electrodes implanted in the monkeys' brains from 96 to over 1,000 in order to facilitate the greatest accuracy and realism allowed by the robotic arm.

A robotic arm, the forerunner of electronic artificial limbs controlled by human nerve impulses.

New voting interfaces springing up

By Brian Watson

With national controversy still swirling over a Palm Beach County, Fla., ballot some voters believe confused them into voting for Reform Party candidate Pat Buchanan instead of Al Gore, the problem of antiquated voting systems has never come under more scrutiny.

But some voters around the country seem quite satisfied with their selections, thanks to new electronic voting interfaces that are making the process more efficient and understandable.

In Thurston County, Wash., the nation's first online balloting was held in conjunction with Washington state's Feb. 29 presidential primary. In an official review, the county auditor, Sam S. Reed, pointed out the possibility of some security problems, but reported that 93 percent of participating voters felt comfortable with the security measures.

And last week, VoteHere.net, a Bellevue, Wash.-based secure Internet voting firm, teamed up with Compaq Computer to offer nonbinding online voting in Arizona and California, using new, high tech voting interfaces.

According to Jim Adler, VoteHere's chief executive and co-founder, the respective secretaries of state were quite satisfied with the pilot programs. "The tabulation process went very fast, and they're all looking to deploy this in the next election," he said. "There's certainly room for improvement in online elections, and that's what we're working on."

Adler said his company "treats an election as a process, not just a result."

system like any other mission-critical system - it has to work," which entails guarding against internal and external interference.

Adler believes that security must be a top priority for online elections due to its evolutionary nature. "It's important that a system defines security from the start. If you can't keep them secure, how can you keep voting secure?"

To be effective, Adler said, the mainframes must protect the secret ballot, protect against fraud and be able to be audited.

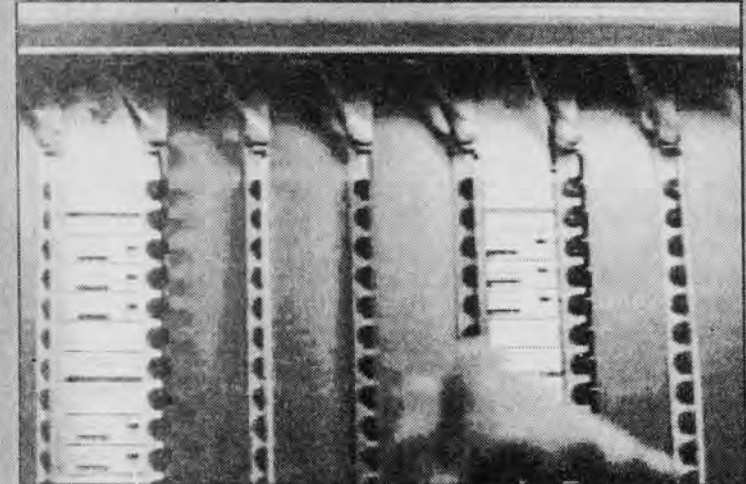

Sean Grady, a logistics execution consultant at SAP America, found the new voting interface in his Coppell, Texas, polling station to be a breath of fresh air. He likened the new "user friendly" system to a PalmPilot.

Grady was given a serialized cartridge that he entered into a flat-paneled device. The flat screen was then activated, and Grady cast his ballot using a stylus. He said the entire process took about five minutes.

"I would think it's about time," Grady said about the new voting innovations. "There are so many basic things you can do with the Internet and computers, so it doesn't surprise me that voting might be next."

Grady said he felt extremely comfortable with the system and wasn't worried about security issues. "With this interface there were no problems like that," he said. "I feel secure about putting my credit card online, so why would I have a problem with voting?"

This article originally appeared on Interactive Week Online on Monday, November 13, 2000.

This past presidential election Americans tried out the latest in voting technology by casting their ballot online.

Post-it: surviving 21st century

By Katie Heise

Post-its. They're on the fridge, on your computer monitor and everywhere in the offices of busy executives. Where would we be without them? Even in this age of electronics and automation, Post-its are here to stay. We all know that, in the popular movie Romy and Michelle's High School Reunion, Romy and Michelle didn't really invent Post-it Notes, but what is the real story behind these sticky yellow marvels?

In truth, the technology behind these adhesive blessings in disguise was discovered through serendipitous accident. Spencer Silver, a scientist at the 3M company, was trying to create a water-soluble adhesive in 1968, when his experiments failed completely. It was a disaster, resulting in a strange adhesive that stuck readily but loosely to varied surfaces. Undaunted, Silver and his fellows began the search for applications of the new invention.

If you're buying overpackaged or throwaway products, you're essentially buying trash. That means some of what's on your shopping list wastes energy, wastes natural resources and even increases pollution. So the next time you're in the store, look for less packaging, and choose stuff that's refillable and reusable. What's in your cart could make a world of difference. For a free shopping guide, please call 1-800-2-RECYCLE. BUY SMART. WASTE LESS. SAVE MORE.

Ad Council ENVIRONMENTAL DEFENSE finding the ways that work.

Have you seen this squirrel?
Write for S&T

Call Lynne at x74196 or Josie at x74842

Talk to the Hand...

the Dana series continues next week.

SCIENCE & TECHNOLOGY

New, improved Environmental Club emerges from reorganization of SEAC

Members of Environmental Club focus efforts on improving environmental conditions locally and nationally

By Jessica Ryan

Ideas for environmental projects are emerging as members of the environmental club discuss issues on campus, in Lewisburg, and throughout the nation. The Environmental Club, formerly known as the Student Environmental Action Coalition (SEAC), has reformed this semester to include officers, as well as three distinct committees.

The first committee focuses on environmental concerns on campus, the second focuses on the local area, and the last committee is concerned about regional as well as national environmental issues.

The campus committee, headed by Beth Oesterling '03, has many environmental endeavors in mind for the remainder of this semester, as well as for the quickly approaching spring semester.

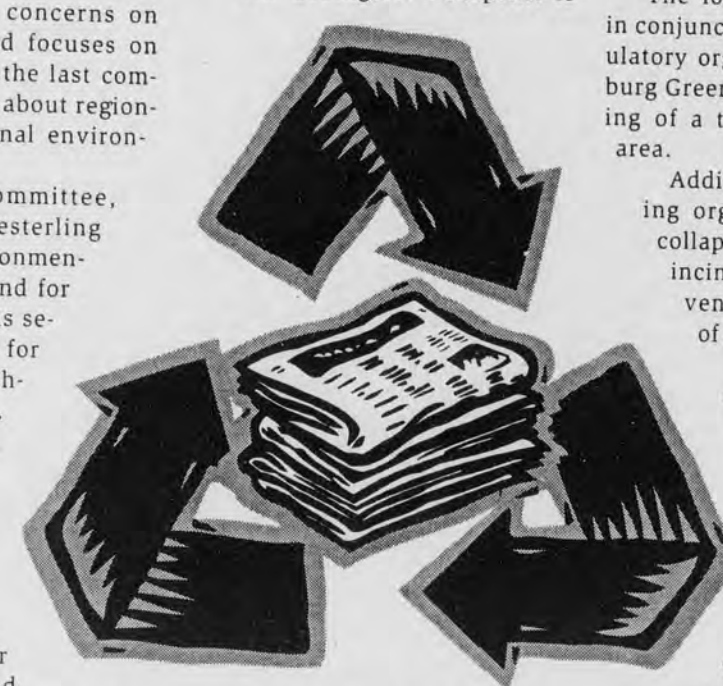

For example, due to the lack of available staff on Saturday evenings, the Cafeteria previously used Styrofoam to reduce the number of workers required.

The campus committee wanted to eliminate the use of Styrofoam on the campus, and therefore created a volunteer program with the Environmental Club volunteers to wash the dishes used in return for the elimination of Styrofoam. Not only are they attempting to eliminate Styrofoam in the cafeteria, but they are also attempting to have it eliminated from The Bison!

Styrofoam is not the only project on the campus committee's agenda. They are also diligently working to ensure that the items in the recycling bins are actually being recycled, and are beginning an Ecological Footprint on our campus.

"An Ecological Footprint is actually a map of the environmental impact the campus has on the surrounding environment," Facilitator Elisabeth Hulet '03 said. It is a long-term project, but in the future could provide information as to what impact the University has on Lewisburg and the surrounding environment.

The local committee, headed by Stuart DeVan '03, similar to the campus committee, is focusing on recycling in Lewisburg, and how the process may be improved. Unfortunately, many residents of the downtown area are unaware of the existing recycling program. The local committee is hoping to capture the attention of the residents, and inform them of the recycling program.

The local committee worked in conjunction with SAFER, a regulatory organization, and Lewisburg Greens to prevent the building of a tire incinerator in the area.

Additional protests are being organized in attempt to collapse the plan to build the incinerator in order to prevent significant amounts of environmental damage.

To further prevent environmental damage and to increase environmental awareness, the local committee is also attempting to coordinate a program with local elementary schools.

The program would teach simple ways in which children may effectively prevent damage to the environment. "The children may learn things such as why it is necessary to turn the lights out, or the benefits of recycling," Hulet said.

In addition to the environmental education present in the plans of the local committee, the regional and national committee is working diligently to educate as well. In conjunction with the Allegheny Defense Project, the committee is hoping to bring speakers to campus to spread awareness of the logging that is occurring in the Allegheny National Forest.

Many projects are underway in each of the three committees, and more ideas emerge with each meeting. The club is always welcoming new ideas, and is excited to have environmental interest spread throughout the campus community.

Do you have an environmental concern, a project idea, or are you interested in the environment?

If so, then come to the meetings at 9 p.m. on Tuesdays in the Langone Center Scullery.

Five members of the Environmental Club: (bottom row from left) Elisabeth Hulet, John Wesley, (top row from left) Stuart DeVan, Beth Oesterling, and Rob Gregor.

Oil companies import new diseases into Amazon basin

By Katherine Nowak

The popular press has overlooked the importation of disease by multinational oil companies into the Amazon. According to the Journal of the South and Meso American Indian Rights Center, epidemics of measles, acute respiratory illnesses, cholera, and malaria have occurred since the first oil drilling began near the villages of the largest Amazonian indigenous groups, the Mayorunas and the Uruarinas. Invaded by colonists, loggers, river traders and drug-voyeur tourists, the once isolated Amazonian people have been confronted with unyielding outbreaks that threaten their survival.

"The continued resource exploitation has brought much disease," Ritchie Witzig and Massiel Ascencio said. These authors have documented the infectious traumas within the communities of the indigenous people since oil workers from three multinational oil companies began drilling on the Chambira oil field at Santa Martha on the Chambira River in 1997.

The Chambira River lies in the heart of Uruarina land. Rights to the oil fields owned by Petroperu, the Peruvian national oil company, were sought by the Enterprise Oil Company of Great Britain in 1996. Upon the sale of the oil rights to Britain, U.S. oil drilling companies also sought drilling rights.

Ecological disasters struck the region in 1997, leading to oil contamination of the whole Chambira River and affecting the once numerous populations of fish and Amazonian river dolphins.

The oil companies have continued to establish themselves, leaving the indigenous people powerless. In their efforts to legitimize their invasion of Uruarina territory, the companies hired "impostor Uruarina leaders," who have divided indigenous groups and have helped the companies to enter native areas. Meanwhile, the government's financial restitution to the local people has been minimal.

By May 1997, health impacts of oil teams on the Amazonian people became evident. Composed of personnel from various regions in Peru, the United States and Europe, the teams have brought on intense epidemics.

The oil teams have introduced drug-resistant strains of the malaria parasite P. falciparum. P. falciparum causes pulmonary complications such as atypical pneumonia, lobar pneumonia or bronchopneumonia, and pulmonary edema, a disease that resembles Acute Respiratory Distress Syndrome (ARDS).

These imported malaria strains have resisted both chloroquine and sulfadoxine, the most common drugs used in Peru against P. falciparum. Alternative drug therapies are infrequently available, and the nearest health post in the Chambira region is in Maypuc, which is one week's travel time from Uruarina land by river canoe, the only form of transportation.

In addition, the oil teams have caused outbreaks of pertussis (whooping cough), a dangerous disease for individuals not vaccinated against it.

"The Uruarina have not received the DTP vaccine which protects against pertussis. Pertussis can be among the most lethal diseases in children with multiple infections," Witzig and Ascencio said.

Witzig has appealed to the Peruvian government in hopes of achieving legal recognition and protection for the Uruarina territories.

"The oil exploitation in Uruarina territory has resulted in both serious health impacts and environmental degradation. If it continues at this pace, the cultural, biological, and ecological effects of oil exploration on the Uruarina will likely be irreversible," Witzig said.

Witzig fears that other diseases, including AIDS, that have not already posed problems in the indigenous communities, will soon pierce the region due to exposure to oil workers.

Uruarina people were struck with grief by the invasion of heavy equipment brought by foreigners into the Chambira River region. Meanwhile, pertussis epidemics around the oil drilling site began to inflict a negative impact on health of members of the community (inset).

Sports

Creamer and Franks hope for sophomore success

By Brian Klotz

It's the textbook example of motivation. The Bucknell women's basketball squad made it all the way through the Patriot League tournament last year, only to suffer devastating 87-63 loss to Holy Cross in the championship game. The goal was so close, and while last year's seniors won't get another shot, the team contains two sophomores who remember it well, because they posted impressive freshman seasons to get to the team to that final game.

Sophomore Molly Creamer and Katie Franks have their sights set. "Last year went well," Franks said. "I would rather have finished the Patriot League Tournament with a win, but this year we have a second chance."

Creamer and Franks are returning from freshman seasons where they posted the most points and the sixth most points in Bucknell history with 475 and 289, respectively. Head woman's basketball coach Kathy Fedorjaka believes that kind of scoring will carry into this season.

"They both were logging over 30 minutes a game last season," Fedorjaka said. "In any year, that'd be a positive, but especially last year when we were making a run for the (Patriot League) title. The stakes and pressure were high and that gave them an unbelievable lift going into their sophomore season."

Creamer and Franks both began their basketball careers at the promptings of their fathers, in fourth and second grade, respectively. Both women loved playing, and both wanted to play as long as they could. "I decided when I was little that I wanted to play basketball in college," Franks said. "It was something that was in my head that I had to do."

Sophomores Molly Creamer (left) and Kate Franks look to lead the Bison to the Patriot League Championship.

Progressing through high school,

Creamer (Mendham HS, NJ) and Franks (Phillipsburg-Osceola HS, PA) posted numerous all-county and all-conference honors. Creamer went with her team to the state tournament twice and was a tournament MVP in her senior year. Franks chalked up league MVP and made third team all-state.

The choice of Bucknell came pretty easily for both players. "Bucknell was kinda close to home, had great academics, and I liked the team and coach," Franks recalled. "I immediately liked the basketball team here," Creamer said. "There was a really close bond within the team."

Creamer and Franks came in with a group of two other freshmen, but unfortunately the other two are no longer part of the program. As the only two sophomores on the team, they find themselves in a unique spot. "We definitely miss the other two sophomores, but me and Katie are really close," Creamer said. "Now we almost act as liaisons between the freshman and junior team members; it's kind of a cool position."

Fedorjaka has seen their friendship develop. "They came in here with a four-member class, but one transferred and one stopped playing basketball last fall, so they have definitely formed a strong bond with each other. They have also become close with the current junior class and almost see themselves as a part of that class."

Individual accolades are not high on the list of priorities of either Creamer or Franks, as is evident by their team-oriented attitudes. Ask either what it is like to come back from such an impressive season last year, and you will probably receive a blank look. "Neither of us really think about that," Creamer said. "All that matters to us is that the team is winning."

"What we are doing this year might not be the same as the team required to win last year," Franks said. "Academics-wise Creamer is an education major with around a 2.9 GPA and Franks recently switched into a business-management major with an approximately a 2.7 GPA. The adjustment from high school to being a college student-athlete was tough for both ladies, but they are optimistic about this year. "Freshman year was really difficult for us," Creamer said. "However, our first year gave us a lot of experience as to what to expect this year."

With other teams aware of the threat that the women pose on the court, one would think that opponents would key more on them, but Creamer and Franks don't think this will be the case this season. "It would be hard with our team this year," Franks said. "I don't think they can just focus on us. Other people on the team will beat them."

As far as Creamer and Franks are concerned, there is no on-court competition among them. Both distinctly agree on being completely different players, but not in their playing styles. "One of the things I bring to the team is my attitude," Franks said. "I don't let a lot of things bother me, but I will admit I am also kind of cocky."

"I like to laugh and make jokes a lot," Creamer said. "Before a game you can catch me trying to lighten the atmosphere by goofing off, but that goes away come game time."

Both women rave about great fan support and continue to improve their play with each passing week. Teammates look forward to seeing them step up again this year.

"They played large roles on the team as freshman and are very experienced as sophomores," Katie Florence '02 said. "Since we have such a young team this year, that will help a lot."

BCS brings more "fuzzy math"

By Rob Schmicker

Much like the race for the White House, college football's regular season is finally drawing to an end. And much like the world of politics, there is a cloud of controversy over the state of Florida.

If the season ended today, undefeated Oklahoma would play Florida State in the Orange Bowl, and Miami would play in the Sugar Bowl. But it's not as simple as that. While Florida State, Miami and Washington are all 10-1, Florida State's only loss came to Miami and Miami lost to Washington. But, Washington lost to no. 10 Oregon. It seems as if both Washington and Miami could be playing Oklahoma instead of Florida State. So, who should be Oklahoma's opponent in the title game?

According to the Bowl Championship Series, it's Florida State. The past three years, the BCS had it easy as there was no doubt who the top two teams were. In fact, last year, two undefeated teams squared off. This year's scenario is just what the BCS was hoping to avoid, as many of its original critics now have a reason to complain.

So what exactly is the BCS? The BCS is a computer ranking system based on the two national polls, eight national indexes, strength of schedule and number of losses. First the average of the AP and Coaches poll, as well as the average of the best seven indexes are computed. Then the school's rank regarding schedule strength is multiplied by .04. Finally, each team receives one point for each loss. All four categories are added up and the teams with the lowest rankings head to the title game.

Florida State, who is ranked third according to both polls, is currently ranked second in the BCS standings with a total of 5.18 points compared to Miami's 5.79 points. The big difference comes as a result of strength of schedule, as FSU had the hardest schedule in the nation.

The only way for Miami to make it to the title game is for Oklahoma to lose to Kansas State this weekend in the Big 12 Championship game. Then the Hurricanes would have a rematch with Florida State.

If Oklahoma defeats Kansas State, then Miami will head to the Sugar Bowl. They could still win a share of the national title if Florida State was to beat Oklahoma in the Orange Bowl. This is because the AP will probably vote Miami no. 1 based on the fact that they defeated Florida State, while the coaches will vote for Florida State.

While this all seems very complicated, there currently isn't a better way of deciding the champion. While some want a tournament like college basketball, others don't want to lose the bowl games. Football and basketball are obviously different and a huge tournament would not work in football because of time, money and possible injuries.

Although Divisions I-AA, II and III all use the tournament format, they end their seasons earlier. If Division I-A were to go with the tournament idea, then they would lose all their bowl games and the tradition that goes with them. Also, the importance of the regular season would be significantly reduced, as a team that goes 7-4 has as good of still have some significance, and the polls would be useless.

Keep the mid-level bowl games and let the best teams not in the tournament play in them. As for the tournament, give each school the same amount of money, with the national champion getting a little more. This way, the dominant schools won't continue to get richer. Let the Citrus, Cotton, Outback and Fiesta Bowls hold the first round games, followed by the Orange and Sugar as the sights of the semifinals. Finally, let the Rose Bowl hold the national title game.

This way, the champ is decided on the field and not by some computer or some pollster. Let the games be held beginning in mid-December after finals and have the final during the first week in January. Then the teams won't have to change their scheduled national title game. The tradition of the Bowl Games is not lost. While my plan has many flaws, so does the current system.

The bottom line is that there is no way to keep everyone happy. So instead of getting all worked up over the whole thing, I think all of America should simply enjoy "Bowl Week" for what it is, and not for what it lacks (but who's going to tell that to Miami).

The Miami Hurricanes get shut out of the championship game despite beating FSU.

a shot as a team that goes 10-1.

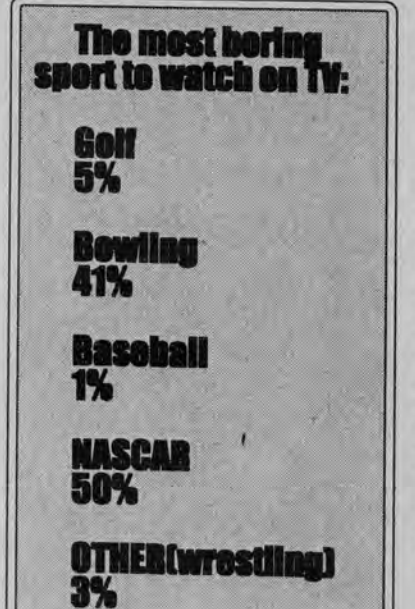

So, what can be done about this whole mess?

Here's my idea: hold a tournament with only eight teams. The champions of the ACC, Big East, Big 10, Big 12, Pac-10 and SEC get automatic births. The other two births go to the highest ranked teams according to the improved BCS, which would take head-to-head match-ups into consideration. This way, the regular season would

And the Bucknell survey says ...

By Scott Kloss

brief moment, close their eyes and dream that they too can be in the athletes' shoes, getting paid to do what they love to do. It can also be said no matter what the dramatic irony, a sport cannot support a fan base outside of the originators' domain. This is the case with most fans following their local team, either for ease of access to news or just because it brings a local sense of pride.

When it comes down to the bottom line, watching or playing a sport means the difference between considering it boring or exciting. Our poll results show NASCAR to be the least favorite sport to watch on TV.

Quotes: If I had to pick, I'd pick rebounds allowed her to surpass the 500-rebound plateau for her career. The squad's ability to slam the door on Marist's comeback attempt is seen by Fedorjaka as a strength of this year's team.

"The biggest difference from last year is this year is this team's ability to close," Fedorjaka said. "We seem to be stringing together closer to 40 minutes —and not having too many lapses that hurt us. The intensity, focus and game mentality have been terrific."

The Bison are looking more like a group of crafty veterans than a young squad with no seniors after calmly and

NASCAR. I mean, if I want to sit around for hours watching something go around in a circle, I'd might as well take some little kids to a merry-go-round and let them ride the horses all day. At least that would be more interesting than watching some cars speed around a track. —Michelle Kawood '03

I would have to say that NASCAR would have to be the most boring. Why? What is the point of watching cars drive around a race track for numerous amounts of laps? It's not like the cars are really going anywhere. And it is just a race to see who can drive the fastest. Maybe if it was an off road race it would be more interesting. I'd rather watch a golf tournament, at least there is a change of scenery at each hole. —Jasmine James '04

NASCAR: It's simply not a sport. It's an advertising parade of cloned cars traveling at artificially limited speeds in a continuous loop. If you want to see a real motorsport, try GT racing or Formula 1. —Jon Rabin '03

I don't like watching bowling because even though it is fun playing, it is so boring to watch. I personally think that anyone that can get that many strikes in a row needs to get a life or another sport that is a little more active! —Mats Kamiss

I'm a baseball fan, but I know that baseball is considered by many to be boring. I think that golf is hard to follow as they switch from hole to hole. Watching NASCAR is like watching traffic.

All sports have their down side, but I think that bowling has to be my least favorite to watch. To play, not to watch. —Cindy Garrison '04

Baseball is the lesser of the four evils. Though the sport is slow and at times tedious, the Major League Baseball season concludes with an intense playoff period that is widely followed. Baseball is a game of strategy as well as power and finesse. A hole in one is exciting to witness, but occurs once in a blue moon. The only exciting plays in NASCAR are the crashes and bowling is not a sport as far as I'm concerned. —Alex Darydov '02

Next Week's Question: With only one undefeated team in college football and six other teams that have a deserving record to fight for #1, how is it that the bowl system can't ease the pain of this shaky process? Is it better that you run the score up on your opponent or beat higher ranked teams?

Do you like the college football Ratings Poll, which at this time cannot decide a "true" national champion? Yes No (If No, than what can be done about this?)

Email responses to skloss@bucknell.edu to be included in next week's "And the survey says ..."

NFL experts' picks

By Justin McCarthy and Ali Ahmed

Oakland (10-2) at Pittsburgh (6-6)

Pittsburgh is coming off a game in which they scored their most points since 1995: 48; the Steelers will require an equally great performance by Stewart against the Raiders. The Steelers cannot become one-dimensional and rely on Betts to carry them, especially since the Raiders defense held the last starting RB they faced to 28 yards. The Steelers will need a huge performance out of their defense—one of the top in the league. They cannot allow another breakdown in their rushing defense for a third straight week, having allowed 234—the most ever by a Steelers' defense—and 128 yards respectively in the past two weeks. Oakland simply needs to lean in Gannon; if Pittsburgh cannot pressure him and force him out of the pocket then the Raiders will cruise to victory.

Justin's pick: Raiders 31-20

Oakland is probably playing its most consistent ball of the season but, like when the Rams lost to the Chiefs, sometimes it is just the right moment for a great streak to end. They have a great record so far but their record is better than what it appears. They have a questionable running game, and after Tim Brown, have no reliable receivers. The Steelers, on the other hand, are a much better team than their record indicates—especially after the three to nothing beating the NFL referees have put on them. After giving up two big running performances two weeks in a row, the Steelers should clamp down on the Raiders' defense. Defensively, the Raiders have given up points in bunches this season and the Bus might just roll right over them.

Ali's pick: Steelers 27-17

Tennessee (9-3) at Philadelphia (9-4)

Although these two teams have similar records the Titans are the much more dominant team; this can be seen in the point differential of their losses. For even though the Titans have three losses they lost by a combined total of just seven points, while the Eagles in their four losses have lost by over five times that amount. The hopes of the Eagles depends on another Super Bowl performance by McNabb; however, against a defense like the Titans that looks hopeless. The Titans will look to the consistent McNair to lead them. The Eagles have a decent rushing defense that may cause problems for George, for last week they held the Redskins to a total of 44 yards rushing.

Justin's pick: Titans 27-21

Edgar George and an opportunistic defense could only carry the Titans so far before the passing game had to pick up. With the recovery of Pickens and Thigpen, the passing game should pick up, although some days McNair looks like he has no business being a starting NFL QB. He really needs to be more consistent in containing George carry the team. On the other hand, McNabb really needs to be in a star in him and Philly fans should feel sorry for booing when the Eagles took McNabb over Ricky Williams in the draft. The Eagles' defense must also step up, with the key being the play of their cornerbacks; if they can keep up with the Titan wideouts one-on-one then Philly can concentrate on stopping Eddie George.

Ali's pick: Titans 24-16

Detroit (8-4) at Minnesota (10-2)

This game has strong implications for the standings in the NFC Central; as if now the Vikings hold the tie breaker having already defeated Detroit once this season. The Vikings may be too much offensive for Detroit, with Culpepper and his targets Carter and Moss. However, if the Lions' defense wants to be successful in containing the passing game, they will need huge games from their DBs. The Lions' offense may be able to keep up with Minnesota's due to the Vikings' dismal defense. If Detroit is able to deploy a balanced attack with Bush and Stewart and is able to pressure Culpepper into forcing his passes, the Vikings may be in a game to the wire.

Justin's pick: Vikings 30-24

If Detroit starts playing to the potential that former coach Bobby Ross thought they had, then the Lions will be a very scary and very balanced team. With the improved offensive line and James Stewart the running game has been very productive and if Charlie Batch plays well he has a lot of talent at the wideout position to pass to. Throw in a very solid defense and the Lions are easily the most balanced team in the NFL. However, while the Lions have potential, the Vikings have just flat out gotten it done. Moss and Carter are just too good for any defense in the league. The defenses really must depend on defeating Culpepper. But the young QB has played well enough for the Vikings to rack up the wins and Robert Smith is playing his best ball. Even the defense at times makes enough stops for the offense to do the damage.

Ali's pick: Vikings 36-26

Indianapolis (7-5) at NY Jets (8-4)

The Jets have been winning with their defense lately, for Testaverde hasn't been the expected leader he was supposed to be this year, while the Colts have not stopped relying on their offense to lead them to victory. The Jets' defense will need to play spectacularly again against the trio of Manning, Harrison and James. Testaverde should be able to put up some numbers against a weak Colts' defense; however, look for the Jets to ride the back of Martin. This game is a must-win for the Colts, for if they win they will be tied with the Jets for second in the AFC East, and they will hold the tie-breaker having defeated them twice this year. However, with a loss they will fall two games behind the Jets and possibly even fall behind the Buffalo Bills.

Justin's pick: Jets 28-27

Unless the Jets fall behind early they are going to try and ride Curtis Martin all the way—keeping the awesome Colts offense off the field. Testaverde just has not been the leader they expected and I wonder if Keyshawn's absence is a reason why. The Jets' defense has been lacking a decent pass rush ever since rookie linebacker Abraham went out and that might mean trouble against the potent Colts' offense. Manning is my pick for the best QB in the NFL right now, and he has a couple of weapons to complement him. The Colts really should be fired up for this game because they really need a win to keep them strong in the tight playoff race. As usual, their offense can cover their defense enough to win the game.

Ali's pick: Colts 24-23

Miami (9-3) at Buffalo (7-5)

Miami is currently plagued with injuries to it's starting QB and RB; however, they displayed an impressive performance last week without them in a victory over the Colts. Buffalo will need to protect Johnson, who was sacked six times last week, against a relentless pass rush. Buffalo needs to establish a running game to keep pressure off Johnson and to keep the defensive rush of Miami off-balance. This game will end up becoming a defensive battle that will be determined by big plays and mistakes. Buffalo is in a must-win situation to keep their playoff hopes alive. With four teams in the AFC East vying for playoff positions, they will surely be knocking each other out in the upcoming weeks.

Justin's pick: Bills 19-17

Even though the Dolphins have had injuries to their starting backfield, their backups are just as talented as the starters; unfortunately, that has more to do with low quality starters than backup backs. But the Dolphins will hope that their pass rush can hamper Johnson all day—especially with the Bills' offensive line giving up a lot of pressure to opposing teams lately. Even though Johnson is a great QB, he will have a favorite target Eric Moulden press against all-pro Sam Madison. Since Johnson will have trouble keeping drives long against such a good defense, look for the Bills to go for big plays and Peppers Price might be one guy to really watch out for.

Ali's pick: Bills 17-13

Water polo finishes seventh at Easterns

By Brooke Rea

In its first season under head coach John Zeigler, the Bucknell men's water polo team finished 22-20 with a seventh place finish at Easterns Nov. 18-19. Despite the consistency of leadership under six seniors, including third-time co-captain Kevin Permishohn '01, the year proved to be one of transition as the Bison adjusted to Zeigler and a new style of offense.

"This year was a building process from the beginning," Permishohn said. "We had a new coach with a new strategy, and the team had to grow throughout the season in order to succeed."

Classmate James Mante agreed with Permishohn's assessment. "John is a great guy and a very good coach," he said. "This year started off rough, but it definitely got better. I think that in a year or two, things will look really good for John and the team."

BU's 2000 season came to a close at Brown University, where Easterns were held two weeks ago. The challenging tournament put the Bison up against two nationally-ranked teams, UMass and Harvard, and the Orange and Blue fell to both. But the final game of the weekend—and the season—was a strong victory over Johns Hopkins.

The weekend got off to a rocky start as the Bison faced no. 12 UMass, an Eastern powerhouse and offensive force. UMass came on strong, jumping to an 8-1 lead in the first half, with Bucknell unable to find the net but earning several penalties for the other team.

In the second half, a pair of goals from junior Ryan McCarty and freshman Jamie Sattelle weren't enough, as UMass continued to dominate. Senior Chris Kemp-ton also netted one goal, and impressive numbers came from Ryan McCarty and Sattelle, who each drew four ejections. Despite these efforts, BU wasn't able to convert man-up opportunities and the final score settled at 13-5.

"We did not play well defensively in this game, which allowed UMass to get the early lead," Zeigler said. "They also hurt us with multiple players scoring goals from the 2-meter."

The Orange and Blue came out ready for vengeance in their second game against no. 20 Harvard, despite the absence of injured starter Tate Gredlizer '01, who was sidelined after the UMass game. The first quarter was a tight, as the Crimson only led the Bison 3-2, but the second quarter was more problematic for Bucknell. At the half, Harvard led 8-3.

A re-energized pack of Bison prepared a scoring attack for the second half of the game, tallying three in the third and four in the fourth to tie the game at 10-10 with a minute left. A Bucknell ejection gave Harvard the window of opportunity it needed to gain the lead, and they netted an outside shot with less than a minute to go on the clock. With one scoring opportunity left, BU was unable to put it away. Harvard got the ball and held it until the clock ran out, sealing the 11-10 victory.

"Although this was a tough loss," Zeigler said, "it was an outstanding comeback that put us in a position to win the game. Multiple players contributed offensively and made up for Tate's being injured."

Permishohn and Ryan McCarty each scored three goals, while sophomore Chris Saxton had a pair of goals and an assist. Junior goalie Dave Kennedy registered 11 saves in the contest.

After a tough loss, the Bison were out for a win in the seventh place game against Hopkins. An aggressive press defense and quick counterattack offense pounded Hopkins throughout the game, but the second half proved to be the deciding factor as BU outscored Hopkins 7-1.

This game highlighted the team's improvements and increased depth over the course of the season. "A lot of players stepped up this year to take on more important roles on the team," Permishohn said. "This allowed us to have a greater rotation of players during games, which aided our success."

This was clearly the case in the Hopkins game, as numerous players put up goals. Standouts for the Bison were Mante and Ryan McCarty, who both netted three goals apiece. Permishohn also had a goal and four assists, while Sattelle added two goals and one assist.

The players and coach agree that this win was a great way to end the season. "We could have played low after a frustrating prior two games, but instead we stepped it up and played hard," Zeigler said. "It was a great team victory and a well-played game."

Mante and co-captain Justin McCarty have four years to look back on, as this weekend was their last as members of the Bucknell water polo team.

"Easterns was a bit of a disappointment," Mante said. "I didn't expect us to beat UMass, but we didn't play well. I was glad we played so well against Harvard, but I really thought we would win. Beating Johns Hopkins was a good way to end the weekend, though, and overall I have a lot of positive memories about polo at Bucknell."

McCarty agreed, expressing happiness that his last memory of BU polo will be a good one. "It feels great to end a four-year career with a win," he said.

Wrestling has a "strange" day

By Carmen Mauriello

After the Bison wrestling team lost to Shippensburg 24-20 on Sunday, Nov. 19 and then saw Lycoming trounce Ship 36-6, co-captain Ryan Fasnacht '01 went into the team's meet against Lycoming thinking that it would be a "tough day."

But the Bison dug down and showed their resiliency, seizing a 23-20 come-from-behind victory to even their season record at 1-1.

The Bison followed this performance by finishing 12th of 13 teams at last Saturday's high competitive Mat Town Tournament, highlighted by junior Ben Chunks's seventh place finish.

The Bison opened their 2000-2001 season with the tri-meet at Lycoming College. In the squad's opening match against Shippensburg, Bucknell found itself ahead 9-6 after heavyweight Karl Perrone '02 pinned his opponent in 1:22 and freshman Josh Perrin knotted the overall score at nine with a decision.

But Shippensburg would claim the next three matches to obtain a 24-9 lead. Ryan Fasnacht '01, Ben Chunks '01 and Brian Neuman '01 swept the final three matches for the Bison in the 165, 174 and 184-pound weight classes respectively, but the deficit was too much to overcome and Bucknell fell 24-20.

"I don't think that we were completely ready in the Shippensburg match," Head Coach Tim Wittman said, "but by the second match we were ready to go."

"Overall, I think that this tournament was good for the team by allowing us to face some top-20 teams," Chunks said. "It's a good experience that will help prepare us for the tough opponents to come."

The Bison are heading into an action-packed weekend, as they travel to Drexel on Saturday to compete in a tri-meet with the host team and Duke. Then the Bison will get back into the bus on Sunday to compete in the Penn State Open in State College, a tournament that Wittman, a Penn State graduate, is anxious to return to.

"We've got a couple of guys banged up," Wittman said, "but whoever's out there will give 110 percent."

Fasnacht started the rally by pinning his Lycoming opponent at 6:29. The late pin proved pivotal in the match's close finish, and it also lifted the spirits of the Bison.

"The key to the match was Fasnacht's pin," Wittman said. "That really fired us up."

Chunks continued the momentum in the 174-pound match, claiming a 16-1 technical fall victory to tie the score at 20. Neuman then clinched the victory for the Orange and Blue with a hard-fought 6-5 decision.

The comeback victory showed that the Bison can deal with adversity. "We had a better mindset against Lycoming than we did in our first match, and guys really started getting behind each other," Fasnacht said. "We dug down and were able to come away 1-1 instead of 0-2."

Next up for the Bison was the Mat Town Tournament at Lock Haven last Saturday, where the Bison finished 12 of 13 teams.

The highlight for the Bison was Chunks's seventh place finish. After losing his first match to Missouri's John Kopinsky—the eventual champion—Chunks defeated Franklin & Marshall's Tom Brinzer, 3-1. Chunks lost his next match but then closed the day with an eight-point victory over Lock Haven's Eric O'Connor to finish in seventh place.

Chunks was pleased with his performance, but his coach recognized that there are even better things in Chunks's future.

"We are just beginning to tap into (Chunks's) potential," Wittman said.

"Overall, I think that this tournament was good for the team by allowing us to face some top-20 teams," Chunks said. "It's a good experience that will help prepare us for the tough opponents to come."

The Bison are heading into an action-packed weekend, as they travel to Drexel on Saturday to compete in a tri-meet with the host team and Duke. Then the Bison will get back into the bus on Sunday to compete in the Penn State Open in State College, a tournament that Wittman, a Penn State graduate, is anxious to return to.

"We've got a couple of guys banged up," Wittman said, "but whoever's out there will give 110 percent."

BU Equestrian

The Bucknell equestrian team came in second place to Wilson at the Wilson Show. Congratulations to Kim Longratz '04, who was High Point Rider. Great job everyone, and congrats to a great fall season!

Sports

The Houston ... what?

Listen ... Can you hear it? Yeah ... that's the sound of the NFL being restructured. Unbeknownst to even the most die hard of fans, a unanimous decision was made among all 31 NFL teams, owners in early October agreeing to a realignment proposal of the AFC and NFC. This is the first major realignment since the AFL-NFL merger in 1970.

This decision comes on the wings of Houston being awarded the NFL's 32nd team franchise charter. Houston, formerly of Houston Oilers fame, had been in the league since 1960 only to be relocated to Tennessee in 1996. They were subsequently renamed the Titans due to a shocking lack of oil in the Volunteer State.

Unfortunately, there aren't many Greek mythological figures in Tennessee either, but let's not split hairs. Regardless, Houston has been looking to reenter the NFL fray ever since.

So with the Houston Texans on the way—yes, the Texans, a name more original than the prime time lineup on Fox—the owners decided there needed to be a shift in the league makeup. Suggestions stretched as far as loading the AFC East with seven teams. However, in the end, the decision was made to split the two leagues into eight divisions, with four teams in a division.

For the most part, the new divisions were decided on geography, but special consideration has been paid to satisfy TV markets so that no one division has a plethora of big-revenue teams and only the Seattle Seahawks will have to switch conferences. In addition, consideration has been paid to specific division rivalries, such as Dallas remaining in the NFC East to compete with the Giants and Redskins. Other rivalries are also being protected, such as Oakland-San Francisco, the Jets-Giants, etcetera.

The proposal calls for six games to be played within the division, four games against a conference rival, four games against teams in their corresponding division in the opposite conference, and two to be played against a geographic rival. Unfortunately, it is unlikely that plan will be accepted due to the small number of teams that can boast such a feud.

In response to these changes, some owners are suggesting adding two more games to the postseason schedule. This would grant the team with the best record in each conference a bye week in the first round of the playoffs. Sadly, this too seems unlikely considering that last year, two teams made it to the postseason with an 8-8 record, so it appears foolish to open up the greater possibility for a team with a losing record to reach the playoffs.

Unfortunately, there are still some question marks plaguing the new system. The most prominent issue is that surrounding the future of the Minnesota Vikings. Under the current plan, they would remain in the same division with the rival Lions, Packers and Bears.

However, if in two years, the football market in Minnesota dries up, there have been rumors of a Viking voyage to Los Angeles. If this is the case, the NFL would rather compensate for that in the realignment rather than have the geography skewed again.

So what does all this mean? Well, it is unfair to judge the proceedings as of yet seeing as nothing has been officially voted on, other than the fact that the teams will be realigned. But I think that with all the rumors and proposals flying around, it is safe to say that the owner of the Houston Texans has absolutely no imagination. I don't think he could possibly have come up with a duller name. Is he trying to make his fan-base keel over from sheer boredom?

Watching the Texans compete has got to be like watching molasses drip down the shell of an anaristic tortoise as it tries to walk the length of the football field under the intense gravitational pull of the planet Jupiter. Why couldn't he come up with something a little less "Beat me up and steal my lunch money, I'm a Texans fan" and a little more menacing like the Houston ... Menaces?

Alright, so obviously I won't quit my day job, but I think if I had the $700 million to pay for a football franchise, I could find someone to think up an original name rather than asking a seven year old nephew if he'd rather root for the Houston Thumb-Twiddlers or the Houston Who-The-Heck-Cares.

In fact, the only thing I'm concerned about is the name of the new division: why the hell would I'm sure this has our equatorial buddies leaping out of their seats with delusions of grandeur.

Let me tell you something—the most exciting game of division rivalry you'll see in the south for a long time will be the rousing games between the Atlanta Falcons and the Houston Texans which will probably be about as heavily anticipated and as exciting as the release of the handheld "Bass-Master 2000 Fishing Genie" in a variety of different colors (including "guppy green" and "flounder fuchsia") a la iMac, so let's not get overzealous.

Not even the playoff schedule will change, meaning teams with losing records will probably not make the postseason, which shuts the doors for the ever-hopeful Patriots and Chargers. Much to the dismay of New England and San Diego, they'll have to build teams that actually function in order to take that step.

But quite frankly this realignment brings little to no significant change to the face of the NFL. It looks, on the surface at least, to be a sleeker and more beautiful manner of waging bloody, full-contact war in grotesque celebration of the aggressive cannibalistic nature of man, while preserving the "good wholesome fun for the whole family" image, but I doubt it will interfere with one's Sunday plans.

Classic rivalries will never die—the owners are too wrapped up in profits to relinquish them. Not to mention that the NFL would never sacrifice money for the sake of a geography lesson, even though it's probably best that the NFC West have more than one team that lies on the Pacific side of the Mississippi River.

TRIVIA By Justin McCarthy

- 1) Who is the only NFL player to record two safeties in a single game?
- 2) What is the most rushing yards gained in game by an NFL team since 1950?
- 3) Who is the only NCAA player (any level) to surpass 7,000 yards rushing for his career?

Bison finish season on a down note

Football drops third straight game to Colgate 24-21; ends season 6-5

By Cory Nadler

A season that had the chance to end in a playoff berth ended in disappointment for the Bucknell football team. After the Bison began the season with a 5-1 record, the Bucknell community was hoping that the team could keep up its outstanding play and end the season in the playoffs.

But throughout the second half of the season the Bison offense struggled to put points on the board, and the Blue and Orange went 1-4 in the second half of the fall. The Bison ended their season with a tough 24-21 loss to rival Colgate.

Although Bucknell was able to muster more points against the Red Raiders than they had been able to score in the previous few games, it was still not enough to give them a season-ending win.

"It seems like this was the season that was not meant to be," Head Coach Tom Gadd said.

"We fought hard. It's disappointing, we just wanted to get a win for the seniors," tight end Greg Readinger '02 said. Bucknell's loss to Colgate made it three games in a row that the Bison would lose due to a score on the last possession of the opposing team.

When this game began it looked as though the Bucknell offense was going to struggle for yet another week. Colgate put the first points of the game on the board with a 27-yard field that was tipped at the line of scrimmage, and grazed the cross bar as it went through the uprights.

Senior wide receiver Bob Hepp fends off an opponent's tackle.

This put the Bison down 3-0 early in the first quarter. Later in the first quarter the Bison got on the board with a 33-yard touchdown run by Jabu Powell '02. This scoring drive was set up by Bucknell's great field position after a fumble recovery by Kevin Eiben '01 on the Colgate 43-yardline. This score put the Bison on top 7-3, but not for long.

After a Colgate 28-yard punt return, the Red Raiders had good field position on the 50-yardline. They would not need to execute a drive this time, as Randall Joseph ran in from 49 yards out to put Colgate on top 10-7 with nine minutes remaining in the first half.

With less than a minute remaining in the half, the Bison had the chance to tie the score with a field goal, but the snap was mishandled and the score remained 10-7 going into halftime.

Midway through the third quarter the Red Raiders engineered a 12-play, 73-yard drive that was capped off by a 21-yard touchdown pass. This extended the Colgate lead to 17-7.

But on the ensuing Bucknell possession, Bison quarterback Lucas Phillips '01 drove his team 75 yards on seven plays. Powell capped off this drive with a 12-yard touchdown run to shrink the Colgate lead to 17-14.

After a missed field goal by Colgate, the Bison drove 41 yards into Colgate territory, but were unable to score after coming up short on a fourth down situation. The Bison defense did its job, forcing Colgate to go three and out, and giving the ball back to Bucknell on the 50-yardline.

Three plays later Kyle Harris '02 caught a pass from Phillips, broke two tackles and found himself in the end zone.

See FOOTBALL, page 16

Swimming defeats Rider, loses to Rutgers

By Chuck Vicente

Bucknell men's and women's swim teams traveled to Piscataway, New Jersey before the Thanksgiving break to compete against Rutgers and Rider in a tri-meet. The Bison anticipated the talent of a competitive Rutgers team, which was third in the Big East last year, and arrived ready to swim their best.

Rutgers did out-swim both the men's and women's teams, but the Bison came out ahead of Rider due to many gold medal performances from the men's squad.

The women's team managed to capture four second-place finishes and four third-place finishes. And although they did not capture any golds, they women's team did outswim the Rider competition.

Junior Abby Weaver led the women's team with two individual second-place finishes. In the 200-yard freestyle, Weaver posted a time of 1:58.33, and in the 100-yard free she finished in 53.87.

Weaver also swam the lead leg for the 200-yard free relay team which finished second with 1:41.11. The relay team consisted of Anna Sommers '04, Alyson Steckbeck '03 and Meghan Freese '04.

Daniela Faas '04 swam the 1,650-yard free for the second time in her career and displayed an outstanding effort with a time of 18:11.63. Faas's time is the ninth best in school history, and she only looks to improve on record.

"We showed great team effort against Rutgers. Although we had many second, third and fourth place finishes, we realize that swimming against challenging teams will only make us better," Faas said.

The women's team lost to Rutgers 176-60 but beat Rider 140-90. Their record is now even at 3-3.

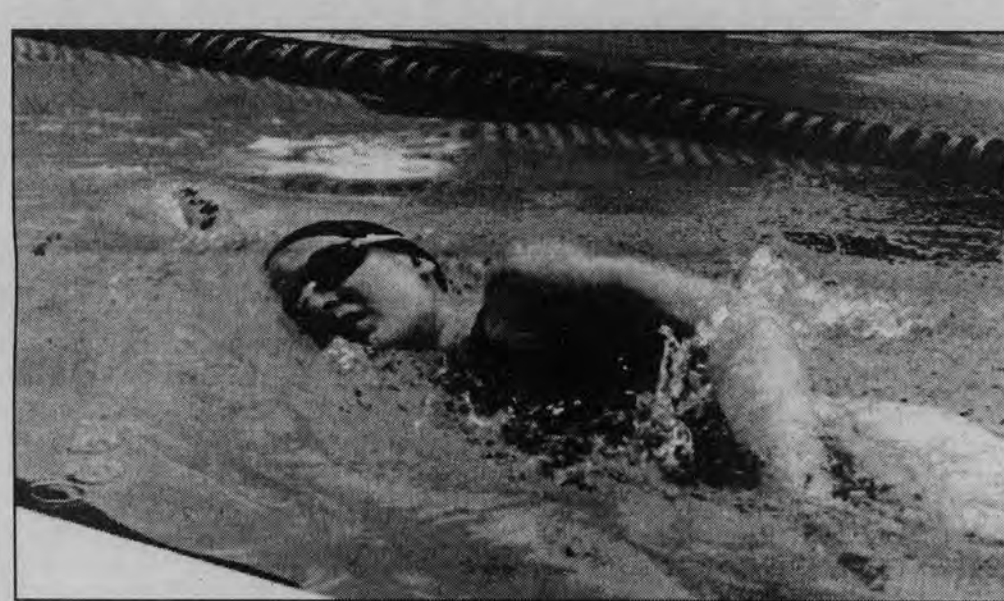

"We swam well. Rutgers was a good team and we realized that," Weaver said.

The men's team fared the same losing to Rutgers 133-107 and beating Rider 155-84. They are now 4-2.

Senior Chris Neary swam yet another dominating overall meet, winning three events. He swam the 100-yard fly in an impressive 52.19.

"Comparing this year to last year, Neary is way ahead of himself," Head Coach Jerry Foley said.

Senior tri-captain Jeff Sharpe and freshman Peter Garvin also edged out the field for individual first place medals winning the 50-yard free and the 100-yard free respectively. Sharpe, Garvin and Abby Weaver '02 tallied two second place finishes for the Bison versus Rider and Rutgers.

Neary teamed up with tri-captain John Ferriter '01 and swam the sixth best time in Bucknell history for the 200-yard free relay in 1:24.57.

Sharpe and Neary, along with Jack Sheehan '03 and Michael Guskus '03, also were a part of the 200-yard medley relay that took first in 1:35.98.

"We swam well. The team really rose to the occasion against some good competition," said Sharpe.

The success that both the men's and women's teams are experiencing is in large part due to the practice regimen. "There is a lot more consistency with our training," Foley said. "The dividend is that we are performing better in competition."

In addition, the younger swimmers have added depth and a positive attitude to the team.

"They add a nice spirit, and their great attitudes have been contagious to the entire squad," Foley said.

The men's and women's teams will host the Bucknell Swimming Invitational this weekend, where Penn and Binghamton will compete. Competition begins Saturday at 1:00 pm and carries on Sunday at 9:30 am.

Women's cross country captures ECAC title

By Rose Sedo

Running in what was their last race of the season, the Bucknell University men's and women's cross country teams competed at the ECAC and IC4A Championships at Van Cortlandt Park in New York City last weekend.

The women won the ECAC race with a team total of 60 points, narrowly defeating James Madison, who finished second with 62 points. The men placed fifth in the IC4A race with a team total of 156 points.

Junior co-captain Becki Marshall '02 was once again the top runner for the Bison, crossing the finish line in second place overall in the 5,000-meter run with a time of 17:52.20.

Sophomores Andrea Beisser and Theresa Dennis joined Marshall in the Top-10, with sixth (17:59.00) and eighth-place (18:12.20) finishes, respectively.

Chris Crowe '02 finished 15th with a time of 18:30.80; while senior co-captain Mandy Youmell '01 closed out Bucknell's top-five runners by finishing 31st in 19:09.00.

Kelly McConnell '02 and Jennifer Malcolm '04 also competed, but did not figure in the scoring. McConnell crossed the line in 40th place with a time of 19:35.90, while Malcolm was 47th in 19:57.50.

Marshall believed that the win was a great way to finish off the season.

"Winning the ECAC Champs was a good indication of this team's dedication," she said. "The race really was a paramount ending to the success we have already had this year."

On the men's side, sophomore Greg Costello was Bucknell's top finisher, placing 27th with a time of 25:43.10 on the 8K course. Tri-captain Brad Wertz '01 followed close behind in 29th with a time of 25:45.30.

Tri-captain Kevin Weatherill '01 and Evan Honeyfield '02 finished 35th in 25:49.90 and 36th in a time of 25:50.40, in that order. Junior P.J. Ward closed out Bucknell's Top-5 with a 49th-place finish in 26:14.10.

Sophomores Bryan Johnston and Louis Palma also competed, but did not figure in the team scoring for the Bison. Johnston finished in 55th place in a time of 26:23.60, while Palma was 70th in 26:42.50.

"IC4A's was a good meet to wrap up the season and we were able to beat St. Joseph's for the second time this year and also beat Princeton for the first time this year," tri-captain Nate Kraft '01 said. "We're looking forward to the track season and another shot at Army."

Bucknell runners also competed in the Men's and Women's Coaches races (junior varsity races). Junior Kristen Ferrell was the Bison's top female, finishing in 10th-place with a time of 19:53.10, while senior Dana Carr was the top finisher for the men, crossing the line in fifth-place at 26:20.80.

The CJB's decision in no way pardons the actions of the chapter; the responsibility for the charges of disorderly conduct, hazing and serving alcohol to minors still lies with SAE as the CJB upheld it unanimously. But new sanctions will provide the fraternity with the opportunity to rectify their actions.

"While the new sanctions are certainly in our favor compared to the old ones, it should be acknowledged that the new

THE Bucknellian

The weekly campus newspaper of Bucknell University

http://www.orgs.bucknell.edu/bucknellian

(L. to R.) New BSG execs Sadaghiani, Collier, Sorber and Kohn.

BSG's new execs bring fresh ideas

By THE BUCKNELLIAN

Following the largest voter turnout in years, the student body elected new Bucknell Student Government (BSG) executives.

The group consists of three newcomers to the board, who will join former vice president for finance Nate Sorber '02, who assumes presidential duties from Marsha Lewis '02.

With the departure of last year's president, Chris Bouchoux, BSG underwent a "rebuilding" period in which they struggled to overcome criticisms to push out issues like cable television and extra reading days. The new administration is prepared to assume leadership and plans to introduce several new initiatives aimed at making BSG more efficient and visible to its student constituency.

NATE SORBER
PRESIDENT

Nate Sorber '02 spoke highly of former BSG President Chris Bouchoux, who he said "allowed each member to think independently of BSG's vision."

"With this past semester, with Chris leaving, Marsha [Lewis] and I had to pull BSG together in a chaotic time. We had to struggle to keep our heads above water, but now we're on the right track," he continued.

Along with his fellow executives, Sorber believes that their organization has rebounded from some major criticisms voiced earlier this semester. Since BSG seems to be on "stable ground," Sorber said he and the new executive board will start looking at some visions and ideas that have been "put on the backburner" for the past few semesters. One of his primary objectives is to set up better communication with BSG's student constituency; the board will propose a motion to assign each Congress member to a particular group of students on campus, most likely by residence hall, to increase contact and cooperation throughout campus.

The new president also hopes to increase Congress' power. According to Sorber, next semester's Congress should be well versed and ready to take a more active role in the decision-making process, an improvement that the board hopes will strengthen the entire organization.

Sorber also discussed bringing a new multicultural affairs chair on board to help strengthen relations with relevant organizations. The organizations' presidents, collectively called the Presidents' Council, approached BSG with concerns about their respective needs, leading Congress to deliberate the possibility of finding a person to effectively represent diverse interests. Sorber said that the council will select an appropriate representative who must be ratified by Congress to chair BSG's Multicultural Affairs committee.

See BSG, page 2

Viking abandons incinerator plans

By LAURA DAY
News Editor

After much deliberation, Viking Energy of Northumberland, located in Point Township, has decided to withdraw its proposal for an incinerator for tires, chipped railroad ties and paper/plastic pellets.

The proposal, whose fate was originally in the hands of the Pennsylvania Department of Environmental Protection (PADEP), has generated much criticism from local residents.

Zeigler Health Center Nurse Jane Haile co-founded S.A.F.E.R., Susquehanna Area for Environmental Protection, to combat Viking's proposal.

It appears now that S.A.F.E.R. has achieved its mission. Viking recently announced that it was withdrawing its proposal and they no longer have plans of installing a tire incinerator at the Northumberland location.

Both the PADEP and Viking were aware of the vast opposition from Point Township citizens and supervisors.

Viking Plant Manager Ed Missal said, "We were looking at supplementing our waste-wood fire derived plant with tire-derived fuel. However, we have withdrawn our proposal."

Had the incinerator been built, with wind and water flow, emissions could have posed threat to anyone within a 15-mile radius.

Although groups like S.A.F.E.R. voiced their concerns, "there were both positive and negative impacts from the community," Missal said.

"We didn't want to divide the community."

The proposal was the second one submitted in two years. The first had been denied, and it appears that this one will no longer be considered.

Although S.A.F.E.R. has not yet received any conclusive documentation of the sort, Viking has officially announced that their proposal is withdrawn.

"The proposal was causing stress on our relationship with the township," Missal said. "Businesses were being harassed."

For better or for worse?

Neighbors' complaints have decreased by 50 percent, but students have become discontented.

Decrease in off-campus incidents may challenge fraternities, writes Peter Van Emburgh, Editor-in-Chief

Following a tumultuous semester of off-campus drinking violations, Dean of Students Richard Ferraro noted that in the last six weeks, off-campus complaints made to the Lewisburg Police Department have declined by almost 50 percent.

As a result, more students have been flocking uphill to fraternity parties, indicating a potential shift from 6th and 7th Streets to Fraternity Row.

While many residents and administrators are acknowledging the improvement made by students, others are skeptical to believe that the situation has been diffused.

"I think the drop in [off-campus drinking incidents] is a good indicator—I think we should acknowledge this improvement made by students," Ferraro said.

Jennie Logan '01 said, "I think that there are several explanations for the decrease in violations downtown, and I don't think that increased student responsibility is one of them."

The beginning of the fall 2000 semester commenced with a dramatic change in the off-campus social scene. According to Lewisburg Police reports at the time, about 40 percent of the calls made to the department were related to university students. Public drunkenness, disorderly conduct and noise violations were frequent violations handed down to the magistrate.

"While these were not heinous crimes, the complaints were still troublesome," Ferraro said. "It was really rough in the beginning of the semester."

Ferraro and other University administrators held seven "town hall" meetings to establish an open discussion of the problems plaguing the off-campus community.

In dealing with his "short-term concern," Ferraro believed that the meetings were successful in establishing open communications early on, before the tensions and frustrations of the off-campus student residents "bottled over." While Ferraro looks back favorably on the town hall meetings, many students walked away with feelings of frustration and angst over the lack of progress.

A number of students, particularly fraternity members, worry that the recent trend will place added pressure on the Greeks to uphold effective risk management practices.

"Downtown students often refuse to host parties, usually out of fear of a noise violation ... This isn't necessarily a bad thing, because we can control a party better at our house than we can downtown," Delta Upsilon President Jeff Sharpe '01 said. "However, there is a desired balance between uphill and downhill social life, so as to relieve some of the responsibility from the fraternities, as well as provide an alternative social scene other than a fraternity party."

Logan said, "I think that the arrival of cold weather has a lot to do with the decline in violations downtown. People are now trying to move things uphill, where the fraternities are more conducive to larger gatherings."

Ferraro feels more comfortable with parties being held uphill in fraternities rather than off-campus. "The reason why fraternities are a better place than a house downtown is that they can do [effective] risk management—a 21-year old drinking area. Public Safety keeps an eye on the party and the Interfraternity Council (IFC) monitors patrol parties," Ferraro said. "It's a challenge for the fraternities to maintain the control and proper monitoring in order to hold good parties."

Part of the reason for the decline in incidents off-campus, Ferraro believed, is a combination of students' fear of getting a violation and their positive response to the educational message he has been encouraging all semester.

While Ferraro believed the town hall meetings diffused his short-term concern, his long-term concern was to deal with the off-campus issue educationally. The educational message that Ferraro emphasized through-

See DOWNTOWN, page 2

Bestseller Feinstein returns to campus

By BRIAN WATSON
Senior Editor

Renowned sports author John Feinstein said his agent and publisher ran out of the room when he pitched the idea for his most recent book, The Last Amateurs. Only a few weeks after its release, with the book set to enter The New York Times Bestseller list, his agent is now calling it "The Little Book That Could."

Feinstein visited campus Tuesday to sign copies of The Last Amateurs, his documentary on the 1999-2000 Patriot League men's basketball season. Later that day, in an open forum, the author voiced his inspirations for writing the book as well as his feelings about what he calls "the cesspool of major college athletics"—an "industry" plagued by professional entitlement and lucrative sponsorship deals.

The visit marks Feinstein's first return to campus since the end of last year's basketball season, when tireless research required him to travel four to five days a week to various conference games. He lectured candidly, opening with recollections of some of his favorite college hoops personalities and anecdotes from his earlier works.

Feinstein recalled a run-in with ex-Indiana coach Bob Knight, who was the focus of his book A Season on the Brink; after reading it, Knight referred to Feinstein as both a "pimp" and a "whore" in separate statements.

Feinstein countered, "I wish he would make up his mind so I would know how to dress." His anecdotes about his close friend, the late Jim Valvano who coached North Carolina State to a national championship in 1983 (after coaching at Bucknell), reminded attendees about the human side of the basketball business, which proved to

See FEINSTEIN, page 3

MEN'S BASKETBALL

Tues., Dec. 5 RIDER 7:30 p.m.

DIVING

Sat.-Sun., Dec 2-3 at Drexel Invitational

Bison Calendar

SWIMMING
Sat.-Sun., Dec. 2-3 BUCKNELL INVITATIONAL

INDOOR TRACK
Sat., Dec. 2 BUCKNELL INVITATIONAL 11:00 a.m.

WOMEN'S BASKETBALL

Fri., Dec. 1 vs. Niagara at Cornell Classic 5:00 p.m.

WRESTLING

Sun., Dec. 3 at Penn State Open

Public Safety Log

November 29, 2000

INFORMATION / VEHICLE DAMAGE—A student reported to Public Safety that his vehicle was damaged while parked at an unknown location on campus. The vehicle had been driven several times before the dent was noticed.

TAMPERING WITH FIRE EQUIPMENT—Public Safety responded to Swartz Hall for a fire alarm activation caused by unknown person(s) discharging a fire extinguisher. No witnesses or suspects were located in a search of the area. The incident is under investigation.

MEDICAL ASSIST—Public Safety responded to Tower House for the report of a student with a possible back injury. A Student Health Services driver transported the individual to Evangelical Community Hospital Emergency room. The student later returned to campus.

ACT 64—Public Safety responded to Smith Hall for the report of the odor of marijuana. A marijuana pipe was located in a plain view search of the room. The pipe was confiscated and returned to Public Safety. Charges are pending.

INFORMATION / STUDENT HEALTH SERVICES TRANSPORT—A student contacted Public Safety and requested transportation to Evangelical Community Hospital Emergency room for treatment of a possible sinus infection. Student Health Services driver transported the student who later returned to campus.

NON-EMERGENCY MEDICAL TRANSPORT—A student contacted Public Safety and requested transportation to Evangelical Community Hospital Emergency room for treatment of a lip injury. Student Health Services transported the student who later returned to campus.

dent who later returned to campus.

December 1, 2000
BU PROPERTY DAMAGE—An employee reported a broken window pane in an exterior door at Roberts Hall. No witnesses or suspects could be located in a search of the area.

December 2, 2000
UNDERAGE DRINKING / PUBLIC DRUNKENNESS—While on routine patrol, Public Safety officer observed a male who appeared to have difficulty walking. Upon investigation, he was identified as a student, under the age of 21, who admitted to having consumed alcohol. Citations were issued for underage drinking and public drunkenness.

PUBLIC DRUNKENNESS / DISORDERLY CONDUCT / FAILURE TO COMPLY—Public Safety officer provided a safe escort to a West Mod for a male student who was visibly intoxicated and had consumed alcohol while under the age of 21 years. Citations were issued for underage drinking, public drunkenness, disorderly conduct, and failure to comply. Criminal charges pending by East Buffalo Township Police Department.

UNIVERSITY PROPERTY DAMAGE—A Public Safety officer responded to Swartz Hall for the report of damage to glass on an exterior door of Swartz Hall. No witnesses or suspects could be located in a search of the area.

December 3, 2000
MARIJUANA / REPORTED ACT 64 / UNFOUNDED—Public Safety responded to the New Residence Hall for the report of odor of marijuana. The incident was determined to be unfounded when the source of the odor could not be located.

THEFT BY UNLAWFUL TAKING—An employee reported to Public Safety that unknown person(s) had taken the "Uptown Club" sign from outside of Swartz Hall. The incident is under investigation.

INFORMATION—Public Safety responded to Harris Hall for the report of a visitor who was upset and harassing a student. Lewisburg Police responded. After talking with the Lewisburg Police officer and Public Safety, the male agreed to stay off campus for the night and to leave the area in the morning.

December 4, 2000
INFORMATION / POSSIBLE ACT 64—Public Safety responded to Roberts Hall for the report of the odor of marijuana. Lewisburg Police also responded. The source and location for the smell could not be located so the incident was determined to be unfounded.

INFORMATION—A Public Safety officer responded to the Langone Center for the report that a student had taken food items in the Bison without paying. In addition, an employee reported that a second student was verbally aggressive during the time the first male was asked and agreed to pay for the items. The employee did not wish to press charges. The students were asked to leave the area and were reported to the Dean of Students.

POSSIBLE ACT 64—Public Safety responded to the New Residence Hall for the report of the odor of marijuana. No odor could be located during the investigation. The incident was determined to be unfounded.

December 5, 2000
NON-EMERGENCY MEDICAL TRANSPORT—A student contacted Public Safety and requested transportation to Evangelical Community Hospital Emergency room for treatment of flu symptoms. A Student Health Services driver transported the individual who later returned to campus.

December 6, 2000
MARIJUANA / REPORTED ACT 64 / UNFOUNDED—Public Safety responded to the New Residence Hall for the report of odor of marijuana. The incident was determined to be unfounded when the source of the odor could not be located.

MISSING PROPERTY—Public Safety responded to Larson Hall for the report of a shirt missing from a desk. The area was found unsecured when personnel entered the building. The incident is under investigation.

MISSING PROPERTY—An employee reported to Public Safety that unknown person(s) did remove a bollard from the front of the New Music Building. Upon investigation, Public Safety located the bollard where it had been stored by a staff member.

PULSE to protest Wal-Mart

By HEATHER NAPOLITANO
Senior Editor

The University's Partnership for Unwilling Labor and Sweatshop Exploitation (P.U.L.S.E.) will hold its biannual protest of sweatshop labor at the Lewisburg Wal-Mart this weekend.

The event, which will take place from 1-3 p.m. on Saturday, is aimed at raising general awareness on the conditions endured by workers who produce Wal-Mart merchandise.

Protestors will further encourage anyone interested in taking action to write their congressman, senator, local representative or Wal-Mart itself and express opposition to the use of sweatshop labor.

"We're asking everyone to shop with conscience this year," Assistant Professor of Economics Geoffrey Schneider said.

Protestors will further encourage anyone interested in taking action to write their congressman, senator, local representative or Wal-Mart itself and express opposition to the use of sweatshop labor.

The immediate short-term goal of the protest at Wal-Mart is to raise awareness. Many people do not realize that most of the clothes, shoes and toys they buy are made in sweatshops," Schneider said.

"We feel accomplished by doing something that will bring knowledge to people who knew little about it," Doeber said.

Overall, Doeber anticipates that the general response will be comprised of apathy, frustration and open-mindedness.

"I would say that there is more apathy or anger than open-mindedness," he said. "About one third of the people we do approach and do talk to are willing to listen."

The protest turnout on Saturday is expected to be between 30 and 50 individuals that will include students and professors, and will not be limited to members of P.U.L.S.E. Doeber also hopes that local unions will participate as they have in the past.

Saturday's protest will be in keeping with the general missions of the group, which are to spread awareness about the current issues relating to where apparel and products are made and to participate in activism to prevent merchandise from being made in those conditions.

P.U.L.S.E. has been active on campus since its founding by Schneider in 1998. The inspiration for the group stemmed from a lecture given in the same year by Charles Kenagham, the labor-rights activist best known for challenging Kathie Lee Gifford's use of sweatshop labor.

This fall, members sponsored two lectures including the well-attended talk by Jim Keady that took place last week.

Other activity has included examination of the Fair Labor Association (FLA) investigations of Bucknell Bookstore products. Upon discovering failure of the FLA's research, P.U.L.S.E. has established membership in the Worker's Rights Consortium (WRC) that will provide the University with information on the workers who make Bookstore products.

"This will essentially put the power in Bucknell's hands," Doeber said.

Currently, P.U.L.S.E. has 15 active members who regularly attend their meetings, but they are looking to increase levels of campus participation.

"Our door is always open," Doeber said. "We look for people with open minds who would like to learn about [sweatshop labor]."

Fujita installed as Jewish Chaplain

By RACHEL LASKOW
News Layout Editor

More than one hundred people gathered in Bucknell Hall as Rabbi Serena Fujita was installed as the University's Jewish Chaplain last Friday. The ceremony consisted of a traditional Shabbat service, a guest speaker and a welcoming from various members of the University's Jewish community.

"This is a night we've waited for so long," said University Chaplain Ian Oliver.

University President Steffen Rogers said, "It is extremely important to this university that we have our own rabbi."

Rabbi Nancy Weiner, who was Fujita's teacher at Hebrew Union College, was the guest speaker of the evening. She spoke of a Torah passage involving Isaac digging wells similar to those of his father.

Although Isaac did not dig the same wells as his father, he dug them with the same motivation that his father had. "For me it's a metaphor for Bucknell redigging its own wells," Weiner said.

Weiner recalled Fujita working at a soup kitchen in New York City. Fujita reminded the homeless that they did count and that they were human beings.

"Such things came naturally," Weiner said. "The truth is that there is no one better to help the University teach about diversity than Serena. We all look forward to see how [her] presence here will challenge this university to dig deeper."

Tom Solomon, associate professor of physics and Hillel faculty adviser, thanked various members of the University community and emphasized how excited they were to welcome Fujita.

"It has been a pleasure to get to know Serena. She's exactly what we were looking for in a full time rabbi," Solomon said. "To put it simply, Serena is a really neat person. She is clearly committed to students and enjoys working with them."

Day Koffman '02 remembered a job when he was resting in Martin House and Fujita came in. They talked for two hours about everything, including the Bible and Israel.

"Serena has a lot of intelligence behind her words," Koffman said. '02 added, "We're here to honor her and it's her honor well deserved."

"I'm really overwhelmed at the outpouring of support and warm wishes from all the people at Bucknell and the greater Lewisburg community," Fujita said. "I think that it's really important for those outside the immediate community to recognize the commitment Bucknell has made to its Jewish students."

Rooke Chapel Congregation president Gina Conerello '03 and Director of Student Health Services Dr. Donald Stechschulte read at last week's World AIDS Day service in the Rooke Chapel. The service was held in honor of those suffering from the disease and served to raise AIDS awareness.

DOWNTOWN

From page 1

out the semester was, ultimately, moderation of alcohol consumption and self-control of one's actions.

"People who drink moderately tend to be happier than those who drink simply to get intoxicated," Ferraro said.

He noted this year's Halloween and Homecoming Weekends are traditionally weekends of strife, whereas this year the events were deemed improvements.

According to Ferraro, the alcohol situation seems to be improving on campus. Overall, the number of alcohol-related incidents on campus have decreased a modest five percent from last year.

"If the present improvements continue we will have a very encouraging trend," Ferraro said. "Now I don't want to jump the gun and say that everything is solved and that alcohol is no longer a problem. It is a long-term problem here as it is on many college campuses."

In terms of the off-campus town-gown relations, residents are very pleased with the significant decrease in problems with students.

Yvonne Morgan, president of the Borough Council told Ferraro earlier how she complimented the students' efforts in improving relations. Specifically the Greek downtown cleanup started by Matt Cole '01 and several other charitable contributions to the local community.

However, Ferraro stressed how a compromise must be reached in order to maintain a positive balance off-campus. "There's a distinct difference exists between student residents talking a little loudly on their porches and screaming obscenities at the top of one's lungs," Ferraro said. "There needs to be moderate behavior for the students and moderate expectations for the Lewisburg residents."

Ferraro foresees a future for the University that would include drawing the social scene on campus and attracting students from the off-campus living community. One idea he had was a senior living complex that was composed of garden-type apartments.

"Maybe in the next half dozen years students can have an adult living experience that has a nice architectural touch like gardens, away from downtown," Ferraro said.

Ferraro also speculated about an on-campus pub. If the University believed that students could act responsibly and in self-control, then the pub would be a feasible idea, according to Ferraro. "If people are completely out of control than you'll be getting all the restrictions money can buy," he said.

Logan said, "As a senior, I think the whole social scene has changed—and I don't think it's for the best. We need to come to some sort of agreement to where we can have fun and not get in trouble for doing it."

World Briefs

Israeli human rights group slams Israelis, Palestinians

JERUSALEM (CNN)—An Israeli human rights group criticized both sides of the two-month-old Mideast conflict, saying Israel uses "excessive and disproportionate force" against Palestinian demonstrators and the Palestinian Authority does not do enough to keep children out of the line of fire.

In a report issued on Wednesday, B'Tselem—the Israeli Center for Human Rights in the Occupied Territories—urged the Israeli government to change its policies.

"Israel must develop non-lethal methods to disperse demonstrations," said the report, titled "Illusions of Restraint." "Until that time, because 'rubber' (actually rubber-coated steel) bullets are lethal, Israel must refrain from using them to disperse demonstrations."

U.S. man convicted on Russian spy charges
MOSCOW, Russia—U.S. businessman Edmond Pope has been found guilty of spying in Russia and sentenced to a 20-year jail term.

Pope received the maximum penalty sought by prosecutors after he was charged with trying to obtain secret information about a Russian torpedo.

The trial judge also ordered the confiscation of money found on the 54-year-old, who is in remission from a rare form of bone cancer, when he was arrested.

Yemen may charge suspects in USS Cole attack
SANAA, Yemen (CNN)—Yemeni police have turned over to a prosecutor the names of six people suspected of complicity in the Oct. 12 attack on the USS Cole, the prime minister said on Wednesday.

"They were culprits, no question about it," Abdul-Karim al-Iryani said in an interview with The Associated Press. "The degree of information that each one may know could be different."

A pair of suicide bombers pulled an explosives-laden boat alongside the 505-foot (154-meter) destroyer just after it arrived in Aden harbor to refuel on Oct. 12. The subsequent blast, which ripped a 40-by-40 foot (12-by-12 meter) hole in the side of the ship, killed 17 U.S. sailors along with both bombers. Thirty-nine sailors were wounded.

Long list of witnesses for Estrada impeachment in Philippines

MANILA, Philippines (CNN)—The impeachment trial of Philippine President Joseph Estrada promises to be like an hours-long daily drama series, with as many as 57 witnesses to be presented in broadcast proceedings starting on Thursday.

Estrada, appearing in public on the eve of his impeachment trial, said on Wednesday he would leave his fate in the hands of God and the senators who judge him.

Authorities said they were on alert to deal with any violence arising from street protests when the impeachment trial begins in the Senate.

U.N. Chief Annan declares war over between Ethiopia and Eritrea

ADDIS ABABA, Ethiopia (AP)—The two-year-long war between Ethiopia and Eritrea is over, U.N. Secretary-General Kofi Annan declared Wednesday after talks with senior Ethiopian officials.

A treaty to be signed in Algiers on Dec. 12 is expected to open the way for demarcation of the disputed 620-mile-long border between the two African countries, the exchange of prisoners and the release of detained civilians, he said.

Protesters target EU summit

NICE, France—Demonstrators have taken to the streets of Nice ahead of a European Union summit to demand more social justice.

Trade unionists and anti-globalization activists—mainly from France, Spain and Italy—staged the "Eurodemo" to call for EU-wide social policies. Further protests are planned for the duration of the summit and organizers hope to place a human chain around the conference venue on Thursday when the EU leaders hold their first session of talks.

Federal appeals court rejects Bush recount challenge

ATLANTA, Georgia (CNN)—The 11th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals refused to issue an injunction to halt manual recounts in three Florida counties that Vice President Al Gore considers crucial in his hopes of winning the White House.

Stressing that there was no evidence of harm "at this time," the 12-member court rejected appeals by Republicans and the George W. Bush campaign challenging the validity of manual recounts in Florida. (More on the 11th U.S. Circuit Court rulings) The court upheld a Miami U.S. District Court ruling from November in which the judge said the recounts appeared to be neutral and were proceeding according to the law, and he saw no reason to intervene.

Tire probe: More deaths

WASHINGTON (Reuters)—U.S. highway safety regulators on Wednesday reported another 29 deaths linked to the failure of Firestone tires, bringing to 148 the number of fatalities connected to tread separations and blow-outs. The National Highway Traffic Safety Administration (NHTSA) said five of the newly reported deaths involved additional models of Firestone tires not covered by the company's Aug. 9 recall but subject to a Sept. 1, NHTSA consumer warning.

Compiled by Laura Day
Courtesy of CNN.com

Weekend Weather

Fri.	Sat.	Sun.
Hi: 33 Lo: 21	Hi: 37 Lo: 20	Hi: 35 Lo: 26

University made the right decision

When University President meets his Patriot League colleagues next Tuesday, two fundamental questions will be asked: Should the league further its permissive aid offerings? And, if so, how far should they go?

As expected, University President Steffen Rogers said Tuesday that the Board of Trustees has directed him to vote against any possible extension of permissive aid. If the first vote does pass, as Rogers thinks it will, he will vote for "the least permissive" scenario proposed by the group.

The University's decision to reject the possibility of moving toward scholarships makes a powerful statement of leadership, especially that of Rogers and the Trustees, is intent on solidifying our principles and the foundations upon which our conference was founded and has prospered.

But Rogers said he does not expect the University to be in the majority for minimizing the extension. According to him and others intimately involved in the process, the University will most likely be one of three institutions voting against further permissive aid, along with Colgate and Lafayette.

They expect Lehigh and Holy Cross, which already offer forms of permissive aid to athletes, to join Army and Navy in voting for the just-possible extension.

"I suspect that other universities will adopt [a permissive aid standard] more along the lines of the Lehigh model, with men's and women's basketball being the most prominent," Rogers said. He thinks Lehigh and Holy Cross, by already offering permissive aid to basketball players, believe that basketball "could be strengthened and used as a national marketing tool."

The entire campus community—especially its student-athletes and coaches—should congratulate the decision to remain scholarship-free. By upholding a successful system of balanced academics and athletics, the University will remain true to its initial commitment in joining the league.

Rogers hopes the University's student-athletes will remain proud of the standard they have helped set in the Patriot League, which, along with the

But while the University's athletic program has remained extremely competitive in the conference—exemplified by its winning of seven of the last 10 Presidents' Cups—Rogers believes the vote will put "schools on a needs-based system at a distinctive competitive disadvantage."

The University's decision, however, reflects a higher priority—to maintain academic excellence instead of bolstering athletic success. Bucknell has always offered only need-based aid, never giving into national pressures to take the scholarship route.

While our conference counterparts may choose to open the door to scholarships, the University has taken a strong, commendable stance in upholding its values and its academic mission.

University officials have said that any financial changes would be incremental had it chosen to vote for further permissive aid, but the choice to maintain our current system holds greater importance. By upholding our academic standards, the University will negate any adversity it may face on the field. Besides, our athletic formidability has not been yet suffered to our permissive aid.

From the beginning, Spitzer was told he couldn't make the team. When he did, he was told he would never play. When he got his chance, he made the most of it, and pushed his way into the starting lineup.

Spitzer and the 15 other seniors on last year's team all graduated, making the Patriot League the only league to graduate all seniors. Feinstein named all of the seniors, and, as a show of good

Ivy League, has set a strong example of academic/athletic balance. "They should take tremendous pride in what they have accomplished," he said.

Although Bucknell may be put at odds athletically as a result of its decision, its conviction and dedication to principles will shine through.

FEINSTEIN

From page 1

be Feinstein's inspiration for The Last Amateurs. Feinstein said that the stories he learned from the players and coaches were astounding and allowed him to truly immerse himself in his research. "You don't have to be rich and famous to have a great story to tell," Feinstein said. "And these kids had incredible stories."

He spoke about a Colgate player who gave up basketball during his senior year because he thought the sacrifice was necessary in order to reach his real goal—a Rhodes Scholarship.

Feinstein continued to tell the story of Chris Spitzer, a scrappy point guard from Holy Cross who seemed to defy all the odds placed against him during his time in Worcester, Spitzer, a walk-on, was reading a magazine's rankings of the NCAA conferences, and there was the Patriot League—dead last. Feinstein recalled Spitzer's thoughts: "So Chris is sitting there thinking, 'If I'm the worst player on the worst team in the worst league, I must be the worst Division I player in the country.'"

From the beginning, Spitzer was told he couldn't make the team. When he did, he was told he would never play. When he got his chance, he made the most of it, and pushed his way into the starting lineup.

Spitzer and the 15 other seniors on last year's team all graduated, making the Patriot League the only league to graduate all seniors. Feinstein named all of the seniors, and, as a show of good faith to the graduating class he had become so close with, Feinstein called Stapha Sevanne when he heard the Navy senior had taken an incomplete in the spring semester.

"I told him, 'You'd better finish that class, or else I'll have to hunt you down and kill you.' I wasn't going to let him ruin the last line of my book!" Feinstein said.

Sevanne did graduate, solidifying the author's tribute to a conference whose players cared more about academics and the love of the game than getting caught up in professional hoop dreams. He said that working on The Last Amateurs, along with A Civil War, his book chronicling the Army-Navy rivalry, provided him with his most enjoyable writing experience.

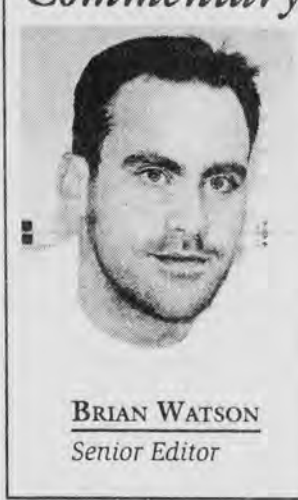

And the response has been overwhelming. "It's been pretty good so far," Feinstein said. "I expected the reaction in the Patriot League to be great, but the nice part has been from the outside."

With many favorable reviews and extensive television coverage, The Last Amateurs will debut at #15 on this week's The New York Times Bestseller list.

Paige Cull—The Bucknellian

News Commentary

BRIAN WATSON
Senior Editor

Embracing challenges of the 21st Century

In this, the true "last year of the millennium," we decided to make the most of the end of the twentieth century. These last hundred years have brought a rapid period of technological advancements—imagine, 100 years ago, two other such editors wrote their semester ending piece using typewriters and tape to create the last edition of the Orange and Blue before the new year dawned.

Since 1913, when the name of the paper was officially changed to The Bucknellian, the paper has seen many changes in design, form and function. The nameplate, for example, has undergone many alterations including changing the font, enlarging the text size and even the addition of a graphic of the Bertrand Library.

May Dec. 7, 2000 be noted as the day The Bucknellian turned the page on its first full century and embraced the technological advancements of the 21st century.

Thanks to the tireless efforts of Matt Albert, Brian Watson, Heather Napolitano, Jim Leaxy and the rest of the editorial staff,

From the Editors' Desk

Rebecca Rowland and Peter Van Emburgh
Editors-in-Chief

Each week, The Bucknellian will have color text and photographs on the front and back pages, as well as an inside section. Knowing that our paper was getting a much-needed codicil, we took this opportunity to change other aspects of the overall design to better show off our new look.

Many aspects of the paper have been changed including the nameplate and general front page design, the addition of permanent and professional looking columns and a revamped statistics page.

We are very proud of this accomplishment and hope our pride manifests itself in a superior paper.

As a "grand entrance" for all of our new technology, we have included in this week's Bucknellian a photo to spread.

The spread captures scenes of University life from the 1900s and visually comparing them to similar scenes from the 1990s.

There is a striking difference between life at this institution now and life in the beginning of the century, and what better medium to showcase this difference in all of its visual brilliance than photography.

To be told that, at one point in the University's history, the woman's athletic program consisted of a few well-dressed girls who played "lady-like" sports is, in itself, amazing.

But to actually see these women in their floor length skirts and hats and then compare them to a picture of the 2000 women's field hockey team—their bright orange jerseys contrasting with the green of the field—truly demonstrates the tremendous growth of the University in the past 100 years.

We hope that one day, students will look back on the feats of The Bucknellian and reflect fondly on the rich traditions of our student newspaper.

The 21st century promises many more technological advancements of this media source. Who knows what The Bucknellian can accomplish in another 104 years—we've certainly come a long way from typewriters and tape.

Ghezzi's
Restaurant Lounge

RR 2, Box 547
Paxinos, PA 17860
(570) 648-0180

Open Wed. - Sat.
5 PM - 10 PM
JEAN & FRANK BAR/ITALIAN

FRESH Seafood, Veal,
Chicken, Steaks
& Homemade Pastas.

Located on Rt. 61 Between Sunbury & Shamokin

Sellingrove 15N → 15S → Lewisburg
Rt. 61
Ghezzi's
Shamokin
Catawissa

Approx. 30 min. from Bucknell & Susquehanna U.
40 min. from Bloomsburg U.

Every Wed. — 2 for $13.99
Every Thurs. — Italian Night
Early Bird — Thurs. thru Sat. 2 for $13.9

FORUM

EDITORIAL

Off campus tensions unresolved

Administrators hail the decrease in violations occurring off-campus, crediting a balance of student responsibility and University influence in curtailing this perennial conflict between students and Borough residents.

However, students disagree. Many believe that the arrival of colder weather has prompted a decline in social activity off-campus, and, though the administration may be turning a deaf ear, preempted an increase in unhappy students.

The winter season provides a convenient interval to place the issue on the backburner, but students think that ignoring the problem will only cause a deeper rift in town-gown relations.

Perhaps the situation remains misunderstood and any possible remedies not adequately addressed. As The Bucknellian said earlier in the semester, we applaud the efforts of the administration to hold town hall meetings that establish open lines of communication between students and the University. However, students still feel that the issue commands further evaluation. We agree.

The trend of unhappy Lewisburg residents and satisfied students has suddenly undergone a dramatic reversal. With increased pressure to cease downtown parties and seek out a social alternative, students will inevitably head uphill, thus placing a greater deal of responsibility on fraternities to accommodate their hopes of continued social activity.

In dealing with an influx of guests and undue stress, fraternities must maintain an effective risk management policy that provides a safe social atmosphere.

As Fraternity Road becomes more active, violations will inevitably occur, which may lead to a controversy such as the one currently plaguing the off-campus community.

A solution must be found before this cycle begins again. In the first warm weekend of spring, students will head back downtown for parties, and the problems will once again rear their ugly heads. Not to imply that students are irresponsible or lack self-control. But, after all, we are college students.

If further discussion does not take place, the situation could become more volatile. While The Bucknellian cannot offer a clear remedy, the staff would encourage both students and residents to work toward a compromise. We also recognize the difficulty in such a task, and therefore neither side should be obligated to cede their fundamental concerns.

Unfortunately, this problem has shown that it will not solve itself, so it will require a considerable increase in effort by all constituencies.

Many institutions have and continue to face similar hardships, but several have found ample ways to develop a more cooperative relationship between students and residents. Perhaps these universities can offer successful models to help overcome the current strife.

But we shouldn't rely on these or even any quick-fix solutions. This problem has existed for years, and rarely has an adequate compromise been reached without a little give and take.

bucknellian@bucknell.edu

Kristen and Maureen will not be here next semester but do us a favor and write for the new Editors!

Editors-in-Chief
Rebecca Rowland '02
Peter Van Emburgh '02

Managing Editors
Jim Leahy '03

Senior Editors
Heather Napolitano '01
Brian Watson '01
Matt Trunnell '01

Postal Editor
Matt Albert '01

Business Manager
Carolyn Moser '01
Assistant Business Manager
Mark Langer '02

News Editor
Laura Day '03

Business and Politics Editors
Michael Boland '03
Rachel Laskow '03
Tim Scheu '01

Forum Editors
Kristen Jancuk '02
Maureen Fick '02

Features Editors
Katie Hays '03
Jim Leahy '03

Arts and Entertainment Editor
Natalie Casp '02
Meghan Magee '01
Krista Reisdorf '02

Letters to the Editors

To the Editors:

Concerning the Ad on Nov. 2, 2000 regarding the Holocaust: I am an alumnus who lives abroad and has a great deal to do with Holocaust education in Europe and Israel. I receive my Bucknellian by slow mail and by chance the issue with the apology arrived a day before the issue with the ad itself. I spent a lot of time reading the apologies and various letters from educators and students concerning the ad. Then the previous issue arrived and I could see what it was all about.

First of all, let me compliment the staff of the Bucknellian and the administration of the University on their approach to the matter. Assuming the facts concerning how the ad got into the paper are correct, this can only be classified as an error and has been clearly claimed as such by the editorial staff. Only the person directly responsible for entering the ad can take responsibility and that has occurred. Obviously the entity placing the ad should be searched out, if at all possible, and dealt with by the administration of the University in a manner seen as fitting by them.

The lengthy letters from so many people show just how sensitive the community is to this issue which in itself is heartwarming. It should show those who placed the ad just how ludicrous and unbelievable their assertions are.

The only problem with all of this is that it is often the aim of those who do this to simply provoke as much discussion and literature on the subject as possible without caring as to whether the discussion is pro or anti their cause. Any discussion on the subject is valuable as far as they are concerned because it brings the subject into the spotlight.

It is therefore my sincere hope that the Bucknell Community can put this episode behind them and move ahead. I have always found Bucknell to be an impartial and non-discriminating University and one in which members of all communities, faiths and beliefs could live, study and work together in a congenial and healthy environment. It would not be good to allow one or two individuals (and there are always one or two individuals waiting to wreak their kind of havoc on any community) cause the damage that is looming.

Therefore, my recommendation would be to close the book on this subject and not allow those who placed the ad to smile with each further letter that is printed. Since it is already a month since the ad appeared, you may have already adopted this idea in which case I would have no problem if you don't print this letter either.

R. Drake

Pet stores promote inhumane puppy mills

By KARIN ROBERTSON
Contributing Writer

The allure of pet stores is irresistible to many people. However, it is the underlying themes of these stores that escape perception. The essence of these businesses is the selling of animals for a profit. In this fact, Pet Pourri is included.

Finding good homes for these animals is not the primary objective in an operation such as a pet store. Profits are made as a result of the sale of an animal, and additional rewards are not reaped for happy homes.

The Danville Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals (SPCA) strives to find good long-term homes for animals by carefully screening potential animal companions. Beyond the normal screening, special care is taken during the holidays to assure that animals are not being given as presents.

"We cannot allow animals to be adopted as gifts, people [receiving animals as gifts] may not want the animal, or they may not be able to have it," said an SPCA employee. These precautions are taken in order to ensure good homes for animals.

imals.

In stark contrast, Pet Pourri requires minimal screening before the purchase of an animal. Additionally, the puppies and kittens in the window of Pet Pourri encourage impulse buys. When asked if Pet Pourri would sell a dog or cat to be given as a gift, an employee replied, "It's a good idea to talk to [the people you are giving the animal to]... unless you want to surprise them."

Needless to say, Pet Pourri can't screen the recipients of these "gifts," thus a good home is far from guaranteed. By not assuring a good home, Pet Pourri illustrates its lack of compassion and concern for animals.

As dorm residents, Bucknell students are not allowed to have animals (with the exception of non-car-nivorous fish). However, Pet Pourri sells animals to dorm residents. Brianna Beecher '02 attests, "A past hall mate of mine purchased a cat from Pet Pourri that was later discarded, [and the cat] had to be given away."

Furthermore, employees continue to pressure students into purchasing animals, even when they are told of the dorm restrictions.

Bucknellian Photo Editor received the following letter from Dellec Moving and Storage in response to The Bucknellian staff picks for President in the Nov. 2 issue.

Dear Ms. Cull,

It has come to our attention that you've been quoted as saying that, "If Bush wins, I think I'll move to another country." Now, given that Mr. Bush does seem likely to prevail, and that Mr. Gore would be of a decidedly more socialist political philosophy, we can understand how someone more interested in a socialist society would be keenly disappointed at the prospect of a Bush win.

Accordingly, we are making you this offer: If Bush wins, contact us no later than 15 days after your school year finishes, and we will move you and up to 800 lbs. Of your personal belongings to the socialist or communist country of your choice. Cuba might be a good choice, as its proximity to the U.S. would facilitate an occasional visit here to see old friends and relatives.

This offer shall include no expense/s to you of any kind, provided that you not return from your new country to the U.S. (except for brief 1-week visits no more than 2 times per year) full-time for at least seven years. If you violate these simple conditions, you will then owe us the full costs of your move, plus compound annual interest at the rate of 6%. Fair enough? We look forward to hearing from you; and remember, if you like Mr. Al's socialism, you'll love Cuba's communism!

Your's truly,

Annette Egglehoffer
Vice-Pres, Int'l Div.

"I asked an employee if I could see a sugar glider and he inquired about me buying it. I replied that I lived in a dorm, and pets were not allowed.

He responded by offering me a discount if I bought it right then," stated Kazie Haxtox '02. These shortcomings are not unique to Pet Pourri; they are common in many pet shops.

The controversies surrounding pet shops are numerous. Recently, puppy mills have become a primary concern. Puppy mills are large operations that help to supply pet shops with "purebred" puppies at a low price.

These businesses house large numbers of dogs, and many different breeds. Deplorable living conditions are paired with inbreeding, and many of the puppies originating from puppy mills are plagued with physical and behavioral problems.

Pet Pourri claims that its puppies are from local breeders, however, they refuse to disclose the precise locations of these breeders.

Robin Montgomery, an active member of the local animal welfare group PA Pets, has had several re-

Science and Technology Editors
Lynne Waldman '01
Josiana Cetia '04

Sports Editors
Carmen Mauriello '02
Brooke Rea '02

Sports Layout Editors
Adam Haas '01
Andrew Burr '04

Sports Statistician
Matthew Herbert '02

Darkroom Manager
Chris Rivera '02

Photo Editor
Paige Cull '01

Advertising Representative
Julie Bett '01

Online Editors
Eric Fair '01
Brendan Putnam '03

Circulation Manager
Brian Klotz '03

Head Copy Editors
Kim Luedee '01
Debbie Ruggieri '01

Production Manager
Nick Olsen '02

Adviser
James F. Lee

THE BUCKNELLIAN

Founded in 1896 as The Blue and Orange

Volume 126, Number 12
C-3952 Lewisburg, Pennsylvania, 17837

(570) 577-1520
BUCKNELLIAN@BUCKNELL.EDU

HTTP://WWW.ORG.BUCKNELL.EDU/BUCKNELLIAN

EDITORIAL POLICY

The Bucknellian reflects the consensus of the Editorial Board as to the topics and general position. If a consensus could not be reached, the opinions expressed are those of the Editor-in-Chief. All other opinion material represents the views of the author and not necessarily those of the Bucknellian.

PUBLISHING POLICY

The Bucknellian is written, edited and published on 12 Thursdays during the academic year entirely by Bucknell students. The Bucknellian's fiscal affairs are overseen by an Advisory Board comprised of faculty, staff and administrators. All published material is chosen by the paper's editorial board without prior review by the Advisory Board, its adviser, the University, or Bucknell Student Government.

SUBSCRIPTIONS POLICY

Subscriptions are available $45 per year and $30 per semester. To subscribe, send payment and address information to: The Bucknellian Subscriptions, Box C-3952, Lewisburg, PA 17837. Subscriptions are mailed first-class on the Friday following publication. Please send change-of-address information to the above location as well.

ADVERTISING POLICY

The Editorial Board of the Bucknellian reserves the right to deny any advertisements if offensive, illegal or in bad taste. For advertising rates, please contact the advertising managers at (570) 577-1085.

Copyright 2000 The Bucknellian

FORUM

University responds to community plea

By CHARLES POLLOCK '70
Contributing Writer

Bucknell and Lewisburg are lucky to have people like Mike Molesevich who care deeply about the quality of life locally and press us all to do our part. There are indeed problems within the community that can be (and often are) addressed especially effectively through "town-gown" partnerships, ranging from race relations to economic development.

The university applauds Mr. Molesevich's call, in his Nov. 30 opinion piece, "Community Needs University Involvement," for town-gown collaboration on the particular issue of neighborhood rehabilitation.

In fact, Bucknell has assigned for several years now two senior officials (currently its vice president for finance and administration and its dean of students) to work on the borough's Responsible Housing Committee.

Part of that committee's charge is trying to imagine sensible ways in which Bucknell could invest time and money to benefit surrounding neighborhoods.

Bucknell is not Trinity College, Penn or Yale, nor is Lewisburg (thankfully) Hartford, Philadelphia or New Haven, so different approaches to effecting neighborhood improvement are likely to be warranted here.

But future possibilities are hardly being ignored, and the university already guarantees mortgages for new employees who are relocating to the area.

Bucknell has also been a major force in establishing the Lewisburg Downtown Partnership, the success of which will advance the borough in every way of concern to Mr. Molesevich—in its tax base, aesthetically, and otherwise. And Bucknell pays significant support toward the cost of a building code enforcement officer every year. Lewisburg's code enforcement effort is indeed overextended, but would be even further overextended without Bucknell's assistance.

The university regrets that its enrollment has grown modestly and unexpectedly during the past few years (it is up by about 70 students since 1996-97), and already plans to reduce it again by 100 students by 2004. Bucknell did not admit more students than targeted three years ago—it admitted nearly 300 fewer students than the year before.

But an unexpected surge in the university's popularity caused a higher return on the offers of admission made. Since then, the university has accounted for its greater popularity and admitted even fewer students each year, thereby enrolling smaller classes again.

In addition, the student-faculty ratio has improved at Bucknell in the last five years, thanks to significant enlargement of the faculty and the merely modest growth in enrollment. There is now one faculty member for every 12 students, down from one faculty member for every 13.2 students.

Only 420 Bucknell students live off-campus—about 12 percent of the student body. So, fewer than 150 of the borough's 1,000 rental units are student occupied. These figures are far lower than those in typical "college towns."

Even so, Bucknell not only screens carefully all students who apply to live off-campus, but also pulls students back on campus by serious conduct infractions. This is a most unusual policy that is generating interest in college towns all across Pennsylvania.

Finally, Bucknell is fully committed to bringing its students—and virtually all its students—back to campus residency in the future. The window cited has always been around 10 years, never "a few years," but the commitment is real and strong.

There is certainly more that can and should be done to build Bucknell-community partnerships. The university is Union County's largest private employer, with hundreds of millions of dollars of financial impact on the local economy each year.

Bucknell is mindful of—and appreciates deeply—the significant municipal services and terrific community support it receives each year. Let's continue collaborating and recognizing gratefully the work that is being done.

Charles Pollock, a 1970 Bucknell graduate, is secretary of the university and interim vice president for student affairs. He is a former member of the borough's Responsible Housing Committee and the first president of the Lewisburg Downtown Partnership.

All I want for Christmas is a can of Raid

By KRISTEN JANCUK
Forum Editor

The University tries, for the most part anyway, to address all the important issues and problems relating to students: racial diversity, underage drinking, housing, etc. And while I will gladly commend them for such valiant efforts to curb underage drinking and minimize the rampant theft of fruit, why bother from the campus? I still feel that the University is failing to address a very serious problem. I am, talking, of course, about the bug problem.

One day in early October, I sat in my room procrastinating as usual and looking for something to distract me from my work, when I noticed that a plethora of small black blobs had begun to cling to the outside of my screen window. Hoping against hope that this wasn't some sort of heaven-sent plague, like tar raining from the sky or something equally troublesome, I got up to investigate and discovered that the blobs were actually ladybugs.

In fact, swarms of ladybugs were flying about outside my window, thousands of them flinging themselves at the windows in a desperate attempt to get in. Since when is Trax hall the promised land?

I don't have any bones to pick with ladybugs, I thought it was a pretty scene, a sky full of red polka-dotted beetles—until they began to mysteriously hop from one side of the screen to the other.

Suddenly I had six or seven ladybugs flying around my room. I wished them no ill will, so I ran about picking them up and helping them back outside so that they could return to their families. Certainly this was a one-time phenomenon, so it couldn't hurt to take the extra time to help them out. Right?

Yesterday three ladybugs flew about my head, as I tried to put on makeup. I found three ladybugs in my window sill, and this morning I woke up to find a smushed ladybug in my bedsheet!

The tops of the doors of Trax are crusted with smushed ladybugs, snared by an untimely death when anyone opened or closed the door. The windowsills in the stairwells are also full of dead bodies, since these bugs seem to drop dead three seconds after they enter the building, for some unknown reason. (Although, I must admit, it worries me. If the bugs can't live here, how are we able to survive?) This has to stop.

Aside from this holocaust of innocent ladybugs, I have seen in these dorms bugs that must belong in the Amazonian jungle. They are three inches long, brown and have about seven milliliter little legs, allowing them to run faster than a human being. They blend in with the lovely shade of carpeting Res Life has selected for the dorms.

One dated across the TV lounge in Roberts during Dawson's Creek last week and I thought for a moment that it was a mouse. One attacked my biology class last year and for fifteen minutes we all tucked our appendages into our chairs and anxiously watched it skitter back and forth until some brave soul crushed it. I think she had to stand on it with all her weight. I honestly believed it would continue to walk and just carry her around the room on its back. I am certain that one of these is going to kill me in my sleep.

I don't know what the solution is. However, since Bucknell seems to be able to pay construction workers to set up camp outside my window and make a ridiculous amount of racket (while accomplishing nothing but putting a large useless hole in the ground), I think it could also afford to hire an exterminator. Or maybe an exorcist; I'm sure those Amazon bugs are the work of Satan.

Maybe the University could spring for some properly installed windows with sealed edges and without holes in the screens, so the ladybugs couldn't commit suicide in my room.

At this point, I don't care how it's done, just fix it! Now, if you'll excuse me, I have to remove a ladybug from my computer screen before the Grim Reaper comes.

I hope I speak for the masses when I say that, scientifically speaking, the head is really icky. The head will not cause cancer or feed the children. The head will not wash your car. The head can never love you. But every time you eat a nugget, tender, or wing-ding, in prefer not to think about it, but this is a whole head and I wish someone was a little more upset.

googy eyes, there would have been cause for concern. We don't expect McDonald's chicken to contain the choicest cuts of poultry, and maybe we can deal with the inclusion of the occasional bit of neck, foot, or lip (although we prefer not to think about it), but this is a whole head and I wish someone was a little more upset.

I hope I speak for the masses when I say that, scientifically speaking, the head is really icky. The head will not cause cancer or feed the children. The head will not wash your car. The head can never love you. But every time you eat a nugget, tender, or wing-ding, in prefer not to think about it, but this is a whole head and I wish someone was a little more upset.

I hope I speak for the masses when I say that, scientifically speaking, the head is really icky. The head will not cause cancer or feed the children. The head will not wash your car. The head can never love you. But every time you eat a nugget, tender, or wing-ding, in prefer not to think about it, but this is a whole head and I wish someone was a little more upset.

I hope I speak for the masses when I say that, scientifically speaking, the head is really icky. The head will not cause cancer or feed the children. The head will not wash your car. The head can never love you. But every time you eat a nugget, tender, or wing-ding, in prefer not to think about it, but this is a whole head and I wish someone was a little more upset.

I hope I speak for the masses when I say that, scientifically speaking, the head is really icky. The head will not cause cancer or feed the children. The head will not wash your car. The head can never love you. But every time you eat a nugget, tender, or wing-ding, in prefer not to think about it, but this is a whole head and I wish someone was a little more upset.

There's always Kentucky Fried Chicken...

By DAVID MCGREEVEY
Staff Writer

The local paper that broke the story published several meta-news pieces in the days that followed: "Chicken head frenzy circles the globe" and "Onbeat story generates unprecedented web traffic," among others.

The pundits started to weigh in with their wise words. A columnist from the area where the chicken was found took the opportunity to be- come what he called the "I've Got a Lawsuit" game.

He described the encounter in a no-nonsense style that would make Hemingway himself proud: "I noticed that it had a beak and it had eyes. I screamed." The manager offered her a fresh box with less face content. She decided to make grilled cheese sandwiches instead.

The local paper ran the story. Word started to get around. The Washington Post mentioned it on Friday and the involuntarily breaded chicken became something of an Internet celebrity. Fans of the grotesque thrilled to lurid pictures (and videos, even) of the head.

I was all set to write a pseudo-clever commentary on this chain of events. It would have included feeble attempts at humor like this: "Memo to McDonald's Employees - How to determine if a given object is or is not a Chicken McNugget: 1.) If the item must be chased about the premises, it is not a Chicken McNugget. 2.) If the item offers you three wishes in exchange for its freedom, it is not a Chicken McNugget."

You get the idea, if things had gone differently, you could be reading a minor comedic masterpiece right now instead of whatever this is. But some strange things started to happen.

The local paper that broke the story published several meta-news pieces in the days that followed: "Chicken head frenzy circles the globe" and "Onbeat story generates unprecedented web traffic," among others.

The pundits started to weigh in with their wise words. A columnist from the area where the chicken was found took the opportunity to be- come what he called the "I've Got a Lawsuit" game.

He described the encounter in a no-nonsense style that would make Hemingway himself proud: "I noticed that it had a beak and it had eyes. I screamed." The manager offered her a fresh box with less face content. She decided to make grilled cheese sandwiches instead.

The local paper ran the story. Word started to get around. The Washington Post mentioned it on Friday and the involuntarily breaded chicken became something of an Internet celebrity. Fans of the grotesque thrilled to lurid pictures (and videos, even) of the head.

I was all set to write a pseudo-clever commentary on this chain of events. It would have included feeble attempts at humor like this: "Memo to McDonald's Employees - How to determine if a given object is or is not a Chicken McNugget: 1.) If the item must be chased about the premises, it is not a Chicken McNugget. 2.) If the item offers you three wishes in exchange for its freedom, it is not a Chicken McNugget."

You get the idea, if things had gone differently, you could be reading a minor comedic masterpiece right now instead of whatever this is. But some strange things started to happen.

The local paper that broke the story published several meta-news pieces in the days that followed: "Chicken head frenzy circles the globe" and "Onbeat story generates unprecedented web traffic," among others.

The pundits started to weigh in with their wise words. A columnist from the area where the chicken was found took the opportunity to be- come what he called the "I've Got a Lawsuit" game.

He described the encounter in a no-nonsense style that would make Hemingway himself proud: "I noticed that it had a beak and it had eyes. I screamed." The manager offered her a fresh box with less face content. She decided to make grilled cheese sandwiches instead.

The local paper ran the story. Word started to get around. The Washington Post mentioned it on Friday and the involuntarily breaded chicken became something of an Internet celebrity. Fans of the grotesque thrilled to lurid pictures (and videos, even) of the head.

I was all set to write a pseudo-clever commentary on this chain of events. It would have included feeble attempts at humor like this: "Memo to McDonald's Employees - How to determine if a given object is or is not a Chicken McNugget: 1.) If the item must be chased about the premises, it is not a Chicken McNugget. 2.) If the item offers you three wishes in exchange for its freedom, it is not a Chicken McNugget."

You get the idea, if things had gone differently, you could be reading a minor comedic masterpiece right now instead of whatever this is. But some strange things started to happen.

The local paper that broke the story published several meta-news pieces in the days that followed: "Chicken head frenzy circles the globe" and "Onbeat story generates unprecedented web traffic," among others.

The pundits started to weigh in with their wise words. A columnist from the area where the chicken was found took the opportunity to be- come what he called the "I've Got a Lawsuit" game.

He described the encounter in a no-nonsense style that would make Hemingway himself proud: "I noticed that it had a beak and it had eyes. I screamed." The manager offered her a fresh box with less face content. She decided to make grilled cheese sandwiches instead.

The local paper ran the story. Word started to get around. The Washington Post mentioned it on Friday and the involuntarily breaded chicken became something of an Internet celebrity. Fans of the grotesque thrilled to lurid pictures (and videos, even) of the head.

I was all set to write a pseudo-clever commentary on this chain of events. It would have included feeble attempts at humor like this: "Memo to McDonald's Employees - How to determine if a given object is or is not a Chicken McNugget: 1.) If the item must be chased about the premises, it is not a Chicken McNugget. 2.) If the item offers you three wishes in exchange for its freedom, it is not a Chicken McNugget."

You get the idea, if things had gone differently, you could be reading a minor comedic masterpiece right now instead of whatever this is. But some strange things started to happen.

Gore, take your final bow

By GRETCHEN SCHROCK
Columnist

Despite the falling of the curtain, the darkening of the stage, and the absence of an attentive audience, the melodramatic play of the United States presidential election continues.

Al Gore, portraying the childish complaining loser, is furthering his quest for the limelight of the presidency by appealing the decision by Judge N

FEATURES

Lewisburg: a winter wonderland

By KATIE HEISE
Staff Writer

As I emerge onto Market Street on a crisp winter evening, leaving the sounds of the chapel bells and seemingly the passage of time behind, I am drawn into a world transformed. With the beautiful lights, the faint scent of pine, and the friendly passersby, it's beginning to feel a lot like the holidays, and downtown Lewisburg has definitely gotten into the spirit of the season.

Of the many approaching and currently unfolding holidays, Lewisburg seems, for the most part, focused on Christmas themes. It seems that regardless of my own religious beliefs, I enjoy the beauty of this season more with each passing year.

The trees along the street form an inviting path with their dancing strings of lights, a path illuminated further by street lamps bearing lush green wreaths. Evergreen boughs line windows and doorways. The porch of the Bull Run Inn, on the corner of Sixth and Market Streets is draped with pine and gentle white lights, framing the sizable Christmas tree beside the door.

Across the street, the Towne Tavern boasts garlands of pine, complete with red velvet bows, illuminated by shimmering Christmas lights. Hufnagle Park, however, with its layered display of decorations, is the most attention-grabbing site on the block. Lights in the shape of two reindeer stand in just the right place to focus my vision on the Victorian sights beyond: a colossal pine tree wrapped from top to bottom in softly glowing lights. Light also creates sculptures of carolers, a London-style cab and horse, and a lamplighter in top hat.

But the journey has hardly begun; even the police and the department of transportation have contributed to the atmosphere of joy and giving. A "Happy Holidays" bag covers each parking meter, providing much needed relief to busy shoppers, business people, and those who prefer to tour the streets by car.

I wander on, pausing to smile at Market Street Deli's window art, which spotlights a merry snowman, complete with cornucopia and carrot nose. As I cross Fifth Street, On Fire Promotions presents a colorful window display, a fully-decorated Christmas tree, a snowman, and presents wrapped in shiny, metallic paper stand alongside a huge flag, welcoming patrons and visitors. Dogwood Hill has a more Victorian feel, with its tiny lights, simple but elegant trees, and reindeer fashioned of woven branches.

The sparkle of W. H. Donahoe, the joy of Santa Claus

More, the Nutcrackers and charming miniature carol ornaments and gift boxes outside the Bookshelf's add to the winter wonderland.

And then there is the Gingerbread House. I step inside, entering a house of turn-of-the-century treasures and modern innovations, greeted by a red-cheeked snowman holding a welcome sign. He sets off a display of Christmas china and peppermints, pointing the way to the shelves covering the walls.

There are Santas of every type, appearance, and use imaginable: ceramic statuettes, candles, dolls, kitchenware and a full range of special edition Colonial Williamsburg Christmas figures, interspersed with a snowman timer, nested boxes and fine food sets. A wiseman yanks on his camel's reins in one of the store's lifelike nativity scenes, while a few paces beyond sits a spectrum of teddy bears dressed for winter in soft fur and velvet. Nor is the store lacking in traditional holiday fare: chocolate candies, tins of snickerdoodles, nutcrackers and the food of choice, coffee.

I take a moment to sample the cookies at the counter; light and crunchy, with just a hint of spice. Beside the front window is a small treasury of Chanukah items. I am amazed by the detail and variety of menorahs, ranging from the simple, elegant standard to a Rugsrats menorah to a unique "Once upon a Time" piece by Branah Layah. A crystal planter and goblet adorning the window of Music 'n More, the Nutcrackers and charming miniature carol ornaments and gift boxes outside the Bookshelf's add to the winter wonderland.

Walking down the street, bathed in the golden radiance of lamps and holiday lights, I notice several creative window murals. Santa, seated in his sleigh, takes a quick break to enjoy a slice of pizza as his reindeer look on. Not-so-subtle advertising, yes, but cheerful and cozy all the same. "Let it Snow!" proclaims another window, and I smile in agreement, longing for the white forests and snow-adorned with Hebrew symbols catch my eye as I bend to examine the tiny dreidels and tapered candles.

Walking down the street, bathed in the golden radiance of lamps and holiday lights, I notice several creative window murals. Santa, seated in his sleigh, takes a quick break to enjoy a slice of pizza as his reindeer look on. Not-so-subtle advertising, yes, but cheerful and cozy all the same. "Let it Snow!" proclaims another window, and I smile in agreement, longing for the white forests and snow-

There are Santas of every type, appearance, and use imaginable: ceramic statuettes, candles, dolls, kitchenware and a full range of special edition Colonial Williamsburg Christmas figures, interspersed with a snowman timer, nested boxes and fine food sets. A wiseman yanks on his camel's reins in one of the store's lifelike nativity scenes, while a few

TOP & LEFT: Christmas decorations in the dorms and fraternities.
ABOVE: Market Street decked out in its holiday lights.
BOTTOM: The University celebrates Kwanzaa in December.

Photos by Dan Blair

University community celebrates holiday season in style

By SANDI JO GALATI
Features Editor

For a candle-free campus, there's a lot of candlelighting going on right now.

Whether it be for Kwanzaa, Christmas, Hanukkah, or Ramadan students throughout campus are enthusiastically preparing to celebrate, both on their own and in conjunction with various campus organizations and events.

Christmas is the Christian celebration of the birth of Christ. Literally, it means "Christ's mass," and celebrates the birth of Jesus of Nazareth. In the four weeks prior to Christmas, Christians celebrate Advent, a time of preparation for the coming of Christ. For each week that passes, one of four candles is lit on the Advent wreath.

Possibly the largest single event on campus celebrating Christmas is the Candlelight Services, featuring the Rooke Chapel Choir and the Rooke Chapel Ringers. Following the caroling will be Christmas Mass at 8 p.m. and a Christmas reception at Newman House at 10 p.m.

about the Christmas story.

The service concludes with the candlelight singing of "Silent Night" then the ringing in of Christmas by the Chapel Ringers and extra bell-ringers and the singing of Joy to the World. The service is unbelievably popular: the Chapel Office gave out all 2400 tickets in just an hour and a half back in October, said Reverend Ian Oliver.

The scheduled dates and times are Dec. 8, 10, and 12 at 7:30 p.m. in the Chapel. As last year, the service will be videotaped by PBS and broadcast on stations nationwide this Christmas season.

The interdenominational Protestant church will be having a Christmas service and party at the final last service of the year on Sunday, December 17 at 11 a.m. in the Chapel.

The Catholic Campus ministry will be celebrating with caroling at 7:30 p.m. on Saturday, Dec. 16 in Rooke Chapel. Following the caroling will be Christmas Mass at 8 p.m. and a Christmas reception at Newman House at 10 p.m.

Hanukkah, also known as the Festival of Lights, is a celebration which literally means "dedication." It commemorates the miracle Maccabean victory, led by Judas, over the Hellenistic Syrians, around 165 BCE.

The legend behind Hanukkah rituals is explained that after the victory, the Temple of Jerusalem had to be rededicated. While there was only enough sacramental oil for one day, it burned for eight days—hence the eight-day celebration of Hanukkah.

The most important ritual is that of the candle lighting. The menorah is a candleholder of nine candles. For each night of Hanukkah, one candle is lit from the middle candle, called the shamash, which is lit every evening.

Because Hanukkah occurs after the conclusion of the semester, from Dec. 22 through 29, Hillel is unsure if, and in what way, they will celebrate. Ramadan is the ninth month of the Muslim calendar, in which Muslims observe the Fast of Ramadan. Muslims fast all day, until the evening hours, when a meal, called iftar breaks the fast. Customarily, Muslims also templeton.

At the University, the Muslim Students Association (MSA) will be sponsoring a Ramadan dinner on Monday, Dec. 11 from 5 to 7 p.m. in the Refectory, observing the iftar for that day.

In attendance will be leaders of the various Religious organizations, selected members of the faculty and staff, selected professors in the Religion department, and the members of the Muslim Students Association. Also at this event will be a talk about Ramadan and a talk given by Clark Austin on his research of Islamic Law.

Kwanzaa, a word meaning "first fruits" is a seven-day celebration that asks its celebrants to reflect upon their African roots, as well as on their present-day lives. It began in 1966 by Doctor Maulana Karenga, a professor at California State University.

Each of the seven days is represented by a principle, for which a candle is lit from the Kinara, or candleholder. The principles are Umoja (Unity), Kujichagulia (Self-Determination), Ujima (Collective Work and Responsibility), Ujamaa (Cooperative Economics), Nia (Purpose), Kuumba (Creativity), and Imani (Faith).

Starting Sunday, Dec. 10, there will be a speaker every evening at various campus locations throughout the week for each principle. The celebrations will conclude with the Karamu, the traditional feast, after the Imani talk on Saturday evening at 7 p.m. in Larison Dining Hall. An after-party will be held from 10 to 2 p.m. in the Brynwood Room on Saturday, Dec. 10.

Regardless of varying religious beliefs, a common theme seems to unite all religions and celebrations; this time of year resonates with a certain amalgamation of people, ideas, and faiths that celebrate positive stories linking the past to the present.

Wink Thinks

Dear Wink,

Have you ever met someone who completely astounds you, who intrigues you, even though you don't know him?

It's not that I don't know you at all, but for some reason you seem to be that kind of person. However, the truth of the matter is that you are something of a mystery. Sure, people see you around this place all of the time. I have even seen you at your own house and watched you party, but regardless I don't feel like I know you at all.

Seriously, you may not even know it, but for me and I think many others, your column is the first I turn to when reading the paper—well, that and the public safety log. When giving tours I point you out to all the perspective students as being someone that everyone knows, and someone to whom I feel personally connected.

I don't know if I am intrigued by the mystery of who you are, the glamour of it all, or maybe even that you seem to know so much. Either way, for some reason, I like so many other girls at this school, have had my eye on Wink Thinks. I want to know who you are, what your plans are, and I guess the most important aspect of it all—are you single? For a long time now I have wanted to know about the kid who seems to have an answer to it all, and someone to whom the most dysfunctional people at this country club/J crew catalog we call Bucknell write every week in order to catch a glimmer of understanding.

Therefore, Wink I ask you, what do you think of it all?

Sincerely,
Watching Over Wink

First of all I just want to thank you for the glowing image of me that you seem to have in your head. I guess you could say that I was never a person that really knew how to react to flattery, I mean what are you supposed to say when someone compliments you? "Oh well thanks but I already know I am fine and have a great sense of humor?" I guess you could say that I am kind of freaked out that someone could feel like they have this unusual connection with me, but if that is the way you feel I am not going to argue with you. I just ask one thing, and that is that you aren't sitting in the backseat of my car when I come back from class one day. That wouldn't be real cool and I would probably just end up running away. However, thanks again for your appreciation; it's nice to know that I at least have some groupies. Who knows maybe you could even start a fan club.

Dan Blair—The Bucknellian

Well, it seems that you want to know about me, but I don't really know where to start. Do you want my whole life story, or something that is going to sound like the longest personal ad that you have ever seen? I don't really know why you feel like I am some mysterious person, I don't try and hide so nobody can see me, in fact I am usually chillin' or partying around this campus somewhere, you just have to know where to look.

It seemed like the thing you wanted to know the most was if I am single or not. While I know that this is the question on everyone's mind, let me first of all just tell you what not to do if you are trying to win me, or another guy over. I hate girls who are just like "Oh yeah let me walk up to him and he will be all mine and we can go back to my room and hook up." If you are all fake then forget it. So to all you girls a little bit of advice from me: be original and be yourself. So now that you are still wondering if I am single, yes I am.

I have been thinking about my plans for after college a lot recently, even though I am still only a junior. I know that some people are very interested in graduate school, or getting a job right out of college, but I have my eyes set on something else. I have decided to become the new host of TRL on MTV when Carson Daly retires, or to try to get myself onto The Real World—who knows, maybe even Survivor. One thing about this whole college thing is that people start to take life so seriously. I guess you could say that is pretty much what I am all about. I am really a big kid at heart who goes into Wal-Mart and heads right for the toy section to go and play.

I am pretty much just a west coast boy who is all about having a good time. After all, as Blink 182 says, "with many years ahead to fall in line, why would you wish that on me? I never want to act my age, what's my age again?"

So, to return to the question of what I remember most about my semester in France, the sound of my French mother's laugh still rings in my ears. But also, I can still remember, lying on my bed with the skylight open, waiting for my French family to call me down for dinner, listening to the sounds of the street. My little place in France, the street that I walked down every day, Rue du Commerce, and people's voices mixed with music and laughter drifting up to surround me, comfort me and made me feel like I was at home.

Bucknell students with an abroad perspective

By CARA FISHER
Contributing Writer

Someone asked me recently what I remember most about my semester abroad last spring in Tours, France. My memories sometimes overwhelm me: I wish I could precisely recall them (the sounds, the lights, the words spoken, the expressions made, everything). They are always with me, lingering in my head, shifting and surfacing when I look at pictures, hear a song, or read my journal. Some seem like yesterday (the image remains so complete) while others seem like years ago.

My days there were short, but packed with new experiences, discoveries and lessons about myself. Although the majority of the time was relatively relaxed and comfortable, I struggled with the language, my confidence, and my anxiety about returning to the States. To adjust to a culture, speak its language, understand its idiosyncrasies, and finally, realize that the similarities and differences compared with your own familiar culture equals a daunting yet truly amazing accomplishment.

I studied abroad in France, mainly to improve my language skills, and returned not only with a slightly better pronunciation and a more practical vocabulary, but also with knowledge of life in a French household and as a French college student, respect for the French culture and a whole wealth of memories from my travels throughout Europe.

For the first month of my program as a student studying through the Bucknell on France program in Tours, we were enrolled at the Institut d'Etudes Françaises de Touraine, referred to simply as the Institute. A center dedicated to the teaching of the French language to students from all over the world, the Institute offered intensive language lessons to help us review and improve our pronunciation, oral comprehension and oral expression skills.

After we completed our studies at the Institute, our classes at the Université François Rabelais began. I chose to take an economics class, a French literature class, and another class focusing on the significance of food and cuisine in literature and in the French culture. Additionally, I attended the required art and architecture course and another preparatory class for the DELF language proficiency exam. As part of the exchange program Bucknell has with François Rabelais, professors from the university taught the economics and French literature classes. We met twice a week, once with the other French students enrolled in the classes, and once with just the professors and the Bucknell students. These sessions allowed us to have more personal contact with the professors and gave us the opportunity to seek extra help and explanations if needed.

In conjunction with our courses, we had excursions with the Bucknell group on certain weekends. We traveled to several nearby châteaux, noticing stylistic changes and ad-extended lecture on flying buttresses, gargoyles, and stained glass windows, the learning continued as we spent a weekend visiting museums, memorials and sites dedicated to the events of World War II. I know that the experience would be emotional, but I was not prepared for its overwhelming impact. Listening to the waves crash on Omaha Beach, while standing in the middle of the American Cemetery, surrounded by hundreds of rows of tiny white headstones was a history lesson I will never forget.

Although I enjoyed my courses and appreciated the chance to have all of them

me that I can understand almost everything spoken to me in a foreign language, and that I can, to some extent, express myself in those same "foreign" words. I also enjoyed the time I spent traveling in Europe. We had two vacations: one 10-day of Place Plumereau in Tours with my friends and witnessing the setting sun transform buildings and streets into a city of gold, watching mountains turn into hills and green pastures, and blue skies replace dark clouds from a train window. I also came to the realization that I was not the same person I used to be. I fell in love with Europe, with the freedom of traveling from city to city, seeing the sights, tasting the food, checking out the nightlife and meeting new friends along the way.

So, to return to the question of what I remember most about my semester in France, the sound of my French mother's laugh still rings in my ears. But also, I can still remember, lying on my bed with the skylight open, waiting for my French family to call me down for dinner, listening to the sounds of the street. My little place in France, the street that I walked down every day, Rue du Commerce, and people's voices mixed with music and laughter drifting up to surround me, comfort me and made me feel like I was at home.

So, to return to the question of what I remember most about my semester in France, the sound of my French mother's laugh still rings in my ears. But also, I can still remember, lying on my bed with the skylight open, waiting for my French family to call me down for dinner, listening to the sounds of the street. My little place in France, the street that I walked down every day, Rue du Commerce, and people's voices mixed with music and laughter drifting up to surround me, comfort me and made me feel like I was at home.

So, to return to the question of what I remember most about my semester in France, the sound of my French mother's laugh still rings in my ears. But also, I can still remember, lying on my bed with the skylight open, waiting for my French family to call me down for dinner, listening to the sounds of the street. My little place in France, the street that I walked down every day, Rue du Commerce, and people's voices mixed with music and laughter drifting up to surround me, comfort me and made me feel like I was at home.

So, to return to the question of what I remember most about my semester in France, the sound of my French mother's laugh still rings in my ears. But also, I can still remember, lying on my bed with the skylight open, waiting for my French family to call me down for dinner, listening to the sounds of the street. My little place in France, the street that I walked down every day, Rue du Commerce, and people's voices mixed with music and laughter drifting up to surround me, comfort me and made me feel like I was at home.

So, to return to the question of what I remember most about my semester in France, the sound of my French mother's laugh still rings in my ears. But also, I can still remember, lying on my bed with the skylight open, waiting for my French family to call me down for dinner, listening to the sounds of the street. My little place in France, the street that I walked down every day, Rue du Commerce, and people's voices mixed with music and laughter drifting up to surround me, comfort me and made me feel like I was at home.

So, to return to the question of what I remember most about my semester in France, the sound of my French mother's laugh still rings in my ears. But also, I can still remember, lying on my bed with the skylight open, waiting for my French family to call me down for dinner, listening to the sounds of the street. My little place in France, the street that I walked down every day, Rue du Commerce, and people's voices mixed with music and laughter drifting up to surround me, comfort me and made me feel like I was at home.

So, to return to the question of what I remember most about my semester in France, the sound of my French mother's laugh still rings in my ears. But also, I can still remember, lying on my bed with the skylight open, waiting for my French family to call me down for dinner, listening to the sounds of the street. My little place in France, the street that I walked down every day, Rue du Commerce, and people's voices mixed with music and laughter drifting up to surround me, comfort me and made me feel like I was at home.

FEATURES

Bucknell students with an abroad perspective

By CARA FISHER
Contributing Writer

Someone asked me recently what I remember most about my semester abroad last spring in Tours, France. My memories sometimes overwhelm me: I wish I could precisely recall them (the sounds, the lights, the words spoken, the expressions made, everything). They are always with me, lingering in my head, shifting and surfacing when I look at pictures, hear a song, or read my journal. Some seem like yesterday (the image remains so complete) while others seem like years ago.

My days there were short, but packed with new experiences, discoveries and lessons about myself. Although the majority of the time was relatively relaxed and comfortable, I struggled with the language, my confidence, and my anxiety about returning to the States. To adjust to a culture, speak its language, understand its idiosyncrasies, and finally, realize that the similarities and differences compared with your own familiar culture equals a daunting yet truly amazing accomplishment.

I studied abroad in France, mainly to improve my language skills, and returned not only with a slightly better pronunciation and a more practical vocabulary, but also with knowledge of life in a French household and as a French college student, respect for the French culture and a whole wealth of memories from my travels throughout Europe.

For the first month of my program as a student studying through the Bucknell on France program in Tours, we were enrolled at the Institut d'Etudes Françaises de Touraine, referred to simply as the Institute. A center dedicated to the teaching of the French language to students from all over the world, the Institute offered intensive language lessons to help us review and improve our pronunciation, oral comprehension and oral expression skills.

After we completed our studies at the Institute, our classes at the Université François Rabelais began. I chose to take an economics class, a French literature class, and another class focusing on the significance of food and cuisine in literature and in the French culture. Additionally, I attended the required art and architecture course and another preparatory class for the DELF language proficiency exam. As part of the exchange program Bucknell has with François Rabelais, professors from the university taught the economics and French literature classes. We met twice a week, once with the other French students enrolled in the classes, and once with just the professors and the Bucknell students. These sessions allowed us to have more personal contact with the professors and gave us the opportunity to seek extra help and explanations if needed.

In conjunction with our courses, we had excursions with the Bucknell group on certain weekends. We traveled to several nearby châteaux, noticing stylistic changes and ad-

extended lecture on flying buttresses, gargoyles, and stained glass windows, the learning continued as we spent a weekend visiting museums, memorials and sites dedicated to the events of World War II. I know that the experience would be emotional, but I was not prepared for its overwhelming impact. Listening to the waves crash on Omaha Beach, while standing in the middle of the American Cemetery, surrounded by hundreds of rows of tiny white headstones was a history lesson I will never forget.

Although I enjoyed my courses and appreciated the chance to have all of them

me that I can understand almost everything spoken to me in a foreign language, and that I can, to some extent, express myself in those same "foreign" words. I also enjoyed the time I spent traveling in Europe. We had two vacations: one 10-day of Place Plumereau in Tours with my friends and witnessing the setting sun transform buildings and streets into a city of gold, watching mountains turn into hills and green pastures, and blue skies replace dark clouds from a train window. I also came to the realization that I was not the same person I used to be. I fell in love with Europe, with the freedom of traveling from city to city, seeing the sights, tasting the food, checking out the nightlife and meeting new friends along the way.

So, to return to the question of what I remember most about my semester in France, the sound of my French mother's laugh still rings in my ears. But also, I can still remember, lying on my bed with the skylight open, waiting for my French family to call me down for dinner, listening to the sounds of the street. My little place in France, the street that I walked down every day, Rue du Commerce, and people's voices mixed with music and laughter drifting up to surround me, comfort me and made me feel like I was at home.

So, to return to the question of what I remember most about my semester in France, the sound of my French mother's laugh still rings in my ears. But also, I can still remember, lying on my bed with the skylight open, waiting for my French family to call me down for dinner, listening to the sounds of the street. My little place in France, the street that I walked down every day, Rue du Commerce, and people's voices mixed with music and laughter drifting up to surround me, comfort me and made me feel like I was at home.

So, to return to the question of what I remember most about my semester in France, the sound of my French mother's laugh still rings in my ears. But also, I can still remember, lying on my bed with the skylight open, waiting for my French family to call me down for dinner, listening to the sounds of the street. My little place in France, the street that I walked down every day, Rue du Commerce, and people's voices mixed with music and laughter drifting up to surround me, comfort me and made me feel like I was at home.

So, to return to the question of what I remember most about my semester in France, the sound of my French mother's laugh still rings in my ears. But also, I can still remember, lying on my bed with the skylight open, waiting for my French family to call me down for dinner, listening to the sounds of the street. My little place in France, the street that I walked down every day, Rue du Commerce, and people's voices mixed with music and laughter drifting up to surround me, comfort me and made me feel like I was at home.

So, to return to the question of what I remember most about my semester in France, the sound of my French mother's laugh still rings in my ears. But also, I can still remember, lying on my bed with the skylight open, waiting for my French family to call me down for dinner, listening to the sounds of the street. My little place in France, the street that I walked down every day, Rue du Commerce, and people's voices mixed with music and laughter drifting up to surround me, comfort me and made me feel like I was at home.

So, to return to the question of what I remember most about my semester in France, the sound of my French mother's laugh still rings in my ears. But also, I can still remember, lying on my bed with the skylight open, waiting for my French family to call me down for dinner, listening to the sounds of the street. My little place in France, the street that I walked down every day, Rue du Commerce, and people's voices mixed with music and laughter drifting up to surround me, comfort me and made me feel like I was at home.

So, to return to the question of what I remember most about my semester in France, the sound of my French mother's laugh still rings in my ears. But also, I can still remember, lying on my bed with the skylight open, waiting for my French family to call me down for dinner, listening to the sounds of the street. My little place in France, the street that I walked down every day, Rue du Commerce, and people's voices mixed with music and laughter drifting up to surround me, comfort me and made me feel like I was at home.

In my class, the discussions were especially stimulating, because in addition to the seven Bucknell students in the class, there were two women from Iraq, one man from Belgium, two women from Japan, one woman from Korea and one woman from Australia. It was incredible to think that aside from the Australian woman, the only way that I could communicate with some of my classmates was to speak in French since it was the only language that we shared. Our class discussions concerning stereotypical attitudes and varying cultural traditions sparked my curiosity, and I tried to exam. As part of the exchange program Bucknell has with François Rabelais, professors from the university taught the economics and French literature classes. We met twice a week, once with the other French students enrolled in the classes, and once with just the professors and the Bucknell students. These sessions allowed us to have more personal contact with the professors and gave us the opportunity to seek extra help and explanations if needed.

In conjunction with our courses, we had excursions with the Bucknell group on certain weekends. We traveled to several nearby châteaux, noticing stylistic changes and ad-

extended lecture on flying buttresses, gargoyles, and stained glass windows, the learning continued as we spent a weekend visiting museums, memorials and sites dedicated to the events of World War II. I know that the experience would be emotional, but I was not prepared for its overwhelming impact. Listening to the waves crash on Omaha Beach, while standing in the middle of the American Cemetery, surrounded by hundreds of rows of tiny white headstones was a history lesson I will never forget.

Although I enjoyed my courses and appreciated the chance to have all of them

me that I can understand almost everything spoken to me in a foreign language, and that I can, to some extent, express myself in those same "foreign" words. I also enjoyed the time I spent traveling in Europe. We had two vacations: one 10-day of Place Plumereau in Tours with my friends and witnessing the setting sun transform buildings and streets into a city of gold, watching mountains turn into hills and green pastures, and blue skies replace dark clouds from a train window. I also came to the realization that I was not the same person I used to be. I fell in love with Europe, with the freedom of traveling from city to city, seeing the sights, tasting the food, checking out the nightlife and meeting new friends along the way.

So, to return to the question of what I remember most about my semester in France, the sound of my French mother's laugh still rings in my ears. But also, I can still remember, lying on my bed with the skylight open, waiting for my French family to call me down for dinner, listening to the sounds of the street. My little place in France, the street that I walked down every day, Rue du Commerce, and people's voices mixed with music and laughter drifting up to surround me, comfort me and made me feel like I was at home.

So, to return to the question of what I remember most about my semester in France, the sound of my French mother's laugh still rings in my ears. But also, I can still remember, lying on my bed with the skylight open, waiting for my French family to call me down for dinner, listening to the sounds of the street. My little place in France, the street that I walked down every day, Rue du Commerce, and people's voices mixed with music and laughter drifting up to surround me, comfort me and made me feel like I was at home.

So, to return to the question of what I remember most about my semester in France, the sound of my French mother's laugh still rings in my ears. But also, I can still remember, lying on my bed with the skylight open, waiting for my French family to call me down for dinner, listening to the sounds of the street. My little place in France, the street that I walked down every day, Rue du Commerce, and people's voices mixed with music and laughter drifting up to surround me, comfort me and made me feel like I was at home.

So, to return to the question of what I remember most about my semester in France, the sound of my French mother's laugh still rings in my ears. But also, I can still remember, lying on my bed with the skylight open, waiting for my French family to call me down for dinner, listening to the sounds of the street. My little place in France, the street that I walked down every day, Rue du Commerce, and people's voices mixed with music and laughter drifting up to surround me, comfort me and made me feel like I was at home.

So, to return to the question of what I remember most about my semester in France, the sound of my French mother's laugh still rings in my ears. But also, I can still remember, lying on my bed with the skylight open, waiting for my French family to call me down for dinner, listening to the sounds of the street. My little place in France, the street that I walked down every day, Rue du Commerce, and people's voices mixed with music and laughter drifting up to surround me, comfort me and made me feel like I was at home.

So, to return to the question of what I remember most about my semester in France, the sound of my French mother's laugh still rings in my ears. But also, I can still remember, lying on my bed with the skylight open, waiting for my French family to call me down for dinner, listening to the sounds of the street. My little place in France, the street that I walked down every day, Rue du Commerce, and people's voices mixed with music and laughter drifting up to surround me, comfort me and made me feel like I was at home.

So, to return to the question of what I remember most about my semester in France, the sound of my French mother's laugh still rings in my ears. But also, I can still remember, lying on my bed with the skylight open, waiting for my French family to call me down for dinner, listening to the sounds of the street. My little place in France, the street that I walked down every day, Rue du Commerce

Arts & Entertainment

Erograph poetry group visits campus

By MARY AGNES
Senior Writer

Four chairs. Four women. Four different types of poets with distinct voices, uniting together in a passionate collaborative poetry project. Diane Fraser, Margaret (Peg) Cronin, Teresa Castro and Caraway Seed took turns standing front and center at Bucknell Hall on Sunday night. As one spoke, the others sat in a meditative fashion, enjoying the words of their fellow poet.

The four women, three of whom traveled meeting together a few hours each week to talk poetry. They work as a team to inspire one another by taking turns distributing writing exercises, which they respond to and share.

"There is an energy to working together and an incredible nakedness in trying to respond in the moment... we really emphasize listening and it's a deep, beautiful and spiritual event," Teresa said.

A few hours prior to a reading, they create a set list by taking into account the audible tone of the poems along with content of their poems.

"I like to think of it as cutting an album," Diane said.

Sunday night each woman followed her own distinct path, yet they all merged with each other into a single soulful voice.

With long straight locks and gentle child-like voice, Caraway Seed refreshed the audience with strong imagery and soothing ideas like "the modesty of flowers." Her delicate, sometimes dream-like descriptions were accentuated through the soft delivery of her pieces.

Diane Fraser, a former Stadler fellow '89 contributed a nicely contrasting, more disjunctive style. She performed several strong list poems that created mesmerizing combinations of ideas and images. Strong lines such as "I could turn cold but I don't want to," "believe in changeability," and "hold generosity like a rare coin" resonated through her segments.

The audience watched as Teresa Castro rode on the emotion of her words, taking herself on an intense inner journey. Her own words of "precise kaleidoscopic cinema" aptly describe what it was like watching her.

Our Writing Center's own Peg Cronin, whose poems were engaged with several political issues, drew upon a wide range of cultural identities. Her narrative struggles told us of the "jukebox Pythagorean elegance" of billiards and took us down the corridors of a jail where there was "just enough light to remember going insane." In one amazing poem that discussed the "galaxy spinning in our ears," she invoked both Einstein and Ellington with a rhythmic cadence that echoed the abundance of musical references in the piece.

"It was great to be a part of this creative expression. I enjoyed hearing them very much," Kumba Barlo '01 said.

"I really enjoyed the intensity of it," Stadler Center for Poetry Intern, Mike Carlin said. "If I had a favorite moment it would have to be Peg's poem about school busing for education. She said a lot just with the physical sensations on the bus and made many important points with a gentle hand."

The following day, the members of Erograph held a session entitled "Listening & Writing Together" at the Writing Center, where they informally discussed their collaborative approach to writing and performing. They talked about the importance of the supportive environment of the group and how they each draw strength and encouragement from the other group members.

"Working by myself I got stuck in my own head," Diane said. "From working together so closely, for so long, we've really become about supporting each other to be better and better and better."

The tightly knit bond between the women of Erograph propels their project and keeps their vision expanding.

A&E Columnist

Entertainment Review

Liz Wilmarth

Dawson's Creek: creating a new dictionary

I'm sure that all of you Bucknellians can relate: it's 7:00 at night, you're done with your homework. You want entertainment, but you've seen the movie playing at the campus theater, and you just can't help saying, "This town is sorely lacking in the post-meridian activities." Ok, me neither. I would never say that, and would laugh in the face of any of my friends who did. However, on "Dawson's Creek," such comments pass without so much as the bat of an eye.

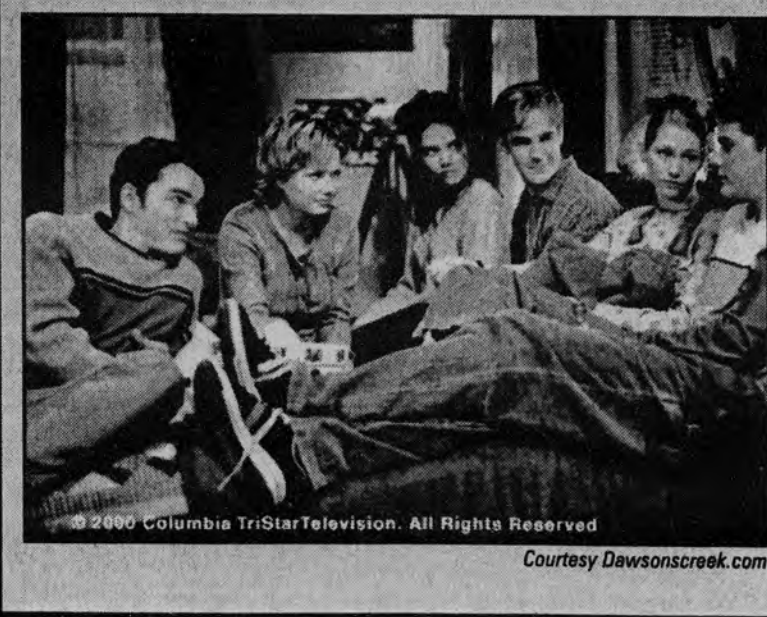

In case you have missed the Wednesday night phenomenon, the show is based around a high school guy named Dawson and his group of friends. The storylines of the six main characters are so complicated that I'm sure I would just confuse you if I tried to get into it, but here is crash course. Joey was Dawson's best friend forever. He finally realized he was in love with her and dated her for a few months, only to lose her to Pacey. Pacey was Dawson's other best friend, the rebel, whose first season found him a 15 year old having an affair with his teacher. Then he dated Andie, the new girl (two seasons ago) who is sticky sweet and just got into Harvard. Andie's brother Jack is gay, but used to date Joey. Now he is best friends with Jen, the bad-girl-gone-good since she moved to the town. The show revolves around the lives of the gang, and most of the time does a great job of portraying teenage angst and emotion. However, people cannot relate to the characters due to the fact that they speak like they are Harvard professors. Each week I am blown away with the ridiculous language that is used as the native tongue of a bunch of high school kids.

My verbal SAT score wasn't anything to brag about, but I consider myself a moderately articulate college student. However, I would never say to a friend of mine, "You're not exactly sunshine personified," if I thought they were being kind of a downer, or "Cue the violins, you're really tugging at the heartstrings" if they were throwing themselves a pity party. Some of my other favorite lines include referring to a levelheaded friend as a "paragon of responsibility" and a lie as an "implausible deniability."

How does this show do so well with kids? Why is this the most popular teenage show since "90210"? How do kids even understand what their new idols are saying? Half the time I never know what is going on. In one episode of the show, a character was talking about how she had gotten drunk at a party and hooked up with a guy she didn't like. When asked about it, she responded, "There was an indiscretion, but we were both chemically altered at the time." Are you serious? No one talks like that. No high school student calls loud music "potentially eardamaging decibels" or calls a guy spreading rumors, "the dark prince of revisionist history." Give me a break.

This aspect of "Dawson's Creek" bothers me so much, that I began thinking about shows that do justice to the way that kids talk, and one stood out - "My So Called Life." Do you remember this show? It was out in 1995 for two or three seasons, and remains the best representation of real kids yet. I think the characters on "Dawson's" are more believable, but I just remember watching that show, and noticing that the characters said the word "like." And they didn't just say it; they said it all the time. It was part of their vocabulary, as it is with most kids. While they didn't sound as intelligent, they sounded real, and that was why I could relate to that show.

I enjoy watching "Dawson's." It is a great excuse to get together with friends for a cheesy hour of television. But just as poems in other languages lose something in the translation, the older people who write the show haven't accomplished the task of speaking to kids in their own language. But hey, it's one more thing to laugh about.

Courtesy Dawsoncreek.com

Chris Rivera—The Bucknellian
For their senior recital, Ashlee Mack '01 accompanied Alissa Yatcko '01 on the piano as Yatcko sang folk songs. A lecture, led by Yatcko, began the evening.

Senior recital-lecture on folk songs

By JEN JOHNSON
Senior Writer

Last Thursday, Alissa Yatcko '01 presented a lecture-recital on folk songs in Bucknell Hall in front of an audience of friends, family and faculty.

"I chose folk songs because I have always enjoyed singing and listening to them, especially those of Ireland," Yatcko said. "When I started my research, I found [folk] music from England, Ireland, Germany, and a bunch of different countries. So, I decided to see what legitimate and respected composers have arranged in order to write a lecture on their use of folk music."

Ashlee Mack '01 accompanied Yatcko on the piano.

"Working with Ashlee was so much fun," Yatcko said. "She is an absolute doll and an impeccable musician. What made it more fun was the fact that we're friends and making music with a friend is just about the best experience you can have as a musician."

Mack is in agreement, expressing her enjoyment of the experience.

"I was asked last semester to play for Alissa. I knew she was a hard worker and it would be a good experience to work with her," she said. "But performing a lecture-recital is not an easy task. I started my research during the summer of 2000, but the bulk of the research and practice came at the beginning of the semester," Yatcko said. "At times the research became really tedious and I wanted to give up, but Doctor Catherine Payn, my voice teacher, encouraged me to keep going. Now I'm looking forward to doing more with this topic, perhaps as a masters or doctoral thesis later in life."

When asked which was her favorite piece to perform Yatcko cites, "The Last Rose of Summer," by Benjamin Britten.

"It is such a beautiful, heart-wrenching piece. I was near tears when I finished performing it," she said.

Mack's favorites were the Copland excerpts.

"Alissa put every ounce of emotion into her singing and we worked together well on those pieces," she said.

"Overall, the performance was quite a success. It is always a relief when it is over, but every minute of rehearsal and all of the effort put into it pays off in the end," Mack said. "It makes it all worthwhile."

Read The Bucknellian and answer the clues with ease

ACROSS

- 2 Street that divides East Buffalo Township and the Borough of Lewisburg
- 6 This racing industry about to end
- 7 New BSC president
- 11 These students react to hotbed of conflict
- 14 First snowfall of the semester
- 15 Chunko's sport
- 21 Metable statues stand idle at her New York museum
- 22 "Paragons of responsibility" from this show listen to music at "potentially eardamaging decibels." (2 words)
- 23 They're voting to legalize Euthanasia
- 24 Advanced in the NCAA tournament

DOWN

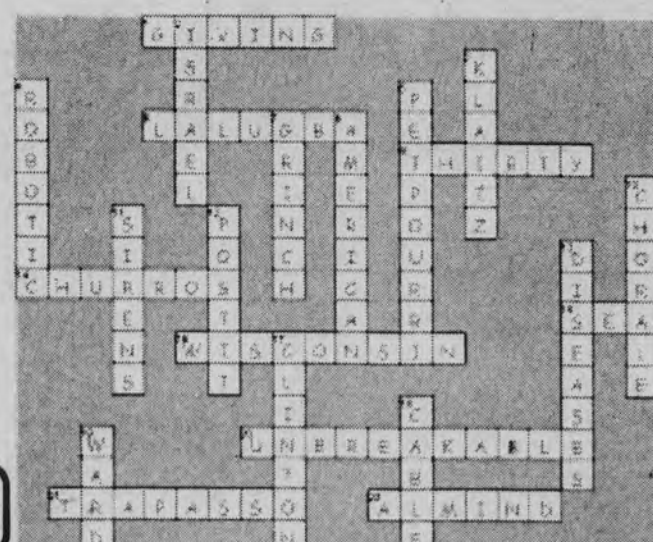

- 1 A local company offered to move this Bucknellian staff member to a communist country try of her choice—free of charge!

- 3 Appropriately, students traveled around France from this home city.
- 4 Autographed books on Tues day
- 5 Installed this weekend
- 8 Recovering from a knee injury
- 9 Our Country
- 10 New addition to The Bucknellian
- 12 MacGaffey's undergraduate school of study
- 13 Dean of Engineering
- 16 Visiting group from Boston
- 17 The newest editor-in-chief
- 18 One of the many December holidays
- 19 Group protesting sweatshop labor this weekend
- 20 Senior recitalist of the week

Meg's leaving. Nat's leaving. Krista needs you. Call her. 7-5525

Congratulations to Rita Neufeld—she successfully solved last week's crossword puzzle. See below for the answers.

Arts & Entertainment

Manhattan's Madame

By MEGHAN MAGEE
Arts & Entertainment Editor

Do you want an opportunity to hang out with Hugh Grant, Elle MacPherson, Brad Pitt, Morgan Freeman, Oprah or Harrison Ford? In the heart of New York City on 42nd street in Time Square, you can! However, none of these celebrities will have a pulse or even a word to say.

Nov. 15, marked the opening of Madame Tussaud's wax museum in New York. Along with other locations in London, Amsterdam, Las Vegas and Hong Kong, these museums present incredible and strikingly lifelike representations of various celebrities ranging from Madonna to the Dalai Lama.

Although the museum robs you of $16, the money is well spent. After all, a convincing replica of a world leader, p o i n t s to the main lobby, and then the person in the elevator forewarns you of the excitement that awaits. During my elevator experience the elevator man said, "Welcome to Madame Tussaud's Wax Museum. You're about to enter the opening gala hosted by Rupaul. There will be champagne in buckets; please feel free to take pictures." Sure enough, the elevator doors open to the eccentric Rupaul in one of his, or should I say "her", wildest poses. This ninth floor Grand Opening gathering literally allows you to rub elbows with the most famous stars in an elaborate Italian baroque garden party setting. Celebrities such as Woody Allen, Bette Midler, Susan Sarandon, Nicholas Cage and Donald Trump fill the room. Some of the wax replicas seem so real - only a closer examination reveals the truth.

Courtesy www.madame-tussauds.com

After the opening party, the wax museum takes you to a "Behind the Scenes" display of the scrupulous artistic efforts involved in the process of creating a wax figure. The multi-media display includes photos, videos, and equipment, and a profile on the artists' efforts to capture the liveliness of television news anchor, Al Roeker.

The next wax exhibit, the Gallery, brings to life public figures such as American presidents, world leaders, neers, scientists, and other people who have made significant changes in society. You can strike up a conversation with the deceased John F. Kennedy or Diana, Princess of Wales. However, don't be alarmed by the realistic figure taking a picture; it's just the famous celebrity photographer, Annie Leibovitz.

The final exhibit of this $50 million museum looks at popular culture with famous people from the worlds of music, movies, and sports. Take a picture with Michael Jordan or join in on one of the Beatles' jam sessions.

The fabulous talents of the Madame Tussaud artists justify the high entrance fee. The museum also features a movie, which, for an additional fee, takes you on a magical taxi ride through New York's past, as well as a New Year's Eve experience in Times Square.

Weis Center brings talent and entertainment to December agenda

By MEGHAN MAGEE
Arts & Entertainment Editor

As a treat for the end of the fall semester, the Weis Center is giving the campus community one last chance for quality entertainment before the winter break. New York's Philharmonia Virtuosi, with music fitting for the holidays, and the creative, humorous Paper Bag Players will perform in the Weis Center before the semester ends.

New York's Philharmonia Virtuosi brings the Complete Brandenburg Concerto of Johann Sebastian Bach to the Weis Center at 8 p.m. on Saturday, Dec. 9.

Courtesy of the Weis Center

The Metropolitan Museum of Art's resident orchestra will perform the six pieces under conductor Richard Kapp. "The ensemble has delighted millions through countless performances throughout the United States and overseas and over 30 outstanding recordings," Bill Boswell, director of cultural events at Bucknell, said.

Although the Brandenburgs aren't strictly holiday music, the concert seems a befitting way to start the holiday season.

This special performance has been made possible by generous contributions from Nancy and Sam Craig, Carol and Bill Metzger, Thomas Rippon and Barbara Zeiders.

Begin your holidays with a performance of these "six orchestral gems" by an impressive orchestra

Dance performance preview

By KACY O'BRIEN
Senior Writer

Bucknell's Department of Theatre and Dance presents the Fall Dance Performance Friday and Saturday, at 8 p.m. on Dec. 8 and 9, in the Harvey M. Powers Theatre.

This Fall's Dance Performance has an eclectic range of talents and faculty works, this weekend's show is one that should not be missed. From giant puppets in Alice's Adventures Underground to diverse works such as Cuando Sofía lo Surocco (When the Sirocco Blows), the collaborations of all involved have produced a fantastic collection of innovative choreography, design techniques, and creative brilliance.

To give a sample of what to look forward to: Resident artist Allyson Green, who has come to Bucknell for the past three years in the fall season to work with students in the classroom and onstage, is returning to her dance company in New York after the fall term is over.

Green is the director of the puppet piece, Alice's Adventures Underground, and collaborated with faculty member and designer F. Elaine Williams to realize the concept of the work through dance and puppetry.

The puppets that will be seen onstage were created for performance es in 1992, first here at Bucknell for the JANPLAN project, and again later in the year with the Bloomsburg Theatre Ensemble.

"I wanted to create a dance version of the play and the movement of the puppetry would help to lead the audience through the story," Green said. "I wanted to pull together a combination of theatre and dance to help narrate the story."

Most of the puppets were already in existence, though the props and costume tabs tried their hand at creating a few new characters, such as the lobster, mock turtle and the mythological griffin.

The role of Alice will be played by a private student of Ellen Gerdes, from Lewisburg High School, and cameo appearances by the Theatre and Dance faculty will be frequent—Bob Gainer as the White Rabbit, Simone Ferro as the Cheshire Cat and Danna Frangione as the Caterpillar. The piece is set to the music of Tom Waits, Jefferson Airplane and Edgar Allan Poe.

The program includes Gathering, Notes from the Seminar, by Danna Frangione, Dorian Discourse, by Veronica Noecker, The Answer, My Friend, by Sara Wagner, Cuando Sofía lo Surocco, by Simone Ferro and MTV, What?!, by Scott Scatena.

The concert, funded by BSC and the Bucknell Association for the Arts, is suitable for all ages.

Ticket prices are $5 for adults and $4 for children and senior citizens. For more information contact Chris Fry at the Department of Theatre and Dance at 577-1235 or cfry@bucknell.edu.

Duo-Pianists deliver December delight in a performance of popular and difficult pieces

Renowned pianists play complicated duets on two pianos in Weis Center

By ANDREA BEISSER
Staff Writer

The Weis Center hosted two pianists last Friday night who played selections from the musical "Porgy and Bess" and from famous composers, including Rachmaninoff. Dean Kramer and Claire Wachter performed on two pianos for nearly two hours and pleased the audience with twentieth century masterpieces.

Both of the pianists have an impressive musical history. Dean Kramer is an associate professor at the University of Oregon and has traveled throughout the world. He has also performed as a solo pianist with the Pittsburgh, Oregon and Cincinnati symphonies. He studied at the Oberlin Conservatory, the University of Texas in Austin and the Juilliard School of Music in New York.

Claire Wachter is a former student of the University of Texas and the Peabody Conservatory of Music in Maryland. She is currently an associate professor of piano and pedagogy at the University of Oregon. Her credentials include serving as the principal keyboard player with the Oregon Bach Festival Orchestra, Rome Festival Orchestra and Eugene Symphony.

She has also published in The Piano Quarterly and Piano Life Magazines.

The program began with a festive selection from Claude Debussy that highlighted a theme similar to the familiar Christmas song, "I Heard the Bells on Christmas Day." The music reminded the listener of a bell choir with its active dynamics and various scales.

Another highlight of the performance included a selection from the musical, "Porgy and Bess." The familiar themes of the musical jumped out at the audience and allowed the pianists to show off their talent for staying in perfect communication with each other.

The program ended with a selection from Sergei Rachmaninoff that included four movements entitled: Introduction, Waltz, Romance and Tarantella. The pianists used effective dynamics, runs and chords to keep the imagiination of the audience running with the music notes.

The performers effectively communicated with each other using eye contact and body language. There was rarely a moment when one rested and the other played. Often, one player would pick up the melody of the piece while the other echoed the tune or supplemented harmony.

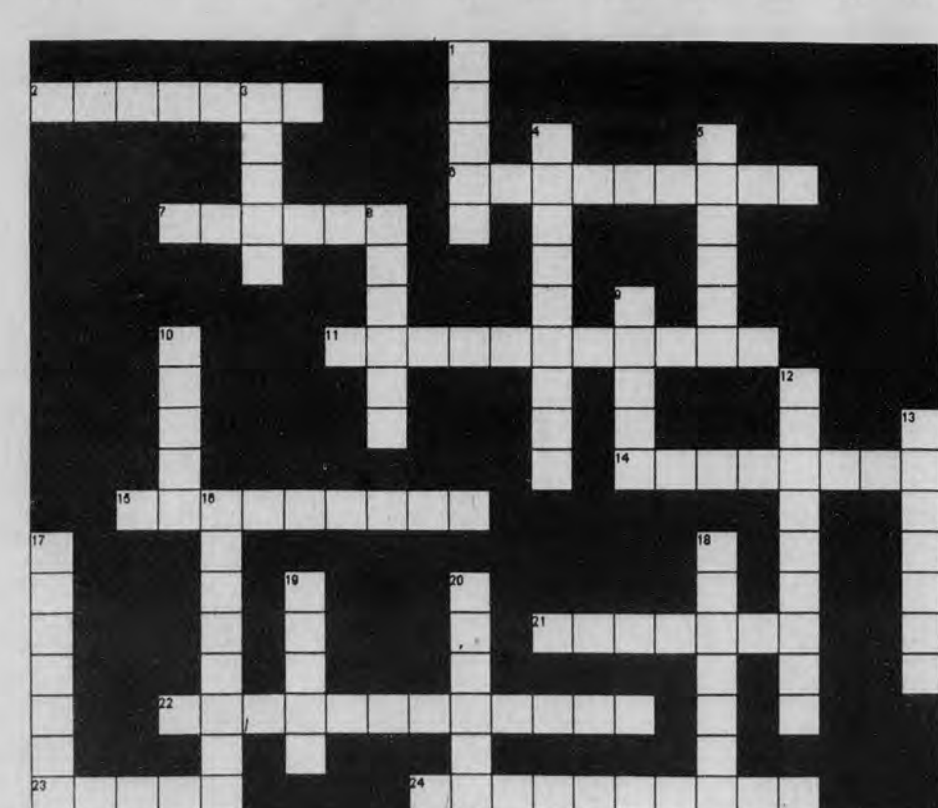

Using two pianos instead of one requires precision and concentration of both the performers and page-turners. When done successfully, the result is amazing and remarkable.

Attending the performance by the duo-pianists was a perfect way to kick off the festive month of December.

Courtesy Public Relations

BUCKPUZZLED?

Courtesy of the Weis Center

Reflecting on the past...

The University's president for the turn of the century, John Howard Harris served as head from 1889-1919.

It will be up to Steffen H. Rogers and his vision to determine what direction the University takes in the first years of the new millennium.

Lasting traditions

A constant in the University's ever-changing landscape, the distinctive Lewisburg lamp posts have welcomed students since 1864.

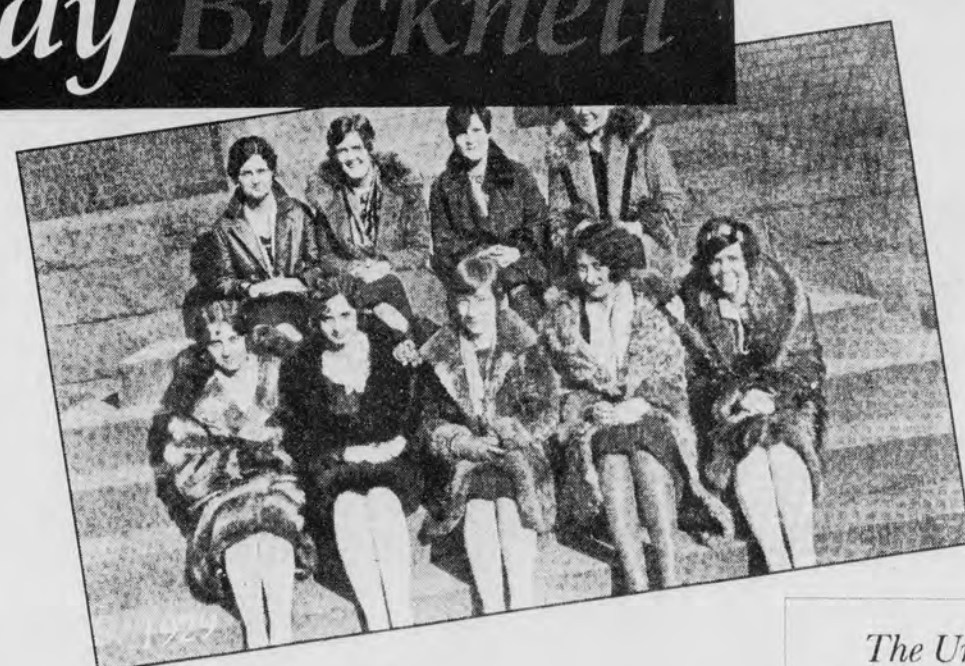

The Rooke Chapel houses new traditions, such as the annual Christy's concert.

All photos courtesy of Bucknell. Note and then Union County PA—a celebration of history. Bucknellian archives

'Ray Bucknell

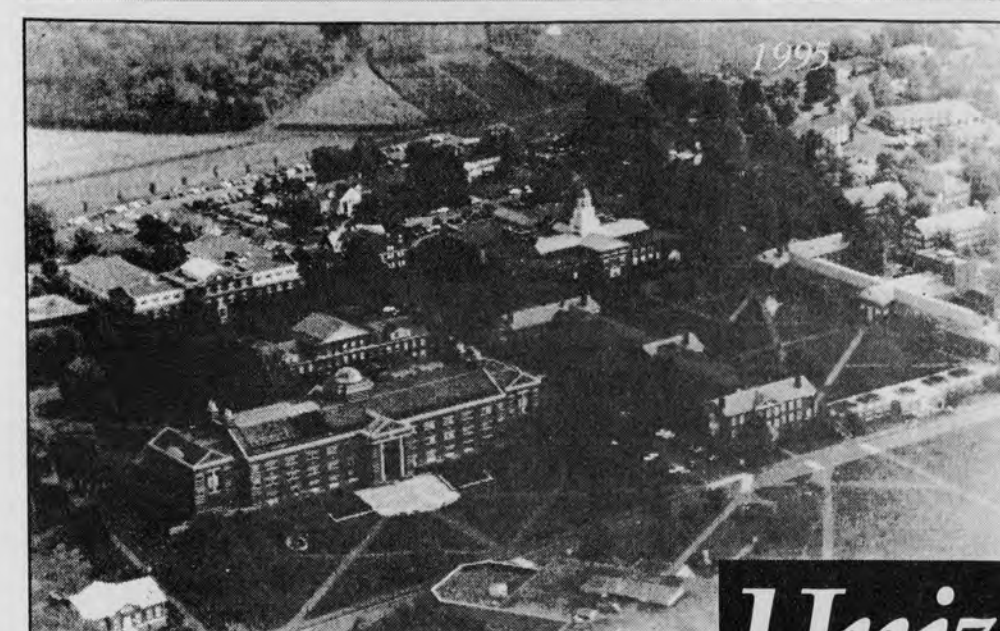

The University has a long and illustrious history when it comes to athletics. Not only are we home to one of the three oldest basketball teams in the country, we also boast more Patriot League President's Cups than any other school.

Christy Matteuson Stadium has undergone some changes over the years as more parking and student seating had to be added. The face of our athletic teams have also changed—women's teams have gained equal standing to men's and all teams have advanced to a higher level of play and league recognition.

Visualizing the present

Before the construction of many new buildings, the campus looked drastically different. The uphill area is missing such current staples as the library, Langone Center and the Academic Quad.

Parking, a current concern has not always been a problem. In the early 20th century far fewer students owned cars. Those who did missed no opportunity to show them off, as these students watching a football game from their cars on the sidelines are.

University Landscapes

Evolution—100 years of change

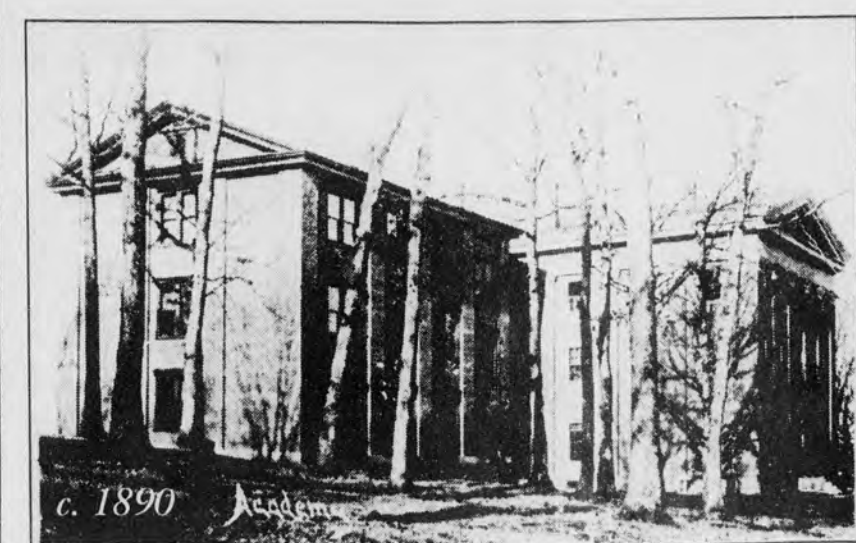

Katherine Larison, the first woman dean at the University, was instrumental in gaining admission for female students and paved the way for other women administrators like Dean of Students Ruth Burnham.

Taylor, the oldest building on campus, now houses the University's widely recognized Management school.

The quality of education has dramatically improved in conjunction with the changing technology.

Higher Learning

Come Party at the:
ARIZONA CAFE
BYOB

Outdoor Patio and Fireside Dining
Quesadillas Chicken Soft Tacos Monster Burritos Enchiladas Seafood Steaks

Most Meals $9 - $13 No Charge Cards (Checks Accepted)
Bring in this Coupon for 1 FREE virgin margarita with each entree purchased.
BYOB

From Bucknell:
Take Market St (Rt 45).
Cross bridge and stay straight until ends.
Turn Right.
Exactly 4.0 mi on Left.

Open Tues-Thurs 11:30-9, Fri & Sat 11:30-10, Sun 11:30-8
Reservations Recommended

Susquehanna Valley Limousine Inc.

With a long tradition of quality service to the Bucknell Community, SVL offers:

Service to and from destination, door to door
Schedule your own shuttles to and from Airports for breaks
Ride sharing network to cut down on costs
Many available vehicles: vans, town car and limousine bus
Service 24 hours a day, 7 days a week

For more information or to make reservations call:

1.800.685.5567

When you can't see eye-to-eye with the IRS get an ear

Fact is, most federal tax returns go through without a hitch. But for tougher problems, you have powerful help.
Now the Taxpayer Advocate Service is here to help taxpayers who can't resolve an ongoing tax issue through the usual IRS channels. Or those who face significant hardship unless relief is granted.
Your personal Taxpayer Advocate can review the situation from a fresh point of view — yours. The same person works with you until the issue is resolved quickly and fairly.
To find out if you qualify for a personal Taxpayer Advocate, phone toll-free 1-877-777-4778.

TAXPAYER ADVOCATE SERVICE
The Internal Revenue Service Working to put service first

NOW OPEN IN LEWISBURG
SHORT STOP
"Touchless" Car Wash
Featuring TURTLEWAX Products

Safe! Gentle! Drive Thru!
Now 2 locations to serve you:

LEWISBURG
240 N. Derr Dr.
MIFFLINBURG
E. Chestnut St.

$2.00 OFF ANY CAR WASH with this coupon. Expires 12/31/00. Coupon not valid with any other offer.

Buffalo Bill's
A GREAT PLACE TO CHILL
WE'RE HIP & WE'RE COOL

GRILLE & SALOON
623-8900
624 Rt 15 Lewisburg

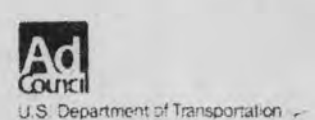

Tuesday is Ladies Night • 6 till Midnight
Pool Tournament Ladies Only

NOT WEARING A SAFETY BELT CAN COST YOU AN ARM & A LEG.

It's against the law. So if you don't want a ticket, buckle up. Or, you could become broke in more ways than one.

YOU COULD LEARN A LOT FROM A DUMMY. BUCKLE YOUR SAFETY BELT.

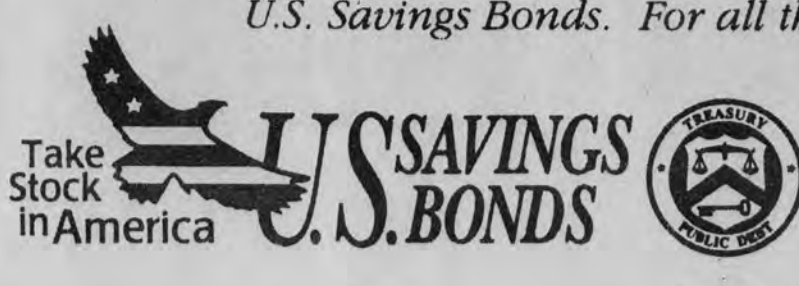

When I hear the music, it reminds me of my grandmother.

I remember the way she'd make me feel secure. I want that same security when I invest my money. That's why I decided on U.S. Savings Bonds. I like knowing things are where I put them, and that they'll stay there. Savings Bonds are backed by the full faith and credit of the United States. And my Payroll Savings Plan lets me save something each payday.

Ask your employer or banker about saving with U.S. Savings Bonds. For all the right reasons.

A public service of this newspaper

SCIENCE & TECHNOLOGY

Greyhound race industry could close before 2001

Animal activists work to end a once popular spectator sport

By KATE NOWAK
Senior Writer

The Animals' Agenda announced this past October that the 75-year old history of greyhound racing in America is about to come to an end. With behind-the-scenes atrocities revealed in the last decade, states including Maine, Virginia, Vermont, Idaho, Washington, Nevada, and North Carolina have banned live dog racing. In 1925, the first commercial greyhound race track opened in St. Petersburg, Florida and 38 greyhound tracks were in operation in seven states by 1960. Race-track numbers doubled to 56 by 1990 and greyhound breeding enterprises reached new heights, with an estimated 450,000 dogs born in the 1980's. Gambling profits were of main interest, and the dogs of the market were a mere commodity.

Courtesy of Greyhound Protection League
The Greyhound Protection League reveals the behind-the-scenes atrocities of greyhound racing. Here, starving greyhounds await euthanasia, no longer deemed able to race.

At six months, puppies entered training where they were taught to pursue a lure around a track. Traditional lures were small, live animals including cats and rabbits, fastened to the lure mechanism. The Humane Society of the United States estimated that this training method was indicative of animal abuse, with more than 100,000 small animals killed every year in greyhound training. At the age of 18 months, dogs typically entered racing, having to qualify in the top four in two schooling races. They then advanced through grades D, C, B, and finally A. After a few months of racing, the dogs later declined through the same grade criteria, in reverse. Once the dog had fallen to grade D, it was labeled "graded-off," often facing euthanasia. The dog's fate, said the Animals' Agenda, largely depended on the dog's ability to generate money.

Courtesy of National Greyhound Association
The National Greyhound Association (NGA) remains an advocate of greyhound racing, advertising greyhound purchase, ownership, and training. The NGA believes that greyhound racing is enjoyed in many other countries, including Great Britain, Ireland and Australia, and contributes over $100 million to state and county governments. The NGA claims to "promote greyhound adoptions and to ensure the welfare of racing greyhounds." However, it has previously been accused of improper management and housing.

Each racetrack contained 15 kennels, with 50-60 dogs in each. Compounds consisted of steel cages or wooden crates, which housed dogs for often longer than 20 hours a day, keeping them muzzled. Disease, tick and flea infestation, and starvation remain common. Many dogs die due to unsafe track or kennel settings, lack of proper veterinary care, neglectful transport or handling, and highly contagious illnesses, including kennel cough and canine streptococcal toxic syndrome.

In 1992, 87 greyhounds, housed in a 50-year-old compound in wooden crates, burned to death in a fire in Massachusetts. 5,000 greyhounds were afflicted with epidemics of kennel cough in 1999, placing every racetrack in the U.S. under quarantine.

Media exposure of such cruelties and carelessness is marked by the 1992 reports by the Bennington Free Press and The Spokesman-Review. It is estimated that 20,000-25,000 greyhounds still perish in the industry per year.

Puppies and dogs that are unwanted or are graded-off are disposed of. "Dogs are disposed of by various means, including euthanasia, gunshot, starvation, bludgeoning, electrocution, and abandonment. They also are sold or donated to medical research laboratories, sold to coyote and rabbit hunters, and amateur racers," reported the Animals' Agenda.

Between 1987 and 1992, more than 1,200 racing greyhounds were put to sleep at a local shelter in Pittsfield, Mass. In 1992, bodies of 143 greyhounds were uncovered in an abandoned orchard in Chandler Heights, Arizona, 30 miles from Phoenix. The dogs had each been shot in the right temple with a .22 caliber pistol.

In 1998, the bodies of 45 greyhounds, including 30 puppies, were discovered at a utility substation in O'Fallon, Missouri, just outside of St. Louis. The dogs were dumped in three areas of the property on three separate occasions, their ears cut off to hide identifying tattoo marks, reported the May 5, 1998 issue of USA Today.

Within the research setting, according to investigators of the Detroit Free Press, 1,086 dogs were used to test pacemakers in the last three years. Most recently, Colorado State University's (CSU) decade-long relationship with the state's greyhound breeders was revealed in the Denver Rocky Mountain News. CSU euthanized 2,652 racing greyhounds between 1995 and 1998 at CSU's School of Veterinary Medicine for anatomy experiments. The school's dean, in defense, told the News that the dogs would have likely died anyway, by less humane methods.

Organizations including the American Greyhound Council and the Greyhound Pets of America have been founded, primarily advocating adoption and discouraging the use of live lures. The movements have reached thousands of animal lovers, turning them into greyhound welfare advocates.

Due to much political action and initiative, the dog racing industry currently holds less than one percent share of the entire $54.3 billion annual U.S. gambling market. However, racing is still legal in 16 states and nationwide support to ban the enterprise is needed to expedite the termination of greyhound mistreatment and slaughter.

Orbison predicts bright future for College of Engineering

By MATT ALBERT
Managing Editor

Dean of Engineering James Orbison shares his vision concerning the future of the University's College of Engineering in an interview conducted by Matt Albert.

MA: Where do you see the engineering program in five years?

DO: The College of Engineering has very good students and highly qualified faculty dedicated to providing outstanding educational opportunities. Enrollments in all five departments are strong, and the percentage of women engineering students continues to be well above the national average. The College has been recognized nationally by U.S. News & World Report, ranked fourth amongst engineering colleges that do not offer Ph.D. degrees. With continued dedication, proper planning, and attention to our developing educational assessment practices, this College should continue to be a strength amongst many (colleges) in this University.

Over the next few years, there is significant potential for developing an undergraduate degree program in biomedical engineering. In addition, we are very fortunate to have recently received a leadership gift from Mr. Lauren Brekiron, University Trustee, to fund critically needed additional space, through new construction, for the College. However, I believe we must emphasize quality rather than quantity in our educational activities. I don't foresee significant enrollment increases in the College over the next several years; rather, the quality of our educational programs and of our graduates should be strengthened by these opportunities.

Photo Courtesy: The Bucknellian
Dean Orbison looks toward promising future of Engineering College.

MA: How do you feel the engineering college will continue to attract young engineers?

DO: In terms of engineering programs, Bucknell is comparable to a relatively small number of institutions that are similar to us. There are of course many engineering programs nationwide, but the majority are at large universities, and most of those have Ph.D. programs with a significant institutional emphasis on research. At Bucknell, we really focus on the undergraduate degree programs and emphasize the quality of those programs. This, and the liberal arts environment of this relatively small residential university, are what set Bucknell's College of Engineering apart from most engineering programs.

MA: Do you see an increase in the numbers of students enrolled in the engineering department?

DO: Our enrollments are constrained by resources, and in particular space lab facilities, and number of faculty. Any increase in enrollment would need to be preceded by significant increases in resources if educational quality is to be protected. Further, enrollment increases in the professional degree programs University-wide could well begin to change the nature of this University, and I'm not at all convinced that would be in the best educational interests of our engineering students.

MA: What do you think the new Collaborative Learning Environment facility, now under construction, will bring to the College of Engineering and who will it benefit?

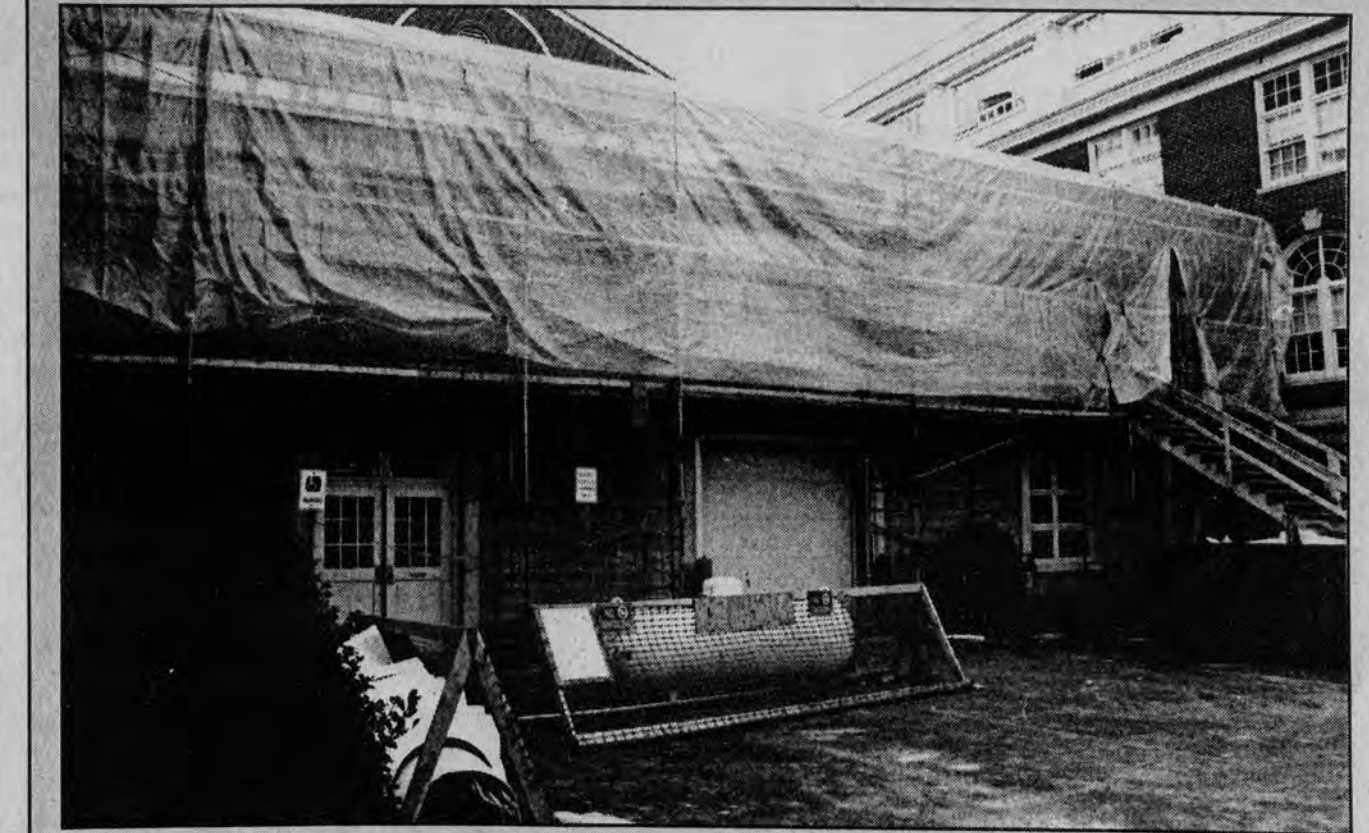

DO: It will bring us some badly needed space. It will give us four good teaching spaces, with two being able to handle upwards of 24 and 36 students. In addition, one of the larger rooms is set up to be a network systems lab and will serve double duty as a regular classroom. The other is set up as a classroom but has been designed to function effectively as a collaborative learning environment where students can work in groups during regularly scheduled class times. We have those new rooms scheduled for the spring semester and we have courses from all five departments scheduled in those classrooms.

MA: Do you see any difficulty in keeping the edge in the technology area when some facilities go out of date every five years?

DO: Yes, but perhaps to a lesser extent than one might think. Computer technology is changing very rapidly, yes, but at the same time, the cost is coming down very quickly. I'll add that the issue of equipment replacement is not simply something the College of Engineering has to worry about; it is something that everybody campus-wide has to worry about. The use of computers now is ubiquitous. Replacement of other equipment, particularly lab equipment, is an area that continues to need careful attention, however.

MA: Do you have any other comments?

DO: This is a very strong engineering college. All five programs in the College are very strong. I think there is an enthusiasm and dedication in the College to continue to strengthen the educational value of the programs, and at the same time to take advantage of opportunities for new directions and new resources whenever they might appear.

Chris Rivera—The Bucknellian
The Collaborative Learning Environment facility currently under construction in Dana Engineering will provide much needed space for classrooms and a network systems computer lab.

WHAT IS THE AIR-SPEED VELOCITY OF A 300-LB. MAN CRUISING AT 30,000 FT. IN A 1,500-LB. SLEIGH LOADED WITH 5 TONS OF TOYS AND POWERED BY 8 TINY REINDEER? HAPPY HOLIDAYS! - S&T EDS.

The Reviews Are In:

Two Thumbs Up for S&T

BUSINESS & POLITICS

Palestinian students react to conflict

Courtesy of Reuters

B'tselem, an Israeli human rights group issued a report criticizing many of the tactics of the Israeli army. Former Sen. George Mitchell's international fact-finding commission will begin its investigation of the situation sometime next week. Here, Palestinian stone-throwers dodge Israeli fire in a Dec. 6 flare-up in the town of Ramallah, Israel.

By TIM SCHEU
Business and Politics Editor

With regard to conflict, there are multiple sides to every story. However, this realization has become increasingly less apparent in American coverage of international affairs. There are those in this country who have significant influence over what is printed or broadcast, and it is our responsibility to recognize this bias. Though many would disagree, I feel strongly that the conflict in the Middle East is an example of this selective journalism. United States foreign policy in the area has dictated that U.S. media should side with the Israeli cause. While there are exceptions, this phenomenon has been all too common. With that in mind, I decided to interview three Palestinian students on campus to get a better understanding of not only the Palestinian side of the conflict, but of the people themselves. The following is a transcript of the interview on the evening of Dec. 4. - TS

Tim Scheu (TS)
Fares Abdullah (FA)
Nora Abdullah (NA)
Rami Zarrouk (RZ)

TS: What sort of response do you get from most Americans when you tell them you are Palestinian?

FA: Pakistan? (laughs)

NA: Yea, I guess one response we get from Americans is, "Pakistan?" I guess some of them can't distinguish between some foreign countries. Sometimes people just say, "oh," and drop the subject. Maybe they already have opinions, or they don't know enough to make a comment or ask questions. Then again, I guess saying "Palestine" to some people may be a political statement in itself.

TS: Where is "home" when you are living abroad? Are all of you living in Palestine?

FA: Yea, pretty much.

TS: Have your parents ever considered moving?

FA: We actually moved to Palestine in 1994. We lived in Jordan for 11 years. We identified with Jordan and considered it home. But a couple of months after we moved from Jordan to Palestine, we completely lost the Jordanian identity. In Jordan, there was always the sense that you were not really from there, even though Palestinians are the majority in Jordan. Actually, they make up about 70 percent of the Jordanian population.

TS: Have you encountered any sort of resistance since you moved to Palestine?

FA: When the Israelis were controlling the residential Palestinian areas you had to have an ID if you were over sixteen - an Israeli ID that they give you with your name and picture that you have to carry with you at all times. You have to show it to them when they ask you. If you are under sixteen, you don't get them. But sometimes, I don't know why, they think you are lying - that you are over sixteen and that you don't have it. My friend was stopped one time before and he did not have it because he was 14. They took him inside and beat him up.

TS: Do Israeli police speak to you in Hebrew?

FA: Broken English.

TS: Do you find there is an attempt on the Israeli part to learn your language?

FA: Soldiers are different than civilians. Soldiers are generally aggressive. We can go into Israel and find people who are compassionate, and people you can talk to.

TS: Is Palestinian identity constructed around the concept of a homeland?

FA: Yes, because Palestinians who were refugees, were not taken in by other countries. They lived in refugee camps. Some of them made it to higher levels of society, but they were never really accepted, and they always felt like foreigners. They always felt like there was this one place where they once were that was home.

TS: So you find that being Palestinian is more of a sense of nationalism than any ethnic difference between other Arab peoples?

FA: It is kind of like that you long to be accepted, long to have a home. NA: The reason we are called Palestinians is based upon the region we come from. It is the conflict that started the nationalism. And ultimately it was the British that drew the boundaries between Jordan and Palestine, so...

RZ: The Zionist movement started around 1900, so at that time they started thinking of a Jewish state. They thought of different places - North Africa was a possible place. But then they went to Palestine because they thought they would have more of chance there with the...

FA: Religious monuments. They thought they could attract more Jews that way.

RZ: And also with the Second World War, they thought people would sympathize with them and give them a state.

TS: Do you find that people are more sympathetic to the Jewish cause because of the Holocaust - that they wouldn't be as likely to see the Palestinian side of the conflict?

FA: Yes, definitely.

TS: How is it that you think Palestinians are represented in the Western media?

RZ: They try to portray Palestinians as if they are at the same level as the Israelis. Israel has support from a large number of countries and is probably one of the strongest nations in the world. Palestine is not a nation. They do not have tanks, they do not have anything. Israel has guns and nuclear weapons. They are the only country in the middle east that has nuclear power. Palestine is portrayed as violent. Palestinians are portrayed as violent people - people who don't want peace. That is not true. Palestinians have always longed for a peaceful solution before conflict.

TS: You had mentioned that there was some resistance in other Arab countries to grant Palestinians citizenship. Why is that?

FA: Nobody wants refugees. They are a burden.

RZ: Palestinians were poor people because they left all that they had in Palestine. They left their homes. They left everything. They had to start from scratch. It is hard for other countries to employ all these people.

TS: Do you have any allegiance to Yasser Arafat? What sort of influence does he have over the Palestinian community?

RZ: He is an important figure. If he dies, then Palestinians will lose control of some of the power that they have now. But, I would not say that he has full control of the Palestinian people.

FA: He is very corrupt and he buys a lot of people.

TS: Why is it that there has not been a successor?

RZ: There is not another figure who has established himself as a leader who can take on the responsibilities that Arafat is taking on now.

NA: There is no formal system of government where leaders are elected.

FA: There would have to be a coup.

TS: In terms of the Jews' experience in World War Two, and being an oppressed minority in other countries, how is their treatment of the Palestinians ironic?

RZ: Palestinians agree that there should be a Jewish state, next to the Palestinian state. So, that in itself is a huge concession from the Palestinian side. That is what Israel wants. So I don't see why Israel should continue with the oppressive behavior towards the Palestinians - a huge irony.

NA: People call this a religious war, but I really don't think it is. Jews have been persecuted many places in the world, and the place where they were most accepted for their religion was the Arab countries, so I don't think that is the problem. It is not true. It is just about wanting to get a state.

TS: Do you ever see the Israeli-Palestinian conflict being resolved? I guess this is the million-dollar question, but what needs to happen?

FA: There has been so much pain and suffering. People who see this happen to their families cannot just forgive and forget. You can't just say, "ok, let's just be friends now." There has to be a younger generation who has not seen all the terrible things.

TS: Other countries have experimented with things like truth commissions. For instance, in South Africa, they came up with a Truth and Reconciliation committee that examined the atrocities that took place during the struggle. And the two groups have come together. Obviously there is still tension, but they have come together to form a new government. Do you think that this could be a solution?

RZ: A unified government is out of the question. They had tried before to have a unified solution about Jerusalem, and that is not going through.

Before 1948, we had a home. Then Zionists came to our home and took over the whole place. They said, "you are not going to live here or you are going to live by our rules." There have been UN resolutions asking Israel to withdraw from the land it occupies because of their oppression of the Palestinians. Israel has to respond to justice, giving people their rights, giving back what they took from them. In order to achieve justice, you at least have to start by apologizing for bad things you have done.

Paige Cull—The Bucknellian

(From left) Nora Abdullah '03, Fares Abdullah '01 and Rami Zarrouk GR share their thoughts.

Israeli human rights group: both sides to blame

By MICHAEL BOLAND
Business and Politics Editor

B'tselem, the Israeli Center for Human Rights in the Occupied Territories, has released a report criticizing both Palestinians and Israelis for contributing to the most recent round of Mideast violence, which has claimed over 300 lives in the past nine weeks.

In a 50-page commentary released Wednesday morning, B'tselem urged immediate policy changes for the Palestinian Authority - the Palestinian political leadership - and the Israeli army. Illustrations of Restraint, obtained through B'tselem's website, faulted Israeli soldiers for firing lethal "rubber" bullets (actually rubber-coated steel) into crowds of unarmed demonstrators. Furthermore, B'tselem claims Israeli-imposed "collective punishment" such as curfews, restricted movement, and closing of airports "makes [Palestinian] life unbearable" without sufficient justification. The report also accused the Israeli Defense Force (IDF) of standing by idly and allowing Israeli settlers in the West Bank to attack civilian Palestinian settlers; as an "occupying force," Israel is "obliged" to provide protection to Palestinians in such situations. Finally, Illustrations of Restraint claims that contrary to IDF accounts, most Palestinians killed in the last nine weeks were actually unarmed.

The report assigned responsibility to Palestinians as well, in particular, Yasser Arafat's Palestinian Authority. B'tselem condemned the

"B'tselem calls for the establishment of an independent international commission of inquiry to investigate human rights violations... (it) must concentrate on investigating the violations and not the political circumstances that led to the recent events."

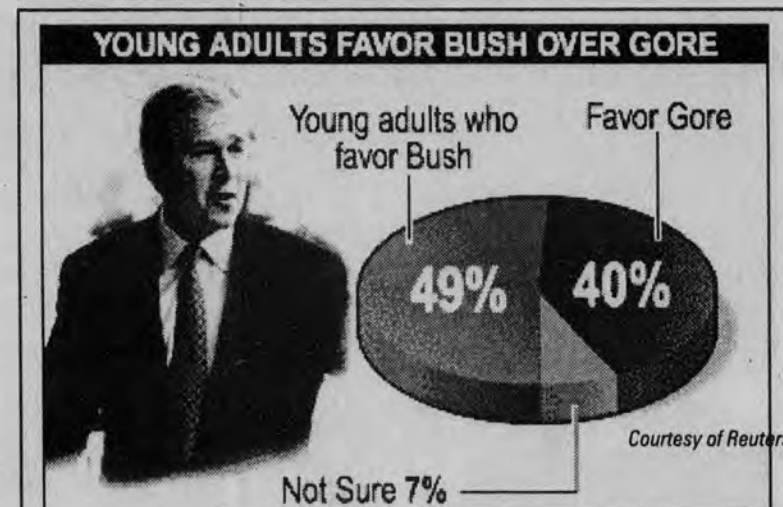

—a statement issued by B'tselem, an Israeli human rights group

Palestinian Authority for doing "almost nothing" to prevent militant Palestinians from attacking Israeli civilians; in addition, it charged the Palestinian Authority with allowing armed Palestinians to shoot at Israelis from within populated centers, thereby encouraging Israeli retaliation on these areas and jeopardizing civilian lives. Finally, B'tselem reports, the Palestinian Authority does nothing to prevent children from participating in potentially violent demonstrations, leaving them directly in the line of fire and subjecting them to "grave danger." To top it all off, the human rights group accused both Israeli and Palestinian authorities of suppressing speech, by restricting freedom of the press.

B'tselem recommended appointing an independent commission to fully investigate the latest rounds of violence. Also, according to the AP, several U.N. member nations will seek to establish (at Palestinians' request) a 2,000-member U.N. police force that would monitor the most volatile areas and separate the most aggressive members of these two bitterly divided groups.

The Israeli military received a copy of the report but did not make any immediate comment. Though B'tselem alleges that Israeli troops frequently engage unarmed Palestinians, Israeli military regulations permit the IDF to fire on armed Palestinians, those wielding firearms, or any Palestinian who creates a situation plausibly considered life-threatening.

Compounding the already-tense situation in Israel, CNN confirmed Wednesday afternoon that Mohammad Deif, responsible for several bus bombings in 1996, had escaped from a Palestinian prison. Deif is leader of the militant Islamic faction Hamas and according to CNN is the "most wanted man in Israel."

Courtesy of Reuters

Quote of the Week

"Of course you don't want to give up: if you don't win, you don't have a job.. Go home, Al. Kiss your wife. (Not like that). Play touch football. Do whatever it is that 52-year-old rich, white men do when they're out of work- learn to paint, trade online, download porn..."

—Washington Post columnist Tony Kornheiser

U.S. GDP growth hits four-year low

By MICHAEL GORMAN
Staff Writer

According to a report released by the Commerce Department on Nov. 29, the U.S. economy grew at its slowest rate since 1996. The revised annualized growth rate for the third quarter was placed at 2.4 percent, down nearly three percentage points from the previous year. The Financial Times and The Wall Street Journal each present reasons for the indicated slowdown in the economy.

According to The Financial Times, the slowdown may be attributed to one of the most meager increases in corporate profits in over a year, as well as a decreased level of business investment. There was also a substantial decrease in both government spending and new housing contracts during the period. The Wall Street Journal suggests similar causes of the decreased growth rate as well as several others. A strong dollar has hurt the exportation of U.S. goods and services. Higher interest rates and bond markets' have made it more expensive for firms to raise money for capital investment. Surging energy prices over the economic horizon.

Nevertheless, The Wall Street Journal reports that analysts are not yet willing to declare the U.S. economic expansion dead. The 2.4 percent growth rate is actually higher than the sub-two percent growth rate many economists had feared. There are also a number of trends that continue to suggest that the economy is still going strong, experiencing a sort of "bump in the road" rather than a serious slowdown. Productivity continues to increase, along with the ability of the government to pay off the federal debt, resulting in lower long-term interest rates. Even as the strength of the dollar hurts U.S. exports, it entices foreign capital into the United States, allowing domestic firms to continue investment to spur future growth.

While the analysts are not ready to declare the current expansion dead, there is a growing air of pessimism in the business sector as downgraded growth forecasts and revenue warnings continue to pour in for the fourth quarter. If such pessimism becomes realized in the coming quarters, Chairman Alan Greenspan and the Federal Reserve may face a daunting task.

While some previously supportive analysts are beginning to question the Fed's rate hikes and its current position on the state of the economy, the Federal Reserve continues to maintain that there is a high threat of inflation due to a tight labor market and increasing energy costs.

This persistent threat of inflation, coupled with the slowdown in economic production, places the Federal Reserve in an extremely precarious position. While the solution to a slowdown in production would normally be a decrease in the interest rate, it is this interest rate that has helped to keep inflation in check during the past several years. A rate decrease now threatens to encourage inflation, and could serve to amplify worsening economic conditions.

According to The Wall Street Journal, economists are now forecasting the unemployment rate to increase to around 4.5 percent from the present rate of 3.9 percent. While such an increase is not catastrophic, it would mean the loss of over 800,000 jobs. If these predictions come true, the Federal Reserve is likely to change its rhetoric, and its focus, from inflation to other economic factors such as employment.

Finally, one of the factors that worry economists and analysts the most is that the United States is in largely "uncharted waters." If the slowdown materializes, it would be the first of the "New Economy," making it difficult to counteract since, as Neil Soss, chief economist for Credit Suisse First Boston points out, "Many of the old rules may not apply."

Courtesy of AP

Neither side claimed a decisive victory in Monday's Court ruling.

By JOSH GUYAN
Senior Writer

It seems that each week the prospects look worse for Al Gore. On Monday, two very important rulings were handed down. The U.S. Supreme Court vacated the Florida Supreme Court ruling which had extended the deadline for vote tally certification, and Circuit Court Judge N. Sanders Sauls denied Gore's request for manual recounts in Miami-Dade and Palm Beach Counties.

The ruling by Judge Sauls was of particular importance because it regards Gore's post certification contest of the election rather than the certification. The court ruled that the Gore legal team did not meet its legal burden, proving that the manual recounts could have altered the outcome of the election.

The ruling was immediately appealed and skipped over the appellate court right to the Florida Supreme Court. Hearings will be held this week. This appears to be the vice president's last hope, because it seems unlikely that the U.S. Supreme Court would overturn a Florida high court ruling against Gore.

While the U.S. Supreme Court ruling today appears to be less significant to the actual outcome of the election since Bush would win regardless of how the election is certified, the ruling involves several interesting issues.

Bush team lawyers have argued that if the

"There is a certain element of irony in the Republican and Democratic arguments," says University Professor of Political Science Michael James, referring to the fact that the Republican argument before the court was for judicial activism and the primacy of federal powers over states' rights, while the Democratic argument before the court was for judicial restraint and states' rights.

Traditionally, conservatives and Republicans believe in states' rights and judicial restraint, and liberals and Democrats believe in federal involvement and judicial activism. In this case, the Republicans wanted the United States Supreme Court to overrule a state Supreme Court. The Democrats wanted the federal judiciary to stay out of state affairs.

The court ruled on Monday morning to vacate the Florida high court opinion (wipe it off the books) and remanded the case back to that court for "further proceedings not inconsistent with this opinion." The court asked for clarification on several issues, primarily whether the Florida Supreme Court based its ruling on the Florida Constitution or state statutes.

In order to validate its opinion, the Florida Supreme Court has to find justification for extending the certification deadline within Florida statutes. At the same time, the Florida high court will have to evaluate those statutes regarding the Gore election contest appeal.

As the nation waits, a recent Washington Post poll shows that 57% of people surveyed believe that Vice President Gore should concede, although a majority of voters also say the ballots ought to be manually recounted. Gore has to walk a thin line between fighting for those manual recounts and casting a shadow on the Democratic Party and himself for future elections.

Courtesy of Reuters

Gore will appeal Judge Sander Sauls' decision not to conduct manual recounts Miami-Dade and Palm Beach counties.

Merry Xmas, happy Hanukkah, happy Kwanzaa, and/or happy Voodoo day. We hope Santa, Hanakkub Harry, Kwanzaa guy, and/or Voodoo man brings you everything your little heart desires. —The B&P staff.

BUSINESS & POLITICS

Courtesy of AP

Justice Minister Benk Korthals observes legislative debate over Holland's new "mercy killing" law, which passed 104-40.

Holland votes to legalize euthanasia

By MICHAEL BOLAND
Business and Politics Editor

On Nov. 28, Holland took the first step towards legalizing euthanasia, commonly known as mercy killing. A bill permitting and regulating euthanasia passed the lower house of Parliament by a vote of 104-40, and now needs only the approval of the Senate to become law. Passage is virtually guaranteed, and the new policy will take effect early next year. The Netherlands will become the only nation in the world to legalize mercy killings.

For several years euthanasia has held quasi-legal status in The Netherlands; technically forbidden, it has been openly practiced according to regulations enacted in 1993. Supporters of this bill, and euthanasia in general, argue that it is the right of every patient to determine when he will end his life, that it is the right of every citizen to "die with dignity," and that to treat otherwise-competent doctors as criminals is bad policy. Opponents argue that euthanasia devalues human life, leads to selective treatment of patients, allows doctors to play God, and violates the Hippocratic Oath, in which doctors swear "never to give a deadly drug to anyone even if asked for it, and to make no suggestion to this effect."

Under the pending law, Dutch doctors who seek to euthanize a patient must follow very detailed procedures, a process designed to prevent doctors from taking lives arbitrarily or maliciously. Each reported case of euthanasia would be subject to review by a panel of physicians. For doctors who follow these guidelines, according to Justice Ministry spokesman Wijnand Stevens, "there won't be traces of criminal charges." According to CNN, doctors involved in suicides must be convinced that the "patient's request [for euthanasia] must be voluntary, well-considered, and lasting; the patient's suffering was unremitting and unbearable; have informed the patient of all other options and viable forms of treatment; and finally, have carried out the procedure in a medically appropriate fashion." One subject not addressed in the recent law is whether or not a healthy person may be euthanized simply because he or she is "tired of life." Pro-euthanasia groups in The Netherlands, who were not able to win such language in the recent law, say they will pursue the issue in the near future.

While the wide margin of passage through Parliament indicates that the Dutch people are largely comfortable with mercy killing, other notable bodies were not as pleased. Rita Marker of the International Anti-Euthanasia Task Force argued, "[legalizing euthanasia] will be like giving a household seal of approval. What is currently a crime will be transformed into a medical treatment." Dr. Michael Wilks of the British Medical Association, told ABC News that the new legislation offered more protection for doctors than relief for suffering patients: "You've created a kind of intentional killing, which is limited of course to the doctor and the patient, but one that seems to be saying 'we will allow you as a profession to escape some of the checks we've had before.'"

U.S. editorial pages have also chimed in; the Indianapolis Star praised the government's honesty and willingness to acknowledge what doctors are really doing in The Netherlands but ultimately concluded, "The catch is that killing with kindness is still killing." The Vatican was particularly critical of the Dutch parliament; Vatican spokesmen called the legislation "absurd" and even "offensive to European civilization." The Catholic Church has long opposed euthanasia, as well as abortion and capital punishment, on the grounds that each is the premature end of an invaluable human life.

Other opponents fear that cold-blooded cost-benefit analyses could eventually creep into sacrosanct life-or-death decisions. In The Globe and Mail, University of Western Ontario law professor Ian Hunter argues, "Over time informed consent [required by the pending law] will yield to the exigencies of health-care financing," noting that the California Nurse's Association has already endorsed physician assisted-suicide on the grounds that "long-term palliative care is simply too costly." Robert Doerflinger, of the U.S. National Council of Bishops, made a related, less delicate observation: "We don't have hospices in stables because we can shoot horses."

Don't be a mean one. Write for B&P! Email Mike, mboland@ It's a wonderfully awful idea.

Courtesy of www.everword.com

Bison Scoreboard

SWIMMING		WOMEN'S BASKETBALL		MEN'S BASKETBALL		Track & Field		WRESTLING
Men		Bucknell 74 Cornell 75		Bucknell 61 Iona 105		Bucknell Invitational		Bucknell 9 Drexel 33
50yd. free		fg ft r p		fg ft r p		Men's Event Winners		Winners
1. Sharpe 21.83		Franks 5-13 4-5 3 16		Santos 1-2 2-2 1 4		35lb. weight		174 Chunko pin
2. Bucknell 21.98		Quimby 5-14 2-3 11 12		Werner 2-8 1-2 7 5		Stairs 57'10"		Bucknell 17
200yd breaststroke		May 0-1 2-2 0 2		Lalugba 1-7 7-8 3 9		Mile 4:18.81		Duke 23
3. Saffos 2:14.19		Creamer 8-19 5-8 3 25		Bailey 5-10 1-2 2 12		Triple Jump 47'9"		Winners
200yd back		LeBlanc 0-0 0-0 9 0		Ramage 2-8 0-0 0 5		DMR 10:37.91		165 Fasnacht 4-0
2. Finthel 2:00.04		Helsing 1-1 0-0 0 3		Blankenship 3-4 3-6 3 9		Furstenberg 8:12.54		197 Falciglia 10-1
3. Sheehan 2:00.30		Almind 4-12 4-4 2 12		Namou 8-17 4-7 1 14		Strong Prochilo		125 Perrin 4-0
Women		Rounly 1-4 2-2 9 14		Bennett 0-2 2-2 2 4		Costello		141 Green 8-5
1. Penn 790		Koch 1-1 1-1 0 3		Nyambi 1-3 0-0 0 2		Women's Event Winners
2. Bucknell 380		Ossai 0-0 1-2 0 1		3pt. Bailey 1-2		Pole Vault 11'10"		1 2 3
3. Binghamton 168		3pt. Creamer 4-8		Franks 2-7		800M 2:16.96		Wisconsin 15 15 15
200yd. fly		Helsing 1-1		Ramage 1-5		DMR 12:48.35		Bucknell 1 0 3
3. Lowe 2:14.34		SEASON STATS		Namov 1-1		SEASON STATS
3. Lowe 4:46.01		5-1 (0-0)		fg pct 3-pt. a r ppg		fg pct 3-pt. a r ppg
100yd. Fly		1. Golinio 2:11.57		Franks 14-43 326 5-16 11 17 41		Bailey 31-65 477 9-17 17 13 18.2
200yd. back		1. Golinio 1:01.13		Quimby 32-63 508 0-0 16 54 15.5		Lalugba 26-63 413 22-33 8 41 7.4
1. Weaver 1:58.12		200yd. free		May 2-7 286 1-3 10 3 1.2		Ramage 25-60 333 0-0 4 10 10.8
2. Weaver 24.87		1. Weaver 54.03		Creamer 40-84 476 13-31 23 19.7		Blankenship 14-24 583 3-7 5 12 6.5
3. Freese 25.43		200IM		Helsing 8-18 444 5-11 13 6 4.3		Werner 11-37 297 1-2 5 25 5
1. Weaver 2:11.43		1. Weaver 2:11.43		Almind 49-103 476 1-5 11 35 20		Santos 4-17 235 0-0 9 18 3.8
				Rounly 5-20 250 0-1 1 16 4.3		Bennet 6-13 462 0-0 2 35 3.5
				LeBlanc 12-27 444 0-0 11 35 6		Namou 8-17 471 1-4 1 14 5
				Valdner 3-5 600 0-0 0 6 2.3		Webber 0-2 000 0-1 0 1 2.0
				Fleming 1-4 250 0-0 0 7 8		Rodgers 2-2 100 1-1 0 1 1.7
				Forence 0-0 000 0-0 0 2 5		Hardenberg 7-2 286 1-4 2 9 1.4
				Castillo 0-1 000 0-0 0 0 0		Nyambi 1-6 167 0-2 0 1 5
						Skornik 1-5 200 0-0 0 13 3
						Slaters 0-3 000 0-0 0 1 0
						White 0-0 000 0-0 0 1 0

STATISTICS
COMPILED BY
MATTHEW
HERBERT '02
COURTESY OF
ATHLETICS
COMMUNICATION

Looking for outgoing people.

$10
per hour min.

Photography at social events.
No experience necessary.

Email
steve@visual-technology.com

YOUR COMPLETE PROFESSIONAL CLEANERS

Steininger's
LAUNDRY & DRY CLEANING

Selinsgrove-Hummels Wharf-Lewisburg-Danville

230 N. 7th St. Lewisburg

- Wash and Fold
- Drive-Up Window

Tuesday is Bucknell Night at Imperial Lanes

9:30 pm - Midnight

Tuesday Nights
Bowl 2 games get 1 Free
With this Coupon

$8.00 per person with a minimum 4 persons per lane

Call 742-9211 to Schedule

Private Parties
Sorority/Fraternity/Dance Parties

Enjoy Rock-n-Bowl with Lane Quake Sound!

Leagues and Open Bowling Available

Vennari's Pizza
524-0444 610 Market St.
Free Delivery Anytime
Dine In - Carry Out

CALL NOW Available for 2001/2002

Apartments and houses for rent

Close to Campus

Heat, washer/dryer, dishwasher included in some

Parking provided

1-6 bedroom units available

Professional 24-hour maintenance

Excellent services

Price range $275.00 - $1,200.00

Call:
570/524-2121 x 2

BRYNWOOD
Rentals

First Impressions Salon
Tanning
Enjoy our weekly and monthly specials!
Hair & Nail Service Eyebrow waxing Piercing

716 West Market Street, Lewisburg, PA 17837
Phone: 522-9636
Call Today for Your Appointment. Cash and Checks only.

U-SAVE
AUTO
RENTAL
Low, Low Rates!
*We bill insurance companies direct.

*Major credit cards accepted.
*Must be 21 or older.
*Earning the right
to serve you each and every time."

524-0000
Rt. 15 & Nth 7th St.
Lewisburg, Pa. 17837
Mon-Fri 8:00-5:00
Sat. 8:00-12:00

Contact us for your off-campus housing needs.

Next Week:

In the words of the Aristotelian thinker Tim Shoe, "If you want a next week, come in and do it yourself."

THE BUCKNELLIAN Sports

Team of the Week:
The volleyball team who, despite losing 3-0 to no. 1 seed Wisconsin in the NCAA tournament, completed an incredible turnaround season with its second trip to the NAAs in three years.

Bison suffer first loss to Niagara

Team falls in championship game of Cornell Classic but rebounds vs. St. Francis

Courtesy of Athletic Communications

Molly Creamer '03 scored a career-high 28 points against St. Francis.

By CORY NADLER
Staff Writer

The women's basketball team can play better than they did last Saturday night in the championship game of the Cornell Classic against the host team. After coming off a 75-52 win over Niagara University in the first game of the tournament last Friday to improve their record to 5-0, the Bison fell to Cornell by a score of 75-74.

"Friday we came out and played very well. Saturday was disappointing," head coach Kathy Fedorjaka said.

But, the team rode the shoulders of Molly Creamer '02 back to the winning side of the ledger last night with an 81-73 win over visiting St. Francis.

The spectators in Ithaca, NY may have felt that they were in for a contest after the Bison trailed Niagara by three points, 9-6, five minutes into the opening game of the tournament, but the opposite was true. By the time the first half came to a close, the Bison had already jumped out to a 39-22 lead and did not look back.

The Bucknell women finished off Niagara in impressive fashion, winning by a 25-point margin, 75-52.

Freshman Desire Almind led all scorers in the game, finishing with 19 points on the night. Creamer finished with 16 points to go along with six assists. The Bison had two more players in double digits against Niagara, with forward Vicki Quimby '02 scoring 14 points and captain Monique LeBlanc '02 adding 11.

Saturday night against Cornell would be a different story. "We didn't play our game. We beat ourselves," Quimby said.

Fedorjaka said, "We didn't execute, we weren't crisp and sharp."

The Bison came out flat, committing 15 turnovers in the first half alone.

We didn't play as well as we had, but you can't take credit away from Cornell," Creamer said.

The Bison were actually relieved going into half time down only two points, 30-28, as they only shot 34 percent from the field in the first half.

"We didn't have the fire emotionally; there was no bounce in our step," Quimby said.

The Bison tied the game at 35 early in the second half but would be down for the remainder of the game.

With the Cornell lead at seven, 42-35, with 22 seconds remaining in the game, the Bison scored nine points on three jumpers from beyond the arc. Creamer knocked down a three, followed by one from Heidi Helsing '04 with 12 seconds remaining to slice the deficit to two.

But Cornell came through under pressure, knocking down two free throws to stretch their lead to four and seal the victory. Creamer did all she could, drilling another three-pointer with one second remaining on the clock, but the Bison still fell short, 75-74.

Creamer finished with 25 points on the night, and Kate Franks '03 put in 16 points of her own. Almind and Quimby each added 12 points.

The solid play of Creamer and Almind earned them both a spot on the all tournament team. This is the second year in a row Creamer has gained this honor.

Almind's play throughout the week earned her the Patriot League's Rookie of the Week award for the third straight week.

"We made a good comeback at the end. We didn't quit, but this game was quite a buzz saw."

Coach Fedorjaka echoed her star's words: "Most definitely, we threw out that game early. We didn't capitalize. One positive thing is that we can only lose by one when we weren't playing well."

Quimby said, "All of our mistakes are correctable," Quimby said. The Bison certainly corrected their mistakes against St. Francis. Bucknell was able to take advantage of great play by Creamer, who tallied a career-high 28 points, to gain the victory.

The Bison took a seven-point lead into half time, at 42-35. But, the Red Flash proved to be a tough opponent, chopping the Bison lead to one point, at 40-39, with just under three minutes remaining in the game. The Bison would not let this one slip away though.

See WOMEN, page 18

Volleyball falls at NAAs

Loss fails to overshadow team's remarkable turnaround year

By PAT EVANS
Staff Writer

You could have made some serious money if you were able to predict the unexpected finish of the Bucknell women's volleyball team at the beginning of this season. Starting with a record of 2-10, the team finished by dominating the Patriot League and earning an invitation to the NCAA tournament.

The Bison traveled to Madison, Wis. for the NCAA tournament last Friday, where they were swept by Wisconsin—the third-ranked team in the nation—1-15, 0-15, 3-15. The Badgers simply had more depth, strength and talent than the Bison.

It was not that Bucknell simply lost in the tournament, they were beaten by a team that has a great shot at winning it all. Prior to the season, the team's top priority was to qualify for the NCAA tournament. "It was a great way to end it," said Nicole LaMothe '01, who had gone to the tournament in 1998. "How many people can say that they made it to the tournament two times in four years?"

Over 4,000 people were on hand for the match. "It was the loudest gym, and the biggest crowd that I've ever played in front of," LaMothe continued.

The Bison did not go into the match expecting to lose, and put forth a valiant effort against the formidable opposition.

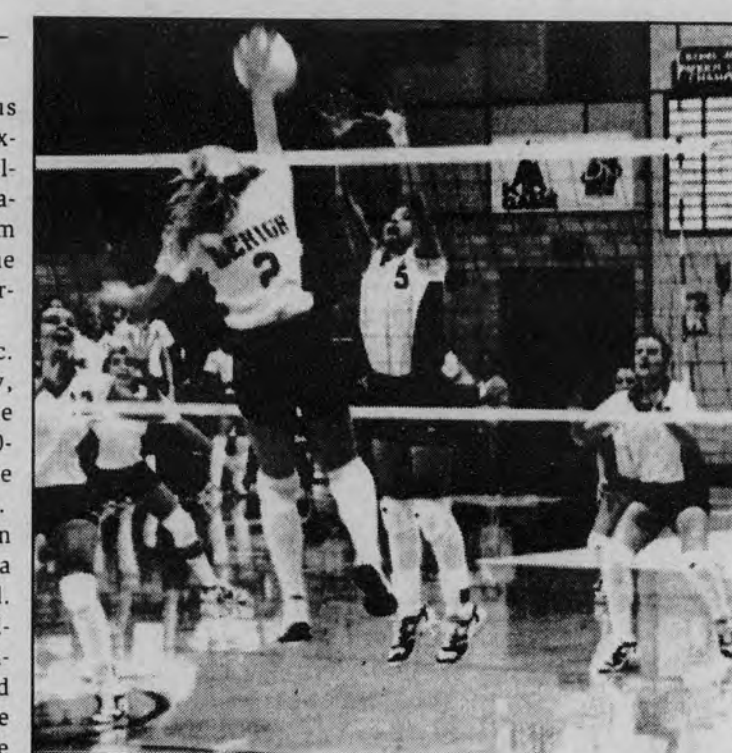

"It was definitely disappointing to lose the match," Shannon Walker '02 said. "But we have to realize that they were an incredible team and that we did the best we could."

This season marks the biggest turnaround in Bison volleyball history. The team opened with a very challenging schedule, which led to a 2-10 start but helped them with later league matches.

"It's always been my philosophy to go out and play some tougher teams," Opalski said. "It was a test of character for our team and a lot of kids stepped up."

"We were focused, hard working, and we knew the team concept. That's why we were able to find the means to be successful."

Opalski also felt senior leadership enabled the Bison to achieve so much after starting out so poorly. Co-captains Brooke Bader and LaMothe were both very consistent, which trickled down to the underclassmen. According to Opalski, their leadership will be difficult to replace.

Chris Rivera—The Bucknellian

Freshman Brandi Trapasso (#5) blocks a Lehigh opponent.

The NAAs were certainly a very positive finish to an excellent season for the Bison. Bucknell only lost two games in the Patriot League the entire season, and clearly had the best players as they swept all major awards in the Patriot League.

Walker was named the Offensive Player of the Year, and freshman Brandi Trapasso received the Defensive Player of the Year along with Rookie of the Year honors. Bader was also honored as the Patriot League Tournament MVP.

Opalski won the Patriot League Coach of the Year after helping her team get through the difficult beginning.

The Bison finished with a 17-15 record overall, winning 15 out of their last 20 competitions. The team believes that they can do the same thing next season if they put forth the same effort.

"Right now we're enjoying the fruits of our labor," Opalski said. "I think you have to take time to enjoy it in any competitive situation like the one we were in this season."

Alum named Rutgers coach

By ROB SCHMICKER
Staff Writer

With the resignation of head football coach Terry Shea, Rutgers University was faced with the arduous task of finding a new coach. They looked no farther than their Big East rival Miami in naming their former defensive coordinator Greg Schiano '88 as their new coach Friday.

While Schiano is only 34 years old, he brings optimism, enthusiasm, experience, and even a Bucknell degree to a team that has not gone to a bowl game since 1978.

While at Bucknell, Schiano was a three-time letter winner on the Bison football team. As a junior, Schiano led the Bison with 114 tackles and was named to The Sporting News Pre-Season All-American Team the following year.

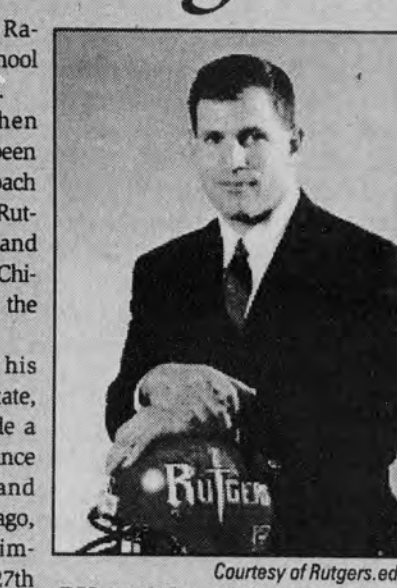

In his senior year, he served as team captain and was an All-Colonial League selection at linebacker. He graduated in 1988 with a BS degree in Business Administration and quickly landed a job as assistant coach for his alma mater, Ramapo High School in New Jersey.

Since then Schiano has been an assistant coach at Penn State, Rutgers, Miami and even with the Chicago Bears of the NFL.

During his stay at Penn State, the team made a bowl appearance every year and while in Chicago, the Bears improved from 27th to 11th in the league in passing defense.

But Schiano's highest accomplishment has been transforming Miami's defense into one of the nation's best. This year, the 'Canes are ranked sixth in the nation in scoring defense and have won nine straight games, including a three-point victory over Florida State. Although Heisman candidate to fulfill his dream of being a head coach when the Rutgers job opened up. The selling point for him was the Scarlet Knights' potential to improve.

Courtesy of Rutgers.edu

BU grad Greg Schiano '88.

"I wasn't going to entertain taking this job unless I believed we could win ... I see it with these guys," Schiano enough to get a win."

Sports

Ramage returns with high goals

By BRIAN KLOTZ
Staff Writer

"You don't really appreciate something until you don't have it anymore," said Jake Ramage '01, men's basketball co-captain, of his devastating injury last season. Ramage recalls very clearly the day it happened.

"It happened in the first two minutes of an exhibition game versus Drexel last year," he said. "I was dribbling towards the group, and as I was twisting my body to pass, when my knee gave out on me. It was a freak thing."

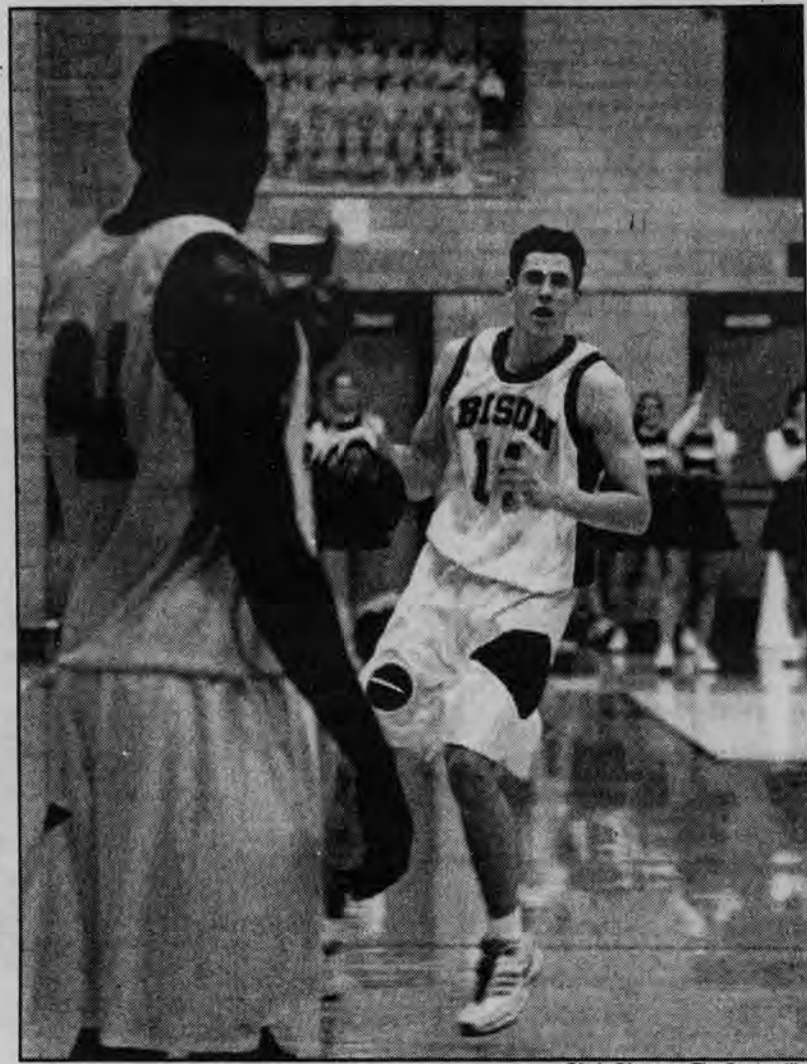

Ramage tore his ACL in that game, wrecking his high aspirations for the season. "It was my junior season, coming off loss to Lafayette in the Patriot League championship game the season before," Ramage said. "We had a team of mostly seniors, and that was the season we were going to go to the NCAA tournament. It hurt inside not to be a part of the team and contribute."

Looking back, Ramage has lived and breathed basketball since third grade. He grew up in Moorestown, N.J., a suburban town outside of Philadelphia, where his father coached him in his younger years. In high school, Ramage became a McDonald's All-American nominee, received honorable mention for all-state player and was named all-south New Jersey player.

When it was college decision time, Ramage decided on Bucknell for a number of reasons.

"I wanted a good combination of athletics and academics," he said. "I used my basketball to get into a better school than I would have been able to get into without it. Bucknell was a good school for basketball, in a good conference, and had that college campus feel."

In his freshman year, Ramage played a couple of games and was sidelined by a stress fracture for six weeks. He finished his freshman season with an average of ten points per game, and the memory of hitting two three pointers in the last 20 seconds against Holy Cross to win the game.

Chris Rivera—The Bucknellian

Jake Ramage '01 has shown great perseverance in rebounding from a serious knee injury to lead the Bison as a co-captain this season.

Ramage's sophomore season showed some signs of improvement with an average of 13 points per game. "I started in half of the games, getting more playing time, and I felt more in sync with the season," he said.

After the injury at the beginning of his junior year, Ramage was devastated, but had help to get through it. "I had a lot of help from my coaches, parents, physical therapist and surgeon," said Ramage. "I had to work extremely hard to get back to walking, much less get back to this season and play."

Coach Pat Flannery remembers the team missed without Ramage. "Two things were missing going into the season," he said. "First, Jake is one of the best shooters in the league and demanded a respect on the floor. Aside from his scoring ability, we really missed his spirit. He brings a lot of enthusiasm."

Ramage finally stepped onto the floor again this past September to play in his senior season, but he had to make several adjustments. "I had to work on my timing, plays, working with teammates and coaches, and basic skills of the game," he said. "It's taken a lot of patience."

Being injured gave Ramage some extra time to focus on his academics. "I did better last year academically because I had a lot more time off," he said. Ramage is an Economics major with a GPA of approximately 2.8.

This year, Ramage leads the team as a co-captain. "I'm really honored that I am a captain after coming off an injury last year," he said. "We have such a young team this year, I hope my experience and leadership will help the team."

Teammate Boakai Lalugba '03 believes in Ramage's leadership ability.

"He's one of the few guys on the team that have been through the system already and I look toward him and Bryan Bailey for support whenever my game is not going the way I want," Lalugba said.

Ramage has some hefty goals for the team this season. "I want us to win 20 games, win the Patriot League season and tournament and go on to the NCAA tournament," he said. "By doing the best I can do, I hope to help the team do the best that it can do."

Motivation for this season has had a long time to build in Ramage before the start of this season. "The last game I played before I got hurt was the Lafayette championship game, where we lost by six points and didn't advance to the NCAA tournament," he said. "That game has been in the back of my mind for a year and a half."

This past Tuesday, Ramage registered double digits with 14 points and coach Flannery believes that he will only get better. "He's back to about 75 or 80 percent of where he will go," Flannery said. "But even with him not being 100 percent, he still has a game you have to respect."

Ramage finally stepped onto the floor again this past September to

Chris Neary '02: 50-yard freestyle master

By CAITY SELLECK
Staff Writer

Chris Neary, a junior from Central High School in Philadelphia, has been a major force on the men's swim team this year. Excellent performances in the 50-yard freestyle, have earned Neary first place first in all of Bucknell's meets so far this year.

With the team's current 4-2 record, Neary has been a consistent performer in both the 50 freestyle and the 100 butterfly. In the tri-meet against Rider and Rutgers on Nov. 17, the Bison fell to Rutgers by a few points and beat Rider.

Neary performed well in the contest, going 00:21.56 in the 50 free and 00:52.19 in the 100 butterfly and two first place finishes.

In the Bucknell Invitational this past weekend, Neary was part of the 200 freestyle relay team that took a new pool record with a time of 1:25.58. Neary, who has not gone above 22 seconds flat in the 50 free, is looking forward to a successful season with the Bison. He hopes to be in the running for a personal Patriot League Championship, as he took the championship in the 50 free last year with his personal best of 20.7.

Neary's best time of 21.5 currently tops the Patriot League, and he only hopes to continue to improve throughout the season.

"His best asset is the race day," he said. "He comes into the pool ready to perform, and he does."

Neary continues to improve, and will be a guiding force for the Bison this season. While taking a break for finals, Neary and the rest of the team will head to Florida for a training trip in early January.

Courtesy of Athletic Communications
Junior swimmer Chris Neary.

CHUNKO GETS THIRD

WRESTLING From page 17

One more push for BU came when sophomore Brandon Green ended the match with an 8-5 decision at 141 pounds. It wasn't enough, however, as the match fell 23-17 in Duke's favor.

"For both Duke and Drexel, their line-ups just matched very well against ours," Chunko said. "They had their toughest guys up against our toughest guys, and they just came out a little bit stronger."

Fasnacht agreed that it wasn't any particular weakness on the part of the Bison that caused them to fall. "It was only our second meet of the season," he said. "Either the guys weren't used to it or something, but you always go in thinking that your hard work will pay off and you will come away with at least one win."

The next day the wrestlers were up and at it again, competing in the high-level Penn State Open. "The Penn State Tournament is a highly competitive tournament with a lot of nationally-ranked wrestlers, and a lot of very strong teams," Junior Brian Neuman said. "Plus, for us it was a very long day."

In this tournament, individuals placed rather than entire teams, and Bucknell's only placing wrestler was Chunko, who earned third.

"The highlight of the weekend for Bucknell was definitely Ben wrestling so well," Neuman said. "But it was also really good for the team, because they got used to this kind of tough competition which will be seeing more of later in the season."

Chunko opened the day with a major decision over his opponent from Wagner, and went on to win three son.

Working as a lifeguard at a California beach over the summer, Neary came back to Bucknell in good shape to start pre-season in September and has been working hard ever since. Head Coach Jerry Foley credits a good deal of Neary's success to his tough competitive spirit.

"Chris is a prime-time performer," Foley said. "His best asset is the race day. He comes into the pool ready to perform, and he does."

Neary continues to improve, and will be a guiding force for the Bison this season. While taking a break for finals, Neary and the rest of the team will head to Florida for a training trip in early January.

Neary performed well in the contest, going 00:21.56 in the 50 free and 00:52.19 in the 100 butterfly and two first place finishes.

In the Bucknell Invitational this past weekend, Neary was part of the 200 freestyle relay team that took a new pool record with a time of 1:25.58. Neary, who has not gone above 22 seconds flat in the 50 free, is looking forward to a successful season with the Bison. He hopes to be in the running for a personal Patriot League Championship, as he took the championship in the 50 free last year with his personal best of 20.7.

Neary's best time of 21.5 currently tops the Patriot League, and he only hopes to continue to improve throughout the season.

"His best asset is the race day," he said. "He comes into the pool ready to perform, and he does."

Neary continues to improve, and will be a guiding force for the Bison this season. While taking a break for finals, Neary and the rest of the team will head to Florida for a training trip in early January.

And the Bucknell survey says ...

By SCOTT KLOSS
Staff Writer

It's postseason time once again for college football. The matchups have been selected and have provided us, the fans, with much to talk about. The main event will between No. 1 Oklahoma and No. 2 Florida State in the FedEx Orange Bowl on Jan. 3.

Ninety percent of our respondents said that the current system of determined bowl pairings is flawed, so let's take a look at what decides whom each team is playing? Well, the Bowl Championship Series is the answer. The BCS rankings are not a poll or one person's view on the matter. They are an intricate combination of two polls, eight computer ratings, schedule strength and number of games lost.

Although there are four components to this formula, each criteria doesn't necessarily generate 25 percent of the equation. Some parts are more important than others. Let's take a closer look how the BCS decides who plays one another.

First, there is the poll component that is calculated based on the average of the ranking of each team in the Associated Press media poll and the USA Today/ESPN coaches poll. The rankings of each team are added and divided by two. For example, a team ranked number two in one poll and number three in the other poll would receive 2.5 points in this component (2 + 3 = 5 / 2 = 2.5).

The second component consists of eight computer rankings. The computer component is determined by averaging the season win/loss record. Each loss during the season will represent one point in this component. All four components are added together to form a final, total rating.

The team with the lowest point total ranks first in the BCS standings.

Now that we know how the BCS is calculated, doesn't it seem a little complicated? Wouldn't it be great if we could have the preseason top 25 just play one another to decide a NFL type playoff? But the factor of the matter remains geographical considerations take place and teams need to play within their respective conferences.

With the continual loss of football players earlier and earlier each year due to early entry to the NFL or CFL, it is hard to build dynasties and keep them, so you can't build an all-star schedule a year in advance since one team might not be able to play at the level it did the preceding year. And the fact that Miami is no. 3 when it beat No. 2 ranked Florida State earlier in the season and both have the same record leaves me personally baffled.

No one will ever be satisfied with worth a total of $875,000 to try to turn things around.

Not only does he think he can get the job done, but so does Rutgers Athletic Director, Mulcahy. "[Schiavo's] vision, his attention to detail and his passion were evident in the interview," Mulcahy said. "I believed that I had a winner."

And it is this passion and attention to detail that he hopes will put them in position to win games. "We're going to be mentally tougher than every team we play ... This program will be built on a rock foundation," he said.

Scarlet Knights will have a more veteran lineup next year as eight of the top ten tacklers return. But they will sorely miss Wesley Robertson and Shaub White, who led the team in sacks and interceptions respectively.

On the other side of the ball, Rutgers ranked 82nd in total offense this year and lose their second ranked all-time passer, Mike McMahon.

Fortunately for Rutgers, things can't get much worse. Terry Shea took over a spiraling program in 1995, and amidst tons of hope, wasn't able to get the job done.

Schiavo is hoping to avoid Shea's route and has luck on his side, as there is no place to go but up. He was given a five-year deal

NFL boasts few viable elite

By Aaron DeRosa
Staff Writer

With predictions flying through the air like tossed AA's at John Rocker, how is one supposed to listen to when it comes to Super Bowl XXXV contenders? Look at things logically—there are six playoff seeds to be filled in each conference and there aren't a lot of options out there.

The AFC has Miami, Oakland, Tennessee and Baltimore all within a victory from clinching their spots in the postseason, followed closely by the Jets and the Broncos who rely on their wins as well as losses by the Steelers and Bills respectively. At least for now, things seem pretty calm on that side of the field.

In the NFC, things are much more up in the air. Only Minnesota has clinched a playoff spot and it will remain so for at least another week. Four teams—Detroit, Tampa Bay, New Orleans, and St. Louis—are tied with an 8-5 record and both the Giants and Eagles have nine wins. New York can clinch it if they win and either New Orleans or St. Louis loses.

But enough of the grab-bag statistics and wildcard berths. Why not just go with gut instinct? Well, quite frankly, gut instinct was thrown out the window when the Eagles and Saints became contenders, the Rams lost Warner, Minnesota didn't bomb, Jacksonville and Washington did... and who was predicting the Patriots going all the way? (Crickets) Not surprising that very few hands were raised.

However, muddling through the muck and mire of team winning percentages is tedious and one might prefer running their fingernails along a chalkboard while driving a rusted nail through their foot and having orthodontic surgery administered as you chew on tin foil. But fret not because I'll make it simple. Here's what the Super Bowl will look like and how it will happen:

In the AFC, Denver will meet the Jets and a grueling ground game of Mike Anderson versus Curtis Martin, which will prove to be their downfall, and the Titans will romp onward as the Birds pack up and head home.

Meanwhile, the Jets will get trounced by Oakland who will beat them on all sides of the ball because the Jets lack strong role players like Keyshawn and the Vinny of old. That puts the Raiders against the Titans in the AFC Conference game, which will be a tight game ultimately won by an Oakland offense that wants it more.

In the NFC, Minnesota will win. That is all.

What? You want me to explain? Well, quite frankly, all the other teams will ultimately end in mule-high mishaps, giving the Jets the ability to come back in the fourth at a Testaverde. Continuing this trend, Miami's offense will crumble in the high pressure of Baltimore's dominating defense—Tuna Fish sandwiches.

But when the Ravens move on and challenge the Titans, their inexperience the conference are disappointing. The Giants are not prepared to go anywhere, and the Eagles are still young and lack a running game, seeing as how their greatest rusher is their quarterback. McNabb represents a new trend of quarterbacks and face a St. Louis squad that is determined to prove itself as a repeat champion. But last year's playoffs speak for themselves, and Tampa Bay has a finger on the pulse of the Rams offense. When they finally apply pressure, Warner will be useless.

New Orleans, well they're still young. Getting rid of Mike Ditka was probably the greatest decision they've made yet. And they will get better. Look for them to place a bid on Trent Green in the free agency market this off-season and watch them dominate next year.

That leaves Minnesota and Oakland bowing before the Grail of Lombardi. As much as Oakland wants and as much as determination beats in their piratical hearts, they will inevitably succumb to the might of Culpepper, Smith, Moss and Carter. Speaking of which, does anyone know who plays running back for the Raiders? Or receiver? In fact, name one person—other than Rich Gannon since he made it into Sports Illustrated a few weeks ago—that plays for the Raiders. Sometimes I wonder if they actually have names or whether they're like computer simulated players who are labeled as "Receiver No. 2" or something along those lines.

But what Oakland has that seems to be missing in nearly all other teams is team chemistry. Yes, some offenses gel like in St. Louis, and some defenses gel like in Baltimore. But both of those squads have an outstanding plethora of talent.

Oakland, on the other hand, has gotten where it is on the wings of leadership, veterans working with rookies and good old fashioned male locker-room bonding. That in and of itself is a testament to the diversity and possibilities which this game presents. And I think that it is a well-deserved smack to people like Deion Sanders, who was questioned earlier this year about talent versus chemistry, responding with a list of Pro Bowlers now populating the Washington Redskins and told fans to watch and learn.

Yeah Deion, we watched... we learned... job well done. You must feel proud about being edged out of the playoffs by the Eagles, Giants, Saints and Vikings—four teams predicted to be in the top five. Now how about you take a seat, or better yet, go play baseball like you said you would last year. I hear the Atlanta Braves are looking for a loud mouthed, obnoxious, cancerous growth in their lineup... how about you call up Scott Boras and see what he can arrange in the baseball world while you sit and watch the Super Bowl on your couch. The only coverage you'll be giving in January is with some cheddar on a Wheat Thin. Enjoy.

But that's just my opinion... I've been wrong before.

the system since it too complicated for its own good. Enough math, just let the football players decide who's no. 1.

Quotes:

"I hate the current way that 'national champions' are decided. It seems that year after year, we have the same debate over and over again because many realize that our current method is truly lacking. The time has come to implement a system similar to the NCAA college basketball tournament, but with less pair-ups, of course." —Eric Kroul '03

I think Miami deserves to be in the championship against Oklahoma, and I don't like the BCS at all. I think if it was a playoff system, then the tie-breaker would be in Miami's favor since they beat Florida State. The NFL's playoff system works, why not have one for college? —Viet Le '04

Go to a power points system where you get more points for beating schools with better records and tougher schedules. —Adam DeKeyser '04

I think there should be a playoff system like the one Division I-AA uses to determine the top champion. —Matthew Arroyo '02 worth a total of $875,000 to try to turn things around.

Not only does he think he can get the job done, but so does Rutgers Athletic Director, Mulcahy. "[Schiavo's] vision, his attention to detail and his passion were evident in the interview," Mulcahy said. "I believed that I had a winner."

And it is this passion and attention to detail that he hopes will put them in position to win games. "We're going to be mentally tougher than every team we play ... This program will be built on a rock foundation," he said.

Scarlet Knights will have a more veteran lineup next year as eight of the top ten tacklers return. But they will sorely miss Wesley Robertson and Shaub White, who led the team in sacks and interceptions respectively.

On the other side of the ball, Rutgers ranked 82nd in total offense this year and lose their second ranked all-time passer, Mike McMahon.

Fortunately for Rutgers, things can't get much worse. Terry Shea took over a spiraling program in 1995, and amidst tons of hope, wasn't able to get the job done.

Schiavo is hoping to avoid Shea's route and has luck on his side, as there is no place to go but up. He was given a five-year deal worth a total of $875,000 to try to turn things around.

Not only does he think he can get the job done, but so does Rutgers Athletic Director, Mulcahy. "[Schiavo's] vision, his attention to detail and his passion were evident in the interview," Mulcahy said. "I believed that I had a winner."

And it is this passion and attention to detail that he hopes will put them in position to win games. "We're going to be mentally tougher than every team we play ... This program will be built on a rock foundation," he said.

Scarlet Knights will have a more veteran lineup next year as eight of the top ten tacklers return. But they will sorely miss Wesley Robertson and Shaub White, who led the team in sacks and interceptions respectively.

On the other side of the ball, Rutgers ranked 82nd in total offense this year and lose their second ranked all-time passer, Mike McMahon.

Fortunately for Rutgers, things can't get much worse. Terry Shea took over a spiraling program in 1995, and amidst tons of hope, wasn't able to get the job done.

Schiavo is hoping to avoid Shea's route and has luck on his side, as there is no place to go but up. He was given a five-year deal

NFL experts' picks

By JUSTIN MCCARTHY AND ALI AHMED
Staff Writers

Tampa Bay (8-5) at Miami (10-3)

This is a matchup of two of the best defenses in the NFL. Miami will need to attack the Bucs' running game and force them to pass—something they have done sparingly the past three games (throwing a total of only 52 passes). With Alstott injured, Dunn has been putting up career numbers. The Bucs will need to attack Fiedler and force him into making the mistakes he should be making as a first-year starter, but that he has not been; if the Bucs' defense is able to dominate the line of scrimmage consistently, Miami's offense may struggle. The defenses will decide this game with turnovers and sacks at key moments.

Justin's pick: Miami 24-10

The Bucs have less than 200 yards in the air the last three games and don't expect that to rise against the Dolphins this week. Each member of the Dolphins' starting secondary has over five picks and the front four are great at rushing the passer. The Bucs will probably need to help out their tackles, who will be hard pressed against the Phins' defensive ends. With Alstott out, Dunn will once again have to carry the load—though the Bucs will be at least attempt to throw the ball to have some chance of scoring. Keyshawn against Sam Madison will be an awesome matchup. The Phins' offense, on the other hand, has benefited greatly from their disrupting defense and their system has allowed players like Lamar King and Fiedler to flourish. This game seems like it would come down to a special teams play.

Ali's pick: Bucs 9-6

Pittsburgh (7-6) at NY Giants (9-4)

This will be a strong defensive battle that will be decided by whose defense is able to shut down the opposition more thoroughly. The Steelers' resurgent offense is cruising. Stewart has accounted for ten touchdowns in the past three games and Bettis is on pace to surpass 1,400 yards. Bettis will need to be bruising against the top run defense in the NFC in order for Pittsburgh to keep a balanced attack. The Giants possess a very balanced attack with an effective passer in Collins and the thunder and lightning duo of RB Dayne and Barber. Look for Collins to challenge the Steelers' corners early and try to establish a passing attack that would open up the field for Dayne and Barber.

Justin's pick: Giants 27-17

The Giants are at a roll and credit must be given to both the coach for challenging the team to play better and the players for responding so far. The Giants have finally beaten on Martin to continue at his current dominant pace (he needs 61 yards to break 1,500 yards for the season) and to take pressure off of Testaverde and the passing game. The Rams' attack was on par until Warner and Faulk went down with injuries but now they have stumbled—eaten by their return—losing their past three games and not scoring a TD last week for the first time in over two years. However, this game may spark their offensive comeback considering Minnesota's defense is one of the worst in the league. In fact, both teams struggle on defense and rely heavily on their offense to outscore opponents.

Ali's pick: Rams 27-12

Minnesota (11-2) at St. Louis (8-5)

The Vikings are looking to avenge a playoff loss last year and, with Culpepper and O. J. Simpson, they will. The Vikings' offense is all but unstoppable with a 1,000 yard-rusher in Smith and then the passing of Culpepper to either of his all-star receivers, Moss or Carter. The Rams' attack was on par until Warner and Faulk went down with injuries but now they have stumbled—eaten by their return—losing their past three games and not scoring a TD last week for the first time in over two years. However, this game may spark their offensive comeback considering Minnesota's defense is one of the worst in the league. In fact, both teams struggle on defense and rely heavily on their offense to outscore opponents.

Justin's pick: Minnesota 34-27

Minnesota is looking to gain home field advantage throughout the playoffs while St. Louis needs to get back on track. The Vikings' Robert Smith should be salivating at the prospect of running against the sad Rams' run defense. The only chance the Rams have is to outscore the Vikings, which is a real possibility since the Vikings don't exactly have a stellar defense either. The Rams really have fallen apart recently, but their coaching staff insists that the problems are easily fixable. There is no reason to think that the Rams cannot return to their earlier form when they dominated teams offensively. Isaac Bruce needs to step up and show some leadership—especially if he wants to prove that he deserves the respect and money as one of the most talented wide receivers in the game today.

Ali's pick: Vikings 36-30

NY Jets (9-4) at Oakland (10-3)

The Raiders' offense, ranked second in the AFC in points per game, is facing a Jets' defense that has allowed only three TDs in the past 14 quarters of play. The Jets will rely on Martin to continue at his current dominant pace (he needs 61 yards to break 1,500 yards for the season) and to take pressure off of Testaverde and the passing game. The Raiders have the third-rated rushing attack in the AFC, and look for them to establish it early. This game may be determined by whose offensive line is able to better protect its QB and open up holes for its RBs. If either team is able to penetrate the other's offensive line and stop the run, it will be victorious. However, if Janikowski continues to miss field goals, look for a Raiders loss—since this one will be close.

Justin's pick: Jets 24-23

After watching the Raiders play last week, I was assured that they are not for real and that they won't make any progress in the postseason. Despite the yardage they run for, Tyrone Wheatley is not going to scare anyone. Gannon also had all day to make plays last week but failed to produce. But to be fair, the Raiders do have one of the best records in the league. Also, they will be fired up for this game, as they can't afford to allow the Broncos to catch up with them. The Jets have a really hard remaining schedule and have to take each game as a must-win. They match up pretty well with the Raiders and can ride a high-flying Curtis Martin. Testaverde just needs to be consistent and complete short passes when required. The Jets' defense must first stop the run and put all pressure on Gannon to produce against a strong Jets' secondary.

Ali's pick: Raiders 16-13

Buffalo (7-6) at Indianapolis (7-6)

This matchup of divisional rivals is a must-win for both; the loser will virtually be eliminated from the playoff race. Buffalo's defense is depleted by injuries, so look for Indy to run Edgerrin James early and often—especially if Buffalo shows that its unable to stop the run like last week against Miami. The Bills are playing a weak defense though, so look for Johnson to try to spread the field. However, the Bills rushing game has been nonexistent this season, so look for the Colts to blitz Johnson often (the Bills have allowed an astounding 46 sacks this season). The Colts have lost four of their last five games by a combined total of 18 points, while the Bills have lost their past two by a total of 41 points.

Justin's pick: Colts 31-17

Having lost so many players to free agency is finally having its effect on the Bills. They have a one-receiver offense without any semblance of a running game. Even at quarterback, where they have quality depth, a controversy is a source of concern for them. Defensively, where they have always been good, lack of quality players is starting to be exposed. This game is crucial for both teams who are on the edge of being eliminated from the postseason race. Despite how good James is, the Bills' defense makes it hard for opposing team to run the ball. Thus, Manning will have to throw the ball. The Bills should be able to score points and bunches. Despite the great year that Manning is having, unless other players step up, he is going to see defenses concentrate more on him. It's very likely that the outcome of this match will decide who goes to playoffs.

Ali's pick: Colts 33-17

Swimming starts a new tradition</

Sports

Don't listen to the Heup-el

Journalists have begun incorporating college football's Heisman Trophy race with the presidential election, hyping it as possessing similar controversy because three quarterbacks posted superb seasons and have legitimate claims for the honor: Purdue's Drew Brees, Oklahoma's Josh Heupel and Florida State's Chris Weinke.

I'll have to admit that it's ironic that one of the leading candidates, Weinke, is from a Florida school; but, by analyzing the three quarterback candidates from the voters' perspective, I hope to prove that one is the clear frontrunner.

The biggest problem with the Heisman balloting is that there's no universal standard for what general characteristics should define the winner—i.e. on-field leadership or superior statistics—so voters tend to come up with their own standards. As you would assume, there is often much discrepancy in these standards from voter to voter.

But there have to be some common threads in the voter's standards, because they're judging the same thing. Based upon what I've learned from past Heisman races, I've determined that there are three qualities that most voters are looking for in a Heisman winner: career success, ability to win and superior statistics.

Since the Heisman is designed to be awarded to the outstanding college football player in a given year, the performance of an athlete in his prior college career should not come into play; but because voters are not unbiased judges, it does.

An ability to lead your team to success—especially in big games—is an important quality for a Heisman winner, as seen in the winner almost always coming from one of the nation's elite teams. An athlete's statistics obviously have a major impact on Heisman voting because they allow for comparison of the athlete against other players at the same position, and against existing NCAA and conference records.

The career performance variable benefits Brees, who will be getting a lot of votes because of his accomplishments in his four-year career at Purdue—in which he became the Big Ten's all-time passing leader with 11,517 yards. He finished fourth in the voting last year and came into the year as one of the Heisman favorites along with befallen Michael Vick.

In addition, Brees posted excellent statistics in 2000, as he threw for 3,393 yards and 24 touchdowns, led the nation in total offense with a 358.1 yards per game average and led Purdue to its first Rose Bowl berth since 1966.

Although he's put up great numbers, Brees has faltered in several key games for the 8-3 Boilermakers. Brees had three interceptions in a 30-10 loss to Michigan State and was picked off in the final minute in a 23-21 loss to Notre Dame. His inability to lead Purdue into the nation's upper echelon will keep Brees from striking the Heisman pose on Saturday.

The next candidate, Heupel, is a Cinderella story; he entered the season with little national recognition on preseason no. 20 Oklahoma and led the Sooners to a 12-0 record and a berth in the national championship game, while distinguishing himself as a Heisman finalist. While Heupel has passed for an impressive 3,172 yards and 18 touchdowns, his numbers fall well short of Weinke and he has been lackluster down the stretch, tossing nine interceptions to just five touchdowns in the team's last four games.

But what he has been able to do is win; Heupel has pulled out big plays in close games, including a 17-yard game-winning touchdown pass late in last Saturday's Big 12 Championship game that sent OU into the national championship game. This quality may prove valuable in Heupel's Heisman candidacy, as voters have traditionally favored a candidate who is a leader on one of the nation's top teams.

But while Heupel's late-game heroics and knack for winning deserve recognition, his overall numbers aren't flashy enough to distinguish him as the nation's "outstanding college football player." And he falls short of the previous career successes of his two rivals.

Weinke will also benefit from being a member of one of nation's elite teams and the national exposure that brings, as he has led Florida State to six straight wins after losing a heartbreaker to Miami on Oct. 7 and to a berth in the national championship game.

Weinke's 2000 numbers blow away the other two quarterback candidates, as he led the nation in passing yards with 4,167 and tossed 33 touchdowns.

He also shares in Brees' advantage of having an outstanding career, as he has posted a 32-2 mark as a starter at Florida State and holds Atlantic Coast Conference career records for passing yardage at 9,789 and touchdown passes with 79.

So as far as I see it, what at first looks to be a muddled Heisman race is in fact fairly clear when you analyze it from the voters' point-of-view. A national championship game berth for his team plus superior 2000 statistics plus career excellence equals the 2000 Heisman award for Weinke.

So as long as Weinke's supporters don't leave any pregnant chads on their ballots (sorry, I had to), the Heisman winner should be by far the most legitimate candidate we've elected this fall.

Sports Trivia

By Justin McCarthy

1) Before this past Sunday (12/3/00) when was the last time the St. Louis Rams were held without a touchdown?

2) Name one of only two teams to have three different players rush for 1,000 yards in three consecutive seasons?

3) Which college QB holds the NCAA record for completion percentage in a single season?

Bison ends skid against Rider

After two road defeats, Bison register 64-50 victory over Rider to improve to 4-3

By Andrew Burr

Sports Editor

Bucknell rebounded from two tough road losses to defeat Rider University last night, 64-50.

The Bison (4-3) won for only the second time in their last five contests, but head into next Saturday's game at Cornell with a winning record. The victory dropped visiting Rider to 3-3.

"I am certainly very pleased with the performance of our whole ball club," head coach Pat Flannery said following the game. "Our concentration was probably the best it's been all year."

The Bison needed a convincing win after a disconcerting two-point loss against American University last Wednesday and an embarrassing defeat against Iona last Saturday.

Points were hard to come by for both teams in the first half, as the score was tied 24-24 at the intermission. Bucknell shot only 31 percent from the floor in the half, and Rider was even less accurate, shooting at just 27 percent.

After the half though, the Bison dominated Rider, exploding for 40 points and shooting a very respectable 57 percent.

"The team seemed to gain confidence as we went along," Flannery said. "This was a different group after halftime."

In the first seven minutes after the half, the Bison went on a 15-4 run to extend their lead to 11. Rider would pull to within eight points with just under 11 minutes to play, but the Bison put down the late threat, extending their lead to 15 points in the final five minutes of the game.

Sophomore forward Boakai La-lugba led the Bison in scoring on the night with fifteen points and nine boards. Co-captains Bryan Bailey '02 and Jake Ramage '01 also hit double digits, with 12 and 14 points, respectively. Additionally, Ramage was almost perfect from three-point range, hitting four of five on the night.

"We just came out and wanted to show to everyone the team that

Brian Werner '03 looks for a shot over a Rider opponent.

Said Rider coach Don Harnum about his team's performance, "Any time you take the court, you don't want to look like that. They [Bucknell] picked us apart and moved the ball a lot sharper than we did. There didn't seem to be a whole lot of pride out there tonight."

The win against Rider comes on the heels of a tremendous 105-61 road loss against Iona earlier this week.

In that contest, four Iona players scored in double digits to avenge a 73-67 loss to the Bison last season. Shooting only 31 percent from the field, Bucknell was nearly doubled up by Iona in that department, as the Gaels hit an astounding 60 percent of their shots.

Iona jumped on top of the Bison 19-6 early and the half, they led 52-30.

Bailey led Bison scorers with 12 points and La-lugba and Dan Blankenship '02 added nine points each.

The Bison travel to Ithaca, NY Saturday to face Cornell.

Indoor track & field season kicks off

By Rose Sedo

Senior Writer

Last weekend was an impressive step in the right direction for the Bucknell men's and women's track & field teams. The Bison began their 2000-01 season last Saturday by hosting the 17th Annual Bucknell Invitational in the Gerhard Fieldhouse.

Although the event was not team scored, the Bison turned in several outstanding performances. The Orange and Blue captured eight individual events and had 12 times/marks that placed on the school's all-time top-10 performers chart.

Leading the way for the women was junior Andrea Nyce who won the pole vault, setting a new school record with a height of 11'10". Classmate Stephanie Bango captured the 800-meter run with a time of 2:16.96, and teamed with Laura Ryan '01, LaTonya McSwain '02 and Kristen Ferrell '02 to win the distance medley relay in a time of 12:48.35.

On the men's side, Ryan Stairs '01 captured the 35-pound weight class with a toss of 57'10" and moved into second on Bucknell's all-time top-10 performers list. James Hollins '01 won the triple jump with a leap of 47'9" and moved to fourth on the all-time performers chart, while senior Matt Davis '01 placed first in the mile with a time of 4:18.81.

The distance medley relay team of Davis, Artie Gulden '03, Eric Furst '03 and graduate student Chris Nowakowski captured gold in a time of 10:37.91. Finally, the 4x800 relay team of Andy Hunsberger '01, Cotie Strong '02, Tom Prochilo '04 and Greg Costello '03 placed first with a time of 8:12.54.

These are undoubtedly impressive results for the first meet of the season but, according to Assistant Coach Joseph Klin, the results were not surprising.

"There were a lot of personal records, which is always a plus coming into the first meet of the season," Klin said. "Collectively we performed exceptionally well, and this next weekend we are favored to win, which we should do."

In fact, before their winter season had even started, the Bucknell women's team had already received 10 first-place votes and a total of 70 points to finish at the top of the Patriot League's preseason track & field poll. The Bison outdistanced runner-up Navy by eight points in the pre-season poll, and were tabbed to win their third consecutive league title in the vote taken by the league's head coaches and sports information directors.

The women's lineup looks promising, returning with eight All-Patriot League performers. One relay team to watch is the winning 4x800-meter relay of Meg Ghiggeri '01, Kelly McConnell '02, McSwain and Bango.

Bango is the returning Patriot League champion in the 800-meter run and was part of the winning distance medley relay squad. Junior Christie Wolfgang, and Ryan also return on the 4x400 relay team, while juniors Kristin Kyzmir and Becki Marshall return to the distance medley relay foursome.

The Bucknell men received two first-place and finished in second-place overall behind pre-season favorite Army (70 points) with 58 points.

The men's team will be paced by Hollins, who captured both the long and triple jump titles during the outdoor season, and also 12 athletes that are already among Bucknell's all-time top-10 lists in selective events.

The men's and women's track & field teams will be in action again on Saturday, Dec. 9, when they host the Opening Day Invitational.

Courtesy of Athletic Communications

J.C. Whittaker '02 attempts a vault. Whittaker and the Bison opened their indoor track and field season last Saturday by hosting the 17th annual Bucknell Invitational.

Ice hockey suffers disappointing weekend

By Kevin Logan

Senior Writer

An undefeated Bucknell Bison hockey club team drove out to Pittsburgh this past Friday to play in the first of their three-game weekend series against Washington & Jefferson, Pittsburgh and the Pittsburgh Junior Tigers.

Going into the weekend, the Bison were 6-0-0, all six games having been played against teams in their own Delaware Valley Collegiate Hockey Conference. But by the end of the weekend, due in part to a host of absent players, the Bison found themselves bearing the burden of a disappointing 6-3-0 record.

The troubles all started before they even got off the bus. It was already gametime when the team arrived at the rink for their opener against Washington & Jefferson, sending the Bison to the faceoff circle with barely any time to warm up. As a result, Bucknell got off to a slow start, falling behind 2-0 after two periods despite the solid play of goaltender Paul Van Dillen '01.

In the third, the Bison stepped up their play, and with seven minutes remaining in the quarter, Ben Cohen '04 instilled some life back into his teammates by knocking in a rebound off fellow freshman Scott Whitefield's shot.

It brought them back to within one, but the Bison were then whistled for a penalty, which W&J capitalized on through a screen to seal the 3-1 victory, dealing Bucknell its first loss of the season.

Coming off the defeat, the Bison knew they weren't about to have it easy in their next game either, as they faced off against Pitt, the 10th-ranked team in the region. They needed a win to restore confidence, but a lack of players would make it difficult.

Missing from the lineup was their entire first line of Nathan Ledyard '02, Chris Newhouse '02 and Eric Silvestri '03. To boot, the Bison lost two more players to injuries and had another ejected for unsportsmanlike conduct. "Being short so many guys put a toll on us," said Alternate Captain Bryan Hnetinka '01.

This absence of players, combined with exhaustion from the rushed game the night before, proved too much to overcome. Pitt both outshot (15-8) and outscored

(1-0) Bucknell in the first period.

The Bison seemed had trouble in the second period as well, as Pitt jumped out to a 3-0 lead with two goals in the first five minutes, both with a man advantage. Bucknell would strike back with goals from co-captain Mike Bronowicz '02, Hnetinka and Dave Gerlach '04.

After Bronowicz put one home off a rebound, Hnetinka weaved his way coast to coast to narrow the lead to one. Then Gerlach netted a beautiful goal, shelving one upstairs past the Pitt goalie to knot the score at three.

With about 13 minutes remaining in the final period, Bucknell was called for a penalty, and shortly after put another man in the box, creating a dangerous five-on-three situation for Pitt. Pitt responded ed quickly, putting one by goalie Tim Sather '02 just 48 seconds into the two-man advantage. But the Bi-

See HOCKEY, page 18

Bison Calendar

WRESTLING

Sat., Dec. 9 FRANKLIN AND MARSHALL 7:00 p.m.

MEN'S BASKETBALL

Sat., Dec. 9 at Cornell 7:30 p.m.

WOMEN'S BASKETBALL

Sat., Dec. 9 HARVARD 1:00 p.m.

INDOOR TRACK & FIELD

Sat., Dec. 9 OPENING DAY INVITATIONAL

THE Bucknellian

The weekly campus newspaper of Bucknell University

January 26, 2001

<http://www.orgs.bucknell.edu/bucknellian>

inside

Sports

Vicki Quimby scores her thousandth point. See page 8A.

Volume 127, Number 1

Part 2

Music building dedicated. See page 1B.

Scholarship vote postponed

By BRIAN WATSON
Senior Editor

A technicality in the Patriot League's by-laws forced a postponement of the Dec. 12 vote to decide the future of the conference's merit-based aid policies. A conference call between league presidents has been rescheduled for Valentine's Day, Feb. 14.

Originally, the Council of Presidents, the Patriot League's governing body, was to vote on two motions: first, whether or not to extend the permissive aid policy, and, if approved, how far to extend the policy.

According to University President Steffen Rogers and Interim Vice President for Student Affairs Charles Pollock '70, the delay has not changed their original expectations for the vote. They expect Lafayette, which only offers limited academic aid, and Colgate, which has never offered any form of permissive aid, to join the University in voting against any policy change.

Holy Cross and Lehigh, which already offer forms of permissive aid to student-athletes, will align with Army and Navy in supporting the extension.

"It's seeming more and more likely that there will only be one proposal, which would allow aid in any sport, except football," Pollock said.

The Patriot League's founding principles prohibited the offering of athletic scholarships. Rogers and Pollock believe that the first vote will definitely pass, dramatically altering the league's policy.

This change, according to Pollock, has already begun to take place.

"The theory is that with the series of decisions the Council (of Presidents) has made in recent years to permit merit aid in basketball and in sports the conference doesn't sponsor, and to allow American to continue offering scholarships, the de facto league policy has already changed," he continued.

The delay has also allowed league presidents to think further about proposals, which may offer new forms of merit aid. In what he calls "institutional self-determination," Pollock believes that each institution will approach the extension in its own way.

The University's position is unclear and will certainly require extensive discussion across several constituencies. Pollock said the Com-

See VOTE, page 2A

Administrators promoted—elsewhere

By REBECCA ROWLAND
Editor-in-Chief

Vice President of Finance and Administration Margaret Plympton announced earlier this month that she would be leaving her post here at the University in order to accept a job at Lehigh University, her alma mater.

Plympton will once again be holding the position of vice president of finance and administration. Although many of Plympton's duties—design and implementation of a strategic plan, fundraising campaigns and working with the surrounding communities—will remain the same, due to Lehigh's size difference, the dynamics of her role will be somewhat different.

"Lehigh is an institution that is roughly twice the size of Bucknell, so that will increase the complexity and variety, which I find a very exciting prospect," Plympton said. "[It will also be] in keeping with a lot of the work that I was doing at Yale, before I came to Bucknell."

Courtesy Public Relations

Vice President Peggy Plympton.

During her time at the University, Plympton has been the point-person on such visible issues as the building of the new residence hall

See PLYMPTON, page 3A

Chris Rivera—The Bucknellian

General Counsel Richard Zansitis

By NATALIE CASP
News Editor

During the winter holiday, the general counsel of the University announced that he will be leaving in February to take the position of general counsel at Rice University.

After being the University's chief legal resource for three years, Richard Zansitis accepted the position in Houston in order to continue progressing in his legal career.

"Rice is one of the leading universities in the country. It is a type of job that anyone who aspires to be a general counsel would want to have," Zansitis said.

Zansitis' decision came after the search committee for general counsel at Rice University contacted him.

"Rice actually called me because their general counsel retired and someone nominated me for the job," Zansitis said.

For any institute of higher education, the general counsel handles all pressing legal issues, as well as ongoing and routine legal procedure such as drafting contracts, giving tax advice, handling the legalities of large donations and overseeing and selecting outside counsel for the

See ZANSITIS, page 3A

The First Night of a new tradition

(Above) First-year students sang at Rooke Chapel; (Right) The class of 2004 serenades President and Mrs. Rogers.

Photos by Chris Rivera.

Eight RAs resign after incident

Chris Rivera—The Bucknellian

Following an alcohol-related incident, eight RTK RAs resigned.

By LAURA DAY
News Editor

The Office of Housing and Residential Life (OHRL) lost over 10 percent of their staff on Friday, Dec. 22. Eight resident assistants from a staff of 13 in the Roberts, Trax and Kress dormitories did not return to their positions second semester due to an incident in which they violated University alcohol policy.

OHRL was contacted but refused to comment about the incident.

On the last evening of first semester, all RAs were on duty and asked to be in their rooms by 11 p.m., according to students who wished to remain unidentified. Around 10 p.m., before they were required to be in their rooms, eight RTK RAs gathered in a dorm room to socialize.

Around 2 a.m., the RAs were found together in one room rather than returning to their individual rooms. According to one student involved, "alcohol was consumed by all eight of the RAs, though none of them drank heavily or became intoxicated." Four of the eight RAs were underage.

After discussion with OHRL the following morning, the eight RAs resigned.

"We made a simple mistake and we gave no choice to our superiors. While OHRL stated that we were some of the best RAs on campus, they preached consistency throughout the semester and they had to follow what they taught us. There was a minimal amount of alcohol, but nevertheless the rules were broken," another RA involved said.

Although many of the students involved do not blame the Office and are grateful that their relationship with OHRL has remained strong, many of the involved RAs have expressed concern about the severity of the punishment.

One student added, "I hope OHRL is not ignorant of the fact that this behavior is prevalent among most staffs."

One of the former RAs who commented added, "although we were RAs, we were still human and fallible, just like any other student."

OHRL has filled the vacancies left by the resignation of the eight RAs.

"Every RA involved feels remorse and would never make the same mistake again. We found comfort in going through the ordeal together and still remain good friends," said one RA.

The class of 2004 united Tuesday night to celebrate their new status as alumni, as well as implement a new University tradition, writes Senior Editor Heather Napolitano

Tuesday night marked a milestone in University tradition as approximately 750 first-year students gathered together for First Night, an event that the University plans to make an annual tradition.

Designed to unite the class of 2004, First Night officially celebrated the students' completion of their first semester at the University and welcomed them as future Bucknell alumni.

"We hoped that this would provide an occasion where the members [of the class of 2004] could celebrate the fact that they are Bucknellians and allow school spirit to shine," said Victor Arcelus, residential life coordinator and member of the first night committee.

In preparation for the event, the 13 first-year Bucknell Student Government (BSG) officers selected dark and light blue as their class colors and "knowledge itself is power" as their class motto as well as choosing their class crest. The crest, which incorporates the aforementioned colors and motto, depicts the Christy Mathewson Gate symbolizing that they were the first students to march through that gate at matriculation.

Tuesday's ceremony began at 7:30 p.m. in Rooke Chapel as first-year ROTC members processed inside carrying an American flag, a Bucknell flag and a flag bearing the class crest. Led by President Jessica Briski '04, the class officers and congress immediately followed.

The evening's events included a rehearsal of the alma mater "Dear Bucknell" with members of Two Past Midnight, Rooke Chapel Choir, Gospel Choir, Jazz Machine and the Bison Chips, in addition to remarks by Director of the Office of Alumni, Parents and Friends David Flinchbaugh and Associate Dean of Students Ed Cowell, who serves as the class advisor.

Prior to concluding the ceremony within Rooke Chapel, the students compiled their "Class Chronicles," which is composed of pages created by each first-year hall.

Bearing blue glow sticks, those in attendance

then processed through campus to University President Steffen Rogers and his wife Athena's home where they gathered on the front lawn to present Rogers with the Class Chronicles and serenade him with another rendition of "Dear Bucknell."

The evening closed with refreshments and the distribution of class mugs and t-shirts.

"I think that since we all graduated high school in 2000, there were high expectations placed on us. With this event, we began to fulfill, and perhaps even exceed, those expectations by starting new traditions," said first-year student Elizabeth Rankin.

Those who coordinated the event also considered the occasion to be a great success.

"Considering that the first-year students rarely gather as a class, I believe that the First Night ceremony was a phenomenal display of class unity ... I think that the overwhelming atten-

See FIRST, page 2A

Bookstore relocates to Hunt Hall for spring

By RACHEL LASKOW
News Layout Editor

In preparation for the renovation of Bostwick Cafeteria, scheduled for summer 2002, the University Bookstore will relocate to Hunt Hall for the spring semester and part of the summer.

During this time, asbestos will be removed from the Bookstore's ceiling as well as in the floor of the cafeteria. The asbestos must be removed before the remodeling can begin. The LC Mall will also be closed during the asbestos removal.

The Bookstore closed at 4:45 p.m. on Wednesday and will reopen on Monday, Jan. 29, pending no technical difficulties. If everything goes according to schedule, the Bookstore will reopen in the LC location shortly after July 4 in time for textbook delivery.

Before choosing Hunt Hall as the location for the Bookstore, numerous options were considered. Some choices included renting trailers or relocating to the Music and Art Building, which was decidedly too small.

Bookstore Director Vicki Benion said, "We looked at a lot of spaces. We tried to find a location that wasn't high use in the summer and spring."

Although the Hunt store is smaller than the LC location, the Bookstore will still carry the same items as it did in the LC. Textbooks will be located on the ground floor of Hunt in the former student lounge and Meeting Room #5. General books will be upstairs in the Hunt Living Room and merchandise will be in Hunt Formal.

"Because the store is smaller, we are able to work on other projects. We have a person to enhance our website and the staff can go to buying shows for when we return," Benion said. "Those are some positive changes."

According to Benion, some inconveniences include the location of the building and the varying placements and locations of the staff.

"It's not just an inconvenience for our customers, but also to our staff. It's an inconvenience, but it's also a challenge," Benion said.

Although the Bookstore's closing is mainly in preparation for the Cafeteria renovation, Benion hopes that the LC Bookstore location will be improved before it reopens.

"We're hoping that some remodeling will take place. We have to remove everything. We have to take apart some fixtures to get through the doors. We would like to replace the carpeting," Benion said.

Chris Rivera—The Bucknellian

The Bookstore prepares for its move.

Public Safety Log

January 17, 2001

MISSING PROPERTY — A student reported to Public Safety that some food items were missing from a locked room in Carey House. No witnesses or suspects were located in a search of the room.

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF — A student reported to Public Safety that a vehicle was damaged while parked at the Kappa Delta Rho Fraternity. East Buffalo Township Police Department was notified. The incident is under investigation.

January 18, 2001

TAMPERING WITH FIRE EQUIPMENT / CRIMINAL MISCHIEF — Public Safety responded to Phi Gamma Delta Fraternity for a fire alarm activation caused by a discharged fire extinguisher. One witness did observe an unidentified male exit the building by using the fire escape. The incident is under investigation.

UNDERAGE CONSUMPTION / TRAFFIC LAW VIOLATION — Public Safety assisted the Lewisburg Police Department with a vehicle stop on St. George Street near Sigma Alpha Epsilon Fraternity. The vehicle operator was a student who admitted to drinking alcohol while being under the age of 21 years. Beer was located in the vehicle. The driver was cited for underage consumption and traffic violations.

INFORMATION / FOUND-RECOVERED BU PROPERTY — A Moravian College Safety and Security Officer notified Public Safety that a Bucknell track & field hurdle was located in a Moravian residence hall. BU Athletic Department was notified and information relayed to the Moravian Officer.

January 19, 2001

VEHICLE ACCIDENT / HIT & RUN — Public Safety responded to Lit Road for the report of damage to the driver's side front window, mirror, and door of a parked vehicle owned by a student. East Buffalo Township Police Department was notified and the incident is under investigation.

BU PROPERTY DAMAGE — Public Safety responded to Gateway Riser for the report of a broken window. No witnesses or suspects were located in a search of the area.

January 20, 2001

INFORMATION — While on routine patrol, Public Safety observed a vehicle traveling south at a high rate of speed on South 7th St. near the Langone Center. Public Safety stopped the vehicle and spoke with the operator who was a student with the odor of alcohol on his breath. The Lewisburg Police Department responded. The vehicle was parked in a parking space for the night and the occupants were escorted to their residence by Public Safety.

UNDERAGE DRINKING — While on routine patrol, Public Safety observed a student with an open container of beer outside Smith Hall. The individual was under the age of 21. A citation was issued. The student was placed in the care of the RA for Smith Hall and requested to stay in his room for the night. The individual was later observed outside the building and issued another citation for failure to comply with the directive of an officer.

INFORMATION — Public Safety Officers provided an escort for two students between two on-campus residence halls. One of the officers had notified the escort dispatcher that she had been sexually harassed earlier in the evening. The women refused to speak to the officers regarding the incident. Public Safety contacted the females the following morning and did learn that the incident occurred off campus and involved a non-BU male. The individual was advised of their options for dealing with the situation.

PUBLIC DRUNKENNESS / UNDERAGE DRINKING — Public Safety responded to Smith Hall for the report of an alcohol overdose. The student was located in his room where he was feeling ill. Friends volunteered to spend the night with him. Citations were issued for underage drinking and public drunkenness.

TAMPERING WITH FIRE EQUIPMENT — Public Safety responded to Vedder Hall for a fire alarm activation caused by a discharged fire extinguisher. The incident is under investigation.

INFORMATION — While on a routine building check in Davis Gym, Public Safety observed a strong smell in the annex area caused by a crockpot left turned on and unattended. The situation was corrected.

NON-EMERGENCY MEDICAL TRANSPORT — A student requested transportation to Evangelical Community Hospital Emergency Room for treatment of an injured foot. A Student Health Services driver drove the individual to the hospital and later returned her to campus.

INFORMATION / MOTORIST ASSIST — While on routine patrol, Public Safety observed two vehicles parked on the side of the road at the intersection of Rt. 15 & Moore Avenue following a minor collision. A student operator of the one vehicle had left the scene and was later located in her residence hall where she went to pick up her insurance information. East Buffalo Township Police Department was notified but determined this was not a reportable or hit and run accident. The drivers exchanged information.

January 21, 2001

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF — Public Safety responded to Cemetery Road for the report of vandalism to a ROTC van that had the rear windows broken. The incident is under investigation.

INFORMATION — Public Safety responded to Smith Hall for the report of two unauthorized males present in an unlocked room when the room's occupants entered the area. Upon investigation, the males were identified and it was determined that they were trying to locate a former resident of the room and that no illegal activity had occurred.

INFORMATION / MISSING PROPERTY — A student reported to Public Safety that a jacket was taken from the common area of Kappa Delta Rho Fraternity during a party. A search of the house met with negative results. The owner of the coat refused police involvement at this time.

INFORMATION / ALLEGED ACT 64 VIOLATION — Public Safety responded to Larson Hall for the report of the odor of marijuana. The source of the odor could not be located as the room doors were closed and appeared to be unoccupied.

January 22, 2001

INFORMATION / DAMAGED BU PROPERTY — An employee reported damage to a light pole outside Coleman Hall. No witnesses or suspects were located in a search of the area.

VOTE From page 1A.

mittee on Admissions and Financial Aid, the Committee on Athletics and the Board of Trustees are ready to engage the issue.

According to Pollock, the various institutions will undertake different options in adjusting their aid offerings.

According to Pollock, the "best test" cases to investigate the effects of merit aid on the league's competition are men's and women's basketball, which have been subject to scholarships for a few years and already are experiencing what he calls a "changing balance of power."

One option the University may entertain is to offer student-athlete aid without offering academic or performing arts scholarships. "Some would argue that athletic merit aid has clear conventions that give a program structure, some of them embedded in NCAA policy, and the effects are better known," Pollock said.

Additionally, the lack of competition in academics and performing arts between Patriot League member schools is virtually nonexistent, making it more difficult to gauge a comparison of their effects at respective institutions.

University dinner celebrates Martin Luther King, Jr.

By JIM LEAHY
Managing Editor

Martin Luther King Jr. was one of America's prominent civil rights leaders during his life, a life that was celebrated last week by numerous students, staff and faculty. The Tenth Annual Martin Luther King, Jr. Commemoration Dinner sought to let the flame lit by Dr. King remain burning in our memories and to let his message of equality be heard.

The evening's program was a varied assortment of tributes to the late Dr. King and included singing and speeches. A wonderful dinner of a Southern style-fried chicken, collared greens, biscuits, and salad with bacon gravy—was also part of the evening's events.

Posters that were created by students from three classes at Milton Elementary School as part of a contest hung on the wall behind the podium. Because they were all so well-done, the Office of Multicultural Affairs decided not to name a first, second or third prize. Instead, gift certificates to the Bookstore were given to the teachers or they could buy classroom supplies and books for their students.

Nyambi Nyambi '01 delivered a eulogy given by Dr. King in what many regarded as the highlight of the evening. The eulogy, given at a funeral for four young girls killed in a church firebombing in Birmingham, Ala., was both simple and powerful. Nyambi was able to present it not only in the voice of Dr. King but with his mannerisms and general body language. Nyambi both deserved and received the most enthusiastic applause of the evening.

Additionally, the Campus' gospel choir, Voices of Praise, performed four songs during the course of the evening. The final part of the evening's events was a keynote address by Dr. Mary Berry. Dr. Berry is a professor at the University of Pennsylvania and is the author of many books. She served as Assistant Secretary of Education in the Carter Administration, in other supporting roles during the Reagan Administration and as Chairperson of the Civil Rights Commission in the Clinton Administration.

Dr. Berry spoke predominantly about the parallels between now and eight years ago. She compared the circumstances in the world that existed when Former President Clinton was taking office to those that exist now, just after President Bush assumed the presidency.

Her remarks were posed as an inventory that Dr. King would take if he were around today and was looking at our current situation. She mentioned the many problems facing Israeli and Palestinian relations in the Middle East, the United States' failure to pay its UN dues and its need for Ted Turner to do it for us, and many of the issues that were discussed during last year's presidential election.

She explained that we have come a long way in our move towards equality but we have a long way to go in our quest.

"I [look at civil rights] as if the glass is half empty and the glass is half full," said Dr. Berry.

Dr. Berry spoke fondly of her time with Former President Clinton's Administration. She ended her speech with discussions of the inequalities in the presidential election. She dedicated much of the question and answer session that followed to that issue.

The evening was well-received by the many administrators, faculty and students who gathered to honor a great man and a key figure in the fight for equality.

Bucknellian sees staff transition

By PETER VAN EMBURGH
Editor-in-Chief

The Bucknellian experienced several major changes the past two issues: going color, changing printing facilities and undergoing a significant transition with our staff.

With the introduction of a newly designed "Bucknellian Part 2" and a restructuring of the staff, the campus newspaper will continue to follow the momentum of growth.

While the new production changes, resulting from a complicated technical situation with the last issue of the fall semester, we hope our relationship with The Daily Item will improve the quality and reliability of The Bucknellian. Most significantly, the paper will now be on the shelves Friday mornings instead of Thursday nights. See page 1B for Jim Leahy's explanation of the technical transition.

Handling executive editing and production roles, two-year veterans of the paper Peter Van Emburgh '02 and Rebecca Rowland '02 kick off their first full semester as editors-in-chief together.

Assuming the position of managing editor, Jim Leahy '03 will bring his technical experience to the role and has been working diligently with The Daily Item on updating our production capabilities. He will also be responsible for supervising all layout and design projects.

After serving as assistant business manager for a year, Mark Langer '02 will bring his experience as he takes on the sole responsibility of The Bucknellian's budget and financial transactions as business manager.

Entering the co-news editor positions is former arts and entertainment editor Natalie Casp '02, former news writer Laura Day '03. Former business and politics layout editor Rachel Laskow '03 will utilize her skills as the news section's layout editor.

April John '03 is joining the editorial board as the editor of the opinions section.

Veterans Carmen "Bull-Dog" Mauriello '02 and Brooke Rea '02 will remain at the helm of the sports section, with Andrew Burr '04 becoming the section's sole layout editor. Matthew Herbert '02 will also continue as sports statistician.

The features section is "under new management" as Sandi-Jo Galati '03 and Jolene Hart '03 transition from experienced features writers to section editors. Jason Rutenberg '04 will join The Bucknellian as features layout editor.

Lynne Waldman '01 and Josie Cetta '04 will return as the science and technology editor and layout editor, respectively.

Business and politics will be led by Michael Boland '03 and will be responsible for the assigning and editing for the section.

Arts and entertainment brings Krista Reidsdorf '02 to the staff as the new A&E editor.

Chris Rivera '02 will join veteran Paige Cull '01 as photo editor and he will also be responsible for the Darkroom.

Kim Luedee '01 and Debbie Ruggeri '01 will continue their duties as head copy editors.

Two new advertising representatives were hired this semester. Amy Pelouquin '03 with national wireless Bryan Prins '04 will handle local advertising clients.

Brian Klotz '03 will return to his restructured duties as circulation manager for The Bucknellian, responsible for distributing the approximately 5,000 copies of the 105-year-old student-run campus newspaper.

James Lee will return as adviser to The Bucknellian.

Despite the many additions to the staff, several veterans have become senior editors. Heather Napolitano '01, Brian Watson '01, Matt Albert '01, Matt Trunnell '01 and Tim Scheu '01 will continue to contribute to The Bucknellian.

Spring colloquia series scheduled

By RYAN DELAHANTY
Staff Writer

This semester, the University is proud to host colloquia on Practical and Professional Ethics, as well as Science, Technology and Society. Five different speakers will come for each colloquium, hailing from a variety of backgrounds, disciplines and fields. They will each give a lecture and be available to speak in various classes.

On Jan. 23, the Jones Professor of Management at Dartmouth College John Hennessey, will kick off the Colloquium on Practical and Professional Ethics. Dr. Hennessey has wide experience in business ethics, having been instrumental in starting the business ethics program at Dartmouth's Tuck School. He is on multiple management boards and is well respected in the business community.

Bates College Professor of Mathematics Bonnie Schulman will come to campus on Feb. 22.

Utah Valley State College Vice President Elaine Englehardt will be discussing the ethics of intimacy at the faculty dinner on March 5, and will also be available for class discussions about her research on the ethics of police power.

Assistant Provost at MIT Stephanie Bird will talk about the complication of gender in mentoring on March 19 and 20.

Lastly, on April 3, Director of the Ethics Center at Dartmouth College Ronald Green will participate in the colloquium. Dr. Green has served for several years on the ethics task force that has functioned as part of the human genome project.

President of Envirosmith Engineers in Atlanta James C. Smith will launch the Colloquium on Science, Technology, and Society on Jan. 30. Smith was a principal in the firm of Brown and Caldwell before starting his own firm. Much of his work relates to environmental problems in the former Soviet Union, which he will discuss at the faculty dinner on Jan. 29.

Associate Professor of Pediatrics at Johns Hopkins University Barbara Bernhardt spoke on Jan. 19 about the ethics of genetic counseling. She will be attending select classes on Jan. 30.

Director of the Program of Science, Technology and Society at Lehigh University Steve Cutcliffe will talk about the future of STS studies at the faculty dinner on April 9. Linda Sweeting, professor of chemistry at Towson University, will be visiting classes on April 20.

Dr. Sweeting, who has wide experience in institutional review boards at universities, will speak about the ethical conduct of science. To make arrangements to have one of the speakers interact your class, please contact vessind@bucknell.edu.

Do you have story ideas for
The Bucknellian?
Let us know.
bucknellian@bucknell.edu

World Briefs

Texas fugitives criticize prisons, then surrender

COLORADO SPRINGS, Colorado (CNN)—The last two "Texas Seven" fugitives wanted for a prison break and the killing of a police officer last month surrendered peacefully Wednesday after police allowed them to be interviewed by CNN affiliate KXTV in Colorado Springs.

Patrick Murphy Jr. and Donald Newbury complained about the Texas prison system, which they said is ruining the lives of young inmates. "Hopefully, maybe this will open the eyes of some people that the penal system does have some problems," Murphy said.

Furrow pleads guilty to shootings, will avoid death penalty, get life without parole

LOS ANGELES, California (CNN)—Buford O. Furrow Jr., the accused shooter in a hate crime that left a postal carrier dead and five others wounded at a Jewish community center in 1999, entered a guilty plea Wednesday that will allow him to avoid the death penalty.

Judge Nora Manilla accepted a plea bargain, under which Furrow will be sentenced in March to life in prison without opportunity for parole.

Mideast peace talks could resume on Thursday

TABA, Egypt (CNN)—Israeli negotiators indicated on Wednesday that peace talks with the Palestinians would resume following the funerals of two Israelis killed on the West Bank.

Ehud Barak was to make a final decision about resuming the talks after a Wednesday evening session with his top ministers in Jerusalem. In addition to the killings, the ministers were expected to assess the security and political situation in the region as well as the status of the talks themselves.

The talks were previously put on hold after two Tel Aviv restaurants were killed in the West Bank on Tuesday, militating against reports of "significant progress" toward ending the five-decade conflict between the Israelis and Palestinians.

Congo parliament OKs Kabila's son as president

KINSHASA, Congo (CNN)—The Democratic Republic of Congo's parliament met on Wednesday and unanimously approved 31-year-old Gen. Joseph Kabila to succeed his father, Laurent Kabila, as the DRC's president.

"We consider this day Major General Joseph Kabila is invested with all constitutional powers," said the motion, approved by all 245 members present.

The younger Kabila was named acting president after his father's assassination last week and later tapped to replace him by the slain president's inner circle.

Six killed in Turkish ambush

DIYARBAKIR, Turkey—The chief of police and five other officers have been killed in an ambush in the main city in Turkey's Kurdish region, Prime Minister Bulent Ecevit said.

Ecevit told a news conference that unidentified gunmen opened fire on Gaffar Okkan and colleagues soon after they drove away from police headquarters.

"It is obvious that there are those in Turkey who cannot stomach peace and are disturbed by order," he said.

"It still isn't clear who the assailants are, but the enemies of peace and order will not be allowed to reach their goals."

Scandal brings down UK minister

LONDON, England (CNN)—Peter Mandelson was resigned as a senior minister in the British Government for the second time in 25 months.

He quit his high-profile post as Northern Ireland Secretary on Wednesday following intense press speculation over his involvement in a "cash for passports" furor.

Net twins case heads for U.S. court

LOS ANGELES, California—The U.S. parents who adopted the twins at the center of an international custody battle are planning to begin legal action on Wednesday.

Californian couple Richard and Vickie Allen are to file a petition in Arkansas aimed at overturning an adoption decree granting the British couple, Alan and Judith Kilshaw, parental rights.

The Allens say the twins Belinda and Kimberley were placed with them before the Kilshaws and that they are the rightful guardians.

Millions flock to Ganges festival

ALLAHABAD, India—More than 30 million Hindu pilgrims are expected to scramble toward the River Ganges Wednesday, as the most auspicious day of the Maha Kumbh Mela festival comes to an end.

Eager to pray and wash away their sins during the Kumbh Mela, long lines of worshippers have gathered at the sacred site in northern India to dip their bodies into the water, scooping it up in their hands and pouring it over their heads.

Bush says signs on U.S. economy may not be so 'hopeful'

WASHINGTON (Reuters)—President George W. Bush said Wednesday he expected growing evidence that the state of the U.S. economy was not as "hopeful" as he would like, saying this could strengthen his case for a broad tax cut.

Meeting with the leaders of Congress from both parties, the Republican President also stressed his desire to work with the Democrats and said his call for bipartisanship was not "hollow words."

Compiled by Laura Day
Courtesy of CNN.com

Write for news!
Call Laura, 7-4470
or Natalie 7-4252

"Revolving door" keeps turning

Things were looking up at the beginning of this academic year with the arrival of a new, spirited president and an administration destined to set new standards for the University. There was one shortcoming though—a major lack in permanent administrators. With the departures of two vice presidents whose positions would be filled by "interim" personnel, the Rogers Administration looked to be facing some obstacles.

And before the spring semester began, two more casualties were announced. The latest exits out of the University's revolving door—Vice President for Finance and Administration Peggy Plympton and General Counsel Richard Zansitis—were two of a handful of non-interim administrators in the Rogers Administration.

Now Rogers' supporting cast is reduced to a full roster of interim vice presidents, with national searches in progress to fill these positions on more permanent bases.

Plympton, who joined the University's ranks in 1998, departed to take the vice president of finance and administration position at her alma mater, Lehigh University. Richard Chapman departed in 1998 to take a ward Zansitis, also a three-year veteran, leaves to take up the General Counsel post at Rice University in Texas.

The bulk of Plympton's responsibilities will now be handled by University Controller Dennis Swank and Physical Plant Director Dennis Hawley. The University will retain outside legal counsel to cover Zansitis' territory; the replacement will be named in February.

By taking these valuable administrators out of the University's equation, the Rogers Administration will face some inevitable growing pains. But, with the help of interim vice presidents like Charles Pollock '70 and Genie Cerdes, the University has maintained a steady direction, continuing on its path for improvement.

Plympton and Zansitis, like many other previous administrators, have made decisions to leave based on personal reasons.

Ex-president William D. Adams, who upon announcing his retirement from the University cited the desire to go back to teaching and research, took the presidential position at Colby College in Maine last year.

Former Dean of Students Richard Chapman departed in 1998 to take a higher position—vice president of student affairs—at the University of Maine—Orono.

Former Vice President for Academic Affairs Dan Little left the University last year to become chancellor at the University of Michigan—Dearborn. Some believe that Little's exclusion from candidacy in last year's presidential search may have led to his departure.

Dick Johnson, the former vice president for university relations who helped spearhead the University's largest-ever fundraising effort, left last summer to take a similar position at the United States Naval Academy.

Trudy Cunningham, a popular staple in the engineering department, left last year when her husband, Joel, accepted the job of president at The University of the South.

Administrative changes are inevitable in higher education, but most institutions have not been faced with the precarious situation the University currently endures. Due to the secretive nature of many searches, administrators may be considered for and accept positions at other schools without their current employers having any idea. Secrecy is necessary for the applicant's job protection at their current institution but often leads to a spur of the moment departure, leaving the institution with a major personnel void.

National searches for a new provost/vice president for academic affairs (a position that will establish a clear-cut second in command at the University), and vice presidents for student affairs, finance and administration and university relations will all take place this spring. According to Rogers and Pollock, final candidates will be brought to campus sometime in March and the winners announced shortly after.

Until that time comes, the University will enter another period of transition. Certain initiatives will certainly be put on hold while the searches take precedence over many procedural matters.

The searches are all on a national level, but do not necessarily exclude any internal candidates. When asked whether or not he fears losing any of the interim administrators should they not be chosen for full-time positions, Rogers said, "We'll cross that bridge when we come to it."

There is, however, a light at the end of the tunnel. With the naming of full-time vice presidents, Rogers, who plans to be intimately involved in all four searches, will have the final say in selecting a brand new staff of deputies. The president will surely seek out prospectives that he views as team players, hopefully resulting in a continued spirit of cohesiveness and vision that should help jump-start his administration.

But, until then, the University will face somewhat of an uphill battle. Luckily it has a number of able, versatile employees filling the gaps. Their efforts have helped bring stability and order during a chaotic mass exodus over the past 18 months, and it may prove to be in the University's best interest to reward those who have made sacrifices in our time of need.

ZANSITIS From page 1A.

University.

"As general counsel, I'm responsible for all legal advice to the University and representation of the University—I deal with anything relating to the law within the University," Zansitis said. "That could be legal advice to the board of trustees, the president, senior administrative officials and other faculty and staff."

After Zansitis' departure in mid-February, the University will implement a temporary system for legal assistance. Because four different administrative searches are planned for the spring, the search for a new general counsel will begin in the fall. University President Stephen Rogers is confident that the University will be in safe hands without a permanent general counsel for a few months.

"We will be patching some things together between the external counsel that we've used consistently—they know the University very well and we will have a temporary general counsel present on campus several days a week," Rogers said. "We'll put together a team approach for a while until we can do the search. We'll have all the expertise that we'll need to cover different bases."

Some of the more day-to-day duties required of the general counsel will be handled by Interim Vice President for Student Affairs Charles Pollock '70.

"Essentially, I'm picking up responsibility for public safety, and adding that to what I have been doing," Pollock said.

Presently, Pollock works very closely with the general counsel's office.

The number of issues in any of the areas that involve legal opinion of any kind are countless. In the last year, we've worked together on the appeal of our NCAA violations and have reviewed student conduct and fire safety issues, all because of [Zansitis'] responsibilities for risk management in the broadest sense," Pollock said. "If we're both in town, I don't think there's a day that goes by that we don't talk to each other about some issue."

Pollock's respect for Zansitis stretches past the standard legal aspects of the job.

"I have found his mind to be of a quality that has made me want to seek out his opinion even when it's not a legal issue, when I just need someone else's opinion on a decision I'm making or how something that I've written sounds," Pollock said. "He's someone I like to turn to for feedback."

While excited for this new opportunity at Rice University, Zansitis also looks highly upon his three years at the University.

"My career at Bucknell has been more than fulfilling. One of the reasons I decided to become a General Counsel was to become more involved, not only in the routine legal issues, but to be a part of the broader strategic direction for a school, work directly with the president and the governing board—all of that has been fulfilled," Zansitis said. "It's helped me grow as a lawyer. It's helped me grow professionally and personally. I've had a great experience here."

Zansitis appreciates the University's ongoing commitment to its students, faculty and staff. According to him, the University's increasing academic reputation can be attributed to the strength of its faculty, staff and administration.

The interaction between students and faculty amazes me. The faculty truly view their mission to be helping students learn, develop and become leaders in society. And I'm still impressed after three years here," Zansitis said. "Bucknell has good balance for students-between academics, athletics, and other activities on campus. I think the rest of the country is starting to figure out how great a place Bucknell is. They're starting to see how good of a value Bucknell is. This recent trend was pronounced under Bro Adams' leadership, and Stef Rogers, I'm sure, wants to carry that forward and make it even better."

Even with the rising academic reputation of the University, Zansitis noted that the general counsel position at Rice University is widely accepted as a promotion for him.

"Some call it the Harvard of the south, but they might think of Harvard as the Rice of the north. It's one of the leading universities in the country," Zansitis said. "It is just a great, great opportunity—I couldn't say no."

"Bucknell has good balance for students-between academics, athletics, and other activities on campus. I think the rest of the country is starting to figure out how great a place Bucknell is."
—Richard Zansitis

FORUM

EDITORIAL

RAs used poor judgment

A resident assistant (RA) is, by definition, a student who accepts responsibility for others, who acts as a role model and confidant for his or her residents and who generally can be counted on to uphold the rules and regulations of the University. This job is not forced upon anyone—students in fact apply to be RAs and are therefore well aware of what is expected of them.

An incident that occurred the last night of the fall semester has led to the voluntary resignation of eight RAs. These students were not in their rooms by the established curfew of 11 p.m. They were found at 2 a.m. socializing together and consuming alcohol. Although only four of the eight RAs were underage, all were asked to resign due to their lack of judgement in disregarding the aforementioned curfew and the policy regarding consumption of alcohol.

Students drink. Even underage students drink. And underage students caught drinking are punished accordingly. RAs are no different. In fact, their contract stipulates even stricter rules when it comes to alcohol consumption. RAs are knowingly held to different standards.

What makes the RAs' alcohol violations worse is these eight students drank while on duty and also violated the 11 p.m. curfew. What would have happened if something went wrong? Who would have been on the hall to take care of a troubled resident or a trespasser (such problems have arisen in the past at the end of the semester)? RAs apply for their job and are trained to deal with any emergency situation that may arise; that training is for a purpose—they are expected to be ready and able to deal with anything. In order to do that they must be on their halls when they are on duty. And they must not drink alcohol while on duty. It is that simple.

For this "sacrifice" they are compensated justly in the form of Book-store discounts, free rooms and free parking. Competition for RA positions is stiff and to be offered the job over many other qualified applicants and then not carry out the task with the utmost responsibility is not only an insult to those the RA is supposed to protect, but to the students who wanted to be an RA and were rejected.

The reputation of the RA staff was a solid one and it is sad that the ill thought-out actions of a few will, for the time being, taint the image of many.

We recognize the contributions that these eight RAs made to University residential life. It is sad that they had to lose their jobs for something that amounts to no more than "typical college-kid behavior." What they must understand is that by signing their contracts they, in essence, agreed to be held to higher standards. Underage drinking is not condoned in any residential hall, let alone when it is the hall's role model drinking.

The issue of drinking is admittedly not as serious as that of breaking curfew; if drinking had been the only issue it is somewhat possible that a University hearing could have cleared up any trouble without having to force their resignation. But when residents are left without the supervision they and their parents are promised, their safety is compromised and that is not acceptable.

bucknellian@bucknell.edu

What we may be missing in our American education

BY MATTHEW HINSON

Staff Writer

America. Land of opportunity. Streets paved with gold. For many, this is not so. For many, it is a struggle to survive. The middle class is being driven out of existence, forced into either the rich or poor camp. Where this will lead, no one knows. We at the University are the fortunate, the chosen ones, the leaders of tomorrow. Will we remember from whence we have come? Will we remember those who have helped us along the way? Will we remember to try to help others attempting to make it in this world, many times without the advantages many of us have had?

At the same time, is our own education really complete when we leave the grounds of this campus? Hardly. And I do not just speak of our inexperience in our chosen fields of study. No, I speak of the great many things about which we do not usually learn in school, or have the opportunity to learn, things which could be of great practical value in our futures.

Certainly, by the time we graduate from college we have learned (at least most of us) a good deal of the basics—reading, writing, math, as well as specialized knowledge of our chosen fields. However, how many of us know basic cultural things about much of the world outside the United States? Obviously, this is very important in the global economy. One of the major complaints of foreign businesspeople about their American counterparts is that we are ignorant of local customs, both business and social. Granted, classes are available which touch upon these things at least in some small way. However, these things are included in college courses, and are not really open to just anyone.

Engineers especially are at a disadvantage, as their course load is already mapped out for them from the beginning, which is unfortunate as many American engineers travel abroad, or even work abroad for their companies. In the growing global economy, it becomes more and more likely that one is to work in another country, or at least work with people from another country. It is sad that we are so presumptuous as to ignore the need to respect local customs when doing business in another country. This need not take away from our pride in ourselves and in our manner of doing business, but it could increase goodwill with our foreign business partners, and maybe help Americans seal more deals. Perhaps a basic education in foreign culture, whether offered in high school or college, would improve our relationships with our foreign partners, giving them a greater willingness to work with us.

As the dominant player in the world market, we need not only use our power for our own benefit, but we can also be gracious enough to realize that we're not the only kids on the block, though we may be the biggest.

Another thing, I can promise you right now if you go to Dunkin' Donuts drunk and happen to vomit, only to find that they needed to register and were not sent anything in the mail. It must be so hard to look into that confused face and say, "I'll need $10 cash before you register late, $25 if you register tomorrow."

And the poor staff in the registrar's office, now they really have it bad. They have to tell a student who lost or broke their small, flimsy ID card—the ID card they need to eat and buy books—that it will cost them $10 to replace a lost ID and $5 for a broken one.

The shame these people must feel, the anxiety that swells into their stomachs right before they have to demand money from a poor college student.

So help the poor administrators out, there is something you can do to save them the embarrassment of having to ask for your money. Next time you see an employee of an administrative office, just discretely slip them a five. You will have saved them some trouble and done a good deed; in this situation, everyone wins.

Of course, with modern advancements in the publishing process such as desktop computers and Stephen King, new books are being produced at an extraordinary rate, and any good library will want to keep its collection up to date with these new works. So some of the old books will eventually have to go.

In The University's library, if a book hasn't been used in some time, or has become hopelessly out of date, it gets a "weeding tag," a bright pink paper slip tucked between its pages. After a certain time has passed, all the books with weeding slips will be, well, weeded out. Here are some of the books marked for weeding right now in the Bertrand Library. If you want to read them, you'd better hurry.

Republican Campaign Text-Book for 1892: We've all been there—you're at a party, everything's going swimmingly, and somebody asks the inevitable question "So why should I vote for Benjamin Harrison, anyway?" Don't be caught flat-footed. Tell them about how "He Goes to the War Like a Man," or read them from a chapter entitled "The Democratic Record: A Party which has neither reformed, nor economized, nor legislated."

Manual de Normas Vigentes en Materia de Derechos Humanos: A bound collection of photocopied type-written pages, entirely in Spanish. May or may not have something to do with human rights.

Marriage, Divorce, Remarriage: Supplanted by a newer volume entitled Marriage, Divorce, Remarriage, Divorce, Remarriage, Di-

Commuter Rail Potential: The last remaining volume in the 12-part series Yes, We're Really Serious About This. Lacks some of the charm of Volume 4, Suburban Rocket Car Potential and Volume 8, Scramble Playing Robots for Everyone.

Commercial Prostitution in New York City: As opposed to what, volunteer prostitution?

The Invisible Resource: Later research with advanced scientific instruments revealed that it was not invisible, just very very small.

Men of the Pentagon: Appears on initial inspection to be a scholarly look at our nation's armed forces, but a more detailed reading reveals that this volume is mostly a collection of pictures from old swimsuit calendars.

The Infidel Emperor: The label "infidel" may have been a bit harsh; contemporary historians contend that the emperor was "just a jerk."

Editors-in-Chief
Rebecca Rowland '02
Peter Van Emburgh '02

Managing Editor
Jim Leahy '03

Senior Editors
Heather Napolitano '01
Brian Watson '01
Matt Trunnell '01
Matt Albert '01

Business Manager
Mark Langer '02

News Editors
Laura Day '03
Natalie Casp '02
News Layout Editor
Rachel Laskow '03

Business and Politics Editor
Michael Boland '03

Forum Editor
April John '03

Features Editors
Sandi-Jo Galati '03
Jolene Hart '03
Features Layout Editor
Jason Rubenstein '04

Arts and Entertainment Editor
Krista Reisdorf '02

Science and Technology Editors
Lynne Waldman '01
Josiana Cetta '04

THE BUCKNELLIAN

Founded in 1896 as The Blue and Orange

Volume 127, Number 1

C-3952 BUCKNELL UNIVERSITY

LEWISBURG, PENNSYLVANIA, 17837

(570)-577-1520

BUCKNELLIAN@BUCKNELL.EDU

HTTP://WWW.ORG.BUCKNELL.EDU/BUCKNELLIAN

EDITORIAL POLICY

The editorials of The Bucknellian reflect the consensus of the Editorial Board as to the topics and general position. If a consensus could not be reached, the opinions expressed are those of the Editors-in-Chief.

All other opinion material represents the views of the author and not necessarily those of The Bucknellian.

PUBLISHING POLICY

The Bucknellian is written, edited and published on 12 Fridays during each academic semester entirely by Bucknell students. The Bucknellian's fiscal affairs are overseen by an Advisory Board comprised of faculty, staff and administrators. All published material is chosen by the paper's editorial board without prior review by the Advisory Board, its adviser, the University or Bucknell Student Government.

SUBSCRIPTIONS POLICY

Subscriptions are available $45 per year and $30 per semester. To subscribe, send payment and address information to: The Bucknellian Subscriptions, Box C-3952, Lewisburg, PA 17837. Subscriptions are mailed first-class on the Friday of publication. Please send change-of-address information to the above location as well.

ADVERTISING POLICY

The Editorial Board of The Bucknellian reserves the right to deny any advertisements if offensive, illegal or in bad taste. For advertising rates, please contact the advertising managers at (570) 577-1085.

Copyright 2001 The Bucknellian

Sports Editors

Carmen Mauriello '02

Brooke Rea '02

Sports Layout Editor

Andrew Burr '04

Sports Statistician

Matthew Herbert '02

Darkroom Manager

Chris Rivera '02

Photo Editors

Paige Cull '01

Chris Rivera '02

Local Advertising Representative

Bryan Prins '04

National Advertising Representative

Amy Peloquin '03

Online Editors

Eric Fair '01

Brendan Putnam '03

Circulation Manager

Brian Klotz '03

Head Copy Editors

Kim Luedee '01

Debbie Ruggieri '01

Production Manager

Nick Olsen '02

Adviser

James F. Lee

Locking Horns

Warm weather or cold weather—what's your winter preference?

Warm

BY NATALIE CASP
News Editor

How cold is it outside right now? That's what I thought.

You're not wearing flip flops, you're not wearing a tank top and the sound of roaring waves isn't echoing off the frost covered windows of your dorm. That sound, my friends, is the rackety clanking of your radiator.

And this cold winter weather won't be going away anytime soon. In the meantime, our friends in the tropics of Florida are maintaining deep, luscious tans by spending time in the warmth outside—lounging on the beach, a round of golf, picnic in the park... take your pick.

We're here, nestled between the mountains of Pennsylvania, slipping on ice as we try to avoid snow drifts in our ears while we march to class.

As a native central Floridian, I have to admit that, yes, I chose to go north for college. But I can guarantee you that I'm not signing emails home "the weather is beautiful, wish you were here." If anything, I remind the folks back home that the seasons here in Pennsylvania are "cold," "colder," "still cold" and "construction."

Let me compare some of the weather-related day-to-day issues of living in warm vs. cold climate that I've run into:

Time: Here, I spend at least five minutes warming up my car and brushing snow off the windshield. At home, the biggest inconvenience I could possibly run into is putting the top down on a convertible.

Recreation: Here, skiing is the only option (well, fine, throw in snowboarding and tubing if you must). At home, I've played golf on Christmas day, surfed on New Year's Day, water-skied and shopped outside and any other day during the "Florida winter."

Expense: My first winter with a car here in Pennsylvania and I've spent money on windshield wiper fluid, anti-freeze, snow and ice scrapers and more than $6,000 on a recent winter weather-related car accident which I can assure you wouldn't have happened in warm weather. At home, the only winter car expenses I've maybe incurred have been extra gasoline for trips to the beach on glorious sunny January afternoons.

Produce: Have you eaten any good grapefruit in the Cafeteria? How about a mango? See any juicy oranges, ready to pick and eat off the trees on campus? No, here in Pennsylvania, we don't have fresh produce, save the mucky box of clementines on special at Weis. I can't count the number of scrumptious grapefruits from our neighbor's trees that I enjoyed at home during the break. Or fresh mango smoothies. Or fresh kiwi-yogurt parfaits. Sorry Pennsylvania, Florida has the upper hand on citrus.

So think about these inconveniences the next time you bundle up to go outside. Think about them the next time you slip on ice. Think about them as you order a wannabe smoothie made from concentrate juice. And think about them as you apply for jobs after college.

Cold

BY JIM LEAHY
Managing Editor

As a native of the Northeast, I have grown to love the winter. Despite the fact that I cannot participate in one of my favorite things, golfing, during the winter, there are many things that make it, and the cold weather, great.

First and foremost, this is a beautiful campus in the winter. This University is one of the prettiest around at all times and around the golf course on the other side of Route 15 and see some beautiful terrain. And running in the area is just too.

Second, there is another of my favorite sports, skiing. I think there is nothing quite like standing on top of a mountain on a beautiful sunny day and then gliding effortlessly down the slope with the fresh breeze in your face. Then, if you go for big-time skiing in the West or in the Alps, your breath will be taken away. The freedom is amazing and if you have not tried skiing, you are missing out.

My third argument for the winter months and cold weather is the holidays. I love that time of year because the cold reinforces the smell of the fresh pine trees, makes the warmth coming from the kitchen while baking or preparing a holiday force that much more comforting and the fireplace in the evening a more inviting thing. I cannot imagine how so many people celebrate Christmas with no hope for snow on the ground or a chill in the air. For me, it just wouldn't be the same.

I am a fan of all professional sports and a few of my favorites keep me excited through the winter. Basketball (Knicks) and hockey (Islanders, boo hoo) are some of the better spectator sports around and I love to follow my teams during the season.

Snow is another wonderful thing that winter brings. I know I mentioned it in relation to a couple of other things, but snow itself is great. It is pretty, makes all travel impossible, allows even old and mature college students to act like morons once and a while and it lets us try and kill ourselves when we take out the Flexible Flyer and hit the local hill.

I know that right now many of you are dreaming of spring break and summer but I implore you to remember how much you love the snow. Just remember, the Fiske Guide to Colleges tells all prospective students to "bring your J. Crew sweaters and your shearing gloves for the harsh Pennsylvania winters." You did make a free decision come to Bucknell, right?

Want the job? Tips for interviewing

By ALYSSON DEMERATH
Staff Writer

The feeling starts in the pit of your stomach. It represents the perfect combination of nausea, nervousness and fear of the unknown. You wonder if it's too late to turn back and just go home. Living in your parent's basement is beginning to look more appealing than going through this experience. You try and review your materials, but at this point, you can't concentrate. Suddenly, your name is called.

You take a deep breath and rise to meet the person who could determine your destiny.

Perhaps this is a bit melodramatic, but anyone who has been through the interviewing process can relate to the fears it evokes.

Whether interviewing for the ideal summer internship, your first "real world" job, med school, law school, whatever, everyone has similar feelings of panic. As a senior who has just recently been through it, I would like to share my thoughts on the whole process.

If you are selected for an interview, be prepared to justify to these people that you are worthy of the position. Some of the following may sound trivial or obvious, but that makes them no less important.

First, remember that interviewers are only people. It can be extremely intimidating to meet with partners of influential firms, or researchers of groundbreaking material, or any other potential interviewer. Regardless, they are still just people. They obviously have shown an interest in inviting you to interview. Remember that and let it give you confidence.

Also remember that these people were once in your shoes. They can relate to the anxiety you may feel. They are not there to interrogate you, but rather to try and find out what kind of person you really are and what you could potentially contribute.

One of my friends claimed her investment banking interviewer balled up her resume and tossed it over her head. He simply wanted to get a reaction and see how she worked under pressure.

While the situation made her even more nervous, she kept her cool. By answering the questions asked, she demonstrated her ability to go with the flow, even if her resume was not sitting in front of her.

Know the facts. Review websites like wetfeet.com and vault.com. My first interview was for a summer internship in Colorado. As a talkative sophomore, I breezed through the first round. However, when I went back for second round with the Vice President, I was unable to articulate what I was looking for from the company and the position. I admit I looked like a complete idiot and lost any chance of landing the job. While this was not exactly a fun experience, it taught me to be better prepared. Ever since that time I walk into interviews knowing what I want to get out of it.

Perhaps most importantly, just be yourself. I know it's such a cliché, but honestly, so many people approach this process trying to come up with the best answers to anticipated questions.

The only problem is, if you don't really believe what you are saying, chances are you aren't going to be very happy (or convincing). You have to remember that you are also assessing these companies and schools. Do they have what best fits your needs? Be honest with them and yourself.

When asked in a recent interview how I felt about programming, I impetuously responded by saying, "I wouldn't put it at the top of my list of things I do. Brilliant response considering programming was an integral part of the job! I immediately wanted to crawl under the table and die. While it was hard to resist the urge, I clarified my response by adding that I saw programming as a new challenge, something I had never done before, and I looked forward to any new experience.

If you have concerns about part of your potential responsibilities as an employee or student, voice them. At least it shows your interviewer you have thought through the requirements.

Finally, make the right decision for you. Do not get caught up in the name of a company or school. Do not sign on just because your parents want you to or it seems like a simple solution.

This is a place where you will most likely be putting in some quality time. You want to be able to appreciate the people around you and the challenges you will face from day to day.

The two-faced cowboy

By GRETCHEN SCHROCK
Opinions Columnist

The dust has settled, the legal brawling is over, and America finally has a new president, George W. Bush. With his posse of political advisors and cabinet appointees, Bush is ready to take on the important domestic and foreign issues confronting this seemingly lawless state after the election shoot-out. Following the political loss of Al Gore that resulted from this battle, which was fought with legal briefs and not with guns, Bush is the only one left to lead this frightened country.

The question after his inauguration is whether he can be the Texan hero mounted on a stallion that he made himself out to be. Can he restore civility that was supposedly lacking in Washington? Will dignity in the Oval Office return? Is there such a thing as compassionate conservatism? Is George W. Bush a unitarian and not a divider?

This beleaguered nation is desperately waiting for an answer, considering all the problems it faces. Power shortages in California are threatening to ignite an economic and political crisis in the country's most populous state. Bush's appointee for attorney general John Ashcroft is under continuous gunfire from the congressional Democrats. The last thing that the economy and stock market resembles is a beautiful prairie sun. In a couple of weeks, the White House must decide whether to proceed with one version of the national missile defense system. Peace negotiations between the Palestinians and Israel are in a critical stage that is promising to erupt into a major firefight reminiscent of the battle at the Ok Corral, unless Bush can be a masked Zorro ready to slash any international problems with his swords of diplomatic intelligence. In addition, he has a pile of initiatives that he wants to send to Congress for consideration and approval. The only problem is that he has yet to formulate a budget to explain how he intends to pay for them. Since he is not an evil conviving desperado or a true Washington politician, he cannot exactly rob a bank or a stagecoach to obtain the necessary funds.

Forget all the campaign promises that Bush made for peace on the American political, economic and social frontier during the remaking of Social Security, the cutting of taxes, the strengthening of the military, and other means. He has larger issues to deal with; ones that he did not dream would be on the approaching horizon of his presidency. The major challenge for this administration is to possess the ability to convince the country of "a rationalization for initiating change when there's not much of a market for change," according to Thomas Mann, a political analyst at the Brookings Institute. Considering Bush did not win the popular vote by about a half million votes, this columnist doubts he will be able to initiate earth-shattering change without having the citizenry up in arms against his version of the Lone Ranger.

He already has Senator John McCain of Arizona knocking at his White House door and Bush knows that McCain knows how to fight. Last year they fought a primary election duel that mesmerized the nation for a couple of weeks until it became clear that Bush was fighting with the bigger guns loaded with campaign contributions and would undoubtedly win. Now McCain has the bigger guns, loaded with bullets of votes for his proposed overhaul of campaign finance laws which Bush adamantly opposes, then might stall Bush's own proposals for a while. With the rest of the 535 legislators on Capitol Hill clamoring for their own causes and proposals with guns or fists, Bush cannot expect to have his own priorities met with strong enthusiasm.

The majority of American citizens did not cast a vote in favor of Bush becoming their next president because they lacked the confidence in his abilities. Presently confronted with domestic issues that will possibly cause the economy to stagger like a cowboy after a night at the local tavern and international situations that threaten to steal the last remaining volume in the 12-part series Yes, We're Really Serious About This. Lacks some of the charm of Volume 4, Suburban Rocket Car Potential and Volume 8, Scramble Playing Robots for Everyone.

Commercial Prostitution in New York City: As opposed to what, volunteer prostitution?

The Invisible Resource: Later research with advanced scientific instruments revealed that it was not invisible, just very very small.

Men of the Pentagon: Appears on initial inspection to be a scholarly look at our nation's armed forces, but a more detailed reading reveals that this volume is mostly a collection of pictures from old swimsuit calendars.

The Infidel Emperor: The label "infidel" may have been a bit harsh; contemporary historians contend that the emperor was "just a jerk."

Financial aid at its finest

By REBECCA ROWLAND
Editor-in-chief

What we have here is a sad state of affairs. I hate to be the one to break the story but here goes: the University is running out of money. Our once plentiful endowment has been depleted and it is only a matter of time before our dorms are old refrigerator boxes and our campus an alley.

How do I know this? When I went to register I was charged $10 for registering four hours late. When I went to replace my broken ID card I was charged $5 for not having both of its pieces. I cannot think of any other reason as to why such an honorable and intellectually focused university would squeeze money out of its students with such abandon than utter and total bankruptcy.

We should pity the administrators, really. It must be so hard to look into the face of a student with a hold slip in one hand and car keys in another, having not had time to put them away as they just got back to campus that second

Last chance for unwanted books

By DAVID MCGREEVY
Senior Writer

There's something that has always fascinated me about libraries. To have a fairly reputable library, you have to have thousands and thousands of books (the University's has over 475,000, according to their web site). Really, though, lots, may be most of them, will never be checked out.

Some books, the really great ones, the classics, are going to be constantly in and out. Others will see a flurry of use when a particular class is working on a research project. Still others will only see action every few years, when someone needs very specific information on bullfighting, submarines, or what have you.

Many books, though, are lucky if they see the outside of the library more than once or twice in their lives.

Of course, with modern advancements in the publishing process such as desktop computers and Stephen King, new books are being produced at an extraordinary rate, and any good library will want to keep its collection up to date with these new works. So some of the old books will eventually have to go.

In The University's library, if a book hasn't been used in some time, or has become hopelessly out of date, it gets a "weeding tag," a bright pink paper slip tucked between its pages. After a certain time has passed, all the books with weeding slips will be, well, weeded out. Here are some of the books marked for weeding right now in the Bertrand Library. If you want to read them, you'd better hurry.

Republican Campaign Text-Book for 1892: We've all been there—you're at a party, everything's going swimmingly, and somebody asks the inevitable question "So why should I vote for Benjamin Harrison, anyway?" Don't be caught flat-footed. Tell them about how "He Goes to the War Like a Man," or read them from a chapter entitled "The Democratic Record: A Party which has neither reformed, nor economized, nor legislated."

Manual de Normas Vigentes en Materia de Derechos Humanos: A bound collection of photocopied type-written pages, entirely in Spanish. May or may not have something to do with human rights.

Bison Scoreboard

SWIMMING

Men
1. Bucknell	166
2. Colgate	123
Notables:
100 back
1. Sheehan	56.07
200 back
1. Sheehan	1:59.82
50 free
1. Neary	21.41
100 fly
1. Neary	51.31

Women
1. Bucknell	157
2. Colgate	143
Notables:
100 breaststroke
1. Morgan	1:10.37
200 breaststroke
1. Lowe	2:30.27
500 free
1. Jones	5:18.57
100 fly
1. Lowe	1:00.40

WOMEN'S BASKETBALL

Bucknell	93
Colgate	83
fg ft r p
Franks	1-7 1-2 3 3
Quimby	9-11 6-7 3 24
May	0-2 2-2 2 2
Creamer	11-17 3-4 5 26
LeBlanc	7-12 3-3 12 17
Almind	5-10 2-2 4 12
Rounsly	3-6 1-1 7 7
Fleming	1-1 0-0 3 2

3pt.
Creamer 1-2

Bucknell	84
Binghamton	71

fg ft r p
Franks	4-7 2-3 2 12
Quimby	3-11 4-6 9 10
May	1-2 2-2 2 4
Creamer	9-18 4-5 2 25
LeBlanc	0-1 1-3 9 1
Almind	5-11 5-7 3 15
Rounsly	2-3 0-0 2 4

3pt.
Creamer 3-6
Franks 2-4

MEN'S BASKETBALL

Bucknell	61
American	51

fg ft r p
Werner	6-10 2-3 1 14
Lalugba	4-6 4-4 9 12
Bailey	4-11 9-12 7 19
Ramage	2-5 2-2 4 6
Blankenship	2-4 3-4 2 8
Slater	1-3 0-0 2 2

3pt.
Bailey 2-6
Blankenship 2-4

St. Frances	62
Bucknell	68

fg ft r p
Santos	2-4 4-4 4 8
Werner	2-3 0-0 3 4
Lalugba	5-11 2-2 4 12
Skornik	0-1 0-0 4 0
Bailey	5-8 4-7 1 16
Ramage	5-12 1-2 3 13
Blankenship	4-4 2-4 2 11
Namvou	1-3 0-1 1 2
Werner	2-3 0-0 3 4
Bennett	0-1 2- 7 2

Track & Field

Bucknell Octagonal

Men's Event Winners

Long Jump
1. Hollins 23'2.5"

35lb. weight
1. Stairs 57'3.75"

1 Mile
1. Costello 4:18.35

200M
1. Powell 22.31

500M
1. Hunsberger 1:07.29

Triple Jump
1. Hollins 47'9"

Women's Event Winners

Pole Vault
1. Benson 10'10"

20lb weight
1. Garcia 47'6.25"

55HH
1. Lilien 8.6

800M
1. Bango 2:14.98

1 Mile
1. Marshall 5:09.82

500M
1. McSwain 1:16.64

1000M
1. McConnell 3:02.83

3000M
1. Ferrell 10:42.05

5000
1. Beisser 18:35.08

WRESTLING

Bucknell	24
Sacred Heart	21

Winners

174 Chunko	15-5
197 Falciglia	forefit
197 HWT Perrone	12-2
125 Perrin	8-4
149 Doerr	4-2
165 Fasnacht	15-6

Bucknell	30
Springfield	12

Winners

174 Chunko	13-2
197 Falciglia	pin
125 Perrone	8-1
125 Perrin	16-0
133 Weller	6-3
141 Green	pin

Next Week:

Men's Basketball vs. Lehigh
Women's Basketball vs. Lehigh
Wrestling vs. Maryland
Track&Field-Bison Open
Swimming & Diving vs. Lehigh

THE BUCKNELLIAN Sports

Team of the Week:
The men's and women's swimming teams, who returned strong from their Florida training trip to capture their first two Patriot League meets over Lafayette and Colgate.

Bison up League mark to 4-1

By CORY NADLER
Staff Writer

After jumping out to a 6-1 record to open its season, the Bucknell women's basketball team went 7-4 over its next ten games to bring its record to 13-5. The Bison defeated Harvard University to improve to 7-1, then had 20 days off before playing in the Wildcat Christmas Classic, which was hosted by Villanova University.

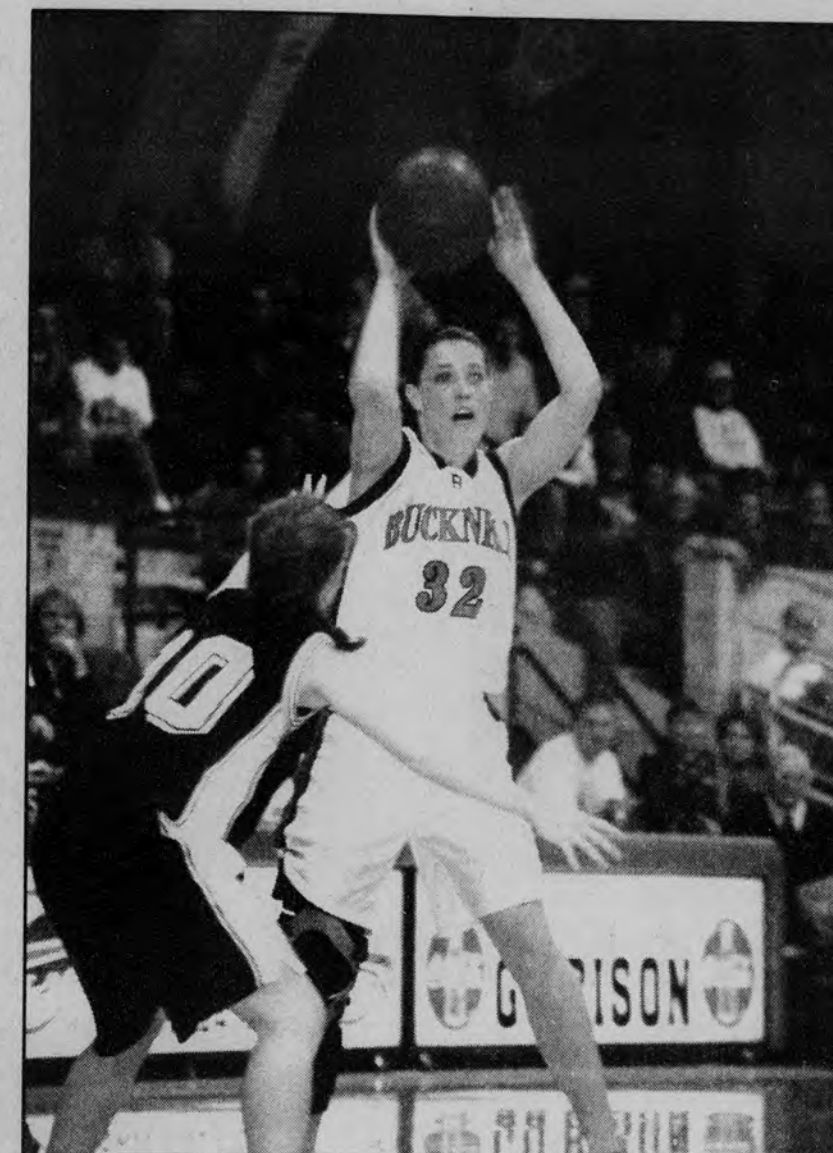

After losing both games in the Christmas Classic, the Bison returned home for two more non-league matchups, in which they defeated Cleveland State University and Cornell University. The Bison then opened their Patriot League schedule with a victory over Navy, and have continued their strong Patriot League play, upping their league mark to 4-1 with a 93-83 victory over Colgate Wednesday.

The Bison went into their 20-day layoff with a 79-66 victory over Harvard on Saturday, Dec. 9. Bucknell came out of the gates running against Harvard and jumped to a ten point lead, the board reading 18-8 only seven minutes into the game.

When the Crimson tried to close the gap before halftime, the Bison went on a 14-4 run to enter the locker room with a 39-25 lead. The Bison advantage would not be relinquished for the remainder of the contest.

The Crimson made the game close once again, cutting the Bucknell lead to a slim five points with less than a minute remaining in regulation. The Bison led 71-66 with 52 seconds left, when the Crimson were forced to foul. Bucknell converted on all eight of its free throw attempts in the final minute to stretch the closing score to 79-66.

Freshman guard Desire Almind led all scorers with a career-high 26 points, and was followed closely by Molly Creamer '03 with 25 points. Creamer's performance in this game helped her win Patriot League Player of the Week honors for the week end.

Chris Rivera—The Bucknellian

Kate Franks '03 looks to pass it to a Bison teammate in the paint.

ing Dec. 10.

The Bison traveled to Villanova University for the Wildcat Christmas Classic on Dec. 29 and 30. In the opening game against the tournament hosts, the Orange and Blue suffered their worst loss of the season, 89-54.

The Bison went into halftime down 48-29, and would not get any closer for the remainder of the game. Leading the Bison in scoring was Almind, who had 19 points, while Kate Franks '03 added 11.

In the consolation game of the Wildcat Classic, the Bison faced Northeastern University. BU led for much of the first half, but relinquished that lead just before halftime after a Northeastern run which left the Bison trailing 43-39 at the half.

The Huskies expanded their lead to 16 points early in the second half after exploding for a 13-1 run. The Bison still trailed 71-55 with 7:47 remaining, when Creamer single-handedly brought the Bison back to within six points.

Creamer scored 12 of her career-high 33 points in the next two minutes to make the score 73-67 with just under five minutes remaining. Despite the performance of Creamer and teammates Vicki Quimby '02 with 16 points and Almind with 14, the Bison could not get any closer to the Huskies and lost, 89-79.

Even though the Bison came away winless from Villanova, Head Coach Kathy Fedorjaka was not disappointed. "These were the toughest two teams that we had seen all season, and we responded well to the Villanova loss," she said.

Almind's performance during the Wildcat Classic was good enough to earn her Patriot League Rookie of the Week honors for the fourth time in the season.

After two tough road losses, the Bison returned home to face Cleveland State University on Jan. 3. The Bison jumped out to an early lead in this matchup, and would not give up the lead for the remainder of the game. It was not an easy victory, as Bucknell was up by as little as four points midway through the first half. But the Bison extended that lead to 11 when the score reached 41-30 at halftime.

The Vikings crawled back to within six points during one final attempt to win the game, but they were forced to foul as the game came to a close. Bucknell held on for the 82-74 victory, behind Creamer's first career triple double.

Creamer finished with 21 points, 10 assists and 10 rebounds. The other four Bucknell starters also were in

See WOMEN, page 8A

Athlete of the Week: GONZALO DIAZ '03

By DAVID TOMAINO

Staff Writer

While conventional sports wisdom claims its best not to "hit a wall," the swimming world goes to great measures to be the first to hit the wall. Lately no one has accomplished that feat better than Gonzalo Diaz '03.

Diaz, the best long distance plan since MCI, was named ECAC Male Swimmer of the Week, sweeping the 500- and 1,000-meter freestyle events for the Bison in triumphs over Lafayette and Colgate. Suddenly, the biggest splash in the Patriot League is coming from Freas-Rooke swimming pool, where the men are riding the tide of a 6-3 record.

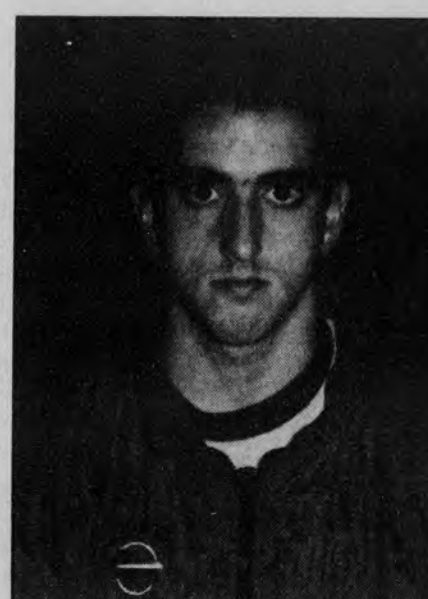

Anchoring that solid record has been Diaz with his successful yet unorthodox technique. "Gonzo does not have the classic stroke, but I see his stroke technique improving everyday," Head Coach Jerry Foley said.

Despite that unconventional technique, the Miami native has displayed his versatility this season being a Top-10 performer in the Patriot League in three events.

Foley notes the best is yet to come for Diaz. "I expect him to swim his lifetime best at the Patriot League Championships," he said.

Diaz is prepared come race day. "Gonzo understands he needs to be responsible and he does the little things outside of practice," Foley said.

Call it a stroke of brilliance? No. It's a winning stroke.

Courtesy of Athletics Communication

Sophomore swimmer "Gonzo" Diaz goes the distance for Bucknell

First Impressions Salon
Enjoy our weekly and monthly specials!
Hair & Nail Service
716 West Market Street, Lewisburg, PA 17837
Phone: 322-4636
Call Today for Your Appointment. Cash and Checks only.

Venmari's Pizza
524-0444 610 Market St.
Free Delivery Anytime
Dine In • Carry Out

STATISTICS
COMPILED BY
MATTHEW
HERBERT '02
COURTESY OF
ATHLETICS
COMMUNICATION

Andersen Consulting
Changes Name And Vastly Extends Capabilities

{There's never been a better time to build your career with us}

We've done more than just change our name. At Accenture we're building a completely new network of businesses that will influence the shape of the new economy.

This presents new and exciting challenges for our employees, with ever expanding career options. There has never been a better time to be part of our dynamic global force as we bring innovations to improve the way the world works and lives.

For those who want to create the future, now is the time to be at Accenture.

Check out our Webcast - premiering on Thursday, February 1 (1:00 p.m. EST, 12:00 p.m. CST, 11:00 a.m. MST, 10:00 a.m. PST) - for information on our new name and new opportunities. It's an interactive experience and career opportunity you won't want to miss.

Register for the Webcast at: careers.accenture.com/webcasts

• Consulting • Technology • Outsourcing • Alliances • Venture Capital Accenture was formerly known as Andersen Consulting accenture

Eiben, Evans earn national honors

Courtesy of Athletics Communications
Eiben's eight interceptions led the League and ranked seventh nationally.

By CHRISTINE JACOBY
Staff Writer

Senior free safety Kevin Eiben has been selected for many postseason honors since the end of the Bison's 6-5 season, highlighted by being named an Associated Press Second Team All-American. Eiben is the thirteenth I-AA Bucknell football player to be selected for the Associated Press All-American Team. He is the first player since Willie Hill was named to the team in 1997.

The 6'0", 205 pound senior from Delta, British Columbia led the Patriot League and ranked seventh in the nation with eight interceptions. Kevin totaled 150 return yards on his interceptions, setting a BU single-season record. In addition, Eiben tied a record in the Duquesne game, picking off four passes. He finished second on the team with 78 tackles and first with 10 pass breakups.

Eiben also completed the successful season as the league's top punt returner. He returned 30 punts for 366 yards, averaging 12.2 yards per return, ranking 15th in Division I. Eiben set the Bucknell single-season and career punt return marks with 366 and 626, respectively. He set the BU career record with 51 punt returns.

See AWARDS, page 8A

By CHUCK VICENTE
Staff Writer

The Bucknell men's and women's swim teams faced some tough competition during their winter training trip to Florida, but returned to kick off the new year with victories over two Patriot League foes.

The Bison swimmers took their annual trip down south to Boca Raton, Fla. over the winter break in hopes of enjoying good weather and high levels of competition. The weather was not as warm as the team would have liked, but the competition was fierce.

"It was a level of competition we have never seen before," head coach Jerry Foley said. "It was good for us to rub elbows with some big teams."

The Orange and Blue swam in the Florida Atlantic Invitational on Jan. 7, placing fourth in the men's division and fifth in the women's. The highly regarded Purdue team took first place for the men; Oakland grabbed first place in the women's field.

Senior tri-captain John Ferriter led the Bison men by earning 25 points. He took seventh in the 100-free with a time of 49.34 and eighth in the 50-free with 22.32.

Stelios Saffos '03 also had a good day of swimming. He earned 21 points for the Bison men, finishing the day with a seventh and a ninth place.

The Bucknell women had six of their swimmers record 20 points. Daniela Faas '03 had a strong day tallying 31 points. She took fourth place in the 1000-free and sixth in the 200-back. Captain Molly Lowe '01 and Abby Weaver '02 also came through big with 45 points for the team.

The trip was a much-needed break from the regular season. The strong competition left Bucknell primed and ready for two important Patriot League meets against Lafayette and Colgate.

In Easton, the men and women were both victorious over the Lafayette Leopards. The men won 179-112, and the women came through, 175-117.

"We swam really well," Foley said. "It is a good indication of where we are at this point in the season."

The women's team captured 11 events. Of those 11, three Bison got a pair of first place finishes. Faas won the 500- and 1000-free in dominating fashion. Darby Golino '03 touched the wall first in both the 100- and 200-back, while Weaver was fastest in the 100 and 200-free.

The men's team mimicked the women's by winning 11 of the 16 events. A duo of freshmen and sophomores captured a dominating eight first-place finishes on the day.

Peter Garvin '04 and Jack Sheehan '04 both won two events. Garvin beat out the competition in the 100-free (47.83) and the 200-free (1:46.30). Sheehan won the 100-back (56.84) and the 200-back (1:59.60).

Saffos and Gonzalo Diaz '03 also each won two events each. Saffos captured the 100-breast

(1:02.32) and the 200-breast (2:17.60), while Diaz won the 500-free (4:56.18) and the 1000-free (10:05.89).

Against Colgate a week later, the Bison came out a little slow but captured the 500-free (5:18.57). Lowe won the 100-fly in 1:00.40.

The women's team is now 5-3 in dual meets; the men's team, 6-2. As the season comes to a close, both teams are tapering the work regimen in anticipation of the Patriot League Tournament.

"We are beginning to sharpen up for the end of the season," Foley said. "Workouts are decreasing and recovery is most important."

But before the end of the season tournament, the Bison face Lehigh on Jan. 27. The home meet begins at 2 p.m.

for most of the meet, but the Bison pulled ahead with strong performances from Barbara Morgan '02, Megan Jones '01, and Lowe. Morgan won both the 100 (1:10.37) and 200-breaststroke (2:30.27) and Jones captured the 500-free (5:18.57).

Lowe won the 100-fly in 1:00.40. The women's team is now 5-3 in dual meets; the men's team, 6-2. As the season comes to a close, both teams are tapering the work regimen in anticipation of the Patriot League Tournament.

"We are beginning to sharpen up for the end of the season," Foley said. "Workouts are decreasing and recovery is most important."

But before the end of the season tournament, the Bison face Lehigh on Jan. 27. The home meet begins at 2 p.m.

Sports

Vicki Quimby reaches 1,000 point plateau

By BRIAN KLOTZ
Staff Writer

When she stepped up to the foul line, she knew she was close. "I made the first one, and when I made the second foul shot, I kind of thought that was it," remembered Vicki Quimby.

When the buzzer rang and the announcer came on to say that Vicki had just reached the 1000-point mark in her college basketball career, she didn't quite expect it. "I didn't know they were going to do something," she said.

Quimby's accomplishment of 1000 points in the home game versus Holy Cross made her only the second junior in Bucknell history to ever reach that mark in her junior year (the only other was Jen Walz), and placed her 11th on the all-time scoring list.

"I can't really put into words how I feel about it, but I am really proud that I did it," she said.

Quimby's basketball career began when she was in only fourth grade, when her father got her into sports. "I was always better at soccer in grade school," Quimby said, "but my dad helped me choose basketball over soccer." After entering Wilson High School in West Lawn, Pa., Quimby found that basketball was the best of her sports. She made county and district teams every year, was Berks County player of the year her junior and senior year, and, ironically, also reached the 1000-point mark as a junior in high school.

When college time came around, Quimby knew which direction to take. "I wanted to continue basketball after high school," she said. "I just love the sport."

Quimby narrowed her choices down between La Salle, Drexel and Bucknell, and finally chose Bucknell because it fit her better than the others. "Basically, Bucknell's was a system I thought I could play in because it was similar to my high school," she said. "The academics were also far superior and the coach was someone I knew I could play for."

Head Coach Kathy Fedorjaka was happy she made the decision.

Vicki Quimby became the second Bison to net 1,000 points as a junior.

"Her competitive spirit in the overall sense has been critical in building this program," Fedorjaka said. "She battles out there, has no fear, and plays with great confidence."

As a freshman, things were tough for Quimby. "It was really hard because it was such a big change," she said. "Balancing practice time with academics and missing class for away games is hard, basketball is a twelve-month a year commitment."

But Quimby has now settled comfortably into the student-athlete scenario. She is currently an elementary education major with a 3.0 GPA.

As it turns out, reaching 1000 points wasn't one of Quimby's goals for the season. "I don't think about it as something that I want to do," she said. "I look at it as when it comes, it comes. It wasn't something I was really working towards."

"The system on the team helped me get it, because if we didn't have the coaching staff that we do, or I didn't get the pass, it wouldn't be possible."

Teammate Monique LeBlanc '02 commented on Quimby's effect on the team. "Vicki's play is always really intense," she said. "If she starts out the game with a three-pointer, we see it, and it is passed on to the rest of the team."

Quimby's goals for the rest of the season and the rest of her career remain focused on the team. "Ultimately, putting the team before myself is what I want," she said. "The team is going through some tough times, but by stepping up the defense and focusing on playing well, we can make it to the Patriot League final."

Fedorjaka summed up Quimby to this point: "The 1000-point mark is a tremendous accomplishment for any player to reach halfway through her junior year, especially considering the scorers she is alongside," she said.

"But Vicki is developing into a great leader and has really grown as a player. If she keeps improving and continues to elevate her game, I expect her to be one of the primary pieces in us winning a Patriot League Championship."

AWARDS from page 7A

Eiben's long list of honors in addition to being named an Associated Press Second Team All-American includes being named an American Football Coaches Association All-American, a First Team All-Patriot League Selection, a First Team Eastern College Athletic All-Star and a Patriot League Scholar Athlete. He is also a member of the Academic All-District 2 First Team, the 1-AA All-American Third Team, Don Hansen's Football Gazette All-American second Team and was named the team MVP at Bucknell by his teammates.

He was included in the list of 25 nationally honored players selected to the AFCA Division I-AA Coaches All-American Team. The team consists of 11 offensive players, 11 defensive players, a punter, a kicker and a return specialist. The AFCA started the selection of an All-American team in 1945. They currently choose a team from all four divisions. What makes this team special is that it is the only team chosen by the men who know the players the best: the coaches. Eiben is the sixth Bucknell football player to ever receive the honor.

Eiben and fellow senior teammate Vince Ficca were both selected to the 2000 Eastern College Athletic Conference All-Star Team. They were the seventh and eighth players to earn the honor under head coach Tom Gadd.

Eiben is the fourth Bucknell football player to be selected to The Sports Network's I-AA All-American Team. He is the last Bucknell honoree selected to The Sports Network Team since Ed Burman in 1995.

Eiben was also named to Don Hansen's Football Gazette All-American Second Team and received honorable mention as a return specialist. Ficca, junior running back Jack Powell and sophomore place kicker Chris Lundberg also earned honorable mention status for the Bison.

Evans named Academic All-American
Senior safety Dave Evans was named to the Verizon Academic All-American Second Team. Evans is the 99th Bucknell student-athlete to receive such national honor since the program started in 1952. He is the first player under Coach Tom Gadd and the 19th Bucknell football player to earn the honor.

To be considered for selection, the student-athlete must be a starter or a key reserve with a 3.20 GPA. If chosen for consideration, the student-athlete's name is placed on a ballot. Then the College Sports Information Directors of America choose the team. Evans was one of five chosen from the District 2 Team for national honor. He was one of three placed on the ballot from Bucknell along with fellow seniors Kevin Eiben and Eric Higgins. District 2 covers players from schools in Pennsylvania, New Jersey, West Virginia, Maryland, Delaware and Washington D.C.

Evans carries a 3.75 grade point average as a college engineer major at Bucknell. He is a continuing member of the Dean's list and the Patriot League Academic Honor Roll and has one of the highest GPAs on the team.

The 185 pound senior has been an important member of the Bison special teams unit and finished the year ranked third on the team with three interceptions for 119 return yards. Evans made 37 tackles this season, including 19 solo hits and a tackle for a loss of seven yards. He also had three pass breakups and recovered a fumble.

from a seven game absence, his play was ineffective, largely due to the lingering effects of knee surgery.

The Bison were able to rebound and tally a strong win in their next meeting against Army, 73-59. Bailey exploded for 28 points in the victory, and Laluga finished with 16 points. "He really put us on his back today—he played tremendously," said Flannery. Army began the game on top, running the score to 11-5 before the Bison took the lead for good at 18-15.

"At 2-2 we are right back in the Patriot League race," Bailey commented after the game.

The Bison continued the solid play they exhibited against Army for a payback of sorts in their next contest against future league rival American. Beaten by just two points in a November game against American earlier this season, the Bison held the Eagles to a staggering 14 first half points in the 61-51 home court victory.

"It was a hard fought victory and a gauge as to how far along we've come this season," Flannery said. "The defense set the tone, and the offense in the second half put it away for us."

Also contained in the victory was the Eagles' center Patrick Doctor, a player selected by ESPN's Dick Vitale as one of five sleeper prospects this year in the nation. Doctor was held to only 19 points, another testimony to the superior Bison defense in the game. Bailey finished the game with 19 points, and Laluga and Werner finished with 12 and 14, respectively.

The Bison travel to Bethlehem to take on Lehigh in the team's next action this Saturday at 7:30.

BISON SOLIDIFY LEAGUE STANDING WOMEN from page 7A

double digits for scoring, with Almind at 19 points, Quimby chipping in 16, Franks with 13 points and Monique LeBlanc '02 adding 11.

"The Cleveland State win was very pivotal," Fedorjaka said. "They were a really good team, and the kids answered in every way, shape and form. We did a super job defensively."

The Bison remained at home for a Jan. 6 matchup against Cornell University. After losing to the Big Red earlier in the year, the Bucknell was looking for some revenge, and they got it. The first 15 minutes of the game was a back-and-forth battle.

The Bison were finally able to break away in the final five minutes of the half, to extend their lead to 42-30 at halftime. The Bucknell lead got no smaller than 12 over the final 20 minutes of play, partially thanks to Quimby's career high of 33 points in the game.

The Bison kept the pressure on the Big Red and came away with a 74-55 victory. This win improved the Bison record to 9-3 on their way into Patriot League play.

The Bison opened their Patriot League schedule at Navy on Jan. 10. The first half was a low scoring affair, as the biggest lead by either team came with 5:10 to play in the half and the Bison leading 20-13. Navy finished the half on a run, and the score stood at 25-24 with Bucknell in the lead halfway through the game.

Navy came out of the locker room hot and jumped to a nine-point lead four minutes into the second half. The Bison would fight back to tie the game at 36 mid-way through the half, and the game was still tied at 53 with 2:18 left to play.

But Bucknell held on down the stretch for a 60-57 victory, and a 1-0 record in the league. "Any road win in conference is a good win," Fedorjaka said. Creamer led all scorers with 24 points on the night. Almind added 17, and Quimby put in 13 points.

The Bison traveled to Lafayette to play their second league game on Jan. 13. After a very close first half, after which the Bison trailed 33-32, the Bucknell defense clamped down.

The Leopards could only muster three field goals in the second half, and the Bison offense clicked into gear as well. Almind led all scorers in the game with 23 points, and the Bison went on the win 69-46.

Almind's performance in the past two games earned her the Patriot League Rookie of the Week honors for the fifth time in eight weeks.

The Bison returned home to host Patriot League opponent Holy Cross on January 17. BU came out flat and found themselves down 38-12 at halftime, after only scoring two points in the final eight minutes of the half.

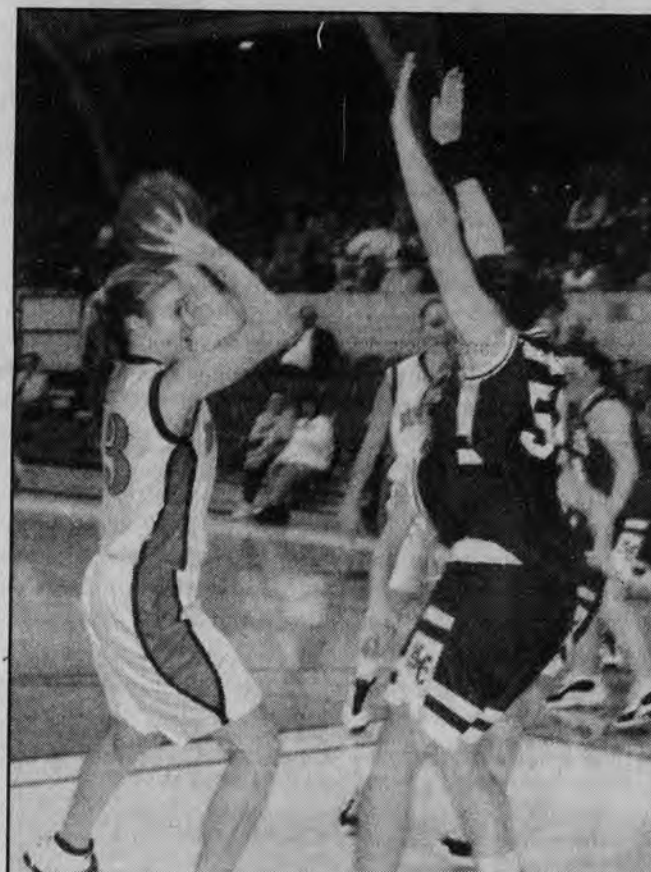

The Bison would be much more productive on offense in the second half, but the margin was too much to make up, and the final score was 76-53 in favor of Holy Cross.

"I think they threw the first punch and kept going, and we never responded," Fedorjaka said.

Saturday, the US Military Academy visited Davis Gym for a battle of two physical teams. A back-and-forth first half ended with Army leading by one at 35-34. Throughout much of the second half both teams traded baskets, and the game remained close.

Kate Rounsley '02 led the Bison in scoring with a career-high 17 points, and Creamer added 16 points to help Bucknell to a 78-73 victory.

"We weren't getting the stops defensively, but we could take the ball to the hole when we wanted," Rounsley said.

Desiree Almind '04 makes a move on her Holy Cross defender. Almind and the Bison will be in action this Saturday night, when they travel to Bethlehem, Penn. to challenge Patriot League foe Lehigh.

"We threw the first punch, and played our best physical game of the year," Fedorjaka echoed.

On Monday, the Bison faced a tough Binghamton team. After jumping out to an early lead, the Bison would falter later in the first half.

Bucknell led by as much as eight points, 29-21 with 8:39 remaining in the first half. But Binghamton would bounce back and take a 45-42 lead into the locker room.

In the second half it was almost all Binghamton. The Bearcats were able to move the ball inside often in the second half, and this helped them draw crucial fouls. Binghamton managed to connect for 16 of 18 second-half free throws, and the Bison could not keep up.

Even though Creamer led all players with 25 points and Almind added 15, it was not enough to overcome the Bearcats, and the Bison dropped to 12-5 on the year with the 84-71 loss. "We just kept letting them score; it was very disappointing," Fedorjaka said. "They were scoring in the paint and off transition."

Even though the Bison have dropped two of their last three games, they are still in very good shape and have a 3-1 record in the Patriot League.

"I'm very proud of what this team has done in out-of-conference play," Fedorjaka said.

The Bison are 9-4 in out of conference play, a vast improvement from past years. They hope to take this play into the rest of the season.

Last night the Bison went on the road to face league foe Colgate and came away with a 83-73 win. The score was tied at 72 with 4:50 remaining, but Bucknell pulled away with excellent free throw shooting down the stretch, hitting 12 of its final 13 free throws.

Creamer paced the Bison with 26 points, while LeBlanc registered career highs with 17 points and 12 rebounds.

The Bison look to improve upon their 4-1 league play when they travel to Lehigh on Saturday.

Super Bowl Extravaganza

G-Men fulfill prophecy Defense is the name of the Ravens' game

By AARON DeROSA
Staff Writer

When Jim Fassel made his triumphant declaration at a press conference on an otherwise quiet Wednesday afternoon in late November, he stated boldly that his New York Giants would make it into the postseason, and the media jumped on it like a linebacker on a QB wandering out of the pocket.

They regarded Fassel's announcement as a veritable Gettysburg Address, as he rallied the troops for the onslaught of the playoff race, diverting all attention from his players and onto himself. Fassel's guarantee, bolder than hot and spicy Cajun pork, but a little less diuretic, primed his team for the rest of the season and since then, the Giants have been undefeated, winning six straight to advance to the Superbowl.

The Giants entered the playoffs this year as the much-maligned number one seed in the NFC, hailed as the weakest to hold that spot in NFL history.

Yet they seem to have quieted critics a great deal since then. After their victory over the Eagles and the 41-point thrashing of the Vikings, the boys in blue head to Tampa to face the Baltimore Ravens, one of the most prolific and indomitable defenses of the past two decades.

It is almost laughable to expect another 381-yard, five-TD performance from Kerry Collins like in the championship game against the Vikes. However, Collins' success is crucial to a Giants' victory. And even though he may not break records, he is still the best quarterback contending. He has proven himself in big games, he has been solid all year and he fits into the Giants system better than Trent Dilfer fits in with Baltimore's.

One advantage for Collins is that Baltimore is not a big sack-oriented team. Their defense tends to sit and guard the line, which is why they are so effective against the run. This, coupled with the amazing talent of the completely revamped offensive line, powered by veterans Lomas Brown, Glenn Parker and Dusty Zeigler, Collins will have all the time he needs to rise to the occasion.

As for their running game, well... one should try to be positive. Their running game is slightly less than impressive, especially in the postseason thus far. Ron Dayne is a uni-dimensional runner. He has no lateral quickness, cannot catch well, and his use has become predictable. Until Fassel begins testing Dayne and calling some different plays, defenses know exactly where he's headed—straight up the middle. Ergo, he'll be a nonfactor.

While Tiki Barber has been impressive this season and a true team leader, the cast on his broken arm hinders him greatly. Before the Eagles game, Barber commented on how the cast prevented him from switching the ball from arm to arm, which greatly increases his chances of fumbling. Not to mention that even at full health, any running back would have issues trying to break it outside against Ray Lewis. What the Giants will most likely try to do is keep two backs in the backfield to keep Lewis guessing, simultaneously giving Collins more options to dump the ball out should he need them.

Another way that Tiki's injury has affected this team is on special teams. Amani Toomer and Ike Hilliard are spectacular receivers but not exactly the best men for returning punts, which is a tremendous weakness for the Giants, especially due to the importance of field position in this game.

On the offensive side of special teams, so long as Daluiso can split the uprights and Maynard can keep the ball behind the 20 yard line, the Giants will be in good graces.

However, the saving grace for the Giants will be their defense as it has been for much of the 1990s. They are great against the run and they will shut down Jamal Lewis at the line as they did Robert Smith and Donovan McNabb earlier this postseason. Indeed, something should be said about the heart and fortitude of this defense.

This defensive squad shut down the explosive Minnesota Vikings hailed only for their offensive cohesiveness, for not just one quarter, but four! The fact that the Giants were up 41-0 in the 3rd quarter, and their defense did not cut any slack is a testament to their talent and strength.

This, coupled with a Baltimore offense that is so flimsy it makes the Chargers look like Montana's 49ers, the Giants won't need to worry about the deep ball or any sort of brilliant passing performance from Senor Dilfer. They will be looking for turnovers and whoever wins that battle will win the game.

chances of fumbling. Not to mention that even at full health, any running back would have issues trying to break it outside against Ray Lewis. What the Giants will most likely try to do is keep two backs in the backfield to keep Lewis guessing, simultaneously giving Collins more options to dump the ball out should he need them.

Another way that Tiki's injury has affected this team is on special teams. Amani Toomer and Ike Hilliard are spectacular receivers but not exactly the best men for returning punts, which is a tremendous weakness for the Giants, especially due to the importance of field position in this game.

On the offensive side of special teams, so long as Daluiso can split the uprights and Maynard can keep the ball behind the 20 yard line, the Giants will be in good graces.

However, the saving grace for the Giants will be their defense as it has been for much of the 1990s. They are great against the run and they will shut down Jamal Lewis at the line as they did Robert Smith and Donovan McNabb earlier this postseason. Indeed, something should be said about the heart and fortitude of this defense.

This defensive squad shut down the explosive Minnesota Vikings hailed only for their offensive cohesiveness, for not just one quarter, but four! The fact that the Giants were up 41-0 in the 3rd quarter, and their defense did not cut any slack is a testament to their talent and strength.

This, coupled with a Baltimore offense that is so flimsy it makes the Chargers look like Montana's 49ers, the Giants won't need to worry about the deep ball or any sort of brilliant passing performance from Senor Dilfer. They will be looking for turnovers and whoever wins that battle will win the game.

Another way that Tiki's injury has affected this team is on special teams. Amani Toomer and Ike Hilliard are spectacular receivers but not exactly the best men for returning punts, which is a tremendous weakness for the Giants, especially due to the importance of field position in this game.

On the offensive side of special teams, so long as Daluiso can split the uprights and Maynard can keep the ball behind the 20 yard line, the Giants will be in good graces.

However, the saving grace for the Giants will be their defense as it has been for much of the 1990s. They are great against the run and they will shut down Jamal Lewis at the line as they did Robert Smith and Donovan McNabb earlier this postseason. Indeed, something should be said about the heart and fortitude of this defense.

This defensive squad shut down the explosive Minnesota Vikings hailed only for their offensive cohesiveness, for not just one quarter, but four! The fact that the Giants were up 41-0 in the 3rd quarter, and their defense did not cut any slack is a testament to their talent and strength.

This, coupled with a Baltimore offense that is so flimsy it makes the Chargers look like Montana's 49ers, the Giants won't need to worry about the deep ball or any sort of brilliant passing performance from Senor Dilfer. They will be looking for turnovers and whoever wins that battle will win the game.

Another way that Tiki's injury has affected this team is on special teams. Amani Toomer and Ike Hilliard are spectacular receivers but not exactly the best men for returning punts, which is a tremendous weakness for the Giants, especially due to the importance of field position in this game.

On the offensive side of special teams, so long as Daluiso can split the uprights and Maynard can keep the ball behind the 20 yard line, the Giants will be in good graces.

However, the saving grace for the Giants will be their defense as it has been for much of the 1990s. They are great against the run and they will shut down Jamal Lewis at the line as they did Robert Smith and Donovan McNabb earlier this postseason. Indeed, something should be said about the heart and fortitude of this defense.

This defensive squad shut down the explosive Minnesota Vikings hailed only for their offensive cohesiveness, for not just one quarter, but four! The fact that the Giants were up 41-0 in the 3rd quarter, and their defense did not cut any slack is a testament to their talent and strength.

This, coupled with a Baltimore offense that is so flimsy it makes the Chargers look like Montana's 49ers, the Giants won't need to worry about the deep ball or any sort of brilliant passing performance from Senor Dilfer. They will be looking for turnovers and whoever wins that battle will win the game.

Another way that Tiki's injury has affected this team is on special teams. Amani Toomer and Ike Hilliard are spectacular receivers but not exactly the best men for returning punts, which is a tremendous weakness for the Giants, especially due to the importance of field position in this game.

On the offensive side of special teams, so long as Daluiso can split the uprights and Maynard can keep the ball behind the 20 yard line, the Giants will be in good graces.

However, the saving grace for the Giants will be their defense as it has been for much of the 1990s. They are great against the run and they will shut down Jamal Lewis at the line as they did Robert Smith and Donovan McNabb earlier this postseason. Indeed, something should be said about the heart and fortitude of this defense.

This defensive squad shut down the explosive Minnesota Vikings hailed only for their offensive cohesiveness, for not just one quarter, but four! The fact that the Giants were up 41-0 in the 3rd quarter, and their defense did not cut any slack is a testament to their talent and strength.

This, coupled with a Baltimore offense that is so flimsy it makes the Chargers look like Montana's 49ers, the Giants won't need to worry about the deep ball or any sort of brilliant passing performance from Senor Dilfer. They will be looking for turnovers and whoever wins that battle will win the game.

Another way that Tiki's injury has affected this team is on special teams. Amani Toomer and Ike Hilliard are spectacular receivers but not exactly the best men for returning punts, which is a tremendous weakness for the Giants, especially due to the importance of field position in this game.

On the offensive side of special teams, so long as Daluiso can split the uprights and Maynard can keep the ball behind the 20 yard line, the Giants will be in good graces.

However, the saving grace for the Giants will be their defense as it has been for much of the 1990s. They are great against the run and they will shut down Jamal Lewis at the line as they did Robert Smith and Donovan McNabb earlier this postseason. Indeed, something should be said about the heart and fortitude of this defense.

This defensive squad shut down the explosive Minnesota Vikings hailed only for their offensive cohesiveness, for not just one quarter, but four! The fact that the Giants were up 41-0 in the 3rd quarter, and their defense did not cut any slack is a testament to their talent and strength.

This, coupled with a Baltimore offense that is so flimsy it makes the Chargers look like Montana's 49ers, the Giants won't need to worry about the deep ball or any sort of brilliant passing performance from Senor Dilfer. They will be looking for turnovers and whoever wins that battle will win the game.

Another way that Tiki's injury has affected this team is on special teams. Amani Toomer and Ike Hilliard are spectacular receivers but not exactly the best men for returning punts, which is a tremendous weakness for the Giants, especially due to the importance of field position in this game.

On the offensive side of special teams, so long as Daluiso can split the uprights and Maynard can keep the ball behind the 20 yard line, the Giants will be in good graces.

However, the saving grace for the Giants will be their defense as it has been for much of the 1990s. They are great against the run and they will shut down Jamal Lewis at the line as they did Robert Smith and Donovan McNabb earlier this postseason. Indeed, something should be said about the heart and fortitude of this defense.

This defensive squad shut down the explosive Minnesota Vikings hailed only for their offensive cohesiveness, for not just one quarter, but four! The fact that the Giants were up 41-0 in the 3rd quarter, and their defense did not cut any slack is a testament to their talent and strength.

This, coupled with a Baltimore offense that is so flimsy it makes the Chargers look like Montana's 49ers, the Giants won't need to worry about the deep ball or any sort of brilliant passing performance from Senor Dilfer. They will be looking for turnovers and whoever wins that battle will win the game.

Another way that Tiki's injury has affected this team is on special teams. Amani Toomer and Ike Hilliard are spectacular receivers but not exactly the best men for returning punts, which is a tremendous weakness for the Giants, especially due to the importance of field position in this game.

On the offensive side of special teams, so long as Daluiso can split the uprights and Maynard can keep the ball behind the 20 yard line, the Giants will be in good graces.

However, the saving grace for the Giants will be their defense as it has been for much of the 1990s. They are great against the run and they will shut down Jamal Lewis at the line as they did Robert Smith and Donovan McNabb earlier this postseason. Indeed, something should be said about the heart and fortitude of this defense.

This defensive squad shut down the explosive Minnesota Vikings hailed only for their offensive cohesiveness, for not just one quarter, but four! The fact that the Giants were up 41-0 in the 3rd quarter, and their defense did not cut any slack is a testament to their talent and strength.

This, coupled with a Baltimore offense that is so flimsy it makes the Chargers look like Montana's 49ers, the Giants won't need to worry about the deep ball or any sort of brilliant passing performance from Senor Dilfer. They will be looking for turnovers and whoever wins that battle will win the game.

Another way that Tiki's injury has affected this team is on special teams. Amani Toomer and Ike Hilliard are spectacular receivers but not exactly the best men for returning punts, which is a tremendous weakness for the Giants, especially due to the importance of field position in this game.

On the offensive side of special teams, so long as Daluiso can split the uprights and Maynard can keep the ball behind the 20 yard line, the Giants will be in good graces.

However, the saving grace for the Giants will be their defense as it has been for much of the 1990s. They are great against the run and they will shut down Jamal Lewis at the line as they did Robert Smith and Donovan McNabb earlier this postseason. Indeed, something should be said about the heart and fortitude of this defense.

By ROB SCHMICKER
Staff Writer

At the beginning of training camp, all eyes were on the Washington Redskins, rather than their Beltway rivals, the Baltimore Ravens. After all, Baltimore opened with 75-1 odds of winning the Super Bowl. But quietly they went 4-0 in preseason and lowered their odds to 22-1. Since then, they have had an up-and-down season, but now stand only four days away from the biggest game in franchise history. The Ravens have made it this far thanks to their awesome defense that is as good as advertised. On the other side of the ball lies a different story, as their offense is still shaky at best.

Tony Banks began the season as the starting quarterback, but only played five games before being benched in favor of Trent Dilfer.

With Banks at the helm, Baltimore went four games without scoring a touchdown. In his first game, Dilfer had the same result, extending the Ravens' touchdown-less streak to a NFL record five games.

Since then, Dilfer has done nothing but lead Baltimore to 10 straight wins. Rookie running back Jamal Lewis has been the main threat on offense, ending the season with 1364 yards. Tight end Shannon Sharpe has emerged as the team's leading receiver, but the passing game is solely used to keep the opposing defense honest. Their offensive strategy is simple—do not make any mistakes and run the ball at all times.

If they are ahead in the game, they will run the ball to eat up the clock and allow their defense to slam the door on their opponents. During the regular season, the Baltimore defense has given up a grand total of 165 points, destroying the previous record set by the 1985 Chicago Bears. They also led the league with 970 rushing yards allowed, while forcing a league-high 46 turnovers.

Ray Lewis, arguably the most intriguing story of the year, is the NFL Defensive Player of the Year and the stud of the Ravens defense. He finished the year with 137 tackles, while recording three sacks and two interceptions. He is smart, has great instincts, and can cover the field like no one else in the game today. Without Lewis they would be an excellent defense, but with him they are extraordinary.

Tony Stragusa, Sam Adams, Rob Burnett and range.

When the offense cannot get into the endzone, they are almost always assured three points as kicker Matt Stover is instant offense, connecting on a league-high 35 field goals this year. When they are unable to get into field goal range, they have another lethal weapon in punter Kyle Richardson who led the league in punts inside the 20. Teams do not want to be forced into driving 80 yards against this defense.

To what does this all lead? Total domination. While the offense will not put up big numbers (only 147 yards in the playoff win against Tennessee), the defense will create turnovers, which the Ravens will take advantage of. When they do not, they will shut down the opposing team and force them to take chances. This is not a team against which you can

Sports

Baseball from the bottom up

The much-anticipated Subway Series that sliced the Big Apple at its core produced the lowest rated viewership in World Series history. Ask most any American west of the Hudson River how they spent their idle time this past October and more than a few will tell you they watched Mash reruns or Jerry Springer episodes. Some owners and players will tell you they were a little more active this past October, busy reenacting their own World Series dreams. Just imagine Pirates Owner Kevin McClatchy popping open a bottle Korbel in his clubhouse, or in Kansas City members of the Royals faithfully peacefully charging the mound in wild celebration after notching the World Series title. I can see it now; Kansas City here I come.

For a small fee, you too can reign October, just ask the Yankees, whose owner throws cash around like Regis Philbin. Mike Mussina was the last millionaire, certainly not the final, Derek Jeter. However, the Yankees play within the rules, but are these rules fair?

Baseball has seen the competitive balance change drastically over the past decade. Other leagues such as the NFL and NBA have taken notice of this way and have implemented systems of their own such as salary caps and revenue sharing.

In the NFL, picking the Super Bowl participants for the upcoming season has been as easy as waking up on an 8am class on a Thursday. It is not impractical to believe your team will be playing in January, just ask the nearest Eagles fan. The NFL has adopted revenue sharing and salary cap restrictions to half any annual spending spree. Parity is running rampant, the struggle is not to get to the su. mit, but rather how long will you hold that place among the elite. The Rams fall victim to the "bubble gum rock" theory.

Would the Yankees lose their flavor with similar rules? The fur will fly with the next labor negotiations but beginning next winter. Do not look for a possible salary cap system to be on the top of the agenda. Union Head Donald Fehr contends, "There is no hard cap and that's good, hopefully that issue is behind us. As you know you can have a series of devices that amount to a cap."

Those series of devices will most likely be headlined by a "competitive balance draft," where players like Ichiro Suzuki and other baseball phenoms born outside of the U.S. will be placed in a draft. No more will these players be sold to the high bidder. This plan however, needs an accompaniment by several other plans.

Can you imagine the Twins forking over 13 million just to negotiate a deal with Suzuki's agent, and then paying out seven million a year for his services? Keep in mind that the Twins annual salary is almost 100 million dollars less than the Yankees league leading annual payout.

Seattle acquired Suzuki, but Minnesota could not, and yet we still wonder why Minnesota native's only head to the Metrodome to witness the aerial assault put on by Randy Moss and company. The question in Minnesota heading into spring training: How long will it take Twins fans to realize they do not have a chance?

The baseball economic study committee still has other plans, just when you thought you had enough stupidity thrust upon you for one day. The idea involves relocating current teams to others cities, which has not happened since 1971 when the Rangers moved to Texas. Officials believe if you cannot find the resources in your city to build stadiums and sign high priced free agents your city has no business in the MLB. This stemming from a game that was played in pastures by greats such as Cap Anson for a paltry salary of $2,000.

America's pastime is not corporate America. If you put your competition out of business you no longer have a profitable business of your own. Owners like Florida Marlins John Henry are seeking refuge from the assault of powers such as the Mets and Braves. Henry adds, "Competition has been destroyed to an inordinate degree in baseball."

Trying to keep up with escalating player salaries owners are falling prey to what Sports Illustrated writer Rick Reilly calls the "Corpo-Nerve Disease," where owners generate millions of dollars for selling their stadium's identity to a corporation. Even Safeco could not save Alex Rodriguez's stay in Seattle, but look at the bright side, your ticket prices will only rise 5% this upcoming season.

Officials are finding it difficult to envision results through their full fledged promotion campaign of Major League baseball. According to a Chicago based marketing report, a family of four can expect to spend an average of $131 dollars each time at the ballpark. Not a good deal when you consider it takes two hands to count the number of losses your team has just after opening week.

Syndicated columnist George Will claims fans every spring become delusional. Baseball, he adds, depends on this recurring fever of faith because everyone is tied on opening day and anything is possible. How long will it take before America realizes the constant labor struggles are due in part because of internal flaws of the game, referring to how money is spent and the unequal distribution of that money among Major League baseball teams?

This first priority next winter should be geared toward giving each club the opportunity to compete for a World Series title through revenue sharing. If America preaches equal opportunity, then its national pastime should take the same stance.

When we split the broadcast revenues of the Braves with Time Warner and other clubs with dominating local broadcast revenues, we create and feed a baseball fire throughout American cities such as Kansas City and Tampa Bay. How can we maintain a competitive balance, which arguably fuels the sports industries today, when middle and lower market teams are without the means to land the market's premier free agents each season?

The time has come to realize these inequalities, in a game that was started and maintained for a lengthy time without these inequalities, and give the 30 teams of Major League baseball all a chance to compete in 2002 with revenue sharing.

Sports Trivia

By Justin McCarthy

- 1) Which head coach has appeared in the most Super Bowls?
- 2) Who are the only three running backs to rush for 1,000 yards in each of their first six seasons?
- 3) Which quarterback led his team to 10 title games in 10 Pro seasons or two leagues? (Hint: he played for the Cleveland Browns.)

Answers: 1) Don Shula (he has coached in 18 Super Bowls); 2) Eric Decker, Steve Watson, and Tim Lincecum; 3) Tom Brady.

Bison lose nailbiter to Colgate

After busy slate over break, Bison find themselves 10-9 overall, 2-3 in League

Jordan Hardenbergh '03 scores over two Army defenders.

By ANDREW BURR
Sports Layout Editor

A 3-pointer by Colgate's Tim Sullivan with just 15 seconds left allowed the Red Raiders to defeat the Bison (10-9) Wednesday, 63-62.

The Bison led by as many as six late in the game, until Colgate made a run that brought the game to a 60-60 tie. A Brian Werner '03 layup gave the Bison the lead again at 62-60 when Colgate got possession back with about 30 seconds to go. Colgate's first shot was no good, but the Red Raiders collected their own rebound and set it back to Sullivan who was good from behind the arc for the win.

"We had every opportunity to control this game," said Bison Head Coach Pat Flannery.

An even tougher game followed for the Bison, this time in Charlottesville against then-eighth ranked Virginia. The Cavaliers were victorious 99-49, only the second time all season the Bison were held to under 50 points. A big reason for the sluggish offense was the smothering man-to-man defense of Virginia, which out-rebounded Bucknell by 16. Boskai Lalugba '03 led the Bison with 14 points in the contest.

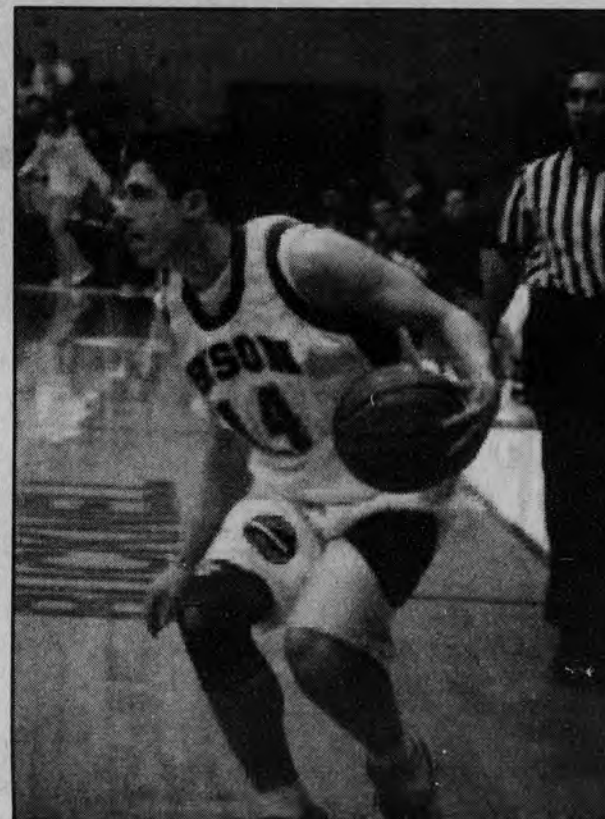

The Bison re-acquainted themselves with the win column in their next contest against UMBC, by the slim margin of 70-68. Co-captain Bryan Bailey '02 scored 26 points and Lalugba added 16 points in the win. The game was not always so close, as the Bison led 51-38 with about thirteen minutes left. A drive by UMBC brought them to within two points with 4.8 seconds left, but the Bison were able to hold. With the win, Flannery celebrated his 100th career win with Bucknell.

Flannery wouldn't have to wait longer than the following game for his 101st win, as the Bison returned home after four games to defeat Mount St. Mary's 73-58. Both Werner (10 points, 10 rebounds) and Lalugba (20 points, 10 rebounds) recorded double-doubles, and Bailey was also in double figures with 14 points. The Mountaineers cut the Bison lead to under 10 points on three occasions in the second half, but were never able to take control of the game.

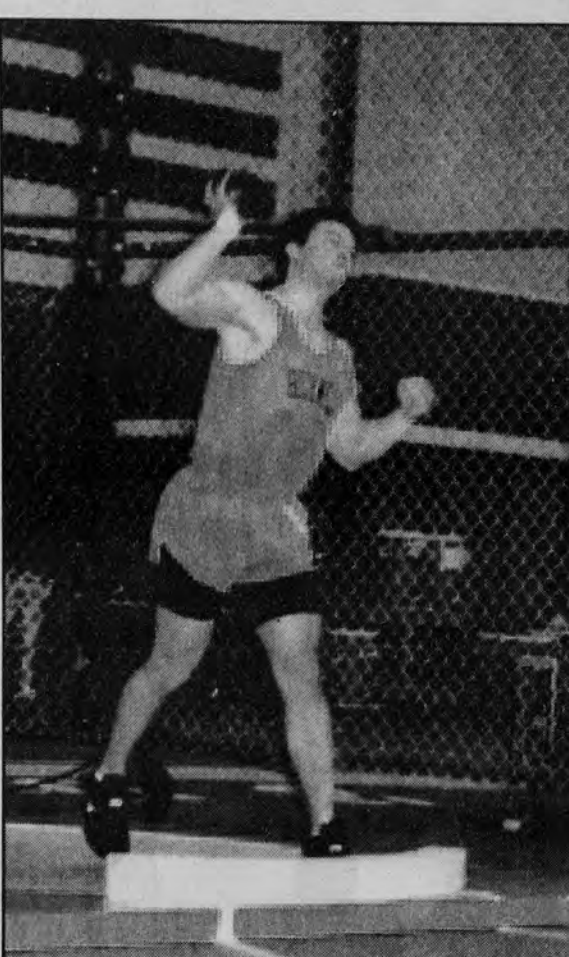

The Bison experienced a setback in their next game, this one at home, in the form of a 81-58 defeat to Canisius. The loss also ended Bucknell's five game winning streak in Davis Gymnasium. The Bison would pull to within nine points with a minute to go before halftime, but that is the closest they would get. Lalugba did however complete his second double-double in as many

See BASKETBALL, page A8

Jake Ramage '01—Bucknell's deadly 3-point shooter—looks for an open jumper.

Indoor track continues its dominance

Bucknell will host the Bison Open this Saturday.

By ROSE SEDO
Senior Writer

Before classes had even started for the rest of the Bucknell community, the Bison men and women's track teams were busy training and performing in a series of competitions.

On Jan. 6, the Bison claimed first place in a scoring meet in the Gerhard Fieldhouse. The Bison men posted seven first place finishes and scored a team total of 93 points, outdistancing runner-up St. Joseph's with 46 points, more than doubling their point total. The Bucknell women had 11 first-place showings, finishing when she cleared a height of 10'4". Her vault was not only good enough to move her up on the Bucknell charts, but it also earned the Bison a victory in the pole vault.

Charity Brady '03 finished the 200-meter dash in a time of 26.41, seven hundredths better than her previous career best. Brady remains in the sixth place position in the all-time record books, while classmate LaTonya McSwain '02 finished third in the 800-meter run with a time of 2:17.56, moving her into sixth place all-time.

Rounding out the record breakers on the women's team was Khadija Sharif ishing with 103 points. The women also bested runner-up Maryland-Eastern Shore by more than 50 points.

In addition to the seven event titles by the Bison men, one individual placed on the school's all-time top 10 performers chart. Freshman Noel Powell bettered his previous time in the 200-meter dash of 22:55 set earlier this season by crossing the finish line in an exceptionally quick time of 22:20. This time moves him up into the second slot all-time and is also fast enough to qualify him for IC4As.

The women had four individuals place on Bucknell's all-time performances chart. Freshman pole-vaulter Abigail Bouzan-Kaloustia moved up into a tie for second place on the all-time chart when she cleared a height of 10'4". Her vault was not only good enough to move her up on the Bucknell charts, but it also earned the Bison a victory in the pole vault.

On the men's side, senior James Hollins captured the triple jump with a final leap of 46'5 1/4". Classmates Brad Wertz and James Stack captured the 3000-meter and 5000-meter runs with times of 8:49.38 and 15:41.48, respectively. Putting in a fine performance in the 35-lb. weight throw for the victory was Adam Kaufman '03 with a 47' 10 1/2" measurement.

Also receiving the gold in the sophomore class was Greg Costello, who won the mile run in a time of 4:20.42. Rounding out the great individual performances for the men was junior J.C. Whitaker, who tied the school's second best pole vault height of 15'9" while capturing the event.

The distance medley relay team of seniors Matt Davis and Andy Hunsberger and sophomores Artie Gulden and Eric Furst captured gold in a time of 10:23.37. And the 4x800 Relay team of P.J. Ward '02, Code Strong '02, Aaron Hanlon '04 and Mike Euell '02 finished first in 8:00.47.

The men's and women's track & field teams were in action again last Saturday, when they hosted Delaware, Lock Haven, Towson, St. Francis (PA), Wagner and Florida International. Both the Bucknell men and women claimed first place. The Bison men posted eight first place finishes and scored a team total of 212 points to outdistance runner-up St. Francis, while the women had 11 first place showings and finished with 199 points to best runner-up Temple.

In addition to the eight event titles by the Bison men, three individuals placed on the school's all-time top 10 performers chart. Kaufman bested his previous distance of 48'9" in the 35 lb. weight throw by tossing it 51'9 3/4". The toss is not only a career-best but it also puts Kaufman in sixth place all-time at Bucknell.

The women had four individuals place on the all-time performances in chart. Three pole vaulters did not change position on the all-time performances list, but they did improve on their career bests. Freshman Shannon Benson remained in second by clearing 10'10"; Bouzan-Kaloustia stayed in third on the charts by matching her career-best of 10'4"; and junior Samantha Klotz broke into the top-ten when she cleared a height of 8'10" in the pole vault. Winning the 20-lb. weight throw with a distance of 47'6 1/2", freshman Maria Garcia also moved into the seventh slot on the top-ten performers list at Bucknell.

"We're off to a great start to the season, and we pretty much have dominated the competition. We've been consistent in most places," said assistant coach Steve Klin, "and we're currently getting geared up for Penn State. These meets have just been another stepping stone with the big meets ready to come."

The men's and women's track & field teams look to continue their dominance when they host the annual Bison Open this Saturday.

Bison Calendar

WRESTLING	MEN'S BASKETBALL	WOMEN'S BASKETBALL	SWIMMING & DIVING	INDOOR TRACK & FIELD
Sat., Jan. 27 at Maryland 1:00 p.m.	Sat., Jan. 27 at Lehigh 7:30 p.m.	Sat., Jan. 27 at Lehigh 5:30 p.m.	Sat., Jan. 27 at Lehigh 7:30 p.m.	Sat., Jan. 27 BISON OPEN 9:00 a.m.

THE Bucknellian

PART 2

January 26, 2001

Weekend Weather
Hi: 40 Low: 25 Friday	Hi: 44 Low: 23 Saturday	Hi: 42 Low: 23 Sunday

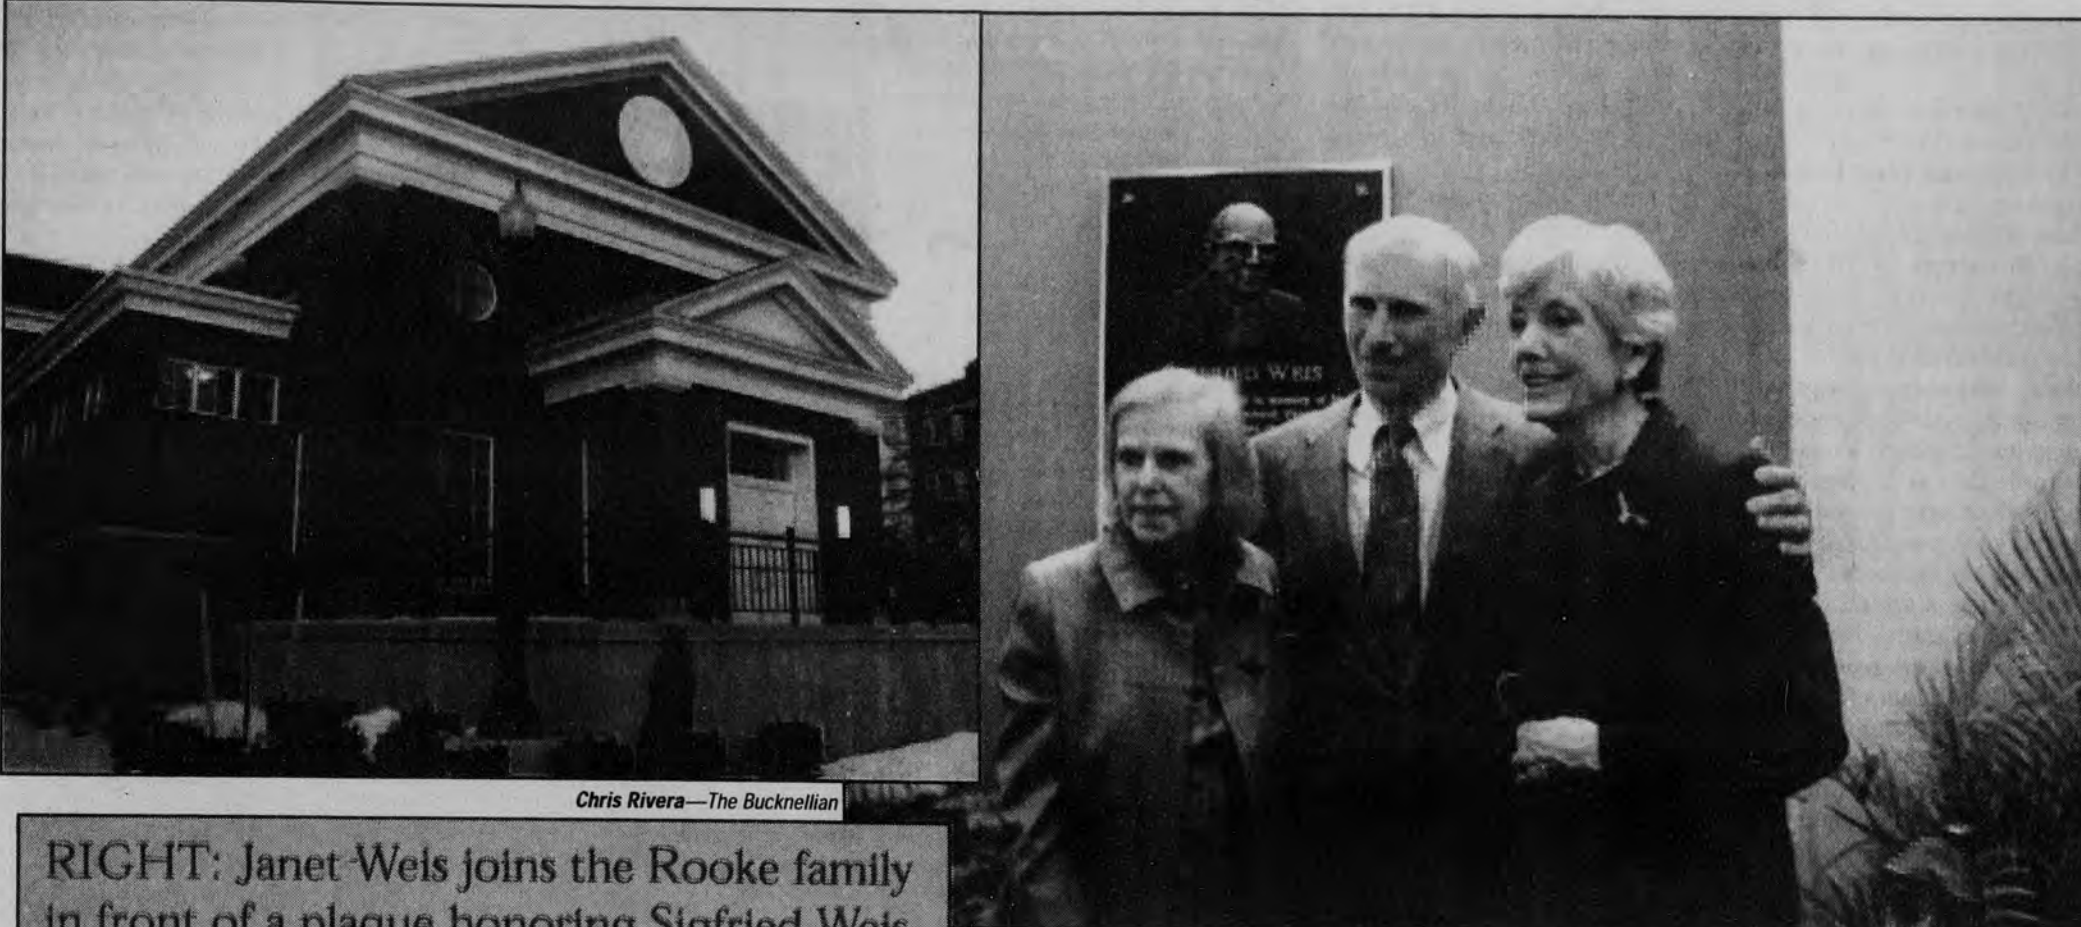

New Sigfried Weis Music Building dedicated

By JENNY JOHNSON
Senior Writer

Nearly two hundred faculty, students, alumni and administrators gathered Saturday, Jan. 20 to celebrate the dedication of the new music building located next to the Weis Center for Performing Arts. It was a day full of activities commending the department for its successes thus far, and also celebrating the future. This occasion included a luncheon, a ribbon-cutting ceremony and performances by students and faculty.

The Rooke family and the Weis family, two generous contributors, also attended the festivities of the day. It was not a difficult decision to dedicate the new building to Sigfried Weis, former President Gary Sojka said at the ribbon-cutting ceremony. With the support of the Rooke family, the new building was named after Weis—a man dedicated to expanding education and the arts.

See DEDICATION, page B8

RIGHT: Janet Weis joins the Rooke family in front of a plaque honoring Sigfried Weis. TOP: The Sigfried Weis Music Building.

Ashcroft nomination draws stiff criticism

By AMANDA KAUFMAN
Staff Writer

President George Walker Bush's nominee for Attorney General has been the topic of much debate both on and off Capitol Hill.

But who is John Ashcroft, and why does he merit such controversy? A graduate of both Yale University (A.B., 1964) and the University of Chicago (J.D., 1967), Ashcroft has held various legal and governmental positions.

In addition to being a lawyer, Ashcroft was a Republican nominee for the U.S. House of Representatives in 1972. Missouri auditor from 1973 to 1975, Missouri assistant attorney general from 1975 to 1976, Missouri attorney general from 1976 to 1985, Missouri governor from 1985 to 1993, and U.S. senator from 1994 to 2000.

At press time, Republican leader Trent Lott predicted all 50 GOP senators would back Ashcroft. Most agree Ashcroft will be confirmed eventually, with the support of some Democrats.

Ashcroft picked up his first Democratic vote when Sen. Zell Miller of Georgia announced his support.

Both Sen. Herb Kohl, D-Wis., and Sen. Joseph Biden, D-Del., predicted Ashcroft would probably be confirmed.

So far, only Sen. Barbara Boxer, D-Calif., and Sen. Jon Corzine, D-N.J., are openly opposing him. However, other Democrats have expressed doubts about Ashcroft.

Diane Feinstein of California said, "I see a kind of metamorphosis going on... Somebody who has been really on the far right... is now making a change. Frankly, I don't know what to believe." The major points of contention are Ashcroft's views on abortion, gun control and race relations.

As a Republican senator from Missouri, Ashcroft proposed a constitutional amendment that would "outlaw nearly all abortions, including cases of rape and incest."

He also reportedly opposed most forms of contraception. On Monday, marches and other events by abortion opponents were being countered with efforts by abortion rights groups to mobilize their forces against Ashcroft with radio ads and Internet campaigns.

Americans in general remain split on abortion. An exit poll in the presidential election found more voters favored keeping abor-he promises that his personal views will not hinder his ability to enforce the current laws.

Almost as heated as the abortion controversy is the racism debate. Ashcroft has been accused of being a racist based on his opposition vote that blocked a federal judgeship from Ronnie White, a black Missouri Supreme Court judge.

Ashcroft told Sen. Richard Durbin, D-Ill., that he was moved by letters from Missouri sheriffs about White's vote to overturn the conviction of a man who killed a sheriff's wife and three lawmen.

It should be noted, however, that Ashcroft voted in favor of lifetime appointments for 26 out of 27 black judges nominated for the positions.

Representative J.C. Watts of Oklahoma, the only black Republican congressman, said, "I have never detected anything but dignity and respect for one's skin color from John Ashcroft."

The questions raised in Ashcroft's confirmation hearing have raised important political questions; they will not disappear in the new Bush administration.

Students recount their experiences abroad

See Page 3B...

FEATURES

Father Marty Moran: more than a spiritual leader

In addition to his religious responsibilities, Catholic Campus Minister involved in athletics, academics and administration

By SARAH GUDENKAUF
Staff Writer

Father Marty Moran is an integral part of University life, though he may not be fully recognized. First and foremost, he is the Roman Catholic priest assigned to campus ministry. As faculty coordinator for the men's and women's rugby teams as well as a foundation seminar professor, he has also been given the opportunity to touch many students he otherwise may never have come into contact with as a campus religious leader. He is also involved in University administration as a member of the dean of students staff, and is a recent addition to the Judicial Board.

To many students, however, he is simply what makes Catholic Campus Ministry (CCM) successful. As Megan Peace, a CCM member said, "I think that the main reason CCM is such a successful organization is the friendly atmosphere. Students are always welcome to visit the Newman House, and Father Marty really takes the time to get to know them."

Moran was ordained a priest in 1988, and has been working at the University since 1988. His decision to join the priesthood started as a practical joke. Some of his friends signed him up, and, after receiving the information at a weekend information session, he decided that the priesthood was indeed his calling. "I felt that the Church needed some energetic people," he said.

Moran also attributes his childhood to contributing to his decision to become a priest. He grew up in Hershey, Pa., in a very close and religious family. His father was very involved in their church and his mother was passionate about labor unions and women's issues, resulting in his knowledge of diversity at an early age. "When I was in sixth grade and most people were playing I learned how to put picket signs together."

Since his ordination he has worked often with students. Moran feels that campus work is important because it is where students are going to find their devotions, and therefore, it is where to cultivate the future of the Catholic Church. He likes working with college students because he feels that, while students cannot be reached as well in high school, once they enter college they are ready to listen.

"College challenges me. I was stuffed forward to, not so much to sell the Church, but to show students how positive it really is," he said.

Many things are important to Moran. First and foremost is his religion. "The comfort zone of it—that it is not just a set of beliefs, but I really share that vision of what it is really about," he said.

Father Moran is also a large part of his life. He sees not just his immediate family as essential but his global family as well as he recognizes the need to look at the big picture for what is important. Religious dialogue and people having fun in their faith are also things that he strives to achieve.

Moran spends the majority of his time working with students involved in CCM. He lives at Newman House and is responsible for facilitating the smooth running of the CCM steering committee. He says Catholic Mass, hears confessions, and is available for students.

Although Moran would give more credit to students than himself, it is his own view of what he wants CCM and Newman House to be for students that makes it such a positive aspect of University life.

"People need a family or sense of belonging to some house or place they can call their home," he said. "That is why I see the philosophy that we are a home away from home and to try to build a family where people are always accepted whether they are searching for religion or backing away."

"I think the key to CCM's success as an organization at Bucknell comes from its members. People are extremely friendly and welcoming and there's a real spirit of friendship that begins with Fr. Marty and spreads to anyone who comes to any CCM activities," Alyson Walker, a CCM member, said.

Chris Rivera also believes that it is an organization worth being involved in, due in large part to Moran's efforts. "Fr. Marty has gone out of his way to make CCM flourish in the past three years. CCM is successful largely in part because students control many aspects of the organization. Fr. Marty acts as a liaison between the diocese of Harrisburg and the University. This alone is quite impressive given the inherent politics of both. CCM is a great organization because it is truly accepting of everyone. Catholics and non-Catholics alike are welcomed at all CCM events."

Newman House has also been a great asset to the development of CCM. Fr. Marty has made Newman House a real "home away from home" for hundreds of students each week. It creates a family atmosphere for everyone who walks into the house. Food, faith and fun have been the three "f's" that have held the organization together. CCM looks forward to continually helping students enhance their faith through activities, service, and prayer."

Moran has many ideas for the future of CCM and the University. He would like to see more dialogue and shared programming between the campus religious groups. He believes that community outreach should become a bigger part of University life through CCM involvement in service with more social justice programming and campus-wide efforts to become a part of the Lewisburg community.

In addition, Moran feels the University needs to address the issue of diversity in student's backgrounds, believing that, at times, students from less privileged backgrounds may have trouble adjusting to University life, and that there should be programming to assist students with their transition.

Neither CCM nor the University would be the same without Moran's involvement in their many activities. His rich personality and enthusiasm for the future will surely continue to inspire students.

Chris Rivera—The Bucknellian
Father Marty helps in more ways than one.

Giving stuffed animals a name and a home

By ADAM TURBETT
Staff Writer

As many of us are aware after reading last week's campus-wide email, the Humanities College is sponsoring an event called "Humanities for Humanity." However, you may not know the specifics of what this great charity is all about.

"Humanities for Humanity" is a modified gift drive, where students and faculty donate stuffed rational quote. One of the quotes that will be used is by Desiderata, and proclaims, "With all its shame, drudgery, and broken dreams, it is still a beautiful world. Be cheerful. Strive to be happy."

After the stuffed animals are "tagged," they are to be delivered to a local hospital by the Humanities College students. Each one will be either left outside of the patient's room or given to the patient directly, depending on the patient.

These animals will not only be given to younger children, but also to any patient who needs a little more hope during their hospital stay.

There is also a message on the tag indicating that, while the recipient may keep them, the animal, it is also a traveling one, and if possible, it should be passed along to someone else who needs it in the future.

The Humanities College is currently collecting stuffed animals for this drive. If you want to contribute, you can drop off a stuffed animal on the second floor of the new dorm, southwest hall. There are signs along the way if you need them.

If you are on the downhill side of campus, animals can also be left with Jim Wilgen in Smith Hall room 103.

This program was designed to do just that. In the words of one of the Humanities College Junior Fellows, "We, as college students, in the winter, feel shut in, or gray, as a result of the long winter months."

Continuing in that vein, the student added, "We have each other to talk to, but we have to realize that we can both give ourselves a connection to others and give others a very small, unexpected bit of positive wisdom in the form of a quote attached to a stuffed animal."

The stuffed animals are given a tag by the students of the Humanities College, which includes the animal's name and an inspi-

Dan Blair—The Bucknellian
Students with the bears they donate to hospitals.

CDC to host internship expo at fieldhouse

By JENNIFER JENCHURA
Senior Writer

Polish your resumes and tweak those cover letters! The Career Development Center presents its second annual Internship Expo Friday January 26 in the Fieldhouse. Both local and national companies ranging from the Lewisburg Prison Project to Arthur Andersen will be on hand to talk to students and collect resumes. Approximately 39 companies will be present to network with students, many of which are alumnae.

Sarah Bell, Assistant Director of the Career Development Center said, "Companies are eager for Bucknell students. That's why they send their alumni to recruit on-campus. Employees see it was a way to pre-recruit for full-time work. It also gives them a chance to see many students at once."

The Internship Expo was developed last year and drew approximately 450 students and 35 employers. Because of the large turnout, this year's Expo has been moved from the Terrace Room to the Fieldhouse to allow for both more employers and students.

Even if students are planning to go to graduate school, internships are still recommended. "I think the fair can be for everyone. Actual industry and field experience are very helpful in finding full-time work," said Bell.

The brainchild of Laura Denbow, Director of the Career Development Center, Bucknell's internship program is relatively new. Although only 18 months old, it allows students as well as employers to look to one place, instead of being split up into different majors' departments.

"It was decentralized. Students were clamoring for [a program]," said Denbow.

Working with Bucknell alumni clubs, the CDC held successful networking events over winter break in Boston and Philadelphia. Other upcoming semester events include trips to a New York City communications fair as well as a Washington, DC career fair.

This year the program expanded to an online recruiting service and a free course that counsels students. The popular Jumpstart program, launched last semester, is designed to aid underclass students in their career planning and development. Facilitated by a CDC counselor, the four-session course covers self-exploration, industry research, internship search strategies, and job search tools. Signups are already underway for this semester, in which the CDC has four different classes for the course.

The recruiting process at Bucknell has also been facilitated with eRecruiting.com. It allows Bucknellians to submit their resume online and then check back to see if an employer would like to contact the student. The program already has plans to expand next year.

"We are working on enhancing our program for next year, by offering internship recruiting year-round as well as offering some local internships. There are some really great companies in this area," said Bell.

Students should not depend on one event to secure an internship. "The Internship Expo is a great way to network, but it's not the only way to go. The employers coming have the money and resources to send recruits," said Bell.

Denbow suggests answering three questions before looking for internships and careers. "Which geographic region do I want to enter? Which skills do I want to develop and utilize? Which type of industry can utilize my skills?"

The CDC warns not to just use one type of resource. "There isn't one way to go about a job search, but if you are not sure how to go about it, we want students to see the CDC as a resource," said Denbow.

The biggest problem with career searches is that students don't understand their industry or are not consistent with their search. "Students need to now when their industry hires. Students must make their search a priority and spend a little time each week. We encourage students to focus on a particular opportunity, but the most successful students take a broader approach," said Bell.

Another challenge is the large number of juniors studying abroad in the spring semester. "If they don't contact the CDC before they leave they often find it difficult to get started when they return," said Denbow.

The CDC is continuously running programs to help Bucknell students at all levels of the job search. "We do not want seniors to feel that if they don't have a job by now that it is too late, we have many sessions to help with the career search," said Bell.

"Bucknell students sell themselves, we just have to get them in front of that decision-maker," said Denbow.

Features is under new management. We are looking for help. Call Jolene at 74681 or Sandi-Jo at 76431 if you are interested.

FEATURES

An abroad perspective: Bucknellians in London

By SUSAN LEHMAN
Contributing Writer

As I sat in the New Airport last August, I anxiously surveyed the scene. Thirteen other Bucknellians were there, saying goodbye to family and friends. Soon we would embark together on a three-and-a-half month long trip, which would have the propensity to change all of our lives. Once we had boarded the interminably delayed flight, there was no turning back.

As the plane touched down in the United Kingdom, I pondered my decision. Even before coming to Bucknell, I knew I wanted to Wenner would be our guides for classes and trips that pertained to the theme of our program, "Revolutionary Britain." Our studies would trace England's development through its many revolutions, pre-industrial to the current computer revolution.

The bus that shuttled us from Gatwick pulled up to 32 Burton Street, in a quiet neighborhood near the Bloomsbury section of London. The 14 of us, baggage in tow, entered the flats that would be our homes for the next several months.

We entered tourist mode for the next few days, seeing ments on those trips, but I think the most vivid was the night spent in a little pub called "The Boat" in Iron Bridge Gorge where

ture took us to places like the National Gallery, Tate Britain and Tate Modern Museums, and the Victoria and Albert Museum around post-modern British theater. Of course, no one can visit England without seeing Shakespearean plays; we enjoyed two versions of "Hamlet," one at the Globe Theater where we had the distinct pleasure of being "groundlings," which included standing rather uncomfortably for the entire three-hour performance.

The past few months have not been some of the smoothest months for British citizens, but our group was luckily unaffected by the current political, economic and environmental difficulties.

There was a fuel strike in October that brought much of Britain to a halt as most petrol stations across the country ran out of gas. A train accident during the same month launched a country-wide rail replacement, bringing delays and cancellations to train travelers all over the country that carried over into the New Year.

If that wasn't enough, last October was the wettest on British record, causing massive flooding all over the country. Add in Millennium Dome fiasco and the BSE epidemic (what we know better as mad cow disease), and there was rarely a dull moment where we viewed artwork of traditional, natural and modern significance, ranging from Van Gogh and Monet to Andy Warhol.

In the West End, London's equivalent to Broadway, we saw many plays, most centering on those trips, but I think the most vivid was the night spent in a little pub called "The Boat" in Iron Bridge Gorge where

ture took us to places like the National Gallery, Tate Britain and Tate Modern Museums, and the Victoria and Albert Museum around post-modern British theater. Of course, no one can visit England without seeing Shakespearean plays; we enjoyed two versions of "Hamlet," one at the Globe Theater where we had the distinct pleasure of being "groundlings," which included standing rather uncomfortably for the entire three-hour performance.

The past few months have not been some of the smoothest months for British citizens, but our group was luckily unaffected by the current political, economic and environmental difficulties.

There was a fuel strike in October that brought much of Britain to a halt as most petrol stations across the country ran out of gas. A train accident during the same month launched a country-wide rail replacement, bringing delays and cancellations to train travelers all over the country that carried over into the New Year.

If that wasn't enough, last October was the wettest on British record, causing massive flooding all over the country. Add in Millennium Dome fiasco and the BSE epidemic (what we know better as mad cow disease), and there was rarely a dull moment where we viewed artwork of traditional, natural and modern significance, ranging from Van Gogh and Monet to Andy Warhol.

In the West End, London's equivalent to Broadway, we saw many plays, most centering study abroad. When the time came to make a definitive choice, I found that four years of Latin in high school might have helped my SAT scores, but didn't afford me many options for destinations.

Also, being a double major, it was important that I would be able to earn full credit for my classes abroad. After much thought, I chose to enroll in Bucknell in London.

The 14 of us, jet-lagged and laden with monstrous suitcases and backpacks, were met at Gatwick Airport by our Bucknell professors, Jean Shackelford from the economics department and Pat Wenner from the computer science department.

Professors Shackelford and as much of London as we could, all the while learning how to use the quick and efficient Underground system.

As wonderful and exciting as London is, we spent most of our first two months abroad, traveling around the United Kingdom and the rest of Europe. With the Bucknell in London group, we visited Brighton, Bath, Salisbury, Stonehenge, Manchester, York and Edinburgh, Scotland as well as many smaller towns. Through our travels we saw the cradles of the industrial revolution, major political, economic and social centers, and places that seemed to be untouched by the passage of time.

We had many memorable mothe locals taught us about "proper" English and later we debated the American and English ways of controlling school violence and guns.

Our required courses in British art, architecture and theater gave us opportunities to see much of London's cultural side, supplementing the economic, scientific and historical focuses of our other courses.

Our study of art and architec-

PAGE 1B: The rear of Hampton Court Palace, close to London.

LEFT: Parliament and Big Ben taken from the ferris wheel on the Thames. MIDDLE: Mourners leaving flowers and notes at Kensington Palace on the third anniversary of Princess Diana's death.

RIGHT: Bucknell in Londoners (from left) Stephanie Metz, Melissa Farbman, Meagan Willits, Dave Kleinman, and Brian Goldsmith at the Royal Gardens at Kew.

Pictures courtesy of Susan Lehman

in many places, especially in the tea and food. The Caribbean influence is also visible in aspects of music and culture.

London, however, is still overwhelmingly British. There is a pride and reverence for England and the English traditions that its citizens hold dear; in some cases we remained puzzled by the actions and reactions of the British, and in others we happily joined their ranks. What I interpreted at first as stubbornness or general dislike for Americans can be traced deeper to that compelling patriotism.

Having recently returned to the University, I must say that I am still feeling the effects of a shock of sorts, not necessarily culture shock, because compared to the experiences of many other students studying abroad, coming back to the United States from the United Kingdom is a relatively smooth transition.

What I am feeling now is more a lifestyle shock, as what I saw in England may be a hint as to what life will be like after I leave the University's hallowed halls. I have returned to Lewisburg with a partial longing for such freedom and experience.

but also a new appreciation for the brevity of my time here. Someone recently asked me if I would have done anything in the last semester differently. The answer is "no."

last October was the wettest on British record, causing massive flooding all over the country. Add in Millennium Dome fiasco and the BSE epidemic (what we know better as mad cow disease), and there was rarely a dull moment where we viewed artwork of traditional, natural and modern significance, ranging from Van Gogh and Monet to Andy Warhol.

In the West End, London's equivalent to Broadway, we saw many plays, most centering

on those trips, but I think the most vivid was the night spent in a little pub called "The Boat" in Iron Bridge Gorge where

ture took us to places like the National Gallery, Tate Britain and Tate Modern Museums, and the Victoria and Albert Museum around post-modern British theater. Of course, no one can visit England without seeing Shakespearean plays; we enjoyed two versions of "Hamlet," one at the Globe Theater where we had the distinct pleasure of being "groundlings," which included standing rather uncomfortably for the entire three-hour performance.

The past few months have not been some of the smoothest months for British citizens, but our group was luckily unaffected by the current political, economic and environmental difficulties.

There was a fuel strike in October that brought much of Britain to a halt as most petrol stations across the country ran out of gas. A train accident during the same month launched a country-wide rail replacement, bringing delays and cancellations to train travelers all over the country that carried over into the New Year.

If that wasn't enough, last October was the wettest on British record, causing massive flooding all over the country. Add in Millennium Dome fiasco and the BSE epidemic (what we know better as mad cow disease), and there was rarely a dull moment

Get some great Tex and decent Mex at Buffalo Bill's

By ANDRES SOLTREN
Staff Writer

Buffalo Bill's Tex Mex Grille and Saloon is an eating establishment that provides University students with a variety of cuisine. It is located on Route 15 next to the Econo Lodge. The atmosphere around the dinner tables is good, and the bar definitely adds to the feel of the place. The interesting mix of good country and contemporary Latino music helps the ambience a bit, although most of the music is Caribbean and not Mexican at all.

The variety of food available is the strength of Buffalo Bill's. The restaurant offers everything from enchiladas and burritos to hamburgers and crab cakes. The first difficult decision faced by students will be between several good appetizers. They are labeled under "Grazing Food."

The Salsa and Tortilla Chips ($2.49) are good for starters. The salsa sauce itself is weak and mild, but good for people who don't like hot or spicy food. The Nachos Grande ($7.99) is the largest appetizer available, and recommended for a larger party. For those who merely want to sample some of the food, the Three Amigos ($5.99) is a sampler consisting of onion rings, hot wings and cheese fries.

While these are all decent choices, your best bet is going with Buffalo Bill's Wings. Buffalo Bill's serves them plain or with different sauces, though the barbecue sauce is what makes these wings special. While surprisingly mild in terms of spiciness, the barbecue sauce is great and makes the wings delicious. "I'd go here just for the wings," one University student said. "Small, but delicious," another student added. One dozen wings costs $4.49, but a larger group of six or seven people should go with two dozen wings, priced at $7.99.

Next, turn to the section called "Ensaladas & Sopas." Although they do not offer many soups, the salad selection is very nice. The "Santa Fe" ($6.99) is comprised of a tortilla filled with salad greens and topped with taco meat, beans, cheese and tomatoes. This large salad could be a snack for the hungry eater, but it should be treated more as a small dinner. Another good choice is the Grilled Chicken Salad ($6.99). A student tried it and found it to her liking. "It really has a lot of chicken and the bowl was a tortilla. It was fun and filling," she said.

The Mexican "Platos" are the weakest part of the dinner. While they are decent, they really can't compare to real Mexican food. They are all served hot and with rice. The Chicken Quesadilla ($6.79) disappointed one student. "Honestly, it wasn't all that good. It only had one cheese, too," the student said.

Another disappointing entrée is the Steak Fajita ($9.99). "Bland and overcooked," described another student. "Even the rice was pretty tasteless." However, another student tried the Chicken Fajita and found it to be more to her liking. "It was surprising good." It seems that all of the chicken dishes come recommended, especially the chicken wings, which are very well done.

Yet another student tried the enchiladas ($9.99). "They certainly did not make me feel as if I were in Mexico."

They weren't terrible, but not impressive either," the student said.

The "Western Burgers and Sandwiches" section delivers tried favorites such as the familiar Bison Burger. It features the usual variety of burgers, ranging in price from $3.79 to $6.99.

The "Chuck Wag-on Grill" brings the Texan favorites to the table. The Texas steak ($8.99) is a good choice, but the Barbecue Chicken ($9.99) should be a welcome treat. The Buffalo Filet ($21.99) is by far the most expensive meal, and is recommended only for students who have a really good on-campus job.

Finally, there is the "Pescados y Mariscos" section. The fish and shellfish (respectively) include Mahi-Mahi and Yucatan Shrimp, both $11.99.

While the variety of foods is appreciated, there are several things of which students and faculty should be aware. First, despite the small amount of people that were at Buffalo Bill's, the service was rather slow. The "Tex" part of Buffalo Bill's is easily better than the "Mex" part. And lastly, the side orders, usually strengths Tex-Mex restaurants, lack that true taste and flavoring. Other than that, Buffalo Bill's Tex Mex Grille and Saloon is a good, if not great, alternative to the usual cafeteria food. For any

Paige Cull—The Bucknellian
Buffalo Bill's, the old Varsity Club, brings the West to town.

Attention Bookstore Shoppers

The Bookstore will be CLOSED

Thursday, January 25th, Friday, January 26th, and Saturday, January 27th.

We will re-open on Monday, January 29th at our Hunt Hall location.

RETIREMENT • INSURANCE • MUTUAL FUNDS • TRUST SERVICES • EDITION FINANCING

Why is TIAA-CREF the #1 choice nationwide?

The TIAA-CREF Advantage.

Year in and year out, employees at education and research institutions have turned to TIAA-CREF. And for good reasons:

- Easy diversification among a range of expertly managed funds
- A solid history of performance and exceptional personal service
- A strong commitment to low expenses
- Plus, a full range of flexible retirement income options

For decades, TIAA-CREF has helped professors and staff at over 10,000 campuses across the country invest for—and enjoy—successful retirements.

Choosing your retirement plan provider is simple. Go with the leader: TIAA-CREF.

THE TIAA-CREF ADVANTAGE

Investment Expertise

Low Expenses

Customized

Payment Options

Expert Guidance

Ensuring the future for those who shape it.™

1.800.842.2776

www.tiaa-cref.org

For more complete information on our securities products, call 1.800.842.2776, ext. 5500. For prospectuses, read them carefully before you invest. • TIAA-CREF Individual and Institutional Services, Inc. and Teachers Personal Investors Services, Inc. distribute securities products. • Teachers Insurance and Annuity Association (TIAA), New York, NY and TIAA-CREF Life Insurance Co., New York, NY issue insurance and annuities. • TIAA-CREF Trust Company, FSB provides trust services. • Investment products are not FDIC insured, may lose value and are not bank guaranteed. © 2001 Teachers Insurance and Annuity Association—College Retirement Equities Fund, New York, NY 0102

U-SAVE
AUTO RENTAL

Low, Low Rates !

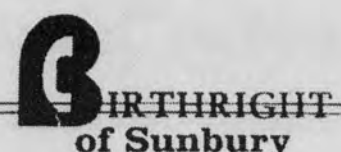

*We bill insurance companies direct.

*Major credit cards accepted.
*Must be 21 or older.

Earning the right to serve you each and every time.

524-0000

Rt.15 & Nth 7th St.
Lewisburg, Pa. 17837
Mon-Fri 8:00-5:00
Sat. 8:00-12:00

Free Pregnancy Test
Confidential Counseling
AN ABORTION ALTERNATIVE
Hours: Mon - Wed - Fri 12:30 to 4 pm

351 Woodlawn Ave.
Sunbury, Pa. 17837
570-286-8560
1-800-550-4900

ARIZONA CAFE
Outdoor Patio and Fireside Dining
Quesadillas Chicken Soft Tacos Monster Burritos Enchiladas Seafood Steaks
Most Meals $9 - $13 No Charge Cards (Checks Accepted)
Bring in this Coupon for 1 FREE virgin margarita with each etree purchased.
From Bucknell: Take Market St (Rt 45). Cross bridge and stay straight until ends. Turn Right. Exactly 4.0 mi on Left.
Open Tues-Thurs 11:30-9, Fri & Sat 11:30-10, Sun 11:30-8
Reservations Recommended

When you can't see eye-to-eye with the IRS get an ear

Fact is, most federal tax returns go through without a hitch. But for tougher problems, you have powerful help. Now the Taxpayer Advocate Service is here to help taxpayers who can't resolve an ongoing tax issue through the usual IRS channels. Or those who face significant hardship unless relief is granted. Your personal Taxpayer Advocate can review the situation from a fresh point of view—yours. The same person works with you until the issue is resolved quickly and fairly. To find out if you qualify for a personal Taxpayer Advocate, phone toll-free 1-877-777-4778.

The Internal Revenue Service Working to put service first

Sakuntala Fine Indian Cuisine

Try us, it's wonderful!
Vegetarian Buffet Dinner: $6.95
Non-Vegetarian Buffet Dinner: $8.95
Opens Monday thru Friday 12:00 noon to 9:00 pm
Saturday 4:00 pm to 9:00 pm
236 Iron Street, Bloomsburg, Phone 389-0281
www.sakuntala.com

after this, the corporate ladder will be a piece of [cake].

In the course of facing challenges like this, you'll learn how to think on your feet. Stay cool under pressure. Take charge. Talk to an Army ROTC rep. You'll find there's nothing like a little climbing to help prepare you for getting to the top.

ARMY ROTC Unlike any other college course you can take.

SCIENCE & TECHNOLOGY

Chocolate: A legal high

Scientists explain chocolate cravings by linking it to marijuana

By CHERYL MYERS
Senior Writer

For all of those chocolate lovers, now there is a reason why you just can't say no to the alluring thought of chocolate, the tantalizing smell, and that rich, creamy taste. It is biologically addictive, and surprisingly enough produces the same chemical response as marijuana (although on a much smaller, legal level).

According to Science magazine, the active ingredient in marijuana is a cannabinoid called tetrahydrocannabinol (THC). THC elicits a number of chemical responses in the brain, resulting in the release of the hormone dopamine, a part of the brain's "reward" pathway. This same pathway is involved in other drugs ranging from nicotine to heroin. Nature states that chocolate does not contain THC, but has in it fat molecules that are similar to anandamide, a fat molecule in the brain that activates the brain's cannabinoid receptors.

The craving for chocolate and the "good" feeling of consuming it could be the result of many factors, but it does seem to be a real physiological need. The anandamide-related fats can act by imitating cannabinoids, or by increasing the anandamide levels. Whatever the mechanism may be, Nature reports that one effect of the increased levels of the anandamide fat is to "intensify the sensory properties of chocolate," making the chocolate craving much harder to ignore and very different from simply having a "sweet tooth."

Additionally, according to the Journal of the American Dietetic Association, caffeine and the chemical phenylethylamine (PEA) could also be reasons for chocolate cravings. Large amounts of PEA are found in chocolate. It is produced by the brain and is important in regulating mood. Depressed people often are lacking in this amine. PEA is structurally similar to MDMA, otherwise known as the drug ecstasy, and their actions in the brain may be related. Caffeine is known to cause arousal, making chocolate cravings similar to the need for coffee each morning. Whatever the reason for wanting to eat chocolate, chocolate addiction goes beyond its taste. For the record though, don't try to get high off of that bag of Hershey's kisses on your desk. Time has done the math, and reports that "a 130 lb. person would have to eat 25 pounds in one sitting to get a noticeable buzz."

Oil spill off Galapagos Islands devastates wildlife

By JESSICA RYAN
Staff Writer

The Galapagos Islands, located approximately 600 miles off the coast of Ecuador, were environmentally scarred when a tanker ruptured, releasing 150,000 gallons of fuel into the Pacific Ocean. According to the New York Times, human error caused the Ecuadorian tanker, Jessica, to begin leaking on Friday, Jan. 19.

The leak was accelerated by surging waves widening the cracks in the already damaged hull. Although stopping the flow was hopeless, numerous environmentalists, including the U.S. Coast Guard's Pollution Response National Strike Force, arrived to combat the spill.

Instruments including inflatable containment barges and large pumps were utilized to prevent further contamination, reports CNN. Even though crews desperately attempted to transfer the fuel remaining in the hull to intact storage tanks within the tanker, stopping the flow of oil was impossible.

The islands were formed four to five million years ago by underwater volcanoes, and are well known as the site where Darwin developed his theory of evolution. Due to their volcanic origin, the islands are arid with a rocky terrain and sparse cactus vegetation. Although the conditions of the islands are somewhat difficult, many unique species inhabit the land, such as tortoises, finches, sea lions, iguanas and a variety of birds. Many of these unique species are seriously threatened by the oily film that now coats their habitat. According to CBS News, the beaches are covered with oil, harming many sea lions as well as other species.

Numerous animals are already victims of the devastating spill. In an attempt to ease the impact upon the variety of species, rescue sites are desperately helping to clean the fur and feathers of the injured animals.

In addition, the oil layer covering the ocean is creating a blanket of darkness, prohibiting sunlight from reaching photosynthetic organisms in the ocean. The blanket has acted as a shield, prohibiting the producers of the food chain from accomplishing their tasks, reports MSNBC. Therefore, not only have the organisms been affected by the oil clinging to their feathers and fur, but have been affected due to the disruption of the food chain.

Biologists are also concerned that the oil film on the surface will settle to the ocean floor, destroying an essential food source, algae.

As a result of the ocean currents, the spill continues to spread, reports the New York Times. The unpredictable ocean currents eas-

Scientists one step closer to understanding human mind

By PARKER TERRILL
Staff Writer

Scientists at Vanderbilt University released a study in the Dec. 14 issue of the journal, Nature, in which they claim to have located the part of the brain responsible for error recognition, providing new insight into human cognition.

Post-doctoral fellows Velt Stuphorn and Tracy L. Taylor, under the guidance of Professor of Psychology Jeffrey D. Schall, performed a series of experiments involving macaque monkeys. The data recorded on the monkey's brain activity showed special promise in understanding human self-control mechanisms.

The scientists placed each monkey on a chair in front of a computer screen. The monkeys were first trained to maintain focus on a black dot that would appear in the center of the screen and then disappear without warning. The dot would then reappear on the edge of the monkey's peripheral vision. When the monkey switched its focus from the center of the screen to the new location of the dot, it would be rewarded with a glass of juice.

Once the monkey could successfully perform this task, a new dot was introduced. When the main dot would disappear from the center, a dot would appear on the edge as usual, however the dot in the center would reappear. Monkeys who kept their heads focused on the center dot were given juice; monkeys who did not were given nothing.

While monitoring the monkey's brain activity, scientists discovered activity of neurons in the area of the brain known as the supplementary eye field. They concluded that this particular activity was not only responsible for performing the eye movements, but regulating them as well.

While watching the monkey's behavior, the scientist recorded distinct brain activity in three different instances—when a monkey made the right decision and knew that he would be rewarded, when a monkey made an error or "Oops" decision, and when the monkey's brain sent two conflicting commands.

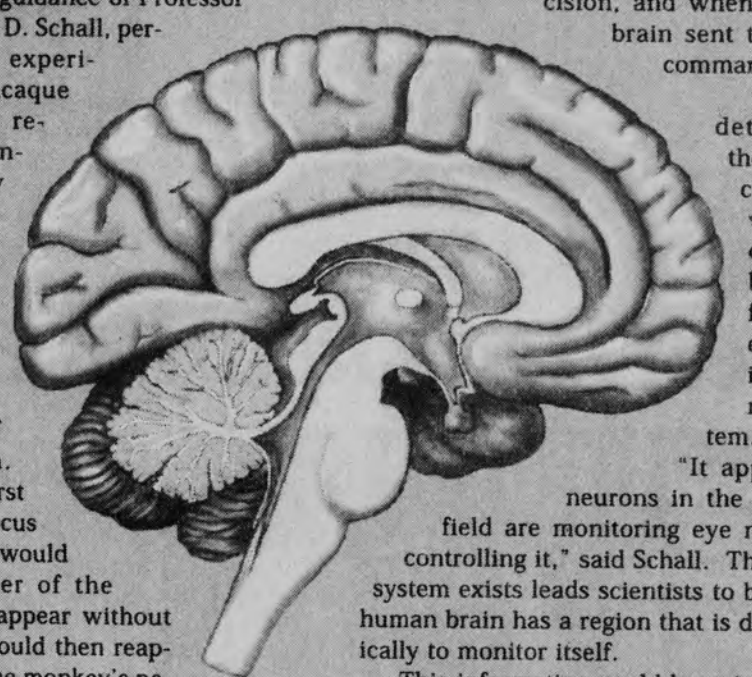

The scientists determined that the region of the central eye field, which was once thought to be responsible for controlling eye movement, is in actuality a monitoring system.

"It appears that the neurons in the secondary eye field are monitoring eye movement, not controlling it," said Schall. The fact that this system exists leads scientists to believe that the human brain has a region that is designed specifically to monitor itself.

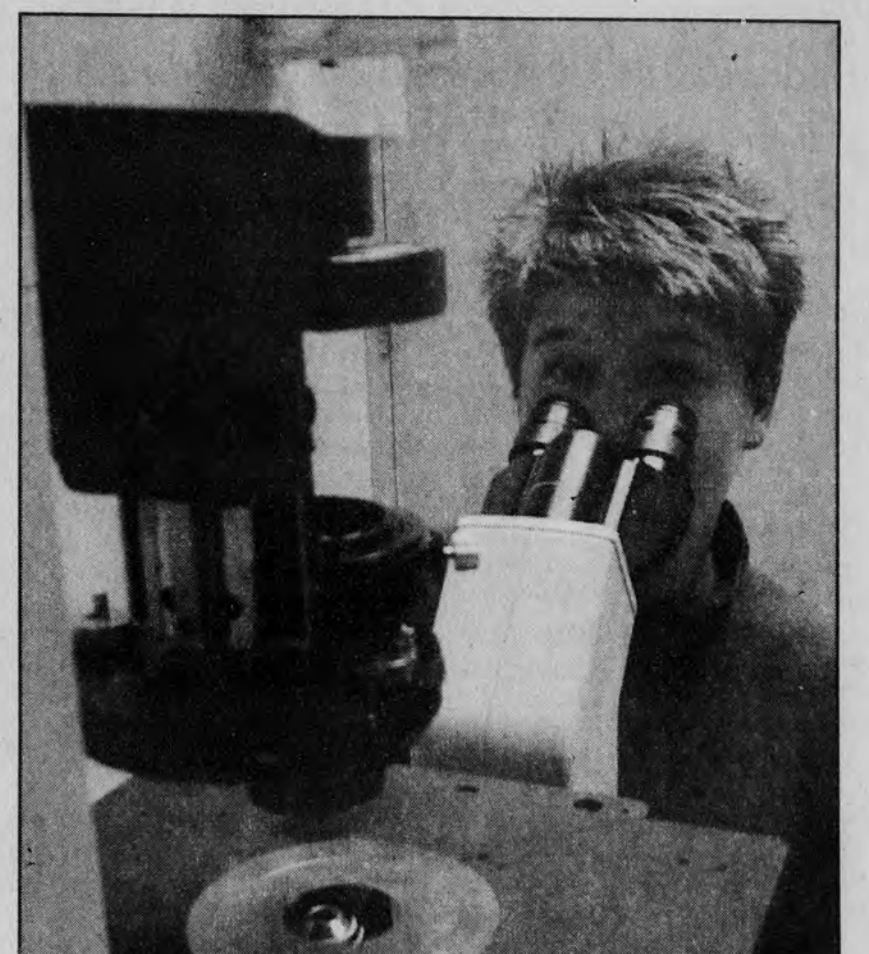

This information could have important implications for advancement in the search for a cure for schizophrenia, obsessive-compulsive disorder and psychopathic behavior.

"The work is very important because it shows the cellular basis of self-control. It gets at really basic questions of psychology and philosophy like the origin of thought and free will," said Sohee Park, associate professor of psychology at Vanderbilt.

Although similar experiments have been conducted in the past, the quality of data gathered by this experiment and its methods is astounding. Scientists hope that this information will serve an important part in the hope to one day fully understand the human mind.

Galapagos tortoises are one of many organisms affected by the recent Ecuadorian tanker oil spill.

Scope us out.

Write for S&T

Email lwaldman@ or jcetta@

Susquehanna Valley Limousine Inc.

With a long tradition of quality service to the Bucknell Community, SVL offers:

Service to and from destination, door to door
Schedule your own shuttles to and from airports for breaks
Ride sharing network to cut down on costs
Many available vehicles: vans, town car and limousine bus
Service 24 hours a day, 7 days a week

For more information or to make reservations call:

1.800.685.5567

Tuesday is Bucknell Night at Imperial Lanes

Tuesday Nights
2 hour Special for $20
9:30 - 11:30 only

Rent-a-lane for up to 6 people
Call 742-9211 to Schedule
Private Parties
Sorority/Fraternity/Date Parties

Enjoy Rock-n-Bowl with Lane Quake Sound!
Leagues and Open Bowling Available

BUSINESS & POLITICS

The 43rd President of the United States: George W. Bush

By MICHAEL GORMAN
Staff Writer

Inauguration Day 2001 was damp and cold and hotly contested, but nothing could extinguish the grandeur of democracy as the nation's 43rd president was sworn into office.

With family, friends, colleagues, and assorted dignitaries surrounding him, Bush placed his hand on the same Bible used for George Washington's first inauguration, and was sworn in shortly after 12 p.m. on Saturday, amidst the cheers and jeers of a rain-soaked crowd.

The day began with then President-elect Bush and his family having breakfast with the departing Clintons, after which they rode to the ceremony on Capitol Hill together.

Following the official transfer of power amid the pomp and circumstance, Bush participated in a brief luncheon with Congressional leaders in order to promote bipartisanship, after which the new president and his wife participated in the Inaugural Parade, ending at the White House.

The Bushes later made the rounds to many high-profile galas during a jubilant evening of dancing and celebration.

Not to be lost in all of the celebration was the job at hand.

Barely one hour after assuming the office, President Bush reversed several of the executive orders issued by President Clinton during the waning days of his presidency, proving that he fully intended to hit the ground running.

However, the day was not without disturbances. The inauguration was the most protested since Richard Nixon's second inauguration, and it is estimated that 20,000 protesters turned out to voice their disapproval. While there were protestors present for various issues, the common thread that joined them was disgust over the conclusion of the hotly contested election. This disgust was only exacerbated when Bush was sworn in by Chief Justice William Rehnquist at the ceremony.

Bush overcame protestors and inclement weather on Inauguration Day. He was sworn in by Supreme Court Chief Justice William Rehnquist.

Nevertheless, there were only minor disturbances, such as debris hurled at the president's motorcade during the parade.

The crowd of protestors was admirably civil, with only four arrests during the entire protest that included up to 20,000 people.

The high point of the day undoubtedly came with the bipartisan sincerity and soaring rhetoric of Bush's impeccably delivered (and marvelously brief) inaugural address.

"Sometimes in life we are called to do great things. But as a saint of our times has said, everyday we are called to do small things with great love. The most important tasks of democracy are done by everyone."

The speech was often poetic and always idealistic, but practical as well. Taking advantage of the large audience at his disposal, the new President passionately laid out what are to be the pillars of his presidency, as well as the moral codes that are to guide him.

Bush declared that he would "advance his convictions with civility, to pursue the public interest with courage, to speak for greater justice and compassion, to call for responsibility and try to live it as well."

Bush's address was far from the bumbling oratory for which he has become infamous. Rather, the speech was delivered with a level of dignity and sincerity that harkened to the days of Kennedy's famous inaugural address. Bush invoked revolutionary John Page as he took the reins of power. "This work continues. This story goes on. And an angel still rides in the whirlwind and directs this storm."

Protesting the placards

Liberal demonstrators protest the inauguration of George W. Bush.

Bad weather, not misguided protestors, put a damper on Bush's Inauguration, writes Tom Elliott

Tempests flared at the largest scheduled inaugural protests since 1973, expressing displeasure with the closest election in 124 years, culminating the longest election in American history, making it the biggest news story of the millennium.

Well, maybe not.

For the most part, the event was encouraged by liberal blacks whom felt their vote was disenfranchised or not counted. They were frenzied into a world of delusion by a few outspoken political voices, most notably, the Rev. Jesse Jackson. Accordingly so, they question the legitimacy of the new presidency and vow not to respect it. This is a step in the wrong direction.

Several thousand of the scheduled tens of thousands of people showed up for the protest, frustrating newscasters nationwide by dwindling down to a less-than-interesting news event.

The scene was cold, dark, and dank, perchance motivating many of the intending protestors to re-analyze their priorities and perhaps sit this one out. A good call.

Beyond the previously mentioned angry black liberals, the make-up of the protest included various organizations, fighting for various disparate causes, yet uniting under one singular theme that this was, "a day of resistance."

Some of the headlining protestors included the Justice Action Movement, the New Black Panther Party, the Rainbow/PUSH Coalition, the National Organization of Women, and Al Sharpton's National Action Network.

The event consisted of a sanctioned area of protestors that hurled insults, bottles, an egg and an orange at Bush's motorcade. Signs read, "Hail to the Thief!" and "Selected, not Elected!"

Security was equally abundant. Over 12 law enforcement agencies supplied about 7,000 officers. Steel fencing and security checkpoints were used to keep the occasion orderly.

The discontent of the protesting blacks was a based on the feeling that they had lost more in this election, that more was at stake. On Nov. 7 blacks opposed Bush almost 10:1.

The resistance extravaganza was premeditated by an unfortunate turn of events that precluded the appearance of the Rev. Jesse Jackson. This was a product of his love-child revelation surfacing on Thursday. The Reverend conceived this child with

This statement was followed by a nationwide sigh of relief—despite this roadblock, he would be able to continue judging, and most importantly, in moral tones.

The essence of all this is simple, and I will explain it after one more anecdote. Mayor Giuliani recently attributed his success with improvements in the quality of life of minorities by totally ignoring the outspoken political operatives like Jackson and the Rev. Al Sharpton and instead focusing his time on actually getting things done, in the way he knew how to do them.

The point is, the black community would be better off taking a more pro-active approach to effective reforms. The recent trends of speech by Rev. Jackson all reflect a nature very bitter and hostile.

He compared the supposed intentional disenfranchisement of the black vote in Florida to the Dred Scott decision. Maybe, and I mean maybe, could such a comparison be made if such an intentional disregard had actually taken place—no evidence exists suggesting this was the case.

As Americans, I hoped these protestors would have united behind a different message—one slightly more practical, effective, and definitely more newsworthy.

Perhaps, "We didn't vote for you. However, we are placing our hearts into the hope that you will represent us all with equal admiration and devotion."

Maybe they just couldn't find posterboards that big.

Quotes of the Week

"I am father to a daughter who was born outside of my marriage ... This is no time for denials, evasions, or alibis..."

—Reverend Jesse Jackson, 1/17/01

"Click here for information on the 'Week of Moral Outrage' [against incoming President Bush]..."

—www.rainbowpush.org, Rev. Jackson's Web site

Bush springs into action

The president may be preparing to overturn Clinton's orders

By MELISSA FINKLESTEIN
Staff Writer

President George W. Bush is not wasting any time. On his first official business day in office, Bush acted to reverse the Clinton administration's policy regarding abortion by executive order. This act may be surprising to some given the unstable political climate surrounding the election, and Bush's repeated pledges to unify the nation.

Any American who watched Bush's inauguration speech witnessed this promise. Yet the Bush Administration may have found itself between a rock and a hard place, striving to satisfy both conservatives and more liberal Americans with regards to abortion policy.

It is yet to be seen whether or not Bush will reverse other Clinton administration policies, especially with regard to last minute executive orders. Issues on the table include Clinton's safeguard of forestland, and creation of national monuments, race initiatives, and the Test Ban Treaty.

As Scott McClellan, speaking on behalf of the Bush Cheney transition team, had commented to The New York Times, "We are reviewing all 11th-hour executive orders, rules and regulations by the Clinton administration and we will make decisions after President-elect Bush is sworn into office."

That time is now, and already President Bush has indicated skepticism about Clinton's designation of seven national monuments.

According to The New York Times, such classification affords better protection from commercial uses like vehicle use and oil drilling. The concern of the Bush administration is that undue economic strain will result in local communities.

Republican Senator Conrad Burns of Montana represented this view. "It's simply a bid by a lame-duck president to secure his legacy with special interest groups who want Montana to be a museum." Unfortunately for Bush, no presidentially created monument has ever been overturned.

Clinton's last days in office were spent on numerous initiatives, including the Comprehensive Test Ban Treaty and Middle East peacemaking.

On the topic of arms control, an official speaking for John Shalikashvili, former chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, told a reporter at CNN.com, "This is a matter for the next administration. We are better off with this treaty than without it."

A Republican in the White House may not hold this view, but only time will tell the fate of the treaty.

Middle East peacemaking, while a priority for the Clinton administration, may not be for President Bush, given his implications that he is against American presence abroad.

Again, predictions regarding Bush policy are only predictions and are yet to be addressed directly by the newly installed Bush administration. Clinton left office urging George W. Bush to pursue several issues, including a bipartisan solution to racial problems.

Bush has begun to overturn several of Clinton's executive orders.

Clinton spoke to a crowd at the University of the District of Columbia, stating "If I could leave America with one wish as I depart office, it would be that we become more of the 'One America' that we know we ought to be."

This statement seems perfectly in line with President Bush's goal to unite America. While the two administrations may approach issues differently, hopefully the best interests of the nation in realizing this promise of unity will be served despite partisan differences.

George W. Bush has already reversed Clinton administration policy, perhaps frustrating this goal. It is yet to be determined how other decisions regarding Clinton's last-minute executive orders and regulations will affect the spirit of "One America."

BUSINESS & POLITICS

What are the keys for Bush's success?

Bucknellian staff members focus on what President George W. Bush must accomplish in the early stages of his presidency

With George W. Bush officially sworn in as president, we asked our crack staff of political pundits a simple question: What must President Bush do in order to have a successful presidency? Here is a sample of their responses:

AMANDA KAUFMAN, Staff Writer:
George W. Bush needs to be the president he promised to be. He ran as a pro-life, education-focused candidate with traditional morals. He cannot and must not compromise himself or the integrity of the Republican Party by moderating his view to appease the Democrats in Congress. A Republican was elected, so he will implement Republican policies. He must stand strongly behind his education policies and fight hard to ensure that no child is left behind. He needs to fulfill his promise to trust the American people with their own money, instead of diverting it to social programs that benefit few to the cost of many. Bush must provide for military readiness, and ensure the long-term existence of a strong military.

Furthermore, he must use his experience in the oil business to safely and successfully tap into the oil in Alaska. Those objecting to such a process should ask Saddam Hussein, our principal oil provider, how environmentally sound his mining practices are. In short, President George W. Bush must carry out the ideas he has sold to the American people.

ANDREA BEISSER, Contributing Writer:
I think a successful president is an active listener to the needs of the people they represent. George Bush must be willing to listen closely to the people representing both the economy and the environment and base his decisions on conservation and making this world a healthy place for future generations.

I think Bush will have to be flexible to the demands of the population and acknowledge the opinions of all races, religions, and cultures since the United States is to become home to increasing numbers of Latinos, Asians, and a various other immigrant populations. I think it is critical for Bush to base his decision-making on what past leaders and presidents have accomplished, such as Martin Luther King Jr. and JFK. His success as a leader will also be based on our ability to communicate through unity and organization.

MICHAEL GORMAN, Staff Writer:
DELEGATE. His job is to lead this country, not micromanage it. He should inspire the citizens of this country, while creating a bipartisan Washington.

Let the advisers and staffers worry about what Section VI, paragraph B of the new banking legislation says. A broad scope and sweeping rhetoric will serve him much better than being bogged down in the details.

TOM ELLIOTT, Staff Writer:
Bush needs to fire the White House live-in pollster which guided Clinton's presidency and instead keep a strong backbone and stick to his guns. He knows what this country needs, that's what got him elected, seeing through on these promises.

For goodness' sake, President Bush, don't do what your father did—that is, alienate the conservative base. —Michael Boland '03

Changes certain at the Supreme Court

By MICHAEL BOLAND
Business & Politics Editor

A familiar refrain during Election 2000 was that "the next president will decide the future of the Supreme Court." We all knew that Bush's picks would be conservative, and Gore's liberal, but who exactly are the people in line for a spot on the High Court? The following is a profile of some of the expert's picks for most likely candidates for the U.S. Supreme Court.

Judge Edith Jones—a conservative jurist who most recently infuriated liberals by refusing to overturn the conviction of a defendant who claimed his attorney fell asleep during his trial. From her seat on the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals, she has compiled a record that is noticeably pro-death penalty, and has taken a permissive view of the Establishment Clause, which will please religious conservatives.

Judge Jones, 51, was almost appointed to the Court in 1990 by then-President Bush (who eventually chose David Souter). It's quite likely that hers will be the first or second name sent to the Senate.

Judge Emilio Garza—if nominated and confirmed, Garza would be the first Hispanic ever to sit on the U.S. Supreme Court. Such a nomination would fit in with Bush's diverse Cabinet, and be an unmistakable gesture to the Hispanic community. Garza, also from the Fifth Circuit, is reliably conservative; he's been referred to as "the Hispanic Clarence Thomas" by liberal columnist Molly Ivins.

He has dodged the dangerous label of ideologue, however, by grudgingly adhering to Roe v. Wade as a matter of legal precedent, though his writings indicate he may consider it wrongly decided. This restraint and respect for precedent, plus his ethnicity, would almost guarantee Garza's confirmation, should he be nominated. Garza is also relatively young, at 52, and like Jones would occupy his seat for 25-30 years.

Judge J. Michael Luttig—a conservative luminary, Luttig has sat on the Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals since 1991. Judge Luttig's youth, vigor, and brashly conservative style make him a favorite of the Right. He has ruled favorably on several abortion cases, and struck a heavy blow for state's rights when he declared the Violence Against Women Act unconstitutional (the Supreme Court upheld).

The most ideological of these candidates, he would have the most difficult time getting through the evenly-divided Senate. Luttig is only 43; therefore, he'll probably have to wait his turn, and will receive serious consideration only after Jones and Garza have been appointed.

Figuring out the order of current justices' retirements can be tricky business. In part because they tend to keep their mouths shut, no one is ever really sure what they're up to. With that in mind, Chief Justice Rehnquist, a 76-year-old conservative who's been on the Court since 1972, will almost certainly step down at some point in the next four years, as he seems to want a Republican-appointed replacement. When Rehnquist steps down, Bush will have to elevate a current associate justice to chief. Justice Antonin Scalia, 64, will probably be the next chief, and Bush will then fill the associate's spot left by Scalia.

A logical scenario has Rehnquist waiting until the end of the Supreme Court Justices, at Saturday's inauguration, clockwise from top left: Scalia, Kennedy, Stevens, and Rehnquist.

2001 term to see if 80-year-old liberal John Paul Stevens will step down. If Stevens does, and I think he will, then Rehnquist will complete one more term, working with the new 6-3 conservative majority before stepping down in 2002 to allow Bush to appoint his successor. The first spot, Stevens', will go to Edith Jones, and the second to Emilio Garza. They will both be confirmed, as liberals in the Senate do not have the leverage to torpe do the nomination of a woman and a Hispanic. These are the only openings I see appearing in the next four years. If Bush is re-elected in 2004, look for O'Connor to retire and for Luttig to get her spot after a nasty confirmation battle. Think talk of Justice Ginsburg retiring is overdone; she's only 67, and she's a staunch liberal who will try to hang on until a Democratic president is elected.

Jones, Garza, and Luttig—not exactly good news if you're a liberal, but they're the names to look for in the next few years. Happy Court-watching.

es will bring a successful presidency. Pushing school vouchers, privatizing Social Security, reforming Medicare, and simplification and reduction of the tax code will all help to contribute to a successful presidency.

MICHAEL BOLAND, B&P Editor:
For goodness' sake, President Bush, don't do what your father did—that is, alienate the conservative base. For example, a tax increase? Bad idea. Knocking Ronald Reagan? Bad idea. Appointing a liberal to the Supreme Court? Bad idea.

Maintain close ties with Tom DeLay and other House conservatives; they'll help you stay strong when the media tries to push you to the left. If you appease the Right early with a tax cut, a conservative Supreme Court justice, and missile defense funding, then they'll probably cut you more slack when you have to move to the Mushy Middle for your re-election bid. In other words, move right to left: going the other way around will cost you the good faith of conservatives now, Congress in 2002, and the White House in 2004.

BRIAN WATSON, Senior Editor:
It took enough of a battle to get to the Oval Office, but George W.

Bush is poised to begin a successful administration. His top cabinet appointees have already been confirmed, and Veep Dick Cheney is already chipping away at legislation.

Bush needs to follow up on the bipartisan approach he preached during his campaign; he's already shown willingness to work across party lines by asking several Democrats to assist in various legislative initiatives.

While he needs to keep a tight grip on the GOP's conservative wing, he also needs to make allies with the growing number of moderates in both parties. A great way to get a head start is to throw his support behind the latest version of the McCain-Feingold campaign finance bill.

But most importantly, Bush needs to accentuate the positives he has on his side: as the only president with an MBA, Bush possesses an uncanny managerial ethic, as does Cheney.

By utilizing their leadership skills appropriately and strategically, Bush can turn the tide on the blundering economy and propose legislation that will help our hurting school systems and federal programs.

B&P's experts wonder: what would constitute a "successful" Bush presidency?

Light at the end of the tunnel?

California's state of emergency puts pressure on Bush to act

By CARMEN MAURIELLO
Sports Editor

California, the largest state and the world's sixth largest economy, is in the dark—literally.

Its two biggest utilities, Pacific Gas and Electric and Southern California Edison, were forced to institute planned blackouts in the central and northern parts of the state last Wednesday and Thursday after defaults on several loans moved them to the brink of bankruptcy and rendered them unable to purchase power on the wholesale market.

California Gov. Gray Davis, who declared a state of emergency last Wednesday after the first round of blackouts, assigned a temporary fix to the energy crisis on Friday by signing a $400 million rescue plan that would allow the state to use its good credit to purchase power from producers to keep the struggling utilities afloat.

But Davis stressed "that this is not the long-term solution," as the $400 million can only buy a week's worth of power and state lawmakers appear reluctant to throw a monkey wrench into their budget by offering open-ended support. The best solutions may be two steps Davis has ardently resisted and that the 1996 deregulation plan—which is most responsible for the current energy crisis—was designed to prevent: large power rate increases and securitization.

The shortages have caused wholesale rates to skyrocket—with price increases in the period nearing 1,000 percent. But while the law binds California utilities to purchase wholesale power at the market price, the rates that they can charge consumers remain regulated by the state government until March 2002.

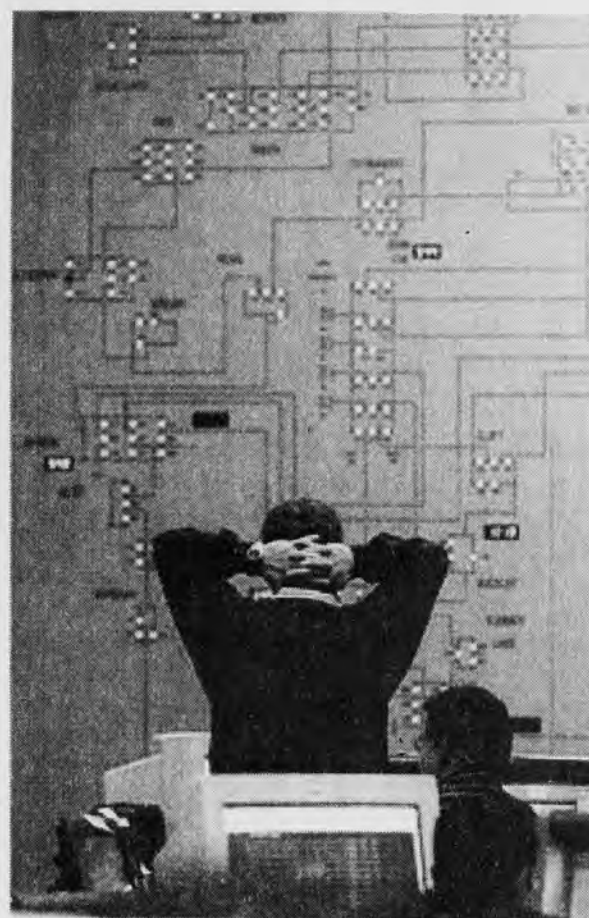

As a result, the utilities have been placed into a vise that no company could survive in—having to pay as much as $1 for each kilowatt of power while only being allowed to charge about 6.5 cents.

Their stocks have tumbled, their bonds have been downgraded to junk bonds, and their credit has been ruined. The firms have motioned for months for a rate hike, but California's government has been slow to respond and, even in the midst of blackouts, Davis has still resisted the rate increase, which many see as politically disastrous.

But Davis may have no other alternative, as his pleas for federal assistance haven't met up with much enthusiasm in Washington.

On Tuesday, Bush extended a federal order requiring Western power producers to sell surplus electricity and natural gas to California by two weeks, but he made it clear that his administration's involvement in the crisis would end there—putting pressure on the state to deal with the crisis itself.

The worst days of the California crisis appear to still be ahead, as its early-arriving summer is traditionally the state's peak usage period. Many Californians, who've already seen their businesses damaged and lives interrupted by the energy crisis, are gearing up for what Clovis citrus farmer Shawn Stevenson predicts will be, "the summer from hell."

Helpless officials monitor California's power grid

The Bucknellian is looking for students interested in becoming layout editors to start immediately. Email bucknellian@ for info.

Arts & Entertainment

DEDICATION From page 1B

A broad assortment of students performed at the recital in the new building; their performances reflected the extensive and superior talent they have developed at the university.

The performers included: Amalia Martin '02, Jeffrey Leeman '01, Matthew Hoy '02, Steven Fowler '04, Neil Lutz '03, Ali Shammam '01, Jennifer Johnson '01, Ashlee Mack '03, Monica Hoy '04, Wilhelm Stabenau '04, Lauren Dalrymple '04, Alexis Zackie '04 and Andrew Frey '04.

The performers were a cross-section of the student population, including non-music majors. This was intended to show how the new music building will benefit all Bucknell students.

"I was so proud of all of them!" President Rogers said after the performances. "The audience could not quit talking about the talent we have at Bucknell!"

According to faculty within the music department, the performance was an appropriate introduction to the new facility.

"The students performed beautifully in the opening recital," said Symphonic Band Director and Professor of Music Dr. Kenny. "It was a wonderful way to inaugurate the hall and to enrich the dedication of the building."

The dedication of this new, beautiful music building was a proud moment for all Bucknellians present. The new building finally matches the potential of the student performers on this campus.

Dr. Payne, Professor of Music, said. With its state-of-the-art facilities—including practice rooms, studios, and computer labs—it is a far cry from the music department's old headquarters.

One student performer, Ali Shammam, summed up the event perfectly: "The day was a huge success and a great deal of fun!"

The dedication of the Sigfried Weis Music Building was held on Saturday, Jan. 20. Above: Janet Weis, Natalie Rooke and Stef Rogers. Bottom left: Stef Rogers. Bottom right: Gary Sojka. Photos by Chris Rivera.

Good Charlotte, good show

By MATT LASZEWSKI
Staff Writer

Good Charlotte performed at Uptown last Friday night in the first of a series of concerts planned for the spring semester.

The group rolled into town late Friday from their home, Waldorf, Md. Despite the weather, they managed to begin the show on time, even after squeezing in a live interview with WVBU. Not your typical punk band, Good Charlotte's five members include three who had never picked up instruments before joining the group. Another unique characteristic of the band is that its two front men are twin brothers.

After forming in their final years of high school, Good Charlotte quickly developed musical talent and gathered a following in the Baltimore and D.C. club scene. Soon after, local radio station WHFS, known for their annual HFSival Extravaganza, took the band under its wing and gave them many chances to broaden their fan base at station-sponsored events.

Recently, the band took a two-week vacation for a U.S. tour to promote their self-titled debut album. Due to the popularity generated by some of Good Charlotte's songs, such as "Little Things" (from the "Dude, Where's My Car?" soundtrack), and "Motivation Proclamation," their touring vacation included several appearances on MTV shows, such as "Say What Karaoke" and "Instant Gratification." Friday night's performance received an above-average turnout for Uptown, and a large number of the fans seemed to be from the band's home area.

With no opening band scheduled, they were able to play a longer set, which seemed to make the audience happy as they danced and bobbed to the upbeat songs. The twins, Benji and Jeol, spent the majority of the concert demonstrating their unending supply of energy and creativity, going so far as to invite a portion of the football team onstage to rap with them for a few minutes.

After Friday's concert, it seems certain that we have not heard the last of Good Charlotte.

Good Charlotte, a group from Maryland, played a collection of their songs at Uptown on Friday, Jan. 19, including their latest hit, "Little Things."

Rooke Chapel Ringers return from tour

By KATIE WHARTON
Staff Writer

Bucknell University's handbell choir, the Rooke Chapel Ringers, recently returned from their annual tour. The group, under the direction of Dr. William Payne, has a tradition of traveling to the home churches of the senior bell ringers each January.

This year's tour spanned Jan. 10-15, and consisted of five concerts. Redbank, N.J., was the first stop on the trip. From there, the group traveled to Doylestown, Pa. and Motown, Pa. Finally, the ringers played a concert in Hershey, Pa. before returning to the university for the start of classes.

In addition to their performances, the group took the opportunity to visit the Schulerich Bell Factory, which is the company supplying the Rooke Chapel Ringers with its six-octave set of handbells and three-octave set of handchimes.

The Rooke Chapel Ringers was an organization formed in 1983 under the leadership of Dr. William Payne, and it plays for the interdenominational service here on campus about once a month. In addition, the ringers and the Rooke Chapel Choir are featured every December in the Candlelight service, where they never fail to amaze their audience.

The ringers will be performing their spring concert on April 28.

BUCKPUZZLED?

ACROSS

- 1 Athlete of the week.
- 2 Ashcroft's former political office.
- 3 A law, created by the president, that is not an act of Congress is known as an executive order.
- 4 Upcoming play: Joined at the Head.
- 5 New cuisine at the old Varsity Club.
- 6 Plympton's alma mater.
- 7 Name of the newly dedicated music building.
- 8 Coming to the Fishhouse today.
- 9 One of Plympton's replacements.
- 10 Zanzibar's new University.
- 11 Staff with significant changes.
- 12 Oldest Supreme Court justice.
- 13 Just scored 1000th point.

DOWN

- 1 Instrument of the Rooke Chapel Ringers.
- 2 Verdict on the Patriot League Scholarship vote. Here last weekend and they were Good.
- 3 At Bush's inauguration: "Hall to the..."
- 4 Catholic Campus Minister.
- 5 Speaker at MLK dinner.
- 6 In the same shopping center as Yung-Tin.

There's nothing more entertaining than writing for The Bucknellian. Call Krista 7-5255.

Joined at the Head joins Spring line-up

By SHELLY KENT
Staff Writer

On Feb. 2 and 3, the theater department will present a showcase called "Joined at the Head," written by Catherine Butterfield and directed by Hillary DePiano '02.

DePiano, who most recently directed "Chinese Restaurant Syndrome" last fall, expressed her joy of directing the upcoming play.

"It has many complex levels of storytelling and it examines many of the constructs of the theater itself," she said.

She describes the play as a comedy, since it gives a light, upbeat treatment to some heavy issues. However, the play is not simple or one-dimensional.

"It's kind of hard to explain," DePiano said. "It's about two women, one well-adjusted to life but on her way out because she is dying, and the other who has her whole life ahead of her but she isn't really living it to the fullest."

The two women are both the same age and coincidentally (or perhaps not so coincidentally), have the same name.

Misty Trezona '02 plays one of these two women, Maggie Mulroney. As the narrator of the play, Trezona said her character is talking about her friend's life through-out the play, but ends up delving into her own.

Trezona, last seen in "Savage/Love" this past fall, describes her experience working on this project as unique in many ways.

"I've never had such a close friend directing me before. It's been a lot of fun," she said.

Another unusual aspect of the play is that most of the cast members (there are 10 in all) have never acted before in a university theater production. Many in the group haven't had any prior experience working with each other either.

"It's been exciting to work with so many new people," Trezona

Joined at the Head will open Feb. 2 in the Harvey Powers Theater.

WVBU Program Guide, Spring 2001

Monday	Tuesday	Wednesday	Thursday	Friday	Saturday	Sunday
9:00-11:00 MATT IN THE AFTERNOON	9:00-11:00 MATT IN THE AFTERNOON	9:00-11:00 MATT IN THE AFTERNOON	9:00-11:00 MATT IN THE AFTERNOON	9:00-11:00 MATT IN THE AFTERNOON	9:00-11:00 MATT IN THE AFTERNOON	9:00-11:00 MATT IN THE AFTERNOON
1:00-3:00 Blaise Spencer	1:00-3:00 Blaise Spencer	1:00-3:00 Blaise Spencer	1:00-3:00 Blaise Spencer	1:00-3:00 Blaise Spencer	1:00-3:00 Blaise Spencer	1:00-3:00 Blaise Spencer
3:00-5:00 Orange Day	3:00-5:00 Orange Day	3:00-5:00 Orange Day	3:00-5:00 Orange Day	3:00-5:00 Orange Day	3:00-5:00 Orange Day	3:00-5:00 Orange Day
5:00-7:00 Katherine K. Kasper	5:00-7:00 Katherine K. Kasper	5:00-7:00 Katherine K. Kasper	5:00-7:00 Katherine K. Kasper	5:00-7:00 Katherine K. Kasper	5:00-7:00 Katherine K. Kasper	5:00-7:00 Katherine K. Kasper
7:00-9:00 Katherine K. Kasper	7:00-9:00 Katherine K. Kasper	7:00-9:00 Katherine K. Kasper	7:00-9:00 Katherine K. Kasper	7:00-9:00 Katherine K. Kasper	7:00-9:00 Katherine K. Kasper	7:00-9:00 Katherine K. Kasper
9:00-11:00 Katherine K. Kasper	9:00-11:00 Katherine K. Kasper	9:00-11:00 Katherine K. Kasper	9:00-11:00 Katherine K. Kasper	9:00-11:00 Katherine K. Kasper	9:00-11:00 Katherine K. Kasper	9:00-11:00 Katherine K. Kasper
11:00-1:00 Katherine K. Kasper	11:00-1:00 Katherine K. Kasper	11:00-1:00 Katherine K. Kasper	11:00-1:00 Katherine K. Kasper	11:00-1:00 Katherine K. Kasper	11:00-1:00 Katherine K. Kasper	11:00-1:00 Katherine K. Kasper
1:00-3:00 Katherine K. Kasper	1:00-3:00 Katherine K. Kasper	1:00-3:00 Katherine K. Kasper	1:00-3:00 Katherine K. Kasper	1:00-3:00 Katherine K. Kasper	1:00-3:00 Katherine K. Kasper	1:00-3:00 Katherine K. Kasper

THE Bucknellian

The weekly campus newspaper of Bucknell University

http://www.orgs.bucknell.edu/bucknellian

February 2, 2001

inside

Features

Volume 127, Number 2

Sports

The Bucknell Brigade in Nicaragua
See page B1

Ten Bison advance to ICAA Championships
See page A12

1998 rapist convicted

By REBECCA ROWLAND
Editor-in-Chief

The 1998 rape of a 64-year-old University employee has been resolved; Gerald Funk Jr., 28, formerly of West Milton, has been sentenced to 30-60 years in prison on one count each of aggravated assault, robbery and rape.

The 12-person jury took only 80 minutes to convict Funk.

The crimes occurred in the early-morning hours of Sept. 11, 1998 at the Lewisburg Cemetery near the intersection of South Seventh and St. George St.

The University employee, whose name was not released due to the nature of the crime, has moved from Lewisburg and was therefore unavailable for comment.

The trial began Wednesday, Dec. 13, 2000 and lasted until Monday, Dec. 16. Union County District Attorney D. Peter Johnson argued the side of the prosecution while Michael Suders litigated for the defendant.

The presiding judge, Union-Snyder Counties President Judge Harold F. Woelke Jr., sentenced Funk, saying, "You will be 58 years old until you will have any hope of getting out of jail. From my perspective, that's a good thing."

As she took the stand for the prosecution first, the now 67-year-old University employee recalled in vivid detail her horrific story: "I felt sick, humiliated and dirty," she said. "I ached all over. I couldn't hardly talk for the longest time."

The Lewisburg Cemetery entrance was the site of a 1998 rape of a 64-year old University employee on her way to work on Sept. 11.

According to her testimony, the University employee had been waiting for a co-worker to pick her up for work around 4 a.m. When the co-worker did not show, she decided to walk to work. As she was locking her apartment door, a "mean looking man" in a red shirt passed by, saying "hi." She replied and he walked up Market Street and into the bank. She said that was the last she saw of him until she was walking down Seventh St., past the cemetery.

Funk attacked the University employee from behind, giving a "karate yell" and placing her in a chokehold. He held the University employee until she passed out and then raped and robbed her, leaving her lying in the cemetery.

Several witnesses corroborated that story, including Lewisburg Chief of Police William Neitz Jr., the attending nurse in the emergency room and forensic specialists from a Harrisburg crime lab who presented incriminating DNA evidence.

Funk's attorney contended that there was no hard evidence linking his client to the crime scene. He also questioned the results of the DNA tests, saying that the DNA from another rape suspect kit with the name "Jose Santiago" were at the same forensics lab and could

See RAPE, page A2

Diversity report indicates progress, outlines challenges

The recently released report on campus diversity records improvements and outlines future changes for multicultural awareness on campus, writes Editor-in-Chief Peter Van Emburgh

Former President Bro Adams released the Plan for Diversity at Bucknell in the spring of 1999, aimed to facilitate diversity initiatives affecting all segments of the University facets. At that time, he appointed an administrative committee to oversee the implementation of the plan, the Committee for Campus Diversity (CCD).

Headed by Associate Dean of Students Ed Cowell, the CCD recently issued a progress report detailing the advancements of the diversity initiatives.

"I think we've clearly made some progress," said Cowell, chair of the committee. "However, it's sometimes difficult to focus [positively on the work] when there's still so much work that needs to be done... but I don't want to lose sight on the fact that we have made progress."

The focus of the Committee's work is "Achieving Academic Excellence through Diversity" and they have used the concept to highlight the following topics: student recruitment and retention, faculty recruitment and retention, improving campus climate and celebrating diversity, according to the just-released Campus Diversity Report 1999-2000. Within each area, the Committee kept track of "activities, programs or initiatives that demonstrate progress being made towards the Plan for Diversity."

"We feel strongly that each of us—faculty, administrative and support staff, and students—has the ability to influence learning and therefore we should all understand the essential role diversity plays in our institutional mission," according to the report.

Cowell commented on the progress the University has made the past few years with increasing ethnic diversity. "I think three, four years ago we made significant progress in terms of our recruitment efforts and I think it's leveled off. Now we need a boost that will prove significant in terms of the way our campus looks."

Notable diversity improvements were made in the

BSG nominee awaits confirmation

The nominee for the BSG multicultural chair will work to open avenues of communication, writes News Layout Editor Rachel Laskow

In an attempt to serve the multicultural community more effectively, the candidate for this semester's Bucknell Student Government (BSG) multicultural chair will be chosen by the Presidents' Council and then approved by BSG. The Presidents' Council is comprised of various student leaders from cultural organizations on campus and gives them the opportunity to share programming ideas and other issues.

In past years, BSG executive board members appointed the chair of the multicultural committee, along with other committee chairs. Former chair of the multicultural committee Kathy O'Heir '03 said, "Although I tried to serve the position to the best of my abilities, it became apparent that the chair of the multicultural committee would probably function best as an active member of the multicultural community."

Associate Dean of Students Ed Cowell said, "By having the representative come from Presidents' Council, there are assurances that those issues will be brought to the table within BSG. In return, matters brought up in BSG regarding campus issues can be brought back to the Presidents' Council."

BSG nominee Nate Sorber said, "We're generally committed to making sure that the voices we bring out are not just the ideas of the student body. We want to make sure that all students' voices are heard equally."

After numerous conversations between BSG and the Presidents' Council, it was decided to have a member involved with a multicultural organization chair the committee. Any member of the Presidents' Council or any student who is involved with an organization belonging to the Presidents' Council could be nominated for the position. The nomination process took place before winter break.

On Jan. 31, the Presidents' Council chose Tricia Bushnell '04 as their nominee for the position. Bushnell must be confirmed by the BSG Congress by a two-thirds vote in order to become the new multicultural chair.

"I know that if we want to work with BSG, we're going to have to compromise. But I also know if we want things done, we're going to have to push some buttons," Bushnell said.

"This position speaks to a sort of inclusive student government structure," Cowell said. "We're making provisions to make sure all voices are heard and concerns are addressed."

The chair will be a member of the BSG congress, but will not be a part of a specific class congress. Although the whole student body did not elect the

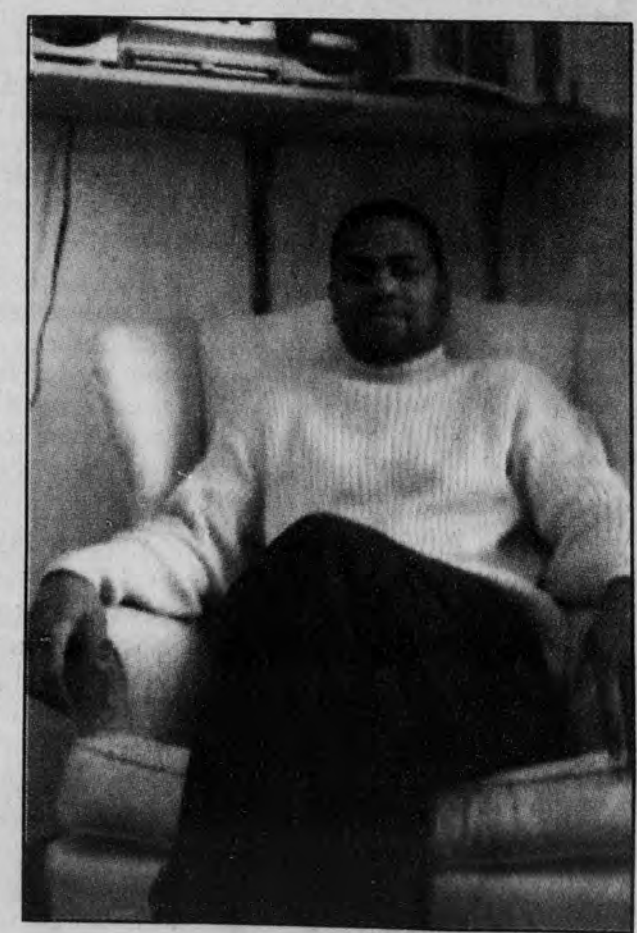

Carmen Mauriello—The Bucknellian

Tricia Bushnell needs 2/3 of BSG Congress vote in order to be confirmed as the multicultural chair.

chair, the chair will still have voting rights within BSG. The new chair will be responsible for communicating information between the Presidents' Council and BSG. "We hope to produce something from this committee as well as receive information," Sorber said.

Cowell said, "I hope it will encourage BSG to create its own diversity plan within the framework of the University's plan, which is also reflected as one of the goals in the institutional plan for diversity."

"I appreciate and applaud BSG and the cultural organizations for the tremendous effort and energy that they've put into the development of this position," Cowell added.

Associate Dean of Students Ed Cowell chairs the Committee for Campus Diversity.

Public Safety Log

January 22, 2001

INFORMATION / DAMAGED BU PROPERTY—An employee reported to Public Safety that a light pole outside Coleman Hall was damaged. No witnesses or suspects were located in a search of the area.

January 25, 2001

INFORMATION / ASSIST LOCAL POLICE—Public Safety assisted the Lewisburg Police Department with a student who failed to stop at a stop sign near 7th St. House. The student was cited for driving under the influence of alcohol.

UNDERAGE CONSUMPTION—While on routine patrol, Public Safety observed a student walking with a staggered gait and falling on South Seventh St. The individual, who admitted to consuming alcohol while under the care of 21 years, was placed in the care of an RA. Citations issued for underage consumption and public drunkenness.

ACT 64 / UNFOUNDED—Public Safety responded to Larison Cottage for the report of the odor of marijuana. Evidence of burned incense was located, however the report of marijuana was declared unfounded. A citation was issued for the violation.

January 28, 2001

INFORMATION / SUSPICIOUS CIRCUMSTANCES—A student reported to Public Safety that a relative called the phone in her locked and vacant residence hall room. The calls were answered by an unidentified male. In addition, an unidentified male left messages on her answering machine. The room locks were changed on the request of the student. The incident is under investigation.

January 27, 2001

UNDERAGE DRINKING / UNREGISTERED PARTY—While on routine patrol, Public Safety observed an unregistered party with alcohol present in the Bucknell West Mod. One student was cited for possession of a keg, two residents of the mod were cited for having an unregistered party, and having underage persons present where alcohol was being served.

PUBLIC DRUNKENNESS / RECOVERED PROPERTY—While on routine patrol near the Langone Center, Public Safety observed a visitor remove a napkin dispenser from under his clothing and throw it on the ground. The male admitted to consuming alcohol. East Buffalo Township Police Department responded, cited the individual for public drunkenness. The visitor was turned over to his student host.

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF—Public Safety responded to Kappa Delta Rho Fraternity for the report of a broken window. No witnesses or suspects were located in a search of the area. East Buffalo Township Police Department notified.

VANDALISM—Public Safety responded to Carey House for the report of a broken window, which was struck with a parking sign that had been removed from the rear of the building. Three unidentified males were observed fleeing the scene. The incident is under investigation. Lewisburg Police Department was notified.

January 29, 2001

MEDICAL ASSIST—Public Safety responded to Taylor Hall for the report of a student with an injured ankle. The individual was transported to the Athletic Department for treatment by the trainer, per the student's request.

RAPE From page A1.

have contaminated the evidence. However, Donald Blosser Jr., the supervising forensic scientist with the State Police lab in Harrisburg, testified for the prosecution saying that the two rape kits were kept separate.

Suder also submitted evidence that suggested Funk had had three different phone conversations with his girlfriend during the time the rape took place, effectively making it impossible for him to have committed the crime. Additionally, Suder brought attention to the lack of fingerprints at the scene and on the victim.

The strength of the DNA evidence prevailed, however, as Johnson was not concerned with the lack of fingerprints and dismissed the calls as made either before or after the rape. Johnson's prosecutorial strategy focused on the findings of the forensic lab.

"What's the likelihood of someone with this DNA being in the area of our small town and having that particular penchant for karate? I suggest that beyond a reasonable doubt, he raped and robbed her."

Funk is no stranger to the judiciary system, running away from home at 15. As a juvenile he was charged with burglary and criminal conspiracy. He was certified as an adult at 16 in order to be charged with unauthorized use of a vehicle. When he was 17 he served time in the Union County Prison for loitering, prowling, attempted burglary and grand auto theft. He was released, then charged with three counts of forgery and later sentenced again to time in a state prison.

The rape charge levied against Funk was his first assaultive behavior charge. Had the prosecution been completely successful, Funk would have been charged with attempted second-degree murder, attempted third-degree murder, aggravated assault, rape, rape of an unconscious person, robbery and robbery to commit serious bodily injury.

If convicted of all counts, Funk could have remained in jail for up to 180 years; however, there was not enough evidence to substantiate second and third-degree homicide charges and he was instead charged with aggravated assault, rape and robbery.

Citing his previous criminal record, Judge Woelfel gave Funk a sentence that was beyond the range of sentencing guidelines. Woelfel felt that Funk had already proven that he had a poor likelihood to rehabilitate. Johnson also brought up Funk's criminal record, saying that Funk's prior record shows he is unable to perform in society and unable to keep from committing crimes.

Suders indicated that an appeal would be filed and he commented that the court's motivation may have been the desire to please the victim and the community.

Woelfel denied this accusation, saying "It is not the function of this court to impose a sentence to serve the community... [I have to] make sure what I have done I can live with."

Facts and quotes were compiled from the 12/14, 12/15, 12/19, and 1/18 issues of The Daily Item.

Tragic deaths shock campuses

Several Universities struggle to understand sudden deaths

By NATALIE CASP
News Editor

The college communities of Dartmouth College, Bloomsburg University, St. Mary's College and Oklahoma State University are all in mourning after tragic, unexpected deaths at their respective institutions.

Two faculty members at Dartmouth College—a married couple—were found dead on Saturday, Jan. 27 in their Ena, N.H. home; a first year student at Bloomsburg University in Bloomsburg, Pa. died from alcohol poisoning the morning of Sunday, Jan. 28; the head coach of the women's lacrosse team at St. Mary's College died Friday, Jan. 26 in San Francisco, Calif. following an attack by two dogs; eight members of Oklahoma State University's traveling basketball party and two pilots were killed in a plane crash Saturday, Jan. 27 while returning from a basketball game in Boulder, Colo.

At Dartmouth College, Susanne, 55, and Hal, 62, Zantop were warm, well-liked professors of German and earth sciences, respectively.

Authorities are releasing very little information about the couple's death in order to insure the integrity of the investigation. No arrests have been made, but homicide is most likely the cause of death, officials say.

The couple taught at Dartmouth for a combined 42 years and frequently invited students and faculty to dinner in their home.

"They were loved and respected by faculty and students alike," Dartmouth College President James Wright said.

The Dartmouth community is in shock; the college has implemented a 24-hour safety escort service and residents have begun locking their doors—neither of which the community considered necessary a week ago.

Bloomsburg student Jared Drosnock, an 18-year-old business administration major from Pen Argyl, Pa. died from alcohol poisoning, according to Columbia County Coroner Michael Kenny.

Students who described themselves as his fraternity brothers found him Sunday morning in an off-campus house. As a first year student, Drosnock was not an official member of the fraternity which is under national suspension for financial delinquency.

Drosnock most likely died in his sleep after consuming alcohol Saturday night with brothers of the suspended Pi Kappa Phi fraternity, according to Bloomsburg Police Sgt. Joseph Wondolowski.

"It wasn't a fraternity party as we know it," but police found empty beer cans and bottles and hard liquor bottles inside the house Sunday morning, Wondolowski said.

Police were continuing their investigation and did not rule out filing criminal charges against those who provided alcohol to Drosnock.

Dean of Greek Life Roy W. Baker cautions University students of the consequences of rampant alcohol abuse.

"I hope this clearly demonstrates to our students at Bucknell how this can happen here if they do not take care of their friends and stop the abuse of alcohol," Baker said.

Baker acknowledged the differences between the University's Greek system and Bloomsburg's.

"Our Greek system cannot be compared to that at Bloomsburg," Baker said. "They simply do not have or enforce any risk management guidelines there."

In California, the head coach of the St. Mary's women's lacrosse team, Diane Whipple, 33, was mauled to death by two dogs outside the front door of her home.

Whipple, a graduate of Penn State, began coaching at St. Mary's in October of 1999. While at Penn State, Whipple's team won the NCAA championship in 1987 and 1989.

"Diane's tragic death has left her many friends here and throughout the country in shock and grief," Penn State Athletic Director Tim Curley said. "She was a young person of unlimited possibility."

At Oklahoma State University, the community held a memorial service for the eight members of the University's traveling basketball party who were killed in Saturday's plane crash.

The service for basketball players Daniel Lawson and Nate Fleming, team trainer Brian Luinstra, media relations coordinator Will Hancock, broadcaster Bill Tegens, director of basketball operations Pat Noyes, student manager Jared Weiberg and broadcast engineer Kendall Durfee was held Wednesday.

According to officials, the pilots of the plane did not communicate any type of abnormalities or distress to ground controllers, but bad weather conditions surrounded the area.

"We have some very detailed and painstaking work ahead of us," said John Hammerschmidt, head of the crash investigation team.

"I think we're still in shock this point," a mother of one of the victim's said. "We want to thank everyone for their prayers."

The Bookstore completed its move to Hunt Hall on Monday, Jan. 8. Regular merchandise is on display in the building's formal living room, while textbooks are located downstairs in the basement.

Chris Rivera—The Bucknellian

New PR director to start in February

By PETER HACKEMAN
Staff Writer

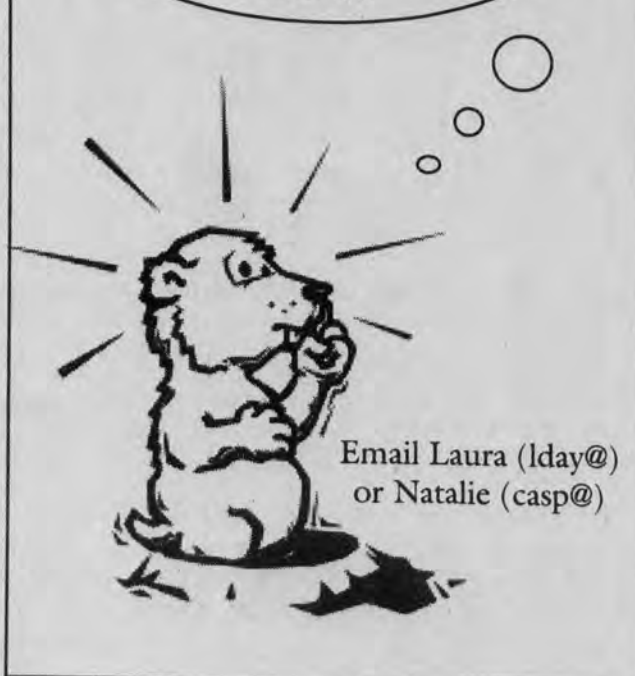

Starting Feb. 5, the University will have a new associate director of public relations. Alan Janesch will be replacing Kathie Dibell who recently retired. Janesch's attention will be concentrated on making the University more visible nationally, especially through the media. Janesch brings experience in the field after working in the news bureau at Penn State.

Janesch graduated from Penn State in 1976 with a degree in English literature, and earned a master's in English from Penn State in 2000. He was instrumental in bringing the National Governors' Association annual meeting to Penn State. He spearheaded the proposal, planning, implementation and media relations for the conference.

Before accepting the position at Penn State, Janesch worked for the National Governors' Association in Washington, D.C. He has also previously worked for a Congressman and at several newspapers. Outside of his primary job, Janesch is the treasurer of the 350 member College and University Public Relations Association of Pennsylvania.

Six weeks left of winter blues? Chill out and write for news!

Email Laura (lday@) or Natalie (casp@)

SUPER HEROES!

ALE MAN & CHICKEN MAN!

Love BJ's

Super Buffalo Wing SPECIAL!

12 for $4.95

24 for $7.95

17 North Market Street
SELENSGROVE
374-9841

291 Hill Street
DANVILLE
275-5110

Sunday - Thursday
9PM - Closing
FRI-SAT ONLY!

World Briefs

Lockerbie bomber sentenced to life

CAMP ZEIST, Netherlands—A Libyan intelligence agent has been sentenced to life imprisonment after being found guilty of the mass murder of 270 people in the 1988 Lockerbie bombing.

The trial judges recommended Abdel Baset Ali Mohamed Al-Megrahi, who is expected to appeal, should serve at least 20 years before he is eligible for parole.

Megrahi was one of two Libyans accused of planting a device on Pan Am Flight 103 which blew up over the Scottish town on December 21, 1988, killing all 259 passengers and crew, and 11 people on the ground.

Toll estimates rise as quake rescuers depart

BHUJ, India (CNN)—The Red Cross, one of many groups trying to cope with the enormity of the India earthquake, now estimates that the death toll could rise to at least 50,000.

Efforts were turning from rescue to relief to deal with the fast-growing need for food, clothing and shelter among survivors in the disaster zone that is the western state of Gujarat.

There are an estimated 200,000 people homeless. Overseas aid continues to pour in amid growing concerns about lawlessness and looting.

Fed slashes rate again

NEW YORK (CNN)—In an aggressive move to ward off recession, the Federal Reserve slashed short-term interest rates by half of a percentage point Wednesday and signaled further cuts may be needed.

The move brings the federal funds rate, the interest rate banks charge each other on overnight loans, to 5.5 percent, from 6 percent. The rate cut comes the same day the government reported that the U.S. economy grew at a 1.4 percent annual rate in the fourth quarter, the slowest quarterly reading in more than five years.

The cuts were widely expected by financial markets, which have edged up in recent weeks in anticipation of further interest rate reductions to prevent recession. A recession is defined as two consecutive quarters of negative growth.

White House nixes lifting sanctions against Libya

WASHINGTON (CNN)—The guilty verdict against a Libyan suspect in the deadly 1988 bombing of Pan Am Flight 103 won't affect U.S. sanctions against the North African nation, U.S. President George Bush said Wednesday.

"I appreciate so very much that the Scottish court has made a decision and convicted a member of the Libyan intelligence service," Bush told reporters at the White House. But, the president said, no verdict "can change the suffering and loss" known by the families of those who died aboard the doomed jet.

Mideast violence underscores final days of Israeli campaign

JERUSALEM (CNN)—Against a backdrop of sporadic violence, Israel's election campaign rolled on Wednesday toward a seemingly certain conclusion, with incumbent Prime Minister Ehud Barak's handling of the Israeli-Palestinian conflict a critical issue.

Barak, trailing challenging Likud party chairman Ariel Sharon in opinion polls by an apparently widening margin, pledged to withdraw the Israeli army from West Bank battleground areas if he's re-elected. "Just like we did in Lebanon."

Barak withdrew troops from Israel's self-declared "security zone" inside south Lebanon late last spring, fulfilling a promise he made during his 1999 election campaign.

Jet near-miss over Japan injures 34

TOKYO, Japan—At least 34 people were injured, three of them seriously, when a Japan Airlines passenger jet swerved in mid-air to avoid another plane.

The eight men and 26 women, including at least two crew and a baby girl, were hurt when the pilot yanked the controls of the plane to avoid hitting the other aircraft.

"The plane descended steeply after swaying from side to side. I thought we would crash," a middle-aged woman told NHK public television.

TV boss to fight extradition to Russia

MADRID, Spain—Media magnate Vladimir Gusinsky has told a Spanish court he will fight extradition to Russia to face fraud charges.

Reiterating his belief that he is a victim of a political campaign, he said: "I don't want to be extradited because I don't believe that Russian justice is independent."

Gusinsky, head of Russia's leading independent media group Media-Most, has been under effective house arrest in his luxury villa in Spain since December, awaiting hearings that might force him to return to Russia.

U.S. could be stuck with California utilities' debts, senator warns

WASHINGTON—California's major utilities could end up being bailed out by U.S. taxpayers because of federal orders to generators to continue selling electricity to the state, the chairman of the Senate Energy Committee said Wednesday.

"In the event California cannot repay generators for this power, the federal government is going to have to meet that obligation, because this was an order of the federal government," Sen. Frank Murkowski, R-Alaska, said at a hearing of the Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee.

California remained at the highest level of alert Wednesday, the 16th straight day that power reserves have dropped to below 1.5 percent of total capacity, making rolling blackouts possible.

Two more Alabama inmates captured: five in custody

NASHVILLE, Tennessee (CNN)—Tennessee authorities captured five of the six inmates on the run from an Alabama prison Thursday morning.

Arrested early Thursday outside Buckner, Tennessee, about 50 miles west of Nashville, were inmates Steve Murphy, serving a life term for murder; Billy Gamble, who was serving 25 years for robbery; and O.C. Borden, convicted of capital murder and sentenced to life in prison without parole.

Two more—Jack Allred, serving life without parole for robbery, and James McClain, serving 20 years for burglary—were taken into custody about an hour later. A sixth inmate remained at large.

Compiled by Laura Day,
courtesy of cnn.com

Ward appointed as multicultural coordinator

One of Ward's main roles is to coordinate multicultural programs on campus, writes Staff Writer Aly Rentrop

With the departure of former Coordinator of Multicultural Programs Eric Polite who left to do graduate work at the University of Maryland, the University welcomes Danielle Ward '99 as the new proprietor of this position.

As the Coordinator of Multicultural Programs, Ward is responsible for overseeing the Presidents' Council, a discussion group made up of the presidents of the multicultural organizations at the University. Ward also works in conjunction with 24 of the multicultural organizations that exist on campus.

In addition to this position, one of Ward's main roles is to coordinate the various multicultural programs that take place throughout the course of the year.

The different multicultural organizations on campus have planned a myriad of events for this semester, including a large number taking place this month.

On Tuesday, Feb. 6, Professor of History and Political Science and the Founding Director of the Institute of Research in African American Studies at Columbia University Dr. Manning Marable will speak at the Langone Center from 7p.m.-9:30 p.m.

Heaven's Hotbox, a multicultural group dedicated to the appreciation of art as an expression, is sponsoring a "Night of Romantic Expression" from 9p.m.-11p.m. on Friday, Feb. 9 in the Langone Center.

The Seventh Street House will be holding "Black History Alive," an event sponsored by the Office of Housing and Residential Life, on Sunday, Feb. 11.

Ward's interest in working in the Office of Multicultural Affairs originated from her aunt, Rebekah Mitchell, who founded the Office at the University in 1986.

After observing her aunt's involvement in multicultural awareness on campus, Ward was inspired to become involved in the program.

Ward recognizes that the main emphasis of the Office of Multicultural Affairs is "to bring in diverse programs for the entire campus community."

Associate Dean of Students Ed Cowell also plays a significant role in the multicultural programs on campus, serving as the supervisor of the multicultural affairs at the University.

"The focus of the [multicultural] program should be designed for the purpose of providing additional opportunities for the campus community to engage in cultural expeditions and discussions about diversity issues," said Cowell.

Ward has a proactive approach to multicultural issues on campus. "The most important goal is to promote multicultural awareness on campus," Ward said.

By working with the multicultural organizations on campus and helping to coordinate different events, Ward strives to "create the kind of community that welcomes all kinds of people."

Danielle Ward acquired the position of Coordinator of Multicultural Programs in the fall.

REPORT From page A1

pare students for life beyond Bucknell, we have to create an environment that is reflective of life beyond Bucknell."

The history of recruiting students of color at the University spans over 30 years and during that time, the campus community has seen significant progress. The assistance of Diversity Preferential and Diversity Plus Preferential aid packages has helped attract minority students to the institution.

"We are being competitive but what serves as a constant reminder is that we need to continue to make strides and be thoughtful about the level of preferential aid we provide," Cowell said. "It's not nearly about 'buying students,' but instead, making a conscious effort to bring the students here."

The number of visiting minority students participating in the campus visitation programs has almost doubled over the past few years. The CDC aspires to have at least 15 percent of its student body composed of members of racial minority groups by September of 2002.

"We can't always go to the top schools and look for the top students—you put yourself at a level of competition that is really difficult. If we want to go that route we have to have the financial means to support us going that route," Cowell said.

While the CDC does not recommend changing the University policy on awarding financial aid on the basis of the need rather than merit, they have suggested that the University consider increasing both the number and the dollar value of the Diversity preferential aid packages.

After the aggressive recruitment of minority students is accomplished for each incoming class, the next challenge for the University lies in the retention of these students.

"The Committee considers that losing any student is unfortunate, but that losing a minority student is especially regrettable," according to the report.

To aid in the retention, Cowell and Elaine Garrett, associate dean of arts and sciences, implemented a mentoring program to better connect first-year minority students to faculty members in order to aid the student in the adjustment process to the campus community.

"The overall response was that it was a good first effort with room for improvement," Cowell said. "Those students who connected with their mentor aided them in the adjustment to Bucknell and the community."

In addition to the mentoring program, the CDC proposed a summer transition program that will give first-year minority students the opportunity to spend six weeks on campus during the summer to address both academic and cultural transitions. The program would offer academic credit and a stipend to participate. A similar program existed in the eighties at the University, but Cowell plans to revisit and redesign the opportunity.

Two other programs that the Committee hopes to improve are first-year student Orientation and study abroad opportunities. Orientation has done a good job addressing the need to understand diversity in the campus community, according to Cowell. The study abroad programs pose a challenge for many minority students that fear losing his/her financial aid packages or for student-athletes who feel their study abroad decision would not be supported by their team.

"Unfortunately there are some athletic programs that have been less supportive than others in supporting study abroad activities, according to some students who have voiced concerns," Cowell said.

Three faculty awarded Presidential Professorship

By LAURA DAY
News Editor

University President Steffen Rogers acclaimed, "Each of these faculty members has exhibited to a remarkable degree high achievement in teaching, research and other scholarly activities and professional accomplishment."

Having taught at Bucknell since 1967 and being the recipient of the University history.

University President Steffen Rogers acclaimed, "Each of these faculty members has exhibited to a remarkable degree high achievement in teaching, research and other scholarly activities and professional accomplishment."

Having taught at Bucknell since 1967 and being the recipient of the University history.

University President Steffen Rogers acclaimed, "Each of these faculty members has exhibited to a remarkable degree high achievement in teaching, research and other scholarly activities and professional accomplishment."

Having taught at Bucknell since 1967 and being the recipient of the University history.

University President Steffen Rogers acclaimed, "Each of these faculty members has exhibited to a remarkable degree high achievement in teaching, research and other scholarly activities and professional accomplishment."

Having taught at Bucknell since 1967 and being the recipient of the University history.

University President Steffen Rogers acclaimed, "Each of these faculty members has exhibited to a remarkable degree high achievement in teaching, research and other scholarly activities and professional accomplishment."

Having taught at Bucknell since 1967 and being the recipient of the University history.

University President Steffen Rogers acclaimed, "Each of these faculty members has exhibited to a remarkable degree high achievement in teaching, research and other scholarly activities and professional accomplishment."

Having taught at Bucknell since 1967 and being the recipient of the University history.

Burma-Bucknell Award in 1988, Janesch's contributions to the Political Science Department and the University as a whole are numerous.

"It is a great honor after working at Bucknell for so long," Peeler said.

Recently, Peeler has devoted his research to the comparative analysis of liberal democracy in Latin America. Recognizing that with this award there is the "expectation that I will continue exercising leadership," Peeler said. "I hope to travel more in Latin America to continue my research."

Peeler has published two books: "Latin American Democracies: Colombia, Costa Rica, Venezuela" and "Building Democracy in Latin America."

Pamela Gorkin has been a beloved professor in Mathematics at the University since 1982. Her research on Banach algebraic properties of spaces and analytic functions has solidified her as a leading force in the math world.

"It is a great honor to be recognized in this way," Gorkin said.

Gorkin received the Lindback award in 1987 and has spoken at conferences in Japan and across Europe.

"The award will allow me to work more closely with students at Bucknell and will enable me to continue to work with my colleagues in Europe, South America and Asia," Gorkin said.

Professor of Civil and Environmental Engineering Jeffrey Evans joined the University's faculty in 1985. In over 20 years of teaching, research and consulting he has been involved with many geotechnical and environmental projects.

"To be recognized for my achievements in teaching, scholarship, professional accomplishment and service in an environment like Bucknell University with so many gifted and dedicated colleagues is most rewarding," Evans said.

"While I am appreciative of the recognition, I am, at the same time, grateful to the many mentors and students that contributed to my development as an engineer and educator."

Most recently, Evans furthered his studies in a research project on vertical barriers used to control subsurface contaminant migration while at the University of Nottingham in England.

"My research in underground vertical barriers for the control of contaminant migration is currently focused on materials and procedures commonly used in the UK but increasingly used in the U.S.," Evans said.

"I imagine I will use some of the time and funds to more fully investigate these materials as well as widen the scope to consider variations as have they have developed elsewhere."

Along with the award, the three professors were granted a stipend for travel and research

FORUM

EDITORIAL

A week of tears

It is an age-old question—why do bad things happen to good people? The fragility of life and the uncertainty of death often leave people gasping for reasons in the aftermath of tragedy.

The plane crash that resulted in the death of eight members of the Oklahoma State basketball organization and the dog attack that left Diane Whipple, head women's lacrosse coach at St. Mary's University in California, dead are senseless catastrophes—the kind that create a “why?” feeling.

But the other two university-related incidents that befell the nation's college community this week, while equally tragic, are ones in which we can, and should, take away a lesson.

Two Dartmouth professors, a married couple, were murdered in their Bena, New Hampshire home on Saturday, Jan. 27. The incident prompted the entire campus community to lock their doors, something that they did not consider necessary before the incident.

A Bloomsburg University freshman was found dead in his dorm room after a night of heavy drinking resulted in a case of alcohol poisoning. After consuming far too much, he passed out in his bed and apparently died in his sleep.

Now think about Lewisburg, how often do you lock your doors? How often do you “sleep it off”? Personal safety is not guaranteed on a college campus—we are not in a haven safe from outside influences, nor are we licensed to drink senselessly because that is what we are “supposed to do.”

These incidences should be treated as a wake-up call to the University community. At the risk of sounding purely doom and gloom, personal safety is one of the, if not the most, important things to learn on your way to adulthood. It is crucial to realize that you need to keep your eyes open and your head up as you make your way through life; to think of yourself as “invincible” is detrimental to your health.

You only need to put the minimum amount of time and effort into making sure that your door is locked, the door to your dorm is not propped open, your car is locked, you never walk alone, you don't drink too much and you make sure the people you care about follow these same rules.

Bloomsburg and Hanover are just like Lewisburg—prime examples of small town America. So perhaps it is a sad lesson to learn, then, that not even nostalgic villages are bastions of safety anymore. But as sad as that may seem, it is necessary to accept this. Trying to change the nature of society is a noble pursuit, but at what point does it become merely escapism? To ignore reality in an attempt to change it is counter-productive.

Bad things to happen to good people, but vigilance and personal awareness may ensure that they do not happen to you or to someone you care about at this University.

bucknellian@bucknell.edu

Happy to be alive?
Happy to be a Bucknellian?
Write about it!
Contact April at ajohn@ to write for Opinions.

Editors-in-Chief
Rebecca Rowland '02
Peter Van Emburgh '02

Managing Editor
Jim Leahy '03

Senior Editors
Heather Napolitano '01
Brian Watson '01
Matt Trunnell '01
Matt Albert '01

Business Manager
Mark Langer '02

News Editors
Laura Day '03
Natalie Cisp '02
News Layout Editor
Rachel Laskow '03

Business and Politics Editor
Michael Boland '03

Forum Editor
April John '03

Features Editors
Sandi-Jo Galati '03
Jolene Hart '03
Features Layout Editor
Jason Rubenstein '04

Arts and Entertainment Editor
Krista Reisdorf '02

Science and Technology Editors
Lynne Waldman '01
Josiana Cetta '04

Letters to the Editor

President Rogers applauds First Night

Every once in awhile something special happens in your life and becomes an event you never forget. Such an event occurred last night at the President's home. Athena and I want to thank the Class of 2004 for including us in their very special First Night event celebrating the students' first night as future alumni of Bucknell University. I wish that the entire Bucknell family could have shared the event from our vantage point.

It all started early in the evening when tables appeared on the street in front of our home and a number of individuals began lighting luminaries that lined the sidewalks on both sides of the street. Our home and the street were magically transformed into a fairland of subtle lighting reflected in the snow, with the blackness of the oaks trees forming a backdrop for our beautiful campus. At approximately 8:15, Athena and I stepped out onto the balcony above our front door and began to follow the activities from that elevated viewpoint.

Gradually, a number of students appeared at the top of the hill and we began to see the shadowy outline of numerous small blue lights moving through the trees towards our home. As the students approached, we heard the soft sound of numerous voices singing “Ray Bucknell.” Then the students filled the sidewalk, more stood in the snow and filled the yard, and finally over 750 of them filled the entire street in front of our home. We were then joined on the balcony by Jessica Brisk, president of the class 2004, who presented to us the class notebook and told us that this marked the beginning of the chronicles that the Class of 2004 intends to keep of the history of their four years at Bucknell. Then an even more amazing event occurred and all 750 students began to sing in unison Bucknell's “Alma Mater.” Athena was close to tears and I must confess to being a bit choked up myself. It was beautiful and emotionally moving in a way that defies description. There has never been a doubt in our minds that Bucknell is a special place, but those students at that moment solidified that perception beyond anything that we could have imagined. Again, I wish the entire community could have seen this vision from our vantage point. 750 students standing in the snow and reflected light of the luminaries, holding small blue lights, looking up at us, and singing Bucknell's “Alma Mater.” The students then gathered in the street, shared hot chocolate and a true bonding experience, and disappeared as quickly as they had appeared as small dark groups of figures returning through the trees to their respective dorms. It was an occasion that I will never forget.

Later, I did have an opportunity to review the class notebook that was presented by Jessica, and feel strongly that this document must be protected and be a part of all of the Class of 2004 reunions. I would predict that at their 25th Reunion some of them will look at that book and say, “Hey, I looked pretty good back then.” Others will say, “Hey, we really were a very special class.” Others will say, “Oh my goodness, did I really do or say that? I hope my children never get a hold of this book!”

Athena and I are, of course, proud in the extreme of all of the students who attend this wonderful university. However, I want to congratulate our first-year students on having initiated an exceptional tradition at this university and would have to say further, “Watch out world, here comes the Bucknell Class of 2004, and they are special!”

Athena and I extend our most heartfelt gratitude for having been included in this very, very special event.

Cordially,
Stef Rogers
President of Bucknell University

Anger over wording in GPA announcement

To the Editors:

I have just returned from a semester abroad, and it is disheartening to have my first encounter with the new dean of students be a negative one. However, I cannot see that the recent campus email sent by Dean Ferraro is anything else.

The email that I am referring to was titled “Congrats to Phi Psi and Phi Phi” and it is the wording of this congratulatory note to which I object. I understand that the Greeks who have done well academically should be congratulated. I approve of this wholeheartedly. The Greek system does sometimes get a bad rap and certainly deserves to have their successes recognized. However, I do not feel that this needs to be done at the expense of non-Greek affiliated students.

The email began by congratulating the fraternity and sorority that held the highest average GPA's for last semester (Phi Psi and Phi Phi) and then listed the other Greek organizations that also did admirably. With all of this I have no problem.

My feelings of offense arose as I neared the end of the email: the dean stated that “naturally” women in sororities obtained higher GPAs than non-affiliated women. The use of the expression “naturally” shows poor word choice on the part of the dean. Perhaps the word's presence has some explanation that I cannot discern, and I understand that it is only a word.

Also, to his credit, I have heard that the dean has apologized to people who have made him aware of his indiscretion. However, I write this in the hope that any other offensive language can be avoided. Perhaps future congratulations need not be decimations as well.

Lindsey Wight '02

Are safe escorts the safest solution?

By JULIA LEHMAN
Staff Writer

Dean Ferraro recently sent out a campus-wide e-mail addressing the issue of “Safe Escorts.” In the e-mail, he proclaims, “Safe Escort is a safety service for the individual who would have to walk alone; it cannot be a taxi service for groups of partygoers.”

What the Dean didn't directly state was that there is a one-person rule for the service—only one person at a time is allowed to use the service to insure that a safe escort car does not become a “drunk-mobile.”

But what about the safety of the individual using the safe escort? What if the individual is so intoxicated that she can't make it home alone? Under the guidelines, a friend is not allowed to accompany the inebriated young woman home.

Let me pose the scenario. A young woman is at a party and she has been drinking heavily—so much that she can hardly stand up, let alone walk at night by herself. A friend calls the Safe Escort service to help the obviously inebriated young woman. The service does not allow the friend to accompany the young woman, so she goes alone in the car, gets out at her destination, tries to make it up the steps and slips, banging her head on the ground. This situation is dangerous for the young woman and may place the Safe Escort service in a condition of liability.

But let's say that the woman, instead, miraculously manages to climb up the stairs to her room and into bed unharmed. She wakes up, walks to the mailbox, and finds a citation in her mailbox for underage drinking. She would probably be upset and might vow never to use the service again, and, after a discussion with mom and dad, whom Bucknell has informed of the whole scenario, might reaffirm her hatred for the Safe Escort service. If this same young woman were to go out again a couple weeks later, for instance, and have a few drinks—even if it were not too many, now that she has learned her lesson—she would be running a serious risk.

Again, let me elaborate on the situation. The young woman leaves the party late one night with a friend, a young woman like herself. As the two of them are walking home, they are attacked and assaulted. In this extreme case, the fault cannot be placed solely on the young woman or on Safe Escorts, for that matter.

However, one might ask: is the Safe Escort service really providing the safest means for the young women to get back home, or is the service deterring them by limiting the passenger count to one person at a time?

And let's be honest—is this situation really so uncommon?

I think safety, real safety, should be the ultimate goal of the service. Young adults are supposed to make mistakes here, and learn from their misjudgments, in order to prepare themselves for the real world.

But teaching students that the administrative body will not support them when they make mistakes is not “making people's lives good lives,” as Dean Ferraro has stated.

With regards to Dean Ferraro's tips for using the service, they are within reason but perhaps too idealistic. However, if a young woman needs immediate attention due to excessive drinking, if she is still drunk when she wants or needs to leave a party, then Dean Ferraro's advice to “take some time to reduce the level of alcohol in your system before you call Safe Escort” and “rather than drink right up until you leave a party, for the last hour switch to soft drinks” may not be a practical or feasible solution.

The argument boils down to which is worse: is it worse for the system to be abused by partygoers who need a taxi from one party to another, or for the safety and well-being of individuals on campus to be maintained with the best resources possible, to keep individuals from being placed in harmful situations?

THE BUCKNELLIAN

Founded in 1896 as The Blue and Orange

Volume 127, Number 1

C-3952 BUCKNELL UNIVERSITY
LEWISBURG, PENNSYLVANIA, 17837
(570)-577-1520

BUCKNELLIAN@BUCKNELL.EDU

HTTP://WWW.ORG.BUCKNELL.EDU/BUCKNELLIAN

EDITORIAL POLICY

The editorials of The Bucknellian reflect the consensus of the Editorial Board as to the topics and general position. If a consensus could not be reached, the opinions expressed are those of the Editors-in-Chief.

All other opinion material represents the views of the author and not necessarily those of The Bucknellian.

PUBLISHING POLICY

The Bucknellian is written, edited and published on 12 Fridays during each academic semester entirely by Bucknell students. The Bucknellian's fiscal affairs are overseen by an Advisory Board comprised of faculty, staff and administrators. All published material is chosen by the paper's editorial board without prior review by the Advisory Board, its adviser, the University or Bucknell Student Government.

SUBSCRIPTIONS POLICY

Subscriptions are available $45 per year and $30 per semester. To subscribe, send payment and address information to: The Bucknellian Subscriptions, Box C-3952, Lewisburg, PA 17837. Subscriptions are mailed first-class on the Friday of publication. Please send change-of-address information to the above location as well.

ADVERTISING POLICY

The Editorial Board of The Bucknellian reserves the right to deny any advertisements if offensive, illegal or in bad taste. For advertising rates, please contact the advertising managers at (570) 577-1085.

Copyright 2001 The Bucknellian

Sports Editors

Carmen Mauriello '02
Brooke Rea '02

Sports Layout Editor
Andrew Burr '04

Sports Statistician
Matthew Herbert '02

Darkroom Manager
Chris Rivera '02

Photo Editors
Paige Cull '01
Chris Rivera '02

Local Advertising Representative
Bryan Prins '04

National Advertising Representative
Amy Pelouquin '03

Online Editors
Eric Fair '01
Brendan Putnam '03

Circulation Manager
Brian Klotz '03

Head Copy Editors
Kim Luedde '01
Debbie Ruggieri '01

Production Manager
Nick Olsen '02

Adviser
James F. Lee

“Simpsons” tackle issues with laughs

By AARON DEROSA
Staff Writer

I was asked the other day why people are so enthralled by the television show, “The Simpsons.” I tossed the question around in my head but all I could come up with was, “I don't know ... coast guard?”

Obviously that quote is an obscure Homer reference, but it serves as a case in point as to the pervasiveness of the Simpson family. I don't think I make it through a day without quoting the Simpsons at one point or another. I actually frighten myself as to how much I remember, and I'm not the only one.

What I think it comes down to, is the fact that “The Simpsons” is essentially the cartoon version of Seinfeld. It has become a mainstay in society, a social critique filled with biting sarcasm from uni-dimensional characters whose lives are never affected by the events from one show to the next.

Each character has a distinct and unchanging personality which can be both excruciatingly frustrating yet supremely hysterical. A number of my friends refused to watch Seinfeld because George was too annoying. That's the same excuse I get from others who find that Homer is so unintelligent it's aggravating.

And, just like Seinfeld, its either a case of love it or leave it. But even though some have been unable to embrace “The Simpsons” humor, the show has nevertheless imprinted itself on the social climate of today. Every episode is filled with biting sarcasm and political rhetoric, and has been as such for the past decade. In fact it would be impossible to define television in the 1990's without addressing “The Simpsons” and its effects.

The show itself knows no bounds, ranging from killing off a character in order to boost ratings, to a commentary on using radiation to grow plants resulting in a product called “tomacco” (the crossing of tobacco and tomato plants). They mock everything that's fit to be mocked and they do it in a tasteful manner that no other show has been able to do, save Seinfeld.

The show has grappled with issues of homosexuality, elections, ignorance, racism, tobacco, powerbars, bodybuilding, washed-up actors, inept police, corrupt politicians, murder trials, and the degradation of society by the media. There is a reason that the show is set in a town called Springfield, because there is a Springfield in almost every state.

But the most important aspect of this show is its evolution over the years. The humor has never gone stagnant. As opposed to other long-running shows like “Saturday Night Live” that have experienced major declines in the quality of their writing, “The Simpsons” has been able to redefine itself for new audiences in a changing world.

This is most noticeable in the shift from Bart as the main character to Homer. When the show was first released, Bart was the focal point. His catch phrases like “Don't have a cow man” or “eat my shorts” could be seen on t-shirts everywhere.

I can remember walking through

Grand Central Station and noticing a t-shirt shop with rows upon rows of Bart riding his skateboard or confronting authoritarian figures.

Now, those shirts have vanished, replaced by pictures of Homer's stupidity with sardonic reproach of the American work ethic.

Characters like the comic book guy who was introduced when personal computing was still growing, or Lionel Hutz, attorney-at-law, who is the quintessential ambulance-chasing lawyer, and even Mayor Quimby, the crooked and corrupt politician.

These are just a few of the characters that litter “The Simpsons” landscape and they all provide one piece or another to the tapestry that writer and creator Matt Groening presents. This is not just a show, it's a mirror image, a mirror image of a world that does stupid things, and where Seinfeld succeeded in pointing that out to its audience, so has the Simpson family.

The reason that the Simpsons have become so important to this society is because the show is a product of this society. However outlandish and absurd the show may seem, it is a derivative of our own society and the way we interact with ourselves and our environment. So come, experience the magic that is Homer.

Bush walks a fine line with education

By JOSH GUYAN
Senior Writer

Education was one of the biggest issues in the recent election and President Bush succeeded in identifying himself positively with it. He effectively stole a major Democratic stance by promising standards, accountability, and choice as well as increased federal funding for the important public good.

The last promise was a significant break from past Republican presidents and current Republican Congressional leadership in that the traditional Republican position has been to reduce the federal role in education, including demolishing the federal Department of Education.

In stark contrast to a large portion of the Republican Party, George W. Bush not only didn't call for the gutting of the Education Department, he proposed more federal money for the all-important program. President Bush is to be commended for bringing his party to the center in many ways on this issue.

The Bush education proposal contains several beneficial possibilities. First, of course, it does increase federal spending. Second, it stresses accountability to the federal government for performance. So far this is no break from Democratic policy on the issue.

Third, the proposal seeks to consolidate the 50 federal funding categories to five. This sounds like a phenomenal reduction in wasteful red tape until you consider that the several categories assure that federal money gets to the disadvantaged students who need it most. If the Bush team can find a way to get the money to those who need it most with only five funding categories, then more power to them.

One part of the proposal confuses me thoroughly. The plan says, “Victims of school-based crimes or students trapped in persistently dangerous schools will be provided with a safe alternative.” Where do all these students in unsafe schools go? Chances are that the schools near persistently unsafe schools (mostly inner city) aren't going to have much excess room.

If an inner-city school with thousands of students is deemed to be persistently unsafe (I'm sure there are dozens in every major American city right now) does that mean that every student in that school gets to go somewhere else? Where do they go?

Do we abandon a whole school when we don't have enough desks for the students we have now? I'm sure the Bush team would say the school would be shut down in true free market fashion and reopened with new management.

But how long would that take? Where do the students go in the meantime? At my middle school we had trailers set up outside the school to accommodate the excess students. Is that any way to learn?

This leads into my problems with the Bush proposal. First, the voucher program will inevitably run into the biggest opposition in the evenly divided Congress. Funneling public taxpayer funds to religious schools violates the Establishment Clause of the First Amendment.

That, of course, is a contentious declaration and the Supreme Court has yet to rule on the question. The High Court has allowed public textbooks and computers to be donated to religious schools, but struck down salary reimbursement for teachers of secular subjects at religious schools.

The Court, unless it's avoiding the issue, should hear the case involving a Cleveland voucher program that was upheld by the Ohio State Supreme Court and struck down by a Federal Circuit Court. The only court that can resolve the conflict now is the United States Supreme Court and we could use a ruling.

Second, while the Bush voucher proposal seemed to be a giveaway to the rich and middle class that could afford to supplement the meager $1500 voucher, closer examination revealed that a student can only receive the voucher if he or she goes to a persistently failing school. So wealthy families and those students that go to average schools will not be eligible.

However, the students at the poor, failing schools would have to supplement the federal voucher, since I'm not aware of a private or parochial school that takes $1500 for a year's tuition. Of course the poor families won't be able to afford the supplement so the voucher becomes irrelevant. Those who can afford to supplement it aren't eligible for it and those who are eligible can't afford to supplement it.

The Bush team response is that the $1500 voucher, while not sizable enough to pay tuition, might force states to match the federal generosity thereby making private or parochial school affordable to poor families. They certainly don't know this will happen, and that is certainly quite a gamble for a president who purports to care deeply that no student is left behind. President Bush simply shifts responsibility to the state if the vouchers don't actually help anyone rather than making sure they help children get a better education.

My last objection to the Bush proposal involves his call for testing as a mode of accountability. President Bush says he wants every student tested to ensure that schools deserve their funding. However, the Bush proposal allows the states to make up the test.

So in order to receive their bonus and not have funds taken away all states have to do is teach the test so their scores will go up. This should sound familiar because it's exactly what the independent RAND Corporation study said was going on in Bush's state of Texas.

There are good and bad aspects to the Bush “No Child Left Behind” proposal. A good portion of the plan will get through Congress and most likely do some good reforming our lethargic system of education. Other parts of the proposal, like the voucher, face an uphill battle and should be left out of the final legislation.

Environment, meet the GOP

By GRETCHEN SCHROCK
Opinions Columnist

The presence of George W. Bush in the Oval Office has not only been felt in Washington, D.C. and its surrounding political sphere, but also in the deep recesses of the country. This is where the Republican Party agenda—without regard to the concerns of other political groups—is being furthered to the detriment of posterity.

For instance, in Montana, the government headed by a newly elected Republican governor, Judy Matz, and by a Republican-controlled legislature is preparing to rewrite some of the state's environmental laws in an effort to make them more favorable to the interests of businesses.

The irrational reasoning behind this action is that the declining nature of traditional industries like mining, logging and energy development is hurting the economy of Montana. In order to resuscitate the supposedly staggering economy, the Republicans are proposing to speed up the process for obtaining construction and operating permits, thereby attracting businesses to Montana. Under this new legislation, some permits could be issued after 90 days of review, instead of the previous time limit of one year, and even if all environmental reviews were not completed by the 90-day deadline, the state would still be able to grant permits to those businesses.

Where do these proposed actions leave the pristine environment of Montana? To the Republicans, that is not the major concern. They are only considering the possibility, not the fact, that the current environmental regulations may make it too expensive for companies to operate profitably, therefore, discouraging the movement of high-level jobs and the expansion of out-of-state businesses into Montana.

In addition, they contend that the previous regulations have increased the electricity costs of Montana citizens by discouraging the construction of power plants. Yet, how do they account for the fact, according to environmental groups, that Montana ranks eighth in the country for per capita job creation and that the state's five percent unemployment rate is relatively low and has recently been declining? How do they explain that tourism, recreation and the service industry are booming economic sectors in this state? What influence does the state's tax policy, the quality of education, Montana's 1997 deregulation of electrical power, and the tremendous financial burden imposed upon the government from cleaning up former mining sites have on the economic situation?

According to environmentalists, the environment defines the image of Montana, not the companies it contains. The citizens concerned with what will be left to future generations should strongly defend the environment of one of the last true wildernesses in their country from the contorted designs of the Republican Party, secretary of the Interior Nominee Gail Norton and President Bush.

There are people who claim liberal arts education is a joke. They say the only job we will ever have is asking, “Do you want fries with that?” I feel sorry for these people. Their ignorance and lack of culture is disappointing.

Finally, we are balanced individuals. If you look at the polished resume of any senior, chances are they did more than just go to class here. They were most likely involved in a variety of extracurricular activities. They may have even started their own.

Students who attend larger institutions do not have opportunities like these easily accessible to them. We are also balanced in the sense that we have a broad spectrum of course requirements.

In time here, I have been exposed to psychology, religion, poetry, geology, biology, economics and theater, but I'm a business management major. Students from liberal arts institutions walk away with a more developed knowledge of the world around them.

There are people who claim liberal arts education is a joke. They say the only job we will ever have is asking, “Do you want fries with that?” I feel sorry for these people. Their ignorance and lack of culture is disappointing.

Because everyday
is the perfect occasion for casual fine dining at...

The Victorian
Lady

115 Old Turnpike Road
Lewisburg, PA 17837
Lunch: Mon.-Fri. 11:00-2:00
Dinner: Thurs.-Sat. 5:00-9:00
Phone: (570) 523-8090
www.victorianladyrestaurant.com

5 minutes from campus

WE CAN Get You Back into Action!

Monday - Friday
8 a.m. - 5 p.m.
Field House Athletic Training Suite

577.1060

A physician's prescription is required.
Please check your insurance policy for restrictions and limitations.

EVANGELICAL
COMMUNITY HOSPITAL
SPORTS MEDICINE CENTER

"Staying off it for a while" isn't always the best rehabilitation program following an injury or surgery. The professionals from the Evangelical Sports Medicine Center have teamed up with Bucknell University to provide on-campus Physical Therapy Services to the Bucknell Community. Call today for more information or to make an appointment!

Vennari's Pizza
524-0444 610 Market St.
Free Delivery Anytime
Dine In • Carry Out

Bloomberg REAL - TIME OPPORTUNITIES

NOT TO MENTION...

REAL PEOPLE
REAL TEAMWORK
REAL GROWTH

Join Bloomberg where your talents are recognized in an environment that doesn't focus on titles, corner offices and corporate ladders. As the leading provider of financial information for over 200,000 professionals in 100 countries worldwide, we seek spirited individuals who can help us deliver the best information possible. Experience the future of business with Bloomberg.

TECHNICAL SUPPORT REPRESENTATIVE

This customer-oriented role requires a motivated, skilled communicator who will handle inbound client calls related to hardware, software and telecommunications problems, diagnose and troubleshoot hardware issues, and repair problems through various system fixes. Basic knowledge of modems, DSUs, and digital communications preferred. Candidates must have a Bachelor's degree, preferably in Management Information Systems or Computer Information Systems. All majors are encouraged to apply. Proficiency in PC's, Windows 95/NT is a plus. We will provide complete training in LAN, WAN, PC Digital Circuit and software trouble shooting. We offer excellent growth potential for talented, future-driven individuals who want to succeed in a fast-paced, global company.

We will be on campus for an Information Session on Monday, February 5.
Please contact Career Services for location and time.

If unable to attend, please send your resume to: Bloomberg, College Recruitment, Job Code: BKU, 499 Park Avenue, New York, NY 10022. Fax: (917) 369-4752. E-mail: college@bloomberg.net. Bloomberg is proud to be an Equal Opportunity Employer M/F/D/V committed to workforce diversity.

<http://careers.bloomberg.com>

World of OPPORTUNITIES

Northwestern College of Chiropractic

Northwestern can provide you with an education uniquely focused on the 21st century. Just ask our 1,000 alumni. They are practicing from America to Zimbabwe, as solo practitioners and in interdisciplinary settings. They know that our FOCUS ON EXCELLENCE has earned us an international reputation as a pioneer in chiropractic education, patient care and scientific research. Northwestern is a limited enrollment, private institution featuring a well-rounded, rigorous educational program integrating the basic and clinical sciences, diagnosis, X-ray, chiropractic therapeutics, wellness care and practice management. Our pioneering clinical internship programs, interdisciplinary study opportunities and a state-of-the-art student clinic provide our graduates with an UNPARALLELED CLINICAL FOUNDATION. Add our Career Services Center, where we assist our graduates in job placement, and you can understand why our graduates have such a high satisfaction level with their careers. For a personal visit or more detailed information, call a Northwestern admissions counselor at 1-800-888-4777...or go virtual at www.nwhealth.edu

A college of
NORTHWESTERN HEALTH SCIENCES UNIVERSITY
2501 W. 84th St.
Minneapolis, MN 55431

after this, the corporate ladder will be a piece of [cake]

In the course of facing challenges like this, you'll learn how to think on your feet. Stay cool under pressure. Take charge. Talk to an Army ROTC rep. You'll find there's nothing like a little climbing to help prepare you for getting to the top.

ARMY ROTC Unlike any other college course you can take.

BUSINESS & POLITICS

Peace process loses key British figure

By BRIAN WATSON
Senior Editor

The Northern Ireland peace process suffered a crushing blow last week with the resignation of Secretary of State Peter Mandelson. Mandelson, the British-appointed overseer of the disputed region, resigned last week amid allegations of improprieties involving a passport application for a foreign benefactor.

According to the Irish American Information Service, the former secretary, who resigned from government for the second time in three years, said that he did not act improperly in placing a call to the British Home Minister on behalf of Srihand Hinduja, who had agreed to help underwrite 3 million pounds of expense for London's Millennium Dome.

British Prime Minister Tony Blair, a close friend of Mandelson's who gave the former minister a second chance after his first resignation in 1998, named Mr. John Reid as Mandelson's successor. Reid, a Catholic-born Briton was serving as Scottish Secretary of State before the announcement.

Brian Cowen, the Irish minister for foreign affairs, applauded Mandelson's efforts: "It comes at a time when the two governments and the pro-Good Friday Agreement parties are engaged in the most intensive efforts to achieve the full implementation of outstanding aspects of the agreement—a project to which Mr. Mandelson was firmly and resolutely committed."

Mandelson's resignation, was, according to an Irish Times editorial, "something the peace process could have done without." Talks were at a critical point, especially regarding a controversial police reform bill and an expected surrendering of Irish Republican Army (IRA) weapons, leaders from Ireland and Great Britain were hoping for an increased stability in the area—not a gaping hole.

Reid must now pick up for Mandelson, called the "king of spin" for his skilled media manipulation, who helped rebuild the Northern Ireland Assembly and counseled opposing parties through several controversial and crucial events. Mitchell McLaughlin, chairman of Sinn Féin, the Republican party with known ties to the IRA, said, "While I wish John Reid well in his new appointment Sinn Féin understands that, irrespective of who the British Secretary of State is, what is important is British policy. And British policy at this time is enshrined in the Good Friday Agreement. We will be looking to Mr. Reid to promote, defend and act as guarantor of that agreement."

British Secretary of State Peter Mandelson's (left) resignation created a new conflict for Prime Minister Tony Blair's efforts in the region.

Shortly after Mandelson's resignation came another exit. One of the most talented Unionist politicians, Strangford MP John Taylor, the Ulster Unionist Party (UUP) deputy leader, said that he would not seek reelection this year. Taylor has been instrumental in the peace talks, with his support confident that with a spirit of mutual respect, cooperation and open dialogue, we can successfully meet these challenges."

But he received some consolation last week from President George W. Bush, who, in a letter to Adams, pledged continued support. "I remain dedicated to supporting the peace process in Northern Ireland," Bush wrote. "We will undoubtedly face a number of challenges in the years ahead. I am confident that with a spirit of mutual respect, cooperation and open dialogue, we can successfully meet these challenges."

Greenspan calls tax-cut "necessary"

By MICHAEL GORMAN
Staff Writer

Chairman of the Federal Reserve Alan Greenspan used his Senate testimony on Thursday to perform a very public about-face. Abandoning his long-held belief that a large tax cut was not in the long-term interest of the American economy, Greenspan declared that a tax cut is not only possible, but also necessary.

After the release of budget figures projecting the surplus to be even larger than earlier estimates, Greenspan stunned Democratic senators by stating that, "Large deficits are bad. Large surpluses are bad."

After the government finished buying back publicly held debt, Greenspan informed senators that the government would be forced to invest excess funds in privately held securities, a frightening prospect to say the least. Therefore, equilibrium must be reached so that the surplus is used effectively and accounted for prior to the point where all publicly held debt is eliminated.

Rather than shock the economy with a massive tax cut or spending increase when the deficit is eradicated, Greenspan insisted that it would be more advantageous to phase in a tax cut over time to prevent shock and overheating of the economy. Starting the process "sooner rather than later likely would smooth the transition to longer-term fiscal balance."

The fact that the Federal Reserve and its chairman typically abstain from entering the political arena only serves to strengthen the credibility of the venerable chairman's remarks, with few daring to question his logic.

Greenspan's short-term outlook for the U.S. economy was quite depressed. Declaring that economic growth is "probably very close to zero," Greenspan did not stop at merely supporting tax cuts as feasible. He affirmed that tax cuts were superior to increased spending and even went as far as endorsing Bush's marginal rate cuts as the best type of cut to promote economic growth.

While Greenspan was quick to point out that the bluntness of fiscal policy prohibited it from being used as an anti-cyclical tool, he testified that if the current slowdown transformed into a recession, fiscal policy, especially a tax cut, could be invaluable in pulling the economy out of the recession.

Aside from the immeasurable weight of the chairman's endorsement, Bush's tax cut plan has been gaining momentum in the political circles of Washington. It will likely be Bush's second major policy initiative, and has been drawing increased support from both sides of the aisle.

Ever-worsening economic indicators, coupled with the revised budget numbers, have made the plan quite attractive to lawmakers. Adding Greenspan's endorsement leaves few arguments against a cut of some sort. Surprisingly, there have even been rumors that the tax cut may even be larger than Bush is proposing. As usual, the enigmatic Greenspan drew both praise and contempt for his remarks on Thursday.

The White House issued a jubilant statement: "We are very heartened to see that Chairman Greenspan has weighed in on the importance of cutting taxes, and hope that Congress will join President Bush and Chairman Greenspan in passing the Bush tax cut so we can protect the strength of our economy."

The endorsement gives added weight to the Bush proposal and will likely cause moderate Democrats to at least take another look at the proposal, if not support it outright. However, some Democrats were furious with the chairman's reversal, vowing to fight the tax cuts, while other Democrats reacted more mildly.

In order to quell worries that a tax cut would divert funds from Social Security and Medicare, Chairman Greenspan actually proposed a tax cut plan that involved deficit reduction targets as well as dedicating any excess funds to Social Security.

Greenspan's approval of the tax cut, coupled with hints that a large ratecut may be coming at the next Federal Open Market Committee meeting, restored faith in many that the Federal Reserve is as vigilant as ever, and will take the necessary steps to return the American economy to expansion.

Environmentalists lament Cabinet picks

By ANDREA BEISSER
Staff Writer

The new administration, paired with a Republican-controlled Congress, has alarmed some members of the environmentalist movement. Since the new President and Vice President are both conservative, corporate-minded oilmen, critics have suggested that conservation will not be as high a priority as it should be.

In particular, the selections of John Ashcroft as Attorney General, Gale Norton as Interior Secretary, Spencer Abraham as Energy Secretary, and Christine Todd Whitman as EPA Administrator have raised questions about the probability of maintaining recent improvements and existing protections for our air, water, public lands, fish and wildlife. With a less sympathetic administration and Congress, liberal environmental protection groups will shift their focus to the courts and the media.

President George W. Bush's environmental record is discouraging to environmentalists. During his tenure as Texas Governor, the state plummeted in almost every category of environmental quality, including air, water and endangered species protection. Critics also frequently cite the fact that while Bush was Governor, Houston overtook Los Angeles as the "smoggiest city" in the country.

On his first day in office, President Bush suspended for 60 days all rules and regulations proposed by President Clinton in his final months in office, including public health regulations and policies designed to protect large tracts of public land. In a recent NBC News interview, the new President stated that he would review and possibly seek to overturn some of Clinton's last-minute executive orders relating to the environment.

Of further concern to some, President Bush strongly advocates drilling in the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge (ANWR), as does Gale Norton, newly confirmed Interior Secretary. He has suggested opening more of the West to mineral exploration, and has not ruled out timber harvests on public lands.

Gale Norton, viewed by some as an obstacle to progress, describes herself as "a conservative and a conservationist." Some Democratic Senators and liberal interests challenged the latter assertion, though the Senate confirmed her by a vote of 75-24. Norton is a vocal proponent of opening the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge in Alaska, she has also supported opening many other public lands for extractive purposes.

Under Norton's Interior Department many changes can be expected: her ideology and methods stand in stark contrast to those of her predecessor, Bruce Babbitt. Opponents suspect that Norton will try to weaken the National Environmental Policy Act (NEPA) and the Endangered Species Act (ESA), diminish Western water protections and challenge federal regulation of surface mining. John Ashcroft has drawn perhaps the most heated criticism of any of the cabinet nominations, based largely on his equal rights, civil rights, and abortion positions. As the nation's chief law enforcement officer, former-Sen. Ashcroft will be charged with enforcing all ESA, NEPA, and EPA regulations. During his confirmation hearings, Ashcroft declared that he was a "private environmentalist. Again, environmentalist groups disagreed.

They argue that Ashcroft voted repeatedly to weaken protections for natural resources and public health, including two votes in favor of the now infamous "Clearcut Rider" of 1995 that liberal environmentalists strenuously opposed. Ashcroft is on record supporting drilling in the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge, reducing the scope of the Clean Air and Clean Water Acts, and cancelling President Clinton's environmentally-minded monument designations. Some have objected to his support for private property rights over ESA regulations.

Bucknell's John Gilroy, an environmental studies professor, states his concern for the environment in these terms: "The problem with the Bush administration's approach to the environment is that, first, they do not feel it is an important federal issue, and second, they have an extremely anthropocentric view of nature." He feels the newly appointed cabinet members value the environment "only as it serves humanity and without regard for the integrity of ecosystems or their uniqueness." Environmentalists promise that despite the confirmation of the entire Bush Cabinet, they will be watching its every move.

Rev. Jackson fathered illegitimate child

Spiritual advisor to former President Clinton during Lewinsky scandal now faces own woes; a B&P commentary by Amanda Kaufman

The American people learned something interesting last week. The Rev. Jesse Jackson, civil rights leader and prominent Democrat, said in a press release, "I am father to a daughter born outside of my marriage... I love this child very much and have assumed responsibility for her emotional and financial support since she was born. I will be taking some time off to revive my spirit and reconnect with my family before I return to my public ministry."

So aside from the fact that Americans relish a good sex scandal, what's all the fuss about? Plenty. First of all, the baby is 20 months old, so the couple conceived the child about 29 months ago. And what, besides the obvious, was the good Reverend doing twenty-nine months ago? Ironically, he was acting as a spiritual adviser, counseling then-President Clinton on how to cope with hated right-wingers criticizing his "unconventional" use of an intern.

Unfortunately for Jackson, his involvement in the Lewinsky scandal apparently taught him little. In fact, it seems Jackson brought his mistress along with him for several of these presidential "counseling sessions."

So, who is the lady-friend? The mother, Karin L. Stanford, is 39. Jackson is 59. Stanford worked for Jackson in the Washington bureau of the Rainbow/PUSH Coalition, the nonprofit agency he founded in Chicago to further certain social causes. Jackson reportedly first became enamored of Karin Stanford after reading a book she had written about his impact on foreign policy.

Stanford soon became pregnant. The story didn't get out right away because Stanford was involved with another man when she found out she was pregnant, and couldn't be sure who fathered her child. Stanford left blank the space for the father's name on the birth certificate, but filled it in when DNA testing revealed Jackson's paternity.

Many would argue that Jackson's sex life is none of our business, but his actions have consequences for a significant number of American people. The statistic that bedevils black America is this: a staggering 68.8 percent of all African American children are born outside of wedlock, according to the National Center for Health Statistics. In fact, Jackson did not meet his own father until he was about five or six. Compare that to the illegitimacy rates for other races: 16.7 percent for Asian Americans, 22 percent for whites, and 42.1 percent for Hispanics.

Children who grow up in homes without fathers are at a much greater risk for behavioral disorders, becoming homeless, going to jail, dropping out of high school, using drugs, committing suicide, and so on. Girls who grow up without a father in the house—like Jackson's daughter—are at greater risk of teen pregnancy, divorce, and having children out of wedlock themselves. The causes of lingering socioeconomic inequality seem very clear.

Even more important than the monetary issue, however, is the social impact. Jackson has already re-emerged into public ministries and other public activities. He is ready to "move on." This sends the message that illegitimate children are no big deal—certainly not a big enough deal for a very public minister to give up his status as a religious leader. In fact, he somehow manages to portray himself as a victim of a political attack through all of this.

Jackson apparently commissioned the Rainbow/PUSH Coalition, a tax-exempt organization, to pay Ms. Stanford $36,000-40,000 to move to Los Angeles, where she presently works as a "consultant" for the organization. Additionally, one source said Jackson was paying $3,000 a month in "child support." This $36,000 a year is relevant to Americans if it is being provided by funds intended for the Rainbow/PUSH Coalition. Investigations are underway.

Instead of lamenting his mistake, Jackson has already moved on. He pretends that sending a $3,000 monthly child-support check and occasionally visiting his daughter can substitute for actual parenting. In his effort to "move on," he sends the message that illegitimacy is unfortunate, but no big deal. That's some message to send to America's youth, especially the African-American youth whom he claims to lead.

Quote of the Week "Comedian Robin Williams says cocaine is God's way of telling users that they have too much money. The XFL is God's way of telling America that it has too much leisure time."
—Columnist GEORGE WILL, 1/28

Don't be a Communist ... Write for B&P! Email Mike, mboland@

Bison Scoreboard

SWIMMING

WOMEN'S BASKETBALL

MEN'S BASKETBALL

Track & Field

WRESTLING

Men

1. Bucknell	168
2. Lehigh	132

Notables:

100 breaststroke
1. Guskey	59.36
100 back
1. Sheehan	56.07

200 back

1. Feintheil	1:55.91
--------------	---------

50 free

1. Neary	20.91
----------	-------

100 fly

1. Neary	50.68
----------	-------

200 IM

1. Sheehan	1:58.90
------------	---------

100 free

1. Garvin	47.16
-----------	-------

Women

1. Bucknell	163
2. Lehigh	137

Notables:

100 back
1. Golino	59.94

200 back

1. Golino	2:07.87
-----------	---------

200 IM

1. Golino	2:12.23
-----------	---------

50 free

1. Weaver	24.67
-----------	-------

100 free

1. Weaver
-----------	--

500 free

1. Faas	5:09.76
---------	---------

1M diving

1. Petcavage	208.28
--------------	--------

100 fly

1. Lowe	1:00.37
---------	---------

Bucknell 89 Lehigh 79

Franks	fg	ft	r	p
5-11	1-4	2	12
Quimby	6-9	2-2	6	14
Creamer	9-13	6-6	4	26
LeBlanc	4-6	2-5	13	10
Almind	9-19	4-4	7	22
Rounsly	1-1	1-1	3	3
Flemming	1-1	0-1	3	2

3pt. Creamer 2-3 Franks 1-4

SEASON STATS 15-5 (5-1)

Franks	fg	pct	3-pt.	a	r	ppg
45-139	.324	17-52	.45	64	7.3
Quimby	97-203	.478	0-0	26	149	15.0
May	9-25	.360	3-11	27	11	1.4
Creamer	133-279	.477	35-87	97	89	20.2
Helsing	9-25	.360	6-14	8	17	3.6
Almind	134-285	.470	6-17	24	102	17.2
Rounsly	32-71	.451	0-1	7	52	4.8
LeBlanc	41-87	.471	0-0	25	119	6.2
Valdner	3-8	.375	0-0	1	9	1.5
Fleming	5-12	.417	0-0	0	25	.9
Forence	1-5	.200	0-0	0	10	.8
Castillo	1-2	.500	0-0	0	0	.4
Putnoky	0-0	.000	0-0	1	1	0

Bucknell 74 Lehigh 86

Santos	fg	ft	r	p
1-1	2-2	1	4
Werner	4-11	5-5	11	14
Lalugba	6-7	3-7	7	15
Bailey	5-10	12-16	1	23
Ramage	0-6	0-0	2	0
Blankenship	6-14	1-2	2	13
Skornik	0-0	1-3	0	1
Quinn	0-3	2-2	4	2
Bennett	1-1	0-0	1	2
Slater	0-1	0-0	1	0

3pt. Werner 1-2 Bailey 1-3

SEASON STATS 10-10 (2-4)

Bailey	fg	pct	3-pt.	a	r	ppg
101-228	.443	25-57	.57	69	17.6
Lalugba	119-225	.529	0-0	26	162	14.6
Ramage	40-107	.374	20-55	15	24	8.2
Blankenship	63-127	.583	13-41	53	40	8.4
Werner	63-155	.406	5-17	28	93	8.3
Santos	11-32	.344	0-0	19	43	2.4
Bennett	15-38	.320	1-6	2	18	1.7
Webber	5-22	.227	1-4	2	11	1.4
Rodgers	2-2	1.000	1-1	0	1	1.3
Hardenberg	21-59	.356	3-22	10	49	2.8
Nyambi	2-9	.222	0-2	0	2	.6
Skornik	1-6	.167	0-0	5	17	.3
Slater	12-24	.500	0-2	3	20	1.9
White	0-0	.000	0-0	3	2	0
Quinn	2-13	.154	2-8	2	8	.7

Bison Open

Men's Pentathlon

3. Muedock	3117
9. Witkowski	2322

Women's Pentathlon

1. Lilien	3312
6. Wasileski	2250

Penn State Open

Women's Notables

800 M	Bango	2:09.43
3000 M	Marshall	9:52.09
500 M	McSwain	1:16.07
	Ryan	1:16.45
200 M	Brady	26.28
1000 M	McConnell	3:00.12

Men's Notables

1000 M	Furst	2:27.75
500 M	Huntsburger	1:06.16
200 M	Gabriel	22.13
35lb. weight	Stairs	58'10"

STATISTICS
COMPILED BY
MATTHEW
HERBERT '02
COURTESY OF
ATHLETICS
COMMUNICATION

Happy
Groundhog
Day to the true
'Punkstawney':
Tim Scheu

The Question Marquis

Ask the Question Marquis is a sporadically produced advice column, because proper loving takes time. It is to be read with a silly French accent. The views of the Question Marquis are his alone and are in no way to be construed as representative of his sponsor, Questia, you American pigs.

www.questia.com

Ask the Question Marquis

Q: Dear Question Marquis: My sister's boyfriend broke up with her over a year ago. But his voice is still on her answering machine. Should I tell her how pathetic this is? — Stephen in Annapolis

A: My advice here is going like this: It is not a problem, it is an opportunity. There is no truer friend of passion than the vulnerable rejected lover. You must simply play your cards correctly. I recommend a subtle approach to win her trust. Perhaps you can tell her about Questia. About how much more free time she will have when she's writing research papers if she does the research online. Free time that the two of you could use to, je ne sais pas, get to know each other better? If you know what I... wait— you said your sister's boyfriend? This is a terrible misunderstanding. I have got to stop skimming these questions.

Q: Dear Question Marquis: I am very interested in Questia. Could you please give me some more information about its exciting features? — TW in Houston

A: Zut alors! I think my employer has slipped this one in. But just by chance this is not how the case is, I will answer it briefly. Questia will have an extensive scholarly collection, and the full text of each book and journal article is all online. You just enter your topic and then you can instantly search through any book. And many of the author's own sources are, how you say, "hyperlinked." So you can follow the writer's train of thought, if you like. Also, quotes, footnotes and bibliographies are all done automatically. And, in a few months, Questia can be used to more efficiently groom racehorses. Or such is my understanding. That may be confidential information, so don't go gossiping it about like a bunch of Montesquieu's concubines. Now I wish I hadn't told you.

"There is no truer friend of passion than the vulnerable rejected lover. You simply must play your cards correctly."

Q: Dear Question Marquis: Well...why did you tell us? In both of your answers, you could have corrected your mistakes by using the delete key.

A: In life, there is no such thing as a delete key. Q.E.D., there is no delete key for writing my column. What's done is done, what's said is said. Vive moi! (Long live me!)

questia
Better Papers. Faster.

*Price subject to change. See web site for current pricing. Internet access not included. ©2001 Questia Media, Inc. Questia, the Questia logo, "Better Papers. Faster.", the Question Marquis, the Question Marquis signature, and the Question Marquis question mark symbol are service marks of Questia Media, Inc.

Next Week:

Men's Basketball vs. Navy
Women's Basketball vs. Navy
Wrestling vs. Buffalo
Track&Field vs. Colgate

THE BUCKNELLIAN Sports

Women off to best start in BU history Bison drop Lehigh, 89-79, and Stony Brook, 83-72, to up record to 15-5

By ANDREW BEVAN
Staff Writer

The Bucknell women's basketball team recorded the best start in school history with a win on the road over the weekend, defeating Patriot League rival Lehigh, 89-79. The Bison were led by sophomore guard Molly Creamer, who registered the second double-double of her career with 26 points and 12 assists. All five starters were in double figures as the Bison recorded their third highest point total of the season.

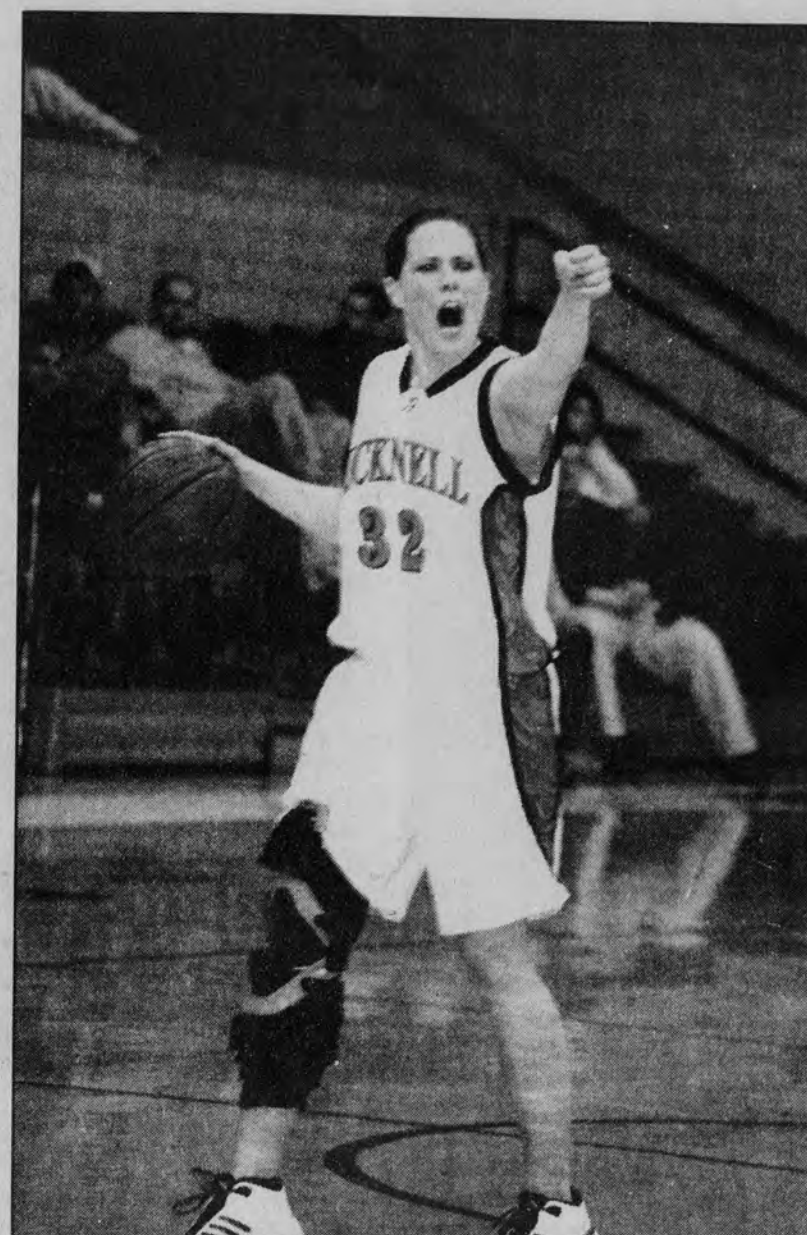

The Bison followed with this with a 83-72 win over Stony Brook Wednesday, which allowed the team to up its record to 15-5 and enter into the second round of league play on a wave of momentum.

Bucknell wasted no time after the opening tip against Lehigh, scoring the first four points and racing out to a nine point lead, 16-7, with five minutes gone in the half. The Lady Mountain Hawks responded well by going on an 11-3 surge of their own to get within one point, 19-18, of the Orange and Blue.

"The team came out extremely strong out of the gates, which is critical on the road," Head Coach Kathy Fedorjaka said.

The Bison ignited their offensive machine again to stretch the lead to seven with just over seven minutes to play in the half. Lehigh would not go away and battled back to tie the game at 41 at the half.

The second half proved to be strikingly similar to the first. The Bison started off with a 6-0 run. Five and a half minutes later this was countered by the Lady Mountain Hawks, who went on a 10-4 run to knot the game up at 53. Bucknell took over the rest of the way, obtaining a 16-point lead thanks to a 22-6 run. The team missed only one of

Chris Rivers—The Bucknellian
Kate Franks '03 directs the Bison offense from the point guard spot.

10 shots in this six minute span. Lehigh would cut the lead to nine but the Bison's defense remained strong in securing the win. Other top scorers for the Bison included Desire Almind '04, who poured in 22 points to go along with a career-high five assists. Junior Vicki Quimby added 14 points while Kate Franks '03 had 12. Junior captain Monique LeBlanc registered her second consecutive double-double of the season with 10 points and a career high 13 rebounds.

"Monique has had an extremely solid year and has upped her game to a new level over this past week and half," Fedorjaka said.

"I never thought our offense was in trouble during the game. Our defense did it in the stretch. They set up the offensive run. When the game was on the line the defense came through," Fedorjaka said.

Fedorjaka was very pleased with her whole team's performance and noted that while the offense is playing extremely well, it can get even better.

"The team is hitting its stride and they know where each other are on the court. We like where we are but want to get better," Fedorjaka said.

"The win against Lehigh was a great team win," LeBlanc said. "It was a high scoring game but we eventually got the most stops on defense and limited their second chance opportunities in the second half."

In regards to setting the school record for the best start, Fedorjaka expressed that while the team did not want to set a goal for that in order to avoid getting caught up in a number, the team accomplishing it is significant.

"I'm very, very proud of how they have played on a consistent basis over the year. They have kept their focus after wins and responded after losses," Fedorjaka said.

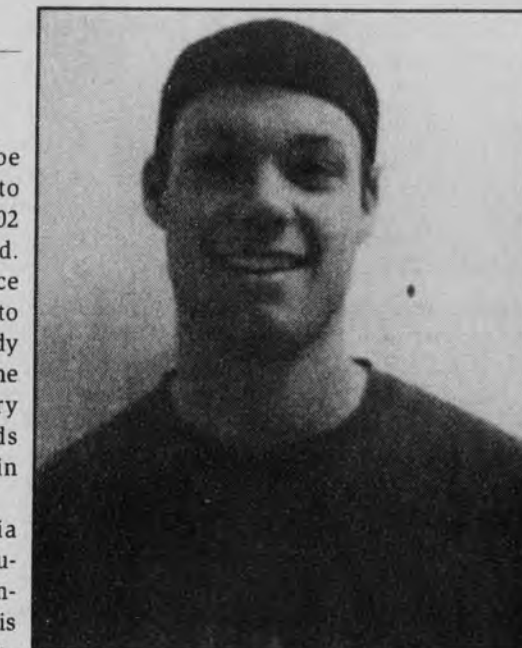

The Bison looked to continue their winning ways as they opened

See WOMEN, page A8

Team of the Week:
The men's and women's swimming teams, who both edged out Patriot League rival Lehigh on Saturday at Freas-Rooke Pool to improve their League records to 3-1.

Athlete of the Week: CHRIS NEARY '02

By DAVID TOMAINO
Staff Writer

Carmen Mauriello—The Bucknellian

Swimmer Chris Neary '02 broke two Freas-Rooke Pool records on Saturday. Harvey. Victorious in record times in both the 50-yard freestyle and 100-yard butterfly, Neary guided the Bison to their first victory since 1992 over intrastate rival Lehigh.

"Time will tell if he does (break more records)," Head Coach Jerry Foley said. "He has the athletic ability to do so."

Outdistancing his opponents with a fluid stroke, Neary can best be described as an efficient swimmer. His record suggests he is also an effective swimmer. Neary dominates the 50-yard freestyle, where he currently owns a 10-0 record over his opposition.

"Most people think you need to be macho in that event, but you need to just relax and swim easy, Chris does that well," Foley said.

The junior has situated himself as the favorite for the upcoming Patriot League Championships at Colgate this February—a role that he is likely to play for the remainder of his career.

Swimmers edge rival Lehigh

By CHUCK VICENTE
Staff Writer

The men's and women's swim teams enjoyed long awaited victories over the Lehigh Mountain Hawks this past weekend. The sweep over Lehigh was the first time Bucknell has come out ahead in this match-up since the 1991-92 season.

The stands were packed with fans wearing orange and blue in support of the team. An opening ceremony recognized senior swimmers before the start of the meet, and the atmosphere around the pool was one of Bucknell dominance.

Eight first-place finishes for the men and some record-breaking swims by both the men and the women highlighted the day's events.

The Bison women tallied 163 points to Lehigh's 137 points, earning them a solid victory. Their win over the Mountain Hawks is the first since the 1993-4 season. The women's record rose to 6-3 (3-1 in the Patriot League) heading into the postseason tournament.

Senior tri-captain Molly Lowe competed in her last Bucknell home meet and ended the day with a first place finish in the 100-yard butterfly. Darby Golino '03 dominated the competition and won three events. She took first in the 100-yard and 200-yard backstroke in 59.94 and 2:07.87, respectively. She also touched the wall first in the 200-IM (2:12.23).

Daniella Faas '04 had a great day of swimming. Faas finished first in the grueling 500-yard freestyle. Finishing in 5:09.76, she set a new pool record and was placed fifth on the all-time performance chart.

Junior Abby Weaver swam herself to two first place finishes in the 50-yard and 100-yard freestyle. She clocked in at 24.67 in the 50-yard, beating her personal best time by two hundredths of a second. The time also placed fifth on the all-time performance chart.

The men's team had similar excellent performances, winning 168-132 and ending the regular season with an impressive 7-2 record (3-1 in the Patriot League).

Senior tri-captain Molly Lowe competed in her last Bucknell home meet and ended the day with a first place finish in the 100-yard butterfly. Darby Golino '03 dominated the competition and won three events. She took first in the 100-yard and 200-yard backstroke in 59.94 and 2:07.87, respectively. She also touched the wall first in the 200-IM (2:12.23).

Daniella Faas '04 had a great day of swimming. Faas finished first in the grueling 500-yard freestyle. Finishing in 5:09.76, she set a new pool record and was placed fifth on the all-time performance chart.

Junior Abby Weaver swam herself to two first place finishes in the 50-yard and 100-yard freestyle. She clocked in at 24.67 in the 50-yard, beating her personal best time by two hundredths of a second. The time also placed fifth on the all-time performance chart.

The men's team had similar excellent performances, winning 168-132 and ending the regular season with an impressive 7-2 record (3-1 in the Patriot League).

Senior tri-captain Molly Lowe competed in her last Bucknell home meet and ended the day with a first place finish in the 100-yard butterfly. Darby Golino '03 dominated the competition and won three events. She took first in the 100-yard and 200-yard backstroke in 59.94 and 2:07.87, respectively. She also touched the wall first in the 200-IM (2:12.23).

He finished first in both the 50-yard freestyle (20.91) and the 100-yard butterfly (50.68). Both performances broke previous Freas-Rooke Pool records, adding more to Neary's already impressive accomplishments.

Some thought Michael Guskey '03 might have gills after seeing him swim on Saturday. Guskey blew past everyone in the 100-yard backstroke with a time of 59.36. He credited his performance to the exciting atmosphere.

"I swam pretty well. It was hard not to with all the emotion around the deck," he said.

Chris Sheehan '03 climbed his way higher in the record books in the 200-yard backstroke (1:55.91). His swim was ninth on the all-time performance chart.

Freshmen Peter Garvin and Jack Sheehan also had solid first place finishes. Garvin took first in the 100-yard freestyle (47.16), while teammate Sheehan touched first in the 200-yard IM in 1:58.90.

The always-reliable Chris Neary '02 was the only double winner for

See SWIMMING, page A10

Injury-plagued Bison no match for Terps

By PAT EVANS
Staff Writer

There are several reasons why a score may not be indicative of a team's actual capabilities. This happened Saturday when Bucknell was defeated by Maryland 35-7. However, that score fails to show just how close the matches were and the extent of injuries sustained by the Bison.

Sophomore Josh Perrin was unable to compete against the Terps because of an injured knee. Classmate Brandin Green has been struggling with severe headaches throughout the season and was also forced to sit out.

So the Orange and Blue were without their 125- and 141-pound wrestlers, respectively, making it very difficult for them to muster enough wins to take the meet.

"I'm not going to make excuses," Head Coach Tim Wittman said, "but it would have been more competitive with those guys in there."

The wrestlers who were able to compete often came up just short of winning their matches. Brian Neuman '02 pitched hard with Maryland's Jake Stork, but was eventually pinned and lost 3-2.

In similar fashion, Tommy Doerr '02 lost in a 3-2 decision. Senior captain Ryan Fasnacht also put up a good fight, but was unable to pin his opponent.

"I need to open up more and not hold back," Fasnacht said when asked how he could improve. "I have to try to do everything like I do in the practice room."

Bucknell's seven points came from senior captain Ryan Falciglia and junior standout Ben Chunko, both of whom have been consistent all year. Falciglia won in a decision at 197 pounds, 2-0. Chunko, who remains unbeatable this season, won in a major decision 13-3.

"From here on out is going to be pretty tough," Wittman said. "We can't give up forfeits or pins, and the guys who are winning have to get the extra points if we want to stay with these teams."

The squad next faces a challenging Buffalo team who is believed by many to be as good as they've ever been.

"Everybody's going to have to go out with an attitude that they're going to get the job done," Wittman said. "That's what we're going to have to do against a team like Buffalo in order to be successful."

PA local to pitch for Cardinals

Steve Kline, of Winfield, has made his mark in MLB.

By CARMEN MAURIELLO
Sports Editor

Steve Kline, a native of nearby Winfield, is set to begin his fifth season as a Major League Baseball pitcher. Kline, 28, began his MLB career with the Cleveland Indians but was traded to Montreal, where he spent three and a half seasons as the Expos' primary middle reliever. The lefty led the league in appearances in both 1999 and 2000 with 82 and 83 appearances, respectively. This past off-season Kline was traded to the St. Louis Cardinals, who advanced to last year's National League title game. Kline trains at the Bucknell Fieldhouse prior to Spring Training, and recently he sat down with the Bucknellian's Carmen Mauriello.

CM: Carmen Mauriello
SK: Steve Kline

CM: I read a scouting report of you off the Internet that said, "As long as Steve Kline stays healthy, he ought to remain one of the most effective and least heralded members of the Expos' pen." Do you think that assessment accurately sums up your time in Montreal—under appreciation?

SK: I think they treated me pretty well. Even though it's not a great sports town, they still appreciated that you went out and worked hard every day. As a relief pitcher, you're not out for the glory. I don't need all the television exposure—that's not how I play.

CM: You led the league in appearances the past two seasons. Do you think that that wears on you by the end of a season?

SK: Well, you have to look at the innings. If you pitch 83 games and you only throw 35 innings, obviously that's not going to hurt you. But I've pitched in the 70s for innings both years. I don't just go out for a third of an inning like I used to. You pitch innings and innings and that's more pitches you're throwing. It caught up to me. I tore my calf muscle last season, but I didn't tell the coaching staff, I didn't tell the training staff. I just tried to suck it up and pitch with it because at the time our whole bullpen, and actually our whole team, was depleted with injuries. I struggled sometimes, but I couldn't even show them pain. I just had to grind my teeth and walk away.

CM: Is conditioning something that you're working on, now that you know that you're going to be getting that amount of innings?

SK: It's a new thing for you every time. I came out here last week and I threw 100 pitches. They'd love to have me as a starting pitcher, but I do so well against left hand hitters that they'd rather have me for every day than for once every five days. All the left-hand pitchers in Montreal from the minor leagues down couldn't get left-handers out so I got put into that role. You lose a lot of your value that way but it would also hopefully keep me in the big leagues for a long time.

CM: You've got to travel all-around the country as a major leaguer. Why do you keep coming back to central Pennsylvania?

SK: I like it here because it's a small community and everybody here treats me normal. I have Bucknell to come work out at, and I know everyone here and the facilities are great. And I coach high school wrestling with my friends over at Lewisburg so I get good workouts, and that's the key to staying healthy. Plus, my mom and dad, and I have four brothers from here, so it's more of a family atmosphere.

CM: What are your first impressions of St. Louis and how do you think it's going to be to play there?

SK: It's crazy when I was out there. People are just baseball fanatics—it's like Penn State football. It's appreciation.

SK: I think they treated me pretty well. Even though

See PITCHER, page A8

Sports

Jamie Lilien '04 already among Bucknell's best

By BRIAN KLOTZ
Staff Writer

Competing in her first-ever collegiate pentathlon this past Saturday at the Bison Open, Jamie Lilien '04 couldn't have predicted a better turnout. "I was standing with my dad when they announced it," Lilien said. "He was all excited and was the first to give me a big hug."

Lilien won the event, squeaking by with a score of 3312, a 26-point victory over Kutztown's Emily Foltz. Her strength in the hurdles and the long jump gave her the extra points she needed. "I was really surprised because we were back and forth the entire meet," Lilien said of the event. "It was the little things; I didn't know how it turned out until the announcement."

Ever since her arrival at Bucknell this year, Lilien has made an impression at practices and in competitions. "She always puts in 110 percent at practice, whether she's tearing up the hurdles or throwing the shot," teammate Kelly Avila '04 said. "She does all the extra work and never complains."

When it comes to meets, Lilien has put forth some impressive performances as well. Only half-way through her freshman year, she has already moved onto the track and field all-time records list.

Her time of 8.50 seconds in the 55m hurdles places her third, her long jump of 18'2 3/4" gives her the fourth spot, and her high jump of 5'4 1/2" places her sixth. This goes a long way towards her ultimate goal this season.

"I want to continue to do well, bring my times down, and hopefully qualify for ECACs at the league meet," Lilien said. "I missed qualifying by 59 points, which I think I can do."

Lilien's sports career began in second grade, when her father encouraged her to get involved in competitions and she played softball and soccer. Her first track involvement began in fifth grade, when her coaches asked her to come out for the team.

"My coaches were a big encouragement, and helped me get into track," she said.

Attending high school at Pascack Valley High in New Jersey, Lilien was a sports phenom. By the time she graduated, she had amassed twelve varsity letters, four of which were in outdoor track.

Chris Rivera—The Bucknellian
Jamie Lilien '04 (no. 1 above) strides past her opponents. Lilien captured the pentathlon at last Saturday's Bison Open—in the first time she'd ever competed in the event.

Over the course of her high school career, Jamie earned school records in the high jump with a height of 5'5 1/4", 100 meter hurdles in 14.2 seconds, and was named all county nine times in the hurdles, long jump, and high jump.

Lilien's most notable achievement was probably her competition in the pentathlon in high school nationals, where she placed third overall. After that point, Lilien knew she definitely wanted to continue track into college.

"I looked at all the schools that sent recruiting letters, went on all sorts of recruiting visits, and that's when I made my decision on where I wanted to go to school," Lilien said.

Lilien chose Bucknell not just for its academic and track reputations, but for other reasons. "The campus was beautiful, I liked the coaches, I liked the people, and I liked the track, but I loved the fact that everyone was so nice and close," Lilien said.

Jamie didn't expect to improve nearly as quickly as she has.

"In contrast to high school, the whole thing is taken more seriously," Lilien said. "I have been working out and learning all the techniques and skills, but my sudden improvement was very unexpected."

Head Coach Joe Klim knows the reason why this has happened. "Jamie is extremely focused, and that's what makes her a good athlete," Klim said. "She knows what she has to do, and she does it."

When asked, Lilien had trouble picking her favorite event in track and field, but finally settled on the pentathlon. "I love it," she said. "I like doing the hurdles, the high jump, and the long jump, and the 800 is something I will have to do, but the more I do it, the more I will get used to it." Klim sees definite potential in Lilien over her next four years. "By the time she leaves, I don't see why she won't be the school record holder in the hurdles, high jump, long jump, pentathlon and heptathlon," he said.

Fellow hurdler Richard Alexander '03 summed up Lilien's ability.

"Jamie Lilien is one of the best female athletes I have come in contact with," Alexander said. "I enjoy working alongside her because she is fun to train with, and I can see now that she will become one of the greatest female athletes to come through Bucknell track."

BISON BREEZE BY STONY BROOK

Chris Rivera—The Bucknellian
The Bison huddle around and strategize with head coach Kathy Fedorjaka. This year's squad has already matched the number of wins (15) that last year's team posted over the entire season.

WOMEN

From page A9

up a three-game homestand this past Wednesday with a non-conference matchup against Stony Brook. The Orange and Blue were looking to avenge their defeat at the hands of the Seawolves last year and build some momentum for the second half of league play.

The teams battled back and forth throughout the first five minutes of the game before Bucknell went on a 9-0 run to take a 16-7 lead with just under 13 minutes to play in the half. The Seawolves got on the board first after gaining the opening tip. Franks countered for the Bison with a jumper from the right side and went on to score seven of the team's first 16 points.

The Orange and Blue would not allow their lead to get below six, and with just over a minute to play in the half extended it to the largest of the half at 16, 39-23. As the teams headed to the locker room, Bucknell held a 14-point advantage, 40-26. The Bison were on fire offensively in the first half, shooting 67 percent from the floor and 75 percent from behind the arc.

Bucknell kept up its offensive firepower in the second half, stretching its lead to as large as 17 at one point. The closest the Seawolves would ever get over the first 16 minutes of the half was ten points. They did not cut the Bison advantage to single digits until there was just over three and a half minutes remaining in the contest. Bucknell's defense remained tough in securing an 83-72 victory.

Creamer led all scorers with 24 points and eight assists. Quimby added another double double, hauling down 14 rebounds along with her 17 points. She also had six steals to move into seventh place all time on Bucknell's top ten list. Franks kept up her impressive scoring of late, dropping in 18, including going 2-3 from behind the arc.

"I think I have been becoming more aggressive on the offensive end but I also got a lot of good looks tonight, especially in transition," Franks said.

The Bison also received strong efforts off the bench from junior forward Kate Rounsley, who was dominating presence down on the block and poured in 10 points, and junior point guard Rebekah May. Freshmen Jade Fleming and Vahessa Putnoky also gave strong minutes, with Putnoky hitting her first 3-pointer of the season. "I thought we played pretty solid from start to finish and had a great team effort on defense," Fedorjaka said.

Creamer received Patriot League Player of the Week honors for the second time this season for her performances against Binghamton, Colgate and Lehigh last week. She averaged 25.7 ppg over the three games and had back-to-back 26-point efforts against Lehigh and Colgate. Creamer has the unique honor of currently being the only player in Division I women's basketball to lead both her team and conference in points per game (20.2) and assists per contest (5.5). Her 20.2 scoring average ranks 19th in the country and she is the fourth highest scoring sophomore among Division I players.

The Bison continue their homestand as they open the second round of Patriot League play this Saturday when Navy travels to Davis gymnasium for a 1:00 p.m. tip-off.

"We just need to keep it simple and maintain our focus and play one game at a time. We have to be relaxed but keep pushing. The games mean more now and we just have to take care of ourselves," Fedorjaka said.

SWIMMING from page A9

The 200-yard medley and 400-yard freestyle teams finished first, aiding in the men's victory. "We swam faster and more determined than we have all year," Guskey said. "It was really fun to see."

Now both teams have a couple weeks to rest and recover before the Patriot League tournament on Feb. 15-17. Colgate University will host the tournament.

KLINE "THE MISSING PIECE" FOR CARDS PITCHER from page A9

was great. I played for Cleveland and it was the same way there, and so you go from rich to rags and then back to rich again, and it's kind of a good thing. But now you have to perform. CM: Well how do you think the situation's going to be for you to pitch in St. Louis? Is Jason Christensen is the only other lefty in the bullpen?

SK: Yes, and he just had surgery in the off-season, so I'm probably going to get the brunt of the work again. They're bringing me in, they think I'm the missing piece, as Coach (Tony) La Russa told me. So he's putting a little pressure on me —which I like—but now you have to perform. —Steve Kline record for most saves in back-to-back days. I take pride in pitching in 83 games because I'm pitching half the year while some guys who are making big money—like the closers—may be pitching in 60 games for 60 innings. I take pride in pitching every day and being durable and that mentality.

CM: What are some of your goals for the future in baseball?

SK: Just to win. I just want to be a winner. That's how they classify you as a champion. Well, you look at the Yankees and everybody says that they're not the best players, but they're winners. That's what hopefully I can do here at St. Louis, to get on a team and we win and people say, "He was on a winning team. He was a winner." And that's how they look at you differently.

CM: Do you think that this team has the personnel to make a World Series run?

SK: I think (Mark) McGwire's healthy again and that hurt them last year. They didn't have a big right-hand stick to take on the Mets and (Mike) Hampton and (Al) Leiter kind of blew it by them. But now Hampton left the Mets, and it's definitely in our favor. We've got some guys that can hit, we've got guys that can pitch, we've got some great fielders and we've got great outfielders. And that's the key—defense and pitching are going to win you games. And with this team, if they need something, they can always go out and buy it in July, where in Montreal you were already out of the playoffs by July. I want to win the World Series, anything less is a heartbreaking year.

U-SAVE
AUTO RENTAL

Low, Low Rates!

*We bill insurance companies direct.

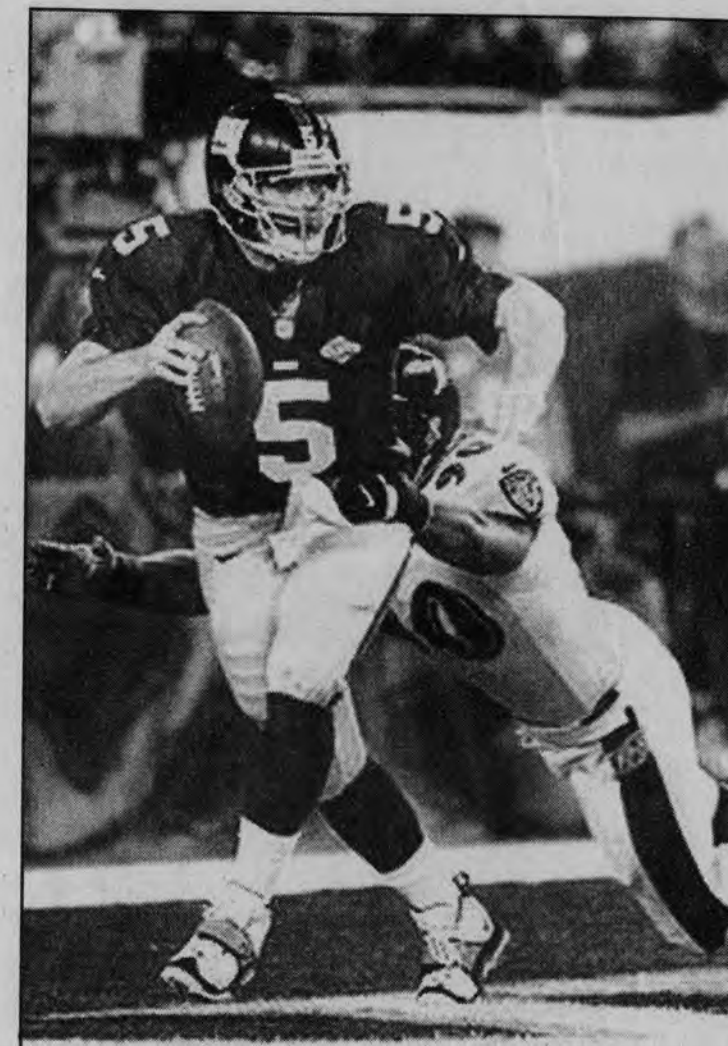

*Major credit cards accepted.
*Must be 21 or older.

Earning the right to serve you each and every time.

524-0000
Rt. 15 & Nth 7th St.
Lewisburg, Pa. 17837
Mon-Fri 8:00-5:00
Sat. 8:00-12:00

National Sports

Kerry Collins: "I sucked"

Courtesy of ESPN.com
Kerry Collins was unimpressive in his Super Bowl debut, completing nearly one-fifth of his passes to Ravens defenders.

Hi. My name is Aaron and I'm a New Yorker. I drive like a New Yorker, I talk like a New Yorker, I cuss like a New Yorker, and I play football like a New Yorker.

Playing a pickup game with some friends late this Saturday night in the Fieldhouse, I boasted a two for six performance with two interceptions in 15 minutes of play. I ran a kickoff back the length of the field for a touchdown which was our only score of the game.

In fact, had we been able to play a little longer, I probably would have gone 15 for 39 with four interceptions like star athlete Kerry Collins, and my team would have turned out much the same as the New York Giants did against the Baltimore Ravens.

Yet I'm not the one with a multi-million dollar contract ... where's the love? I ask.

The sad fact of the matter is that the Ravens showed up and the Giants didn't. Kerry Collins never settled into a groove and was rushed quicker than a times when Tiki gained the bulk of his yards. Instead, they began dropping back in the secondary, forcing Collins to throw the ball into clogged passing lanes and allowing for four interceptions.

All in all, it was poor offensive play-calling, coupled with a pass performance more pathetic than Aerosmith agreeing to a halftime show starring N'Sync, Britney Spears, and Nelly.

New York didn't concern itself with taking Ray Lewis out of the equation, or confusing him in any form, which is the reason he was such a factor and earned MVP honors.

There were no trick plays, and they barely put a man in motion all game. Their conservatism was their downfall.

On the other side of the ball, the Ravens played a solid game on all fronts. They played brilliant defense, only allowing 152 yards from New York.

Trent Dillfer got lucky early with a touchdown pass to Brandon Stokely, and the offense drove the ball enough to put Ray Lewis murder settlement. He allowed too many passes to be tipped and, consequently, intercepted. He seemed to have no vision of the defenders around him or the receivers in front of him.

The Giants flopped in this game were not the New York Giants, but rather Phil Simms and Greg Gumbel, the two worst announcers in pro sports.

I hung on every play, hoping for some form of intelligent banter to materialize only to be dropped like a Kerry Collins pass at each inane dribbling.

And I think the real winners of this game were not the Baltimore Ravens, but the brilliant men who thought up and developed "EyeVision."

For a few minutes I thought Keanu Reeves was about ready to morph out of Trent Dillfer's body and go Kung Fu on Ray Lewis. It would have been more exciting than ... well anything for that matter. Unless the Giants pulled a last minute trade and had Britney Spears playing cornerback.

I'm sure none of the Baltimore receivers would mind the extra coverage.

Regardless, I think we all owe a debt of gratitude to the Wachowski Brothers and their generous use of cameras for pioneering such a technique that could bring us all 360 degrees of a linebacker's gut.

But I digress—Ravens, I salute you and your efforts. You have felled the Giants with a simple slingshot and all they could do to retaliate was shrug their shoulders and fall to the ground like spilled French fries in the Bison.

Are you happy now? You made Lomas cry, you should be soooo proud.

SUPER BOWL COMMENTARY

By AARON DEROSA
Staff Writer

up another 10 points on top of that. In addition, Jermaine Lewis lit up the special teams with an 84-yard TD return.

That was the second of two plays that took the Giants out of the game. The first came after Jesse Armstrong intercepted a Trent Dillfer pass, uglier than a Walter Matthau-Gilbert Godfried hybrid and ran it back for a touchdown, only to be called back because of a five yard holding penalty in a completely unrelated quadrant of the field.

After that, the Giants had nothing left in the tank. Even Lomas Brown's inspirational address midway through the fourth quarter couldn't stir the Giants back into action. Abraham Lincoln couldn't have rallied the Giants to victory.

But I think in the end we can all agree that the REAL losers in this game were not the New York Giants, but rather Phil Simms and Greg Gumbel, the two worst announcers in pro sports.

I hung on every play, hoping for some form of intelligent banter to materialize only to be dropped like a Kerry Collins pass at each inane dribbling.

And I think the real winners of this game were not the Baltimore Ravens, but the brilliant men who thought up and developed "EyeVision."

For a few minutes I thought Keanu Reeves was about ready to morph out of Trent Dillfer's body and go Kung Fu on Ray Lewis. It would have been more exciting than ... well anything for that matter. Unless the Giants pulled a last minute trade and had Britney Spears playing cornerback.

I'm sure none of the Baltimore receivers would mind the extra coverage.

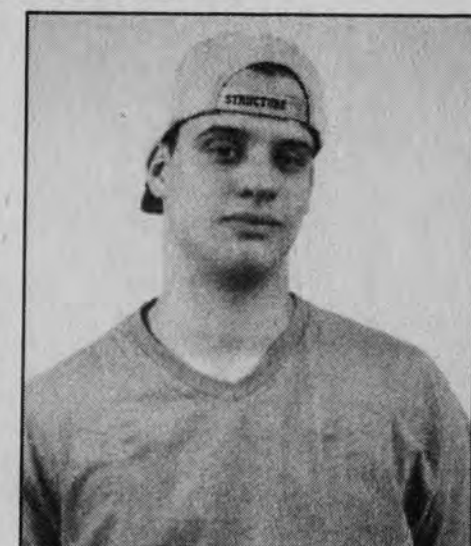

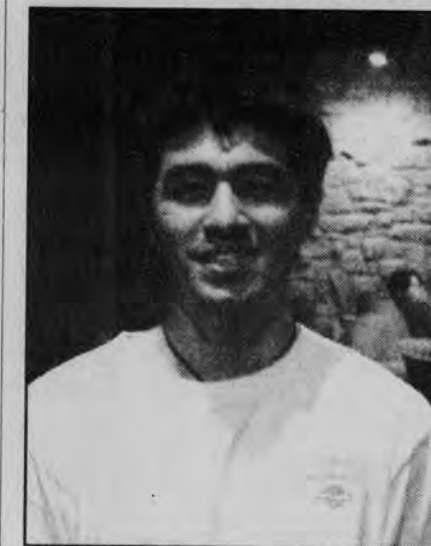

Regardless, I think we all owe a debt of gratitude to the Wachowski Brothers and their generous use of cameras for pioneering such a technique that could bring us all 360 degrees of a linebacker's gut.

But I digress—Ravens, I salute you and your efforts. You have felled the Giants with a simple slingshot and all they could do to retaliate was shrug their shoulders and fall to the ground like spilled French fries in the Bison.

Are you happy now? You made Lomas cry, you should be soooo proud.

IN THE PAINT

With Staff Writers:

Ali Ahmed and Justin McCarthy

Friday, Feb. 2 Orlando at Philadelphia

Philly has been by far the best team in the East recordwise, but they still have many weaknesses. They depend too much on Iverson's scoring—and he is far from consistent. Also, without Eric Snow they lack a true ball handler and, in the long run, that might hurt them. For Orlando, Tracy McGrady has been awesome and, with a healthy Grant Hill, who knows how much better he could have been.

All's pick: Magic by three
This game is between two young super stars: Iverson versus McGrady. The Iverson-led Sixers boast the best record in the NBA and they have already defeated Orlando when the Magic had their full complement of super-stars. With Hill out Orlando doesn't seem like much of a match for the high-flying Sixers.

Justin's pick: Sixers by six

Saturday, Feb. 3 Minnesota at Toronto

If Vince Carter is out, the Raptors have no chance of keeping up with Garnett and company. Even with Carter I think the Wolves have a more stable and balanced team, and Kevin Garnett has proved himself to be one of the elite players in the league. With Carter out it gives Morris Peterson a chance to show he belongs in this league.

All's pick: T-Wolves by 12
These two teams are both full of young and established talent. Toronto is a total one-dimensional team—their offensive attack is Vince Carter, and with his knee problems of late he may not be 100 percent. The T-Wolves boast a much better balance between Garnett, Brandon and Szczerbak. The game will be decided by Carter alone—if he is able to play and be effective, the Raptors win, otherwise the Raptors do not possess the weapons to overcome Minnesota's attack.

Justin's pick: T-Wolves by 10

Seattle at Utah

If Payton is patient, he has a couple of young players who could really be a factor in a few years. Namely Rashard Lewis, who is progressing well. However, until then Gary Payton will have to be content with being a on a team which is good but not nearly good enough to lead Seattle to the title. Utah also has problems with Karl Malone showing signs of slowing down. Starks, Marshall and Manning need to be more of a factor for Utah to get better. It will be a close game all the way.

All's pick: Sonics by five
The Sonics and Jazz are coming off a Jan. 30 meeting in which Utah won by 14. The reason: Utah was able to shoot over 50 percent against the Sonic defense and get six players into double digits, while the Sonics had just one player score more than 15 points. Both teams, however, are hot now—with the Jazz winning nine of their past 11 games, and the Sonics winning five of their last six—with their only loss to Utah.

Justin's pick: Utah by five

Sunday, Feb. 4 New York at Miami

The classic rivalry has some of its aura taken away from it with the loss of Ewing and Mourning. Still, these two franchises are going to make it a slow, ugly game. Riley has always played it that way and the Knicks have set new defensive records by slowing the game down even more and more ... In this type of game the big bodies of Mason and Grant should win out while Jones should limit either Houston or Sprewell.

All's pick: Miami by 17
This matchup has always had implications for the playoffs and the supremacy of the East, however, with the emergence of Philly the latter loses its meaning. New York has lost three of its last four games, however it is coming off a huge win over the Lakers. Miami, on the other hand, is coasting with a five-game winning streak. The Knicks need to find a body to put on Brain Grant, for Camby is just not strong enough. The Knicks need to counter Miami's power front court play with a finesse front court style.

Justin's pick: Knicks by four

Wednesday, Jan. 7 Phoenix at L.A. Lakers

Kobe has been putting up lots of points while the most dominant player in the league—Shaquille—has been injured. Yet he has been shooting an Iverson-like shooting percentage. He needs to let someone like Fox or Rider (yeah right) to help carry the load. Phoenix, on the other hand, is a talented—yet often injured—team and when clicking can really scare teams. I think the Suns are primed for an upset.

All's pick: Suns by 12
The outcome of this game may depend upon the status of Shaq, whether he plays, but more importantly if he does play how he and Kobe play together. The Suns were demolished by the Lakers earlier this season, losing by 37 points. This dismantling of Phoenix was due to their dismal 30 percent shooting percentage from the field. Jason Kidd will need to find a way to create scoring opportunities for himself and his teammates; however, he'll be up against a formidable defense.

Justin's pick: Lakers by 14

it's not for everyone, but that's [the point].

In Army ROTC you'll push yourself. Test your limits. And in the process, learn how to think on your feet and be a good leader. You could even get a scholarship. Register today for an Army ROTC class. Because you're not just like "everyone."

ARMY ROTC Unlike any other college course you can take.

Sports

Is Lemieux's return for love or money?

Something stinks in Pittsburgh these days, and for once I don't mean the Pirates. Mario Lemieux has made his triumphant return to the ice after 3 1/2 years, to save not only the team he owns, but the rest of the NHL as well. While the rest of the world is ecstatic over his return, I'm not buying into the hype.

My biggest problem is the reason behind his return, which I don't believe is as clear cut as it appears. If he missed the game as much as he says he did, then why not decide to come back at the beginning of the year instead? You can't tell me that 30 games into the season his desire suddenly came back. This decision had to have been on his mind for sometime now because this isn't something you just wake up and decide to do.

But his return is much more than just wanting to compete again—it is also a clever publicity stunt. The Penguins were in severe financial troubles when Lemieux stepped in to buy the team. Although the team didn't change at all, his presence was enough to bring back some hope in Pittsburgh.

But after awhile, the hysteria wore off, and Jaromir Jagr once again became the only reason to even bother with them. This year Jagr got in a slump and asked to be traded. Attendance was down and the team seemed to be going nowhere.

In dire need of attention, enter Super Mario, stage left. Since his return on Dec. 27, the Penguins have been winning. Jagr has regained his form and, most importantly, Pittsburgh has sold out every game. Instead of running the front office and putting a competitive team on the ice like most owners, Lemieux selfishly decided to be the star attraction as well as the star owner.

Think of the precedent this may set. Does this mean that we could be seeing Wayne Gretzky and Michael Jordan come back as player/owners? Jordan's new team, the Washington Wizards are without a doubt the worst team in the NBA, but that doesn't mean that we will see his Airties don the Wizards jersey any time in the future.

He actually is trying, although without luck, to make the team better by changing personnel. Just taking over ownership was enough to label Super Mario as a savior, but his decision to act as both owner and player is a mere reflection of his failure since.

Instead of trying to win the Stanley Cup, the Penguins owner should worry more about getting a new arena to replace the Igloo, one of the oldest buildings in the NHL. Look at the New Jersey Devils: they won the Cup last year, yet this year they only sold out 79 percent of their arena, so success may not be the way to save hockey in Pittsburgh.

Who says that Mario's return will even help them in the playoffs? Over the past few years the Penguins have basically been a one-dimensional team. If you could stop Jagr, then you could win because their defense and goaltending was below average.

This year seems to be different. Jan Hrdina, and Alexei Kovalev, a possible 40-goal scorer, finally give the Penguins a consistent second line. That should help take pressure off of the Jagr-Lemieux line in the playoffs.

But the Pens will need more than just goal scoring to advance deep into the playoffs. They need a goaltender that is capable of winning a game by himself (which they don't have), and they need more physical players who aren't afraid to mix it up. Until recently, Pittsburgh didn't have many so-called "goons," but ever since Super Mario has come back, the Pens front office have traded for the likes of Krzysztof Oliwa and Steve McKenna.

These are the types of moves the Penguins should have made earlier to protect Jagr from constant abuse. But instead they waited until Mario's return. My question is, where was this action before?

I'm not saying that Lemieux and the rest of the Penguins front office didn't try before, but it seems as if they're more interested in succeeding now that he's playing again. Besides making it perfectly clear that he wants to win the Cup, Lemieux has also gone out of his way to tell everyone that he expects to be the best player in the league again. No argument on whether he is, but is that confidence or cockiness?

He is going to collect an insane amount of points, but eventually, the rest of the NHL will begin to treat him like any other player. The grabbing and holding will increase and Lemieux won't have much room to skate. When he left the game he was angry at what the league had become. Since then, many new rules have been made to open the game back up again, which is perfect for Lemieux. But once players start to hold him, he's going to get upset.

The fire inside of him will eventually burn out, and he will leave the Pens in a worse situation than when he got them. This is nothing more than a short-term solution.

They should continue to build the team around Jagr and Kovalev, and brace for the future. The Pirates have a new stadium this year and a young and talented team to play in it. While they have been awful the past couple of years, there is a new sense of hope and a realization that things can only get better.

Unless the Penguins follow suit, they will only go down and will have Super Mario to thank for it.

Sports Trivia

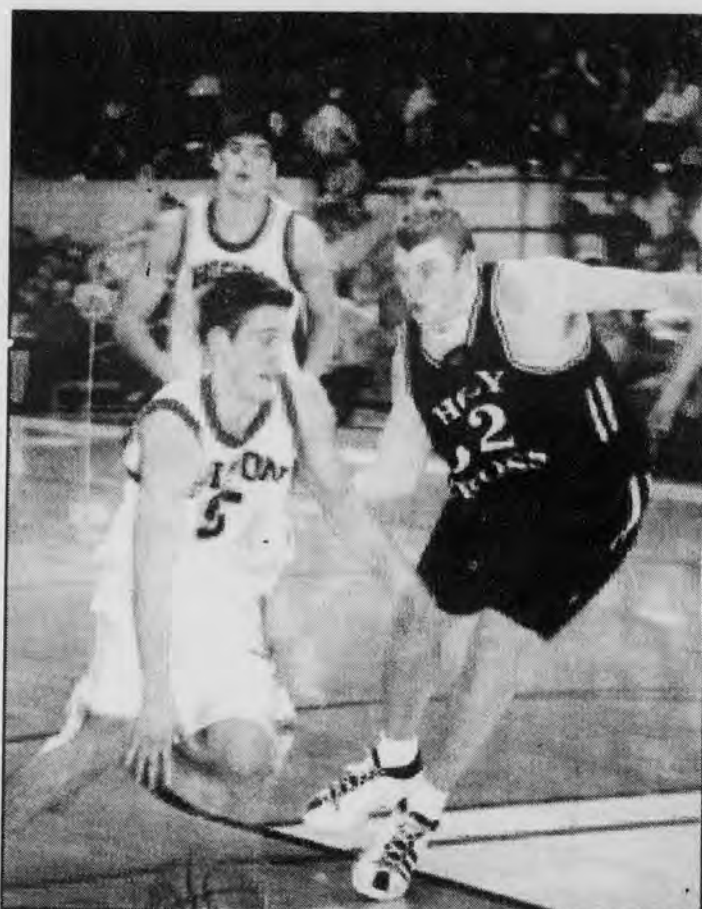

By Justin McCarthy

- 1) What was the fewest points scored by any team in Super Bowl history?
- 2) Who was the first athlete to be named to play in the all-star game of two major Pro sports?
- 3) Who was the first player in NHL history to score on a penalty shot in OT?

1) Three, by Miami in Super Bowl VI. 2) Bo Jackson. 3) Brendan Shanahan in 1992.

Mountain Hawks defeat Bison 86-74

Turnovers and impatient offense plague Bucknell in defeat to league foe Lehigh

Dan Blankenship '03 accelerates past a Holy Cross defender.

By ANDREW BURR
Sports Layout Editor

Despite 23 points by co-captain Bryan Bailey '03, the Bison (10-10, 2-4) suffered an 86-74 defeat at the hands of Lehigh Saturday night.

"We didn't play with much purpose or poise," Ben Slater '04 said. "We weren't playing to our strengths and the result was a lot of unnecessary turnovers."

The Bison led only once in the game, 13-11, on a pair of free throws by Bailey early in the first half.

Lehigh was able to retake the lead thanks to a 10-2 run that made the score 21-13 and entered the locker room with a 36-29 advantage.

The Mountain Hawks opened the second half with a barrage of scoring, a sequence which proved to be the turning point of the game.

Lehigh pushed the Bison onto their heels with a 13-2 run, opening the lead to 15 points.

Bucknell would spend the rest of the game trying to play catch-up, a humbling task for a defense-oriented team like the Bison.

One reason the Bison were unable to regain the lead was because of an impatient offense, a problem that has plagued the team before.

Instead of setting up the offense, the Bison played much of the game in transition.

Consequently, they shot only 14 percent (2-14) on three-pointers in the game. Of the 74 Bison points, only six came from behind the arc.

"We're a great shooting team, but we didn't spread the defense against Lehigh, so many of our shots were contested," Flannery said.

Co-captain Jake Ramage '01, the normally steady long-range sharpshooter, was unable to connect in six attempts from three-point land.

Since coming back from knee surgery on Jan. 17, Ramage has only connected on two of 18 three-point shots.

Four Bison players, including Bailey, scored in double-figures in the game. Boakai Lalugba '02 had 15 points, Brian Werner '02 had 14 points, and Dan Blankenship '02 finished with 13 points.

Four Lehigh players also finished in double figures, led by sophomores Alan Goff and Matt Logie, who both finished with 18 points.

"I think we came ready to play and it showed right from the opening tip," said Lehigh head coach Sal Montesana. "It was a well-balanced effort."

The loss drops Bucknell to 0-9 on the season when they trail at halftime. Conversely, the team is 9-1 when leading at the half.

"We don't pay attention to scenarios, but the team is aware that when we play well, it carries over into the second half," Slater said.

The Bison will face division rival Navy for the second time this season at home next Saturday.

Captain Jake Ramage '01 spots up behind the arc. Ramage and the Bison face Navy Saturday.

Ten Bison advance to IC4A Championships

Nine athletes post performances that crack the BU record books at PSU Open

By ROSE SEDO
Senior Writer

Last Saturday, ten Bison qualified for the ECAC/IC4A meet with strong performances at the Penn State National Open. In addition, nine individuals posted times good enough for the Bucknell all-time record chart.

On the women's side of the track, turning in an outstanding performance was Stephanie Bango '02 in the 800m run. Bango broke her own Bucknell record by running the event in 2:09.43, while also becoming a provisional National qualifier.

Becki Marshall '02 qualified for ECAC's in the 3000m run with a time of 9:52.09. Marshall now owns the second best time in school history in the event.

Three other individuals on the women's team qualified for the ECAC meet.

In the 500m dash, LaTonya McSwain '02 and Laura Ryan '01 both qualified for ECAC's by crossing the finish line with times of 1:16.07 and 1:16.45, respectively.

Ryan managed to move her way up into the all-time performers list in the third place position.

The fifth and final ECAC qualifier was the 4x400-meter relay team, which snagged the fourth best time in school history of 3:53.05.

The 4x400 team is comprised of McSwain, Christie Wolfgang '02, Ryan and Bango.

Sophomore Charity Brady

improved her personal best time in the 200m dash with a 26.28 clocking. Brady now has the fifth best time in the books at the University.

In the 1000m run, Kelly McConnell '02 ran a time of 3:00.12, putting her in eighth place all-time for the Orange and Blue.

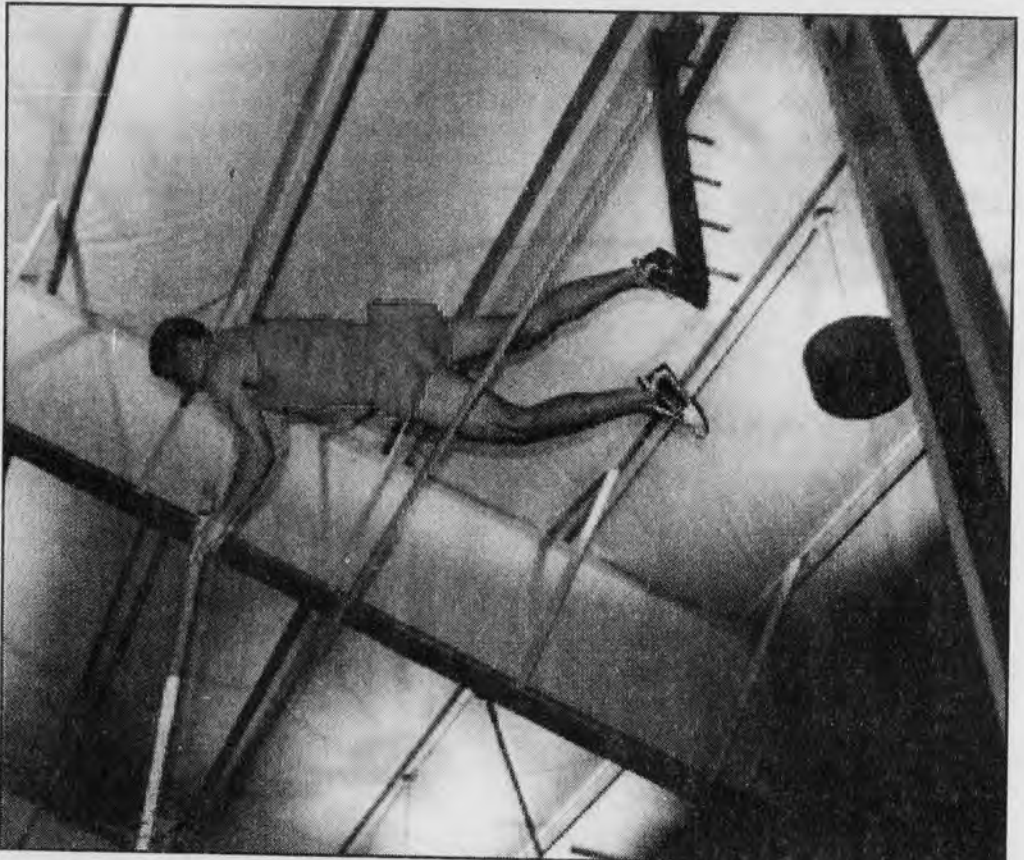

"We went in there with exactly what we wanted to do," Assistant Coach Joseph Klim said. "With the women we wanted to run fast times under some tough competition, and we accomplished just that."

As for the men, the 4x400m relay team turned in the most notable performance by marking the fifth fastest time in school history.

The team, which qualified for IC4A's with a time of 3:20.21, was comprised of Brian Klotz '03, Justin Crane '04, Andy Hunsberger '01 and Chris Edwards '04.

The men's distance medley relay team of P.J. Ward '02, Hunsberger, Matt Davis '04 and Eric Furst '03 also qualified for IC4A's by clocking in at 10:09.09.

Furst turned in the ninth best time in school history in the 1000m run with a time of 2:27.75.

The Bison excelled at the Penn State National Open, advancing ten athletes to the IC4A championships. The teams will travel to Colgate for a meet this Saturday.

Furst also qualified for IC4A's with his performance in the 1000m run. Hunsberger ran the 500m run in a time of 1:06.16, good enough for 10th in the Bucknell charts.

Rounding out the IC4A's qualifier for the men's team were junior David Gabriel and senior Ryan Stairs.

Gabriel—the Bucknell record-holder in the 200-meter dash—ran the race in 22.13 to qualify for IC4A's. Stairs qualified for IC4A's with a toss of 58' 10" in the 35 lb. weight throw.

Overall, the Penn State National Open was an encouraging meet for the Bucknell indoor track team.

"It was good to get away from home for a weekend, to have a sort of test outside our comfort level, and we pretty much passed the test," Klim said.

The Orange and Blue will be in action again this weekend as they prepare to head to Colgate University in Hamilton N.Y. this Saturday.

Bison Calendar

WRESTLING

Sat., Feb. 3 BUFFALO
7:30 p.m.

MEN'S BASKETBALL

Sat., Feb. 3 NAVY
3:15 p.m.

WOMEN'S BASKETBALL

Sat., Feb. 3 NAVY
1:00 p.m.

INDOOR TRACK & FIELD

Sat., Feb. 3 at Colgate

THE Bucknellian

PART 2

February 2, 2001

Weekend Weather

Hi: 39
Low: 18
Friday

Hi: 34
Low: 19
Saturday

Hi: 40
Low: 28
Sunday

Bucknell Brigade continues its work in Nicaragua

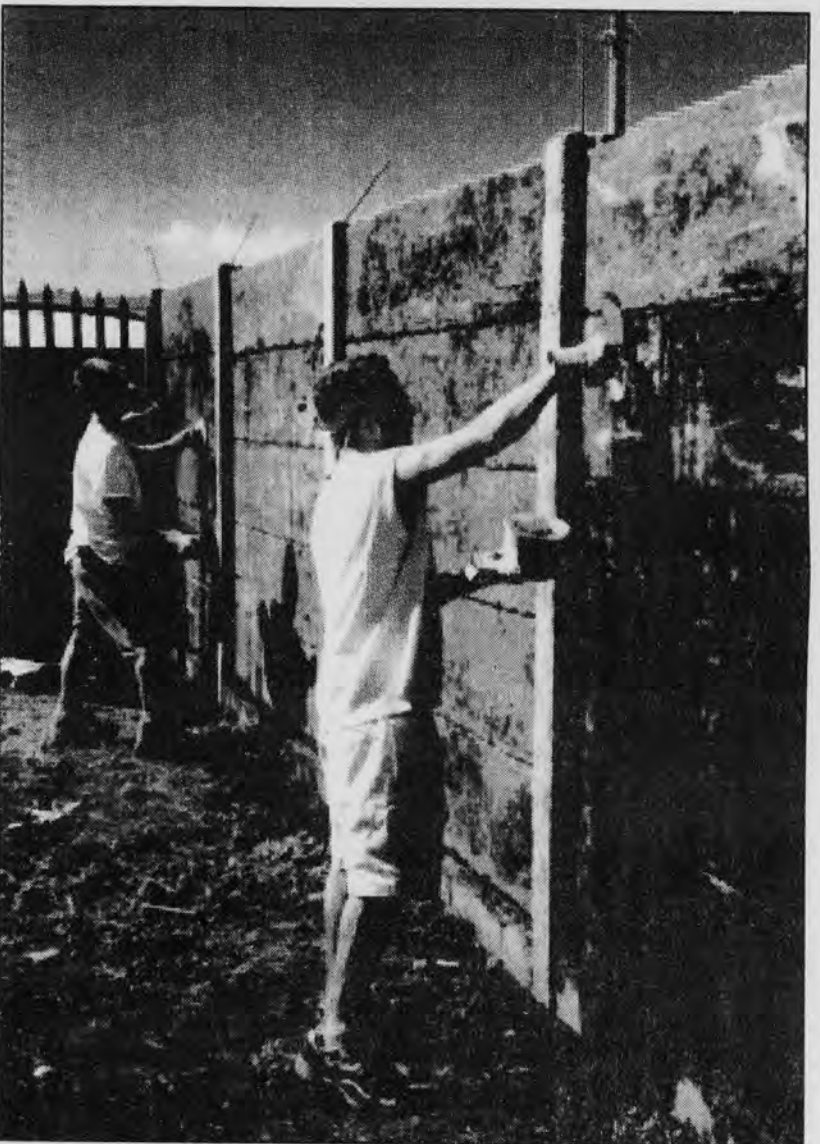

Courtesy of The Chaplain's Office

On Monday, Jan. 15, Dr. Don Stechschulte, director of Student Health Services at the University, saw the first patient in the Nueva Vida, Nicaragua clinic, which was created primarily through the efforts of University students. The opening of "Clinica Nueva Vida" culminated the recent efforts of the Bucknell Brigade to raise funds and help build a permanent clinic for the residents of the dusty, poverty-stricken community on the outskirts of Managua.

The Bucknell Brigade, a collective of University students, faculty and staff, formed in response to the devastating effects of 1998's Hurricane Mitch on the already impoverished population of Nicaragua. Since the fall of 1998, the Brigade has devoted itself to raising money for the resettlement community of 14,000, known as Nueva Vida, delivering relief supplies, aiding with the construction of shelters and latrines, and providing medical care.

After witnessing the dire aftermath of Hurricane Mitch and the community's unmet need for health services, students in the Bucknell Brigade decided to build a clinic. Since that goal was articulated in January 1999, three more delegations of Bucknell students, faculty and staff have since traveled to Nicaragua to participate in community relief and development projects, primarily the construction of the clinic.

See BRIGADE, page B2.

TOP: Students mix concrete by hand for the foundation of the medical clinic. LEFT: A little paint finishes off the wall surrounding the clinic's site.

Photos courtesy of University Chaplain Ian Oliver

Students celebrate Chinese new year

Chinese Cultural Association brings the food of the Orient to campus

By KRISTA REISDORF
A&E Editor

The Chinese Cultural Association kicked off 2001 last Saturday afternoon with their annual festival of the Lunar New Year. People of all ages filled Larison Dining Hall, which was decorated with colorful Chinese lanterns hanging from the ceiling and small lantern lights hanging around the room. Words such as "good fortune" and "overabundance" adorned the walls in the Chinese language. Tables were piled with food, activities, and other displays of Asian culture.

The president of CCA, Katie Croft, opened the party by welcoming everyone and describing the afternoon's program. Croft, along with the rest of the group, began planning the celebration in early December. Their hard work was apparent in every aspect of the festival.

As always, the food was a popular part of the festivities. CCA began by serving fried rice, lo mein and dumplings to the hungry mob. They also served more ethnic dishes throughout the afternoon. These authentic dishes were prepared by professors from various departments and as well as some students. Among these culinary delights were marinated beef skewers, chicken skewers, Chinese coleslaw and fried wontons. The crowd eagerly formed a line around the room to get a taste of these Asian delicacies, and many went back for seconds and thirds.

Those who stopped by the activities tables had the opportunity to play Chinese checkers, Chinese chess, Mah-jong or learn origami. CCA anticipated including younger children and prepared coloring books with pictures of Chinese characters and animals.

Other tables boasted masks, clothing, flowers, umbrellas, art and other crafts that reflected the culture. Pictures displayed images of Asian music, opera, language and architecture. There were Chinese movies playing on one side of the room, while music of the culture was also being played over the speakers.

The program began with ribbon dancing and sleeve dancing by Sarah Wagner '01. She captivated the audience with her graceful movements, which Wagner said symbolizes "Chi" in Chinese movement.

"Chi is energy," she said. "So when I put my arm out, the arm only goes so far. But the energy goes farther, and this gives form to the energy."

See LUNAR, page B5.

New marketplace for students

By MATT TRUNNELL
Senior Editor

Any college student knows the hassles of trying to buy a couch or refrigerator at the start of the semester. You scour the message boards in the Langone Center, write down phone numbers, and if you are lucky you might even find one that fits in your room.

And then you try to haggle the price down.

Duncan Krebs '01 was doing exactly that a few semesters ago when it hit him. Why did he have to waste time running all over campus? Why was it such a pain to find what he was looking for? He knew there was a better way.

An avid eBay user, Krebs envisioned a web site where student buyers and sellers could find each other easily. But an auction site like eBay would never work for something like a couch—and you only want to look for couches here in Lewisburg anyhow.

See DUNCAN, page B8.

Krebs dreams of creating the next .com hit.

Students observe the Chinese festival of the lunar new year by welcoming people of all ages to the Larison Dining Hall on Saturday afternoon.

FEATURES

Students help open clinic in Nicaragua

BRIGADE from page B1

The fourth Bucknell Brigade spent Jan 8-16 in Nicaragua. Twenty-one students and four University staff members helped complete the clinic compound by finishing the surrounding wall, moving medical equipment and supplies, organizing the clinic's pharmacy, and cleaning walls, floors, windows and furniture so that the clinic would be functional by Jan 15.

A group of senior civil engineering students also joined the Brigade as part of their senior project, to design an incinerator for Nueva Vida.

The Brigade's hosts in Nicaragua, the Center for Development in Central America (www.jhc-cdca.org), provided room and board for Brigade participants, while overseeing construction of the clinic. The CDCA, staffed by five US citizens known as the "Jubilee House Community" and a corps of Nicaraguans, promotes and supports community developed projects, ranging from organic farming to a women's sewing cooperative that is currently being constructed.

Courtesy of Ian Oliver

"By coming to Nicaragua, we have all shown a commitment to making a difference and helping others. What we are faced with now is figuring out how to help those around us," Paige Brewster said.

ment projects, ranging from organic farming to a women's sewing cooperative that is currently being constructed.

The CDCA organized several meetings for Brigade members with local groups. Women involvement with the sewing cooperative spoke to the participants, explaining the process of creating a cooperative that will become the first worker-owned free trade zone in Nicaragua.

Additionaly, Brigade members met with participants in the "School for All" (www.schoolforall.org) partnership program.

Through the efforts of Jamie Cistoldi Lee '99, in collaboration with a Managua-based non-profit organization, donors may sponsor women from Nueva Vida to receive job training that will enable them to support themselves and their families. Prostitution is the chief occupation of women in Nueva Vida, and "School for All" focuses on providing sex workers with access to education and the necessary support to pursue alternative employment.

On a day trip to Leon, about an hour's drive north of Managua, students visited Proyecto Minnesota/Gettysburg/Leon, a sister state-city project with an office and a variety of projects in Leon and the surrounding rural communities. Ariana Grebe, coordinator of

Courtesy of Ian Oliver

"The Brigade is really an eye opener. The confrontation with poverty and the sense of involvement you bring back is life-changing. It's important for people to see how the poorest of the poor live, so that they can better understand their own place," Julie Engel said.

Members of the January Brigade also experienced the earthquake on January 13 that wreaked havoc in El Salvador. While no damage occurred in Nicaragua, Brigade members, along with Nicaraguans, shared concern and sympathy for the victims in El Salvador.

The public is invited to attend a presentation about the January Brigade's efforts at 8:30 p.m. on Tuesday, Feb. 13 in the Langone Center Forum. For more information, please call Deirdre O'Connor at 577-3141.

Contributions to the Bucknell Brigade or to the Jubilee House Community may be sent to Ian Oliver, Rooke Chapel, Bucknell University, Lewisburg, PA 17837.

Dr. Payn inspires love for music

Payn brings his love for the University and song to his teaching and work

By SARAH GUDENKAUF
Senior Writer

Whether one wishes to call him Dr. Payn or DP, as many of his students do, Dr. William Payn is a fascinating person with many interesting stories. The most interesting of these may just be how he came to teach at the University.

Dr. Payn spent his childhood in Ashtabula, Ohio. His interest in music started at a very early age. Around the age of four, his parents noticed that he was attempting to learn his older sister's piano lessons. Luckily, they were musicians themselves and, after noting his interest, they encouraged him to continue. He now plays the harpsichord, piano and organ.

Dr. Payn attended Westminster Choir College in New Jersey for his undergraduate study in organ and chorale. Then he continued his music career as a church musician, where he led church music programs. After a few years working in churches he decided to go back to school for his doctorate, which he received in organ and harpsichord at West Virginia University.

Ironically, it may have been a visit to the University that sparked his interest in teaching and, specifically, in working with college-aged students. He came to the University in 1976 to give an organ recital. "I kept thinking to myself, this is the type of place where I would like to teach one day, and that was before I even went to get my doctorate. I think that might have been a catalyst, the thing that helped me to make that decision."

When he finished his doctorate he received a phone call telling him that there was a position open at the University that might interest him because of its chapel component. Ultimately, Dr. Payn began teaching at the University in 1982.

Payn started by team teaching the chapel choir and did so for over a year until he took over full time. Dr. Payn became involved in the concert choir about two years later. The bell choir, which he started himself, evolved in 1983. He had an interest in building a hand bell program because he had been involved with hand bell ringing as a church musician and felt it could be an important addition to the chapel program.

Dr. Payn's involvement in the University's music program does not end there. He also teaches beginning and advanced conducting, as well as an independent study course. The independent study course often helps music majors who want to go on to graduate school and need help with sight-reading for entrance exams. In the past he has also taught Choral Literature and Music 100.

Although Dr. Payn has had opportunities to move on to other music programs, he believes that he would never leave. In fact, three years into teaching at the University, he had an offer that he was thinking about seriously. He eventually decided not to take it after he returned from visiting the school.

"After I came back I was walking through campus and had a dozen students said hello to me within 15 minutes. Then I went to my rehearsals and I absolutely loved what I was hearing and what was happening. I also walked through Lewisburg and saw people I knew and I thought 'this isn't going to happen in Chicago.' Everything that I needed to fulfill my musical expectations was already here."

The students are what make teaching at the University worthwhile to Dr. Payn. "It always comes down to the students. That's why I'm here." He would rather teach at a liberal arts institution where he can work with students that come from all kinds of backgrounds and fields of study.

The new music building is also very exciting for Dr. Payn. "It is an exceptional space that finally matches the professional quality of the music program. As a result, we as faculty feel valued, and the talented students with whom we work every day can blossom and grow in the positive, affirming atmosphere that has always been the hallmark of the music department."

Outside of teaching and music Dr. Payn enjoys spending time with his son, Daniel, and living on his three acres about 20 minutes away from the University. He also enjoys traveling, especially to Arizona. When asked what his ideal day would entail he said that hiking in Arizona with a good book and a compact disc player would be perfect.

Dr. Payn's emphatic statement, "I love the students, I love the community, I love this university," clearly summarizes not only his reasons for continuing to teach at the University, but also what makes him such an enthusiastic and inspiring force in music.

Open-mic with Heaven's Hot Box

By JENNIFER FOSTER
Staff Writer

Are you looking for a night of romantic expression, consisting of such entertainment as music, poetry, singing and dancing? Do you want to tell someone exactly how you feel? Heaven's Hot Box cannot provide the courage to do so, but they can provide the opportunity. The group is hosting an open-mic night next week in The Bison.

Heaven's Hot Box was created by Lamario Bradwell '01 and alumnus Donald Jones '00 in the fall of 1999. They saw that there had been no venue available previously, so they had their own show in the Seventh Street Café. Promoted by word of mouth, the show met everyone's expectations by revealing different talents in front of a packed house. After a few more shows, the administration took interest and asked the group to put on performances for special events.

Bradwell said that the purpose of the event is to make the Hot Box itself the place where expression is given, and also to get University recognition as an organization.

"It entails a lot of personal creativity. Some people are shy, but everyone there is open and accepting—there is no negative feedback," he said.

Bradwell also stated that he was going to be the emcee of the event, and that he would do his best to make everyone feel comfortable.

The entire campus community is welcome to the Hot Box, and the organizers have also opened up participation to all of central Pennsylvania. There is no registration—the community should just come with an "awareness to express themselves in a spontaneous way."

There are also incentives to participate. The best male and female performers will be awarded with The Gap and Victoria's Secret gift certificates at the end of the night. Couples will be interviewed throughout the night with questions as to why they should be considered the couple of the evening. Judged by audience applause at the end, the winners will be serenaded by an original work by the emcee himself.

Other acts are scheduled to perform, such as the Bison Chips, Harlow and the Flexible Flyers and possibly the Jelani Dancers.

The event was held in the Bison last year and it was very successful.

"This will be a more professional production, and there will be more things involved to stimulate interest," Bradwell said.

Heaven's Hot Box is co-sponsored by the Multicultural Center and Activities and Campus Events. So come see what Heaven's Hot Box is all about at the open-mic night at 9 p.m. Feb. 9 in The Bison.

If you think this color thing is cool, help write for Features.
Call Jolene at 74681 or Sandi-Jo at 76431.

FEATURES

An abroad perspective: memories of Europe

By CASSIE WARD AND JENNIFER CUTLER

Contributing Writers

Part 1: Cassie's Perspective
The majority of memories that I took with me from my semester abroad are not of the missed trains or the early-morning classes. They are not of the arguments we realized that we were cutting it dangerously close. We dashed halfway across the city to the train station, Jen Rotzell wheeling her infamous suitcase behind her. We finally got to the station and thought we had made it on time. We might have been right had we not gone to the wrong track. When we finally found our train, Jen Cutler was the first one to do was yell, "We'll meet you in Venice!" and hope that Jen heard me. In retrospect, I wish my first instinct had been to grab my camera and take a picture of her stunned face. When the reality of the situation finally sunk in, all Rotzell and I could do was laugh: Little did we know that a very disoriented Jen Cutler was having the culture, the language, the shopping, the people. For those of you who have seen me at the peer advising meetings, you know the biggest thing I advocate is to definitely try all the food, and of course, to go for a year. But I digress from the memories that are all coming flooding back to me as I write this.

Climbing the round tower to get a beautiful, picturesque tour of Copenhagen, Denmark; the time Cassie got hit by a bus, which by the way, was much funnier than one may think; walking through the old city of Medina, right outside of Fez, in Morocco; and of course, the many nights we spent trying out the club scene in each city we visited. But I am going to tell you about one memory that still has our friends laughing, an entire year later.

Trains in Europe run on time. Now, this is probably a foreign concept to Americans who have come to know and count on the tardiness of American transportation. In an American mind frame, it's sometimes hard to remember that one can set their watch to the trains in Europe.

After many, many close calls, once even ending up in the wrong city, one would think we would have learned to give ourselves ample time to get to the train station. However, when traveling in a group, or should I say, when traveling with my group of friends, not everything works out as planned.

Maybe it was because our hostel was so far from the station, maybe it was because we decided to walk and not take a cab (perhaps due to lack of lira), maybe it was because we had seven-pound packs on our backs. For whatever reason, getting from our hostel to the train station in Florence was a major ordeal.

They were behind me, only they were outside of the train. There was nothing I could do.

I burst into tears. My crying and pounding on the window caught the attention of a few Italian women and a tired looking train worker. I kept pointing at Cassie and Jen, but the doors, which were electric, wouldn't open. The next thing I knew the train was moving, taking me away from my friends. "See you in Venice!" yelled Cassie. More crying and pounding on the window. Finally, the worker checked my ticket and took me to my seat.

The ride to Venice seemed interminable. I cried the whole way. Passengers kept giving me dirty looks. I was in a strange country without my friends, couldn't they pity me?

I arrived in Venice, checked into our hostel (thank goodness I had the name of the hostel with me!) and waited at the train station for four hours until the next train from Florence, carrying Cassie and Jen, arrived.

Perhaps this wasn't the funniest memory, or perhaps you had to be there, but whatever the case, going abroad was the best experience that I have had in my life thus far.

As I get ready to graduate this May and go out into the world, I can't help but look back and think fondly of the five months where it seemed as if I had the whole world in the palm of my hand. If you get the chance, traveling abroad is an opportunity you shouldn't miss!

TOP: The famous canals of Venice.
TOP RIGHT: Authors in front of the Trevi Fountain in Rome.
LEFT: Authors relax with Jen Rotzell (left) on their gondola ride in Venice.

Pictures courtesy of
Cassie Ward and Jen Cutler

over travel plans or the jet lag or the booked hostels. I most remember the good things: my

French family, walking through Tours and always seeing a familiar face, paragliding in Switzerland, the Cliffs of Moher on a clear day, the mountains of Italy, and the beaches of Portugal.

However, what might seem like the worst moments can sometimes make the funniest memories. After many close calls with making trains, you would think that we would have learned our lesson. More than once I had to run through the streets of a foreign city, lugging my backpack and hoping I hadn't forgotten anything. Finally, it all caught up with me in Italy.

Jen Rotzell, Jen Cutler, and I were traveling from Florence to Venice. We woke up early and thought we would have plenty of time to get to the train station. We were wrong. After packing and checking out of the hostel, peared from underneath my foot and the door shut in my face.

There we were in a country where we didn't speak a word of the language: Jen Rotzell and I on one side of the door and Jen Cutler on the other. We were all banging on the window and shouting, but there was nothing we could do. As the train pulled away, the first thing I could think of was a Italian woman.

A few hours later, all was set right when we were reunited in Venice.

PART 2: Jen's Perspective
To tell you the truth, when someone says "study abroad," the phrase conjures up countless memories of the five months I spent living in Tours, France. There are the obvious memories,

Cans help the purchase of a $5,500 greyhound

By KATIE HEISE
Senior Writer

Tired of all those aluminum cans littering the floor? Sick of cramping the evidence of your latest binge into the recycling bin at the far end of the building?

Bucknell Hillel has the perfect solution, a solution that also happens to provide a valuable service opportunity. The members of Hillel have organized a can drive to raise money for Norman Merriott, a 59-year-old Mount Pleasant Mills man suffering from a rare, incurable disorder called olivopontocerebellar atrophy, which causes brain tissue to degenerate and waste away.

For months, Merriott and his wife Judy, recently diagnosed with multiple sclerosis, have spent their Mondays at the Selinsgrove Speedway, gathering the cans discarded by racing enthusiasts. Despite their five hours of work—back breaking labor for such a beleaguered couple—the Merriotts net only about $8 to $9 a week and are forced to spend days recuperating from the effort.

Why would they do such a thing? Norman Merriott, suffering from stiffness, difficulties with balance, slurred speech, fainting and fatigue, a lack of extremity coordination and memory loss, needs to buy a dog—a $5,500 service greyhound, aptly named Independence. Indy is being specially trained to meet Merriott's needs, retrieve to support him as he stands and help him gain balance, relieve dropped items, open heavy doors, and even to carry a bucket of fishing bait and tackle for the once avid hunter and fisherman.

The problem is that the $5,500 figure standing between Merriott and his own independence is practically an impossible dream for a couple who survive on disability checks and shell out nearly $900 a month for prescriptions. And they will also have to purchase a larger car or van to accommodate Indy. Organizations such as Easter Seals and Human Services, which usually help people afford service dogs, have refused to assist the Merriotts on the grounds that Norman "could not be a productive member of society again," Judy told The Daily Item. Thus, husband and wife are scrimping and saving every dollar and cent possible, selling crafts from their home as well as collecting aluminum cans. But even with the help of small donations from various local organizations, they have only managed to save about $1,000, and that amount is dwindling rapidly as the cost of food and prescriptions takes its toll.

The Merriotts are truly people in need, and the University can do a great deal to improve their lives and bring Indy home to Norman. It's simple, just bring your aluminum cans to the collection site behind Martin House on St. George Street. Hillel will be accepting the cans until Mar. 4, so there's no excuse not to stop by. Another way to help is to send monetary donations to the following address: Norman Merriott Fund, First National Trust Bank, 901 Rt. 522, Selinsgrove, PA 17870. Please take a few moments from your busy schedule to give just a little to a couple struggling to make it through each day. You'll have to take out the garbage eventually, so why not walk a few extra yards and enable Merriott to live out his remaining years in activity and happiness?

Cited Joanne Troutman in the Oct. 1, 2000 issue of The Daily Item.

Yo Quiero The Bucknellian

Girls & SPORTS
by Justin Borus and Andrew Feinstein

OH, I'LL GET THE CHECK BUT IT'S OUR FIRST DATE!
I DON'T WANT YOU TO THINK I OWE YOU ANYTHING
IF YOU'RE PAYING, I GUESS I OWE YOU A KISS, HUH?
NICE TRY

www.girlsandboys.com

Arts & Entertainment

Cast dances through ballet workshop

Ballet workshop emphasizes 18th century techniques and prepares cast for show, writes senior writer Kacy O'Brien

A ballet workshop—of sorts—took place over the weekend. Yet the social implications went far beyond stage presentation.

Faculty member Danna Frangione worked with the cast of the next main stage play, "The Game of Love and Chance," to teach them how members of the French aristocracy would use their movement during social functions.

"The Game of Love and Chance" is set in a rich 1730 Parisian household where comic plots and passions tangle. Switching roles with their servants, two lovers attempt to determine if the other is worthy of marriage.

Naturally, neither one of them knows that the other has made the switch. Antics ensue.

At the workshop, the actors each had a list of social and historical values associated with the reign of Louis XIV. Frangione took the actors through basic ballet positions. As she did this, she explained how these movements embodied the values of 18th century French culture.

Aristocratic men were extremely fluid and graceful—ballet was created from the customs of this time and was actually created for men. The women of the aristocracy were confined to only a few movements, hindered by their dress and social values.

The female cast members wore the shells of dresses from the time period—wide-hipped with tight corsets. The men wore heels and overcoats during the exercises. The positioning of the feet, even when standing still, was always in one of the basic ballet positions. The actors had to be extremely conscious of their bodies because of the subtleties of emotion communicated by even the simple placement of a fan. Right cheek means "yes," left cheek means "no"—subtleties that were confusing for both actors and bystanders on the rehearsal stage.

The intricate bows, curtsies, donning of hats and postures challenged, perplexed and amused the actors. They sometimes took liberties of exaggeration, causing Tustin's black-box theatre to echo with laughter.

"At first these movements are exaggerated, more of a joke, because it is very difficult to make them second nature," Frangione said. "Men had to be, what we call effeminate, and graceful in order to get ahead with the King, who was all of these as well as a dancer. Women, on the other hand, had to contain themselves. They couldn't use their legs because they were covered in yards of fabric. So they used their necks, arms and chests to communicate."

Frangione also commented on social customs of our time.

"As women became more liberated, they began to adopt the behaviors of men," she said. "Men, in turn, began to lose all that wonderful elegance, and now their movements are contained and sometimes closed."

In the workshop, it became apparent how the positioning of the body was a true art form. Ordinary objects took on more meaning and seemingly simple movements could make or break a character in a second.

"That's why I love working on period pieces," Frangione said. "Everyone gets so totally frustrated because the men have to learn to embody this elegance and grace, and the women want to be doing what the men do, but can't."

"The Game of Love and Chance" runs at 8 p.m. Feb. 16-19 in Tustin Theatre. Tickets will become available two weeks prior to opening. For any questions or more information, contact the theatre and dance department at 577-1235. This show is not one that should be missed—certainly for the enjoyment of a comic love intrigue, but also for a look into a part of history from which we evolved.

Commentary

Survivor: I'm voting you off my television

Liz Wilmarth

Statistically, the Super Bowl is the most-watched event on television each year. So it was a smart business move for CBS to air "Survivor," the second-most watched TV event ever, directly after. This was, needless to say, one of the most anticipated broadcasts of the season. I wasn't as excited as most of my peers because I didn't see any of the "Survivor" episodes this summer.

What did I just say? How did I miss it? How did I not get hooked? How did I start the school year not knowing of Sue's speech or if I liked Kelly better than Rich, or pondering why that one guy asked them to guess a number between one and 10? Well, simple. I spent my summer in the woods without television—there could be no other option.

I must say I was shocked when I came home from the summer, and listened to my friends admit to watching "Survivor" religiously. A lot of them had found family bonding time, sitting in front of the television while everyone placed bets on who would last. I seemed to make it through the season without ever seeing an episode, but it seemed that no one else could.

Now that the second season has started, I am tempted to give in and start placing my bets on who will make it and which contestant has the best approach to outsmart everyone else in the Australian outback. But, since I still have a little perspective on the matter, I find myself deciding against it. "Survivor" is, to me, the next step of a compulsive trend in America, where people can be set for life just because they appeared on a show that others will watch.

There have always been game shows, but things really got out of hand when ABC began airing "Who Wants to be a Millionaire?" last year. It was everyone's obsession. It was one of the first ways that an average Joe could go into early retirement just for knowing random trivia. Granted, Jeopardy has the same approach, but the questions are harder and based on more valuable knowledge. It also doesn't offer the insane amount of money that "Millionaire" does.

So this was the new get-rich-quick scheme for Americans—trivia. But is this doing any harm? Probably not. Is it compromising American values? Leave it to Fox to take it one step too far. What did they do? "Who Wants to Marry a Millionaire." Did you catch this one? Give me a break. A bunch of female contestants answer questions, and whoever survives the longest gets to marry the guy with $1 million. It is the easy way to have the perfect life—not only will you have enough money, but you will have someone to help you spend it.

Don't worry girls, plenty of men have a million dollars. They will marry you as long as you provide the right answers to the questions. Sounds too good to be true. Well, it was, and the happy couple got divorced within a week. If I remember correctly, she had decided not to go through with it by the time they got to the hotel for the honeymoon. But Fox got plenty of people to watch and capitalized on people's desire for trashy television.

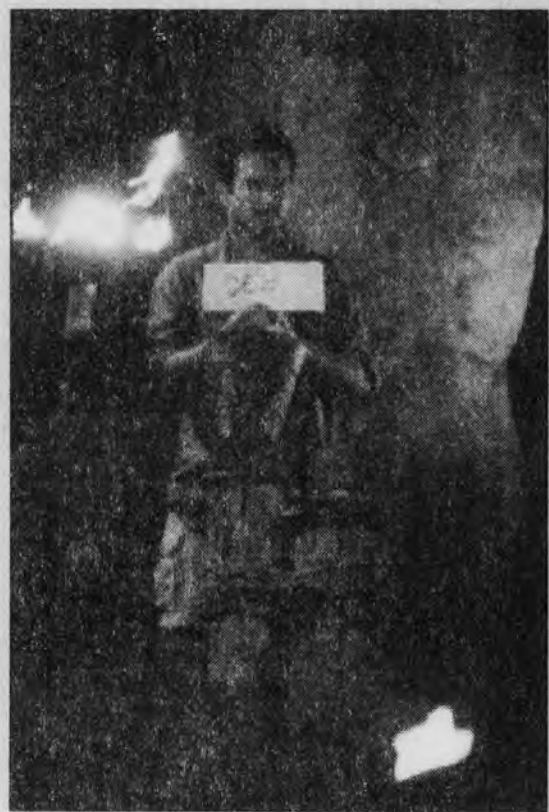

So now there is "Survivor," the new way to make it in America. If you win, you get the $1 million and a car. Is that the end of the benefits? Nope. Countless spots on television will follow, not to mention the magazine articles and advertisements. Entertainment Weekly named the first 16 survivors in their top 10 entertainers of the year. Debb Eaton, who got voted off the Australian adventure first, is lined up to be on Letterman and Leno already this week. See, you don't even have to win to be in the spotlight—you just have to make it on the show.

At the end of the summer, Rosie O'Donnell had the entire cast of the first "Survivor" on her show, and gave them all the same car that Rich got for winning. They had increased their standard of living just because they were a part of this show. And why? Because they were gutsy enough to eat bugs and live on a deserted island until the tribe decided they had to leave.

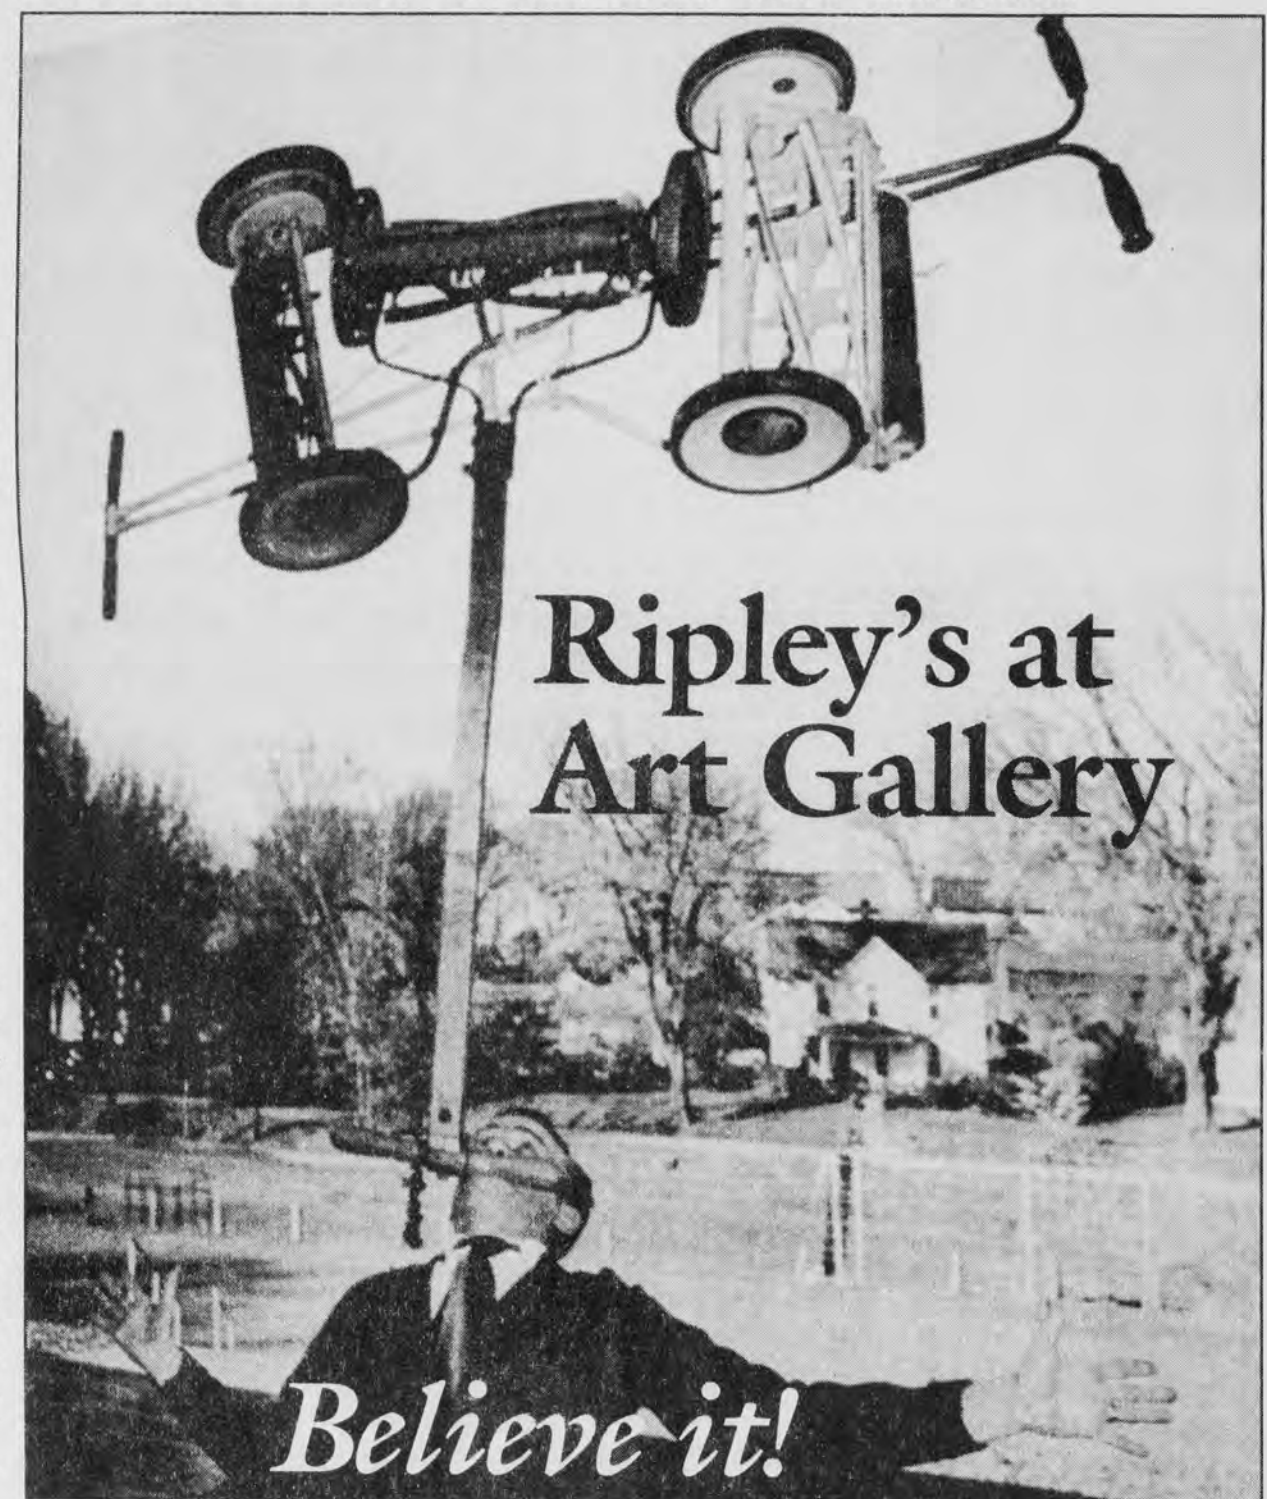

This doesn't seem that bad since people are being entertained. Once again, enter Fox—this time with "Temptation Island." Four couples, who are thinking of getting married, go to an island with 26 beautiful people who are only there to break up their relationships. Now they want to see which couple will last the longest. If they win, they get to stay together.

As repulsive as I find this entire form of entertainment, I don't know who to blame. Is it the networks that brought us "Millionaire" and "Survivor" as get-rich-quick schemes? Or would all of that have been okay if other networks hadn't exploited the concepts? I am not sure where to start, but I think it is sad that this entertainment is hooking people, and that shows like this are being watched. I feel bad for the "survivors" after their show is over. Sure, they get guest spots on sitcoms and TV ads, but in five years the money will definitely be gone. Where will they be then? These shows make people think that all their problems will instantly be solved, while they will only get a quick fix at best.

I also worry for the next round of "survivors." How far is this going to be taken? How horrible will the conditions get? How torturous will the challenges become until someone can take home the money? I'm sure NBC has one of these shows up their sleeves. If they aren't providing some way to give people a million dollars, they will surely be on their way down. I can't imagine what will be next.

Courtesy of SurvivorNews.net

Chris Rivera—The Bucknellian

"Dear Mr. Ripley: Treasures from the Ripley's Believe It or Not! Archive," on display in the University's art gallery through Feb. 18, brings together decades of photographic documentation of human feats of strength, endurance and various physical manipulations. The exhibit contains 126 vintage photographs, letters, sworn affidavits, notarized napkins and other artifacts that were used as evidence to substantiate the outlandish claims of Ripley's comic strip. Ripley was considered the leading chronicler of the odd and the absurd and developed into one of the world's most celebrated personalities.

Building christened with student concert

By JENNY JOHNSON
Senior Staff Writer

Amalia Martin '02 and Neal Lutz '03 performed the first student recital in the new Sigfried Weis Music Building on Sunday Jan. 28. The Sophomore-Junior recital was a unique combination of Martin singing while Lutz performed on the saxophone. Both agreed that preparing for a student recital was not an easy task.

"That was the first full-scale recital I have done. I never expected it to require so much time and preparation," Lutz said.

Martin was more familiar with the effort it takes to pull together a student recital.

"I started preparing over the summer, and then continued over Christmas break," she said.

A key factor to preparing a recital is working with knowledgeable music professors. Martin has nothing but praise for her teacher, Professor Catherine Payn.

"She has been so supportive throughout my years here, really helping me to grow and mature musically. I can't thank her enough for helping me to achieve my dream," Martin said.

Lutz also appreciates the help that he received from his teacher, Professor Ronald Bixler.

"My professor is excellent," he said. "He teaches me amazing repertoire, and demands nothing but the best. He is very knowledgeable and strives to find new and exciting ways to make me understand difficult techniques of playing and to become more sensitive to the music."

Lutz's exploration of new saxophone techniques was evident in his performance of Caravan's "Sketches for Saxophone."

"That piece requires the player to take all he is taught—concepts of fingerings, embouchure, tongue position, articulation, dynamics, and control—and abandon all of it," Lutz said.

The piece is supposed to represent an artist sitting down at an easel and playing with bits of color, abandoning some and elaborating on others.

"The piece forces the musician to look at music as something that doesn't have to be completely structured, like a sonata," Lutz said. "In this case, texture and timbre are more important than melody and harmony."

Martin included some dramatic elements and expressions in her performance. Much of this was due to her past theater experiences.

"I've done a lot of musical theater," she said. "Most recently, during the summer, I sang with the College Light Opera Company in which we performed nine musicals in nine weeks. I learned a lot there."

An important aspect of her program was singing a piece in Italian, French, German and English, a difficult feat for any performer. For the French portion, Martin chose to sing Debussy's "The Afternoon of a Faun," which she said, "it complements the melody and the text so well," she said.

The recital ended with a jazzy Sondheim piece that was originally for voice and piano only. However, resident composer Jeffrey Lee-man '01 arranged an accompaniment for the saxophone. Again, Martin demonstrated her amazing ability to lure in the audience with her theatrical charm.

It was an honor to perform the first student recital in the new hall," Lutz said.

It was also an honor for the audience to hear such talented, mature and professional music students.

Poet-in-Residence to read Sunday

A kicker

By CARMEN MAURIELLO
Sports Editor

Fishing, hunting and farming in the wilderness of Alaska. This sounds like a dream life for many University students.

For over 20 years, that was the life of John Haines, a nationally renowned poet who is serving this semester as the University's Poet-in-Residence.

Haines is teaching an advanced poetry seminar at the University, will participate in the Bucknell Younger Poet Seminar this June and will give two poetry readings during the semester.

Haines has published over 10 collections of poetry, including The Owl in the Mask of the Dreamer and New Poems 1980-88. He received the 1992 Poet's Prize, the Western States Book Award and the Lenore Marshall/The Nation poetry prize.

Born in Norfolk, Va., in 1924, Haines served in the U.S. Navy during World War II. After the war, he read an article in The Washington Post about the government's program to grant returning veterans free land in Alaska. He decided to become a homesteader.

Haines planned to become an artist after studying at the National Art School, the American University and the Hans Hoffmann School of Fine Art. However, he began writing seriously during the first winter at his homestead and made Alaska his permanent residence and devote himself to writing.

Haines believes that his decision to settle in Alaska was pivotal to his poetry career. "To simply immerse myself in the natural environment of a particular landscape was, to me, absolutely essential," Haines said. "There were things I needed to learn that I would not be able to learn any other way. It was a great life. I'm glad I did it."

Courtesy of John Haines

Poet-in-Residence John Haines will read in Bucknell Hall Sunday at 8 p.m.

Had he not taken this step, his life may have traveled down a decidedly different path.

"I don't know what would have been the case for me if I hadn't settled in Alaska," Haines said. "If I had remained a visual artist, I probably would have had to stay in New York or some other urban center where there were galleries and dealers. But that was not what I needed."

Haines' poetry provides remarkable insights into nature and his essays often stress a need to return to nature for renewal.

"Periodically, individuals, and sometimes whole groups of people, will, for some reason or another, go back to nature or something close to it—somewhere back to origins," Haines said. "And it seems to be a necessity for us. We get too far from the foundations of life and we have to go back and re-experience things."

William Carlos Williams' In the American Grain was a text that had a profound impact on Haines. Haines' philosophy is very similar to the book's message of "putting the history books aside and beginning from the ground up." He also listed D.H. Lawrence's Studies in Classic American Literature as a work that influenced him.

Haines later became a professor at Ohio University, George Washington University and the University of Cincinnati. He first visited the University in 1998 as the featured writer in the Sandra and Gary Sojka Visiting Poet Series.

Cynthia Hogue, Director of the Stadler Center for Poetry, said Haines impressed her during his 1998 visit through his interactions with students. She said that his teaching ability along with his "rugged individualism and reverence for nature" were among the reasons why the staff selected Haines for the Poet-in-Residence program, now in its 20th year.

"He is a consummate lyric poet, and his more recent work has a political consciousness, combined with a mastery of form. That makes him among the most accomplished poets of his generation," Hogue said.

Haines looks forward to presenting Sunday's poetry reading at 8 p.m. this Sunday in Bucknell Hall.

"I enjoy simply being able to express the points of the writing in such a way, so that it speaks to people," Haines said.

His newest book, For the Century's End, will be released in October 2001.

Celebration brings a taste of Chinese culture

LUNAR From page A1.

Wagner, a student of Asian culture and dancer since her freshman year, has always been encouraged by her professors. She visited China and has gained even more respect for the culture.

"It's such an old culture that it will take me years to fully understand it, and even then, I probably won't," she said. "But visiting China was the spark that started my major interest."

After Wagner's performance, James Pusey, associate professor of East Asian Studies, showed slides from a visit to China. He described the images in the slides while integrating information about the Chinese culture for his audience.

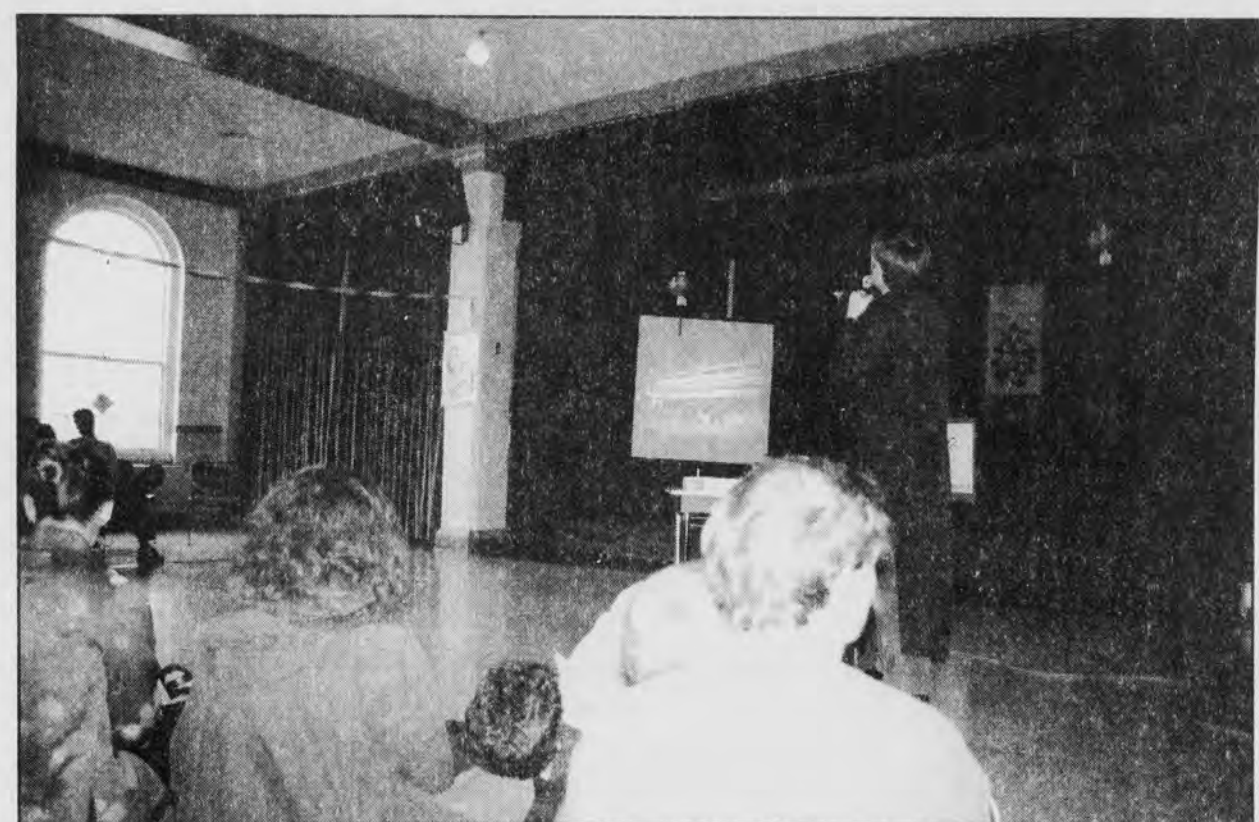

He said that the celebration was very important for University students.

"Most Bucknellians don't know much about Chinese culture," Pusey said. "They don't really teach about it in high schools, so people don't come with much preparation."

However, it seems that the key to learning more about these activities is to become involved. Pusey encourages his students to participate, even though it doesn't take much coaxing anymore.

The students are so active now that they don't need encouragement," he said.

The program ended with a Shotokan Karate Club demonstration. Bob Polagey and another club member introduced the background information on the origin of Shotokan Karate, and then impressed the audience by

Chris Rivera—The Bucknellian

Students and faculty celebrated the Lunar New Year last Saturday. This year's festival celebrates the Year of the Snake—a year that emphasizes inner growth, strength, endurance and spirit.

demonstrating several moves.

The Chinese Cultural Association was proud of the large crowd that attended the celebration. It helped to create more awareness of the Asian culture both on-campus and off-campus.

"I think it's great that Bucknell has the desire and the ability to introduce the Asian culture to the students and to the community," Omar Brown '02 said.

The community was definitely involved, due to the extensive publicity for the festival. CCA publicized through radio, television, fliers, e-mails, newspapers (The Daily Item and The Bucknellian), "What's Happening" and various other media. They also advertised at local middle schools and high schools. This was very advantageous for the group and greatly contributed to the size of the crowd.

"CCA, with the support of other cultural organizations, is very satisfied with the success of the Lunar New Year festival, and is in particular very happy with the large turn-out," Ruth Li '02 said.

This 2001 Lunar New Year festival celebrates the Year of the Snake. This is said to be a mental year that emphasizes inner growth, strength, endurance and spirit.

Chinese New Year falls on a new date each year because the Chinese culture follows the lunar and solar calendar.

The New Year starts with the new moon on the first day, and ends on the full moon, 15 days later. This year, the Chinese New Year began on Jan. 24.

Hannigan pleases audience in Weis Center performance

By STEPHANIE NICKSE
Staff Writer

Those who didn't have the opportunity to attend Professor of Music Barry Hannigan's piano concert last Friday missed an incredible display of musical talent.

Hannigan performed pieces from Tower, Kernis, Chopin, Rachmaninoff, Takemitsu and Granados. His musical talent sparkled during his recital in the Weis Center.

Many listeners and fellow musicians were struck by Hannigan's selection of music as they watched his fingers dance across the keys of the piano.

Barry Hannigan was an amazing performer and his playing really kept my attention throughout the entire performance," Jaime Robinson '03 said.

Hannigan even surprised the audience by providing a few chuckles between pieces when he paused to introduce each song. At the end of the evening, he modestly accepted the gratitude of the audience as applause echoed off the auditorium walls.

When looking at Hannigan's past, it is no surprise that he is a very talented musician. Hannigan performed at Carnegie Hall in 1984, and at the Edward Munch Museum in Norway in 1985.

He has performed across the United States at various universities and festivals, many of which have been broadcasted over National Public Radio affiliate stations.

Hannigan has also received numerous awards in recognition of his exceptional musical talent.

Anyone who is interested in obtaining a copy of Barry Hannigan's CD should check out www.blackcanyonrecords.com. His CD can also be found in the Bucknell Bookstore.

Bringing new meaning to V-Day

By KACY O'BRIEN
Senior Writer

V-Day is coming soon. Only this year, it falls on Feb. 10. Why the change in date? Why not on Feb. 14 as usual? This V-Day is the day that "The Vagina Monologues" will be performed at Bucknell.

Yes, you read it correctly—Eve Ensler's award-winning play "The Vagina Monologues," directed by adjunct faculty member Laurie McCants of the Bloomsburg Theatre Ensemble, will open at the Harvey M. Powers Theatre. Students, faculty, and community members have come together to bring this funny, sexy, profound play to the University. "The Vagina Monologues" celebrates women around the world. It applauds their heroism, courage, versatility and strength in times of abuse, rape and mutilation.

"The Vagina Monologues" are a collection of stories from women of all walks of life; stories about misconceptions of the body that will put you in hysterics; stories about genital mutilation and rape in Bosnia that will make you weep; stories that will make you shout with lead to frank discussion among us all—not just women," Carr said.

This play is not only for women. It is for everyone—men, women, gays, lesbians, bisexuals, minorities—any group of people that have ever been misunderstood or feared for their differences. While the play is a celebration of women's reconnection to their bodies, the message goes much deeper than that. It is about the dissolving of prejudices, the education of unwarranted fears and the celebration of life at large.

Come to see this show and learn something about yourself and others. Begin to understand different points of view. Become a part of the march to overcome hatred and violence.

"The Vagina Monologues" will be at Harvey Powers Theatre on Saturday, Feb. 10 at 8 p.m. Tickets go on sale this week at the Langone Center Box Office and are $5 each. The low-ticket price is to allow a great variety of people to join in the celebration. However, donations are welcome and appreciated.

Professor Glynn Carr, who initiated the project here at the University, commented on the phenomenal support that our community has offered in the production of this show. Carr also expressed her delight in the daring attitudes of all involved and her hopes for a positive outcome.

"We hope that it will break down the silence and taboos that treat sexuality as a problem and lead to frank discussion among us all—not just women," Carr said.

This play is not only for women. It is for everyone—men, women, gays, lesbians, bisexuals, minorities—any group of people that have ever been misunderstood or feared for their differences. While the play is a celebration of women's reconnection to their bodies, the message goes much deeper than that. It is about the dissolving of prejudices, the education of unwarranted fears and the celebration of life at large.

Come to see this show and learn something about yourself and others. Begin to understand different points of view. Become a part of the march to overcome hatred and violence.

"The Vagina Monologues" will be at Harvey Powers Theatre on Saturday, Feb. 10 at 8 p.m. Tickets go on sale this week at the Langone Center Box Office and are $5 each. The low-ticket price is to allow a great variety of people to join in the celebration. However, donations are welcome and appreciated.

It's not a one person show. Write for A&E. reisdorf@

Susquehanna Valley Limousine Inc.

With a long tradition of quality service to the Bucknell Community, SVL offers:

Service to and from destination door to door
Schedule your own shuttles to and from Airports
for breaks
Ride-sharing network to cut down on costs
Many available vehicles: vans, town car
and limousine bus
Service 24 hours a day, 7 days a week

For more information or to make reservations

Call: 1.800.685.5567

SCIENCE & TECHNOLOGY

TiVo gives television viewers more control over programing

By CY RUBEL AND ALEXIS MINASIAN
Staff Writers

The revolutionary company TiVo has created a product that puts you in control of your television-viewing experience in a way you never dreamed possible. It gives viewers control of what they watch and when they want to watch it—regardless of what the TV listings say.

Mike Ramsay and Jim Barton developed the idea of TiVo in 1997, and in a mere three years, the company had revolutionized the broadcasting and media industry. The company designed the personal video recorder, a product that is in essence a high-tech digital VCR.

Personal video recorders, named TiVo like the company itself, currently have the capacity to record from 10 to 60 hours of live television and probably will be able to record much more in the near future.

Like VCRs, television recorded by TiVo's product can be viewed at a later, more convenient time. TiVo's recorder also allows TV watchers to simultaneously watch a program, while recording another, and gives them the ability to automatically skip over unwanted, annoying commercial breaks with the click of a button.

Looking something like your average VCR, but not "thinking" like one, this product makes a nightly toll-free phone call to the TiVo company server to gain the latest programming and service updates. Promising consumer convenience, choice and control, TiVo boasts a 95 percent customer satisfaction rate. TiVo attributes their high level of customer satisfaction to the large number of features their recorder provides that go beyond the traditional features found in VCRs.

One of these features is the ability to rank recorded shows with either a thumbs-up, or thumbs-down, allowing TiVo customers to develop a preference profile in their personal recorder. TiVo's recorders suggest and record additional programming based on each individual customer's preferences. Customers also only need to program TiVo once to have the machine continually record their favorite TV shows, without recording reruns.

TiVo is manufactured by the leading consumer electronics providers Sony and Philips. The prices of TiVo range from $199 for the 10 hour machine to $699 for the 60 hour machine. A $100 rebate is offered on every TiVo purchase. According to CNN, because the personal digital recording industry is fairly new, there are few companies currently in competition with TiVo. Until last November, the only direct competitor in the personal video recorder industry was a company named ReplayTV. However, in November ReplayTV withdrew from the retail market and has decided to work solely with cable providers.

Despite this apparent small victory for TiVo, there are a number of competitors looming on the horizon, one of which is the notorious Microsoft. Microsoft plans to release its own more advanced version of the recorder, Ultimate TV, this summer.

Despite that TiVo appears to have no drawbacks and is widely available, TiVo may not be the perfect product it seems to be. Even though TiVo was ranked by CNN as the number one electronic gift for the holiday season, the recorder made a disappointing showing.

The features of TiVo may not be as great as they sound and many people may find it to be simply more of a hassle!

It is true that the product's capabilities are outstanding and only getting better with each model. However, TiVo has underlying disadvantages.

TiVo requires some time to create the personal profiles for its customers, and because of the time-consuming nature of programming TiVo, customers may ultimately find the more familiar VCR easier to use.

In addition, the ability to skip over commercials, a feature that benefits the home television viewing audience, conflicts with advertising agencies and networks. Advertisers pay large amounts of money to have their commercials featured on television, and without advertisements, TV networks would lose their income base.

Consequently, TiVo has advertising companies up in arms and has consumers asking if commercial free television is worth the extra cost of paying for television shows. TiVo is currently on sale at over 20 internet sites, as well as in over 4,000 retail stores, including the local Selinsgrove Wal-Mart.

Did you know . . .
that your intestines average 30 feet in length?

Courtesy of www.britanica.com

Engineering professor uses bacteria to reduce waste

Millions of bacteria are busily converting food waste into methane gas and soil nutrients, in a pilot project at the Lyscom County landfill, to determine if a full-scale plant could cut up to 70 percent the amount of organic waste now being buried.

The project is directed by Thomas D. DiStefano, associate professor of civil and environmental engineering at Bucknell, in collaboration with Richard E. Speece, centennial professor of civil and environmental engineering at Vanderbilt.

They have completed a year-long $99,500 feasibility study for the Lyscom County Resources Management Services Inc., which operates the landfill, to test an anaerobic (using no oxygen) process for biodegrading waste. Based on promising results, the county commissioners have extended their contract for two more years.

"The anaerobic process is a technology that could divert a substantial amount of waste from the landfill and extend the life of the landfill," DiStefano said. "I am not aware of anyone doing this complete process with an anaerobic system."

Based on test results, DiStefano hopes eventually to convert from 50 to 70 percent of the biodegradable waste that is now being landfilled into methane gas and soil nutrients, called soil amendments, or conditioners, that could be sold commercially. Organic waste contributes about 25 percent of the waste that comes into the landfill.

DiStefano has been researching anaerobic systems for several years. When county officials suggested that the process be tested at the landfill, he contacted Speece.

Speece called DiStefano's approach "a novel concept. This is cutting edge, and it is a privilege to be associated with something that probably 10 years down the line will be commonplace."

Some 1,000 tons of trash and garbage are brought daily to the landfill, which rises to a 200-foot-high hill off U.S. Route 15. Some 5 million tons of waste, from a six-county area, have been buried on the site, which first opened in 1978. At the present rate of dumping, the landfill will only last 11 more years, said Michael D. Hnat, staff engineer for LCRMS.

In the first year of the project, the anaerobic process treated food waste from an area food processing plant. "Tests indicated that the process may be amenable to the entire waste stream after recyclables and construction and demolition materials have been removed," DiStefano said.

The project is part of a comprehensive Green Technology Initiatives program, that is used to find ways to bury less waste by recycling more and developing byproducts to sell.

Building facilities for the entire program would be a multimillion-dollar project. If successful, the complete county plan would cut by more than 20 percent the total amount of trash and garbage going into the landfill and could extend the site's life to mid-century, Hnat said. The county has been an aggressive recycling system to extract aluminum, plastic and other waste for reuse. Construction of a new $8 million recycling facility will begin in June at the 500-acre landfill complex.

For the pilot project, three 10-foot high, 8 inches-in-diameter biological reactors were installed. The food processing waste is added to the reactors daily. One reactor, using recycled water, converts the garbage into simple organic acids, which are then pumped to the second reactor, where the bacteria convert the acid into methane gas. The residue left behind in the reactors is the relatively odorless compound that can be used as a soil nutrient.

The methane gas can be used to produce electricity. The residue of soil nutrients can be used by such businesses as nurseries, golf courses and turf farms, Hnat said. "When applied, the non-chemical nutrients are released slowly into the soil to improve the quality. We're very excited about this."

Using data from the preliminary work, DiStefano estimates that a full-scale anaerobic operation, treating just food waste, could produce up to 88 million cubic feet of methane per year and 2,600 tons of soil.

nutrient. Food waste accounts for about 10 percent of the entire waste stream. "So, if the reactors can ultimately handle 70 percent of the organic waste stream, the gas and soil amendment production would increase by a factor of seven."

The Lyscom landfill, which has a cogeneration plant on site, now sells PPL one megawatt of electricity daily that is generated by the captured methane (about 250,000 cubic feet per day). One megawatt is enough power to provide electricity to 1,000 homes, Hnat said.

However, considerable residue is left behind in the landfill. Nor is biodegrading industrial waste with bacteria new. DiStefano said Milwaukee, using an aerobic process that requires oxygen, has been converting sewage sludge from waste water plants into compost and marketing it for 40 years.

The problem is the process needs oxygen to keep the bacteria alive and productive. Aerating the sludge consumes oxygen, whereas the anaerobic process produces energy. Perhaps, more importantly, he said, adding oxygen produces gases that don't smell good. The anaerobic process is contained in tanks, so the odor is minimal and not noxious. They'll work further to make the process odor-free.

A drawback of the landfill-produced methane is that the gas is only about 50 percent methane; the remaining gas is carbon dioxide. About 80 percent of the current landfill methane is burned off in a flare with no recovery of the energy.

So far, the anaerobic process produces gas that is from 70 to 75 percent pure methane, which would make the gas more attractive commercially, DiStefano said.

The next step is to install additional biological reactors that will use different attachment mechanisms to biodegrade some of the municipal solid waste stream from homes and restaurants, in addition to the food processing waste.

The anaerobic biotechnology was first tested, unsuccessfully, on industrial waste waters in the 1960s. The problem was that the bacteria were not getting the nutrients they needed.

The next two years of the project will be critical. If the anaerobic process does prove feasible, the county will build a facility that will house 14 reactors. They will be much larger than the current test reactors, which are 4 feet in diameter, as compared to the pilot reactors that are 8 inches. Besides the benefit of extending landfill life, the process could be an important source of energy.

DiStefano, Speece and Hnat presented the project at the 16th International Conference on Solid Waste Technology and Management in Philadelphia in December.

Courtesy of Public Relations

NASA news update

EVIDENCE OF MARTIAN "LAND OF LAKES" DISCOVERED

In what ultimately may be their most significant discovery yet, Mars scientists say high-resolution pictures showing layers of sedimentary rock paint a portrait of an ancient Mars that long ago may have featured numerous lakes and shallow seas.

X-33 AEROSPIKE ENGINE NEWS CONFERENCE

Program managers for the project designed to propel the X-33 into high-speed, suborbital flight will meet with reporters in December to discuss tandem test-firings of the linear Aerospike, NASA's radical new rocket engine.

What makes the linear Aerospike engine unique is the shape of its nozzle. Unlike conventional rocket engines that use a bell nozzle to constrict and direct expanding gases, the linear Aerospike nozzle is V-shaped and called a ramp.

NASA ROBOTICS MAY SOON HELP SPINAL CORD PATIENTS TAKE FIRST STEPS

NASA engineers and University of California, Los Angeles (UCLA), neurophysiologists are creating a robot-like device that could help rehabilitate thousands of Americans with spinal cord injuries.

"We are developing a prototype robotic stepper device that when complete will be used as part of rehabilitation that can potentially help some people now wheelchair-bound take their first steps," said Jim Weiss, program manager for collaborative neural repair at NASA's Jet Propulsion Laboratory (JPL), Pasadena, CA.

The device, still in the development phase, will look like a treadmill with robotic arms, and will be fitted with a harness to support the patient's weight. The arms resemble knee braces that attach to the patient's leg, guiding the legs properly on the moving treadmill.

COUNTING DOWN TO DECEMBER 17, 2003

Quick—without looking it up—what's significant about December 17, 2003? If your immediate answer isn't that it's the 100th anniversary of powered flight as first demonstrated by the Wright Brothers, hopefully that will change. Just check out <http://www.centennialofflight.gov>

NASA SPACE TECHNOLOGY SHINES NEW LIGHT ON HEALING

Doctors at the Medical College of Wisconsin in Milwaukee have discovered the healing power of light with the help of technology developed for NASA's space shuttle. Using powerful light-emitting diodes, or LEDs, originally designed for commercial plant-growth research in space, scientists have found a way to help patients here on Earth.

"So far, what we've seen in patients and what we've seen in laboratory cell cultures all point to one conclusion," said Dr. Harry Whelan, professor of pediatric neurology and director of hyperbaric medicine at the Medical College of Wisconsin. "The near-infrared light emitted by these LEDs seems to be perfect for increasing energy inside cells. This means whether you're on Earth in a hospital, working in a submarine under the sea or on your way to Mars inside a spaceship, the LEDs boost energy to the cells and accelerate healing."

NASA'S IMAGE REVEALS EARTH'S INVISIBLE MAGNETIC TAIL

The first large-scale pictures of the hidden machinations of the Earth's magnetic force-field are now available, including confirmation of a suspected but previously invisible "tail" of electrified gas.

The tail, which streams from Earth towards the Sun, was spotted by NASA's Imager for Magnetopause to Aurora Global Exploration (IMAGE) spacecraft and is featured on the cover of the Jan. 26 issue of the journal Science. The new imaging technology offers unprecedented views of the transparent, electrified gas trapped within Earth's magnetic field, providing the first visual, global perspective on magnetic storms.

Update courtesy of NASA

Tuesday is Bucknell Night at Imperial Lanes

Tuesday Nights
2 hour Special for $20
9:30 - 11:30 only

Rent-a-lane for up to 6 people
Call 742-9211 to Schedule
Private Parties
Sorority/Fraternity/Date Parties

Enjoy Rock-n-Bowl with Lane Quake Sound!
Leagues and Open Bowling Available

Are you interested in Graduate School in Biomedical Sciences?

SUMMER UNDERGRADUATE RESEARCH PROGRAM IN Cell and Molecular Physiology

Rising juniors and seniors can spend the summer at Carolina in a faculty lab working on an independent research project. Study the molecular basis of cancer, cystic fibrosis, heart disease, schizophrenia, and muscular dystrophy as you consider options for careers and graduate school.

$2750 stipend, housing and meals for 10-week program, May 29 - August 3, 2001

Applications due March 1, 2001

Contact Anthony LaMantia (919) 966-1290
Information and applications on the web
www.med.unc.edu/physiol/

University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill

First Impressions Salon
Tanning
Enjoy our weekly and monthly specials!
Hair & Nail Service
1716 West Market Street, Lewisburg, PA 17837
Phone: 322-4636
Call Today for Your Appointment. Cash and Checks only.

You Can't BEAT the BONGO!
Bongo Bongo Dip!
A Bubbly Hot, Cherry Blend of Spinach, Sour Cream, Water Chestnuts, Herbs & Cheddar Cheese. Served with Toasted Garlic Bread for dipping. ENOUGH TO SHARE!
$5.95
ONLY 2 AT
231 MAIN STREET DANVILLE 275-5710
17 North Market Street SELINGROVE 374-8841

Come Party at the ARIZONA CAFE
Outdoor Patio and Fireside Dining
Quesadillas Chicken Soft Tacos Monster Burritos
Enchiladas Seafood Steaks
Most Meals $9 - $13 No Charge Cards (Checks Accepted)
Bring in this Coupon for 1 FREE virgin margaritta with each etree purchased. BYOB
From Bucknell: Take Market St (Rt 45). Cross bridge and stay straight until ends. Turn Right. Exactly 4.0 mi on Left.
Open Tues-Thurs 11:30-9, Fri & Sat 11:30-10, Sun 11:30-8
Reservations Recommended

For Rent Fall Semester 2001

Off Campus - 4 miles
Outside Winfield
Completely furnished
5-7 bedrooms, 3 baths
Private parking
Safe

Call Joe
743-8308

UNIVERSITY OF PENNSYLVANIA
PENN SUMMER 2001
Philadelphia, PA • tel: 215.898.7326 • email: summer@sas.upenn.edu

Undergraduate and Graduate Courses

Programs for International Students

Programs for High School Students

Summer Abroad

Online Courses

- Hundreds of courses
- Beautiful historic campus
- Easily transferable credit
- College house amenities
- Social & cultural activities
- Convenient to New York & D.C.

www.upenn.edu/summer

Summer Session I May 22-June 29
Summer Session II July 2-August 10
12 Week Evening Session May 21-August 10

TOYOTA CALL IT START UP MONEY.

New
TOYOTA'S COLLEGE GRADUATE FINANCE PLAN INCLUDES $500 TO GET YOU GOING!

There's sure to be a Toyota that's just right for you....

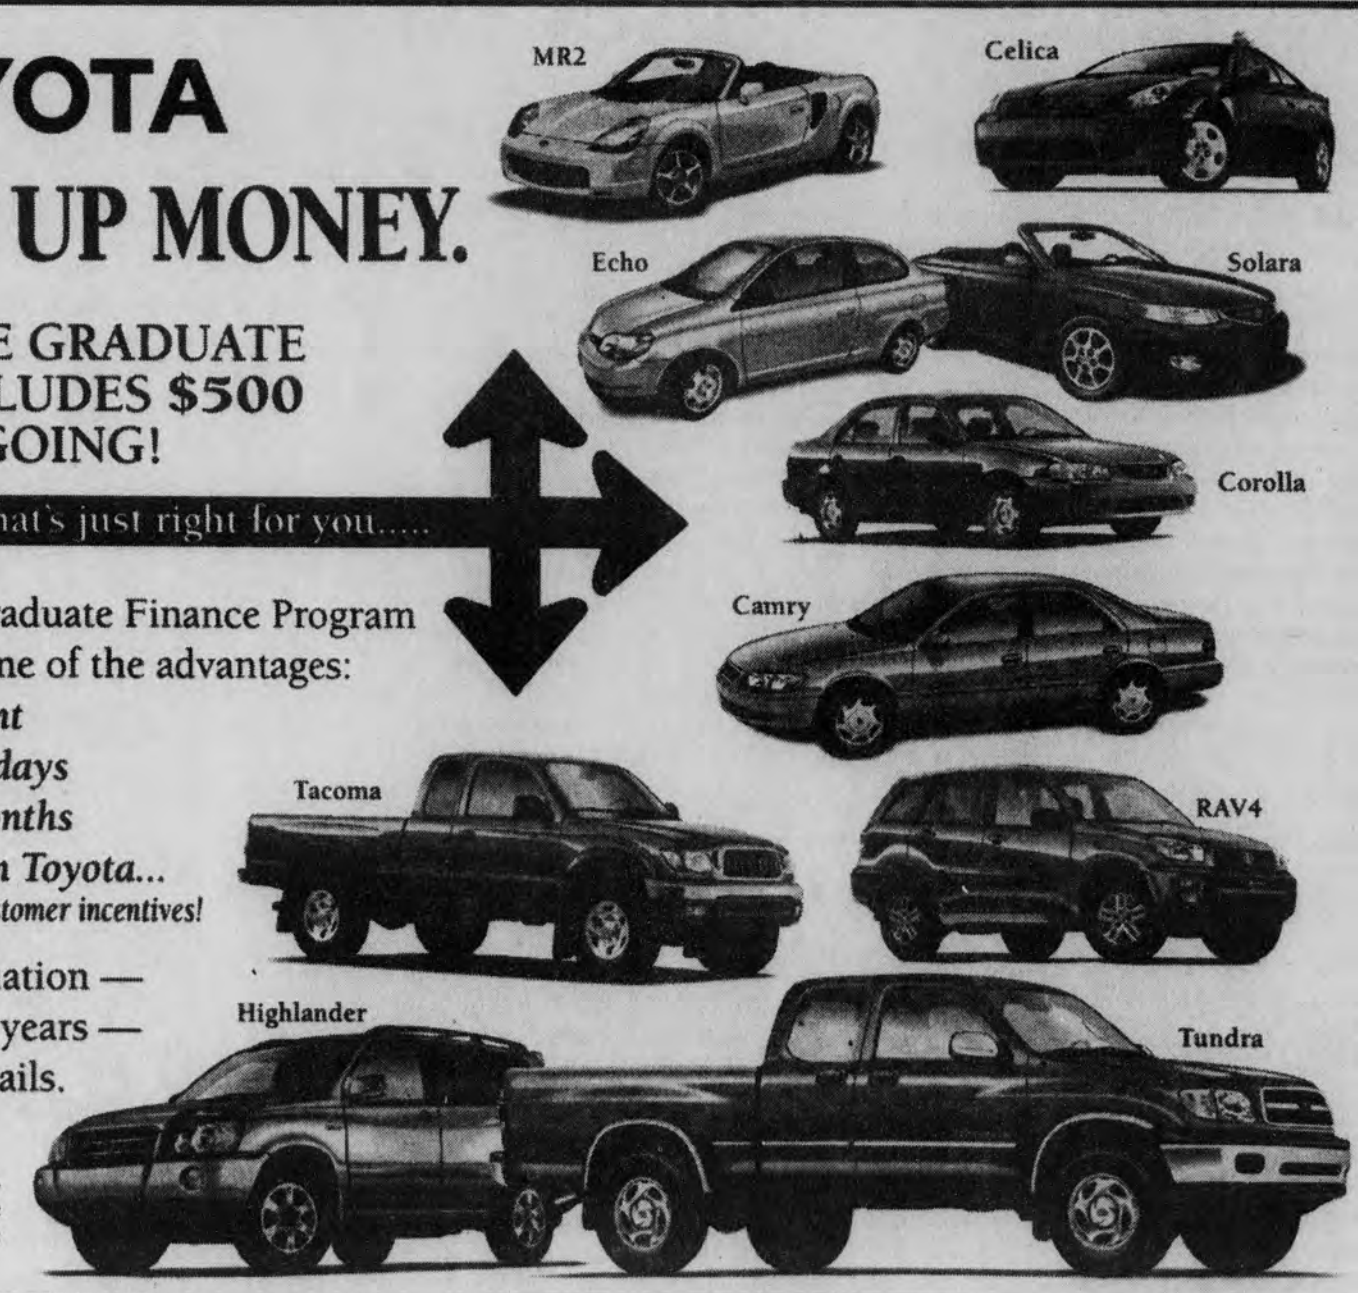

And now there's a Toyota College Graduate Finance Program that's just right, too. Here are some of the advantages:

- No Down Payment
- No Payment for 90 days
- Finance up to 72 months
- Get $500 Cash Back From Toyota... in addition to any other current Toyota customer incentives!

So if you're within 4 months of graduation — or if you graduated within the past 2 years — Ask your Toyota dealer for all the details.

www.gettoyota.com

Toyota College Graduate Finance Program available to qualified applicants thru Toyota Financial Services. Not all applicants will qualify. Some restrictions and limitations apply. Cash back offer subject to geographic limitations and offer expires 6/30/01. See dealer for details.

Trip-On:

Amsterdam Barcelona
Berlin Brussels
Dublin London Madrid
Paris Rome

UNBEATABLE PRICES!

PACKAGES INCLUDE:

- Student roundtrip airfare
- Accommodations
- Airport transfers and Travel Card*
- Camera, document organizer, discounts, guidebooks, maps and more

*Select Cities only

Council Travel
America's Leader in Student Travel
1-800-20Council
counciltravel.com

SCIENCE & TECHNOLOGY

Use your own words, please

University enlists services of TurnItIn.com to crack down on campus plagiarism

By JESSICA RYAN
Staff Writer

Recently, a new service was provided to the campus faculty, a service designed to reduce and prevent Internet-related plagiarism. As a result of this service, faculty members gained not only the ability to quickly detect plagiarism in the work of students, but they also gained easy access to the Internet sources plagiarized.

The service was founded at the University of California at Berkeley, according to Bud Hiller, ISR Web Access Consultant. Apparently, two students submitted identical papers to an instructor. In order to prevent students from taking such actions, the instructor created a database of sources, which continued to grow, and resulted in TurnItIn.com. Institutions then utilized the service, allowing for its continual expansion.

The Consortium of Liberal Arts Colleges, an organization, to which the University belongs offered this service to its members at a bargain price. Gene Spencer, the associate director of ISR on campus and a CLAC Board member, approached Bud Hiller to create a web site providing the faculty with instructions and information in regards to the service. In addition to creating the site, Bud became the ISR staff member who faculty could go to for answers to their questions.

The faculty may determine the legitimacy of a document through a service known as document source analysis. All that is necessary to determine the legitimacy is a block of text. The text is submitted to the web site, TurnItIn.com, and then compared to a database of a rapidly expanding amount of documents. Currently the system contains approximately 100,000 documents that may be utilized for comparison, as well as a web box, which searches the web for similar textual bodies.

Within 24 hours, a report is generated from the textual matches and made available to the faculty member. The report provides the exact web site and location of the information submitted, thus allowing the faculty member to compare the text. Upon the retrieval of such information, consequences may result if guilt is determined.

ISR Web Consultant Bud Hiller created a web site to aid University faculty in using TurnItIn.com, a service that analyzes student papers for plagiarism.

In the case of suspected plagiarism, the faculty member is required to submit the allegation, evidence, and circumstances to Elaine Garrett, associate dean of the College of Arts and Sciences. After reviewing the information, Dean Garrett meets with the student to discuss the situation, and then requests that the student submit a written report documenting the occurrences of the situation.

Upon completion of the meeting with the student, Garrett also drafts a report explaining the discussion that occurred during the meeting. From there, the Board of Review on Academic Responsibility meets to determine whether the allegation is correct, and the penalty, if guilt is determined.

"We take academic responsibility very seriously," Dean Garrett said. "We trust the students, but that trust is breached when students are academically irresponsible."

Not only can this service provided by TurnItIn.com quickly determine whether a student is being academically responsible, but it also sends the message to the students that they must be aware of their actions when writing. They must think twice prior to plagiarizing or paraphrasing, not only because of the moral implications, but because of the consequences as well.

DUNCAN From page B1.

So Krebs came up with something new—an auction site just for the University. A student selling a coffee table could simply offer it on the website, for example, while those looking to buy had the benefit of one-stop shopping. And so OhMyCollege.com was born.

Why that name? "I wanted it to be personalized, that is, a site just for your college," Krebs said. The University is not the only institution targeted for the new venture; Bloomsburg, Susquehanna, Lycoming, Penn State and Penn State are also on the list. Bucknell will be the first to go live, while the next four will open for business over the next few weeks. The Penn State section will open later this year.

Doug DiMedio '01 joined the team as co-founder in August of last year. DiMedio started work on a front-end for the site while Krebs concentrated on the "auction engine" and other behind-the-scenes components. "Doug has been a huge help, and our graphics and site design reflect all the time he put in," Krebs said.

Barring major last minute problems, OhMyCollege.com will be running when this issue goes to print today. "There are some little things left to do, but everything is working great right now," Krebs said.

"I've designed OhMyCollege in such a way where it will be easy to integrate more universities into the site," Krebs said. "I really like the idea of creating a network of colleges that will connect students and generate revenue at the same time."

Like many sites on the Internet, OhMyCollege.com will rely on advertising for much of its income. But Krebs and DiMedio plan to sell goods from local businesses, as well.

In addition to student auctions, local businesses can sell their wares on the site in a special section devoted to commercial auctions. This service will be free at first, but over time will move to a commission-based model.

Not only do the two student businessmen plan to make money sometime in the future, but Krebs plans to get course credit as well. The project is part of his self-designed "E-commerce" major. Duncan's interdisciplinary project mirrors his dual interest in business and computer science.

"I came in as a computer science major, but it didn't fit exactly what I wanted to do," said Krebs. So he signed up two advisors in the management department to oversee his unique project. Professor Santanen serves as a technical guide, while Professor Shrivastava helps Krebs to develop the business plan.

"Dean Midkiff has been instrumental in helping me design my major," Krebs added. Although Doug and Duncan are both considering job offers, they also want to see if OhMyCollege.com will be a success. If business is good this spring, the two have plans for a college tour this fall to bring the site to schools across the nation.

Chris Rivera—The Bucknellian

Duncan Krebs '01 takes concept of Ebay to new heights by creating OhMyCollege.com, an auction style web site to aid students in buying and selling dorm furnishings. Students from several local universities will have access to OhMyCollege.com.

Mad Cow Disease runs wild in Western Europe

By JOSIE CETTA
Science and Technology Editor

Mad Cow Disease is on the loose. According to The New York Times, it originated in England and has recently spread to Germany, France, Britain and Italy.

Eighty Britons have recently died from this deadly disease, and the question now is whether Mad Cow Disease will present a problem to us here in the United States.

Mad Cow Disease was first discovered in Britain during the mid-1980s. Symptoms of Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy (BSE), or Mad Cow Disease, include loss of balance, abandonment of habits and unpredictable behavior.

BSE, as described by The New York Times, is believed to have begun under the practice of feeding cows protein supplements from dead cows.

Consumption of the infected meat can result in the new variant Creutzfeldt-Jakob Disease (vCJD), a fatal, brain-eating illness.

Mad Cow Disease fits the profile for bringing about future hysteria, like AIDS and Polio have done in the past. Though little is known about the disease, it has gruesome effects and lacks a cure.

Most Americans are unaware of the disease, but it has not yet spread to New York & D.C. United States.

However, it is still being taken seriously. A federal session I may be placed on feeding animal meat to cows and sheep. The FDA has already banned blood donations by Americans who have spent 6 months, or more, in Britain.

Recently, it was decided that anyone who has lived in France for 10 years since 1980 should also be banned from donating blood.

Even though BSE is spreading through Western Europe, it was decided that a blanket blood donation ban over all European countries would only hurt the U.S. blood supply by reducing the number of its donors.

Tensions are currently flaring in Europe because of the weakening of the European Union. The economic activity of Germany, France, England and Italy is suffering due to the spread of Mad Cow Disease from England to much of Western Europe.

Western Europeans regret the transmission of Mad Cow Disease and blame each other, especially England, for the catastrophe.

As for America, we do not know what the future holds. While there is the possibility of Mad Cow Disease spreading to America, it is still being taken seriously. A federal session I

Some books are for sale. Some are not.

Some books are for sale. Some are not.

Some books are for sale. Some are not.

Some books are for sale. Some are not.

Some books are for sale. Some are not.

Some books are for sale. Some are not.

Some books are for sale. Some are not.

Some books are for sale. Some are not.

Some books are for sale. Some are not.

Some books are for sale. Some are not.

Some books are for sale. Some are not.

Some books are for sale. Some are not.

Some books are for sale. Some are not.

Some books are for sale. Some are not.

Some books are for sale. Some are not.

Some books are for sale. Some are not.

Some books are for sale. Some are not.

Some books are for sale. Some are not.

Some books are for sale. Some are not.

Some books are for sale. Some are not.

Some books are for sale. Some are not.

Some books are for sale. Some are not.

Some books are for sale. Some are not.

Some books are for sale. Some are not.

Some books are for sale. Some are not.

THE Bucknellian

The weekly campus newspaper of Bucknell University

http://www.orgs.bucknell.edu/bucknellian

February 9, 2001

inside

Part 2

Joined at the Head gets rave reviews.

See page B1.

Sports

Wrestling competes against Bloomsburg.

See page A8.

Tuition increased by 5.64 percent

By NATALIE CASP
News Editor

In its most recent meeting, the Board of Trustees voted to increase both tuition and faculty compensation. The increases, which cover the "value added" costs over the past five years, were approved after University President Steffen Rogers recommended the adjustments to the Board.

The 5.64 percent increase will raise the current price of tuition from $23,698 to $25,035, making the total cost of one year at the University, including room, board and other fees, $30,772. For the 2000-2001 academic year, the comprehensive fee was $29,435, $1,337 less.

"Decisions have been made that cost money," Rogers said. "We are going to explain the reasons for the increase in terms of 'value added' for the students and University at large."

The addition of 21 new professors, a dormitory, enhancement of health and career programs, study abroad programs and major technological advancements are among the improvements made by the University during the last five years.

The tuition increase also reflects the rising price in operating costs, as well as maintaining a competitive edge with schools of the University's caliber.

"5.64 percent is not out of line with what other universities have done, but it's higher than this University has seen in the recent past," Rogers said. "The increase is based on cumulative cost. The University tried to keep the cost down, but the incremental gap in rising expenditures has increased substantially."

Rogers made the recommendation to the Board after the Committee on Planning and Budget examined the University's expenses and suggested the increase to Rogers.

"The Board took a serious look at what they have been doing, what the University has been doing and which expenses have been increasing," Rogers said. "They agreed it was something we needed to do."

Students receiving financial aid from the University can expect to see an appropriate increase in aid.

"We will try to soften the blow for students coming to the University from middle-income families as much as possible," Rogers said. "The Board also approved a six percent increase in the funds allocated to pay faculty members."

"The salary increase is not straight across the board for all faculty members," Rogers said. "The money will be distributed appropriately, as determined by a merit system."

Rogers, the Board of Trustees and the faculty feel that this pay increase is necessary in order to assert competition with other universities similar to Bucknell.

"We've fallen behind and we're not as competitive in faculty salaries as many other selective institutions," Rogers said. "This six percent increase should keep us from falling further behind and maybe even provide us with a slight gain for 2001-2002."

New borough manager looks to make changes

By BRIAN WATSON
Senior Editor

Town-gown relations between the University and the Lewisburg community have undergone some strenuous periods in the past few years, but new Borough Manager David Clouser looks to change this sometimes-strained partnership.

Clouser succeeded Nada Grey on Jan. 1 after a successful stint as manager of the Codorus Township in York County, Pa. The Borough Council, which sets policy for the Lewisburg community, opted not to renew Grey's contract at the end of last year.

"We felt we needed a change. Lewisburg is a very diverse community, and we wanted to make sure that all facets of the community were being served," said Borough Council member Judith Wagner. "[Clouser] is a person who can deal with all aspects of our community. He's a great communicator who really knows how to deal with different people."

Clouser was selected through a state-wide search, and Wagner said he clearly stood out as the best candidate. "He brings a lot of knowledge and fits right in," Wagner said. "We're very pleased to have someone of his caliber."

Lewisburg attracted Clouser, a former lecturer in Australia, because of the University connection. With both teaching and public administration experience, Clouser is in a unique position to help remedy some of the more pressing problems between students and residents.

One of Clouser's top priorities was to meet with the Responsible Housing Committee to address several problems plaguing the off-campus student population. He said the committee is determined to "find a reasonable compromise between the students' needs and the borough's needs."

The new borough manager acknowledges the University's desire to move all students back on campus but feels that they should have the option of living off-campus. "Part of the experience [of living in a small college town]

Prague Call—The Bucknellian

New Borough Manager David Clouser looks to change town-gown relations.

House Party Weekend changed

IFC and Panhellenic Council move spring weekend after Passover conflict

By REBECCA ROWLAND
Editor-in-Chief

Due to an error in scheduling, the date of House Party Weekend—originally April 6-7—has been changed to March 30-31. The original weekend fell on the first night of Passover, a holy day in the Jewish religion.

The Calendar Committee incorrectly recommended the original date to the Panhellenic and Interfraternity Councils, believing that Passover started Sunday, not Saturday at sundown as is the custom for all Jewish holidays. The committee was unaware of their mistake until they received several emails and phone calls from students and parents informing them of their oversight.

"Once the Office of the Dean of Students was advised of the conflict, we started open dialogue with IFC and Panhellenic leaders to determine if there were any recommendations they would want to make about moving the date," Dean of Fraternity and Sorority Affairs Roy Baker said.

An emergency joint meeting of both councils was held Thursday, Feb. 4, at which time members of Panhel and IFC met with Baker to discuss alternatives.

"Several suggestions were handed out at the meeting including simply closing House Party at sundown Saturday evening to honor the holiday, but we thought that a more appropriate measure would be to move the event to another weekend altogether," Panhel President Katie Richardson '02 said.

While every group involved in planning House Party fully understood the importance of rescheduling the event, students and other members of the campus community are left wondering why it ever happened in the first place.

"It says a lot that not one person on the committee knew when Passover began," Kappa Delta Rho President Adam Levine '02 said. "An event of this popularity would never have been scheduled for Easter weekend."

Levine was one of many students who contacted Baker and Dean of Students Richard Ferraro when the date of the weekend was announced. Because of his position on the IFC, Levine was also able to speak at the Feb. 4 emergency meeting.

Levine was also one of several who spoke to Rabbi Serena Fujita.

"I realized the conflict several weeks ago when we returned from winter break. However it was when parents began to call me that I brought it up to the Dean of Students," Rabbi Fujita said. "Even though students are not required to attend, it is an event that a majority of students look forward to and therefore would fall under the category of a university event."

"Jewish students go home for Passover the same as Christian students go home for Easter."

Levine offered by way of explanation. "It is unfortunate that students might have had to choose between observing their religion and attending House Party."

The only drawbacks to moving House Party into March were the contracts many fraternities had made with hands booked for the event. The April 6-7 date was set back in August in order to allow enough time to book talent far in advance. However, this potential glitch did not impact the committee's decisions.

"Despite the substantial reworking of plans required," Interim Dean of Students Charles Pollock wrote in an all-campus email, "the two councils have agreed to move House Party."

All organizations involved are pleased with the end result as it came quickly and met every requirement.

"I feel that moving the date of House Party was obviously the correct solution to this oversight... we will not have similar problems in the future," IFC President Jarrod Gunther '02 said.

"I think the fact that the administration reacted so quickly was a true indication that Bucknell is trying its best to be sensitive to the needs of minority communities," Rabbi Fujita said. "I am most impressed with the IFC and the Panhellenic Council for meeting with Dean Baker and taking this issue under consideration at such a late date. Their support for the Jewish community at Bucknell is important and appreciated."

The sketches above represent the proposed design of the Recreation and Athletic Center and the O'Leary Psychology and Geology Building. Budgets have been increased to meet the needs of rising construction costs. Fiscal adjustments were made to prevent major downsizing of the project.

Committee continues Provost/VPAA search

By NATALIE CASP
News Editor

For over a decade, the University has operated without a chief deputy to the President. A search committee will soon fill this void, as they are currently evaluating candidates for the University's position of Provost/VPAA (VPAA).

The committee is sifting through applications and working with an outside consulting firm to select candidates for off-site interviews. The committee is expected to make its final recommendation to University President Steffen Rogers in mid-March.

As the former provost and vice president for academic affairs at Clemson University, President Rogers has a firm grasp on the working relationship between the provost/VPAA and the university's president.

"The Provost/VPAA is clearly someone who I will talk to daily in terms of what's going on internally at the University," Rogers said. "The Provost will have more direct contact with deans, departmental chairs and the faculty than I am able to have. This person will be a chief advisor to me and I hope to play the same role for them."

The committee employed Korn/Ferry International, a consulting firm that worked with the trustee search committee that ultimately appointed Steffen Rogers as the University's 15th president. R. William Funk, managing director of Korn/Ferry International's education and not-for-profit practice, has served as the principle liaison to the committee.

The committee has received several nominations from Korn/Ferry along with a forewarning that several other high-end institutions are conducting similar searches this year.

Rogers, too, acknowledged the competition. "We've received an excellent response to our advertisement. Bucknell is an attractive university—applicants know the name and the academic quality," Rogers said. "I had the same reaction to the University when I was applying."

"Nationally, there's not a huge list of people qualified to be the Provost/VPAA of Bucknell," said Chairperson of the search committee Deborah A. Abowitz, associate professor of sociology and anthropology. "We're pleased to have over 60 candidates."

The committee created an advertisement for the position and a job description, both of which appeared in magazines beginning as early as Nov. 17. The advertisement appeared in several publications, including The Chronicle of Higher Education, Black Issues in Higher Education and Hispanic Outlook.

"We hoped that placing the ad in Black Issues and Hispanic Outlook would help build a more diverse pool of candidates," Abowitz said. "Diversity is one of the things we're taking into account in the search, but ultimately we will choose the best candidate for the position."

This month, the committee anticipates narrowing down the pool of applicants before contacting selected candidates for off-site interviews.

"The process occurs in several stages," Abowitz said. "Ideally, we'll invite eight to 10 candidates who we think stand out and are well qualified for preliminary interviews off campus."

These interviews occur off-campus due to the secretive nature of the search. "Most often the candidates are sitting administrators at other universities and need to keep their candidacy confidential. Academia is a small world," Abowitz said. "The off-site interview is also important because it gives the candidate a chance to ask questions about the University and our life here. It's an evaluation on both sides."

The committee will continue to narrow down the pool of applicants after the off-site interviews.

See PROVOST, page A2.

Candidates should possess the following qualifications:

- an earned doctorate, earned tenure, and an exceptional record of accomplishment in teaching and scholarship;
- demonstrated academic leadership and significant administrative experience;
- a strong commitment to excellence in undergraduate education;
- appreciation for the curricular opportunities afforded by the University's distinctive commitment to excellence in the liberal arts and in professional programs in engineering, management, education, and music;
- the capacity and desire to play a leading role in curricular innovation and other strategic initiatives of the University;
- the ability to build consensus and engage in collegial and constructive problem-solving with multiple constituencies of the University.

Bucknell University encourages applications from women and members of minority groups (EEO/AA).

Courtesy of the search committee

Public Safety Log

January 31, 2001

INFORMATION — While on routine patrol, Public Safety observed an illegally parked student vehicle with a stolen decal. The incident is under investigation.

MEDICAL ASSIST — Public Safety responded to the biology building for the report of an ill student. Public Safety transported the student to Student Health Services for treatment.

INFORMATION / FIRE IN SMOKER STATION — Public Safety responded to Dana Engineering Building for the report of a fire in the smoker station. The fire was extinguished and there was no damage to the building.

February 1, 2001

INFORMATION / VEHICLE DAMAGE — Public Safety responded to Trax Lot for the report that a falling tree limb struck a parked vehicle. Damage was minor and the owner of the vehicle was notified.

HARASSMENT BY COMMUNICATION — A student reported to Public Safety of having received harassing computer messages. The incident is under investigation.

INFORMATION / MISSING KEYS — A student reported to Public Safety that keys left in an unlocked Tower House room were missing. The incident is under investigation.

MEDICAL ASSIST — Public Safety responded to Coleman Hall for the report of an unconscious individual. The student was transported by ambulance to Evangelical Community Hospital Emergency Room for treatment and later returned to campus.

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF / VANDALISM — A student reported to Public Safety that his car was damaged while parked in the Farm Lot. East Buffalo Township Police Department notified. The incident is under investigation.

INFORMATION / ALLEGED ACT 64 VIOLATION — Public Safety responded to the New Residence Hall for the report of the odor of marijuana. Upon investigation, the incident was determined to be unfounded.

February 2, 2001

INFORMATION / VEHICLE DAMAGE — Public Safety responded to the Farm Lot for the report of damage to a vehicle. The employee requested no police involvement at this time.

INFORMATION / LOST-STOLEN VEHICLE LICENSE PLATE(S) — A student reported to Public Safety that his front and rear license plates were missing from his vehicle which was parked in the Bucknell West lot. East Buffalo Township Police Department was notified. The incident is under investigation.

INFORMATION / SUSPICIOUS INCIDENT — A student reported that an unknown male visitor requested assistance from a female student to adjust his jogging clothing at the Fieldhouse. The student felt uncomfortable with the request and spoke with Public Safety. The incident is under investigation.

February 3, 2001

DISORDERLY CONDUCT / FRATERNITY VIOLATIONS/SUSPENSION — Public Safety responded to Kappa Sigma Fraternity for the report from a university official that an unauthorized party was in progress. Public Safety removed and disposed of numerous alcohol containers, removed one highway stop sign, a Walmart shopping cart and two beer kegs with one tap. The Fraternity was placed on immediate suspension pending an investigation. University charges are pending.

MISSING PERSONAL PROPERTY — A student notified Public Safety that her coat was missing from the Sigma Chi Fraternity. East Buffalo Township Police Department was notified and the incident is under investigation.

INFORMATION / WATER LEAK — Public Safety responded to Rooke Biology for the report of a water spill causing a leak through the ceiling of the room below. The area was checked for further damage and the water cleaned up.

INFORMATION / SMOKE ALARM ACTIVATION/SMOKE CONDITION — Public Safety responded to Delta Upsilon Fraternity for a fire alarm activation caused by the ignition of a fire in the fire place. The fire was extinguished and house officers were advised to have the chimney cleaned and checked.

INFORMATION — Public Safety responded to Larson Hall for the report of an unauthorized party. Upon investigation, the report was determined to be unfounded. The occupants of the room were advised to lower the volume of the music.

February 4, 2001

UNDERAGE DRINKING / FAILURE TO COMPLY — While on routine patrol, Public Safety stopped an intoxicated female student at Kappa Delta Rho Fraternity carrying a can of beer. The student refused to give Public Safety or the police positive identification. The female was transported by East Buffalo Township Police Department to the District Magistrate office where she provided positive ID, as a BU student, and admitted having consumed alcohol while under the age of 21 years. Criminal charges pending. University citations issued.

TAMPERING WITH FIRE EQUIPMENT — Public Safety responded to a fire alarm at Swartz Hall and found that unknown person(s) did discharge a fire extinguisher for no apparent reason. The incident is under investigation.

INFORMATION — While on routine patrol on Walker St., Public Safety observed a male visitor take something from under his clothing and throw it away. The individual fled after observing Public Safety and was later located at Kress Hall. The Lewisburg Police Department responded and spoke with the visitor who was in possession of eggs and beer which were hidden under his clothing. The male admitted to having supplied eggs which were thrown at the 7th St. House. The Lewisburg Police Department charged the Lycoming College student with public drunkenness, underage drinking, and criminal mischief and released the male to the custody of his parents.

DISORDERLY CONDUCT — Public Safety responded to the report of a disturbance at Smith Hall and discovered that a student admitted to tearing down wall postings and had 15 cans of beer in his room, although under the age of 21 years. Citations were issued.

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF — A student reported to Public Safety that windows of two cars parked in the Sigma Alpha Mu Fraternity lot had been broken by unknown person(s). The Lewisburg Police Department was notified. The incident is under investigation.

February 5, 2001

RECOVERED PROPERTY — While on routine patrol, Public Safety found a ski pole in the Moore Avenue parking lot. The item was removed to Public Safety for storage until the owner is located.

MEDICAL ASSIST — Public Safety responded to Sigma Phi Epsilon for the report of a student whose hand was injured in a sledding accident. Student Health Services transported the student to Evangelical Community Hospital Emergency room for treatment and later returned to campus.

THEFT — A student reported to Public Safety that unknown person(s) had removed personal clothing from a dryer at the Vedder Hall laundry room. The incident is under investigation.

PROVOST From page A1.

views and then arrange with Rogers to bring the finalists to campus. "Beginning in late February, we hope to have candidates to campus who we think would be a good fit for Bucknell. Visits will last about two days for each candidate so that they can meet with President Rogers and other appropriate officials," Abowitz said. "We will also have an open forum for the campus community to meet the candidates and ask questions."

After the finalists visit the University, the committee will seek feedback from the campus on each candidate before making recommendations to Rogers.

"The committee members will share with Rogers their perspectives of each candidate's relative strengths and weaknesses. We have been asked to present President Rogers with at least three acceptable candidates in the form of an unranked list," Abowitz said. "President Rogers makes the final decision."

If all goes according to the committee's plan, the University will fill the first of the four available vice presidential positions by the end of March.

Four of the faculty members are elected from within their divisions and three are appointed by President Rogers, one of whom must be untenured.

In addition, Rogers appointed a member of the administration to serve on the committee and another to work with the committee and provide administrative support.

In addition to Abowitz, the committee includes six faculty members: Pam Gorkin, mathematics; Jeff Evans, civil engineering; Janet Jones, classics; John Miller, management; Mike Prince, chemical engineering; and Alison Draper, chemistry. Two administrators—Mitch Chernin, special assistant to the president and Lois Huffines, associate vice president for academic affairs—also serve on the committee.

bucknellian@bucknell.edu

A-Phi-O poster sparks controversy

By LAURA DAY
News Editor

Traditionally, the Alpha Phi Omega recruitment process has been a positive system intended to encourage students to join the University's only co-ed service fraternity. During this semester's advertising for the fraternity's interest meetings, their typically encouraging messages aroused complaints from certain groups on campus after the fraternity distributed a poster that was construed as offensive.

Four different poster designs were hung around campus publicizing the fraternity's interest meetings for their spring recruitment. Members of the University community quite questioned one poster.

The poster pictures a female symbol, a male symbol and a question mark.

"The poster was meant to be humorous and was not meant for people who are questioning gender identity," Alpha Phi Omega President Debra Lowry '02 said.

"We realize now that the poster could obviously be misinterpreted and we regret not realizing it before," Lowry said. "We would never intentionally offend or judge people."

Lowry did not receive a direct complaint about the poster. Some students contacted University Chaplain Ian Oliver, advisor to Alpha Phi Omega, with grievances.

"People found out I was the advisor and I received just a couple complaints," Oliver said.

The comments were then passed to the executive board of the fraternity, which decided to write the campus an apology email.

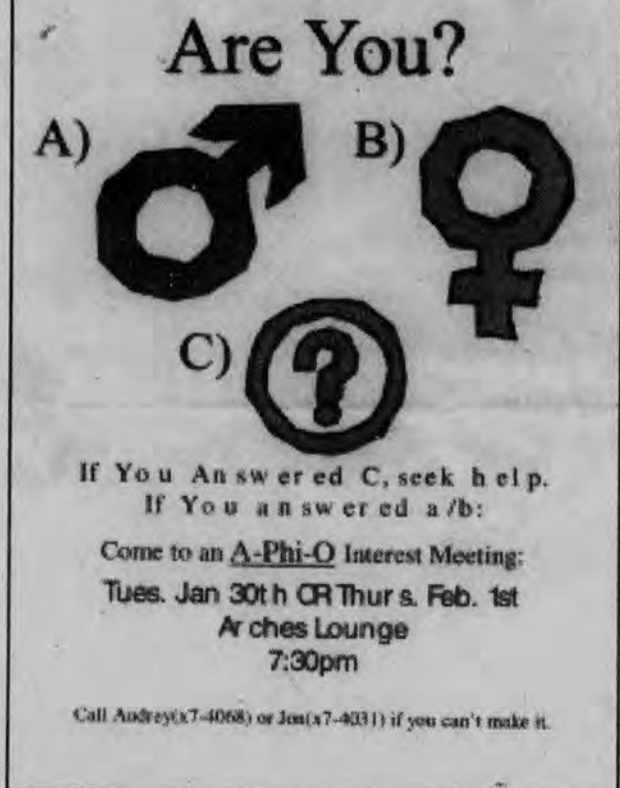

"We understand that although it was not intentional, [the poster] can be interpreted as offensive," Oliver said. "The officers needed to respond to the community and apologize."

The fraternity made efforts to remove the offending posters from campus bulletin boards.

Alpha Phi Omega received many responses to their apology, including a letter from the LGB&T advisor saying it was a "thoughtful apology."

Lowry, who has only been president for two weeks, takes pride in the organization.

"We have a deeper relationship between all of us

Alpha Phi Omega apologizes to the campus community after posting an advertisement that certain factions found objectionable. The posters were removed.

because we're striving towards a common goal of service to others," Lowry said.

Although the fraternity has a pledge period, a Big-Little Week and other traditions, Alpha Phi Omega is not involved in Greek Life on campus.

"It is a national co-ed service fraternity whose cardinal principle is helping and serving others," Lowry said.

The fraternity members are required to complete 15 hours of service as well as five hours of leadership and fellowship responsibilities each semester. With almost 100 members, they serve the campus, community, chapter and country.

"It is an organization which reflects good ideas and positive morals," Lowry said.

Kappa Sigma temporarily suspended

Chris Rivera—The Bucknellian

Kappa Sigma was placed under temporary suspension, pending a decision by the Community Judicial Board.

By RACHEL LASKOW
News Layout Editor

After two recent alcohol related incidents, Kappa Sigma has temporarily been placed under suspension. The suspension is in effect until the Community Judicial Board makes a final decision about the case.

According to a campus email sent by Dean of Students Richard Ferraro, on Thursday, Jan. 25, members of Kappa Sigma celebrated one of their brother's twenty-first birthdays in a legal, but dangerous practice. The student was admitted to the hospital at 2:30 a.m. with a blood alcohol level of .41.

"As soon as they understood that their friend was in trouble they also arranged to have him brought promptly to the hospital," Ferraro said. "But naturally, it would have been much better if responsibility had been exercised much earlier in the night, so that a student's life would not have been put into jeopardy in the first place. We almost lost one of our students."

The Dean of Students Office followed up on the incident immediately after it occurred. They took numerous actions including parental consultations, required meetings, mandatory counseling and a formal request to the tavern keeper to cease selling shots of liquor to students.

Also, the chapter's new member education program and class have been suspended and the chapter's new member class may not visit the chapter house for any reason or have any contact with the chapter.

The chapter may not be represented on the Interfraternity Council's Executive Board or vote at Interfraternity Council meetings.

BOROUGH From page A1.

is intermingling with the community," Clouser said. "I think it's a bit limiting if everyone is forced to stay in the same environment."

But he also realizes that with a student population comes inevitable conflict with borough residents. "There is an aging population in the borough, so right away there's a potential problem because of age difference," Clouser said. "I think this situation can be settled if each group simply realizes the other's benefits."

While Clouser does not have direct oversight over the Lewisburg Police Department, he does hope that only a reasonable level of pressure be put on downtown students.

"Many students are beginning to feel a new sense of freedom, an 'away from home' mentality," Clouser said. "We're looking to moderate that—not contain it entirely."

Clouser has met with several area landlords, who brought up the common problem of overcrowding and ordinance problems, many of which arise due to the law forbidding more than three unrelated people from occupying a house together. He plans to work with both sides to help create a "win-win" situation. He also plans to fix the current downtown parking problems and because the action taken, while very dangerous, was legal," Ferraro said.

Although the heavy drinking at the tavern did not cause the temporary suspension, on Friday, Feb. 2 Kappa Sigma held an unregistered party, despite the restriction that had been placed on them.

"Less than a week after the near-death event, the brothers chose to have an unauthorized party that inevitably triggered a conduct action," Ferraro said. "[The party] was very dangerous given the lack of safeguards for moderation, such as segregated drinking areas, wrist bands, student and campus security monitoring teams, ban on kegs and the provision of alternative non-alcoholic beverages."

Former Kappa Sigma President Michael Staffaroni '01 and Assistant Dean of Students Roy Baker would not comment on the issue.

While waiting for the completion of the campus judicial proceedings, Kappa Sigma may not hold chapter meetings without prior permission, host or schedule social events of any kind, schedule ritual ceremonies or participate in social events as a chapter.

Also, the chapter's new member education program and class have been suspended and the chapter's new member class may not visit the chapter house for any reason or have any contact with the chapter.

The chapter may not be represented on the Interfraternity Council's Executive Board or vote at Interfraternity Council meetings.

World Briefs

Sharon looking to unite Israel

TEL AVIV, Israel — Israel's designate prime minister Ariel Sharon is heading into office trying to unite his country and its fractious parliament after his landslide election victory.

The Likud party leader swept into power with the largest margin ever in Israeli politics but he needs to attract members of the defeated Labor Party to his administration if he is to avoid relying on a minority government made up of extreme right wing and religious groups.

But it is unclear which members of the Labor Party — a party in disarray and leaderless after the election — will join Sharon.

Armed man shot outside of White House gate

WASHINGTON (CNN) — A 47-year-old man waving a gun outside the southwest gate of the White House was shot Wednesday morning by the Secret Service after refusing to surrender the weapon, officials said.

Eyewitnesses said the man fired two or three shots, jumped into some nearby bushes and remained there for about 15 minutes as agents tried to get him to put down his gun.

He was then shot in the leg by a Secret Service agent at 11:36 a.m.

Iranian judges reject appeal of 10 convicted Jews

TEHRAN, Iran (AP) — Three judges rejected the appeal of 10 Iranian Jews convicted of spying for Israel, state-run Tehran radio reported Wednesday.

The public prosecutor's office in Tehran said the judges who studied the appeal had decided against it. No reason was given.

The ruling means the Jews, who were convicted last year in the southern city of Shiraz, have no further appeal.

Wahid supporters target opposition offices

SURABAYA, Indonesia — Supporters of Indonesia's President Abdurrahman Wahid have torched the headquarters of the opposition Golkar party in Surabaya, the country's second largest city.

The attacks came as the military joined other key power brokers in rejecting calls for early impeachment hearings.

Earlier city police fired warning shots and tear gas as the crowd marched on the Golkar offices but they failed to stop the protesters from returning and setting the building ablaze, The Jakarta Post reported.

Officials await tests on possible Ebola victim

HAMILTON, Ontario — Health officials are awaiting test results to determine if a woman who traveled to Canada from Africa is ill with the Ebola virus.

Doctors at Henderson Hospital have run a complete battery of tests on the woman, including tests for other hemorrhagic fevers, but said in a news conference they may never find out from what disease the woman is suffering.

NASA's Destiny set for launch

CAPE CANAVERAL, Florida — After weeks of delay, NASA's $1.4 billion laboratory Destiny is set for launch at sundown Wednesday.

The Destiny laboratory will form a scientific cornerstone of the international space station. "We have a big and challenging mission ahead of us. We are looking forward to getting started on it," said space shuttle Atlantis commander Ken Cockrell.

Atlantis is scheduled to lift off at 6:11 p.m. EST, carrying the lab, the fourth permanent and habitable module of space station Alpha.

Groundhog is lousy forecaster

ASHEVILLE, North Carolina (AP) — Punxsutawney Phil is a lousy prognosticator, according to government statistics.

Every February 2 since 1887, watchers have checked to see if Phil could see his shadow, which would indicate six more weeks of winter. But his predictions since 1988 haven't matched up to national temperatures, meteorologists at the National Climatic Data Center concluded.

Haiti's Aristide sworn in for second term

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti (AP) — Jean-Bertrand Aristide was sworn in Wednesday for a second term as Haiti's president, promising to bring change to a country devastated by poverty and facing deep political divisions.

Aristide, a former Roman Catholic priest, took the oath of office in front of Parliament while holding his hand on a Bible. Hundreds of supporters filled the streets outside the Legislative Palace, even though they had no view of the proceedings inside.

Lawmakers: Consumers lose in airline mergers?

WASHINGTON (CNN) — A slate of proposed airline mergers could diminish competition and harm consumers, federal lawmakers and aviation officials said Wednesday.

"I worry that these acquisitions and these mergers can only spell higher costs for the consumer and in the long run problems for the employees of these companies," United States Sen. Arlen Specter, R-Pennsylvania, said during a Senate hearing on airline consolidation.

CIA: bin Laden big threat

WASHINGTON (AP) — The biggest threat to U.S. national security is the Muslim extremist network of Osama bin Laden, the exiled Saudi who has declared holy war on America, CIA chief George Tenet told Congress on Wednesday.

In a detailed assessment of global threats facing the United States, Tenet told the Senate Intelligence Committee that international terrorism is becoming increasingly difficult to combat.

Compiled by Laura Day,
courtesy of cnn.com

Independents discuss campus alternatives

By JIM LEAHY
Managing Editor

What do a library café, vertical residential colleges and a campus pub have to do with the University on a quiet Monday night?

Simple—these were some of the issues discussed during a town hall meeting Monday between Dean of Students Richard Ferraro, various administrators and independent students.

Many University students join the Greek system after their first year. However, almost half of the student body remains independent from fraternities and sororities. Addressing the concern that non-Greek students lack as many options, the Task Force on Residential Life and the Dean of Students Office have been looking into ways to enhance the lives of independents at the University.

Although there were few students at the meeting, there was a large number of administrators in attendance. Ferraro ran the meeting and engaged in an active discussion with all in attendance.

One of the most frequent complaints concerned Uptown's operating hours; students want it to stay open longer so they have a place to play pool, eat snacks and hang out with friends.

According to the student attendees, uphill battles and hangovers are also a desired option. One of the most popular ideas generat-

The Task Force and the Office of the Deans of Students presented many ideas, ranging from residential life to social options and alcohol to academic alternatives on campus.

Assistant Dean of Students Kari Conrad explained the idea behind Uptown and its current role in the social scene on campus. Uptown, the University's non-alcoholic venue, has failed to draw the student praise the administration had predicted. Although some big-name bands like Jimmie's Chicken Shack and SR-71 have brought large crowds, students do not routinely include Uptown in their weekend plans.

One of the most frequent complaints concerned Uptown's operating hours; students want it to stay open longer so they have a place to play pool, eat snacks and hang out with friends.

According to the student attendees, uphill battles and hangovers are also a desired option. One of the most popular ideas generated at the meeting was a café in the library where students could go for a cup of coffee or a bite to eat without walking downhill.

But not only non-alcoholic options were discussed. As part of President Rogers' ten-year plan that he outlined during his inauguration speech, there was a mention of moving all students back to on-campus housing. This sparked the questions at length centering on the school's propensity towards alcohol. While many of the students in attendance did not voice concerns, a general desire for moderation and maturity was palpable. Ferraro stressed drinking in moderation where there could be a partnership between the University and the student body.

The Residential College program is a popular option for first year students and some sophomores.

The University is looking into creating a four-year program, known as "vertical" residential colleges, which would give the students an alternative social outlet while remaining independent of fraternities and sororities.

Student reaction to the meeting was largely positive. "Last night's forum was a productive discussion. I enjoyed the ability to voice my opinions to the administration," Monica Montgomery '01 said. "However, I am skeptical because nothing will get done for a while."

This is a learning process for independent students as well as the administration. Both sides are showing a willingness to communicate and cooperate.

idea of a campus pub.

Most attendees were optimistic about the pub but understood that Pennsylvania state laws prohibiting institutions from obtaining liquor licenses present an enormous and almost insurmountable obstacle.

Ferraro spoke and answered questions at length centering on the school's propensity towards alcohol. While many of the students in attendance did not voice concerns, a general desire for moderation and maturity was palpable. Ferraro stressed drinking in moderation where there could be a partnership between the University and the student body.

Poem Project debuts

By BROOKE REA
Sports Editor

When Robert Pinsky, the United States' 39th Poet Laureate, read and spoke at the University in October, he expressed to the audience his passion for poetry as a vocal art.

"If a poem is written well," he said, "it was written with the poet's voice and for a voice."

Pinsky's emphasis on the reading aloud of poetry led to his Favorite Poem Project, a national initiative started in 1997 to celebrate Americans giving voice to their favorite poems.

Favorite poem readings, in which members of a community come together to share their favorite poems in a public reading, have since taken place across the country.

Inspired by Pinsky's passion for the project, a group of Bucknell students and Lewisburg residents came together to form the first-ever local community favorite poem project, sponsored by the Stadler Center for Poetry.

The project invites submissions from anyone living, working or going to school in the Lewisburg area and hopes to attract a diverse array of participants.

The project aims to celebrate the importance of poetry for the average American; therefore it is not aimed only at literary scholars and writers or avid readers of poetry. The project is most successful when submissions come from a broad sampling of the community population, resulting in a collection of poetry representative of that town's interests and backgrounds. All ages, personalities, and professions are encouraged to participate.

"The favorite poem project is a wonderful idea," Associate Professor of English Sandra Morris said. "We too often think of poetry as just something academic that we study, and we forget that poetry survives because it touches something very basic to people's lives and hearts."

In compliance with rules created for the national project, submissions for the project consist of two parts: the favorite poem and the accompanying personal narrative. The poem can be of any length and style, but it must be a previously published poem.

"I feel sure that kindred spirits will be found throughout the community through this event, as they were throughout the U.S. when Pinsky organized the national project," DeKlerk said.

Morris agrees that the project promises to strengthen the local community. "As Audre Lorde has emphasized, 'Poetry is not a luxury,' she said. "Its beauty and feeling put us in contact with qualities that individuals and cultures desperately need."

Submissions must include name, address, phone number, and occupation/age of the entrant and can be sent via e-mail to favepoem@hotmail.com.

Mail submissions may be sent to: Mike Carlin, Stadler Center for Poetry, Bucknell Hall, Bucknell University, Lewisburg PA 17837.

Submissions will be accepted until March 15, 2001.

Questions may be directed to the above e-mail address, or to Brooke Rea at 577-4738.

Cupid's working overtime at Rusty's
Celebrate with your sweetheart
February 13 - 17
Special Cupid's Menu Wed. - Sat. eve

- Mustard Crusted Rack of Lamb
- Grilled Quail w/ Raspberry Glaze
- Stuffed Flounder w/ Imperial Sauce
- Sweetheart Strain for Two

Don't forget — BRUNCH
Sunday 11 a.m. - 3 p.m.
With made-to-order waffles & omelettes

158. 6th St. Lewisburg, PA 17837
577-4738

Don't make us work like dogs.

Write for news.
Email Laura (lday@) or
Natalie (casp@).

Happy Birthday Chief Pete!
—The Bucknellian staff

Come Party at the:

ARIZONA CAFE

Outdoor Patio and Fireside Dining

Quesadillas Enchiladas
Chicken Soft Tacos Seafood
Monster Burritos Steaks

Most Meals $9 - $13 No Charge Cards (Checks Accepted)

Bring in this Coupon for 1 FREE virgin margarita with each etree purchased. BYOB

From Bucknell: Take Market St (Rt 45) Cross bridge and stay straight until ends. Turn Right. Exactly 4.0 mi on Left.

Open Tues-Thurs 11:30-9, Fri & Sat 11:30-10, Sun 11:30-8
Reservations Recommended

Tuesday is Bucknell Night at Imperial Lanes

Tuesday Nights
2 hour Special for $20
9:30 - 11:30 only

Rent-a-lane for up to 6 people
Call 742-9211 to Schedule
Private Parties
Sorority/Fraternity/Date Parties

Enjoy Rock-n-Bowl with Lane Quake Sound!
Leagues and Open Bowling Available

RETIREMENT INSURANCE MUTUAL FUNDS TRUST SERVICES TUITION FINANCING

It's a simple calculation:

TIAA-CREF's low expenses mean more money working for you.

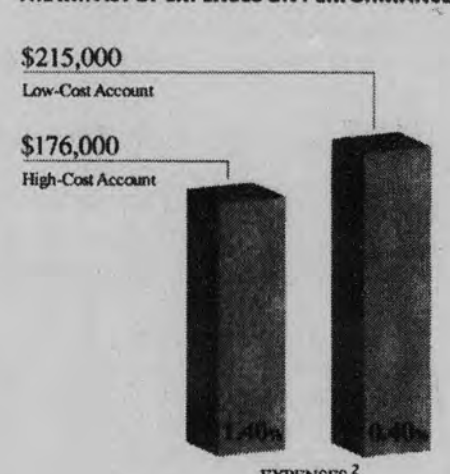

The equation is easy. Lower expenses in managing a fund can equal better performance.

How much? Just take a look at the chart. Then call us. We'll send you a free, easy-to-use expense calculator so you can see for yourself that no matter what your investment, you'll benefit from low expenses. And CREF variable annuity expenses range from just 0.28% to 0.34%.

For decades, we've been committed to low expenses, superior customer service and strong performance.

Add it all up and you'll find that selecting your retirement provider is an easy decision: TIAA-CREF.

THE IMPACT OF EXPENSES ON PERFORMANCE

Total accumulations after 20 years based on initial investment of $50,000 and hypothetical annual returns of 8%. Total returns and principal value of investments will fluctuate, and yield may vary. The chart above is presented for illustrative purposes only and does not reflect actual performance, or predict future results, of any TIAA-CREF account, or reflect taxes.

Ensuring the future for those who shape it.™

1.800.842.2776

www.tiaa-cref.org

For more complete information on our securities products, call 1.800.842.2773, ext. 5509, for prospectuses. Read them carefully before you invest. 1. Estimated annual expenses are adjusted quarterly. 2. 1.40% is a very reasonable fee level for a typical fund; 0.40% is near, but not actually at the bottom of, the mutual fund expense ratio spectrum. • TIAA-CREF Individual and Institutional Services, Inc. and Teachers Personal Investors Services, Inc. distribute securities products. • Teachers Insurance and Annuity Association (TIAA), New York, NY and TIAA-CREF Life Insurance Co., New York, NY issue insurance and annuities. • TIAA-CREF Trust Company, PSB provides trust services. • Investment products are not FDIC insured, may lose value and are not bank guaranteed. © 2001 Teachers Insurance and Annuity Association-College Retirement Equities Fund, New York, NY 0104

Next Week:

Men's Basketball at Holy Cross
Women's Basketball at Holy Cross
Wrestling at Lock Haven
Track & Field at East Stroudsburg
Water Polo at George Washington

THE BUCKNELLIAN Sports

Bison pick up two crucial league wins

Defense stepped up as women hand down defeats to rivals Navy and Lafayette

By ANDREW BEVAN
Senior Writer

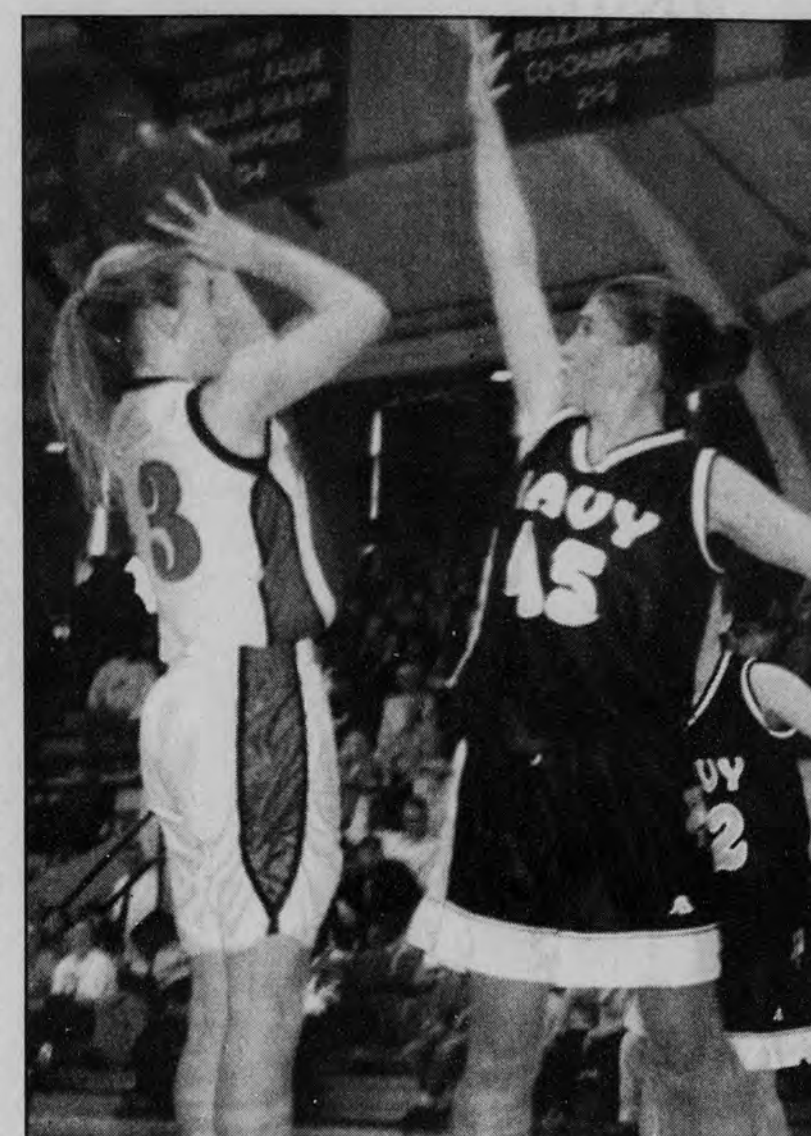

The Bucknell women's basketball team won both of its games this week by a combined 58 points in starting off the second round of Patriot League play 2-0. The Bison finished up their recent three-game homestand with a convincing 85-66 win over Navy this past Saturday and an 83-44 romp over Lafayette this Wednesday.

The Orange and Blue put together one of their most impressive outings of the season against the visiting Midshipmen. The Bison showed their ability to run the court extremely well by gaining many of their first half points in transition. Their biggest catalyst in that category was junior forward Vicki Quimby, who created several of the fast break opportunities herself through her defensive play and was on the finishing end of the majority of them.

"This was our best defensive effort of the year," Head Coach Kathy Fedorjaka said.

The game was dictated by defense in the first half and Quimby is the top post player in the League in terms of running the floor," Fedorjaka added.

Bucknell used two 7-0 runs during the last ten minutes of the half to break open the game and headed into the locker room with a 22-point advantage, 46-24. The Bison adjusted very well to the 2-3 zone of the Midshipmen and were able to set the tempo of the game in contrast to what happened when the two teams met earlier this season in Annapolms.

Chris Rivera—The Bucknellian

Desire Almind '04 helped the Bison to an 85-66 victory over Navy Saturday. The Orange and Blue also crushed Lafayette Wednesday night.

"We worked for two days on zone in practice because it took us out of the game at their place," Fedorjaka said.

"We were much more physical this time and we created the tempo and controlled it this time as opposed to last game," Quimby said.

The Orange and Blue never let their lead slip below 20 until the last minute of the game and at one point stretched it to 29 in cruising to a 21-point victory.

Quimby led all scorers with 24 points. Two other Bison starters were in double figures with Kate Franks '03 scoring 12-including three 3-pointers and junior co-captain Monique LeBlanc, whom added 12 as well.

"I think it was our best game all season start to finish. The intensity remained pretty high throughout the game," Fedorjaka said.

The Lafayette Leopards traveled to Davis Gym this Wednesday with their eyes set on avenging the 29-point loss they suffered earlier this season to the Orange and Blue.

The game remained tight in the beginning, as the score was knotted at 10 with just under five minutes gone in the first half. Things would change drastically over the next four minutes, as the Bison would explode on a 16-0 run and end up taking a 19-point advantage into the locker room at half-time.

Bucknell certainly did not relent in the second half, at one point extend-

See WOMEN, page A8

Team of the Week:

The women's basketball team, who improved to 7-1 in Patriot League play with convincing victories over Navy and Lafayette in front of the Davis Gym faithful.

Athlete of the Week:

Vicki Quimby '02

By DAVID TOMAINO
Staff Writer

One might ask: how do you contain junior dynamo Vicki Quimby '02?

"Well you see, um well," does that sound familiar? You may never find an appropriate answer. Your only answer may lie in Good Luck John's opening phrase to all Bucknellians, "Good Luck."

Bucknell Head Coach Kathy Fedorjaka knows the junior possess a myriad of talents.

"She's a scorer, a rebounder, and a fine defender. She's the whole package," Fedorjaka said.

These basketball attributes have proved to be vital in the Orange and Blue's resurgence on the court this winter. Navy was the latest to fall prey to the Quimby question. Navy did figure out one thing: that Quimby could score, as she notched 24 points in as many minutes. Her scoring ability is hardly a secret though; the Pennsylvania native recently surpassed the 1,000-point plateau for her career in a contest this past month.

Quimby's scoring is not the only thing that Fedorjaka is going gaga for this season. "She's a tremendous leader who does not back down, and I know her teammates feed off of her leadership and presence on the court," Fedorjaka said.

Quimby's teammates also notice her presence on the court. "Vicki is an excellent leader with so many skills, you learn so much from her on the court," Kate Franks '03 said.

The key to the women's basketball team postseason success may lie in a proficient balanced attack orchestrated by their talented sharpshooters, but that attack is futile without the continued leadership Quimby provides.

Vicki Quimby '02 has over 1000 career points.

Ice Hockey splits weekend, prepares for playoffs

By KEVIN LOGAN
Senior Writer

The Bison ice hockey team went into winter break trying to shake a frustrating slump. After opening the season with six straight victories, they then lost the following final four games of the semester (excluding a forfeit in their favor).

The Bison hoped to turn the tide as the new semester rolled around, and thus far things seem to be going well. Since their arrival back on campus, they've posted a 5-2-1 record, including a four-game win streak.

This past weekend, the Bison were scheduled to host a three-game series, but due to a College of New Jersey forfeit of the opening game on Friday, they were left to face just two opponents: Bryn Athyn and league-leading Lafayette. They would split the two games, defeating Bryn Athyn 4-2, but falling to Lafayette, 5-3.

The Bison were lifted to the victory against Bryn Athyn by a pair of goals from senior center Bryan Hnetinka, as the squad both outshot and outscored the Lions. Freshman Dave Gerlach drew blood Leopard first, beating goaltender Jamie Slotter on a feed from fellow freshman Brad De Voogd.

Hnetinka then added to the lead later in the first period, assisted by Kyle McNeel '01. Bryn Mawr scored the lone goal of the second period, but the Bison outscored the Lions 2-1 in the final twenty minutes. Hnetinka added his second of the game, from McNeel and Graham Dewar '02, and Eric Silvestri '03 iced the victory on a pass from Nathan Ledyard '02, who leads the team in points. Freshman goalie Doug Mears recorded his first win in his first start for the squad.

On Sunday, Bucknell faced off against the Lafayette Leopards, who lead the league with 31 points, seven ahead of the Bison. Goalie Paul Van Dillen '01, who has been solid for the Bison and at one point lead the league in save percentage, was beaten for four goals (and one empty-netter) on 21 shots.

Lafayette jumped to a quick lead, but Bucknell answered when Scott

Whitfield fed Hugo Her '04, who buried it past goalie Chad Wolf. The Leopards then jumped back out to a one-goal lead, but McNeel struck for the Bison to even the score again.

Lafayette then netted two more, carrying a two-goal advantage late into the third period. With time winding down, Bucknell pulled Van Dillen in favor of the extra attacker. The move worked, as Chris Newhouse '02 scored with just over a minute remaining, assisted by Silvestri and Dave Streets '01. However, the Bison could not hold off Lafayette any longer, and the Leopards put one in the vacant net for the 5-3 victory.

Despite the loss to Lafayette, Bucknell still remains tied with Millersville for second place in the Northeastern Division of the DVCHC. With three games left in the season, all verse teams the Bison have beaten this year, hopes are high for the playoffs. The Bison have a chance to take sole possession of the second seed, which makes these last three games that much more important.

But because the team hasn't been playing quite up to the level it should be there are concerns. "I'm kind of worried," said co-captain Mike Bronowicz '01. "We take teams for granted and play at their level; they don't play at our level."

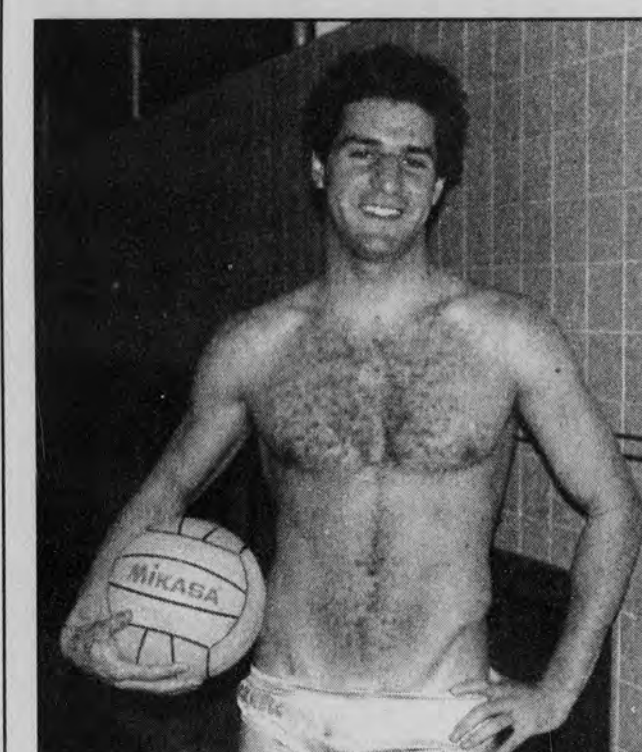

At the same time, however, the team remains confident. Coming off the fresh win against Bryn Athyns, the Bison expect to defeat the Lions in their second matchup on Friday. Likewise, they don't anticipate any trouble getting past Kutztown on Sunday, a team they defeated 5-2 early in the season.

The contest against St. Joe's on Saturday, on the other hand, will not be so easy. Despite having shutout St. Joe's 2-0 in their first contest, it is shaping up to be a close game that can make or break Bucknell's quest for second place.

"It's going to be an awesome, very heavy hitting, tough matchup," Bronowicz said.

The Bison are looking to step up their play in the final three games as they gear up for the playoffs, which kick off Feb. 16.

Permisohn to play in Maccabiah Games

Kevin Permisohn '01 was a three-year captain of the Bucknell water polo team.

By BROOKE REA
Sports Editor

Few athletes at Bucknell have the chance to take their involvement in sports to the next level after they graduate. Even for the most talented, opportunity is scarce and competition fierce, making national-level involvement in sports a forgotten dream for most.

But for senior water polo player Kevin Permisohn, that dream became a reality when he was named to the United States Maccabiah Water Polo Team, which will compete at the 16th World Maccabiah Games in Israel this summer.

The men's water polo team will be one of 26 United States sports teams competing at the world's fourth largest international Olympic-style event. This quadrennial athletic competition for Jewish athletes has over 5,000 participants representing more than 50 countries, and the U.S. expects to send 700 athletes and coaches for the 2001 strengthening the Jewish identity for the individual athlete, and for the community of athletes as a whole.

"Participating in the Maccabiah Games is like a dream come true," Permisohn said. "I will be able to compete against the best in the world in a sport that I love, while gaining a fresh perspective of Israel, new friends, and a heightened awareness of my Jewish identity."

Anyone who has seen this senior and three-time Bucknell captain play water polo would know that he is cut out for just this kind of competition. "I am not at all surprised that Kevin made the team," Bucknell Head Water Polo Coach John Zeigler said. "He is an extremely talented water polo player, and one of the best players on the East Coast."

Permisohn heard about the tryout through information sent to coaches and schools all over the United States by the Maccabiah Games. He also saw a call for players on the United States

The Games is committed to

See PERMISOHN, page A8

Indoor track leaves opponents in the dust

By PAT EVANS
Staff Writer

It's not every meet where a team beats its competitors by nearly tripling their totals, but the Bucknell Track and Field team managed to accomplish just that at Colgate University this past weekend. The Bison took the meet by an impressive margin, cementing the track and field team's solid reputation.

Claiming first place in a scoring meet, the Bison men posted 13 first-place finishes and scored a team total of 270 points, outdistancing runner-up and host Colgate University (97) by nearly three times.

The Bucknell women had 10 first-place showings, and finished with 249 points, besting runner-up Colgate by 150 points.

In addition to the 13 first-place finishes for the men's squad, two individuals were able to break the Bucknell top-ten performers chart. Junior David Gabriel ran a personal best in the 55m dash by blowing away the competition with a time of 6.51. Gabriel's time was one hundredth of a second better than his previous best, and keeps him at seventh all-time at Bucknell.

First-year student Noel Powell narrowly made the top-ten chart with a leap of 22' 8 1/2" in the long jump.

Powell finished second in the event and now has the tenth best leap in Bucknell history — not bad for his first time competing in the long jump.

The women's team had four individuals improve on their personal bests and move up the Bucknell top-ten performers charts.

Andrea Beisser '03 finished third at the invitational in the 5000m run with a time of 17:32.50.

Beisser broke into the performers chart with the sixth fastest time in the University's history.

In the 55-meter hurdles, freshman freshman Jamie Lilien pulled out a victory with an impressive time of 8.45. Not only did she earn 10 points for the Orange and Blue, but she also moved into third all-time at Bucknell in the event.

In non-running events, junior Andrea Nyce '02 and Maria Garcia '04 finished first and third in the triple jump and the 20 lb. weight throw respectively.

Nyce's winning leap of 36' 8 1/4" in the triple jump moves her into the eighth slot on the all-time charts at Bucknell.

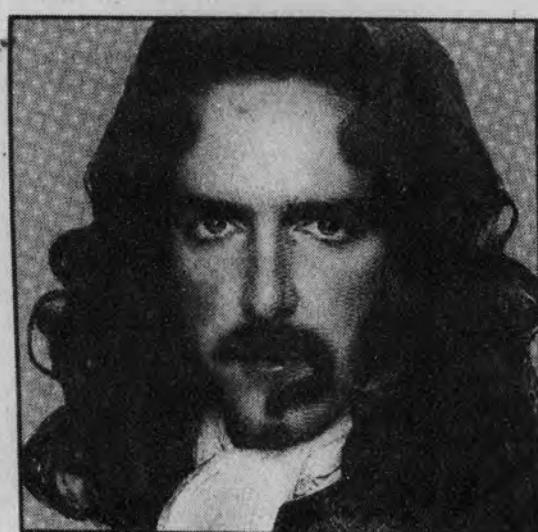

First-year student Garcia, who specializes in the weight throw, completed the event with a toss of 47' 1/4" and now owns the third best throw in Bucknell history.

However, these impressive results come as no surprise to Assistant Coach Joseph Klim.

"It was an absolute massacre. We had nine first places on the women's side alone, and eleven firsts with the men, Klim said.

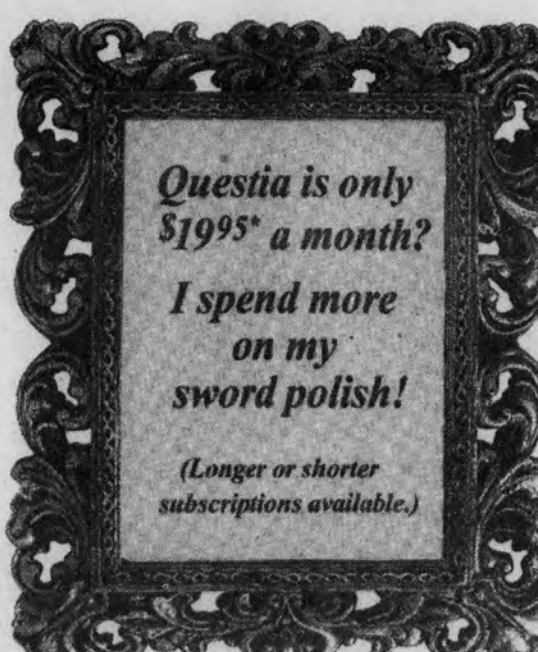

"It was just a matter of keeping mentally focused," Klim explained.

The men's and women's indoor track & field teams will continue with their road trip as they travel to East Stroudsburg University for a meet this Sunday, Feb. 11.

The Question Marquis

Ask the Question Marquis is a sporadically produced advice column, because proper loving takes time. It is to be read with a silly French accent. The views of the Question Marquis are his alone and are in no way to be construed as representative of his sponsor, Questia, you American pigs.

www.questia.com

Ask the Question Marquis

Q: Dear Question Marquis: My sister's boyfriend broke up with her over a year ago. But his voice is still on her answering machine. Should I tell her how pathetic this is? — Stephen in Annapolis

A: My advice here is going like this: It is not a problem, it is an opportunity. There is no truer friend of passion than the vulnerable rejected lover. You must simply play your cards correctly. I recommend a subtle approach to win her trust. Perhaps you can tell her about Questia. About how much more free time she will have when she's writing research papers if she does the research online. Free time that the two of you could use to, je ne sais pas, get to know each other better? If you know what I...wait—you said your sister's boyfriend? This is a terrible misunderstanding. I have got to stop skimming these questions.

Q: Dear Question Marquis: I am very interested in Questia. Could you please give me some more information about its exciting features? — TW in Houston

A: Zort alors! I think my employer has slipped this one in. But just by chance this is not how the case is, I will answer it briefly. Questia will have an extensive scholarly collection, and the full text of each book and journal article is all online. You just enter your topic and then you can instantly search through any book. And many of the author's own sources are, how you say, "hyperlinked." So you can follow the writer's train of thought, if you like. Also, quotes, footnotes and bibliographies are all done automatically. And, in a few months, Questia can be used to more efficiently groom racehorses. Or such is my understanding. That may be confidential information, so don't go gossiping it about like a bunch of Montesquieu's concubines. Now I wish I hadn't told you.

"There is no truer friend of passion than the vulnerable rejected lover.
You simply must play your cards correctly."

Q: Dear Question Marquis: Well...why did you tell us? In both of your answers, you could have corrected your mistakes by using the delete key.

A: In life, there is no such thing as a delete key. Q.E.D., there is no delete key for writing my column. What's done is done, what's said is said. Vive moi! (Long live me!)

questia
Better Papers. Faster.™

*Price subject to change. See web site for current pricing. Internet access not included. ©2001 Questia Media, Inc. Questia, the Questia logo, "Better Papers. Faster." the Question Marquis, the Question Marquis signature, and the Question Marquis question mark symbol are service marks of Questia Media, Inc.

Sports

Almind's maturity fuels women's successful start

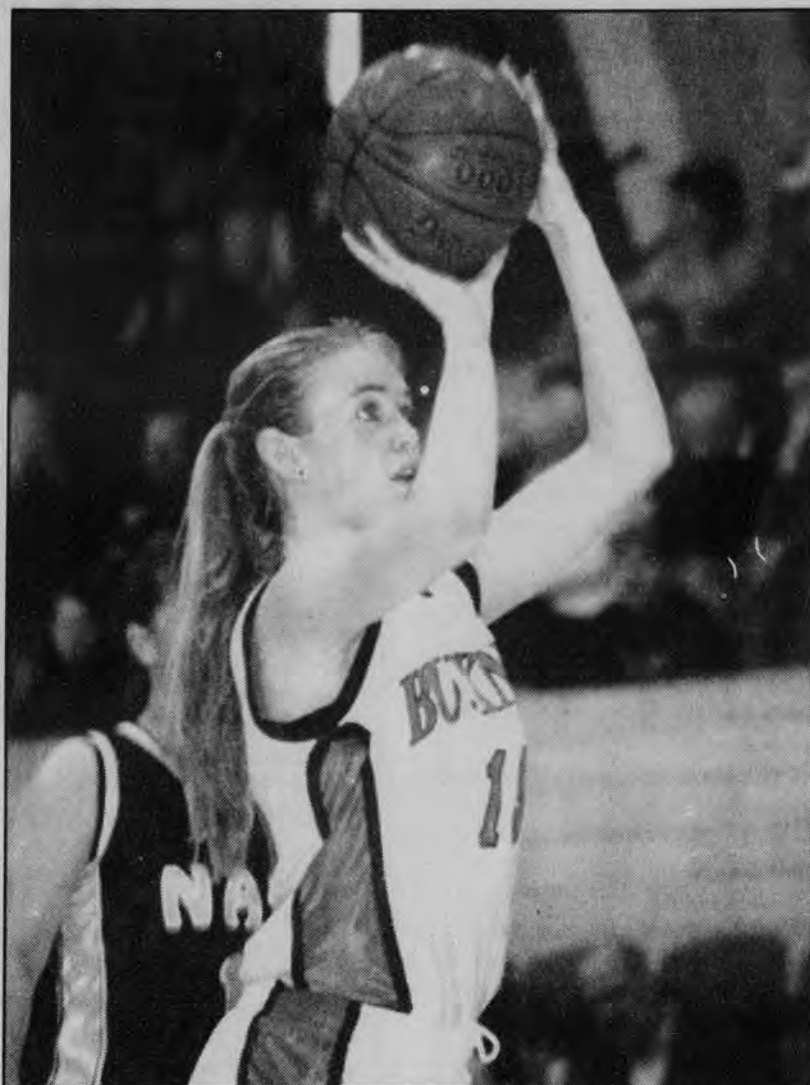

By BRIAN KLOTZ
Staff Writer

The Bucknell women's basketball team, off to the best start ever in school history needs no introduction. In almost clockwork fashion, they dispose of opponents game after game with the starting five in the double-digits for scoring—some members scoring over twenty points per game. But take a look at the starting roster and notice the class composition. Two juniors, two sophomores, and a freshman? The freshman is no mistake.

Desire Almind came to Bucknell unsure of what lay ahead. "I didn't think I would get the playing time that I am getting now," she said. "I didn't expect to be doing the kind of stuff I am doing because of the freshmen factor. I just wanted to come in and do what I could to get playing time and try help out the team."

Coach Kathy Fedorjaka had a good idea what Almind's potential was coming in. "I didn't ever tag a number to her performance," said Fedorjaka, "but I thought she could start for us. We thought she had that kind of talent and could start for us."

Currently, Almind finds herself second in total points for the season. She also earned five Patriot League Rookie of the Week awards and one regional rookie of the

Chris Rivera—The Bucknellian
Desire Almind '04 has emerged as a force on the Bucknell women's basketball team, capturing five Patriot League Rookie of the week awards.

week award. She is humble about her fast start. "I think I see a lot of playing time as a freshman," said Almind, "more than a lot of freshmen in the league. I get more of a chance to do things."

Like any college athlete, Almind began her sport early. Her father, a "6'4" basketball buff in high school," was her main motivator to begin in fifth grade. Even though Almind had been playing softball since second grade, basketball won out. "I wasn't very good at (softball)," she said.

Moving in to North Warren Regional High School, Almind quickly made a name for herself in basketball. She earned four varsity letters in the sport throughout her time there and set numerous records, including the school's all-time scoring record of 2,281 points. She thinks of her first-team all-state recognition as her proudest achievement of her senior year.

When college time came around, Almind had some special motivation to make the grade. "I'm the only person from my family to go to college," said Almind. "My parents pushed me to go to school to get an education, and basketball helped with that."

For Almind, everything "just clicked" when she stepped onto Bucknell's campus for the first time. "I fit in with the players and coach," she said. "I liked the people and the school has good academic standing."

Her first semester as a freshman definitely presented some challenges for Almind. "My teammates helped me out a lot," she

"Desire has great poise for a freshman, great shooting ability and beautiful form and consistency, but she still has a lot to learn."
—Coach Kathy Fedorjaka

said. "It was a frustrating first couple of weeks getting accustomed to the school and a whole different type of game."

Fedorjaka could see Almind's potential from the start. "She is extremely gifted and talented," said Fedorjaka. "She has become a huge piece to what we are doing by answering everything we thought she would be. Desire has great poise for a freshman, great shooting ability and beautiful form and consistency, but she still has a lot to learn."

Teammate Kate Rounsley '02 has played with Almind all season. "She definitely has the potential to have an amazing career," said Rounsley. "She has raw talent, she's coachable and she's a team player. I think by far she can be Rookie of the Year."

Almind considers her most memorable game of the season the one against Lehigh. Even though she claims she played "bad," she had a career best five assists and 22 points. However, to keep the game in perspective, every member of the starting roster hit double digits for points. "The win at Lehigh was pretty big," she said. "We were coming off a big loss at Holy Cross and Lehigh was the turnaround. We wanted to send a message."

According to Almind, she has only one on-court characteristic. "The team jokes a lot about my being so quiet all the time," she said. "I'm not a very talkative person."

Regardless, Almind is making her presence known on the court with every game. "I think we can go all the way this year," she said. "We definitely have the potential to win the Patriot League and head to the NCAA tournament."

Keep an eye out, because Almind plans to continue to get better. "You focus on improving your game in practice," she said. "You can never be content with anything."

Strong leadership gives polo high hopes

By MOLLY GOELLER
Staff Writer

After months of intensive training and preparation, the Bucknell women's water polo team anxiously awaits the start of their season. With the loss of only two seniors from the 2000 team and the return of all five top scorers, the women are poised and ready to compete.

The team will open their season this weekend at George Washington University, where they will compete against George Washington and University of Maryland on Saturday. Sunday they will head to Annapolis to match up against one of the best club teams on the East Coast.

Coaching the women's team for his second season will be head coach John Zeigler. Zeigler graduated from Bucknell in 1991, where he captured the men's water polo and swimming teams.

His talents as a player are reflected in his abilities as a coach. Zeigler coached the 2000 women's team to a 16-14 overall record and led them into their first ever Eastern Championships.

The team is still very new, as it enters only its third season as a varsity sport at Bucknell, however the talent on the team is distributed throughout the four classes. The recruitment of new freshman combined with the already existent upper class talent, has made the team an extremely dynamic force.

"I'm thrilled to have such a great team for my last season," senior co-captain Paige Cull said. "This team is the best one I've ever been on in my four years at Bucknell."

This season promises to be challenging and exciting for the Bison, as they will face both new and old competitors. The team will play Prince-

"I can't wait to give the good teams on the East Coast some tough competition."
—Julie McLaughlin '01

ton, Villanova, George Washington and Salem in league games, while also competing in several Southern Division games against non-league foes. Breaking up their season will be an intensive and highly demanding training trip to California.

In the short run, the Bison prepare for an early season invitation which they host Feb. 24-25. Keeping the whole season in perspective, the team looks forward to qualifying for the Eastern Championships. But they will need to practice hard and compete well in hopes of landing themselves a bid to Easterns.

The Bison are lucky this season, as they are captained by two of water polo's finest players, Julie McLaughlin, a senior from Woodside Ca., has been a staple on the team since the beginning. Leading last year's team with 41 assists and finishing third overall with 70 points, McLaughlin has proved her talent to the team.

Paige Cull, a senior from Bay City, Mi., will also help lead the team to great things this season. Her aggression in the pool and her motivational work ethic are seen and felt by all those around her. Cull was named to the Collegiate Water Polo Association all-conference second team in the Allegheny division last season.

"Both women have a lot of experience and bring different things to the team," Zeigler said. "They are players who lead by example."

The team's exceptional playing ability combined with their excitement and positive outlook should help guide them through a competitive season.

"I can't wait to give the good teams on the East Coast some tough competition," McLaughlin said. "I think we are finally in the position to do that."

WOMEN

From page A5

ing their lead too as large as 40. In securing a 39-point win the Bison shot 54.5 percent from the floor and held Lafayette to just 28.6 percent from the floor.

Creamer led the Orange and Blue with 17 points and sophomore point guard Rebekah May came off the bench to score a career-high 15 points, including three 3-pointers. Quimby had 12 for the Bison and Leblanc added 11.

"Rebekah is our physical presence who will not quit," Fedorjaka said.

Bucknell continues to get good help from its bench with the play of freshmen Vanessa Putnok, Jade Fleming and Kristin Valder, as well as strong cutters from sophomores Kate Rounsley, Kate Florence and Maribel Castillo.

"We are getting production and depth out of our bench," Fedorjaka said.

In closer games we have gone to the bench. The kids are earning and doing it," Fedorjaka said.

"The Bison now look to avenge their only blemish in the Patriot League this season as they head to Holy Cross this Saturday to face the first place Crusaders. In the 23-point loss they suffered to Holy Cross earlier this year, Fedorjaka said that their opponents established their presence early.

"They took our kids out of their games," Fedorjaka said.

Our mental approach has to be there and we have to be able to handle their pressure and we must be the aggressors. We need to throw the first punch," Fedorjaka said. "I am extremely confident in our team that they will be able to do that. We're still building, and that's very exciting to see as a coach."

MEN FALL INTO SLUMP

BASKETBALL from page A8

loss. Forty minutes of Navy basketball proved to be too much for the Bison, as the Midshipmen (14-7) overcame a 32-32 halftime tie to defeat the Bison for the second time this season.

"This wasn't one of those real smooth games," commented Navy head coach Don DeVoe. "I think both teams were a little out of sync today." Together, the Bison and Midshipmen combined for 60 fouls in the contest.

The Bison began the game looking as good as they have all season, building a 21-12 lead halfway through the first. In just the first 9:34 minutes of play, Bailey scored 14 of his game-high 28 points.

Navy stormed right back with a 14-0 run, overcoming the deficit and taking the lead 26-21 with about six minutes left before the half. The two teams entered the intermission tied at 32 points apiece.

Like the first time they met this season, Navy made an early second half run to take command of the game.

In addition to outscoring

Bucknell by 11 points in the first 5:39 of the second, the Navy defense held the Bison scoreless during that period as well.

"We came out flat in the second and we didn't have the luxury of resting people tonight with all the foul trouble," said Flannery. "That's the kind of game you know you're going to get with Navy though-tough and physical."

The Midshipmen would extend their lead to as many as 14 points, but an 8-2 run by the Bison brought them to within eight points with 4:07 left. The Bison trailed by eight again with just 1:32 to go, but that was as close as Bucknell would get.

In addition to Bailey's 28 points, Lalugha finished in double figures with 16 points. Chris Williams, who was 12-17 from the floor, led Navy with 20 points. Francis Ebon and Kyle Barker chipped in each 11 points for the Midshipmen.

The Bison look to break out of their slump this Saturday when they travel to Holy Cross for a League matchup.

PERMISOHN

From page A5

Water Polo website and decided to try out.

Two tryouts for the US team were held in December, one for the East and one for the West. The all-day tryout consisted of a morning session of swimming and drills, and an afternoon scrimmage and six-on-five situation. Permishohn came out of the tryout feeling confident in his performance.

"I felt pretty good, comparing myself to the other guys at the tryout," he said. "I knew I did the best I could do in a one-day situation."

Clearly Permishohn's performance was top-notch, for he was one of only two players chosen from the Eastern tryout. Thirteen others from the West make up the team, which will train in California in June before heading to Israel July 7.

Permishohn's numerous other water polo achievements reflect his diverse talent in the pool.

IM Corner

Basketball A

1. Team Orenthal 2-0
2. Rounders 1-0
2. High Court 1-0
2. KDR A 1-0
5. J-House 0-1
5. Best Kept Secrets 0-1
8. DU 0-2

Basketball B

1. Vedder Vertigo 1-0
1. Sig Ep B 2-0
2. Team Herb 1-0
3. Wet Heads 1-1
3. Chi Phi 1-1
3. PC Load Letter 1-1
6. Krispy Robin 0-1
7. DU B 0-2

Division 1

1. Blonde is a Lark 2-0
1. Vedder Vertigo 2-0
3. We Got Rice 1-0
4. Fighting Amish 1-1
5. Take 2 0-1
6. Mud Sharks 0-2

Division 3

1. Team Promix 1-0
2. The Masons 1-0
3. Hired Goons 1-1
3. Supreme Court 1-1
5. Los Jugadores 0-1
6. Sig Ep A 0-1

Basketball C

1. Lady's Men 1-0
1. Vedder Vertigo 1-0
1. Sig Ep C 1-0
4. Financial Panthers 0-1
4. LL Vegas 0-1

Billiards

1. The Bull Run Hustlers 1-0
1. Vedder Vertigo B 1-0
1. Sig Ep 1-0
4. Vedder Vertigo 0-1
4. Pool Sharks 0-1
4. Smith Sophs 0-1

Bowling

1. Vedder Vertigo 1-0-1
1. Sig Ep A 1-0-1
- 1
3. Harry Balls 1-0
4. PC Load Letter 0-1
4. Sig Ep B 0-1
4. French Ticklers 0-1
7. TKE 0-0
7. Vedder Vertigo B 0-0
7. BWB 0-0

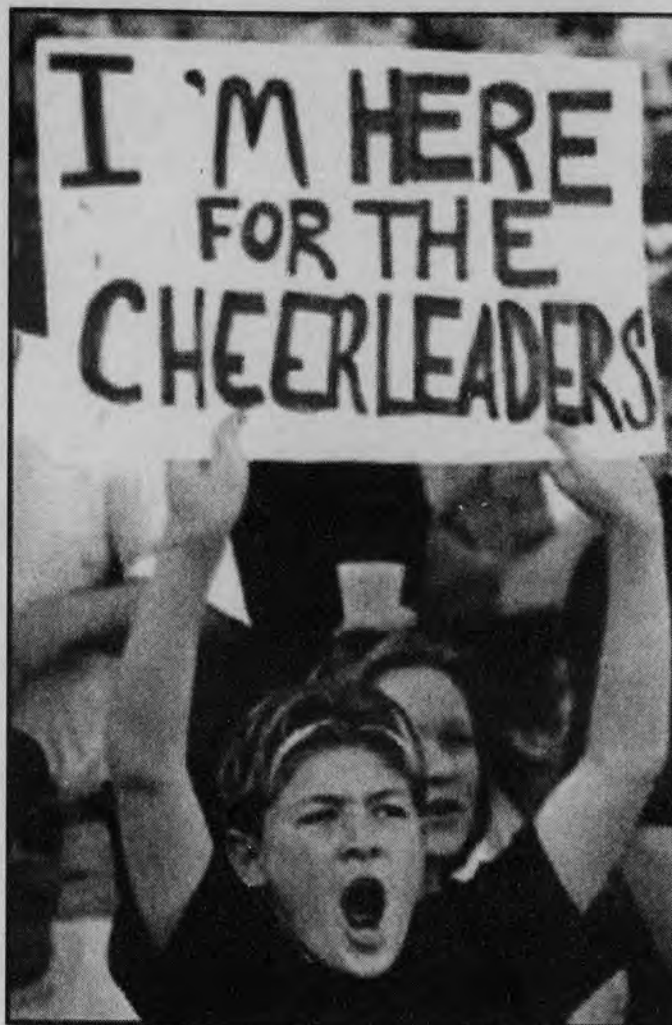

Racquetball

1. Sig Ep A 1-0
2. Vedder Vertigo 0-1
3. Sig Ep B 0-0

Remember to keep turning in scorecards as soon as your game is over. If there are none available please just put the required info on a slip of paper and drop that in. Keep playing hard and having fun!

National Sports

XFL: a new brand of football

Courtesy of WNBC.com
Scantly-clad cheerleaders are a major appeal of the XFL for this 11-year-old, as well as for many other XFL fanatics.

By SCOTT KLOSS
Staff Writer

So there I was walking back into my room on Saturday night, when my friend Matt reminded me that the XFL's inaugural game was coming on in two minutes. We darted downstairs to see what all the hype was about. Little did we know, we were in for something out-of-this-world.

It all started out with "The Rock" introducing the XFL to the television audience. From then on it was which is better left in the drawing board.

Now let's take a closer look and find out what the XFL is all about. The XFL claims that it is in-your-face football, the way it was meant to be played. Here are some differences from the NFL:

1. No fair catches—Players must return all punts.

This will create the opportunity for some head on collisions. Also the punted ball is live after it has traveled 25 yards past the original line of scrimmage.

2. QBs are fair game — Unlike the NFL where the rules are to protect their most prized skilled players, the XFL encourages quarterback punishment and there are no penalties for roughing the passer.

3. No kicking PATs—One point conversation will be attempted by positional players, and there is no going for two.

4. Celebration encouraged—After a touchdown is made, let the party begin and let the trash talking come out. Celebration is actually encouraged after a big play (making every play seem like a big play).

5. More cash for winning—The teams that win more get more cash. If you win the "The Big Game at the End" (SuperBowl) on the XFL your team splits one million dollars.

Finally, the most intriguing change of all involves the coin toss. Wait, what coin toss? In the XFL, instead of the traditional coin toss to determine which team selects to receive the ball or kick-off, two players will race 20 yards then fight it out for the pigskin.

So, great, the league has all these rule changes and enhanced entertainment value to entice viewers, but how did it fair in the ratings market? The XFL's ratings soared on opening night. NBC's broadcast drew a preliminary overnight rating of 10.3, meaning an average of 10.3 percent of U.S. TV homes were tuned in at any given moment.

Surprisingly, this rating is about 25 percent higher than NBC's broadcast of Game 4 of the American League championship series between the Yankees and Mariners on a Saturday night in October.

With all this enthusiasm you would suspect that ESPN would be cutting its highlights to capture XFL shots, right? Not so fast.

"We'll take a look at the ratings, the attendance, and look at the product on the field," ESPN Senior VP and managing editor Bob Eaton told the press. "Our viewers are pretty hard-core sports people. It's going to have to fight its way in."

The only question that remains is, can the league sustain interest without a roster of big-name stars? The XFL is counting on the fact that the fans will appreciate players who compete like gladiators for nothing more than a little cash and a bundle of self-pride.

The XFL players may boast in ads that they are playing for the love of the game, but will love be enough? Perhaps only time will tell.

Game format results in 26-goal hockey game

The Super Bowl is now officially over and most Americans have already begun counting down to the first day of training camp. But for hockey fans, the most exciting time of year is just beginning.

And no better way to ring in the second half of the season than with an All-Star game where one team scored twelve goals and still lost.

The NHL took center stage Sunday afternoon, as the best players in the world gathered in Denver, Co. for the 51st NHL All-Star game. Many expected the game to be a high scoring affair, but did anyone expect a final score of 14-12?

Well, maybe we should have. This is what the mid-season classics have become—a chance for the players to show off their skills in a relaxed atmosphere.

Personally, I enjoy low-scoring games where the goalies are the key players, but this is definitely a nice change of pace. For one day of the year, we are reminded of what it was like when we were younger. There for the North American team, while Peter Forsberg and Milan Hejduk started for the World squad.

As Sports Illustrated's Kostya Kennedy says, "You can bet North American center Peter Forsberg isn't going to unleash a slap shot if North American defenseman Raymond Bourque, his Avancé lance t a m - mate, is standing in the p u c k ' s path."

But is this really all that bad? Not completely. The All-Star game should be about having fun and playing with players whom you normally wouldn't see. No one wants to see the playoffs right around the corner.

While that aspect is a good negative as well, there are a few positive aspects as well. Besides the Stanley Cup, the All-Star game was the only other way to find out which conference was better and which side would hold bragging rights for the year. We could find out which style of hockey is indeed better: the high-flying Western conference's style or the more physical Eastern conference.

Another negative quality is the fact that the NHL is promoting something that has long been a thorn in its side. For years, Canadians have dominated professional hockey, but the current game is more diverse than ever. Instead of capitalizing on this and promoting hockey as a world sport, rather than just a Canadian sport, they took a step back.

It is seemingly Us vs. Them, with the enemy not even sharing a bond. After all, the World's starting lineup consisted of two Swedes, two Czechs and two Russians. These teammates seemingly have nothing in common, and thus should not be forced to be on the same team as if they are fellow countrymen.

But we can get past the fact that this setup is somewhat bad for the game. As long as the game is entertaining and the players are having fun, then it is well worth it.

And this year's game was well worth it. All eyes were on Mario Lemieux as he made his ninth All-Star appearance and first in three-and-a-half years. However, it was the All-American line of Bill Guerin, Doug Weight and Tony Amonte that stole the show.

Combined, the trio accounted for six goals and seven assists, giving the first-time All-Star Guerin the MVP.

Lemieux ended up with a goal and an assist, but it didn't matter because just being there was enough encouragement for many of the All-Stars.

"It was awesome to have him around, his presence was definitely felt," Guerin added.

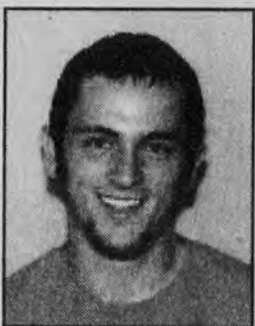

Besides the usual suspects, the game had a distinctly young feel to it, as 14 players were making their All-Star debut.

There was more energy than in years past because many of them will never forget playing with the likes of Bourque, Lemieux and Dominik Hasek. Simon Gagne and Terry Fleury both tallied two goals for team North America, while Fredrik Modin had four assists for the World squad, who came up short for the third time in four years.

The NHL will once again use the current format next year in preparation for the Olympics. They can only hope to have as good of a game next year as they did this year. With that and a good showing by team US or team Canada, hockey ratings should definitely rise.

But if this game showed one thing, it was that hockey can be exciting for non-traditional viewers.

Commentary

ROB SCHMICKER
Senior Writer

en assists, giving the first-time All-Star Guerin the MVP.

Lemieux ended up with a goal and an assist, but it didn't matter because just being there was enough encouragement for many of the All-Stars.

"It was awesome to have him around, his presence was definitely felt," Guerin added.

Besides the usual suspects, the game had a distinctly young feel to it, as 14 players were making their All-Star debut.

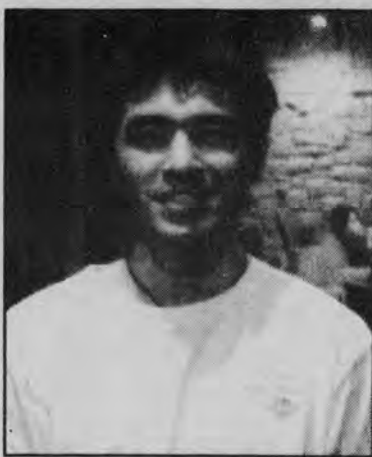

There was more energy than in years past because many of them will never forget playing with the likes of Bourque, Lemieux and Dominik Hasek. Simon Gagne and Terry Fleury both tallied two goals for team North America, while Fredrik Modin had four assists for the World squad, who came up short for the third time in four years.

The NHL will once again use the current format next year in preparation for the Olympics. They can only hope to have as good of a game next year as they did this year. With that and a good showing by team US or team Canada, hockey ratings should definitely rise.

But if this game showed one thing, it was that hockey can be exciting for non-traditional viewers.

IN THE PAINT

With Staff Writers:

Ali Ahmed and Justin McCarthy

All-Star Game

The West has better guards; it has better forwards; it has better centers (East has no centers); it has better bench; it wins. Basically, it might be one of the most lopsided wins ever in the history of the All-Star Game. The East has no one to stop Wallace, Weber, Duncan or Garnett. The East does have the better coach though ... like it would make a difference.

Ali's pick: West by 24

With Shaq sitting out the All-Star game definitely and Kobe's status unclear, the West will be at a huge disadvantage if they lose two of their most dominant stars. The East has a better contingent of guards in Iverson, Houston, McGrady and Stackhouse. But the West has far superior players at the forward positions with Duncan, Weber, Malone and Wallace. Each also has an abundance of those respective positions on their rosters. In order for the East to win they will need to play an up tempo game utilizing the fast break. While, the West must utilize their talent and depth in the frontcourt and play a half court game.

Justin's pick: West by nine

Charlotte at Indiana

For a while Charlotte seemed to be doing great; even Derrick Coleman might have grown up, but now another year is passing with Coleman wasting his physical talent. Still, the Hornets have good backcourt players and Baron Davis is exciting. But Indiana is a solid team that will play better fundamental basketball to beat the Hornets.

Ali's pick: Pacers by 16

This is a match up between two teams struggling to stay afloat. The Pacers look nothing like their old teams the past few seasons, and especially nothing like the defending Eastern Conference Champions. They are struggling and are six games below .500. The Hornets, on the other hand, revamped their lineup in the offseason and looked like a new and much improved team; however, they have struggled lately and have lost 10 of their past 12 games. Look for the winner in this game to be the one who makes the fewest mistakes.

Justin's pick: Hornets by 11

Minnesota at Portland

When drafting Wally Szterbaki, the Wolves thought they had their number two guy after Garnett. Although he has played well, he is not playing at a level high enough to push the T-Wolves to the next level. Still, it is his second year and he might get better ... but until then Portland—even without Pippen—has too much firepower and should handle the T-Wolves. Wallace versus Garnett has to be one of the best matchups in the NBA today. Bonzi Wells should be key to the Blazers' triumph.

Ali's pick: Blazers by seven

Sports

A tale of two crybabies

I went down to the Fieldhouse the other evening to play squash on one of our illustrious courts and I was sitting on the bench, putting on my sneakers, while watching these two kids, probably between the ages of seven and ten, playing basketball. Each drive was the same: one would thrust the ball up in the air with his whole body, completely missing the hoop and as the ball came down they both started pushing for position. The only problem was that they both caught it and wound up in a fighting match over whose it was. Lamentably, the children weren't pushing their own line of shoes or a rap CD, so the argument ended without too much hassle.

So what can be said about the Los Angeles Lakers and their stars Shaquille O'Neil and Kobe Bryant? Well first, the LA Lakers are three and a half games back in their conference—which isn't really the position anyone expected them to be in after dominating the league in 1999-2000. Why, one might ask, is there such a difference? Well the answer is simple: in order to have a successful team, you must have at least three starters who have starred in a television show and/or movie. Regardless, let's look at the pluses and minuses going for the Lakers here.

Well first, they're not the Clippers. And second, they're not the Clippers. Third, I think fans are still reeling from Shaq's awe-inspiring portrayal of a genie with a dunk of bronze, a jump shot of silver and a smile of gold who not only stole the silver screen, but our hearts. "Kazaam," much like "Forrest Gump," has touched us in places we never knew we had and I think we are all a little better off for having partaken in such earthly splendor. As for Shaq's rap CD, "Shaq Diesel," all I can really say is ... yes, that is indeed a compact disc.

But poor endorsement and acting acumen aside, O'Neil is the most dominating center in the league. No one matches his size, strength, skill level and court vision. He is currently shooting a 57 field goal percentage and is collecting almost 13 rebounds a game, not to mention a number of assists and blocks that make his numbers sparkle like the teeth of the Mentos chews (speaking of which, they really are the "fresh maker" and I want to give a shout out to the guys from West-Marley Construction Co. for getting that punch buggy out of the way for me—just because you work with your hands doesn't mean you don't have a heart).

As for Kobe Bryant, he has four commercials out right now promoting his own line of shoes from Adidas. Now, that's fine by me, but if you ever get a chance to check out Kobe's website, check out the link with videos of his commercials followed by behind-the-scenes footage, and a short description of how each commercial represents another aspect of Kobe's character.

I'm sorry, I hate to admit it, but there really isn't all that much to Kobe. And even if there was, I don't really care. Speaking Italian does not mean that you suddenly have boundless depth to your character and should share it with the world. You run fast and you shoot the ball—I can do the same thing. Just because you can get the ball in the basket doesn't mean that you've somehow descended from Mount Olympus to rile the peasantry and their passion for basketball. Quite frankly I'm waiting for the commercial when Kobe pushes a little kid and beats him up for his lunch money because he wouldn't play the ball. What does that reveal about his character? Well if you need me to tell you then all I can say is go out and buy a copy of "Shaq-Ru," you'd probably enjoy it.

Obviously, one can see the problems inherent in the system. Both Shaq and Kobe are full of themselves and are looking to increase their numbers. Both strive to be the best in the league, an admirable goal, granted they don't bring their team down in that pursuit, which is precisely what has happened. The Lakers are third in their conference and their defense has been abysmal. Last season, LA ranked first as well as sixth place in opponent shooting percentage and points allowed per game. This year they've dropped to 18th and 25th in the latter two categories respectively.

Kobe is content with simply blaming their standings on a lack of defense and then tries to gloss over it by scoring, on average, a zillion points a game. Shaq, on the other hand, speculates as to his own defense—which has dragged more than a Woody Allen movie—by stating, "If you want the big dog to guard the big yard, you've got to give the big dog something to do. You've got to give him toys. You've got to feed him. You can't have him sit and do nothing." What Shaq is so eloquently stating is simply that he wants to score and when he scores he will defend.

The problem is this. Everyone sees Kobe as this flashy young brat who thinks he should lead the team. But quite frankly, there's no difference between Kobe and Shaq. Shaq is the exact same, only a foot taller. The reason Shaq is so adamant about team unity and playing in the triangle offense is because he's the star. He's Pythagoras. You relegate him to a secondary role like Kobe and he'll kick and punt just as much.

But ultimately, Phil Jackson must make some resolution about this and decide where his teams future lies, whether it's with the premiere center of this generation or one of the most prolific scorers. Until Jackson makes that decision, things won't be as easy for the Lakers as they should be and both stars will be alienated.

Case in point, since the start of this "family feud," printed reports say that both have been asking to be traded. Although Shaq claims that he was not really serious, Kobe is looking for a team that has a shot at the championship but would be willing to feature him—not only in the starting five, but also in the halftime show. But most teams that can afford Kobe have already signed deals with Aerosmith, Britney Spears and Nelly, which has extended negotiations longer than anticipated. We all pray for a speedy resolution to Kobe's dilemma and all the best to you and yours in this holiday season.

Sports Trivia

By Justin McCarthy

- 1) Which NBA player popularized the jump shot?
- 2) What team holds the record for holding the most consecutive opponents under 100 points?
- 3) What two NHL players have played for the most teams in their careers?

(1) Joe Foweraker (2) The 2000 New York Knicks (3) Consecutive opponents (1) JJ Barea and (2) Mike Penix (10 teams)

Leopards turn table on Bison

Avenging an early loss, Lafayette's late-game heroics extend BU losing streak to four

Chris Rivera—The Bucknellian

Mid-flight on his way to two of his 28 points against Navy, co-captain Bryan Bailey '02 and the rest of the Bison look to turn around a season-high four game losing streak Saturday against Holy Cross.

By ANDREW BURR
Sports Layout Editor

Fortunes were reversed for the Bison (10-12, 2-6) Wednesday as Lafayette's Frank Barr scored with just three seconds left to capture a 62-60 win in Davis Gym. The last time Bucknell and Lafayette met, co-captain Bryan Bailey '02 hit a 3-point shot with 11 seconds to go to give the Bison the victory on the last shot. The Bison were also defeated at home Saturday against Navy 71-56, bringing the Bucknell losing streak to four games, the longest this season.

"We came out of the block (against Lafayette) and wanted this game badly," Bucknell head coach and tied the score at 51 points apiece with 6:35 to go in the game. A spectacular reverse dunk by Boakai La-lugba '03 during that stretch-off a missed layup by Brian Bailey '02 helped spur the comeback and bring the crowd back into the game.

Two successive Bailey 3-pointers gave the Bison a four-point lead at 57-53, but Lafayette was able to tie the game at 58 points and then take the lead themselves on a Frank Barr layup with just a minute to go.

So down two points in the waning moments of the game, the Bison did what they have done all season: put the outcome in the hands of Bryan Bailey. The All-Patriot League point guard was able to draw a foul with 32 seconds left and banged home both his free throws, knotting the game at 60 points.

Then, patiently waiting until less than ten ticks on the game-clock remained, the Leopards executed the last play of the game almost perfectly. The ball was sent from the top of the key to a waiting Barr inside, who reached over the Bison defender for the game-winning layup.

"It was a big game for us on the road," said Barr. "We had lapses at times, but we played with more intensity in the second." Barr finished the game with 16 points and nine rebounds as well as the game-winning layup.

"We wanted to pressure him and make him work, but it just opened up inside," said Flannery.

The loss drops Bucknell to 2-6 in the division and into a divisional tie with Lafayette.

The Bison were led on the night by a superior effort by Lalugba, who finished with 20 points and nine rebounds. Also scoring in double figures for the Bison were Bailey and Jake Ramage '04, who had 14 and 11 points, respectively. This game also marks the first time since Dec. 9 that Ramage has breached the double-figure barrier.

Lafayette was led offensively by Barr's 16 points as well as 11 points by Justin DeBerry and 10 points by Tim Beig.

Bucknell's previous game against Navy followed much the same storyline as the loss against Lafayette, resulting in a 71-58

See BASKETBALL, page A6

Grapplers endure grueling week

Squad remains positive after 36-9 defeat to Bloomsburg and 37-11 loss to Buffalo

By PAT EVANS
Staff Writer

Bucknell faced one of the toughest stretches on their schedule this week, competing against Bloomsburg and Buffalo at home. Going up against top-notch wrestlers, compounded with injuries for the Bison, led to two losses for the squad.

The Orange and Blue struggled early against Bloomsburg, as they were down 22-0 to begin. The opening matches were against challenging, nationally ranked opponents, and the Bison were unable to get anything together.

Tommy Doerr '02 lost a close match to 13th-ranked George Carter at 149 pounds. The match was a microcosm of the entire meet, as the Bison continued to come up just short against Bloomsburg's top wrestlers.

"We gave up four or five points sometimes against nationally ranked kids," coach Tim Wittman said. "That makes it tough to win."

Junior Ben Chunko lost his first dual meet of the year 8-3 to Cassidy Shults, who is ranked sixteenth overall. "I can't afford to

Chris Rivera—The Bucknellian

Brian Neuman '02 fights to gain positioning against a Bloomsburg foe.

make mistakes like I did against a kid of that caliber," Chunko said. "I'm trying to work on staying focused for the whole match."

Sophomore Carl Perrone was able to get the Bison on the board with an 11-5 decision, and Freshman Jeremy Weller won a forfeit at 141 pounds. But it was too little too late, as Bloomsburg's explosive start was too much to handle. The Bison fell 36-9.

Buffalo proved to be just as difficult of a match for Bucknell, as they were once again dominated. The Bulls jumped out to a 12-0 lead, winning a forfeit and a fall at 149 and 157 pounds respectively.

Doerr was unable to compete because of a dislocated shoulder suffered in the Bloomsburg match. Unlike the match against Bloomsburg, the Bison were able to battle back against Buffalo, and for a while it looked like they may be able to take the lead.

Fasnacht believes that the team has to be resilient to succeed this weekend when the Bison will host Lock Haven, Millersville, and Seton Hall.

"Even if we come out with a loss, we have to realize that there are two more meets, and that we can bounce back," Fasnacht said.

The Bison are confident that they will bounce back from this difficult stretch. But the rest of the season doesn't get any easier.

"These are three tough teams, and they're back to back matches," Wittman said. "We have to be ready to go the whole day."

THE Bucknellian

February 9, 2001

PART 2

Weekend Weather

Weather courtesy of weather.com

Hi: 56
Low: 39
Friday

Hi: 51
Low: 24
Saturday

Hi: 41
Low: 22
Sunday

Chris Rivera—The Bucknellian

Joined at the Head draws rave reviews

By AMY PELOQUIN
Senior Writer

Last Friday and Saturday evening, Harvey Powers Theatre boasted a brilliant presentation of "Joined at the Head," a showcase directed by Hillary DePiano '02 and stage managed by Heather Little '04.

"Joined at the Head," by Catherine Butterfield, plays out an age-old story of past meets present. Maggie Mulrone, a writer, returns to her hometown for a couple of days and is surprised by a call from her high school boyfriend, Jim Burroughs. Maggie accepts Jim's invitation to dinner with him and his wife, Maggy (with a "y") Burroughs. Before the two women meet, Jim reveals that Maggy has cancer. Maggie doesn't seem to know how to react to this news, and the meeting starts out with some awkwardness. However, Maggy embraces her as a long-lost friend, and her warmth and honesty soon puts Maggie at ease.

Thus begins a story of two women forming a rare friendship, and the struggle and courage it takes to let go of the ones you love. However, this play is not all solemnity and seriousness. In fact, it inspired a lot of laughs as the audience never knew what was coming next. Probably one of the greatest and funniest surprises was when Maggie, who is sporadically stepping out of the narrative to tell her story to the audience, is interrupted by Maggy, who also chose to Cizmar, as Maggy Burroughs, was very convincing as a victim of cancer. A kerchief covered her head (as a result of hair loss from chemotherapy) and her face was very pale. As she spoke, her breathing was shaky and laborious. All of her movements were slow, and it made one believe that she was truly in pain. She was a 30-year-old cancer patient—not a 19-year-old college student.

"It was the most challenging role I've ever had to execute," Cizmar said. "I learned a lot. I did research on how cancer patients feel while responding to chemotherapy, and I read some accounts of how cancer can affect family life. It was really a sobering experience to act out the part of such a heartrending story."

See JOINED, page B6

See TEAL, page B7.

Chris Rivera—The Bucknellian

Misty Trezona '02 and Trevor Rutledge-Leverenz '01 show off their stuff.

step out of the narrative. Maggy criticizes the way that Maggie has been telling the story and begins to tell the story from her own side. The teasing and lively interaction between Maggie and Maggy was portrayed well through the abilities of Misty Trezona '02 and Abby Cizmar '03.

"Perhaps one of the best elements of this play is the way that Butterfield toys with the idea of storytelling and backdrop versus main character," DePiano said. "Maggie muses 'How often do we think of ourselves as somebody else's backdrop? Not too often I guess.' Yet she is determined to tell Maggy's story with herself as merely the narrator, the backdrop, though her own story keeps sneaking into the foreground. The entire play itself is, in effect, Maggie's book that she is writing and rewriting in front of the audience."

Trezona played the part of Maggie Mulrone, and the audience was able to sympathize with her as she wrestled with past feelings for Jim, Maggy's sickness, and her own heartache about her father's death. Trezona's talent for embracing the multi-faceted monologues of her character and Maggy's pensive outlook on life rendered the play a truly realistic and fascinating performance.

Elizabeth Muller joins her fellow Malaria Control Team Two workers at the Nata River during her independent study project in Botswana.

See page B5 for this week's abroad perspective.

Photo courtesy of Elizabeth Muller

FORUM

EDITORIAL

Tuition hike a necessary evil

President Rogers recommended recently that annual tuition be raised by 5.64%, bringing the yearly comprehensive fee to $30,772. While this may seem like a dramatic increase and it is the University must cover the rising expenditures required to maintain our current level of growth.

The University is a growing institution and with that comes growing costs. The current construction boom on campus enhances its appearance and function. Making room for new courses and departments, easing the housing squeeze, improving our athletic and recreation facilities to become one of the best in the Patriot League as well as generally improving much of the older infrastructure truly benefits everyone in the campus community.

We agree with most of the enhanced programs and initiatives undertaken in the past five years that necessitated the increase in costs—most importantly the compensation of the faculty.

President Rogers noted that the University pays the faculty respectably less than many of our "frame of reference" schools.

The Bucknellian staff applauds the six percent increase; in keeping with President Rogers' vision of being a more nationally recognized university, we must be able to attract and retain superior staff.

The Capital Campaign proved to be widely successful in providing financial support for the University. As a direct result, we gained facilities' funding, increased annual giving and an endowment that grew to unprecedented levels.

It is ironic, then, that we are facing a substantial tuition increase the year after the Campaign's completion.

Such a dramatic increase in tuition is sure to worry countless students and their families; the administration has said that they will "try" to raise aid in correlation to the tuition increase but it may still cause problems for students of all income levels.

The increase brings the comprehensive fee to above $30,000—a daunting number that may deter applicants. What good are top-notch facilities if no one can afford to take advantage of them?

This is the largest increase in recent memory. A two percent increase implemented at the end of last year met with opposition. Perhaps these increases are necessary to support our current growth and financial situation but will fade when the University is back on stable ground.

The editorial staff of The Bucknellian feels inclined to blame the increase on poor timing. The result of rapid improvement and increased national exposure for the University will surely benefit students in the years to come.

bucknellian@bucknell.edu

Happy 21st Birthday to Pete
"Voltron" Van Emburgh!

Give him the gift that keeps on giving ... write for Ops!

Contact April (ajohn@) for more info

Editors-in-Chief
Rebecca Rowland '02
Peter Van Emburgh '02

Managing Editor
Jim Leahy '03

Senior Editors
Matt Albert '01
Heather Napolitano '01
Matt Trunnell '01
Brian Watson '01

Business Manager
Mark Langer '02

News Editors
Laura Day '03
Natalie Casp '02
News Layout Editor
Rachel Laskow '03

Business and Politics Editor
Michael Boland '03

Forum Editor
April John '03
Forum Layout Editor
Peter Hackeman '04

Features Editor
Sandi-Jo Galati '04
Jolene Hart '03
Features Layout Editor
Jason Rubinstein '04

Arts and Entertainment Editor
Krista Reisdorf '02
Arts and Entertainment Layout Editor
Kristi Johnston '03

Letters to the Editor

Disbelief over Dunkin Donuts service

To the Editor,

I read with great interest and, I must admit, disbelief an article in The Bucknellian a few weeks ago about the "friendly service" at Dunkin Donuts. Of all my experiences at this 24-hour establishment, "friendly" is not a word I would use to describe them.

I'm sure that a large number of Bucknell students would agree with me about this.

Undoubtedly, the unfriendly service at Dunkin Donuts is due in some part to obnoxious, drunk students who come in for a late night/early morning snack after a night of wild partying. Yet, I can attest to several sober visits that were not met with the friendly service that Natalie Casp described in her article.

One time, probably around midnight, two of my friends and I went to the Dunkin Donuts drive-thru to get some egg and cheese sandwiches. As we began ordering the third sandwich, the voice came over the intercom, refusing the third sandwich, stating, "only two sandwiches can be ordered at the drive-thru."

This was interesting; the sign posted at the drive-thru said that no more than two breakfast sandwiches were to be ordered between the hours of 6 a.m. and 12 p.m.

This is logical; the busiest time for Dunkin Donuts has to be the morning rush. Instead of asking about this at the drive-thru, we went inside to order our three sandwiches.

Once inside, I asked the woman who was working about this rule. With a grunt, she replied that no more than two breakfast sandwich orders were to be placed at the drive-thru at any time. She ignored my mention of the sign and, since I was starving, I decided to drop the issue.

When asked if we wanted anything to drink with our order, I asked for tap water.

"We don't have tap water," was the reply from behind the counter. No tap water? Interesting. Although Dunkin Donuts surely has sinks, they adamantly refuse natural drinking water to their customers.

Another problem one might encounter while visiting Dunkin Donuts at odd hours of the night is the possible invasion of privacy. My friend Suzanne tells this story best, but I will try to relate it.

The night before winter break, Suzanne got a craving for some Dunkin Donuts, so after a long night of packing, she went with one of her housemates. Instead of simply serving them, a worker asked the two what they were doing up at such a late hour and why they were there. If that is not beyond the call of duty, then I do not know what is.

If Dunkin Donuts provides twenty-four hour service, obviously there is great enough demand for it. The people who work the night shift should not get annoyed when people come in at all hours of the night and morning. They are offering a service, and we are paying for that service.

All we want is a bagel and cream cheese from an establishment that is always open without the rudeness from its workers.

Sincerely,
Stacey Gawronski '03

FLAG&BT's "Freedom to Marry Week"

To the Editor,

National Freedom to Marry Day is coming up on Feb. 12, two days before that most romantic of occasions, Valentine's Day. You may ask: freedom to marry? Don't we already have that? And yes, a lot of us do. However, nowhere in this country can same-sex couples receive the same benefits that heterosexual married couples do—even if they obtain a civil union.

Getting married is not simply about signing an official document, having a ceremony, and throwing a big party. There are many legal and financial benefits for married couples in this country, benefits that are denied same-sex couples because our country does not recognize same-sex marriage.

Some of these entitlements seem minor, such as the ability to file joint tax returns. But others have a huge impact on the people involved.

A married person has the right to make crucial medical decisions regarding his/her spouse (including termination of life support); to apply for immigration and residency for a partner from another country; to inherit automatically in the absence of a will; and to share Social Security and Medicare benefits.

Marriage entails these and many other basic rights—however, same-sex couples do not have access to them. The loss of a partner could be made that much more devastating if the surviving partner cannot legally take bereavement leave, choose the final resting place of the deceased, obtain wrongful death benefits, or retain custody of a child (all of which are entitlements of marriage).

How would you feel if you were denied visitation rights to your loved one because you were neither family nor legal spouse? People in same-sex partnerships deal with these issues every day, while heterosexual married couples do not even have to think about them.

Lesbian and gay couples should have the right to marry. Even though Vermont recently passed legislation to recognize civil unions, the benefits included in this recognition are not equal to those that are automatically awarded to every heterosexual married couple.

Only 34 years ago, the U.S. government lifted state bans on interracial marriage; before that time, marriage between people of different races was considered "unnatural," and that is the word many people would use to describe a same-sex marriage.

But in 2001, interracial marriage is considered normal, and gay couples are increasingly seen as such. It is time that we opened our minds and hearts to see that two people who love each other—despite gender or race—should be allowed to show their commitment through legal marriage.

At Bucknell, we will be celebrating "Freedom to Marry Week" Feb. 12-16 in the LC Uphill lobby. People may obtain purple ribbons to show their support for same-sex marriage legislation, and sign a petition in favor of the Marriage Resolution.

We will also post graffiti boards around campus, on which interested persons may express their feelings on matters regarding same-sex marriage. Please show your support during this week, and we will be one step closer to the goal of equality—in life and love—for all. For more information on Freedom to Marry efforts, go to www.lambdalegal.org, the website of the Lambda Legal Defense and Education Fund.

Sincerely,
Megan Rancier '01
President of FLAG&BT

Remember the simple things of life

By MATTHEW HINSON
Staff Writer

The college years are, without question, some of the most fun of our lives. Studying things that interest you, sleeping when you feel like it, partying as hard as you study.

Yet, in another light, it is the beginning of the end.

The orgy of freedom we are granted during these four years is our only opportunity to truly express ourselves, unconstrained by parents, surroundings, or work.

In four years, I will be forced by this society to get a job in something related to my chosen field of study.

Granted, it is possible that I will enjoy my job—I chose this path by choosing the major I did. But no longer will I determine totally what I do and when—that will be determined by my boss, or by my duty to work (and desire to keep the company afloat) if I should have my own company.

No matter what we study, no matter how long, the outcome is the same—we retire for forty years and then retire, hoping that our Social Security and other investments have paid for our retirement.

Granted, it's fun now, but for what? So we can be like everyone else? The mantra in the States is to be yourself—be an individual. The reality is that everyone has to work (unless you are fortunate enough to invent something that makes you a millionaire.)

I remember when I was young, I would fish with my father, eat meals with my family, be with friends from school. Those were definitely the "good old days."

Yes, college is fun—but still, a part of me longs for the simple things.

THE BUCKNELLIAN

Founded in 1896 as The Blue and Orange

Volume 127, Number 3

C-3952 BUCKNELL UNIVERSITY
LEWISBURG, PENNSYLVANIA, 17837
(570)-577-1520

BUCKNELLIAN@BUCKNELL.EDU
HTTP://WWW.ORGs.BUCKNELL.EDU/BUCKNELLIAN

EDITORIAL POLICY

The editorials of The Bucknellian reflect the consensus of the Editorial Board as to the topics and general position. If a consensus could not be reached, the opinions expressed are those of the Editors-in-Chief.

All other opinion material represents the views of the author and not necessarily those of The Bucknellian.

PUBLISHING POLICY

The Bucknellian is written, edited and published on 12 Fridays during each academic semester entirely by Bucknell students. The Bucknellian's fiscal affairs are overseen by an Advisory Board comprised of faculty, staff and administrators. All published material is chosen by the paper's editorial board without prior review by the Advisory Board, its adviser, the University or Bucknell Student Government.

SUBSCRIPTIONS POLICY

Subscriptions are available $45 per year and $30 per semester. To subscribe, send payment and address information to: The Bucknellian Subscriptions, Box C-3952, Lewisburg, PA 17837. Subscriptions are mailed first-class on the Monday of publication. Please send change-of-address information to the above location as well.

ADVERTISING POLICY

The Editorial Board of The Bucknellian reserves the right to deny any advertisements if offensive, illegal or in bad taste. For advertising rates, please contact the advertising managers at (570) 577-1085.

Copyright 2001 The Bucknellian

Science and Technology Editors

Lynne Waldman '01
Josiana Cetta '04

Sports Editors

Carmen Mauriello '02
Brooke Rea '02
Sports Layout Editor
Andrew Burr '04
Sports Statistician
Matthew Herbert '02

Darkroom Manager
Chris Rivera '02

Photo Editors
Paige Cull '01
Chris Rivera '02

Local Advertising Representative

Bryan Prins '04

National Advertising Representative

Amy Peloquin '03

Online Editors

Eric Fair '01
Brendan Putnam '03

Circulation Manager
Brian Klotz '03

Head Copy Editors
Kim Luedde '01
Debbie Ruggieri '01

Production Manager
Nick Olsen '02

Adviser
James F. Lee

FORUM

Locking Horns
Guys versus Girls ... Who wins?
Guys Girls

By ETHAN EYLER

Staff Writer

Over the past few years, while actively undergoing my transition from boyhood to manhood, I have come to the not-so-startling conclusion that the male being is the inherently superior gender.

You ladies may take me for a chauvinist pig, but I like to consider myself more of a realist.

So, before you women turn to the next pager or flip on "Sex in the City," take a few minutes of your time to read what I have to say while I shatter your perception of gender equality in humanity.

I will start by citing just a few of the thousands of examples demonstrating male superiority.

Men have been bestowed with a far superior ability to control their emotions. Men know that there are times to cry and go into hysterics—not at the party after two beers—and times to hold back and keep composure.

Secondly, men do not waste all of their time worrying about trivial things such as what they are going to wear for the next week, or whether their rear-end is looking a little bigger than it did an hour before (better get the light salad dressing on the side tonight).

Further solidifying man's superiority over woman is the relationship of loyalty and trust in a male friendship. Women are all smiles and compliments when they are together, but as soon as the unlucky girl leaves she is the immediate topic of discussion.

Guys would tell her the truth, or say nothing at all, but definitely not lie, and in doing so, lead friends to believe that their haircut looks "fabulous."

An additional point that indirectly validates why men are much more efficient at their job, and at the workplace, is the amount of time women spend preparing to "go out," whether it be to the kitchen supply store or the office.

Men can wake up, shower, shave, and be out the door in twenty minutes, a feat that mysteriously seems to take women an hour. With this extra time, men can accomplish tasks that, had they been done by a woman would be forty minutes late.

In conclusion, and in no attempt to discredit my point or to calm all of you infuriated women who are reading this article, I will give women credit for holding one thing over men—the ability to bear children.

You see, we do need you for something, but with modern science there's no telling what the future will bring.

"Superwoman Syndrome" takes hold

By ALLYSON DEMERATH
Senior Writer

Choosing my major was a very stressful thing. I was not one of those people that knew I would be a doctor from the time I was two, nor was I a natural with the talent and burning desire to create music or art.

In reality, there were a variety of fields that appealed to me, the problem was deciding which one to pursue. Many friends and relatives offered words of wisdom and tried to give me advice. Some told me to follow whatever I truly interested me so that I would be challenged throughout college.

They claimed my major would not dictate my career and I should not choose something based on whether or not I could use it to make a lot of money. Others told me to "test out" different courses in my areas of interest and evaluate what I liked best.

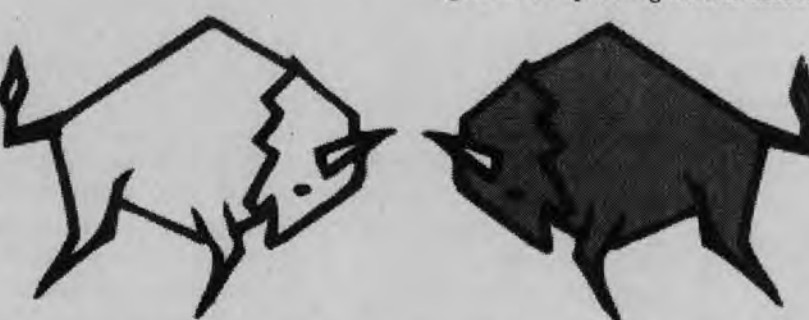

One particular male told me to choose a major that would allow me to have a career where I could still have and care for children; strange, he never said that to my brother. In fact, my brother was encouraged to attend the law school where he is now, and no one even mentioned having a family.

Increasingly, I have become more aware of the obstacles women face in balancing have a career with having a life.

Now before you stop reading this article and call me a "raging feminist," I would like to explain something. If you look "feminism" up in the dictionary, it will define the word as "a doctrine that advocates or demands for women the same rights granted men, as in political or economic status."

Thus, yes, you could label me as a feminist. I do believe that women should have the same rights as men, and this includes being able to pursue whatever career they want.

Plus, I think that old out-of-touch relatives should mind their own business when it comes to me deciding my career.

By KRISTEN BARTON

Staff Writer

When I sat down to write this article, I tried to think honestly and without bias about which gender is superior. After careful and calculated consideration, I know only one thing for sure: WOMEN are the superior gender. Don't get me wrong, I love guys and without them, I think the world would be pretty dull but when it comes down to the wire, women prevail.

Let me start at the beginning. The evidence is overwhelming. Males are proven to mature at a much slower pace than women. Take high school for example; while girls were already emotionally and physically mature, guys were still scrawny beanpoles who weighed, on the average, less than a couple of 10-speed bikes, and couldn't give a speech in class without their voices cracking.

Girls, on the other hand, already had poise, beauty and the ability to get out of speeding tickets merely by crying.

Now, as we're on our way to being full-grown adults, I still find women to be superior to men. Girls don't spend their prime college days sitting on a couch idolizing sports stars and dreaming of their fifteen minutes of fame on "Sportscenter." (Furthermore, girls don't find themselves on that same couch 25 years later with a beer gut larger than their bank account.)

Once off of the couch, girls can find their way to wherever they want to go by simply asking for directions, a feat that guys have not yet mastered.

Women do not take pride in primitive activities such as writing their names in urine, but rather enjoy the finer things in life like sitting comfortably to use the bathroom. Girls do not spout off, argue and exaggerate the size of their "appendages," or order Swedish devices to enhance them.

Girls can be strong and independent, but can also openly cry and show their emotions; guys are considered weak when they cry over anything, besides being kicked in the groin.

Females do not consider spraying cologne a shower, or grunting a form of communication. They form real friendships that are not based on beer, sports or fraternities, and they know that the words, "Dude, that sucks," are not words of comfort.

Overall, women are simply superior to men. And although it is a common misconception by men that women are the weaker sex, men beware! We have you wrapped around our fingers every time we smile. We women are continually undermining you, but you are too busy playing video games to notice.

when it comes to me deciding my career.

Do I think men and women are very different? Yes. Do I think that means we should follow different career paths simply because we are different? No.

However, this does not mean that I hate all men and blame them for earning a dollar for every 79 cents I will make, although it does anger me a bit. I find it unfair and unacceptable that some people think I should make a career decision based on caring for children. If I chose to do that for myself, that is perfectly fine.

However, to have it dictated to me as though I am incapable of making my own decisions is simply ludicrous.

Now, am I going to go and hold a bra burning session on the academic quad about it? Most likely not. However, I am going to offer my insights on some of the issues I see here on campus.

Many of my female friends have decided to have children for a few years, then go back to work.

The only problem is, in the years that they take off, they become obsolete. They will no longer gain the new skills needed in their career. So then what do they do? Others don't want to take any time off work after they have children, if they decided to have children at all. I think it's sad that we have to worry about things like this in our 20s. We are supposed to be touring Europe and discovering ourselves.

The more we talk about it, the more complex and intricate the issue becomes. At 22, I don't have any amazing answers or rules to follow. Sadly, neither does anyone else, because we are the first generation to face this particular set of standards, as they are always changing.

The only thing my friends and I have recognized is that we can't do what society, our culture, our parents, our peers, or anyone else tells us to do.

Rather, we have to make our own decisions, recognizing that each individual's decision is personalized to her. What may work for one person could be another person's nightmare.

Thus, we must evaluate our own goals and priorities and do what we feel is best for ourselves without criticizing others.

Sometimes, though, a cause comes along that is so important and so clearly noble that one has to wonder why it hasn't aroused more support.

Maybe some people think the death penalty is a great idea. Maybe some want the environment to be destroyed. But, could anyone possibly be opposed to reuniting a family?

Until recently, I assumed the answer was no. I learned my lesson.

It all started, as so many things do these days, on the Internet, where I stumbled across a site asking me if I might be one of "Jay's Kids."

Jay, as it turned out, was semi-legendary rocker Screamin' Jay Hawkins, best known for his single, "I Put a Spell on You," who, alas, had recently passed away. One of his last wishes was for all his children to get together one last time.

This is where the problem arises. According to varying estimates, Hawkins was the father of somewhere between 57 and 75 children. Not surprisingly, they don't all live in the same house, and so locating some of them has proven difficult. To help fulfill the last request of this slightly influential rock 'n' roll star, the Web page provided a printable flyer bearing a picture of Hawkins and these instructions: "If you believe you may have had a child by Screamin' Jay Hawkins, or if you believe you are a child of Screamin' Jay Hawkins, please go to www.jayskids.com for submission of information."

Suddenly, I knew what I had to do. I would print up several hundred of the flyers and, with the help of my brave comrades, post them all over campus. If one of Jay's kids was going to school here and didn't hear about the gathering, I couldn't forgive myself. I would hit the library, the LC, the field house... if one of Jay's kids was out there (and statistically, that was practically a given), I would find him.

But, when I tried to enlist aid for this noble cause, I was rebuffed by selfish students (and I probably shouldn't talk about my friends this way) who apparently had better things to do than head the gaping wound in Screamin' Jay's sunderead family. I know my limits, and posting hundreds of flyers, to say nothing of making hundreds of flyers, seemed too much for one man to do. I posted only one flyer. It is in my room. To date, no one has come forward to respond.

Now, we find ourselves in the eleventh hour. This Monday, Feb. 12, on the one-year anniversary of Hawkins' death, the scattered tribes of Screamin' Jay descendants will converge on the House of Blues in Los Angeles for their first-ever meeting.

Somewhere around here (probably someplace in Swartz), it seems safe to assume that there is an excessively libidinous college student with a penchant for the theatrical and a natural talent for screaming. To that student, and to Screamin' Jay, I sincerely apologize. Were it not for the apathy of myself and my generation, you might finally be meeting your siblings. It's one thing to turn our collective back while greedy corporations conquer the earth, but now we've broken a family. I just don't know what to say anymore.

Do you know where your (75) children are?

By DAVID MCGREEVY
Senior Writer

From time to time, you will hear a lot of fuss in the media about how the youth of today doesn't get involved in protests, movements, causes, etc. to the extent that they should. I wouldn't necessarily say I disagree with this claim, but I dismissed it, inasmuch as I don't particularly care. Which, I suppose, proves precisely the point of those who say such things. But, I wasn't worried.

Some times, though, a cause comes along that is so important and so clearly noble that one has to wonder why it hasn't aroused more support.

Maybe some people think the death penalty is a great idea. Maybe some want the environment to be destroyed. But, could anyone possibly be opposed to reuniting a family?

Until recently, I assumed the answer was no. I learned my lesson.

It all started, as so many things do these days, on the Internet, where I stumbled across a site asking me if I

Is our President human?

By GRETCHEN SCHROCK
Opinions Columnist

President Bush is the last person one would expect to be involved in a human rights debate, considering that he governed over more executions in the state of Texas than the Grim Reaper. However, at the beginning of his administration's rule in the White House, he has to decide what his policy will be towards the human rights violations in China.

FEATURES

Tracy Shaynak provides health-related resources to students

By MELISSA FARRAR
Staff Writer

Tracy Shaynak is a woman with endless energy and enthusiasm. As the director of the University's Community Health Department, you may recognize her as the person who has brought the popular "Rest and Relaxation" sessions to our dorms. From her office in the Langone Center, Tracy works daily to promote the good health and overall wellness of the University's students. Shaynak also works closely with a number of other organizations, including the Residence Hall CHOICE program, Bucknell ALIVE, Psychological Services and the Health Center. Shaynak's mission, along with the rest of the Community Health Department, is to bring health education to students by offering presentations from visiting speakers and providing quality resources and information to the campus community.

"Tracy's first priority is helping out students and faculty. She's always doing something for someone else," Ali Landgraf, a sophomore who works with the Bucknell ALIVE program, said.

The Community Health Department had just been established when Tracy Shaynak arrived on campus in the fall of 1998. Her husband, Michael Shaynak, also works at the University as assistant director of admissions. Tracy is originally from Cincinnati, Ohio, where she received her undergraduate degree in Interpersonal Communication at Ohio University. She earned her master's degree in Wellness and Gerontology from Ball State University's Fisher Institute.

Tracy explained the importance of health awareness, saying, "Health issues are all-encompassing. Students make choices and form patterns during their four years of college that will affect their future. They learn not only what they are going to be, but also who ing their spots next year should contact me!"

One of the most popular events that Shaynak has brought to the University is the "Rest and Relaxation" program. This program allows dorm residents to learn new ways to relieve the stress that is so common amidst their busy lives, using massage and yoga techniques taught by a professional.

Another residence hall program that Shaynak works with is CHOICE, a substance-free hall program. She believes that this is a very positive option for residents, since students in these halls choose to set healthy standards for their life. "They choose to remain substance free and maintain a level of quality in their halls that they all agree upon," Shaynak explained.

As if she didn't have enough responsibility with her other work, Shaynak also finds time to be an advisor for the Bucknell Dance Team. She says she's thrilled to be working with the girls who are "incredibly hard working, talented and committed."

Shaynak emphasizes that there are numerous resources on campus and students should feel free to tap into them. "Don't be afraid to ask questions. I get so many emails from students after they come to our health programs. People often want to know what to do to help a friend with an eating disorder or things of that sort," she said.

As Tracy Shaynak clearly makes it her job to help people, she welcomes students to contact her and take advantage of the resources that are available at the University.

Tracy Shaynak is very active in the University in everything from the CHOICE program to the Bucknell Dance Team.

they are." She added that people come to college with a great deal of misinformation about health, often fed to them by the media. Shaynak hopes that, by giving students the correct facts, they will be able to make good decisions regarding sex, alcohol and body image.

Through the Community Health Department, Shaynak supervises the Body Image Peer Education program. "Six peer educators go out and present things that we can do to promote positive body image," she said. "We have a great group of educators, but unfortunately four of them will be graduating this year. Anyone interested in tak-

African-American history affected by lynching

By SHAMEKA GREENE AND KELLEN SMITH
Contributing Writers

When William Lynch first introduced his pamphlet on how to control and tame a slave, he could not have foreseen the destruction to follow. At first, the lynchings were not predominately of slaves, but of African Americans and Europeans. However, lynching developed into a tool for disciplining free blacks during the Reconstruction era.

The popular belief is that lynching was a major part in disciplining slaves, but slave masters did not find it economically sound to destroy their property. The only slaves that were lynched were those that were leaders of major uprisings.

Lynching was used during the Reconstruction era to keep free blacks "in their place." Lynching became so popular that it was soon a social event. People would come, with children in tow, and spend a family outing at a lynching, bringing blankets to sit on and food in baskets.

Other occurrences that display what a popular affair lynching became are the pictures taken at the time. These pictures show people standing around and enjoying the life being drained from another human being for a crime that he or she may or may not have committed. These pictures were sometimes sent to friends and family that were not able to be present at the event with messages saying, "Having fun... wish you were here!"

One major voice in the fight against lynching was Ida B. Wells. Wells would collect information about the lynchings and write articles about them, which sometimes led to further investigation of these events. She spoke out against this phenomenon and its effect on the black psyche.

Despite her efforts and those of many others, enumerable amounts of people were lynched around the United States. Here in Pennsylvania from 1889-1940, 3 men were known to have been lynched: Dennis Hampton (Barnesville, PA on May 23, 1891), David Pierce (Dunbar, on Dec. 13, 1899), Zachariah Walker (Coatesville, on Aug. 13, 1911). Of course there may also be many more victims that we do not have information about.

Entire families found themselves the victims of lynching when several of their members or the whole family were taken and killed at one time. In Alabama this occurred 12 times.

There are also occurrences of mass lynchings in Alabama. This happened twice, with five people killed in Greenville on April 21, 1895 and five in Wetumpka on June 17, 1898.

The number of people known to be lynched in Alabama may be steep, but not as steep as Georgia, Arkansas or the Carolinas, whose victims' names, upon printing of the source for this article, came to more than five pages.

Lynching was a tool that helped shape the history of African Americans by placing in it a sense of fear of whites and their rules, which determined the actions of blacks in the urban and rural areas.

Article Sources:

<http://www.spartacus.schoolnet.co.uk/USALynching.htm>

<http://www.charter.uchicago.edu/AAH/>

For Rent Fall Semester 2001

Off Campus - 4 miles
Outside Winfield
Completely furnished
5-7 bedrooms, 3 baths
Private parking
Safe

Call Joe
743-8308

Celebrate V-day

An Insider's Perspective on The Vagina Monologues, a Features commentary by Keeley Patterson

The setting: University fashion capital of the world, where preppy, upper-middle-class women strut through the cafeteria and academic quad daily, sporting styles straight off the runways. Would one ever think to consider the treasure that is so discreetly hidden beneath the expensive fabrics? Does anyone around here really appreciate or respect the vagina?

I chose to begin a new paragraph here, lending you time to push your eyes back into their sockets. Now, when was the last time you witnessed someone cringe at the sound of the word penis? I would bet never.

I believe that the rate in which society has accepted the penis but rejected the vagina shadows the years of inequality between the sexes. Come on, references to male genitalia, such as penis envy or "Big Johnson" rule our communities. Do you think Austin Powers would have been as big of a box office hit if airline attendants had uncovered a Swedish-made vagina enlarger pump in Powers' suitcase? "The Penis Game" is even dedicated to spreading the word about the male organ, the object being to take turns saying the word penis with increasing volume. There you have it, the one proclaiming the word penis the loudest wins the high and mighty champion. Well not in my game.

You see, vaginas have surrounded me for the past four years of my life. The hallways of the Catholic all-girls high school that I attended were filled with kil-wearing, females. Rarely did we think about our parts, however, as the nuns had strictly advised us to keep our vaginas hidden until after marriage. I wouldn't consider myself a feminist, or even an activist, just a confident woman desperate to make a statement. That's why I responded to the email that waited in my Outlook Express last November.

As I remember, the title "V-day coming to Bucknell" sparked my curiosity. I read on to learn that students, faculty and women from the surrounding communities were invited to participate in an effort to create a special, one-time only performance of the recently famed and controversial play, "The Vagina Monologues," at my new school. Immediately, I felt the passion burning inside of me.

I was about to invest in a project that both excited and inspired me. Before clicking the respond button, however, something inside caused me to hesitate. I heard the whispers of my mother telling me to act like a lady, along with scolding of the nuns to pull my kil down a little lower and my knee socks up a little higher. Dismissing these voices, I decided that I was in college now, and it was time to make my own decisions.

Approximately one week later, I found myself dragging my new friend, Sarah, to the Art Gallery, where the very first official meeting for "The Vagina Monologues" was to take place. Despite her initial doubts of being able to perform in the play, due to a permanent case of stage fright, she was an extremely opinionated woman. A self-proclaimed "equalist," I figured she'd serve as an active support at the interest meeting.

Upon our arrival, the room appeared to be the generational melting pot for women. I stammered, "Is this meeting for uh, the play?" Pathetic! The script that I was about to be handed had the word vagina printed an infinitesimal number of times throughout, and I couldn't bear to say it in front of the project leaders! In tune with their needs and giggles my stunted questioning had produced, I led Sarah to join with the seated circle.

After introductions were made, the director chose a piece from the script called "I Was Twelve, My Mother Slapped Me," asking for volunteers to read aloud the parts of Women one, two, and three. I sneaked a peek; it was about menstruation. Periods—I remember flinching at the mere thought of them; I hated talking about my period... so why was my hand raising? I was chosen as Woman three, but before we could begin, something happened that I didn't expect. One of the faculty members suggested that we each share stories about our first period, and what it meant to us. She felt it might help us loosen up and get to know each other better. No offense, but I didn't want to know any of those women better in that way. Completely uncomfortable, I found myself sitting in what I believed to be a circle of feminist, engaging in some sort of female-bonding ritual.

Just as I had finished covering my face and rolling my eyeballs at Sarah, some unleashed force inside of me told me my story anyway. "It was New Years Eve, I was getting ready for an eighth grade party." After admitting that truth, I felt a new kind of freedom overcome me. And as I read the story of woman number three, I felt more empowered than ever before, with each word that I spoke. Guess what? Sarah read a part too, and revealed to me that this project, this movement, made her stage fright worth facing.

We raced home that night, tightly grasping our scripts. Reading through the fascinatingly risqué collection of monologues, I proclaimed my awe and admiration for Eve Ensler and her creation, "The Vagina Monologues." Instructed to pick the monologue that interested us most, it was hard to choose from such a wide assortment of worthy pieces. So many of them hit home for me. One story would make my heart drop, the next would crack me up, and another would challenge my ignorance, while another would start the tears rolling.

Upon my return to school, what you might hear referred to as "V-day" has been reved back into full gear. I was informed, via email, that I have been awarded one of the more emotionally dramatic monologues. Not only will I be saying the word vagina, but another genital nickname that my character uses in describing her rape trauma and liberating sexual experimentation.

Investing the best of my ability into rehearsal each night, I still fear that my voice will not live up to the moving memories that I feel so honored to be exposing. I am reassured by remembering that my fellow cast mates, who are not so much feminists after all, will be onstage beside me. We were strangers, but now friends. We are women lending our voices and souls in portrayal of the most intriguing, well-awaited vagina truths ever!

Though I find myself both nervous and thrilled to reveal the sexually explicit nature of my monologue to the University, I am hesitant to invite my own parents to see the show. In his emails, my dad still refers to the play as the "VM." How is a man so frightened of the word vagina going to feel seeing his daughter proclaiming and celebrating it onstage? We'll have to wait and see this Saturday, Feb. 10, because it's V-day at the University and our secrets are going to be revealed!

Sarah Wilson and Keeley Patterson sell tickets for The Vagina Monologues. Tickets are on sale today in the Langone Center Mall and Box Office and will be playing at Harvey Powers Theatre tomorrow.

An abroad perspective: a semester in Botswana

By ELIZABETH MULLER
Contributing Writer

"You went where?"
This sentence is the most common response I get from people when asked about my semester abroad experience in Botswana.

ter abroad experience. Not many people take the opportunity to study in any African country, and even fewer know where Botswana is located. Botswana is a landlocked country just north of South Africa. It is about the size of France and home to about one million people.

I was one of 15 students on a program through the School for International Training in Botswana this past fall. We spent the semester learning Setswana, which is the national language, learning about environmental and conservation issues affecting the country, as well as the region, taking excursions into game reserves and the Okavango Delta, and doing independent study projects. My project dealt with the malaria control program within the country, public attitudes towards it, as well as the disease itself. This may have been what I did, but what I truly learned was far more distinctive.

I am sure you have all heard the phrase that says, "Don't let classes interfere with your education."

An example of such an experience occurred when we were on our excursion into the Okavango Delta, an alluvial fan in the northwest region of the country. We took traditional canoes called mekoro into the delta where we camped for three days. It took us about 2 1/2 hours to get to the campsite through papyrus, reeds, water lilies and hippos. As we were riding along, trying not to get too sunburned, one of the guys in the canoe behind me said, "And the crazy thing about this, is that we are getting credit for this!" It was the perfect expression for what we were all feeling. How often will we get to study about this amazing natural phenomenon by actually being there and getting to learn about zebra social structure.

agreed, a person learns much more by talking to someone sitting next to him or her on a bus than decisions that they had made in their entire lives. It is not possible for anyone to comprehend cific to Africa, and they do not consume the entire continent. The cities in Botswana that we global perspective that I hope to cultivate within myself and hopefully within the "bubble" as well. So now that I am back at the University, trying to adjust once again to the daily life that I call reality, what have I learned? I have learned what it feels like to look into the eyes of a lion 10 feet from you with only the side bar of a safari vehicle between us. I have learned that I am a strong, confident and capable human being. I have learned that one cannot safely judge a place as large and diverse as Africa solely from the stories that we see on CNN. And finally, I have learned that how true this is until they have experienced it firsthand. And even then, it is nearly impossible to tell others about it in a way that does justice to the way you are feeling.

One of the biggest issues that I have dealt with since being back at school has been an overwhelming feeling of alienation. I am not at all trying to sound negative here; I love being back and all my friends have made me feel so welcome. However, there will always be a part of me that doesn't quite fit in. My experience is unique and even those closest to me will not entirely understand how life-altering it was.

It is amazing to realize how wide a gap there is between what I would like to tell people and what they want to hear. For all you wonderful people out there who are having to deal with friends talking about study abroad, study abroad, study abroad. Thanks for putting up with us. It means a lot.

Upon returning home, it has become a goal of mine to tell people as much about Botswana as possible. I have found that people, especially Americans, think of Africa in general as an underdeveloped third world continent that is stuck in the dark ages. Although these conditions do exist in various parts, they are not representative by actually sitting there and watching the herd!

Pictures courtesy of
Elizabeth Muller

LEFT: After spending a day with this tame elephant, it kisses the author. TOP RIGHT: That famous lion, 10 feet away from the safari vehicle. BOTTOM RIGHT: The author travels to the northern part of the country with three other students.

visited could have been transplanted in any country in the world and would have been just the same as any New York, London, or Beijing. It is this growing sometimes you have to let go of some of that stress and live, because that is what makes life worth living.

He Said, She Said

Is there such a thing as Valentine's Day Goggles?

By JENNIFER COMER AND ELISE CITRIN
Features Columnists

It started about one month ago... my obsession with girls wearing Valentine's Day goggles in their mission to find a boyfriend by Feb. 14. I wandered into CVS and headed straight for the candy aisle. To my horror, all of the candy had been stripped of its original packaging, and had been replaced with pinker and redder versions. I left, remembering the days when Mars' marketing strategists wouldn't have sold me out by replacing green and blue M&Ms with red and pink ones. I felt betrayed, and that's when it hit me. I'm usually exceptionally guilty of the pre-Valentine's Day blues, but this year I am not at all affected. This year, my favorite goggles got lost in the mail.

Goggle-free, I've been able to clearly assess this situation. With every single girl's nightmare quickly approaching, I have witnessed "Mission: Find a Boyfriend," and as a recovering "romantic," I am able to find humor in it. It begins with dressing up every day, never leaving your room looking anything but perfect. Some girls take it so far as to sacrifice sleep.

Now, I've managed to get through two and one-half years at the University going to bed at 3 a.m. and waking up at noon, but this semester I was blessed with all 8 a.m. classes. I literally roll out of bed and into the classroom. I rarely change my classroom attire, and, most likely, can be seen in the same sweatshirt for an entire week.

On the other hand, there is this girl who comes into my Thursday morning 8 a.m. class five minutes early with a cup of coffee in one hand. This is where my confusion begins. Who has time to get coffee and be early to class? I thought it was a trade-off.

When she sits next to me I can smell how clean she is, and, to my ultimate horror, she is wearing makeup. I would have to get up at 4 a.m. to accomplish all of this each morning. That's closer to my bedtime. Now, I ask you why? Is it insecurity, or just a bad case of an early riser? What if it's neither?

I started to wonder what kind of madness could drive this behavior. I look around the classroom and spot three girls and one boy. I have never seen him before. He's not cute... at all! I look back at her, and it hits me. She is wearing Valentine's Day goggles.

At noon I hit the Terrace Room with my girlfriends and relayed my new obsession. As I finished my story, I noticed my friend Jill absorbed in her own world. She turns to me, and, in a low voice, says "Maybe I should ask Alex to lunch this week."

Panic fills my body. Try to remain calm. I remind her that during orientation he threw up on her and for the past two years, we referred to him as "the puker." It is useless though; she is wearing goggles too!

So ladies, I beg you, if you are feeling depressed this Valentine's Day, don't stress out, or dress up to walk down the hallway to the bathroom. Instead, march right to CVS, buy a chocolate heart and sit down with your girlfriends to pig out and watch movies.

Look for next week's installment of this humorous column expressing the differing views of women and men on campus.

Features Commentary

Susquehanna Valley Limousine Inc.

With a long tradition of quality service to the Bucknell Community, SVL offers:

Service to and from destination, door to door
Schedule your own shuttles to and from Airports
for breaks
Ride sharing network to cut down on costs
Many available vehicles: vans, town car
and limousine bus
Service 24 hours a day, 7 days a week

For more information or to make reservations call:

1.800.685.5567

On February 14th, remember the special people in your life with a Valentine card or gift from the BookStore
AT BUCKNELL
now located in
Hunt Hall

Vennari's Pizza
624-0444 610 Market St.
Dine In • Carry Out

Just 2 minutes away on route 15
Discover Great Food Made Fresh
• Burritos • Tacos • Fajitas •
• Enchiladas • Quesadillas •
• Big Burgers • Large Salads •
• Wings • Large Grazing Menu •
Largest Selection of Vegetarian Foods in Town
Bikini Contest February 17
Starts at 9pm Must Be 21
$100.00 Cash First Prize
• 523-8900 • 634 RT 13 • LEWISBURG •

Arts & Entertainment

Joined at the Head chronicles story of courage and friendship

JOINED From page B1.

"It was the most challenging role I've ever had to execute," Cizmar said. "I learned a lot. I did research on how cancer patients feel while responding to chemotherapy, and I read some accounts of how cancer can affect family life. It was really a sobering experience to act out the part of such a heartrending story."

The weight of Maggy's illness threatens to drag down and defeat not only her, but Jim as well. Throughout the play, the strain upon Jim was kept silent verbally, yet was perceptible through the expressions of pain and helplessness on actor Trevor Rutledge-Leverenz's face. Rutledge-Leverenz, '01, playing Jim Burroughs, nailed the challenging role of "distracted husband meets former flame." As the life he knew throws one curve ball after another, he stays strong and optimistic for his wife. Only near the conclusion of the play do we get to hear what Jim was really feeling, as he gives a heart-wrenching and emotionally-charged speech to the audience.

The two-hour play moved quickly and without a dull moment as Trezona, Cizmar, and Rutledge-Leverenz passionately embraced a truly embedded understanding of their respective characters' roles.

"The three of us are such good friends," Cizmar said. "We had a lot of fun making this show. When I first saw the script, I was a little intimidated by the part I would have to play. In a tasteful and lighthearted way, 'Joined at the Head' maintained a good representation of how to look at something usually so devastating."

However, the play would not be a success without the contribution of a phenomenal ensemble. This group consisted of Steve Pinciotti '02, Eric Hart '01, Ashi Day '04, Jennifer Sloan '03, Andrew Wanivonchik '02, Lacy Gonzalez '04, and Hollie Barattole '04. The members of the ensemble, most of whom had never acted at the University, gave distinctive and impressive performances. Each actor played multiple roles with enthusiasm and talent, several of them succeeding in neatly stealing scenes from the principals.

"By far one of the brightest spots in the production for me was the talent and contributions of the ensemble," DePiano said. "As actors, each person had their own moment to shine and they were a fantastic group to work with. They showed up early to set up props and sound and did all of the scene changes. Without them, the production wouldn't have been nearly as bright and diverse, and they are to be commended."

The audience found "Joined at the Head" to be funny, moving, well-performed, and believable. One moment the audience would be on the verge of tears, while the next moment they would be laughing uproariously.

"The playwright gets you right to the point where you think that you are going to cry and then throws in some comedy," DePiano said. "It's such a great balance."

"It was one of the more creative plays I've seen at Bucknell, and I attribute that to the simplicity and the emphasis on individual actor ability to make the most of each word and each line," Piper Scallz '03 said. "They really brought the play alive. I felt like I believed every word of it. It was like I was peeking into someone's real-life tragedy."

The stars of Joined at the Head entertain enthusiastic audiences with a wonderful and inspiring performance.

Chris Rivera—The Bucknellian

Poet in Residence shares his works to students, professors

BY KRISTA REISDORF
Senior Writer

John Haines, the University's Poet-in-Residence, gave his first of two poetry readings for the semester on Sunday at 8 p.m. in Bucknell Hall. Cynthia Hogue, Director of the Stabler Center for Poetry, introduced Haines, the 63rd fellow of the Academy of Poets, praising his many accomplishments and providing some background for his work.

"Haines' work has responded sometimes lyrically, sometimes didactically, to our times," Hogue said. Haines read his poetry in chronological order, from his earliest poems in the 1940's to his most recent poems of today. He started with a poem called "Departure," which expressed his feelings of leaving his home and of his first airplane flight ever. His voice was smooth and rich, putting great feeling into his words with his inflection.

Haines said that his poetry in the late 1940's was very magical and romantic. He was greatly influenced by the 20th century poet Dylan Thomas during this period.

"I spent much of my time writing second-rate Dylan Thomas poems," Haines said.

As Haines read, his poems were always accompanied by an interesting anecdote that explained his inspiration for that particular work. It is evident that much of his poetry came from life experience, showing that he drew from the events around him. In 1950, "Poem For a Drowned Child," his first published poem, was inspired by an actual news story at the time.

Haines read some of his poetry from the 1960's, which was influenced by classical Chinese poetry. This type of poetry affected the way he wrote his poems, because it emphasized saying something meaningful in a small number of words.

"The example of the classical Chinese poetry enabled me to start writing again," Haines said.

These poems were short but powerful, and seemed to reflect a sense of loss. Lines like "New vines will grow again next summer, but you will not come back" have great impact, even though the poem was very short.

Other poems that Haines wrote at this time were devoted to nature. He read "Horns," a poem about hunting a moose. He also shared "Prayer to the Snowy Owl" with his audience, describing the beauty of the animal. "Listening in October" depicted a Fall evening—just sitting around and listening to the silence.

The subject matter of the poetry changed again, as Haines moved on to his poems from the 1970's. This was a politically charged time—the Vietnam War, loss, revolution. These were poems of blood and defeat, such as "In Nature," which spoke of wreckage, fallen cities, and change.

Haines describes some of his most recent poetry as "overtly political." He makes strong statements in poems like "The American Dream," "A Century's End," and "To a Washington Friend." However, he surprised himself by writing a scathing political commentary in the poem "Diogenes in Washington." Haines was inspired by a sketch of Diogenes walking through Washington D.C., surrounded by pigs and carrying a lantern. Diogenes was a Greek philosopher who rejected civilization. He would walk around Athens during the day with a lantern, saying that he was looking for an honest man, but never finding one.

In "Diogenes in Washington", Haines tossed out names like Bush and Gore, while speaking of "starving intelligence" and the "search for truth." He ended this poem with a simple line.

"Honest men—there are none here," Haines said, as the audience cheered in approval.

Those who attended the reading seemed to find Haines' poetry both thought-provoking and unique. Many people had read his poetry before.

"It was cool to actually see who was writing the poetry I had been reading in class," one student said. Other students admired his political and social views.

"I'm not a big fan of poetry and rarely go to the readings, but I really enjoyed it," Shelly Kent '02 said. "I didn't expect him to say anything that would be relevant to my life, but he shared some of my own views... almost anti-progressive and moving back to nature."

Haines commented on politics and society, and its importance to fit in the world of poetry.

"I like to read poems where there are social and political issues, and the poets take up these issues and give them expression," Haines said. "Poets don't really do that anymore."

Haines' poetry reflects much of his life experience and his reaction to the world around him. He discusses a range of topics—from nature to loss to politics—and all seem to have a place in his poems.

"We have to react to these things... poetry is one way of doing it," Haines said.

Weis Center hosts famed German choir

Berlin Radio Choir performs a page from 80 year history

By CURT OLSON
Staff Writer

Last Friday, the Bucknell community had the good fortune of hosting the Berlin Radio Choir (Rundfunkchor). This critically acclaimed ensemble is one of the premier choirs of the world, having sung with the leading orchestras and conductors of Europe. Founded in the 1920s, the choir was formed to take advantage of radio technology and to bring good music into the homes of all Germans. The ensemble is currently conducted by Robin Gritton, now in his seventh year.

The title of the program was "19th Century German Romanticists" and included works by Brahms, Mendelssohn, Reger, Schumann, and R. Strauss. Choral singing was a phenomenon of the 19th century, and these composers took full advantage of this new musical force. The works they wrote are characterized by a sense of longing for a past when life was somehow better and the arts were more a part of everyday life. The music often contains deep emotional expression and can communicate love, hatred, life and death in the same moment.

The choir and Gritton were able to bring the notes from the page and translate them for the audience into pure beauty. Each voice was lush and full and even the most difficult passages were sung with wonderful phrase and intonation. "Der Abend," by Richard Strauss, provides an example of the virtuosity present on stage: the sopranos enter on and sustain a pianissimo high G.

The concert was well worth the time of anyone who attended and the audience demanded two encores. It brought invigorating beauty to the campus, and we are fortunate that these sorts of events are possible.

Try us, it's wonderful

SCIENCE & TECHNOLOGY

Sleep—I don't get it ... do you?

By JESSICA FRIEDMAN
Staff Writer

What's the one thing that many college students are notorious for getting very little of but that most would give an arm and a leg for? No, it's not sex—it's that other "s" word, "SLEEP". Increased work load, academic and social commitments, and an overall desire just to stay up later leaves many of us bereft of the precious sleep we once took for granted.

When I started writing this article, I thought it might be a good idea to try and remember what it was like (in high school, ages and ages ago) when I actually slept regular hours each night, but I couldn't. Yet I can remember at least three nights last week when I dragged myself down the hall at 2 a.m. to brush my teeth and ran into several hallmates who, like myself, were still looking at another hour or so of work that night. So what happened to the good old days?

If you ask most students, you'll find that the average amount of sleep per night is around six hours, a good two to four hours below the recommended eight to ten hours for healthy young adults. Unfortunately, with increasingly busy schedules, it is harder to find the time for quality shut-eye, and consequently sleep has become a low priority. Although the occasional late night is harmless, the problem of sleep deprivation is more serious than most students would like to think.

Nodding off in class is bad enough, especially during those killer 1 p.m. classes right after lunch, but it pales in comparison to some of the other possible effects. Chronic sleep deprivation can lead to a dangerous lifestyle pattern that can easily become a vicious cycle. And catching up on sleep means missing out on other activities, which only leaves you with a busier schedule when you wake up.

So now you are probably wondering, "why exactly do I need eight hours of sleep anyway? After all, I can function on five hours a night, no problem." A lot of research has been done on the physiological processes that occur while you sleep yet its numerous functions remain an enigma. During a full night of sleep, the body cycles through two stages—Rapid Eye Movement sleep (REM) and non-REM sleep (deeper sleep during which brain activity is somewhat lower). I will focus on REM sleep because it is the stage that people seem to find most intriguing.

Speculations on the functions of REM sleep include stimulation of brain growth (as evidenced by the secretion of growth hormones in both humans and baboons immediately after falling asleep), fine-tuning of the binocular oculomotor system, consolidation of memory, erasure of inappropriate memories, and harmless discharge of emo-

Ecosystems and Economics, who do we save and why?

TEALS From page B1.

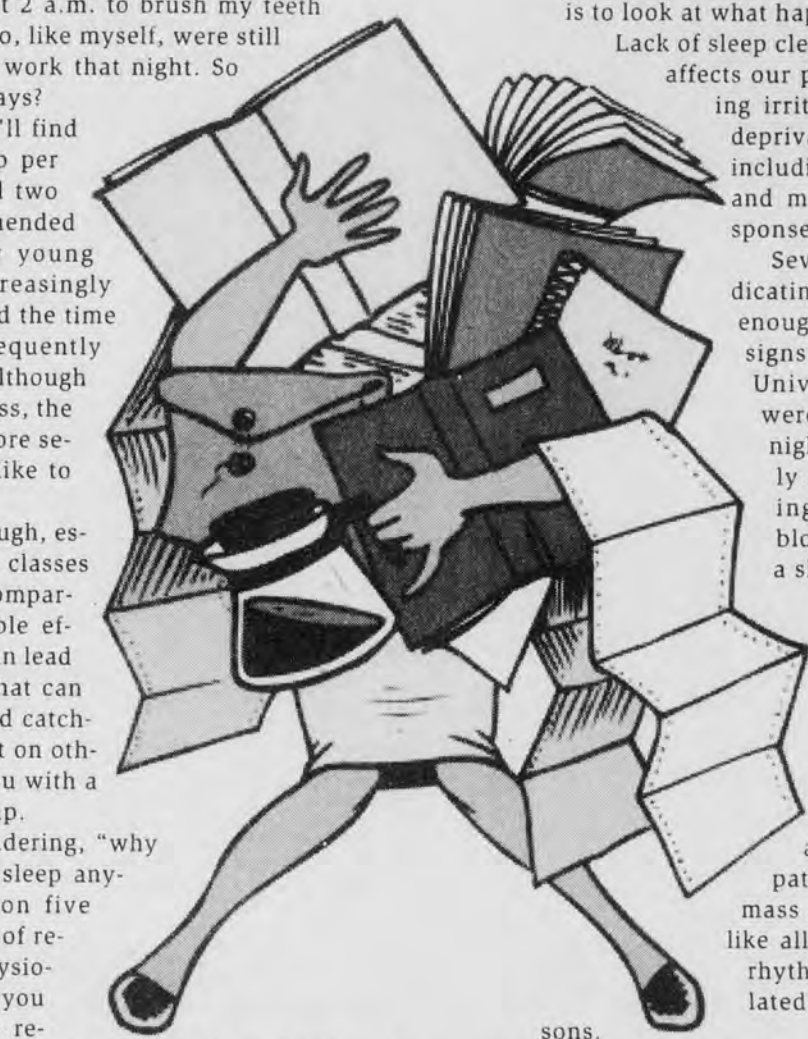

So, how do we make everyone happy? The masses need potential benefits and conservationists need biodiversity.

Take our Brazilian rainforests as an example. These forests play a variety of roles in the ecosystem, benefiting all those that inhabit the earth.

They consume our carbon dioxide waste and emit oxygen we need to breathe, they control and monitor rainfall run-off into waterways, they provide medicinal plants, invaluable lumber and habitats for everything from micro-organisms we have yet to identify to indigenous tribes.

Acknowledging these functions, most of us would preach the protection of larger ecosystems over individual species. Assigning a forest an economic value though, be it for potential timber, chemical emission or medicinal herbs, may prove troublesome down the road.

Environmental economic value implies that particular areas are more worthy of our protection than others. Presumably then, this "habitat hierarchy" would depend on the potential benefits we can extract from the areas in question.

tions that would otherwise intrude into waking behavior.

In support of the first hypothesis, infants spend an extremely large percentage of their sleep in the REM stage, with the relative amount declining with age as the brain approaches maturity. It is also during REM sleep that dreaming occurs. Some experts believe that dreaming is a clearing-out process, but most sleep researchers think that dreams serve the purpose of helping to reorganize and store psychological information taken in during the day. One way to think about sleep is as it is the body's way of performing a daily tune-up. Sleep is an anabolic, or building, process during which energy stores are replenished, and tissues such as muscle are rebuilt and restored.

One of the best ways to understand why sleep is so crucial is to look at what happens when we don't get enough of it. Lack of sleep clearly affects our cognitive processes.

It affects our personality and sense of humor, causing irritability and lowered tolerance. Sleep deprivation also has physical consequences, including loss of coordination, loss of skin and muscle tone, and lowered immune responses.

Several studies have been conducted indicating that when young people don't get enough sleep, it temporarily brings on some signs of aging. In one experiment at the University of Chicago, 11 young adults were allowed only four hours of sleep a night for one week. Tests showed it clearly affected their body chemistry, resulting in interference with the way the blood stores and uses energy from food, a slowing of hormones that affect energy levels, and a decrease in hormones that help increase memory retention. Later, after 12 hours of sleep, all symptoms disappeared.

However, even though eight hours of sleep is recommended for most college-age adults, every individual does not require this amount. Many factors influence sleep patterns, including physical size, muscle mass and brain size. Additionally, humans, like all forms of life, respond to a circadian rhythm, or biological clock, which is regulated by cycles of the sun, moon and seasons.

Surprisingly, our body clock operates on a 25-hour schedule, but we have the ability to adjust to the 24-hour solar day. Disruption of the circadian rhythm, even just staying up two to three hours past normal bedtime, can result in difficulties relating at night and waking up in the morning, as well as depression.

So the message for those of you who are "sleepless-at-Bucknell"? Sleep is just as important to the maintenance of good health as exercise and proper nutrition. Many aspects of sleep are still not completely understood, but one thing is for sure—a satisfying sleep, like a satisfying meal, can leave you feeling rested, renewed and happy.

it will trap conservationists into supporting the destruction of certain habitats because of a low economic value; arguably becoming their own enemy. With that said, where does that leave us?

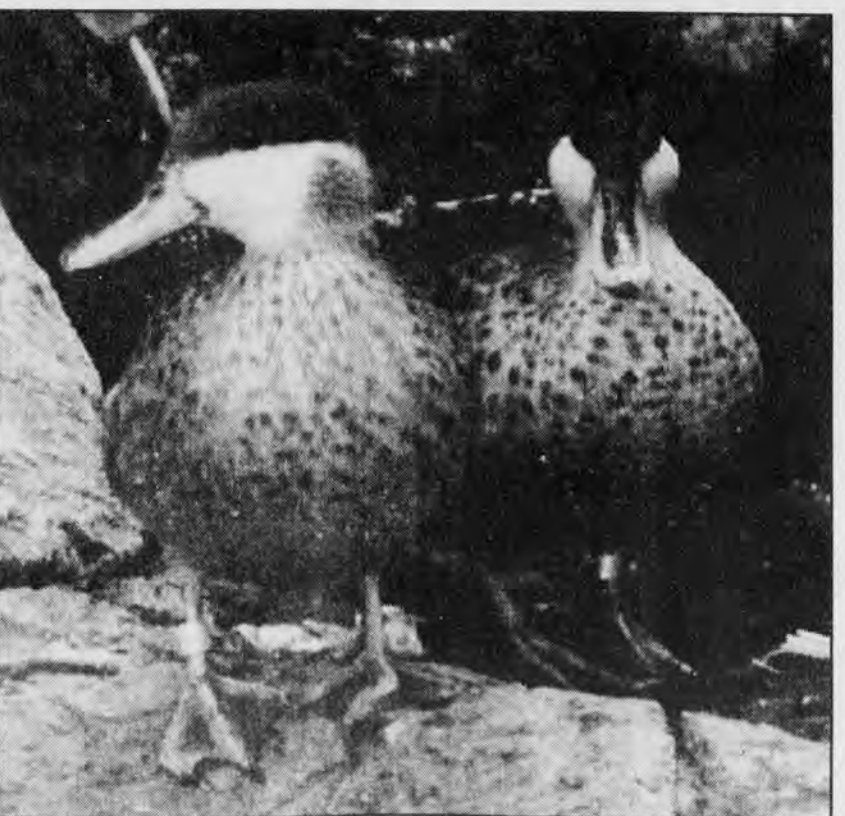

Similar to our results above, the economic model would be insufficient if applied to individual species. That not all species can serve as profit for us is easily accepted. However, that they have an equal place and right to this planet is not.

Instead of talking about why we should protect something, why not look at our own social ethics and talk about why we should not destroy it?

People have argued for years over whether non-human life has "the right" to exist and if so, how we can quantify and justify its value, its place on the planet. Let's stop talking potentiality and start talking limitations.

If humans were capable of participating in a little introspection, that is, looking at themselves objectively and as playing a role like everything else that exists today, perhaps we can still save the Brazilian rainforests and the Madagascar Teal.

Madagascar Teals are among the many endangered species whose environ-

Can we predict earthquakes?

By JESSICA RYAN
Staff Writer

Much too often it seems, earthquakes rumble the earth with a violent force, inflicting harm on individuals. Earthquakes leave communities in ruin, people in despair and destroy the familiarity with which individuals identify. Unfortunately, these devastating displays of nature remain unpredictable to mankind, leaving us wondering when the next quake will strike.

On Jan. 26, as India celebrated its Republic Day, an earthquake measuring 7.9 on the Richter scale, began its destruction. According to CNN, the effects of the earthquake have left over 55,000 people injured and over 15,000 people dead. Furthermore, CNN reported that approximately 73,000 homes in 1,000 villages were destroyed as a result of the violent quake.

In addition to the direct effects, which resulted from the India quake, significant indirect effects continue to surface daily in the midst of the ruin. According to CNN, as a result of the thousands of deceased bodies, there is a serious risk of obtaining disease epidemics through water contamination, while respiratory problems are arising in homeless individuals from the decreasing evening temperatures.

Less than one half hour prior to the destruction and terror in India, a minor quake struck the United States beneath the waters of Lake Erie, according to the Associated Press. Approximately 12,000 earthquakes occur throughout the world yearly, the majority of them minor such as the Lake Erie tremor. Unfortunately, major earthquakes such as the India quake strike with force, leaving a site of destruction in the aftermath.

Many individuals, due to the lack of prediction abilities, attempt to formulate methods by which to lessen destruction and devastation. Geologists are discovering that human construction, according to MSNBC, is the source of devastation. Lucy Jones of the U.S. Geological Survey states, "Earthquakes don't kill people, buildings do." In light of these discoveries, buildings are being designed to be more flexible and to move with the quake, rather than crumble with its force.

As technology increases, the ability to design these earthquake-resistant structures becomes more available, but unfortunately, measures to predict earthquakes have yet to surface. Earthquakes, although unpredictable, are able to be easily located due to many seismographic stations throughout the world. Due to the increased presence of these stations, it often appears that the number of earthquakes each year is on the rise. In actuality, the increased number of seismographic stations in comparison to previous years is only due to the additional seismographic centers.

Therefore, although prediction measures are non-existent, techniques are being utilized to determine areas of seismic activity and intensity. Furthermore, structures are being designed and planned to reduce the amount of devastation of earthquakes. By utilizing these tools, as well as knowing how to prepare for an earthquake, individuals may have the ability to withstand the violent acts of nature.

BY SUPER HEROES!

ALE MAN & CHICKEN MAN!

Love BJ's

Super Buffalo Wing SPECIAL!

12 for $4.95 Monday-Friday 5PM-9PM

24 for $7.95 Monday-Friday 5PM-9PM

Sunday - Thursday
9PM - Closing
EATIN' ONLY!

17 North Market Street
SELINGROVE
374-9841

291 Mill Street
DANVILLE
275-5110

Stash 'n' Hope

U-SAVE AUTO RENTAL

Low, Low Rates!

*We bill insurance companies direct.

*Major credit cards accepted.
*Must be 21 or older.

Earning the right to serve you each and every time.

524-0000

Rt. 15 & Nth 7th St.
Lewisburg, Pa. 17837
Mon-Fri 8:00-5:00
Sat. 8:00-12:00

ON CAMPUS Physical Therapy Clinic

Monday - Friday
8 a.m. - 5 p.m.
Field House Athletic Training Suite

EVANGELICAL COMMUNITY HOSPITAL

SPORTS MEDICINE CENTER

577.1060

Physician prescription required.
Please check insurance policy for restrictions.

BUSINESS & POLITICS

Capitol Hill braces for partisan battle

Bush's tax cuts gain support but still face opposition, writes Melissa Finkelstein

President George W. Bush is proposing what some people are calling a "Bush size" tax plan. The tax cuts would be in the neighborhood of $1.6 trillion, drawn from a surplus that is by far the largest in recent history.

Critics worry that since the tax cuts are based on projected figures that may or may not materialize, the Bush administration is being overzealous in its calculations. However, according to CNN, supporters of the Bush plan point to the slowing economy and the enormous surplus as fertile ground for significant tax code reform.

One important supporter is Alan Greenspan, who has recently voiced his approval of a tax cut to stimulate the economy. Many Republicans on the Hill are pushing for a bigger tax cut, an initiative that Bush does not support. It seems that while Bush supports a weighty tax cut, he does not want to create a runaway train.

Another source of tension in Washington right now is from large corporations seeking tax cuts as well. The Bush plan targets individuals, but according to Ron Brownstein of the LA Times, the highly influential Business Roundtable believes that tax breaks should be implemented on the corporate level as well. The question to be answered is how Bush will appease these interests, taking into consideration his ties to the business world.

The unique aspect of Bush's tax plan is the across-the-board relief that working class and very wealthy Americans will witness. Still, according to CNN, the top 5 percent of the population, who make over $200,000 a year, will receive 60 percent of the tax benefits from Bush's plan. Republicans argue that these are the people who pay 39 percent of taxes, and therefore they deserve the largest break.

Democrats generally counter that this is the section of the population needing the least tax relief. But, as Professor Bert Levine of the University's political science department suggests, it may be true that the middle and upper class segments of the population potentially benefiting the most from tax relief, will stimulate the economy the most.

Bush's tax plan illustrates a very different approach to the issue than Clinton-era policy, which stressed targeted tax cuts for education, for example. Some Americans prefer these "targeted" types of solutions because they feel they will save them more money. Another concern involves the source of the surplus, which is Medicare and Social Security, money that will eventually have to be given back.

Despite these considerations, the Bush tax plan seems to satisfy a lot of people, given its broad applicability. Yet, according to a CNN poll, George W. Bush's disapproval rating is at 25 percent, which is higher than any other president of the last quarter century. Perhaps this is a reflection of concerns regarding his agenda, including his tax proposal.

Sharon elected Israeli Prime Minister

Hawkish leader's victory marks beginning of new approach to the peace process

By MICHAEL BOLAND
Business & Politics Editor

Tuesday's disappointing voter turnout notwithstanding, Likud party candidate Ariel Sharon defeated incumbent Ehud Barak for the position as Prime Minister of Israel. While just over 60 percent of the nation's electorate of 4.5 million came out to vote, the election was widely pegged as a referendum on Barak's peace policies.

Sharon, like Barak a former general in the Israeli army, ran his campaign on a promise to keep Jerusalem unified under Israeli rule. Barak's popularity has suffered since the outbreak of violence in September, and many Israelis view him as too generous in his negotiations with Palestinian Authority leader Yasser Arafat. As one voter told CNN on Tuesday, "Barak is a crazy man. He sells everything without getting anything."

Israel has a parliamentary government; normally, its Prime Minister is chosen by whichever party wins a plurality of the popular vote. However, the Feb. 6 election was not a normal election but a special election, triggered by Barak's resignation on Dec. 10. Therefore the Israeli parliament, the Knesset, was not up for grabs. Its composition will stay the same. Sharon must now form a governing coalition within 45 days of the official announcement of the final vote count, expected on Feb. 13.

Throughout the six-week campaign Sharon was hampered by his

Courtesy of Reuters
Former Defense Minister and new Israeli Prime Minister, Ariel Sharon label as a hard-line war hawk, and ex-President Clinton, who is wildly popular in Israel, gave Barak an unofficial endorsement in the days before the election. Despite these disadvantages, the election was every bit the Sharon blowout that opinion polls had predicted it would be. Sharon took over 62 percent of the vote.

The rout was so overwhelming that Barak resigned his seat in the Knesset and has openly discussed abandoning his political career.

Experts blame Barak's defeat on three main factors. First was his overall inability to maintain order; Palestinian Intifada ("Uprising") has disturbed the peace for months, and probably cost him huge numbers of middle-class swing votes. Second was the boycott of the vote by Israeli Arabs, who comprise 12 percent of the electorate and traditionally support left-of-center "peace" candidates. These voters boycotted as a show of protest against both Sharon's projected policies that have led to the deaths of over 300 non-Jews since September.

The third key to Sharon's victory was unexpectedly strong support for the Likud candidate among Israel's Russian immigrants. In the last election, less than two years ago, they gave Barak 56 percent of their vote; one poll taken just before the election showed Russian immigrants supporting Sharon—himself descended from Russian immigrants—by as much as 60 percent over Barak.

Palestinian reaction to Tuesday's election was largely negative. Many argue that Sharon's hawkish ideology make him unfit to negotiate on behalf of a people that wants peace, claiming that his tough rhetoric and uncompromising stance on Israeli sovereignty over Jerusalem will cripple the peace process. Still, Nabil Abu Rdainah, a senior Palestinian advisor to Yasser Arafat told Reuters, "We will cooperate with Sharon, who has been elected by the Israeli people." A backdrop to these words, however, was Tuesday's Palestinian "Day of Rage," during which 69 protesters were injured in widespread clashes with Israeli forces.

Courtesy of AP
Traders worry as economy slows and Americans begin to worry about a possible recession.

Investors: Watch out below

By JIM LEAHY
Managing Editor

The economy is falling! The economy is falling!

The only problem—this is not a fairy tale. The economy really is falling, as just about any economic indicator out there shows. Most will talk about how this is a dip and how there has to be some correction after such a long stretch of prosperity. But with 10 years of awesome growth behind us, concerns about our economic health are inevitable.

Daimler-Chrysler's Chrysler unit announced layoffs of 26,000 workers over the next three years in a restructuring that will cause the parent company to take a $2.3 billion charge in 2001. Unemployment rose to 4.2 percent, higher than it has been in sixteen months. The National Association of Purchasing Management's (NAPM) manufacturing index dropped below its break-even point for the first time in 117 months. Dot-com companies are dying left and right. Consumer sentiments are lower than they have been in over four years. And on Monday the NAPM said that service sector growth slowed to a level of 50.1 percent, 0.1 percent above the minimum level for expansion.

The markets are struggling, too. The NASDAQ climbed last year to over 5,000 at one point yet it hovers over 2,500 today. The Standard and Poor's 500 index had its first losing year in quite some time. In addition, the Dow

Jones Industrial Average treaded water for the first time since the early '80s. The "R" word is being mentioned for the first time in almost ten years. Rightfully, investors are scared.

The national media is also beginning to fan the fire. Newsweek published a story about virtual recessions. CNBC mentioned possible economic problems. Time, Business Week, TheStreet.com and others are all fanning the fire. Even fireproof Alan Greenspan has begun to feel the heat.

Greenspan and the Federal Reserve Board of Governors have begun to lower interest rates in order to make money cheaper to borrow and therefore easier to spend. This is in direct opposition to what Greenspan had been doing to rein in our growing economy. Many now wonder if Greenspan and his crew went too far.

To put this in perspective, Gross Domestic Product was growing at a rate of over 5 percent in June. Everyone was happy and things were going great. But by the end of the fourth quarter of 2000, that same growth had crashed to a minuscule 1.4 percent. In just under six months, a drop of almost 4 percentage points.

But all is not doom and gloom. This dip is bad and must be dealt with as soon as possible. But surprisingly, there actually have been a few good things to come out of our economic slowdown.

The main benefit may turn out to be a loss of our sense of invulnerability. For too long, especially in the dawn of the Internet age, we have invested our money and done our business with a feeling that nothing was impossible.

Now that is gone. A weeding-out of sorts has occurred in the last few months, as many Internet businesses founded on the wave have ceased to exist. Only the strong will survive and in the long run, the consumer may win out.

The numbers don't point, at least not yet, to a prolonged slowdown or a recession. We need another quarter of data to prove to ourselves that something is really wrong before we all go crazy. Actually, sales figures for retailers were up in January, something no one expected, especially after a very disappointing Christmas season. Plus, stocks are still doing pretty well despite all the problems. January was favorable to the markets and the NASDAQ and Dow have both bounced back off their lows.

On Tuesday, Cisco Systems reported its earnings to the business community. Considered a bellwether to the entire technology industry, its very weak earnings and growth outlook will weigh heavily on the future of technology stocks. And Federal Reserve interest rate cuts will most certainly help banks and may boost their bottom line.

So the economy is technically falling. But don't lose hope yet, because we don't have a big enough picture to judge our true condition. By the end of the semester, we may in fact know where our economy is heading. Just watch for falling debris.

THE Bucknellian

The weekly campus newspaper of Bucknell University

http://www.orgs.bucknell.edu/bucknellian

February 16, 2001

inside

Part 2

"The Game of Love and Chance" debuts at Tustin Theater.
See page B1.

Volume 127, Number 4

Sports

Men's basketball continues its losing streak with loss to Army.
See page A10.

Chris Rivers—The Bucknellian
In order to cut down on the number of nuisance alarms, new alarm technology is currently being installed in Roberts Hall.

University installs "smart" alarms

By RACHEL LASKOW
News Layout Editor

After last year's deadly fires at Seton Hall University and Bloomsburg University, schools across the country began taking precautions to prevent similar occurrences. The University addressed its own fire safety standards and is in the process of replacing old fire alarms with new "smart" alarms.

"We took the Seton Hall fire and ultimately the Bloomsburg fire as additional reasons to be concerned and certainly as a reason for additional data gathering and strategizing so a tragedy like that does not happen here," Interim Vice President for Student Affairs Charles Pollock '70 said.

The new alarms can detect a temperature rise and will make sure the temperature stays at a high level before the alarm goes off. However, this waiting time is less than a minute. The alarms can also be made more sensitive during the night when people are sleeping.

Nuisance alarms, such as alarms set off by popcorn and cigarette smoke, will also be reduced with the new technology.

"The new system will make it so it's more friendly to the occupant and that there is a reduction in nuisance alarms," Physical Plant Director Dennis Hawley '72 said.

Reducing the frequency of nuisance alarms will encourage students to evacuate buildings during a legitimate alarm.

"The single most important thing Bucknell can do to increase fire safety and life safety in the event of a fire is to have students respond more to fire alarms," Pollock said. "The single most important thing to make that happen is to cause there to be fewer alarms, and the secret to making that occur is to replace the current alarms with a more sophisticated alarm."

The new technology is already operating in Carrey House, Galloway House, Harris, Kress, Larison, Larison Cottage, Swartz (Hill and Loomis houses), Tower House, Trax, Sigma Phi Epsilon and Phi Gamma Delta (which is not University owned).

"The new thrust is prioritizing halls that don't have new technology and getting the new technology in there," Pollock said.

The data collected from Roberts Hall this fall spurred attention; Roberts Hall has been moved to the top of the list for receiving new alarms. The money for the new alarms, which are four times as expensive as the current alarms, was originally budgeted for next year, but it is being used now because Roberts Hall is an extreme case. It will cost $150,000 to install the new alarms in the building.

"If another facility had been as vulnerable to 'cry wolf' phenomenon, we would have also put it on the top of the list," Pollock said.

The money for this project comes from the Facilities Capital Budget, which is a reserve account into which funds are deposited each year from the University's operating budget to make repairs and renovations to buildings. Money is also used from this budget for things such as the renovation

See ALARM, page A2

Chris Rivers—The Bucknellian
The University celebrates Freedom to Marry Week. Students wore purple ribbons to show their support for gay marriages. Message boards were also placed around the campus for students to voice their opinions.

Black History comes alive

By LAURA DAY
News Editor

Now an annual tradition, the 7th Street House was transformed into a "living museum" of Black History this past Sunday. Black History Alive, sponsored by the Office of Housing and Residential Life (OHRL), provided students with an interactive and educational opportunity to celebrate Black History Month.

The house was divided into four sections, each highlighting a different aspect of African-American history. Guests were taken on a tour through time, beginning with ancient history, continuing through the renaissance and into current day. As an out of the classroom educational experience, Black History Alive provided an alternative and exciting method for students to glimpse into the past.

"This event is really successful because you always learn about black history in the classroom...our tours bring it alive," Shameka Greene said, a coordinator of Black History Alive.

The walk through history began in the basement of the 7th Street House and focused on ancient African history. In one room, a slide show illustrated artistic impressions of slavery. In another area, students met the "spirit" of a former slave who emphasized the appreciation of freedom and the importance of not forgetting the past.

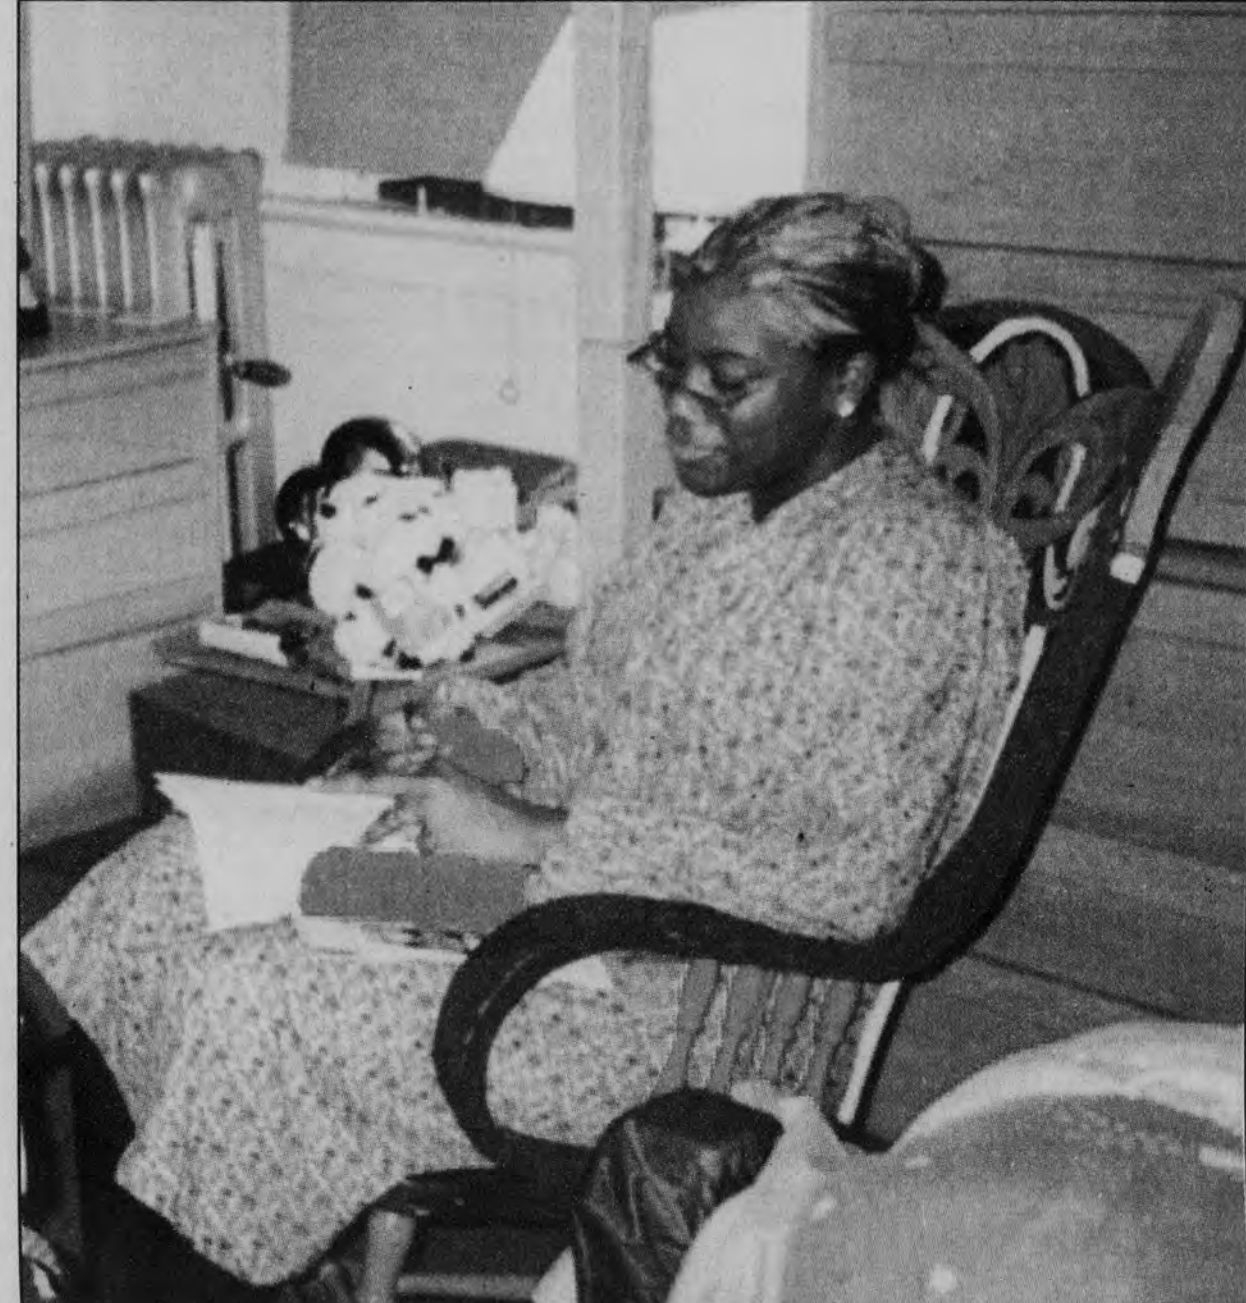

"It was really moving...you were drawn into the experience," said Kathy O'Heir '03, a Smith resident assistant who brought her hall to the program.

The tour then continued to the third floor where the culture, music and animation of the Harlem Renaissance came to life. Participants gave impersonations of such key figures as Langston Hughes and gave a "pop quiz" in which the tour group members had to guess the characters.

The tour was then invited to join the "Cotton Club," a popular club during the roaring '20s. Musicians entertained the tour, providing an authentic cultural experience.

The main floor of the house was devoted to recent history and displayed newspaper articles, photographs and other paraphernalia.

Voices of Praise, the campus gospel choir, sang a myriad of inspira-

Emily Hanchcock—The Bucknellian
The 7th Street House was transformed into a "living museum" of Black History as part of Black History Alive. The house was divided into four sections, each highlighting a different aspect of African-American history.

"We were able to learn about the civil rights movement through the performing arts," O'Heir said.

The next section of the museum was devoted to the Civil Rights Movement. A video of Martin Luther King, Jr. and other civil rights leaders and activities was shown.

The main floor of the house was devoted to recent history and displayed newspaper articles, photographs and other paraphernalia.

Voices of Praise, the campus gospel choir, sang a myriad of inspirational songs that roused the audience into joining them.

Nyambi Nyambi '01 gave impersonations of Malcolm X and Martin Luther King, Jr. Other students found their niche in reading poetry, dressing in historical clothing or helping with behind the scenes work.

"It was a lot of work for all involved," Greene said.

The evening, which included dinner, was well attended. "The students and Beth Rosen-bleet from OHRL put it all together and worked very hard," Director of Multicultural Affairs Danielle Ward said.

Black History Alive was founded by Robin Jennings '99 who returned to campus for the event this year.

"It is a way of telling American History that gets students more involved," Jennings said. "It feels so good to see that the students have kept up the tradition and that the legacy lives."

Bloomsburg: A decade of tragedy

By LAURA DAY
News Editor

11:52 p.m. on Feb. 7.

Almost three weeks ago, Bloomsburg University freshman, Jared Drosnock was found dead in the former Pi Kappa Phi fraternity house.

On Jan. 27, 2001 Drosnock and his friends were watching a basketball game together. The boys were drinking beer, but when David Klimowicz, a non-Bloomsburg University student, supplied vodka, Drosnock began drinking it.

Klimowicz had filmed Drosnock and other fraternity members drinking together.

Both Drosnock and Klimowicz fell asleep at the time of the fire. On the morning of Jan. 28 to find Drosnock dead. According to the autopsy report, the cause of death was acute alcohol intoxication. Drosnock's blood alcohol level was .4 percent, roughly four times the legal limit.

NEWS UPDATE

Public Safety performed CPR on Davis but with no success. Davis died at Geisinger Medical Center at

house. Klimowicz woke on the morning of Jan. 28 to find Drosnock dead. According to the autopsy report, the cause of death was acute alcohol intoxication. Drosnock's blood alcohol level was .4 percent, roughly four times the legal limit.

Public Safety performed CPR on Davis but with no success. Davis died at Geisinger Medical Center at

house. Klimowicz woke on the morning of Jan. 28 to find Drosnock dead. According to the autopsy report, the cause of death was acute alcohol intoxication. Drosnock's blood alcohol level was .4 percent, roughly four times the legal limit.

Public Safety performed CPR on Davis but with no success. Davis died at Geisinger Medical Center at

house. Klimowicz woke on the morning of Jan. 28 to find Drosnock dead. According to the autopsy report, the cause of death was acute alcohol intoxication. Drosnock's blood alcohol level was .4 percent, roughly four times the legal limit.

Public Safety performed CPR on Davis but with no success. Davis died at Geisinger Medical Center at

house. Klimowicz woke on the morning of Jan. 28 to find Drosnock dead. According to the autopsy report, the cause of death was acute alcohol intoxication. Drosnock's blood alcohol level was .4 percent, roughly four times the legal limit.

Public Safety performed CPR on Davis but with no success. Davis died at Geisinger Medical Center at

house. Klimowicz woke on the morning of Jan. 28 to find Drosnock dead. According to the autopsy report, the cause of death was acute alcohol intoxication. Drosnock's blood alcohol level was .4 percent, roughly four times the legal limit.

Public Safety performed CPR on Davis but with no success. Davis died at Geisinger Medical Center at

house. Klimowicz woke on the morning of Jan. 28 to find Drosnock dead. According to the autopsy report, the cause of death was acute alcohol intoxication. Drosnock's blood alcohol level was .4 percent, roughly four times the legal limit.

Public Safety performed CPR on Davis but with no success. Davis died at Geisinger Medical Center at

house. Klimowicz woke on the morning of Jan. 28 to find Drosnock dead. According to the autopsy report, the cause of death was acute alcohol intoxication. Drosnock's blood alcohol level was .4 percent, roughly four times the legal limit.

Public Safety performed CPR on Davis but with no success. Davis died at Geisinger Medical Center at

house. Klimowicz woke on the morning of Jan. 28 to find Drosnock dead. According to the autopsy report, the cause of death was acute alcohol intoxication. Drosnock's blood alcohol level was .4 percent, roughly four times the legal limit.

Public Safety performed CPR on Davis but with no success. Davis died at Geisinger Medical Center at

house. Klimowicz woke on the morning of Jan. 28 to find Drosnock dead. According to the autopsy report, the cause of death was acute alcohol intoxication. Drosnock's blood alcohol level was .4 percent, roughly four times the legal limit.

Public Safety performed CPR on Davis but with no success. Davis died at Geisinger Medical Center at

house. Klimowicz woke on the morning of Jan. 28 to find Drosnock dead. According to the autopsy report, the cause of death was acute alcohol intoxication. Drosnock's blood alcohol level was .4 percent, roughly four times the legal limit.

11:52 p.m. on Feb. 7.

Almost three weeks ago, Bloomsburg University freshman, Jared Drosnock was found dead in the former Pi Kappa Phi fraternity house.

On Jan. 27, 2001 Drosnock and his friends were watching a basketball game together. The boys were drinking beer, but when David Klimowicz, a non-Bloomsburg University student, supplied vodka, Drosnock began drinking it.

Klimowicz had filmed Drosnock and other fraternity members drinking together.

Both Drosnock and Klimowicz fell asleep at the time of the fire. On the morning of Jan. 28 to find Drosnock dead. According to the autopsy report, the cause of death was acute alcohol intoxication. Drosnock's blood alcohol level was .4 percent, roughly four times the legal limit.

Public Safety performed CPR on Davis but with no success. Davis died at Geisinger Medical Center at

house. Klimowicz woke on the morning of Jan. 28 to find Drosnock dead. According to the autopsy report, the cause of death was acute alcohol intoxication. Drosnock's blood alcohol level was .4 percent, roughly four times the legal limit.

Public Safety performed CPR on Davis but with no success. Davis died at Geisinger Medical Center at

house. Klimowicz woke on the morning of Jan. 28 to find Drosnock dead. According to the autopsy report, the cause of death was acute alcohol intoxication. Drosnock's blood alcohol level was .4 percent, roughly four times the legal limit.

Public Safety performed CPR on Davis but with no success. Davis died at Geisinger Medical Center at

house. Klimowicz woke on the morning of Jan. 28 to find Drosnock dead. According to the autopsy report, the cause of death was acute alcohol intoxication. Drosnock's blood alcohol level was .4 percent, roughly four times the legal limit.

Public Safety performed CPR on Davis but with no success. Davis died at Geisinger Medical Center at

house. Klimowicz woke on the morning of Jan. 28 to find Drosnock dead. According to the autopsy report, the cause of death was acute alcohol intoxication. Drosnock's blood alcohol level was .4 percent, roughly four times the legal limit.

Public Safety performed CPR on Davis but with no success. Davis died at Geisinger Medical Center at

house. Klimowicz woke on the morning of Jan. 28 to find Drosnock dead. According to the autopsy report, the cause of death was acute alcohol intoxication. Drosnock's blood alcohol level was .4 percent, roughly four times the legal limit.

Public Safety performed CPR on Davis but with no success. Davis died at Geisinger Medical Center at

house. Klimowicz woke on the morning of Jan. 28 to find Drosnock dead. According to the autopsy report, the cause of death was acute alcohol intoxication. Drosnock's blood alcohol level was .4 percent, roughly four times the legal limit.

Public Safety performed CPR on Davis but with no success. Davis died at Geisinger Medical Center at

house. Klimowicz woke on the morning of Jan. 28 to find Drosnock dead. According to the autopsy report, the cause of death was acute alcohol intoxication. Drosnock's blood alcohol level was .4 percent, roughly four times the legal limit.

Public Safety performed CPR on Davis but with no success. Davis died at Geisinger Medical Center at

house. Klimowicz woke on the morning of Jan. 28 to find Drosnock dead. According to the autopsy report, the cause of death was acute alcohol intoxication. Drosnock's blood alcohol level was .4 percent, roughly four times the legal limit.

Public Safety performed CPR on Davis but with no success. Davis died at Geisinger Medical Center at

house. Klimowicz woke on the morning of Jan. 28 to find Drosnock dead. According to the autopsy report, the cause of death was acute alcohol intoxication. Drosnock's blood alcohol level was .4 percent, roughly four times the legal limit.

Public Safety performed CPR on Davis but with no success. Davis died at Geisinger Medical Center at

house. Klimowicz woke on the morning of Jan. 28 to find Drosnock dead. According to the autopsy report, the cause of death was acute alcohol intoxication. Drosnock's blood alcohol level was .4 percent, roughly four times the legal limit.

Patriot League vote delayed a second time

By NATALIE CASP
News Editor

Another glitch within the Council of Presidents, the Patriot League's governing body, has pushed back the vote on the League's permissive aid policy yet again, this time to the weekend of March 2-4.

Initially, the Council was scheduled to vote Dec. 12, 2000, on whether the League should extend its permissive aid policy, and, if so, how much latitude to allow in granting that aid. The December vote was rescheduled for Valentine's Day, Feb. 14.

On Tuesday, the University learned that the vote was postponed again until the weekend of the League's basketball tournament in March. Two Patriot League schools, Army and Navy, were not available to vote on Wednesday, causing the second delay, according to Interim Vice President for Student Affairs Charles Pollock '70.

"This doesn't signal anything other than a schedule conflict," Pollock said. "Now the vote will take place during the weekend of the tournament when the Council of Presidents tends to get together anyway."

See VPSA, page A3

Quality missile defense needed

By MICHAEL GORMAN
Staff Writer

As the new administration continues to settle in, its focus will be mainly on domestic issues. However, there is a storm brewing in the sphere of foreign policy.

The United States, and more specifically the Bush administration, is poised to make a decision regarding the future of the national missile defense system.

The program has met with strong opposition internationally, spawning fears of a destabilized NATO, and an alienated Russia.

Any resolution that involves the deployment of a defense shield will not be an easy sell for Bush and Defense Secretary Rumsfeld, and perhaps it is time to step back and re-evaluate the system and its prospects.

The United States is in a unique position. With the level of technology it possesses, and the international influence that it asserts, it has the opportunity to "establish a new international consensus that protects the world against the dangers of weapons of mass destruction" (Financial Times).

To accomplish this, Bush is going to have to walk a foreign relations tight

Public Safety Log

February 7, 2001

MEDICAL ASSIST—Public Safety responded to Dining Services for the report of an employee with a possible dislocated shoulder. The individual was transported to Student Health Services for treatment.

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF—A student reported to Public Safety that unknown person(s) had put salad dressing and Cheerios on her vehicle while parked in the Kappa Delta Rho lot. The incident is under investigation.

BU PROPERTY DAMAGE—Public Safety responded to Harris Hall for the report of broken glass in the fire extinguisher cabinet. No evidence of tampering could be found. Work order filed.

February 8, 2001

DISORDERLY CONDUCT / UNDERAGE CONSUMPTION (2 COUNTS)—While on routine patrol, Public Safety observed two males on S. 6th St. behaving in a suspicious manner. Upon investigation, Public Safety discovered an overturned gas grill, nearby. The two students admitted to consuming alcohol although under the age of 21 years. Citations for disorderly conduct and underage consumption were issued.

INFORMATION / VEHICLE ACCIDENT—Public Safety responded to S. 7th St. and St. George St for the report of a motor vehicle accident. Two students signed forms refusing treatment. Lewisburg Police Department was notified and the incident is under investigation.

February 9, 2001

ACT 64 / HEALTH CODES VIOLATIONS / FRATERNITY CLASH—Public Safety responded to Kappa Delta Rho Fraternity and assisted a University official and the Union County Code Enforcement officer to inspect the building following a report of health code violations. During the inspection a water bong (drug paraphernalia) was found along with discarded food and garbage throughout the building. East Buffalo Township Police Department was contacted to investigate the water bong. The building was closed and residents were placed in temporary housing. Criminal and Health Code violations are pending.

DISORDERLY CONDUCT / HARASSMENT—Public Safety responded to a domestic fight in progress at the Gateway complex near the dumpster. Upon arrival, Public Safety spoke to the student and non-student involved. Both individuals refused medical treatment. Lewisburg Police Department contacted to investigate the incident. University charges and criminal charges are pending.

DUMPSTER FIRE—Public Safety responded to Vedder Hall for the report of a dumpster fire. The officers extinguished the fire with an extinguisher. No witnesses or suspects were located in a search of the area.

AIDED / STUDENT HEALTH SERVICES TRANSPORT—A student requested transportation for treatment of a possible urinary tract infection. Student Health Services transported the individual to Evangelical Community Hospital Emergency room and later returned her to campus.

UNDERAGE POSSESSION / RECOVERED PROPERTY—While on routine patrol, Public Safety observed a male placing a bag on the ground and walking from it. The officer questioned the student who advised that there was alcohol in the bag. The student was identified as being under the age of 21 years while having alcohol in his possession. Citation issued for underage possession.

ACT 64 / UNFOUNDED—A student reported to Public Safety that an odor of possible marijuana was detected at the first floor of the New Residence Hall. Upon arrival, Public Safety was unable to determine the source of the odor and classified the incident as unfounded.

February 10, 2001

PUBLIC DRUNKENNESS / DISORDERLY CONDUCT / UNDERAGE CONSUMPTION—Public Safety received a report that a male was seen urinating near Vedder Hall. Public Safety stopped the person involved who was a student and determined that he was intoxicated although under the age of 21 years. Citations were issued.

INFORMATION / SMOKE ALARM ACTIVATION / SMOKE CONDITION—Public Safety responded to Vedder Hall for a fire alarm activation caused by birthday candles. Report forwarded to OHRL.

INFORMATION—Two students reported to Public Safety that two unidentified males in a truck followed them to the Gateway parking lot where they had harassed them with verbal comments. The truck could not be located in a patrol of the area. Lewisburg Police Department notified. The students requested no further action at this time.

THEFT BY UNLAWFUL TAKING—A student reported to Public Safety that a cellular telephone, a phone adapter and a black leather carrying case were taken from her car by unknown person(s) while the car was parked at tech Stadium parking lot. The incident is under investigation.

February 11, 2001

BURGLARY / THEFT—A student reported to Public Safety that unknown person(s) did gain unauthorized entry by force into the Kappa Delta Rho Fraternity and remove one wall speaker from the building. East Buffalo Township Police Department was contacted and responded. The incident is under investigation.

February 12, 2001

INFORMATION—Public Safety responded to Smith Hall for the report of a practical joke that had damaged some property. Two students reported that they received a phone call to open their room door at which time a can of water spilled, soaking the carpet and some clothing. Four students suspected of being involved were questioned but none admitted knowledge of the incident.

February 13, 2001

INFORMATION / PRANK—A student reported to Public Safety that unknown person(s) played a prank on him by placing electrical tape at various places on his vehicle. The incident is under investigation.

INFORMATION / ANNOYING ACTIVITY—A student reported to Public Safety that unknown person(s) had repeatedly knocked on his Trax Hall room door for an unknown reason. No witnesses or suspects were located in a search of the area. The student was advised to contact Public Safety should the incidents continue.

Chris Rivera—The Bucknellian

First Lady Athena Rogers buys a singing Valentine from the Silhouettes.

ALARM From page A1.

of Bostwick cafeteria, painting various buildings and fixing the roof of the Admissions Office. Funds will be budgeted every year to finish the conversion to the new technology.

According to Public Safety records, from the start of the fall 2000 semester to Oct. 30, 2000, there were 118 alarms in Bucknell West. Thirty-five of these alarms were normal alarms, 20 were nuisance and 63 are unknown.

Data was also collected from other buildings without the new technology. For example, Roberts Hall had one fire drill, three normal alarms, five nuisance alarms and six unknown alarms, creating a total of 15 alarms. Smith Hall was not far behind with a total of 12 alarms: two fire drills, three normal alarms, three nuisance alarms and four unknown alarms.

"We are well protected now, but we can fine tune," Pollock said. "The current alarms are not antiquities. They are modern technology, but are not state of the art. We are en route to having all state of the art."

ance alarms and six unknown alarms, creating a total of 15 alarms. Smith Hall was not far behind with a total of 12 alarms: two fire drills, three normal alarms, three nuisance alarms and four unknown alarms.

"We are well protected now, but we can fine tune," Pollock said. "The current alarms are not antiquities. They are modern technology, but are not state of the art. We are en route to having all state of the art."

Greeks garner awards

BY NATALIE CASP
News Editor

The Greek Life Annual Awards Committee recognized the Greek community Tuesday night during its annual awards presentation. The 19-awards, including the Most Outstanding Chapter awards, were distributed among 12 fraternities and sororities.

Dean of Fraternity and Sorority Affairs Roy Baker oversees the Greek community and works with the individual chapters to ensure continual development of Greek life on campus.

"I was pleased this year with the number of different fraternities and sororities who were named as recipients of the awards. Chapters who had not been recognized in the past were recipients this year," Baker said. "That alone speaks for some of the progress our Greek organizations have made this year."

Delta Gamma, competing against the other six of the University's sororities, won the Most Outstanding Chapter Award. Among the 12 fraternities on campus, the Most Outstanding Chapter Award was given to Lambda Chi Alpha. These two chapters, as determined by the committee, "excelled and demonstrated progress, achievement and excellence in the areas of chapter operations, community impact and chapter development."

Delta Gamma also won The Outstanding Sorority Chapter Philanthropy Award for raising $5,015.78 with their work on the One Million Penny Project and Anchorsplash.

"It is such an honor to accept the Most Outstanding Philanthropy and Chapter awards," 2000 Delta Gamma President Amanda Libengood '01 said. "Our most impressive accomplishment was definitely Anchorsplash, our campus-wide philanthropy event. We had faculty participation, as well as that of many non-Greek organizations like sports teams. I think the 'fun' aspect of the event is what made it such a success."

Lambda Chi Alpha was also given The Outstanding Fraternity Chapter Programming Award for conducting 14 programs and completing all mandatory programming requirements.

"We definitely feel very honored to have won these two awards because a lot of other fraternities and the Greek system as a whole have accomplished a great deal this past year," 2000 Lambda Chi Alpha Jay Robertson '01 said. "As a chapter we have come a long way and in my opinion improved in all aspects of fraternity life."

Lambda Chi Alpha's extensive programming contributed to the excellence of the chapter during 2000, according to Robertson.

"A very successful 5K Run was held over Parent's Weekend in September benefiting the Ronald McDonald House in Danville," Robertson said. "We won the Best Risk Management award for our efforts during Houseparty, and we had a very strong showing at our Faculty Dinner with Vice President Charlie Pollock and Dean Ferraro speaking about the future of student life at Bucknell."

The Most Improved Chapter Awards were given to Pi Beta Phi and Phi Gamma Delta for their development as chapters; these two chapters were also under consideration for the most outstanding chapter award.

Pi Beta Phi, according to the selection committee, "made huge strides and progress in a wide variety of areas that culminated in a number one ranking in academic achievement." The sorority was also given The Outstanding Sorority Chapter Programming Achievement Award.

"It was amazing to set goals and see them reached and then to get credit for all of our hard work. Pi Beta Phi attended over ten programs last year on topics ranging from diversity to drinking," 2000 Pi Beta Phi President Krista McCabe '01 said. "We raised over $1,200 for philanthropies and did over 1,200 hours of community service. We also received a perfect score on COGL and had the highest GPA for the fall semester of this year."

The selection committee also awarded Phi Gamma Delta with two other awards: The Outstanding Faculty Interaction Program Award and The Outstanding Fraternity Chapter Community Service Award.

"Beginning last year, Phi Gamma Delta sought to become even more involved in the Lewisburg community and Bucknell University," 2000 Phi Gamma Delta President Michael Kasmarek said. "The two faculty forums we hosted were designed to encourage interactive discussion between students, faculty and Lewisburg community leaders."

"Our chapter invited professors, local school administrators, politicians, corrections officials and other community leaders to actively debate issues with each other and fraternity members," Kasmarek continued. "This new approach to faculty interaction was very successful and proved much more rewarding to all parties involved."

The brothers of Phi Gamma Delta completed 1,928 hours of community service, while working for the Susquehanna Valley Women in Transition Shelter, the Kids Project and the Lewisburg Clean-up Project, according to Robertson.

Baker was not involved in the award selection process. Rather, four members of the Panhellenic and Interfraternity Councils were given information about the chapters and collectively made their decision on the awards.

"I thought that the selection committee did an excellent job. It took them almost 6 hours to review all the material and make their decisions," Baker said. "They took the process seriously and chose organizations that deserved the

"We definitely feel very honored to have won these two awards because a lot of other fraternities and the Greek system as a whole have accomplished a great deal this past year."

—Jay Robertson, 2000 president
Lambda Chi Alpha

recognition."

Some awards that were given in previous years were not given this year.

"I also was pleased when the Awards Committee advised me that they were not going to name recipients of certain awards because they did not feel that any particular chapter deserved the award," Baker said. "That also tells me a lot about how far we have come in the last few years."

The recipients of last year's Most Outstanding Chapter Awards, Alpha Chi Omega and Phi Kappa Psi, were again recognized this year with other awards. This year, Alpha Chi Omega won the Lois Heenehan Scholarship Award for achieving highest academic standing. Phi Kappa Psi was given The Most Outstanding Fraternity Chapter Recruitment Program Award for their excellence in new member recruitment.

Other chapters receiving awards were: Delta Upsilon, The Most Outstanding Community Relations Program Award; Sigma Phi Epsilon, The Campbell Rule; Jr. Memorial Scholarship Award; Kappa Kappa Gamma, The Outstanding Sorority Chapter Community Service Award; and The Outstanding Sorority Alumni Newsletter Award; Chi Phi, The Outstanding Fraternity Chapter Philanthropy Award and The Outstanding Cultural Diversity Program Award; Kappa Alpha Theta, The Outstanding Sorority Chapter Recruitment Program Award; and Sigma Alpha Epsilon, The Outstanding Fraternity Newsletter Award. Sigma Chi was given special recognition for their improvements as a fraternity chapter.

"It is unfortunate that every chapter cannot be recognized during an awards ceremony. All of our chapters did some very good work this past year in a number of areas," Baker said.

"Learning to Lead" workshops launched

BY JENNIFER JENCHURA
Staff Writer

Earlier this month, the Women's Resource Center and the Office of Health Promotions launched a four-week leadership workshop, "Learning to Lead." Each Tuesday for about an hour and a half in Walls Lounge, students interact with other peer educators, deans and professors to learn about a variety of leadership topics including addressing audiences, directing discussions and planning programs. Each session covers a specific topic, such as better body language and successful speaking strategies.

The first workshop geared specifically towards student leaders and spring leaders was led by Janice Butler, director of the Women's Resource Center, and Tracy Shaynack, director of Community Health Promotions.

"Students who attend Bucknell tend to be overachievers and have busy schedules so the "Learning to Lead" program gives them the opportunity to develop some important skills," Butler said.

The program came about because faculty members wanted to share their experiences with students and needed an outlet for it.

"The 'Learning to Lead' workshop series developed out of a shared need between several offices for leadership training for their students. As we started putting this series together for members of the dean of students' staff, we realized that there are a number of students across campus who could benefit from this training, so we opened it up to the entire student body," Shaynack said.

One reason for the creation of this leadership program was to help students learn to use unfamiliar campus resources.

"[Faculty] are willing to work with students and we just needed an outlet to these resources. Often, students take on leadership roles but no one has told them any strategies or how to be an effective leader," Shaynack said.

"This lets them gain insight to their own leadership styles as well as campus resources. They should know they can take advantage of the Writing Center to help with speech preparation and they should know we can videotape presentations to improve public speaking."

Emails were sent to every major organization on campus including BSG, the Greek system, as well as cultural and academic organizations.

An encouraging response was received from students and a mix of organizations has attended the workshops.

Co-Awareness Chair for Panhellenic Council Piper Murray '03 is attending the workshop after a letter she received advocating the program's interest in social issues. Murray's Panhellenic role deals with a variety of programs facing Greek women, such as eating disorders, sexuality and coping with stress.

"I want to gain a better understanding of how to effectively peer educate and develop programs for not only Greek women, but women throughout Bucknell's community," Murray said.

Another aspect of the program is the highly motivated people it brings together.

"The workshops bring together leaders of many student organizations that might not have gotten to know one another. This workshop would be beneficial in the future, especially to first-year and sophomore students who may not know the resources available at Bucknell and how to put together an effective program for their organization," said Murray.

So far the new program has had a successful turnout, and will be offered again if there is enough interest.

We're sick...of not having enough writers!

Email Laura (lday@) or Natalie (casp@)

World Briefs

Navy: No proof civilians distracted sub crew

WASHINGTON (CNN) — Pentagon officials emphasized Wednesday there was no proof that civilians distracted the crew of the USS Greeneville or contributed in any way to a collision with the Japanese ship. The accident last Friday sank the Ehime Maru, a research trawler carrying commercial fisheries students, and left nine Japanese feared dead in the waters off Hawaii.

Rescuers retrieved 26 of the 35 people aboard the Ehime Maru after the accident, but four 17-year-old students, two teachers and three crewmembers were still missing Wednesday.

The latest news comes after revelations that two civilians were sitting at key posts aboard the Greeneville as it performed an emergency surfacing drill that brought the nuclear submarine to the surface with great force.

Hit-and-run attack kills 8 Israelis

TEL AVIV, Israel (CNN) — A Palestinian driver for Israel's largest transit company plowed his bus into a bus stop near Tel Aviv on Wednesday morning, killing eight people.

At least 20 people were injured. Seven of the dead were Israeli soldiers — four women and three men. The eighth victim was a female civilian. Security forces pursued the bus as the driver fled the scene south of Tel Aviv, eventually shooting and injuring him some 20 kilometers (12 miles) away. He was taken into custody after he crashed into a large truck.

Israeli officials angrily denounced the attack and slapped immediate closures on Palestinian territories, further tightening restrictions the Palestinians say are strangling them and worsening an already deplorable situation.

Europe approves tough GM food rules

STRASBOURG, France — Strict rules governing the marketing and production of genetically modified food have been approved by European politicians.

The European Parliament voted for the new measures, called the "toughest GMO legislation in the world," by 338-to-52 on Wednesday, with 85 abstentions.

However, critics fear the move could lead to the end of the EU's three-year-old moratorium on the licensing of such products as early as next year.

Death toll in Salvadoran quake now 173

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador (CNN) — Rescuers in El Salvador worked to free victims of the country's second earthquake in a month as the death toll rose to 173.

Tuesday's 6.1 magnitude quake injured another 1,557 people and destroyed more than 2,200 homes, presidential spokesman Louis Lopez Portillo said. Those numbers are expected to rise, he said.

The National Emergency Committee, a government agency, also reported landslides in the area. Lopez Portillo said five villages on the outskirts of the San Vicente volcano have literally disappeared, and at least 40 villagers are known to be buried in two sites around the volcano.

Man charged over Kournikova virus

LONDON, England (CNN) — A 20-year-old Dutchman has been charged with spreading the Anna Kournikova computer virus that has invaded e-mail systems around the world.

The man, whose name has not been released, walked into a police station in his hometown of Sneek in the northern province of Friesland, saying he was the author of the virus.

He was arrested on suspicion of damaging computer programs and property, offences that carry a maximum four-year jail sentence.

Ecuador kidnappers agree to refrain from killing another hostage

QUITO, Ecuador (AP) — Kidnappers in Ecuador holding seven oil workers from other countries have agreed to a ransom offer just ahead of their deadline to kill another captive, the head of Ecuador's armed forces said Wednesday.

"With relation to the deadline of today or tomorrow to execute a second captive, I have information that yesterday negotiations were restarted," said Vice Adm. Miguel Saona, head of the national military Joint Chiefs of Staff. "The criminal group said it would not execute anyone else and I understand they have reached some economic arrangement."

In October, kidnappers grabbed five Americans, a Chilean, an Argentine and a New Zealander from oil camps in Ecuador's El Caca region, about 150 miles (240 kilometers) east of Quito. Two Frenchmen were also abducted but escaped several days later.

Senators hear details of Clinton's last-minute pardon of Rich

WASHINGTON (CNN) — As the Senate Judiciary Committee opened hearings Wednesday into former President Clinton's pardon of billionaire Marc Rich, senators said the president's constitutional authority to grant pardons should not be altered but that lessons of the proper use of pardons should be culled from panel's probe.

"I am one of those who believes that the presidential power of the pardon under the Constitution is absolute," said Senate Judiciary Committee Chairman Orrin Hatch, R-Utah. "We need to have a full explanation of what is going on, so if there are any improprieties, they won't happen again."

Suspect held in 2 slayings at university in Washington

WASHINGTON (CNN) — A suspect has been arrested in connection with the slayings of two students at Gallaudet University, police say, with robbery the apparent motive.

Washington Metropolitan Police Chief Charles Ramsey said 20-year-old Joseph Mesa, a freshman at the university for the dead, was charged with two counts of felony murder for the deaths of Benjamin Varner, 19, whose body was found February 3, and Eric Plunkett, 19, who was killed in September.

Ramsey said the motive for the murders was robbery. "We have sufficient evidence to charge him with two counts of felony murder," he said Tuesday.

Compiled by Laura Day,
courtesy of cnn.com

Administration creates alcohol contradiction—confuses students

Since the end of Prohibition in 1933, the University has been battling with regulating alcohol consumption both on and off campus. This year is no different.

Alcohol abuse has not changed significantly in the past decade, according to the administration. But the administration's struggle with enforcing the policy and encouraging healthier drinking habits has contributed to mutual frustration between students and administrators.

This frustration is two-pronged: the University is trying to moderate general alcohol consumption while still enforcing state law.

Students and administrators agree that drinking in moderation is the wisest choice, yet a significant number of students, regardless of age, is not demonstrating responsible choices relating to alcohol.

"There's a certain amount of truthfulness that surrounds alcohol," Dean of Students Richard Ferraro said. "Students have to move off the issue that heavy drinking is OK and be honest with themselves."

But even before the administration can advocate drinking in moderation, the non-negotiable issue of legality surfaces.

"Pennsylvania state law is the law, and we intend to abide by it," University President Stephen Rogers said.

Yet the administration recognizes that some college students, regardless of age, will consume alcohol and, at times, will consume in excess. The administration also has a moral and ethical obligation to educate and advise students on responsible drinking in order to avoid an alcohol related catastrophe. These two responsibilities—the law and safe drinking—place the University in a compromising and confusing situation.

"I personally think Dean Ferraro is doing the right thing, but his message can be confusing," BSG President Nate Sorber '02 said. "His example of choosing to drink moderately can include breaking the law, but it's realistic to take a stance like that, especially with the recent incident at Bloomsburg."

The administration is quick to point out that there is not an easy solution—yet, legally, cannot suggest moderation to underage drinkers.

"If students are under 21, they shouldn't drink, if they are 21, they need to drink appropriately," Rogers said. "But at the same time, I think that moderation is the only reasonable approach. I've seen schools try to go completely dry—it simply pushed everything off campus and caused problems no one predicted."

Rather than pushing for a dry campus, the University's administrators are attempting to modify the current code of conduct and urge students to drink in moderation. A large part of the focus on moderation is aimed at fraternities, where many students—whether Greek or independent, underage or of legal drinking age—consume alcohol.

"Our fraternities need to become responsible, they need to moderate," Ferraro said. "It doesn't do any good if people aren't being honest. If they're just using rhetoric—saying good things, but not meaning it—it's bad."

VPSA From page A1.

the oversight of admissions and financial aid.

"I think the fact that we've asked Charlie Pollock to serve in an interim capacity for two years is probably as much as we can ask of him," Rogers said.

Currently, the search committee for the VPSA position, co-chaired by

To address moderation, Rogers, Ferraro and Dean of Fraternity and Sorority Affairs Roy Baker are planning on talking to individual fraternity chapters.

"I would like to sit down and talk to the presidents of fraternities to discuss possible actions that they could take to prevent a tragedy at Bucknell," Rogers said. "Fraternities are in a position to provide positive leadership for the campus. The rest of campus might take notice if the fraternities took a positive stance on alcohol abuse."

At the same time, the problem is not to be attributed solely to the Greek system, according to Baker.

"There are people at Bucknell who believe if we didn't have the Greek system, there wouldn't be a problem. These people think first-year students and independents aren't drinking alcohol," Baker said. "But as long as Greeks continue to drink, we're always going to be under the gun."

With the recent sanctions against fraternities for alcohol violations, some Greek students are noticing an increase in attention from the administration.

"There's definitely a common perception that drinking is a problem among Greeks—the administration are definitely focusing on Greeks in order to focus on something," Delta Gamma President Becky King '02 said.

But the pressure from the administration does not stop with the Greek community. Some first-year students—underage and independent—are finding it difficult to socialize without receiving sanctions when a questionable situation arises, even if they are not consuming alcohol.

"As it is now, people who are drinking and abusing alcohol are reprimanded appropriately, but students who are in the wrong place at the wrong time still receive a citation," President of the Class of 2004 Jessica Briski '04 said. "There's no defense for non-drinkers who party."

Ferraro is working with other administrators to change the current conduct code to build in a forgiveness system.

"The revised conduct code will have two forgiveness features. If a student has two or fewer points by senior year, the points go away for example: if a student was in the wrong place at the wrong time or if they're caught with a simple possession of alcohol," Ferraro said. "The second is partial amnesty for people who are engaging in dangerous drinking habits but go in for help."

Ferraro hopes that the new conduct code, combined with an advertising campaign that emphasizes moderation and honesty, will encourage students to drink in moderation.

"At Bucknell three things have been lacking," Ferraro said. "We haven't critically discussed alcohol. We frequently haven't been honest—most of the students wouldn't lie, but when it comes to alcohol, there's a feeling not to tell the truth. Thirdly, moderation-in terms of 1-5 drinks in an evening."

"We're not asking for a commitment to being a teetotaler. We're not saying alcohol should never touch a student's lips, but to keep it under control; don't drink until you're sick, watch out for friends and don't make it a goal to get bombed," Ferraro continued.

Baker essentially agrees with Ferraro. "We do have an underage issue that we cannot ignore. Whether we agree with the law or not—and most of us don't—we still have to enforce the law at Bucknell," Baker said. "But if students would drink in moderation, we may not even know if they are drinking at all. When they don't drink in moderation, they clearly demonstrate that by their behaviors."

"Pennsylvania state law is the law, and we intend to abide by it."

—President Rogers

"We're not saying alcohol should never touch a student's lips, but to keep it under control; don't drink until you're sick, watch out for friends and don't make it a goal to get bombed."

—Dean Ferraro

"Whether we agree with the law or not—and most of us don't—we still have to enforce the law at Bucknell. But if students would drink in moderation, we may not even know if they are drinking at all."

—Dean Baker

Nonetheless, the alcohol problem the University faces always circles back to state law. Students, ultimately, are faced with weighing the importance of the law while interpreting what the administration is saying.

"I've heard Ferraro be fairly clear, most of the time, that there's a legal aspect as well as a moral aspect to drinking. It's a difficult and confusing message, but it's necessary and I'm glad someone in the administration is thinking this way," Sorber said. "From what I see, this new message of moderation is something that's going to take time for everyone involved."

Some of the VPSA principal duties and responsibilities

FORUM

EDITORIAL

New Borough leadership in position to benefit all

University students and the residents of Lewisburg have long feuded over downtown parties, parking issues and code-enforcement policies. Students have also complained about the "lack of things to do" in Lewisburg.

New Borough Manager David Clouser and Executive Director of the Lewisburg Downtown Partnership Project Linda Sterling share a common goal: improve town-gown relations and stimulate the Lewisburg downtown commerce, both of which will make the borough more attractive and enjoyable for all community members.

One of the main reasons Lewisburg attracted Clouser was the University connection with the borough. With both teaching and public administration experiences, Clouser should be a strong asset in improving town-gown relations with the University. One of his top priorities is to meet with the Responsible Housing Committee to address the problems affecting the off-campus student population. The fact that he wants to find a suitable compromise between the residents of Lewisburg and University students should be applauded.

He also affirmed that he doesn't think that students should be completely moved back to campus in several years, as Dean of Students Richard Ferraro has previously noted. He believes that the off-campus living situation is part of living in a small college town. The editorial board of The Bucknellian supports Clouser's affirmation.

Clouser also believes that the aging population of Lewisburg and the students can, in fact, reach a compromise regarding the conflicting age differences and preferences in a similar living environment.

The Bucknellian believes that Clouser's efforts are well intentioned and that the students will soon see and appreciate his initiatives. Clouser's presence in Lewisburg will prove to be beneficial for all residents of Lewisburg, including University students.

Clouser believes that Lewisburg has plenty of potential for growth and improvement, including stimulating the downtown commerce.

After being a consultant on the Partnership for the past two years, Sterling was recently selected by the Borough as its first executive director of the project. With a grant of $200,000, Sterling has been approved to initiate her goals.

The goals include promoting and attracting businesses on Market Street, but also to promote the businesses to University community members. Sterling plans to keep homeownership up and student renters down, but not completely out with programs such as the historic preservation of homes.

A strengthened downtown Lewisburg will surely benefit all members of Lewisburg and make the town more attractive for students "looking for something to do." All constituents in the area should support Sterling's efforts.

Clouser and Sterling are resourceful additions that The Bucknellian hopes will be effective leaders in launching their goals. The campus community should support these individuals and their proposed ideas as to improve the borough and the town-gown relations. Perhaps the most important way students can show their support is to use caution and respect when interacting downtown; if we show Clouser and Sterling we are worth catering to, we can reap many benefits from the new borough leadership.

bucknellian@bucknell.edu

Got somethin' on your mind?

Write a Letter to the Editors!

Box C-3952 Bucknell University
Lewisburg, PA. 17837

Editors-in-Chief
Rebecca Rowland '02
Peter Van Emburgh '02

Managing Editor
Jim Leahy '03

Senior Editors
Matt Albert '01
Heather Napolitano '01
Matt Trunnell '01
Brian Watson '01

Business Manager
Mark Langer '02

News Editors
Laura Day '03
Natalie Casp '02
Rachel Laskow '03

Business and Politics Editor
Michael Boland '03
Maureen Oscadal '03

Forum Editor
April John '03
Peter Hackeman '04

Features Editors
Sandi-Jo Galati '04
Jolene Hart '03
Jason Rubinstein '04

Arts and Entertainment Editor
Krista Reisdorf '02
Kristi Johnston '03

Letters to the Editors

Students call for extended use of Uptown

To the Editor:

I am a member of RHA and of the freshman BSG, but I am writing this as a student living uphill. It has become apparent that the majority of the food service on this campus is located down-hill and is set up to serve those down-hill. While this is necessary to adequately serve the students living there, the residents up-hill have been ignored.

Simultaneously, it has become apparent that Uptown is not being used very much during the times it is open, and is a waste of space during the times it is closed. These two problems can be solved together.

Why not have Uptown open in the morning for coffee, juice, donuts, and bageles? Why not have Uptown open on the weeknights as a lounge that also serves the snacks that are currently served only on Friday and Saturday? Neither of these ideas will require an overhaul of Uptown, both could pay for themselves from sales of food, and these would allow uphill residents a place to pick up food on the way to class and a place to relax and get food every night.

The idea of opening Uptown more often is not a new one. However, a plan is needed to convince those who will listen and to make sure that Uptown is used to the fullest extent possible to benefit those on campus. There is now a plan being carried out and it needs only popular support from the students to succeed.

This issue could fall under the domain of the Bucknell Student Government, or under the Residence Hall Associations, mainly of those located uphill. This is an issue that the RA's who have voiced their opinions seem to agree with. Instead of trying to decide which one will work on this issue, it makes perfect sense to have the three team up and work together to get this accomplished.

There needs to be a study to make sure that there is broad student support for this idea, but unless I am missing something, there certainly appears that there is. Next, we need to study how much this would cost and how it would be paid for. Issues like insurance, staffing, and equipment need to be studied. Then, with a well-crafted proposal, presentations to the BSG congress and RHA, as well as the university groups that oversee these sorts of matters, should be carried out.

The ball has already begun rolling. I encourage you to seek out your BSG representatives and officers, your RHA representatives and officers, and your RA's, and tell them that you support a coalition to open Uptown.

Peter Hackeman '04

Campus community lacks compassion

To the Editor:

Last Friday afternoon I was attacked by my ex-girlfriend, a Bucknell student, outside her dorm complex. Several issues, important to the community, have arisen from the attack and its aftermath.

Throughout the attack, what was happening was clear to the many passers by and observers from the dorms. My attacker is very tall, outweighs me by 150 lbs., and was aggressively pursuing me, ripping my clothing as I tried to back away and escape her grip. Moreover, I was yelling, "Police, police!" throughout the 15-minute struggle.

Despite all this, it was only with the help of the last of the many passing students whom I hailed that I was able to break free. Some time after the attack, my ex-girlfriend refused to return my possessions, falsely denying to the police and Public Safety that she had them. Alas, she was allowed the time, privacy, and numerous visitors to hide/dispose of my property. If you were a party to this theft or have knowledge of it, please contact the Lewisburg Borough police (524-5151 or 911) or Bucknell Security (577-3333 or x73333). You can return the items, and no charges will be filed against you.

One irony: immediately after breaking free, I dialed Public Safety on an outdoor campus phone only to get the message, "You have called a non working extension!"

The issues of personal and community responsibility weigh heavily here.

Numerous individuals witnessed the attack, which took place a mere two minutes from the Department of Public Safety. A prompt call would have saved me from a dizzying blow to the head and a black eye—as would have a quick intervention by a passer by or dorm resident. What holds us back from helping our fellow man? Why do so few of us come forward? How can Bucknellians foster the caring atmosphere in which we automatically take individual responsibility? How can we all learn to be heroes?

I wish to thank the following for their help: the student who helped me break away from my attacker, Bucknell Public Safety (especially Lt. James Middleton), paramedic Pete and the crew, the Lewisburg Borough Police, whoever called Public Safety, and the student witnesses who came forward.

S. Skaroff

Kappa Sigma punished too severely for actions

To the Editor:

As a University alumnus and member of the Kappa Sigma fraternity, I felt it was important to write regarding the recent temporary suspension of Kappa Sigma. Although I do not purport to speak for or represent all of our fraternity alumni, many of us have corresponded both among ourselves and with University administrators over the past week expressing our great concern with the University's actions. The outrageous reasoning behind these sanctions and the disrespectful treatment our alumni received from the University in response to our concerns has prompted me to write this letter to the entire Bucknell community.

For the record, I do not in any way condone Kappa Sigma's actions on February 2nd, which eventually led to their suspension. Furthermore, I do not in any way condone the January 25th actions of the brother who gave himself alcohol poisoning.

However, what is also not only indefensible but unbelievably outrageous was the University's decision to hold the Kappa Sigma fraternity responsible for the January 25th incident and subsequently interlock it with the incident of February 2nd. This individual was of age and served alcohol by a state-licensed liquor establishment. This night was not in any way sanctioned or supported by the fraternity. Yet, the entire fraternity was punished.

What if a similar incident involved select members of the football team or writers at The Bucknellian? Would we be witnessing the dismantling of the entire football team or the suspension of The Bucknellian? What if the participants in question were not members of a Greek organization but rather, were affiliated with some other campus group?

This question was posed recently in an email to Dean Roy Baker by a Kappa Sigma alumnus, Dr. Sean Grass, '93. Dean Baker's response was so blatantly offensive and unprofessional that it has been widely circulated among many Bucknell alumni. Among other things,

Dean Baker had this to say in response to Dr. Grass's question above: "In my opinion, you are doing exactly what the faculty here currently do. Many of our faculty still believe that the things that took place in this Greek system that resulted in their vote to close the system in 1989 still exists today. You still believe that the persecution of the Greek system that took place here when you were a student still exists because we (or I) hold Greeks responsible for their behavior. I will say the same thing I say to the faculty. Get over it! I am tired of hearing the faculty and the alumni complain about a situation that I did not create here at Bucknell."

My question to the Bucknell community is this: if a bias against Greek organizations no longer exists, is Dean Baker confirming in the affirmative my earlier question asking if non-Greek organizations would have had their activities restricted as well because of the actions of a single member?

While perhaps not as unprofessional as but certainly, equally as mystifying, was Dean Ferraro's comments printed in last week's Bucknellian. He noted that although the actions of January 25th were dangerous, they were legal. But yet, Kappa Sigma was restricted from holding parties at their house. My question to Dean Ferraro is this: Why were any sanctions, such as the restriction of social events, placed against Kappa Sigma for an incident at the Bull Run Inn that was not sanctioned by the fraternity and that you yourself said was "legal"?

The baseless actions, unprofessional statements and questionable conduct of these highly placed University administrators should give all current and past members of the Bucknell community great pause. Certainly, they are often under pressure from parents and faculty to provide a safe learning environment for their students. However, they should not be doing so at the expense of student rights or for the aggrandizement of their own resumes and reputations.

Sincerely,
Brian J. Walsh, '97

THE BUCKNELLIAN

Founded in 1896 as The Blue and Orange

Volume 127, Number 4
C-3952 BUCKNELL UNIVERSITY
LEWISBURG, PENNSYLVANIA, 17837
(570)-577-1520

BUCKNELLIAN@BUCKNELL.EDU
HTTP://WWW.ORG.BUCKNELL.EDU/BUCKNELLIAN

EDITORIAL POLICY

The editorial board of The Bucknellian reflects the consensus of the Editorial Board as to the topics and general position. If a consensus could not be reached, the opinions expressed are those of the Editors-in-Chief. All other opinion material represents the views of the author and not necessarily those of The Bucknellian.

PUBLISHING POLICY

The Bucknellian is written, edited and published on 12 Fridays during each academic semester entirely by Bucknell students. The Bucknellian's fiscal affairs are overseen by an Advisory Board comprised of faculty, staff and administrators. All published material is chosen by the paper's editorial board without prior review by the Advisory Board, its adviser, the University or Bucknell Student Government.

SUBSCRIPTIONS POLICY

Subscriptions are available $45 per year and $30 per semester. To subscribe, send payment and address information to: The Bucknellian Subscriptions, Box C-3952, Lewisburg, PA 17837. Subscriptions are mailed first-class on the Monday of publication. Please send change-of-address information to the above location as well.

ADVERTISING POLICY

The Editorial Board of The Bucknellian reserves the right to deny any advertisements if offensive, illegal or in bad taste. For advertising rates, please contact the advertising managers at (570) 577-1085.

Copyright 2001 The Bucknellian

Science and Technology Editors
Lynne Waldman '01
Josiana Cetta '04

Sports Editors
Carmen Mauriello '02
Brooke Rea '02
Andrew Burr '04

Sports Statistician
Matthew Herbert '02

Darkroom Manager
Chris Rivera '02

Photo Editors
Paige Cull '01
Chris Rivera '02

Local Advertising Representative
Bryan Prince '04
National Advertising Representative
Amy Peloquin '03

Online Editors
Eric Fair '01
Brendan Putnam '03

Circulation Manager
Brian Klotz '03

Head Copy Editors
Kim Luedee '01
Debbie Ruggieri '01

Production Manager
Nick Olson '02

Adviser
James F. Lee

Letter to the Editors

Lemieux's return a valentine to the Pens

To the Editor:

I am writing in response to Rob Schmicker's editorial "Is Lemieux's Return for Love or Money?" Rob is of the opinion that Mario Lemieux's triumphant return to hockey is primarily for financial and egotistical reasons. I am here to tell you that could not be farther from the truth.

Although Lemieux is the greatest skilled player in the history of the game, he always fell short with comparisons to media darling Wayne Gretzky. Lemieux's career was slowed by many injuries and tragedies, including spinal infections, cancer, and life threatening trouble with his infant son, Austin. Lemieux came back from each of them, and continued to dominate the game, though he was a reluctant superstar who preferred to live out of the spotlight.

The biggest reason he left was because lenient officiating, clutching and grabbing had replaced skill and talent as the recipe for a winning team. This allowed teams such as Florida, New Jersey, and Philadelphia to win, even though they weren't the most skilled teams in the league. The game was headed in the wrong direction, and Lemieux wanted no part of it.

Shortly after Lemieux's retirement the Penguins declared bankruptcy and were in danger of relocating to a new city. Instead of waiting for a new owner to relocate the team and pay him millions in deferred salary, Lemieux took a risk and bought the Penguins because he loved Pittsburgh and did not want to see the team leave.

Now, as a team owner, the surprisingly business-savvy Lemieux sat on the NHL board of governors and worked to convince the NHL that to capture more fans, the clutching and grabbing had to be lessened.

The NHL listened.

After this, Lemieux watched his team upset New Jersey and Washington in the playoffs over the past two years. The Pens were back on somewhat-solid financial ground and Lemieux had overcome another challenge. He had also become bored, which brings us to this season.

Around the beginning of the season, Lemieux's son Austin would watch old tapes of his dad winning the Stanley Cup, asked him why he wasn't playing anymore. That was a good question; the fire was still there, so why not return? He saw the current Penguins team as having the nucleus for a championship team. He felt with the new rules, he could help the Pens get closer to a Stanley Cup.

So he secretly began training. After a month, he announced his return. Immediately questions of his motivation arose. Was it, as Rob suggested, a publicity stunt? No, those are saved for the likes of Dennis Rodman, or other flamboyant stars. Was he doing this merely to pocket more money and attention for himself? If he wanted more money, why not just sell the team off to his fellow ownership partners? If it was for the attention, why not announce his return earlier and let the hype build and build? Those who knew anything about him, knew the answers to these questions.

Lemieux was coming back for 2 reasons—to win another Stanley Cup, and so his son Austin could watch his pop play hockey (By the way, thanks Austin!). The added ticket sales and marginal revenue of Mere icing on the cake, and what sweet icing it was, since every game since his return have been sell-outs, both home and away.

Rob states that instead of trying to win a Stanley Cup, Lemieux should be working the front office, lobbying for a replacement to Mellon Arena, the league's oldest venue.

My response to Rob is, if you're not trying to win the Stanley Cup every year then you shouldn't be an owner. As for the new arena, Lemieux has been buying land and quietly lobbying for a new arena, but to come out publicly and scream for taxpayers to buy another new arena (both the Pirates and the Steelers have new arenas) would be suicide.

The biggest fallacy that Rob states in his editorial is that Lemieux should be acquiring personnel instead of playing. Those who know sports understand that most owners only provide the finances to run the team. It is a general manager's job to sign and trade. Lemieux has an influence on personnel moves as a player. Just look at the beefing up the Pens have undergone in the past month.

Rob thinks that eventually the fire will burn out in Lemieux and he'll be back in the owners box sooner rather than later but it will be because the league strays back to clutching and grabbing, or because his recurring back problems prove too much to bear. It won't be because his desire for playing leaves.

That will never leave. Mario the player has already committed to playing next season, as long as he can work out a contract with the owner. Wink Wink. The Penguins are far from winning a Stanley Cup. But with the return of Lemieux they are that much closer. Lemieux is back to dominating the game, reclaiming the best player in the world status, which by the way Rob, is confidence not cockiness. If you think Lemieux's comeback story has been magical so far, wait until you see the ending he has in mind.

Justin Knox '01

St. Who's? Day: The myth of love finally exposed

By ALLYSON DEMERATH
Senior Writer

There are many different interpretations of how Valentine's Day actually got started. The first interpretation comes from the third century.

During February, the Romans celebrated a feast called Lupercalia to honor the god, Lupercus. During Lupercalia, the names of young women were put into a box and drawn by lot.

Starting in March, the boys and girls who were matched were considered partners for the year. Another version suggests that Emperor Claudius had a difficult time recruiting men to be soldiers because they did not want to leave their wives and sweethearts.

Claudius, being a bit hot-tempered, outlawed all marriages and engagements. St. Valentine secretly married several couples. When Claudius found out he threw Valentine in jail where he died on Feb. 14.

In Europe, many claim that birds begin to choose their mates on Feb. 14. The Europeans thought that young boys and girls would follow the birds and choose their mates on this day. The boys would protect the young girls throughout the year.

Regardless of what the true origins of Valentine's Day actually are, it has evolved into a commercialized and meaningless holiday.

If you are not currently in a relationship, you are a bit pressured to go out and find one! Your friends try and set you up on some blind date or your mother wants to introduce you to so-and-so's son or daughter. Let the games begin!

Better yet, what if you are currently in a new relationship. Do you go out to dinner? Do you get them a present? Are you actually boyfriend/girlfriend? You don't want to scare the person off, but you also don't want them to think you don't care at all. Ahhh yes, what a gray area it is.

Let's say, you are in a pretty stable relationship. You obviously have to travel back in time to elementary school. Remember those Valentine's Day parties? Everyone would decorate his or her own box, and then you would make Valentine's for your classmates. And what about those conversation hearts? Who invented those things anyway? Compressed sugar molded into hearts with inscriptions like "Fax Me" and "URA Cutie!"

No wonder guys have such a hard time with this holiday, look at what they're learning from! When we grow up into mature adults and we learn what Valentine's Day is really all about ... stress! Valentine's Day adds a whole new element of anxiety to an otherwise typical day.

If you are not currently in a relationship, you are a bit pressured to go out and find one! Your friends try and set you up on some blind date or your mother wants to introduce you to so-and-so's son or daughter. Let the games begin!

Better yet, what if you are currently in a new relationship. Do you go out to dinner? Do you get them a present? Are you actually boyfriend/girlfriend? You don't want to scare the person off, but you also don't want them to think you don't care at all. Ahhh yes, what a gray area it is.

Let's say, you are in a pretty stable relationship. You obviously have to travel back in time to elementary school. Remember those Valentine's Day parties? Everyone would decorate his or her own box, and then you would make Valentine's for your classmates. And what about those conversation hearts? Who invented those things anyway? Compressed sugar molded into hearts with inscriptions like "Fax Me" and "URA Cutie!"

No wonder guys have such a hard time with this holiday, look at what they're learning from! When we grow up into mature adults and we learn what Valentine's Day is really all about ... stress! Valentine's Day adds a whole new element of anxiety to an otherwise typical day. If you are not currently in a relationship, you are a bit pressured to go out and find one! Your friends try and set you up on some blind date or your mother wants to introduce you to so-and-so's son or daughter. Let the games begin!

Better yet, what if you are currently in a new relationship. Do you go out to dinner? Do you get them a present? Are you actually boyfriend/girlfriend? You don't want to scare the person off, but you also don't want them to think you don't care at all. Ahhh yes, what a gray area it is.

Let's say, you are in a pretty stable relationship. You obviously have to travel back in time to elementary school. Remember those Valentine's Day parties? Everyone would decorate his or her own box, and then you would make Valentine's for your classmates. And what about those conversation hearts? Who invented those things anyway? Compressed sugar molded into hearts with inscriptions like "Fax Me" and "URA Cutie!"

No wonder guys have such a hard time with this holiday, look at what they're learning from! When we grow up into mature adults and we learn what Valentine's Day is really all about ... stress! Valentine's Day adds a whole new element of anxiety to an otherwise typical day. If you are not currently in a relationship, you are a bit pressured to go out and find one! Your friends try and set you up on some blind date or your mother wants to introduce you to so-and-so's son or daughter. Let the games begin!

ly have to do something that is ten times better than whatever you did last year. Breakfast in bed is so passé. A romantic get away is too expensive. Maybe you could take them to a really nice restaurant in Lewisburg ... OOPS perhaps!

Worst of all, you have been in a relationship so long, that you are afraid your significant other won't even remember Valentine's Day. Your schedule has become so routine that your idea of a date is ordering pizza and watching the Wednesday night lineup. God forbid you might miss Dawson's! You find yourself wondering why store windows are filled with big red hearts.

This leads me to my next grievance about Valentine's Day: the media has totally tainted the whole day. Of this is the one day where men and women come home with flowers or candy for their significant others. What about the other 364 days of the year?

Couples that are truly in love don't need a fixed day on the calendar to show it and this is truly why I dislike Valentine's Day.

Texas budget woes may affect nation

By GRETCHEN SCHROCK
Opinions Columnist

Blissful is definitely not the word state legislators are using to describe life on the Texan ranch. It appears that when George W. Bush departed for his presidential dream he left the Texas legislature with an array of budget problems resulting from his obsession with tax cuts.

Now every cowboy in Austin is grabbing his hair and screaming "What are we going to do?"

Budget projections are showing that the state will have little or no money to spare. Where did their healthy surplus disappear? Did Bush decide to become a true politician and begin his thievery by first stealing his constituents' money?

No, it is assumed that budget overruns, particularly from health care costs like Medicaid, managed to erase all those extra dollar signs. Lawmakers from both parties are considering the possibility of cutbacks in many government programs that will negatively affect the lives of the citizens of Bush's home state.

According to the New York Times, State Senator Mario Gallego, a Democrat from Houston, said, "There's no doubt in my mind that George W. Bush's tax cuts have put us in the situation we're in right now."

Obviously, these fiscal problems does not bode well for the rest of the nation.

At the center of his campaign platform was his supposedly impressive record for cutting taxes in Texas. He beamed when he spoke of his special ability to usher $2.9 billion in tax cuts through the State Legislature in 1997 and 1999.

Yet, because of the former governor's mania with tax cuts, current Texan Governor Rick Perry has hinted that his grandiose program to improve education and transportation may have to be reduced in scope.

At the center of his campaign platform was his supposedly impressive record for cutting taxes in Texas. He beamed when he spoke of his special ability to usher $2.9 billion in tax cuts through the State Legislature in 1997 and 1999. Yet, because of the former governor's mania with tax cuts, current Texan Governor Rick Perry has hinted that his grandiose program to improve education and transportation may have to be reduced in scope.

At the center of his campaign platform was his supposedly impressive record for cutting taxes in Texas. He beamed when he spoke of his special ability to usher $2.9 billion in tax cuts through the State Legislature in 1997 and 1999. Yet, because of the former governor's mania with tax cuts, current Texan Governor Rick Perry has hinted that his grandiose program to improve education and transportation may have to be reduced in scope.

At the center of his campaign platform was his supposedly impressive record for cutting taxes in Texas. He beamed when he spoke of his special ability to usher $2.9 billion in tax cuts through the State Legislature in 1997 and 1999. Yet, because of the former governor's mania with tax cuts, current Texan Governor Rick Perry has hinted that his grandiose program to improve education and transportation may have to be reduced in scope.

At the center of his campaign platform was his supposedly impressive record for cutting taxes in Texas. He beamed when he spoke of his special ability to usher $2.9 billion in tax cuts through the State Legislature in 1997 and 1999. Yet, because of the former governor's mania with tax cuts, current Texan Governor Rick Perry has hinted that his grandiose program to improve education and transportation may have to be reduced in scope.

At the center of his campaign platform was his supposedly impressive record for cutting taxes in Texas. He beamed when he spoke of his special ability to usher $2.9 billion in tax cuts through the State Legislature in 1997 and 1999. Yet, because of the former governor's mania with tax cuts, current Texan Governor Rick Perry has hinted that his grandiose program to improve education and transportation may have to be reduced in scope.

Black History month a time for reflection

By KELLEN SMITH
Staff Writer

The history of African Americans isn't a history that can be extracted from the whole of American history. It is not a history that can be limited to slavery, or the "safe" part of the Civil Rights Movement, or the problem of racial profiling, or even the problem that faced African American voters trying to vote in the last Presidential election.

Bison Scoreboard

WOMEN'S BASKETBALL

MEN'S BASKETBALL

Track & Field

WRESTLING

WATER POLO

Bucknell 63
Holy Cross 66

	fg	ft	r	p
Almind	7-11	0-0	3	14
Quimby	4-11	6-8	10	14
Creamer	3-14	0-6	0	6
LeBlanc	2-2	0-1	8	4
Franks	5-14	2-2	2	13
Rounsly	3-5	4-7	8	10
Flemming	1-1	0-0	1	2

3pt.

Franks 1-4

SEASON STATS 15-5 (5-1)

	fg	pct	3-pt.	a	r	ppg
Franks	45-139	324	17-52	45	64	7.3
Quimby	97-203	478	0-0	26	149	15.0
May	9-25	360	3-11	27	11	1.4
Creamer	133-279	477	35-87	97	89	20.2
Helsing	9-25	360	6-14	8	17	3.6
Almind	134-285	470	6-17	24	102	17.2
Rounsly	32-71	451	0-1	7	52	4.8
LeBlanc	41-87	471	0-0	25	119	6.2
Valdner	3-8	375	0-0	1	9	1.5
Fleming	5-12	417	0-0	0	25	9
Forence	1-5	200	0-0	0	10	8
Castillo	1-2	500	0-0	0	0	4
Putnoky	0-0	000	0-0	1	1	0

Bucknell 49
Holy Cross 58

	fg	ft	r	p
Webber	1-6	0-0	9	2
Santos	0-0	1-2	2	1
Werner	6-16	0-0	9	12
Lalugba	0-5	1-2	5	1
Hardenbergh	1-1	0-0	1	3
Ramage	4-8	0-0	1	11
Blankenship	4-11	3-4	1	12
Skornik	0-0	2-2	1	2
Quinn	0-1	0-0	1	0
Namvou	1-1	0-0	2	3
Slater	1-4	0-2	3	2

3pt.

Ramage	3-6
Namvou	1-1
Blankenship	1-3
Hardenberg	1-1

SEASON STATS 10-10 (2-4)

	fg	pct	3-pt.	a	r	ppg
Bailey	101-228	443	25-57	57	69	17.6
Lalugba	119-225	539	0-0	26	162	14.6
Ramage	40-107	374	20-55	15	24	8.2
Blankenship	63-127	583	13-41	53	40	8.4
Werner	63-155	406	5-17	28	93	8.3
Santos	11-32	344	0-0	19	43	2.4
Bennet	15-38	320	1-6	2	18	1.7
Webber	5-22	227	1-14	2	11	1.4
Rodgers	2-2	1000	1-1	0	1	1.3
Hardenberg	21-59	356	3-22	10	49	2.8
Nyambi	2-9	222	0-2	0	2	.6
Werner	1-6	167	0-0	5	17	.3
Slater	12-24	500	0-2	3	20	1.9
White	0-0	000	0-0	0	2	0
Quinn	2-13	154	2-8	2	8	.7

Winter Classic

Women's Notables

800 M
Ryan	2:17.06
Pole Vault
Nyce
Klotz	10'4"
400 M
McSwain	59.31
200 M
Brady	26.21
Bourn	26.51
Shot
Lee	44'6"

Men's Notables

1000 M
Euell
500 M
Huntsburger	1:06.16
200 M
Noel
Solomon	22.78
35lb. weight
Stairs	58'10"
Pole Vault
Arek	15'3"
Long Jump
Powell	23'2.5"
55 M
Gabriel

Bucknell 7
Millersville 32

Winners

174 Chunko	6-1
165 Fasnacht	18-6

Bucknell 17
Seton Hall 20

Winners

165 Fasnacht	8-7
197 Neuman	6-4
HWT Falciglia	12-3
125 Perrin	14-1
133 Weller	14-8

WOMEN'S TENNIS

Winners

Singles:

"A"
J.Wurzburg	6-4, 4-6, 6-3
Inglis	6-3, 4-6, 6-3
"B"
Berthod	7-5, 6-2
Bishop	6-4, 6-4
"C"
M.Wurzburg	6-6, 0-6, 6-3
Maisel	7-6, 6-4

Doubles

"B"
Berthod/Bishop	8-5
"C"
J. Wurzburg/Pugno	8-3

Bucknell 8
George Washington 7

Scoring Quarter	1st	2nd	3rd	4th
BU	1	2	3	2
GW	5	1	0	1

Individual Scoring

Goals: Cull 3, Rea 3, Schober, 2

Assists: McLaughlin 2,
Schober, Chesterfield

Steals: Cull 6, McLaughlin 4,
Schober 2, Hofstetter, Stahl,
Schober, Hofstetter

Ejections Drawn:
McLaughlin, Stahl, Rea, Cull,
Schober, Hofstetter

Saves: Chesterfield 10

STATISTICS
COMPILED BY
MATTHEW
HERBERT '02
COURTESY OF
ATHLETICS
COMMUNICATION

Ask the Question Marquis

Q: Dear Question Marquis: I'm a two-timer. My boyfriend doesn't know that I've been cheating on him. Anyway, yesterday he told me he's hired a lawyer to help him legally change his name to...get this...the name of the guy I'm cheating on him with! That's very screwed up. — Christina in NY

A: Um...you don't...perhaps...in that case...no. You must CHALLENGE...yourself—to a duel. Yes.

Q: Dear Question Marquis: Just the other day, I was at the library using the computer catalog thing, and this total stranger stops and he acts all concerned and offers to help me. But I didn't need any help! I'm sick of people treating me like an idiot just because I'm beautiful. — Kara in D.C.

A: First of all, thank you for being beautiful. It takes courage. Now, I once overheard Descartes saying that it is not so much that men think beautiful women are stupid, as that beautiful women make men stupid, and then they just try to talk to them on their own level. But René would say anything to the girls at those singles salons, so who can say if it is true. I know nothing of such things myself. In honesty, I have never been able to get past a beautiful woman's...uh...beautifullness...to even notice her intellect. But I will try to answer your question.

To begin with, anyone who insults your intelligence you must challenge to a duel. That goes without saying. But I must ask, was this stranger an American? If so, that makes no sense for him to consider you stupid—it is as the pot calling the other pot a kettle, or however that goes.

"Maybe this library is not the best place for you to meet people. My boudoir, on the other hand, is a wonderful place to meet interesting people. People like...me."

But my real advice is this: Maybe this library is not the best place for you to meet people. My boudoir, on the other hand, is a wonderful place to meet interesting people. People like...me. And while you're here, I can show you how to use Questia to write a much more impressive research paper. And much more quickly—but please, do not feel the need to rush while you are here. You, me, Questia, a bottle of Chateau d'Alembert. Sounds enticing, no? All those books and journal articles online, no need to skim the text or write your bibliography...oh, I cannot bear it! Please, come over.

questia
Better Papers. Faster.

*Price subject to change. See web site for current pricing. Internet access not included. ©2001 Questia Media Inc. Questia, the Questia logo, "Better Papers. Faster.", the Question Marquis, the Question Marquis signature, and the Question Marquis graphic mark system are service marks of Questia Media Inc.

Next Week:
Men's Basketball at Colgate
Women's Basketball at Colgate
Swimming & Diving—Patriot League Championships
Track & Field—Patriot League Championships

THE BUCKNELLIAN Sports

Bison fall just short against Holy Cross

Squad suffers 66-63 setback but bounces back to drop Army and tie BU win mark

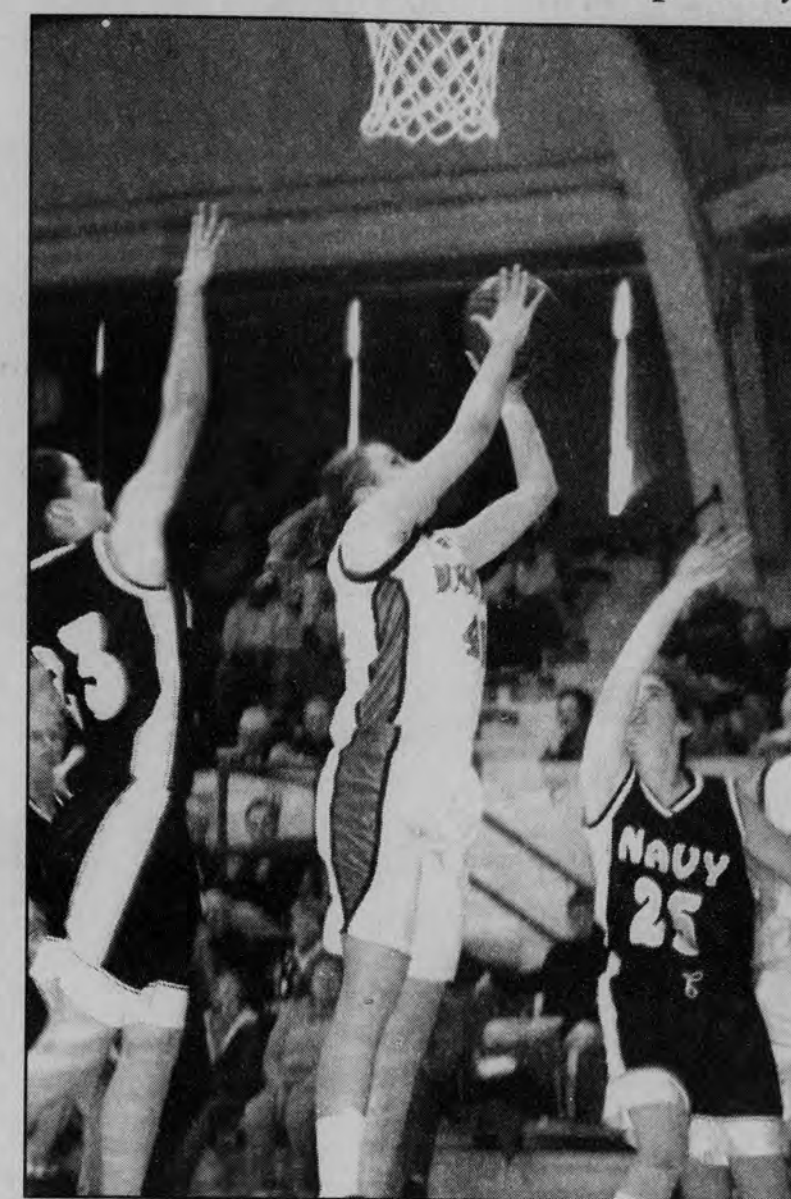

By ANDREW BEVAN
Senior Writer

There are many impressive records in sports that exhibit consistency. These records include Joe Dimaggio's 56-game hitting streak in the summer of 1941 and Carl Ripken Jr.'s 263 consecutive games played. Add the Holy Cross women's basketball team to the list with their 51-game winning streak at home against Patriot League opponents.

This streak was put to the ultimate test this past Saturday as Bucknell faced off against the league-leading Crusaders in front of a capacity crowd at the Hart Center. The contest was a battle from start to finish and in the end it was only a couple of minutes that separated the winner from the loser. Bucknell fought hard but ended up falling to Holy Cross 66-63 in what can easily be characterized as their most emotional game of the season so far.

"I was very proud of how our players approached the game and how they focused out the crowd," head coach Kathy Federjaka said. "The game was close right from the opening tip as the teams answered each other back and forth. With just over five minutes left in the first half Bucknell found itself up by one, 26-25. This lead would not last for long as Holy Cross went on a 12-0 run to take a 37-26 lead. The teams exchanged baskets before time expired and the Crusaders went into the locker room maintaining an 11-point advantage, 41-30.

"The first ten minutes of the game

Chris Rivera—The Bucknellian
Junior Vicky Quimby finishing in the lane over two Navy defenders.

were critical and I thought we were in good shape at the halfway point. The team was calm and they were positive," Federjaka said.

The Bison exploded on to the court in the second half, going on a 10-1 run to cut the Crusaders' lead to two, 42-40. Freshman forward Desire Almind had four of her team-high 14 points during this stretch.

"It was critical how the team cut the lead right away out of the locker room. It was the key to making the game close," Federjaka said.

Holy Cross would push their lead back to seven, 49-42 with just over 13 minutes to play in the contest. Bucknell responded with an 8-0 run to reclaim the lead by one, 50-49, with 10 minutes left in the game. Kate Rounsley '02 poured in four of her 10 points in this run for the Orange and Blue.

With just over a minute and a half left the Bison found themselves down two, 65-63. The team was forced to foul the Crusaders at this point. Holy Cross went 1-4 from the free throw line but they held on to the ball to prevent Bucknell from getting off a final shot.

The Bison had three defensive stops in the last two minutes but were unable to come up with the ball each time.

"I am not disappointed in the least in our kids. They did not have turnovers down the stretch and they

See WOMEN, page A8

Athlete of the Week: Dave Gabriel '02

By DAVID TOMAINO
Staff Writer

Let's face it, some things are better than others.

For instance, no one argues XFL icon "He Hate Me" can hold a candle to NFL star Eddie George. Few will argue that they prefer to see the "Ickey Shuffle" over Michael McCarty's jig, as seen by Super Bowl viewers. Then there is Bucknell sprinting sensation Dave Gabriel '02 or the field of competitors this weekend at the Patriot League Championships. The answer remains to be seen.

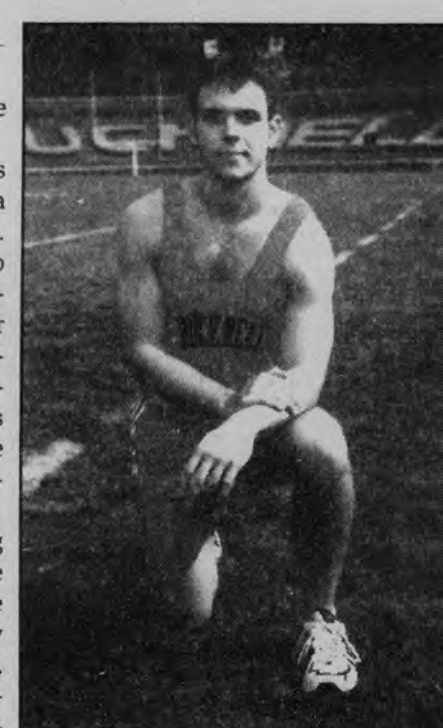

When it comes to running styles, Assistant Track Coach Joe Klim calls his sprinting star "the poster child of good form." He may also be the poster child for Tyeonol, as Gabriel has suffered the misfortune of coping with nagging injuries the past two seasons. "This is the first year he has been healthy and ready to go," said Klim.

And positive results are piling for the Pennsylvania native. Gabriel ended January sweeping the 55-meter and 200-meter dash at Colgate running in a 6.51 second 55-meter dash, which is the top time in the Patriot League this season. The time also elevated Gabriel into seventh place in Bucknell history in that event.

This past weekend's Bucknell Winter Classic pitted Gabriel once again at the forefront of the pack, as he prevailed in the 55-meter dash. And it could be this weekend that the junior has circled on his calendar to pull out his finest performance of the year.

"He's extremely focused and has always put his team ahead of himself," said Klim.

Plan on Gabriel focusing his efforts on bringing in the first Patriot League championship for the men since 1993. Gabriel is better than his foes.

Courtesy of Athletics Communication
Junior sprinter Dave Gabriel.

Swimmers set to make waves at Patriots

By CHUCK VINCENTE
Staff Writer

The Bucknell swim team has geared up for the past few weeks to compete in the Patriot League Tournament Feb. 15-17, hosted by Colgate in Hamilton, N.Y. Last year the Bison men came in third and the women came in fourth, but this year's squad hopes to outdo their previous performances.

"Army is the team to beat this year," senior tri-captain John Ferriter said. "The second and third place slots are a toss-up between us and Lehigh, and coming off our first dual meet victory against them in a long time, I like our chances."

The competition will be fierce, with four teams competing for first place. Army is favored to win, but Navy, Bucknell and Lehigh also have strong chances of taking the crown.

The BU men's and women's teams beat Lehigh for the first time since the 1991-1992 season, ending their regular season competition on a strong note. Each squad ended with a 3-1 conference record, suffering losses only to Army.

Bucknell's last three meets have been against Patriot League teams, and the Bison have swept all three. Heading into the tournament, they have confidence and strength in their favor.

"We have the strength, the depth, the heart to be champions, and that is what we will be no matter what happens," senior tri-captain Molly Lowe said.

Lowe is one of six women who will end their collegiate career next week. All have added depth and success to the team for the past four years.

For others, this tournament will mark their first visit to the Patriot League Championships. First year swimmers are going to have an impact next weekend, as they have all season.

Daniella Faas '04 will swim the 500-free, an event she has dominated all season for the Bison. Freshmen relay swimmers Megan Freese and Anna Sommers will also be an integral part of the team heading to Patriots.

Sophomore Darby Golino has had an impressive season for the Bison, swimming both the 100 and 200-yard backstroke. The team expects her to have a good finish at the tournament.

Abby Weaver '02, a mainstay of the women's team with her lightning-fast freestyle performances, has had another very strong season. Swimming both the 50 and 100-yard freestyle, she will undoubtedly be one of the top competitors.

Weaver's personal goal in the upcoming week is to compete to the best of her abilities. "I just want to relax, have fun, and hopefully swim my personal best," Weaver said.

Head Coach Jerry Foley predicts that this year's women's competition will make this meet one of the closest in years.

"I've been in the league seven years now—four as an assistant at Army and the last three here at Bucknell—and I think this year's women's title hunt will be the closest it has ever been," said Foley.

The men's team has five seniors, all of whom have brought this team to the competitive position it now enjoys. Ferriter is looking to place in a freestyle event and has set personal as well as team goals. One goal is to set a relay record.

"I would love to set new Bucknell and Patriot League records in the 200 and 400-yard freestyle relays," Ferriter said. Teammates Jeff Sharpe '01, Chris Neary '02 and Pete Garvin '03 make up the rest of the relay squad in both events (see feature, page A8).

Ferriter's goal seems feasible, considering that the relay team has dominated much of the competition throughout the season.

Tri-captain Sharpe swims the relay as well as freestyle events and has placed well all season. Neary is one swimmer everyone will be watching. He had a season full of wins and record-breaking swims, and Foley has aspirations of Neary placing first in some events this weekend.

Lehigh and Army should give the Bucknell men the most competition. Although the Bison beat Lehigh in the regular season, Foley considered it an upset.

"We feel really good about our year so far," Foley said. "Collectively, as a program, I think this is our best opportunity to go into the championships and be extremely competitive. Beating Lehigh was a real highlight, and we hope to carry that momentum into Patriots."

Winter Classic preps track for Patriots

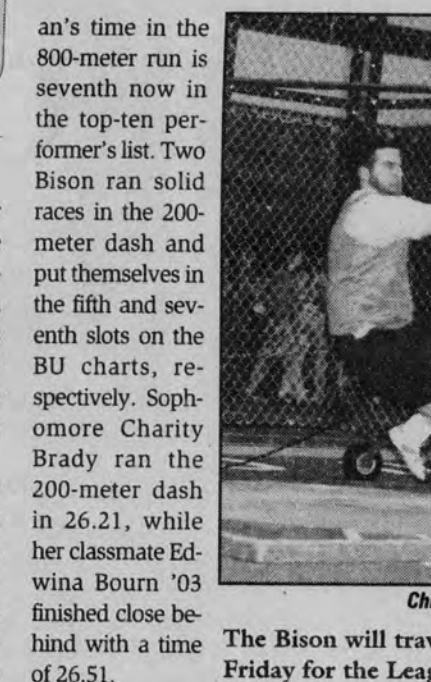

Last week's track article was improperly accredited. The article was written by Rose Sedo.

By ROSE SEDO
Senior writer

The 13th Annual Bucknell Winter Classic was a successful endeavor for the Bison track & field team this past weekend as six Bison women and three Bison men put themselves in the record books in the non-scored meet. Both teams' continued success adds to their confidence as they head into this weekend's Patriot League Championships at Navy.

In the women's events at the Winter Classic, six Bison put themselves in the record books. With marks good enough to put them on the Bucknell top-ten performer's charts, LaTonya McSwain '02 ran in the 400-meter dash for the first time this season. McSwain finished fifth in the race with a time of 59.31, making hers the fourth best time recorded in Bucknell history.

In the 800-meter run, senior captain Laura Ryan crossed the finish line in second place with a 2:17.60 clocking. Ryan's time in the race was the

Chris Rivera—The Bucknellian

The Bison will travel to Annapolis this Friday for the League Championships.

In the field event's, freshman Erin Lee cracked the top-ten with a throw of 44'6". The mark puts Lee in the tenth spot all-time at Bucknell, while Samantha Klotz '02 is now tied for third all-time in the pole vault after clearing a height of 10'4". Not to be overshadowed by the women's team, three Bucknell men also had solid performances in the meet. Freshman Jeff Arek cleared a height of 15'3" in the pole vault to take second place and tie for fifth on the Bucknell performer's charts.

In the 200-meter dash, sophomore Matt Solomon placed third in the event with a time of 22.78. Solomon's time in the 200-meter dash is the seventh fastest time recorded by an individual at Bucknell.

Rounding out the record-breakers for the men's squad was freshman Noel Powell as he became the sixth best leaper at BU with a mark of 23'2" in the long jump.

The men's and women's strong performances this past weekend have them poised and confident as the team prepares for this weekend's Patriot League Indoor track and field championships at Navy. The results at Patriots have been predictable for the past several years: the Army men and Bucknell women leave with the conference championships. The Bison hope that this season will be different as the men hope to join the women on victory lane.

In the men's indoor championship, the Bison have not won the title since 1993. Since then, Army has run off with seven straight titles, with Bucknell finishing second the last six years. However, the men have a strong team across the board this season, and hope to put an end to the Black Knight's

See TRACK, page A8

Last-second goal lifts water polo over GW

By MOLLY GOELLER
Staff Writer

The Bucknell women's water polo team opened their season this past weekend at George Washington University with a scrimmage against the University of Maryland and a game against GW. After beating the Terps 15-3, the Bison went head-to-head against a competitive GW team, but came out on top to kick off their season with a victory.

George Washington, a new league competitor for the Bison, posed an immediate challenge as they scored the first two goals of the game. At the end of the first period, the Bison had managed to score a goal but were still trailing 5-1.

Going into the second quarter, Bucknell was down four goals but they came out strong, determined to make a comeback. The Orange and Blue stepped up their defensive play, allowing George Washington to score only one goal in the next two periods.

Sophomore goalie Lindsay Chesterfield's presence anchored the efforts of the defensive team. Backed up by intensified play on the defensive end, the team worked hard to get the ball into the cage. Their efforts worked, as the Bison had tied the game at 6-6 by the end of the third period.

Entering the fourth period both teams knew that they had proven their skills as players, but now the stakes were higher and only heart and determination could win the game.

"The fourth quarter turned out to be a true defensive battle with both teams struggling to find the net," Head Coach John Ziegler said.

Both teams fought for another goal, moving the score up to 7-7. As time continued to run down on the clock, everyone fought for an opportunity to put away the game-winner.

A man-up possession for BU with 1:15 remaining looked as if it might be that opportunity, but GW's goalie blocked the shot.

Possession went to GW, who attempted a goal but missed, leaving the ball to Chesterfield. With 15 seconds remaining in the game, senior co-captain Paige Cull sprinted to the other end, awaiting a pass from Chesterfield. With no time to waste, Cull received the ball and slammed a goal into the corner of the cage, winning the game for the Bison.

"It felt great to put the ball in the net, but it wasn't just my goal," said Cull. "The whole team contributed to that goal and the win. We really did it together."

Leading the scoring for the Bison were Cull and junior Brooke Rea with three goals each, and junior Adrienne Schober with two goals. Cull, Schober, and senior co-captain Julie McLaughlin also tallied assists for Bucknell. Chesterfield recorded 10 saves while Cull and McLaughlin collectively had 10 steals.

"I think that the most impressive thing about the way that we played is how we pulled together as a team," Schober said. "If we continue to work together the way we did this weekend, there is little we won't be able to do this season."

—Adrienne Schober '02

With their 8-7 win over George Washington, the Bison enter their season with a 1-0 record. They look forward to a tournament this weekend at Villanova, where they will match the Navy Aquatic Club and George Washington, and also preview the Villanova squad.

Sports

Garvin, Ferriter, Neary, Sharpe: fearsome foursome

By BRIAN KLOTZ
Staff Writer

The Patriot League championship in swimming, being held this weekend at Colgate University, are ripe with opportunity. Bucknell's men's sprinting core is sending one of the best crews it has assembled in years, led by sprinters Chris Neary, John Ferriter, Peter Garvin and Jeff Sharpe. For seniors Ferriter and Sharpe, this will be their last championship, but they hope to go out with a bang, especially as members of a stacked 4x50 meter freestyle relay.

"This is the fastest four we have put together," coach Jerry Foley said. "The clock doesn't lie. The four of them, individually and collectively have swam faster than any other four swimmers we have had, to this point in the year."

The team has already made its way onto the Bucknell swimming records book in sixth with a 1:24.57 second mark, but hopes to improve it this weekend. The Patriot League record stands at 1:22.01, set by a team that Neary and Sharpe were both a part of.

Individually, the four swimmers are at the top of the charts in all of their respective events. Neary is entered in the 50-yard freestyle, the 100-free and the 100-butterfly. He sits poised to compete for the top spot in all, but particularly in the 50-free and 100-free, as he has set new Bucknell pool records in these events on Jan. 27 at the Lehigh meet. Ferriter has his hands full with the sprinters as well, and is focused on the 50 and 100-yard freestyle races. "I'm very excited this year," said Ferriter. "I am already faster this year than last year. My goals are to be in the top four or five at Patriots in the 50 and 100 free. Sharpe has a long history in the Bucknell swimming program. His name appears in many record entries on the Bucknell list including the 50-free, and the 200 and 400-yard relays at several points. Sharpe has been the man to bring it home on almost all of his prior relays, so expect him to be the final leg on the relay this weekend.

From left: Swimmers Peter Garvin '04, John Ferriter '01, Chris Neary '02 and Jeff Sharpe '01. The four compose Bucknell's 4x50 meter freestyle team, which should compete for the Patriot League title.

As for Garvin, the freshman has been posting impressive times in the 100-free style this season, often swapping first and second place finishes with Ferriter. He has also swam the 50-free style, but not as often as some of the other members. When put together, these four men seem unstoppable. "I think this year is the best relay I've been on," said

Ferriter. "We work so well together, and having Neary first as the fastest in the league gets us a good start. This week, we practiced the exchanges really hard—that's a big part."

Foley was hesitant to set any goals for the team. "I'm not gonna hamper them by having a goal," he said. "We have done all the work, and our training is geared so that we peak at this point in the year. As far as I am concerned, whatever the clock stops at, it stops at, but we will go after it."

Ferriter thinks that one reason why the team works so well together is because of the members' personalities. "Not only are they my teammates, but we are best friends out of the pool as well," said Ferriter. "I think our personalities are compatible and we are all very competitive, but at the same time we are laid back and confident."

Foley believes it is important that Bucknell dominate the sprinting events at the Patriot League meet. "Sprinting is our strength," he said. "We have an opportunity this year to take the sprinting events and be one of the top two teams in the league. We need to dominate the big events and grab the big points."

Men's spikers start off spring with a win

By ERIC KIDD
Contributing Writer

The Bucknell men's volleyball team opened its season last Friday night with a win over Scranton University. They won convincingly, 25-18, 25-19, 23-25, 25-16, proving that they should be very competitive in the league this year.

The Bison were led by captains Jeff Rambo '01 and Erik Kidd '01. Rambo showed he was easily the most dominant hitter on the court with 17 kills. At setter, Kidd ran the offense smoothly, contributing 51 assists.

After jumping out to a two game lead, the Bison dropped the third largely in part by a breakdown in defense and passing. "Passing is key to our success," said Rambo, "when our passing is on, it gives the setter more options to attack the opponent with our offense."

In the fourth game, the team regained their momentum and took over. Outside hitters Dave Myers '01 and Darren Schuch '02 stepped up with solid all-around matches, most notably combining for 21 kills. In the middle, Don Alm '02 and Jon Shogan '04 did a good job shutting down Scranton's top hitters while teaming up for 13 blocks.

The match was the team's first of ten in the regular season, culminating with league championships in April. The team plays its first home match of the season on Feb. 24 at 3:30 p.m. in Davis Gym.

They traditionally get good-sized crowds in Davis, made up largely of rowdy fraternity brothers cheering them on. So if you're interested in seeing them play, or are just curious and looking for something to do, come down to watch what should be an exciting match.

BASKETBALL

From page A10

12 points.

Last Saturday, despite flirring all game with a victory against league-leader Holy Cross (19-5, 9-1), the Bison left the Hart Center with a 58-49 defeat. Bucknell rallied late to cut the Crusaders' lead to only a point, but was held scoreless over the last four minutes as Holy Cross secured the victory with eight more points.

Brian Werner '03 and Dan Blankenship '03 paced the Orange and Blue offensively with 12 points apiece and Ramage contributed 11 in the loss. The Bison tallied the first seven points of the contest and led 15-8 a little less than halfway through the first, but a 24-12 run by the Crusaders gave them their first lead of the game at 30-27 and the halftime advantage, 32-27.

Scoring the first seven points of the second, Holy Cross extended its lead to 39-27 early in the half. The Bison responded with a 17-8 run though, bringing the score to 50-49 in favor of Holy Cross with 4:08 left in the game. But that glimpse of victory was the last the Crusaders would allow in the game, as they also reached deep for something extra with an 8-0 run to end the game.

"We've been able to win defensively this year," Flannery said, "we just haven't been able to knock down some shots in critical spots. We need to win a few offensively."

Despite holding Holy Cross to only 35 percent shooting from the floor in the second, the Bison themselves only shot 27 percent in the latter half. "Our shooting has been real tentative in the last couple games," Flannery said.

Holy Cross was led by Tim Szatko and Brian Wilson, who both had 12 points in the game. Additionally, Dave Meade came off the bench for the Crusaders and shot 5-of-5 from the floor, finishing with eleven points.

The Bison return home Sunday for conference action against Colgate.

BISON TIE SCHOOL RECORD FOR WINS

WOMEN
From page A7

did a fantastic job of coming up with shots but just could not get the ball," Federjaka said.

Allmnd and Rounsley found support from junior forward Vicki Quimby, who recorded her eighth double-double of the season with 14 points and 10 rebounds. Kate Franks '03 had 13 points to go along with her four assists and Molly Creamer '02 played all but one minute of the game with only two turnovers and in the words of her coach

"did a great job mentally."

"The Cross game was so disappointing because we were right there with them, it was anybody's game," Rounsley said. "But so many positives came from it — being in a tight game the entire way at their gym, that game gave us confidence that we can beat them regardless of where the game is played."

WOMEN HOPE TO DEFEND TRACK TITLE

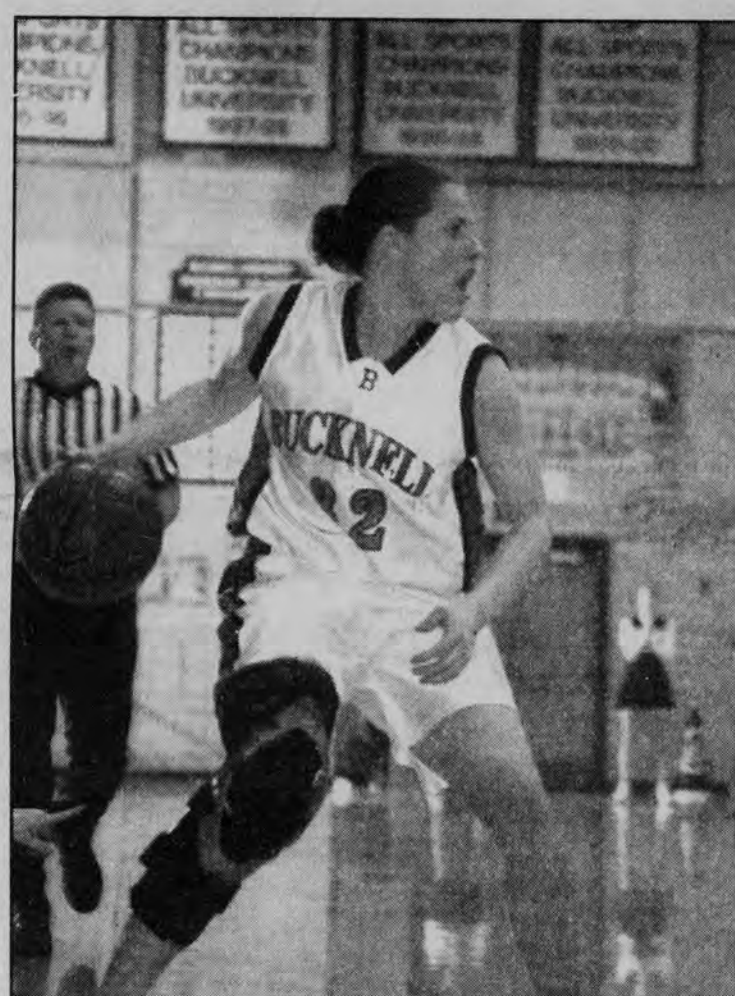

TRACK FROM PAGE A7

dominance of the Patriot League.

The Bison women have followed a slightly different path at the conference championships, having won the title for the last three years. Last year, the women won the crown on Bucknell home turf, defeating their closest competitor, Navy, by 36 points. The primary competition for the Bison will again come from the Midshipmen. However, this year Navy has the advantage of competing on its home turf in Halsey Field House.

The men currently have six individuals who have times or marks which rank as one of the top two times in the Patriot League this season. Leading the team into the Championship weekend is the only returning All-League performer from last year's squad, senior co-captain James Hollins. Hollins finished second in the triple jump last year, and currently owns two of the better long and triple jumps in the Patriot League.

Sharing captain duties with Hollins this season, has been one of the fastest men in the Patriot League, junior Dave Gabriel. He has the fastest time in the 200-meter with 22.13, and the second fastest time in the league in the 55-meter dash at 6.51. Freshman Noel Powell plays a strong second in the 200-meter dash, owning the second best time in the league with a 22.20 clocking. Powell will more than likely compete in Kate Franks '03 scans the court for a Bison teammate. The Bison look to set the school record for wins against Colgate.

"We took them to the wire and put ourselves in a position to win," Federjaka said. "We outrebounded them and played good defense. "This game was critical to having success later on in the playoffs."

Bucknell looked to get back on the winning side of things as they traveled to West Point this Wednesday to face league foe Army. Allmnd continued her scoring ways by sparking the Bison with 26 points on 11-18 from the floor as the Orange and Blue secured a 92-77 victory. With this win, Bucknell tied the school record for wins in a season with 18.

The Black Knights played a solid first half, gaining the lead with just under two minutes gone and not relinquishing it until 20 seconds were left in the game. At one point Army had an 11-point advantage thanks to 63 percent shooting from behind the arc. But the Bison battled back to acquire the lead as the teams headed to the locker room.

Bucknell roared out of the gates in the second half, going on a 16-4 run over the first six minutes that would end up putting the game away. The Bison would extend their lead to as large as 23 before the contest finished with the Bison winning by 15.

For the sixth time this season the Bison had at least six scorers in double figures. Quimby added another double-double with 22 points and 11 rebounds. Rounsley scored 13 for the Orange and Blue while Franks had 13. Bucknell shot close to 60 percent from the floor as well as going 25-30 from the free throw line.

"I basically think that we have a good thing going so far this year, we have all put in a lot of hard work and now is when it all starts to show as it gets close to the Patriot League Tournament," Franks said. "I am personally excited about what we have all accomplished so far and what we have the ability to do in the tourney."

Bucknell looks to make its mark in the history books this Saturday afternoon as it hosts Colgate and looks to set the school record for wins in a season.

Everything could be decided this weekend by the Bucknell women's relay teams. The 4x400-meter relay team of McSwain, Christie Wolfgang '02, Laura Ryan '01 and Bango are the owners of the fastest time in the event with a 3:53.05 clocking at the Penn State National Open. Also fielding a strong team will be the women's distance medley relay foursome of Bango, Khadija Shariff '03, McSwain and Marshall, whose best time this indoor season is 11:58.46 at the Hershey Relays. The women's primary competition will come from the host school, Navy, which is currently beating the Bison by a mere seven points on paper.

The reason our chances are good is because our team is extremely competitive and that will be our biggest advantage in a close meet in Navy's house. What will pull us through to a fourth straight title will be the team's competitive nature and togetherness," Klim said.

The championships will begin this Friday and continue on Saturday at 11:00 a.m. with the first field events; at 2:30 p.m., the running events will begin. The Patriot League crown will be decided Sunday at the conclusion of the men's 4x400-meter relay, which will be run at 5:00 p.m.

Both Bison teams hope to be hoisting the cups, and with the excellence that they've displayed this indoor season, they both have a strong chance to do so.

Sports

Where'd the good 'ole days go?

Today's NBA slam dunk contest a far cry from days of MJ, Nique, Spud

Nineteen-year-old Desmond Mason of the Seattle SuperSonics won this year's slam dunk contest.

By ROB SCHMICKER

Senior writer

Michael Jordan, Dominique Wilkins, Spud Webb, Vince Carter. What do these four players have in common? Answer: they've all won the NBA Slam Dunk Competition.

With a list of participants led by Jordan and the likes, the Slam Dunk Competition has always been the most celebrated part of the all-star weekend. But with the absence of all the major stars, this year's event didn't have the same hype as in years past.

The Dunk Competition was at its height in the late 1980's when the diminutive Webb, Jordan, and Wilkins put on world-class shows. Since then, some of the winners include Harold Minor, Kenny Walker, and Dee Brown. As a result, the event definitely began to take a turn for the worse.

In fact, the competition was so bad that after Kobe Bryant won in 1997, the league pulled the plug. After a two-year hiatus, the competition made a triumphant return last year. And it was brought back for one reason — Vince Carter.

The NBA couldn't lump a gift horse in its mouth, and as they jumped on the opportunity to boost ratings and their image by letting Carter display his raw athletic talent and creativity. His first dunk, a 360 degree windmill, was of such epic proportions that the competition was virtually over. From there he made two more dunks that just blew the roof off the arena.

But what made the competition especially good was that Carter played to the crowd and the judges. He knew he was the reason the NBA brought back the event and didn't want to disappoint the world. Each dunk left fans around the world wanting more. For one year we had forgotten why the event had even left.

This year figured to be the same, if not better, with the array of talented stars like Tracy McGrady and Steve Francis ready to knock Carter off his pedestal. There had been rumors for weeks leading up to it about who would be participating, but when the roster was released, all possible excitement was sucked out of potential viewers. What the event did have was youth, but what it lacked was star power: no Carter, no Francis, no Kobe.

Those who were still optimistic felt the competition might be saved by the youthful exuberance of the lineup. There was only one starter, and the oldest participant was 24. If these players were going to capture the crowd, they were going to have to do more than just give exciting dunks. They had to show some charisma as well. But none of them did, and their dunks weren't very creative either.

The eventual winner, Desmond Mason won, not because he was spectacular, but because he was consistent. After missing his first dunk, he got progressively better while his opponents choked in the spotlight. His victory was so anti-climatic that I switched over to watch the NFL instead.

What made the previous competitions successful, obviously, were its competitors. While that may seem incredibly simple, just think about it. Jordan and 'Nique had us on our seats in 1988, pushing the limits with every dunk. Webb dazzled us because of his height, and Carter kept our minds in a daze, wondering what he'd pull out next.

We can't blame the NBA, or even the competitors, for a bad dunk competition this year, but we can place some of the blame on who wasn't there. The carryovers from last year all could have made the event special once again, but they didn't. This may sound extremely unlikely, but their decisions may actually be rational. After all, an injury isn't impossible, just highly improbable.

These guys are pro basketball players and are getting paid because of their physical attributes. To throw your only means of making money out the window by getting injured in an event that is not required is silly. Just ask New England Patriots RB Robert Edwards. Following a 1000-yard rookie season, Edwards injured his knee so badly in a rookie sand football game that he may never play again. Because most players don't have a college degree to fall back on, they have to protect what is making their money: their bodies.

The general trend throughout the history of the dunk competition is to take the title with you and never come back. Whether this trend will continue to occur in the future remains to be seen. The event failed once before, and everyone is hoping it won't take that turn again. In order for it not to, the NBA will need Carter and Francis to compete next year. It will not only help struggling ratings, but it will help the league's overall image. Hopefully this isn't a one-year phase. With any luck, next year at this time we will all be excitedly talking about the dunk competition rather than the 2-ball competition.

Spud Webb was the shortest player to win the slam dunk title.

IM Corner

Basketball A
1. KDR A 4-0
2. Team Oranthal 3-1
3. High Court 1-1
4. Rounders 2-2
5. J-House 1-2
5. Vedder Vertigo 1-2
7. Best Kept Secrets 1-0
8. DU 0-3

Basketball B
Division 1
1. Sig Ep B 4-0
2. Team Herb 2-0
3. PC Load Letter 1-1

4. Chi Phi 3-2
5. Wet Heads 1-2
5. Krispy Robin 1-2
7. DU B 0-5
Division 2
1. Blonde is a Lark 3-0
1. Vedder Vertigo 3-0
3. We Got Rice 1-1
3. Fighting Amish 1-2
5. Kappa Sigma 1-2
6. Take 2 0-1
7. Mud Sharks 0-3
Division 3
1. The Masons 2-0
2. Team Promix 1-0

3. Supreme Court 1-1
3. Los Jugadores 1-1
5. Hired Goons 1-2
6. Sig Ep A 0-2

Basketball C
1. Vedder Vertigo 3-0
2. Financial Panthers 2-1
3. Lady's Men 2-2
4. Sig Ep C 1-3
5. LL Vegas 0-1

Billiards
1. Bull Run Hustlers 2-0-1
2. Sig Ep 2-1

3. Vedder Vertigo B 1-1-1
4. Vedder Vertigo 1-2
4. Pool Sharks 1-2
4. Smith Sophs 1-2

Bowling
1. Sig Ep A 3-0
2. Harry Balls 1-0
3. Vedder Vertigo 1-1
3. Vedder Vertigo B 1-1
5. Sig Ep B 0-1
5. French Ticklers 0-1
7. PC Load Letter 0-2
8. BWB 0-0
8. TKE 0-0

Racquetball
1. Sig Ep A 1-0
2. Vedder Vertigo 0-1
3. Sig Ep B 0-0

Remember to turn in score cards. If you do not turn in a score card it will be counted as a forfeit and your deposit will not be refunded. Keep up the fun!

Write for Sports.
Call Carmen at 75282.

it's not for everyone, but that's [the point].

In Army ROTC you'll push yourself. Test your limits. And in the process, learn how to think on your feet and be a good leader. You could even get a scholarship. Register today for an Army ROTC class. Because you're not just like "everyone."

ARMY ROTC Unlike any other college course you can take.

Write for Sports.
Call Carmen at 75282.

THINK BEFORE YOU STRIKE.

ONLY YOU CAN PREVENT FOREST FIRES.

IN THE PAINT

With Staff Writers:

Ali Ahmed and Justin McCarthy

Sunday, Feb. 18 Phoenix at Philadelphia

Even though Philly has the best record in the NBA, they have been struggling lately and have dropped three of their last four games, which could be a concern. Phoenix will still need an exceptional game out of their playmaker Jason Kidd in order to hope to match the high soaring Iverson. Also, Robinson and Marion will need to make up for Phoenix's lack of a center and help contain Theo Ratliff.

Justin's pick: Sixers by five.
Ok, so Iverson kicked butt at the All-Star game. But Theo Ratliff is out and he was the key to their defense. Thus, without Ratliff, I see Kidd, Rogers and Marion penetrating successfully the whole game. The Suns might not stop Iverson but overall they have a good solid team and a great leader at their head. Look for Rodney Rogers to have a particularly good game with Ratliff out.

All's pick: Suns by twenty

San Antonio at Toronto

The Spurs have won nine of their last ten and have looked like the dominate force they were a few years ago when Duncan first emerged in the league, while Toronto is currently riding a three-game winning streak of their own. This game will be decided by the stars. The Spurs have no one who can guard Vince Carter, they just need to hope that their Twin Towers can intimidate him from driving. The Raptors need to hope Antonio Davis will be enough against Robinson, but more importantly Duncan.

Justin's pick: Spurs by eight.
It is always amazing how star players are supposed to be out with injuries but are still able to not only play, but dominate. So Carter supposedly will continue to play with an injured jumpers knee, and thank goodness, because that will turn this game into an interesting matchup. While Duncan and Robinson are unbeatable down low they lack enough perimeter defense to slow Carter down. Plus, Davis and Oakley will do a decent job of contesting Duncan and Robinson. Even Keon Clark might be serviceable with his athleticism.

All's pick: Raptors by two

Utah at Sacramento

The Kings defeated the Jazz earlier this week in overtime by a mere three points, which shows how evenly matched these two teams truly are. Both are led by strong power-forwards, Malone and Webber, respectively. Ultimately though, this game will not be determined by them; rather by which stars backcourt is able to help him out and support him more.

Justin's pick: Jazz by four.
This will be a great match between two teams that contrast each other well. The exciting Kings against the old-school Jazz. On one hand, there is Karl Malone—the greatest power forward ever-against Chris Webber, who is on pace to set records of his own and is one of the most exciting players around. Speaking of exciting, flamboyant but erratic, Jason Williams will go against John Stockton, who has been the epitome of the prototypical point guard for over a generation. Too bad this game will probably be decided by the supporting cast, where the Kings, led by Stojakovic, have the advantage.

All's pick: Kings by five

L.A. Lakers at Indiana

Neither of these teams resemble the teams that faced off less than a year ago for the NBA title. The Lakers are holding their own; however, they have already lost four more games this year than they did all last year. Also, the team chemistry that was supposed to exist under Phil Jackson's Zen tutelage has only worsened relations between Shaq and Kobe. The Pacers on the other hand, are playing dismal and will likely have to fight for a playoff spot. They have lost seven of their past eight, and their young stars like Rose and Crotchen who emerged last year as weapons seem to have faded quickly. Final question: Where the heck is Reggie Miller?

Justin's pick: Lakers by 17.
I was really happy when Kobe, after talking all that smack, was burned towards the end of the All-Star Game. He is easily one of the most complete players in the game, but I hate his attitude. But anyway, he should have a good match up against Jalen Rose, who will have a hard time scoring if Kobe is matched up against him. This game should be close without Shaq, but I think the Pacers might pull out an upset. On a side note, Kenny Smith is an idiot, Jonathan Bender easily deserved a 50 on his left handed free throw dunk.

All's pick: Pacers by six

New York at Orlando

The Knicks have already defeated the Magic twice this season by one and three points respectively. The key to a Knicks victory is the containment of McGrady, something the Knicks have not done well the past two games (he's scored a combined 61 points), but they have still been able to win. On the other side, the Magic need to find a way to upset the balance of New York's offensive attack; however, more importantly they need Hill back!

Justin's pick: Knicks by three.
Tracy McGrady thinks he can be the next person to average a triple-double for the season, and why not. He excels in every aspect of the game. Passing, scoring, rebounding and also defensively he might be Orlando's best. Against the Knicks, he should be able to shut down Allan Houston, forcing Sprewell and Glen Rice to carry the load. While Armstrong has been getting better, Orlando's season depends how much rookie Miller can develop. If he becomes consistent and they get decent rebounding out of their front court, look out for the Magic in the playoffs—even without Grant Hill.

All's pick: Magic by 16

Check out next week's Sports section for a preview of the women's tennis team's spring season and a feature on the Bucknell ski team!

Sports

XFL—not a chance in hell

So if you've heard of the XFL then you've probably seen that picture where some 12 year old boy is brandishing a poster on opening day claiming, "I'm here for the cheerleaders!" (See the 2/9 issue of The Bucknellian.) Well, I don't know how to tell you this kid, but the chances of you having any interaction with one of the XFL cheerleaders is thinner than the span of a covers their ... In fact, I daresay, the only aspect of this sport that has even a shred of credibility is the fact that Vince McMahon is the pres ... no wait, that there are some real big name players—uh ... mmm ... WAIT ... no ... never mind, false alarm.

I wish I could offer some words of encouragement that would make the pain go away, or somehow disband this unholy alliance between Lucifer and NBC that has our nation dreaming of the days when Hulk Hogan made his break onto the silver screen with "Suburban Commando." Ah, life was so much simpler then. Sometimes I wonder if he'll ever go back to making movies, but I digress.

In all the controversy surrounding this new league, its easy to forget its winning qualities and what it will bring to the world of football and to millions of fans nationwide. First, it is a good testing ground for young talent, aiding budding stars while they get their personal thing together. Millions will be entertained by the miasma of endzone dances and late hits. It will allow NFL scouts to slack off—the American dream. Not to mention, that even those who don't appreciate the sport will be able to stay cool in the summer as the sun will cease to shine.

More injuries will occur due to the acceptance and encouragement of hitting people in the back, but of course, this will serve to boost the medical establishment. As players search for easier and quicker methods of injuring their opponents, "sharp pointy thing" sales will go up. And as the viewership begins to decline, the sale of shiny objects will skyrocket and the revenues from that industry could be reinvested in getting these people some help.

But I guess this is just the next logical step for an ever-intrusive media coverage of the fishbowl that is our lives. It's sad to say that shows like "Temptation Island" and "Survivor" are so popular. Did we not learn anything from the touching performance of Jim Carrey in "The Truman Show"? That was a social critique here people, not a suggestion.

The XFL, with its armored on-field cameramen, film every low blow, every expletive, every endzone dance and every shot of cleavage that's fit for network TV—and I'm not talking about mineral deposits. Their prime directive is to bring the camera where the NFL won't allow the camera to go: the locker room, the huddle, the sideline, the quarterback's inner ear, a coaches ... well, let's just leave that to the imagination.

I guess what it comes down to is making the game of football less a game and more a Saturday night movie. President Vince McMahon even joked about scripting the whole thing. I suppose that it could work, seeing as most of these guys have no speck of athletic talent, maybe they could indulge their more dramatic side. Which raises an interesting question: why would you create a league based on the principles of bloodletting and the decline of sportsmanship—a characteristic that is stereotypically male—into a theatrical production—which is stereotypically a female role? I think Vince has some issues he needs to work through. Perhaps we could give Hannibal a call and see what he's doing for dinner. Let's see if the job sounds "a-peeling" to him (alright, I apologize for the inanely cheesy reference but come on ... deep down you know you're laughing—most likely at me rather than with me).

One has to wonder, though, what it must have been like for Vince to spawn this demon-child of an idea in his cobweb-strewn head and to have the chutzpah to put this before NBC. What has to be even more spectacular is what was going through the mind of the NBC executive who approved it. And on top of all that, how excited must Vince have been when he got the phone call telling him "Game on." I guess you have to give him credit.

But what does this new league really do for us other than give me something to rant about? Well it gives NBC, if not a hunting knife, then at least a makeshift shiv, with which to compete with CBS's "Survivor" and Fox's "Temptation Island." I guess the biggest disappointment is the number of people the league has attracted thus far. It says a lot about a society that chooses to watch a spectacle over an athletic competition. It panders to the lowest common denominator and screams, "Entertain me because I'm dull-witted and boring!" There are no redeeming qualities with which to latch on to. It's second-rate football, it's third-rate acting, fourth-rate sportsmanship, but first-rate camerawork.

I guess all I can do now is pray. I wonder if people realize, even if just during the commercial break, that by watching other people's lives on TV, they're neglecting their own and obliterating any shot they might have had with the Chicago Enforcers' cheerleaders.

So this is my suggestion. We sit everyone who is involved with the XFL down in a room, close the door and offer $100,000 to anyone who can produce a shred of integrity and/or self-respect. If anyone can, that person will become the automatic winner of the "Big Game at the End." By the way, I like that name—quite appropriate, because if the season ever reaches that point, the only people claiming victory will be the four horsemen of the Apocalypse.

May God have mercy on our souls.

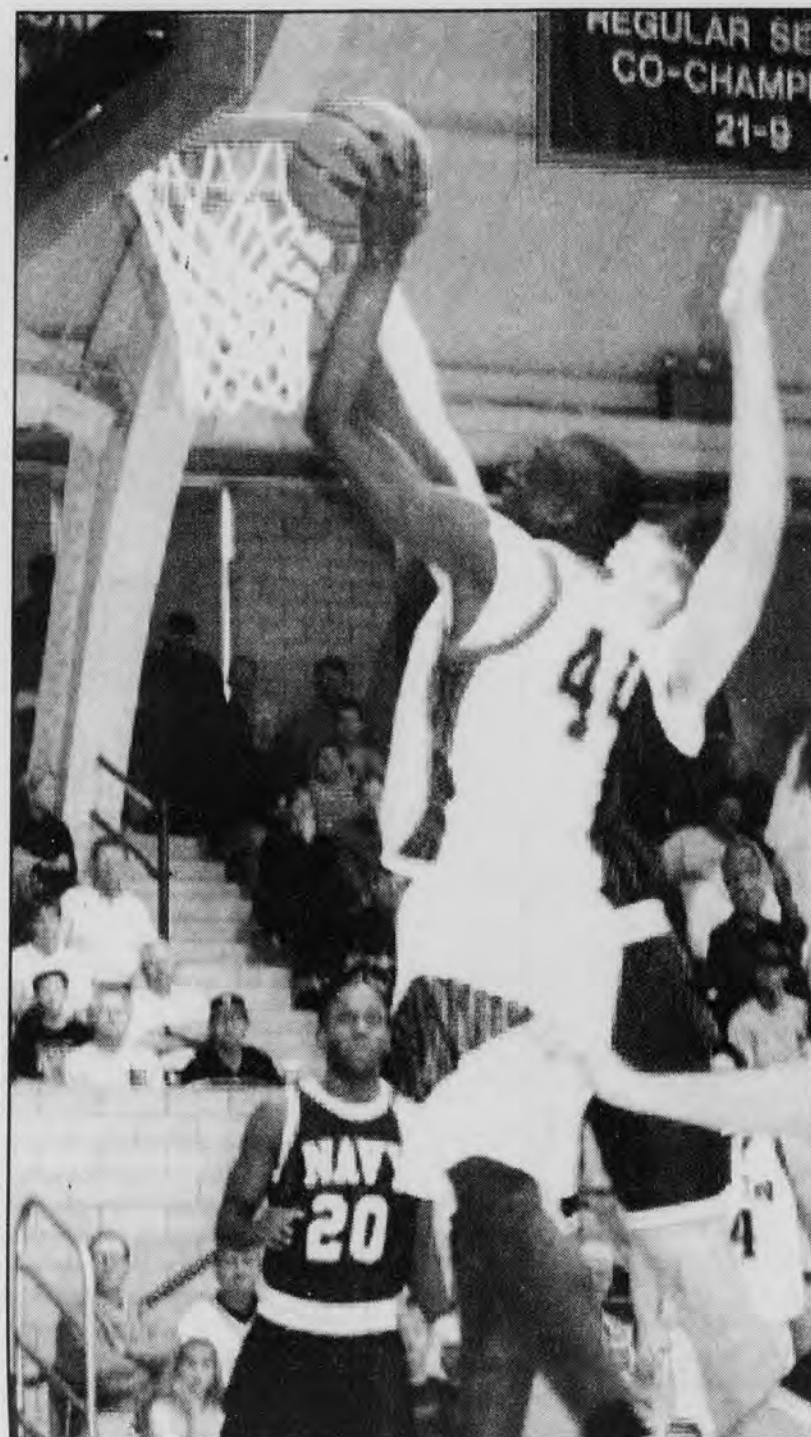

Sports Trivia

By Justin McCarthy

- 1) Which NBA team currently has the longest drought without having one of their players represented in the All-Star game?
- 2) Who scored the most points in an NBA All-Star game?
- 3) What player scored 20 points in one quarter of the 1997 NBA All-Star game, an All-Star game record for most points in a single quarter?

Men's basketball stuck in reverse

Losses to Holy Cross and Army extend squad's Patriot League losing streak to six Boakai Lalugba '03 elevates over his Navy defender for an easy two.

By ANDREW BURR
Sports Layout Editor

Another opportunity to mend what has been a disappointing season by-passed the Bison (10-14, 2-8) Wednesday.

day as Army (7-16, 2-7) added to the team's woes, defeating them 65-60. The loss ends an eight-game winning streak the Bison had over the Cadets.

"We had opportunities, we had chances, and we couldn't get it done tonight," Head Coach Pat Flannery said. The team's failure to defeat Army, a team they soundly beat earlier this season at Davis Gym, represents the sixth Bison loss in a row, each of which was a League contest. The Bison have only two Patriot League victories and have fallen into last place in league competition.

Bucknell also fell victim to Holy Cross in its previous game, despite holding the Crusaders to under 60 points. Injuries and bad luck played a large part in both losses, as co-captain Bryan Bailey '02 missed both contests after spraining his ankle in pre-game warm-ups prior to the Holy Cross matchup.

"You certainly can't be prepared for losing Bailey, but the reaction by our kids was something I felt good about," Flannery said. Bailey stands at second in the league in scoring at 17.9 points-per-game, trailing only senior Army guard Chris Spatola, who has 18 point-per-game. Freshman Roland Webber made his first career start in place of the injured Bailey.

Additionally, Davorin Skornik '04 was inactive in the loss to Army because of recent surgery to fix torn tendons in his hand. Early in the game it appeared as though Army, the League's highest scoring team, would have their way with Bucknell. The Cadets jumped out to a 5-0 lead thanks to baskets by Chris and J.P. Spatola, who have combined for an average 26 points-per-game this season.

The Bison roared back though, scoring 11 of the next 13 points to take an 11-7 advantage. The run included several jams from Boakai Lalugba '03 inside as well as a couple big 3-pointers from senior sharpshooting co-captain Jake Ramage. The Bison carried a 24-21 advantage into halftime.

But the second half an Achilles heel for the Bison all season-proved to be just that. Army whittled away at the Bison lead for much of the second, finally rallying to go ahead 47-46 with 3:25 to play. A.J.P. Spatola 3-pointer at 2:36 made it a four-point game.

"We gave them a chance to come back quickly, and (Navy) did it pretty easily," Flannery stated. On top of that, Lalugba found himself in foul trouble for the second straight night, and fouled out of the contest well before the conclusion of the game.

"Boakai is the key for us down low and it hurt us big time when he fouled out," Ramage said. Lalugba had three fouls in the first half alone against Holy Cross, resulting in a season low one-point for him in that game.

From there, the Bison were unable to make up any significant ground on the Cadets, who didn't allow Bucknell to jeopardize their lead in the final minutes of play.

The inability of the Bison to hit free throws—the deciding factor in the loss Feb. 3 against Navy, when the team made only 22 of 42—was again an unwelcome presence in this matchup. Bucknell converted on 6-16 (36%) from the line, while Army made 25 of its 33 chances.

Flannery was critical of the Bison offensive decision making in the game, something he said, "... we do well in practice, but have to do well when the lights come on also." According to Ramage, the team was too rushed on offense and didn't exhibit good ball control, factors that helped shift the momentum to Army midway through the second.

Perhaps a lone bright spot in the game was the shooting of Ramage, who finished with 13 points and was 3-5 from 3-point range on the night. After a period of discomfort and rustiness on the court following knee surgery, Ramage has excelled in his last four games, shooting 11-22 from behind the arc. The three 3-pointers Wednesday gave him 98 career 3-pointers at Bucknell, and he is poised to become just the ninth player in school history to record 100 3-pointers in a career here.

Lalugba, despite fouling out of the contest, also finished with 13 points.

The Cadets were led on the night by both Spatola brothers, as Chris finished with 20 points and J.P. recorded

See BASKETBALL, page A8

Wrestlers drop final home matches

Squad loses nailbiter to Seton Hall but can't hang with Millersville and Lock Haven

By PAT EVANS
Staff Writer

No team enjoys using their losses as learning experiences, but the teams that are able to do that are the ones who will succeed in the future. In this mindset, the Bison wrestling team will try to look at their losses on Saturday as preparation for the upcoming playoffs.

Bucknell hosted three very difficult opponents this weekend and had to play them all in one day.

"It's always tough to wrestle back to back to back, especially when you're playing tough teams," Head Coach Tim Wittman said.

The day proved to be as challenging as the Bison had expected it to be, if not more so. Lock Haven, Seton Hall and Millersville were all able to handle the Herd even on its home mats.

Lock Haven, who is now 19-1 on the year and ranked 16th in the nation, was Bucknell's first opponent. The Bison were in control of the meet early, after Ryan Fasnacht '01 won at 165 pounds. Ben Chunko '02 followed with a 10-1 major decision at 174 pounds. But those were the only wins the Orange and Blue could muster.

Josh Perrin '03 notched a 14-1 decision over his Seton Hall foe to tie the match at 14.

Josh Perrin '03 and Jeremy Weller '04 helped the Bison win four straight to take the lead 17-14.

But Seton Hall proved to be too much for the Orange and Blue, as they won the final and deciding match, coming away with a 20-17 victory.

Despite the loss, the squad was positive about what it had accomplished. "I think it was difficult mentally coming off a loss against Lock Haven," Fasnacht said. "But we came back strong, which was good, even though we didn't pick up a win."

The final competition with Millersville was much like the Bison's first match against Lock Haven. "We knew we had a tough match ahead of us," Perrin said. "But we tried our best to go out and show what we had."

But once again Fasnacht and Chunko were the only two to win their matches, and the Bison fell 32-7.

The team remains optimistic despite the difficult weekend. The EIWA playoffs are going to be very similar to the atmosphere that BU saw Saturday. Three difficult competitions, one right after the other, is exactly how the playoffs are formatted. The squad hopes that they are well prepared after their experience this weekend.

Bucknell has one final meet versus Navy before they will compete in the EIWA playoffs. Navy had no problem with the Bison last year, and this year the Midshipmen are known for being a tough team in great physical shape.

"There is no doubt that Navy is a solid team," Wittman said. "It's going to come down to our guys hustling and to who's in better condition."

Bison Calendar

WRESTLING
Sat., Feb. 16 at Navy
7:00 p.m.

SWIMMING AND DIVING
Thurs.-Sat., Feb. 15-17 Patriot League Championships at Colgate

MEN'S BASKETBALL
Sun., Feb. 18 COLGATE
3:15 p.m.

WOMEN'S BASKETBALL
Sat., Feb. 17 COLGATE
1:00 p.m.

WATER POLO
Sat.-Sun., Feb. 10-11 at Villanova, George Washington
INDOOR TRACK & FIELD
Fri.-Sun., Feb. 16-18 Patriot League Championships at Navy

THE Bucknellian SECTION B

February 16, 2001

Weekend Weather

Weather courtesy of weather.com

Hi: 49
Low: 33
Friday

Hi: 43
Low: 21
Saturday

Hi: 36
Low: 19
Sunday

New production showing at Tustin Theatre

By IAN D. McNAUGHER
Staff Writer

As with any game of love and chance, the stakes are high and all bets are off. Appearances deceive, actors mislead, and it seems that only the audience is fully aware of the game afoot. Seven actors will test their wits, hoping to overcome the combined odds put before them by Pierre Marivaux, master of the 18th-century romantic comedy, and translator-adaptor Stephen Wadsworth.

Performed "in the round" (with the audience seated at all sides), "The Game of Love and Chance" aims to bring greater intensity to the University stage. Director Bob Gainer, a veteran of the theater faculty, views the play as exciting and uncharted territory.

"The department has never produced a play by Marivaux, who uniquely combined the theatrical traditions of French heroic drama with the robust physical comedy of the Italian commedia dell'arte," Gainer said.

It is exactly these elements that Wadsworth attempts to freshen in his 1997 adaptation. In addition, "Game" provided Gainer his first

See PLAY, page B4 Ian McNaughton '01 and Lisa Britt '04 star in this weekend's show.

Dave Binder—The Bucknellian

Fire & Rain, an evening with James Taylor.

Campus favorite Dave Binder took a break from his well-known comedic show last weekend and settled down for a night of serious music. Binder sang many popular songs in his musical tribute to the work of James Taylor.

Alumnus appears on Must See TV's "ER"

By KRISTA REISDORF
Senior Writer

On Thursday nights at 10, many people turn on the show "ER" and expect to see members of the usual cast like Anthony Edwards, Noah Wyle and Laura Innes. These are the people they see in the emergency room every week—familiar faces that life never actually seen in real life nor met on the street.

However, if University students were tuned into "ER" last Thursday, they might have seen a face that looked familiar for a different reason.

Daniel Spink '00, landed a role on "ER" as Tyler Pollard, a patient who landed in the emergency room as a result of a game of Russian Roulette with a 15-year-old.

Not too bad for a guy who hadn't even really watched the show before.

"I honestly have never made it a point to watch a whole episode," Spink said.

Obviously, this didn't matter since his character still made it to the screen. Spink appeared in the 1999 film "American Pie" (credited as "boy with monkey") and also made appearances in the University's theater department, including such plays as "The Real Inspector Hound," "Spittin' Image" and "Ferris Wheel."

Misty Trezona '02, who directed "Ferris Wheel," had nothing but praise for Spink. "Working with Dan was a lot of fun," she said. "He was always in a good mood. He never took anything too seriously and he had this natural talent that made his performance amazing."

Eric Hart '01, director of "Spittin' Image," agrees that Spink has a very natural ability when it comes to acting. "I remember when I was holding auditions, I watched him act and knew right away that he would play the part perfectly," Hart said. "I didn't even really know him back then, but I could tell he was a talent."

However, Spink's interest in acting originated far before college—he was bitten by the acting bug in high school.

See ALUM, page B4

President Bush kicked off a speaking tour of military bases this week to discuss the defense budget, including the possible purchase of the F-117 (pictured above).

See page B10.

Tell me... am I HOT or NOT ?

Please select a rating to see the next picture.

1 2 3 4 5 6 7 8 9 10

NOT

HOT

www.Am I Hot Or Not.come on, give me a break!

A dot commentary, see page B2

FEATURES

Jim Wiltgen: coordinator extraordinaire

By KATY ZACHRY
Staff Writer

Jim Wiltgen is a man known around campus. As coordinator of the Residential College Program, he is the man in charge of over one-quarter of each freshman class, which annually decides to enroll in the residential colleges. Likewise, he is familiar with many of our faces, attesting to his view that positive student-faculty relationships are an important aspect of a successful college environment.

Program coordinator of the residential colleges seems the perfect job for Wiltgen. Graduating from Lorain College in 1986 and going on to earn a master's degree in higher education, Wiltgen took on some rather interesting jobs out of college. After spinning tunes as a disc jockey, directing a television studio in the greater Chicago area, and coaching NCAA Division III basketball, Jim realized that he really wanted more interaction with college students. Over the years, he had also acquired an impressive 10-year career serving as hall director, something that proved beneficial when he applied for the job of assistant director of housing at the University in 1996.

"What intrigued him about the job was when we said, 'Jim, we're looking for a superstar,'" current Assistant Dean of Students Kari Conrad, who, at that time, was the director of housing at the University, said. "Jim is a big picture kind of guy, and he connects with people in unique and effective ways. You immediately get a sense that he cares, and he's assertive about things he believes and supports. His strength lies in looking at the big picture."

As a result of this visible motivation, it is no wonder that Jim was named the new program coordinator for the residential colleges just two years later.

"I chose to come to the residential college program because the development of living and learning outside the classroom and a formal environment are important parts of any residential environment," Wiltgen said.

While maintaining some qualities from his first job, this position allowed him the opportunity to interact with an even broader spectrum of students, faculty, and administration in more creative and social ways.

Matt Hinson—The Bucknellian

As coordinator of the Residential College Program, Jim Wiltgen is a perfect example of positive student-faculty relationships.

"A lot of educational research proves that the first-year transition is an important time for students getting acclimated to their new environment," Wiltgen explained. "I saw this as a special opportunity to work with first-year students and help them further their college experience."

As program coordinator, Wiltgen supervises a staff of 19 Junior Fellows (upper class peer consultants who initiate learning programs and activities in their respective colleges), conducts recruitment efforts for the residential college program, manages program budgets, and works with faculty to provide programs that involve all students on campus. All of this responsibility is overseen in his com-moved environments. Students are fortunate enough to travel to Maine, Washington D.C., New York City, and Canada, to name a few destinations. "Quebec was probably one of the most worthwhile trips for the students because it took them to a different country where they were confronted with a different language and culture," Wiltgen said.

As much as Wiltgen says he enjoys working and interacting with students on trips and during social events, the feeling is more than reciprocated.

"Jim brings everyone together, wanting everyone to interact. Jim is such a great guy and very approachable. Shelby Marquis, a current junior fellow for the Social Justice College, said, 'He cooked dinner for all of the junior fellows and took us to an amusement park before the first-year students came to campus. He makes it fun for everyone to get to know each other.'"

"The Junior Fellow staff is the source of great pleasure for me. They definitely make working hard an easy thing to do," Wiltgen insists.

In addition to his extremely demanding role of program coordinator, Jim can be found co-teaching an Internet foundation seminar, instructing a rape aggression defense course, attending various task force and advisory board meetings, and coordinating co-sponsored events between the residential colleges and other groups on campus.

Sue Ellen Henry, assistant professor of education, says, "Jim is one of the most committed and dedicated student affairs professionals I know. He is always thinking about new ways of doing things, how to involve students in decision making, and the ways in which student affairs work complements the academic mission of the institution."

When asked what the most important aspect of the job is, he replied, "We connect students to the University. I work hard to make our junior fellow staff accessible, involved, and caring. When this occurs, students respond to our program."

Girls & SPORTS

by Justin Borus and Andrew Feinstein

Vennari's Pizza
324-0444
Large Cheese Pizza - $10.99
Medium Cheese Pizza - $8.99
Free Delivery Available
Mon-Fri 11am-9pm Sat-Sun 11am-8pm

ON CAMPUS Physical Therapy Clinic

Monday - Friday
8 a.m. - 5 p.m.
Field House Athletic Training Suite

577.1060

EVANGELICAL COMMUNITY HOSPITAL
SPORTS MEDICINE CENTER
Physician prescription required.
Please check insurance policy for restrictions.

He Said, She Said

You only think you "got some" for Valentine's Day

By ADAM TURBETT AND ANDRÉS SOLTREN
Features Columnists

From years of close observation, we have determined that there are two types of women in the world. First, there are those who love Valentine's Day because they get stuff—like flowers, candy, the whole nine yards. Then, there are those that hate it because they don't have anyone to give them all that stuff.

There are also two types of guys, those who hate Valentine's Day because they have to spend so much money just to get some, and those that hate Valentine's Day because they have to spend so much money and still don't get any.

Valentine's Day has no point. If the emphasis were on loving one another, there might be a point. But really, it is just an excuse to spend money, fornicate and eat chocolate. There is mad PDA going on, and you can't complain because it's Valentine's Day. People are making out everywhere—it's disgusting. Just consider all the November babies that are a result of this Valentine's Day frolicking. If St. Valentine knew that this holiday was named after him, he'd be disgusted. Somehow, the Christian virtue of chastity was lost in the whole process.

Basically, Valentine's Day is a contest for the men. Whoever buys the best, most expensive and most loved gift wins. Take, for example, the case of Jim, my friend from high school. Jim spent over $300 on his girlfriend for one day. One day! How can you compete with that? His girlfriend got bears, flowers, chocolates, a compact disc, and a bunch of other things that he really didn't have the money to get her.

We think that Valentine's Day should be a mutual holiday where guys get the same amount of attention as the girls. Instead, girls get all the attention and guys get to pay for it. Some women are nice and get thoughtful gifts for their guys. However, guys are obligated to get the girl stuff or they are viewed as scum. And we know girls talk. You don't get her something for Valentine's Day, and in two weeks every girl in the world will hate your guts.

We will admit, some of the problems with Valentine's Day are our fault. Maybe if we treated our girlfriends better the rest of the year, we wouldn't have to make up for it with one special night.

There is also the problem of the Valentine's Day rush for the girls, where if you do not have a boyfriend before Valentine's Day, you try like mad to get one. Why is this, you ask? Well, most girls get the new boyfriend so that they can feel special on this holiday.

Some guys are smart, and realize this ploy, while others are not, and end up like poor Jim. He started going out with this girl two weeks before Valentine's Day, got her a thoughtful gift (actually, $300 worth of thoughtful gifts), even though they hadn't been going out for very long, and he got dumped a week after. The moral of this story: guys, don't get a girlfriend right before Valentine's Day. It'll just get messy if you do.

No one group is to blame for the disaster that is otherwise known as Valentine's Day. It can be blamed equally on men, women and the sexual form of capitalism.

To all the women out there: love your man no matter what he gives you, and just be happy that he is yours. To all the men: be careful and watch your wallet.

Look for next week's new topic expressing the differing views of women and men on campus.

change the world!

This spring, join Tour de Cure—one of the biggest diabetes fundraising events in history.

Ride and raise money to fight this deadly disease.

A proud sponsor of the American Diabetes Association

Sign up today, call 1-800-TOUR-888 (1-800-848-7888) or visit us at www.diabetes.org/tour

FEATURES

Am I Hot or Not dot com on, give me a break

By KEELEY PATTERSON
Staff Writer

As I stood with my finger hesitantly resting on the mouse button, sudden apprehension overcame me. Considering the possible outcomes of this spontaneous idea, the tiny arrow teased me as it danced across the "submit" button. Clicking the mouse would mean subjecting my vanity and pride to the uncensored judgment of perfect strangers. Did I have stable enough self-esteem to expose myself in such a way?

I naively justified my interest by figuring that I'd never really know exactly how I fell into society's standard of hot, if I were to turn away then. And so I clicked. A bold lettered statement flashed onto the screen, it read: "Status: Active for voting."

I sat, staring at the page, staring at myself staring back at me. She was laughing it up with friends, unknowingly revealing this fun to strangers around the country. I, on the other hand, tried desperately to settle the demoralizing feeling that had erupted for me. Ironically, this same friend originally so opposed to the superficial concept, ended up posting his own photo several weeks later. All I can say is that it's pop culture, and it's truly ad-button for me. Ironically, this same friend originally so opposed to the superficial concept, ended up posting his own photo several weeks later. All I can say is that it's pop culture, and it's truly ad-months ago. Many neighbors I approached confessed they had fallen victim to the site's time-consuming spell: some admitted having spent several hours at a time browsing through the photos of these defenseless contestants. One friend who condemned the Web site boasted her picking out the most homely-looking of the bunch, giving them automatic sympathy 10s.

In disappointment from being the last to hear about the Web site, I decided that I would be the first to post my own picture online. I chose several favorites, passing them around for a preliminary-type vote amongst my friends. I was anxious to unleash both the criticisms and compliments, neglecting the opinions of friends to choose my personal favorite.

I can recall logging in to check my status at least once every 15 minutes that first night. Spreading the word, I encouraged everyone to vote for me, leaving a direct web link to my picture on my AOL Instant Messenger away message. I told my friends from other colleges about my picture, urging them to pass on the word. This shallow Web site had created a monster out of me!

Logging in to note the updates in my score less than one week later, I was shocked to find out that my time was up. The ballots were in and the poles were closed. My score had peaked at 9.6, eventually tapering off to an even rating of 9.4. My status box informed me that I was hotter than 93 percent of the women enlisted to the site. This was according to the 5,524 bored businessmen, students, secretaries, housewives and overall computer junkies who had voted.

Basically, for one week, I had ashamed to admit that I fell for the taboo. I confess to smiling a bit bigger and holding my head up higher due to this phony confidence-building ploy. Of course, I realize that if these online voters had surveyed my physical appearance when I roll out of bed five minutes before class and throw on a pair of sweats, their sturdy eights and nines would undoubtedly digress into discouraging twos and ones. In my opinion, a more suitable title for this site might be Doolookhotinthispictureor.com. I was aware of how the game is played, took a risk and have come to the conclusion that it's all in good fun. However, people with poor self-confidence and serious self-esteem issues beware, this is the kind of thing that could tear apart a person who lacks an enduring state of mind.

ashamed to admit that I fell for the taboo. I confess to smiling a bit bigger and holding my head up higher due to this phony confidence-building ploy. Of course, I realize that if these online voters had surveyed my physical appearance when I roll out of bed five minutes before class and throw on a pair of sweats, their sturdy eights and nines would undoubtedly digress into discouraging twos and ones. In my opinion, a more suitable title for this site might be Doolookhotinthispictureor.com. I was aware of how the game is played, took a risk and have come to the conclusion that it's all in good fun. However, people with poor self-confidence and serious self-esteem issues beware, this is the kind of thing that could tear apart a person who lacks an enduring state of mind.

Users provide their picture for thousands to judge on AmIHotOrNot.com. Not only does the site provide an average rating, but detailed statistics as well.

ed in my gut. What had I done?! Submitting your picture to a Web site for appearance ratings by unknown web surfers is a potentially ego-shattering move. Looking back on it now, I am guessing that this is the reason my friend Jay refused to click the dicting. I'd originally learned of the site while exploring another student's Web page, where the Amihotornot.com link was listed as a good time-waster. Most of my dorm mates had added this site to their favorites folders

Buffalo Soldiers take pride in civil war despite conditions

By KELLEN A. SMITH
Contributing Writer

Throughout February, designated as Black History Month, we wish to highlight the achievements of African Americans and remember the prejudices that they have endured.

This week we recognize the Buffalo Soldiers, over 180,000 African Americans who served in the Union Army during the Civil War.

Of these men, more than 33,000 died. After the war the future of African Americans in the Army was bleak. However, Congress passed legislation to establish two cavalry and four infantry regiments.

These regiments later combined and made the 9th and 10th Cavalries. These cavalries were given the nickname "The Buffalo Soldiers" by the Cheyenne and Comanche Native Americans because they had to hunt the buffalo of the plains in order to get blankets, clothing and food that was poorly rationed when it came to them.

The chief job of these cavalries was to subdue Mexican revolutionaries, hostile Native Americans, outlaws, comancheros and rustlers. They also mapped and explored the area of the Southwest while they strung miles of telegraph lines.

Their job was an important one, yet it went almost unnoticed.

Daily life for the troops was harsh. They had to face prejudice, not only for their skin, but also because of their uniforms.

The soldiers' frontier settlements looked like rundown villages. Their barracks were poorly ventilated and infested with vermin. The bathing facilities consisted of nearby creeks,

The soldiers worked seven days a week, receiving a break only on the Fourth of July and Christmas. The pay that the soldiers received for working in such adverse conditions was a mere $13.

Although life was not pleasant, the soldiers made the best of it. Many attended schools, overcoming the illiteracy that slavery left behind. Chaplains, assigned to the black units in order to teach them to read and write, ran these schools.

One remarkable fact remains to be that the serious problems that plagued the rest of the Army had little to no effect on the black cavalries. Desertion of white soldiers was three times that of black soldiers.

Alcoholism in the white units was a great deal higher than that of the black units.

These were very proud men despite the working conditions and the constant comparison that was made between them and their white counterparts. They engaged in many parades and drills showing this pride. Some troops even put on weekly parades in the different forts.

These men were extremely proud to be wearing an army uniform and of their occupations as soldiers. We recognize their sacrifices and the hardships that they endured to serve our country and aid the settlement of the West.

Article Sources:
<http://www.imh.org/imh/buf/buf2.html>
<http://www.abest.com/~cklose/aawar.htm#BuffaloSoldier>

Courtesy of imh.org

Black Union Soldiers of the Civil War are honored this week of Black History Month.

MTW
Happy Valentines
Day!
143, A.

Better breakfasts—Dunkin' Donut's or Keeley's Bakery?

By ANDRÉS SOLTREN
Contributing Writer

Muffins, doughnuts and other assorted pastries are an often under-appreciated staple of the college breakfast diet. Many students here at the University wake and cons as those of the muffins. Next, we have the Dunkin' Donuts on Route 15. Dunkin' Donuts is definitely a mixed bag. While the muffins were larger than any others, they were not very soft and rather difficult to chew.

The service at Dunkin' Do-

If you are stopping at Dunkin' Donuts, treat yourself to some munchkins, or take them back to your room in one of their boxes. They come with the highest recommendations.

And finally, we have Keeley's Café. The muffins are excellent. No doubt about it. Although you might want to stay away from corn muffins, the rest are definitely above average.

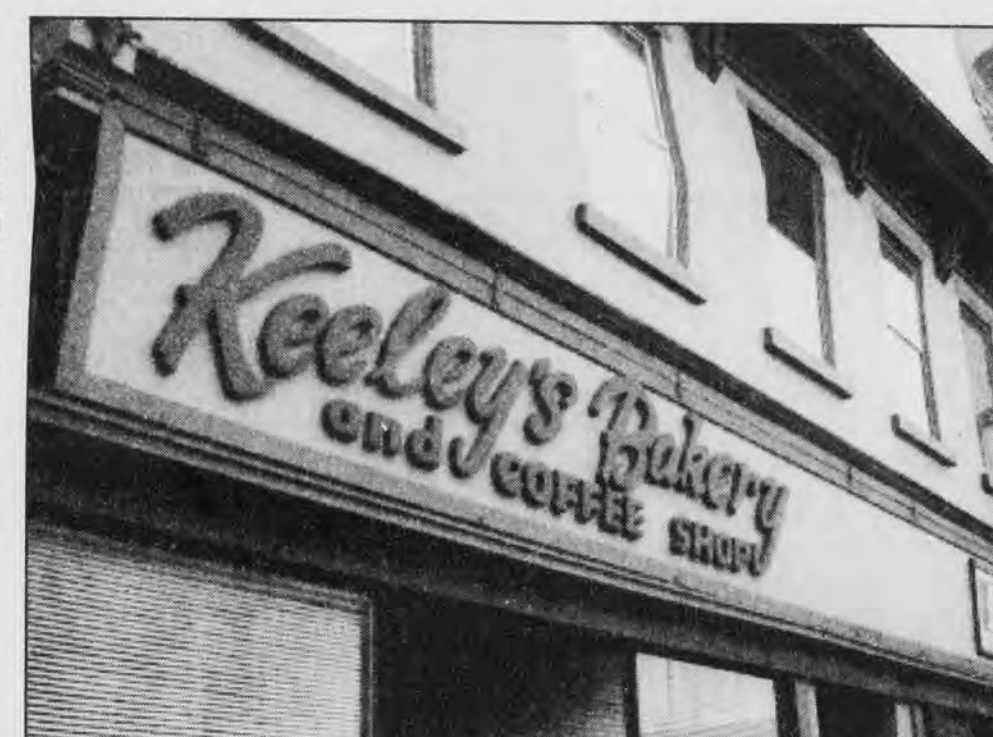

Students strolling down the streets of Lewisburg in the morning or late afternoon owe it to themselves to at least stop and grab a couple of muffins and light pastries. While they are much smaller than all the other muffins available on and near the campus, they are a real treat.

If you are in a rush, just grab a couple for the road. They are very soft, and yet won't fall apart on you after the first bite. It is always good to add some variety in your diet, so give Keeley's a chance. Try some coffee or tea while you're there.

Those who have never tasted Dunkin' Donuts Munchkins should go out right now and get some.

If you do not want to go out of the way for light pastries in the morning, give the Seventh Street a try, or add a Bison muffin to your breakfast tray. The number for Keeley's is (570)-524-4248. Enjoy.

Chris Rivera—The Bucknellian

Downtown's answer to Dunkin' Donuts, Keeley's Bakery offers fresh treats.

up every morning and grab a light pastry on the way to morning classes.

However, sometimes it is nicer to go out and get pastries from an establishment other than the Cafeteria or The Bison.

Here in Lewisburg, we have a Dunkin' Donuts and several smaller cafés where muffins and doughnuts can be found.

Keeley's Café is one such place. Located at 320 Market Street, Keeley's offers breakfast, small lunches and lots of pastries.

A comparison between The Bison and Seventh Street Café muffins against those from Dunkin' Donuts and Keeley's Café puts our University morning treats against those of Lewisburg.

First, we have the Bison/Seventh Street Café muffins. They are very large and fairly fresh. However, upon tasting one corn muffin, it is evident that the muffins are not true delights. While certainly edible and enjoyable, they lack the softness and taste that good muffins have.

The doughnuts have the same pros nuts is somewhat dubious. Although there have been several times that students have cited good service, there are an equal number of stories of poor service. The price of the pastries is also a bit higher than usual.

Dunkin' Donuts definitely has one very important package though: munchkins. Anyone who has had some of these wonderfully small doughnuts will agree. They are perfect for a snack, and extremely addictive because of the variety of munchkins available.

you after the first bite. It is always good to add some variety in your diet, so give Keeley's a chance. Try some coffee or tea while you're there.

Those who have never tasted Dunkin' Donuts Munchkins should go out right now and get some.

If you do not want to go out of the way for light pastries in the morning, give the Seventh Street a try, or add a Bison muffin to your breakfast tray. The number for Keeley's is (570)-524-4248. Enjoy.

Chris Rivera—The Bucknellian

Everyone's favorite late snack spot, Dunkin' Donuts offers caffeine and sustenance.

Arts & Entertainment

"The Game of Love and Chance" hits Tustin

This weekend's production at the Tustin Theatre stars (from L-R) Kate McDevitt '01, Jay Klotz '01, Ian McNaugher '01, Liisa Britt '04.

PLAY From page B1

"This style of staging challenges a director to create a continuous succession of movement that reveals the unfolding story and its human relationships," Gainer said.

Published in 1730, "The Game of Love and Chance" concerns the plight of young aristocrats arranged to wed, though they have never met. Driven more by her heart than class expectation, Silvia (Liisa Britt '04) swaps roles with her maid, Lisette (Kate McDevitt '01), to observe her intended suitor from a safe distance. Nobleman Dorante (Ian McNaugher '01) follows suit, assuming the disguise of his valet, Harlequin (Jay Klotz '01). Unwittingly, love at first sight strikes Silvia and Dorante, each believing the other to be a servant of lower class.

More remarkably, their servants fall for one another while parading as nobility. The play unfolds as Silvia's father (Brandon Dust '01) and brother Mario (Mike Moran '03), both fully apprised of the couple's role reversal, take full advantage of Marivaux's extraordinary game of mistaken identity.

The actors have had a lot of fun with the play, and have appreciated the time period of the piece—especially the costumes, which Reiko Kamiyama '01 designed as a project for her honors thesis.

"This play has been a blast," Britt said. "Despite not being able to breathe normally, I actually dig wearing a corset. So much of our performance depends on using mannerisms from the period, wearing the early 18th-century skirts and corsets in each rehearsal helped remind us of that."

For others, the play is more a labor of love than chance. Seven actors strong (including Josh Beckerman '02), "The Game of Love and Chance" presents a very different challenge for its cast than last semester's "As You Like It," which boasted an unusually large company of 23.

"With a smaller cast, it is much easier to form a bond among the cast members," Dust said.

While neither experience is necessarily better, Moran noted the advantages of being a young performer in a senior-dominated cast.

"As a sophomore, it's especially cool to work closely with so many of them," Moran said. "For many of them, this will be their last play at Bucknell."

While most of those seniors have made various mainstage appearances, "The Game of Love and Chance" is an unprecedented seventh for Jay Klaitz.

"The weird thing is, I didn't think that I would act after high school," Klaitz said, having participated in at least three University productions each year, either on film or on stage, since 1998. "But it just gets to you. I couldn't imagine myself doing anything else."

A live orchestra, seated at one corner of the stage, will provide additional intimacy for the play.

"Considering the play is preoccupied with hiding things, it's interesting that our production is very much in the open," Meg Sommerfield '01 said. "The set is an outdoor garden, the audience surrounds the performers, and even musicians play on the stage. It demands that much more of the ensemble performance."

To purchase tickets individually, contact the Langone Center Box Office at 577-1700. Tickets are available for all evenings at 8 p.m., Feb. 16-19, at the Tustin Studio Theatre and are $5 for students and $4 for senior citizens.

"The Game of Love and Chance" promises an evening of romantic intrigue and delightful wit. At the very least, the play will provide a rare look at the virtues of obeying the human spirit, rather than the expectations of civility.

Alum on "ER"

ALUM From page B1

"One of my teachers pushed me to do a play freshman year," Spink said. "It all started from there."

Still, Spink did not become truly serious about acting until he came to the University.

"Halfway through Bucknell I decided I wanted my career to be acting," Spink said.

The rest is history. After graduating last year, Spink moved out to West Hollywood (where he spent the last four summers) to live with his brother, Brian Spink '96. Brian is a manager at a Los Angeles management/production company called Bender-Spink, a business started by Spink's other brother, J.C. Spink '94, and his friend Chris Bender '93. Bender-Spink manages writers and then produces their movies.

"Having my brothers in Hollywood made the transition less difficult," Spink said.

Helyn Spink, Dan's mother, enjoys the closeness of her sons, both in their relationship and in their geography.

"What makes me happy is that they're together, and not spread all over the country," she said.

Another significant factor has been Spink's manager, Graciela Sanchez of Spivak Entertainment.

"It's great, because she was a close friend before she became my manager," Spink said. "She's the one that's always sending me out on auditions and helping me with everything."

Spink usually has about two or three auditions a week, but also bartends three nights a week at the Martini Lounge. Having a job on the side, such as bartending or waiting tables, is common for actors who are trying to make it in Hollywood.

"It's one of the only things an actor can do to sustain some sort of life," Spink said.

Spink normally has a couple of days to work on his audition before his reading with the casting director. The auditioning process can be grueling and disorganized, and can include multiple callbacks, taping the audition, and meeting with directors, producers and whoever else wants to be a part of the final decision. Luckily, Spink had a fairly easy time with his "ER" audition.

"Auditions tend to run more smoothly when they are for popular television shows and feature films," he said.

However, the business can still be fickle and uncertain. After auditioning for a role in a new WB show, Spink made callbacks. When he went back, they decided that he wasn't the type they wanted.

"They changed their minds and wanted the part to be played by a 30-year-old," Spink said.

Even Spink's appearance in "ER" was not carved in stone, as changes are often made at the last minute.

"There's always this fear that they're going to cut out your scene," he said.

Nevertheless, Spink seems to be doing well, and is coming out in a film this summer starring Devon Sawa ("Final Destination") and Jason Schwartzman ("Rushmore"). The movie is directed by Dewey Nicks and distributed by Destination Films.

Mrs. Spink is her son's biggest fan, and was impressed with his role on "ER."

"He played the part very well," she said. "I was so excited. I didn't even want to have a party—I just wanted to absorb it all."

Spink said that his parents were willing to encourage his acting aspirations, probably because he eased into it.

"It all kind of gradually fell into place," he said. "As long as I finished school, my parents were very supportive."

Mrs. Spink is glad that her son finished school, and believes it has helped him in his field.

"Danny brings his education from Bucknell when he gets a part, or when he is speaking to producers about his part," she said.

Nevertheless, Spink admits that he still has a long way to go before reaching the ideal place in his career.

"I'm still trying to make it as an actor," he said. "Experience is crucial. Getting a lot of theatrical experience under your belt helps. You can learn by reading books or listening to other actors, but 95 percent of it is going out there to do it."

The drug culture takes center stage in "Traffic"

Husband and wife team join for the first time to create a dramatic film about drugs

By MARY AGNES
Staff Writer

Steven Soderberg's new film "Traffic," based on a 1989 British miniseries called "Traffik," approaches the issue of drugs in America from multiple angles. Through a series of vignettes, the film transports its audience into a diverse range of microcosms, each of which has become infected by drugs. It shows that no one from politicians, police officers and drug lords, to mothers and A-students is immune to the giant plague that drug use continues to breed.

The cinematography is captivating and Soderberg's hand-held camera work contributes a raw, documentary-like feel to the piece. Three different visual textures separate the three main story lines. At the tense Mexican border, betrayal-laced Tijuana drug cartels are shown in a gritty, overexposed yellow.

ICY blue film shows Michael Douglas as the newly appointed federal drug czar, struggling to see the scope of America's drug problem while his teenage daughter becomes addicted to free-basing cocaine. Finally, normal film captures Catherine Zeta-Jones as she discovers the secrets her drug lord husband has been keeping from her. When he is arrested, her survival instincts drive her to carry out his dirty work.

At times the narrative feels a little short-changed, but this is because the particular stories themselves aren't the main point of the movie. The main focus is on the drugs that seep into the lives of the characters.

The audience sees how drugs are seductive to both the dealer, who can easily make massive profits, and the user, who becomes entangled in a dehumanizing addiction. The film refrains from moping around in melodrama, and the brevity of the narrative prevents the story from indulging in some of its clichés.

This film has received a lot of critical acclaim, and it deserves it. The story resists preaching as it presents the audience with a caught battling his own ethics. His performance is superb and he steals the entire film. However, the ensemble piece acts well throughout, including Clifton Collins, Jr.'s portrayal of a tortured assassin.

Catherine Zeta-Jones is questioned by a DEA agent about her involvement in drug trade.

This film has received a lot of critical acclaim, and it deserves it. The story resists preaching as it presents the audience with a comprehensive look at a very pressing problem. We see how the lucrative drug industry continues to vigorously devour our country—despite political efforts to stop it and inside wars to dominate it. "Traffic" shouldn't be missed—not because it provides the answers, but because it reminds us of how important it is that we keep trying to find them.

Hollywood turns to Oscar

The 2001 Oscar nominees were announced on Tuesday, February 13. The following are just a few of the highlighted categories:

ACTOR — LEADING

Javier Bardem
Russell Crowe
Tom Hanks
Ed Harris
Geoffrey Rush

ACTOR — SUPPORTING

Jeff Bridges
Benicio Del Toro
Albert Finney
Joaquin Phoenix

ACTRESS — LEADING

Joan Allen
Juliette Binoche
Ellen Burstyn
Laura Linney
Julia Roberts

ACTRESS — SUPPORTING

Judi Dench
Marcia Gay Harden
Kate Hudson
Frances McDormand
Julie Walters

DIRECTING

Billy Elliot
Crouching Tiger, Hidden Dragon
Erin Brockovich
Gladiator
Traffic

BEST PICTURE

Chocolat
Crouching Tiger, Hidden Dragon
Erin Brockovich
Gladiator
Traffic

Watch the Oscars on ABC, March 26, 2001.

COURTESY OF WWW.OSCAR.COM

Arts & Entertainment

Vagina Monologues benefit SVWIT

By KACY O'BRIEN
Senior Writer

A mob of people filled the lobby of Coleman Hall last Saturday at 8 p.m., preparing for what was the only performance of "The Vagina Monologues." The crowd packed Harvey M. Powers Theatre to capacity, and the show started 10 minutes late to accommodate the masses. After a short introductory speech, the show began.

The forestage was set with a variety of chairs, pillows and a rug arranged in a wide and layered semi-circle, with an open area front and center. A backdrop lit this scene a deep red. The women entered, each in their own combination of red and black—a mix of University students, faculty, alumni and community women. They each carried a red, bound script.

The crowd was excited, anticipatory and responsive. Constant laughter, clapping and cheering accompanied the monologues and group pieces these women performed. The first monologue ment from her adolescence. The character was in her late 70s.

Other monologues included a hilarious berating of mass commercialism and consumerism, and the taboos that society placed on women's sexuality. The monologues also interspersed poetry and facts gathered from studies around the world. There were two monologues, covery as a sexual being and the love she was finally able to feel for herself and for others. These two moving monologues elicited an emotional and tearful response from the audience. One of the most popular monologues was a dissertation on the different types of moans that women can make. It came complete with demonstrations—an event sure to keep the audience members laughing long after the show was over.

The night ended with a story from a woman who witnessed the birth of her grandchild. She discussed how the vagina makes sacrifices, as does the heart. The members of the cast drew in to encircle this reverent grandmother, and the scene was reminiscent of storytelling by the fireside. The show ended with a standing ovation.

The money collected for Susquehanna Valley Woman in Transition was over $2,750. Ticket sales, purchasing of pins and donations raised this sum for the organization. The emotional and spiritual support from community members and Bucknellians defies calculation. We should congratulate those involved in this project—the organizers, performers, sponsors and audience members—for the completion of this vision and victory for the College Initiative.

The women performing "The Vagina Monologues" speak to a packed Harvey M. Powers Theatre last weekend.

though, that ran a different course. One described the torture tactics used on women in Bosnia. It was told from the point of view of a woman who was gang-raped for seven days. The other was the story of a woman's childhood, and the horrors that occurred during that time. This monologue continued through her self-discovery as a sexual being and the love she was finally able to feel for herself and for others. These two moving monologues elicited an emotional and tearful response from the audience. One of the most popular monologues was a dissertation on the different types of moans that women can make. It came complete with demonstrations—an event sure to keep the audience members laughing long after the show was over.

The night ended with a story from a woman who witnessed the birth of her grandchild. She discussed how the vagina makes sacrifices, as does the heart. The members of the cast drew in to encircle this reverent grandmother, and the scene was reminiscent of storytelling by the fireside. The show ended with a standing ovation.

The money collected for Susquehanna Valley Woman in Transition was over $2,750. Ticket sales, purchasing of pins and donations raised this sum

for the organization. The emotional and spiritual support from community members and Bucknellians defies calculation. We should congratulate those involved in this project—the organizers, performers, sponsors and audience members—for the completion of this vision and victory for the College Initiative.

The money collected for Susquehanna Valley Woman in Transition was over $2,750. Ticket sales, purchasing of pins and donations raised this sum

for the organization. The emotional and spiritual support from community members and Bucknellians defies calculation. We should congratulate those involved in this project—the organizers, performers, sponsors and audience members—for the completion of this vision and victory for the College Initiative.

The money collected for Susquehanna Valley Woman in Transition was over $2,750. Ticket sales, purchasing of pins and donations raised this sum

for the organization. The emotional and spiritual support from community members and Bucknellians defies calculation. We should congratulate those involved in this project—the organizers, performers, sponsors and audience members—for the completion of this vision and victory for the College Initiative.

The money collected for Susquehanna Valley Woman in Transition was over $2,750. Ticket sales, purchasing of pins and donations raised this sum

for the organization. The emotional and spiritual support from community members and Bucknellians defies calculation. We should congratulate those involved in this project—the organizers, performers, sponsors and audience members—for the completion of this vision and victory for the College Initiative.

The money collected for Susquehanna Valley Woman in Transition was over $2,750. Ticket sales, purchasing of pins and donations raised this sum

for the organization. The emotional and spiritual support from community members and Bucknellians defies calculation. We should congratulate those involved in this project—the organizers, performers, sponsors and audience members—for the completion of this vision and victory for the College Initiative.

The money collected for Susquehanna Valley Woman in Transition was over $2,750. Ticket sales, purchasing of pins and donations raised this sum

for the organization. The emotional and spiritual support from community members and Bucknellians defies calculation. We should congratulate those involved in this project—the organizers, performers, sponsors and audience members—for the completion of this vision and victory for the College Initiative.

The money collected for Susquehanna Valley Woman in Transition was over $2,750. Ticket sales, purchasing of pins and donations raised this sum

for the organization. The emotional and spiritual support from community members and Bucknellians defies calculation. We should congratulate those involved in this project—the organizers, performers, sponsors and audience members—for the completion of this vision and victory for the College Initiative.

The money collected for Susquehanna Valley Woman in Transition was over $2,750. Ticket sales, purchasing of pins and donations raised this sum

for the organization. The emotional and spiritual support from community members and Bucknellians defies calculation. We should congratulate those involved in this project—the organizers, performers, sponsors and audience members—for the completion of this vision and victory for the College Initiative.

The money collected for Susquehanna Valley Woman in Transition was over $2,750. Ticket sales, purchasing of pins and donations raised this sum

for the organization. The emotional and spiritual support from community members and Bucknellians defies calculation. We should congratulate those involved in this project—the organizers, performers, sponsors and audience members—for the completion of this vision and victory for the College Initiative.

The money collected for Susquehanna Valley Woman in Transition was over $2,750. Ticket sales, purchasing of pins and donations raised this sum

for the organization. The emotional and spiritual support from community members and Bucknellians defies calculation. We should congratulate those involved in this project—the organizers, performers, sponsors and audience members—for the completion of this vision and victory for the College Initiative.

The money collected for Susquehanna Valley Woman in Transition was over $2,750. Ticket sales, purchasing of pins and donations raised this sum

for the organization. The emotional and spiritual support from community members and Bucknellians defies calculation. We should congratulate those involved in this project—the organizers, performers, sponsors and audience members—for the completion of this vision and victory for the College Initiative.

The money collected for Susquehanna Valley Woman in Transition was over $2,750. Ticket sales, purchasing of pins and donations raised this sum

for the organization. The emotional and spiritual support from community members and Bucknellians defies calculation. We should congratulate those involved in this project—the organizers, performers, sponsors and audience members—for the completion of this vision and victory for the College Initiative.

The money collected for Susquehanna Valley Woman in Transition was over $2,750. Ticket sales, purchasing of pins and donations raised this sum

for the organization. The emotional and spiritual support from community members and Bucknellians defies calculation. We should congratulate those involved in this project—the organizers, performers, sponsors and audience members—for the completion of this vision and victory for the College Initiative.

The money collected for Susquehanna Valley Woman in Transition was over $2,750. Ticket sales, purchasing of pins and donations raised this sum

for the organization. The emotional and spiritual support from community members and Bucknellians defies calculation. We should congratulate those involved in this project—the organizers, performers, sponsors and audience members—for the completion of this vision and victory for the College Initiative.

The money collected for Susquehanna Valley Woman in Transition was over $2,750. Ticket sales, purchasing of pins and donations raised this sum

for the organization. The emotional and spiritual support from community members and Bucknellians defies calculation. We should congratulate those involved in this project—the organizers, performers, sponsors and audience members—for the completion of this vision and victory for the College Initiative.

The money collected for Susquehanna Valley Woman in Transition was over $2,750. Ticket sales, purchasing of pins and donations raised this sum

for the organization. The emotional and spiritual support from community members and Bucknellians defies calculation. We should congratulate those involved in this project—the organizers, performers, sponsors and audience members—for the completion of this vision and victory for the College Initiative.

The money collected for Susquehanna Valley Woman in Transition was over $2,750. Ticket sales, purchasing of pins and donations raised this sum

for the organization. The emotional and spiritual support from community members and Bucknellians defies calculation. We should congratulate those involved in this project—the organizers, performers, sponsors and audience members—for the completion of this vision and victory for the College Initiative.

The money collected for Susquehanna Valley Woman in Transition was over $2,750. Ticket sales, purchasing of pins and donations raised this sum

for the organization. The emotional and spiritual support from community members and Bucknellians defies calculation. We should congratulate those involved in this project—the organizers, performers, sponsors and audience members—for the completion of this vision and victory for the College Initiative.

The money collected for Susquehanna Valley Woman in Transition was over $2,750. Ticket sales, purchasing of pins and donations raised this sum

for the organization. The emotional and spiritual support from community members and Bucknellians defies calculation. We should congratulate those involved in this project—the organizers, performers, sponsors and audience members—for the completion of this vision and victory for the College Initiative.

The money collected for Susquehanna Valley Woman in Transition was over $2,750. Ticket sales, purchasing of pins and donations raised this sum

for the organization. The emotional and spiritual support from community members and Bucknellians defies calculation. We should congratulate those involved in this project—the organizers, performers, sponsors and audience members—for the completion of this vision and victory for the College Initiative.

The money collected for Susquehanna Valley Woman in Transition was over $2,750. Ticket sales, purchasing of pins and donations raised this sum

for the organization. The emotional and spiritual support from community members and Bucknellians defies calculation. We should congratulate those involved in this project—the organizers, performers, sponsors and audience members—for the completion of this vision and victory for the College Initiative.

The money collected for Susquehanna Valley Woman in Transition was over $2,750. Ticket sales, purchasing of pins and donations raised this sum

for the organization. The emotional and spiritual support from community members and Bucknellians defies calculation. We should congratulate those involved in this project—the organizers, performers, sponsors and audience members—for the completion of this vision and victory for the College Initiative.

The money collected for Susquehanna Valley Woman in Transition was over $2,750. Ticket sales, purchasing of pins and donations raised this sum

for the organization. The emotional and spiritual support from community members and Bucknellians defies calculation. We should congratulate those involved in this project—the organizers, performers, sponsors and audience members—for the completion of this vision and victory for the College Initiative.

The money collected for Susquehanna Valley Woman in Transition was over $2,750. Ticket sales, purchasing of pins and donations raised this sum

for the organization. The emotional and spiritual support from community members and Bucknellians defies calculation. We should congratulate those involved in this project—the organizers, performers, sponsors and audience members—for the completion of this vision and victory for the College Initiative.

The money collected for Susquehanna Valley Woman in Transition was over $2,750. Ticket sales, purchasing of pins and donations raised this sum

for the organization. The emotional and spiritual support from community members and Bucknellians defies calculation. We should congratulate those involved in this project—the organizers, performers, sponsors and audience members—for the completion of this vision and victory for the College Initiative.

The money collected for Susquehanna Valley Woman in Transition was over $2,750. Ticket sales, purchasing of pins and donations raised this sum

for the organization. The emotional and spiritual support from community members and Bucknellians defies calculation. We should congratulate those involved in this project—the organizers, performers, sponsors and audience members—for the completion of this vision and victory for the College Initiative.

The money collected for Susquehanna Valley Woman in Transition was over $2,750. Ticket sales, purchasing of pins and donations raised this sum

for the organization. The emotional and spiritual support from community members and Bucknellians defies calculation. We should congratulate those involved in this project—the organizers, performers, sponsors and audience members—for the completion of this vision and victory for the College Initiative.

The money collected for Susquehanna Valley Woman in Transition was over $2,750. Ticket sales, purchasing of pins and donations raised this sum

for the organization. The emotional and spiritual support from community members and Bucknellians defies calculation. We should congratulate those involved in this project—the organizers, performers, sponsors and audience members—for the completion of this vision and victory for the College Initiative.

The money collected for Susquehanna Valley Woman in Transition was over $2,750. Ticket sales, purchasing of pins and donations raised this sum

for the organization. The emotional and spiritual support from community members and Bucknellians defies calculation. We should congratulate those involved in this project—the organizers, performers, sponsors and audience members—for the completion of this vision and victory for the College Initiative.

The money collected for Susquehanna Valley Woman in Transition was over $2,750. Ticket sales, purchasing of pins and donations raised this sum

for the organization. The emotional and spiritual support from community members and Bucknellians defies calculation. We should congratulate those involved in this project—the organizers, performers, sponsors and audience members—for the completion of this vision and victory for the College Initiative.

The money collected for Susquehanna Valley Woman in Transition was over $2,750. Ticket sales, purchasing of pins and donations raised this sum

for the organization. The emotional and spiritual support from community members and Bucknellians defies calculation. We should congratulate those involved in this project—the organizers, performers, sponsors and audience members—for the completion of this vision and victory for the College Initiative.

The money collected for Susquehanna Valley Woman in Transition was over $2,750. Ticket sales, purchasing of pins and donations raised this sum

for the organization. The emotional and spiritual support from community members and Bucknellians defies calculation. We should congratulate those involved in this project—the organizers, performers, sponsors and audience members—for the completion of this vision and victory for the College Initiative.

The money collected for Susquehanna Valley Woman in Transition was over $2,750. Ticket sales, purchasing of pins and donations raised this sum

for the organization. The emotional and spiritual support from community members and Bucknellians defies calculation. We should congratulate those involved in this project—the organizers, performers, sponsors and audience members—for the completion of this vision and victory for the College Initiative.

Susquehanna Valley Limousine Inc.

With a long tradition of quality service to the Bucknell Community, SVL offers:

- Services for wedding and reception parties
- Corporate and group transportation
- Shuttle service to and from the airport
- Limousine service for special occasions
- Motorcade service for graduation ceremonies
- Wedding transportation
- Service 24 hours a day, 7 days a week

For more information or to make reservations call:

1.800.685.5567

Just 2 minutes away on route 15

Discover Great Food Made Fresh

- Burritos • Tacos • Fajitas •
- Enchiladas • Quesadillas •
- Big Burgers • Large Salads •
- Wings • Large Grazing Menu •

Largest Selection Of Vegetarian Foods In Town

Bikini Contest February 17
Starts at 9pm Must Be 21
$100.00 Cash First Prize

523-8900 • 654 RT 15 • LEWISBURG •

TOYOTA

CALL IT START UP MONEY.

TOYOTA'S COLLEGE GRADUATE FINANCE PLAN INCLUDES $500 TO GET YOU GOING!

There's sure to be a Toyota that's just right for you.

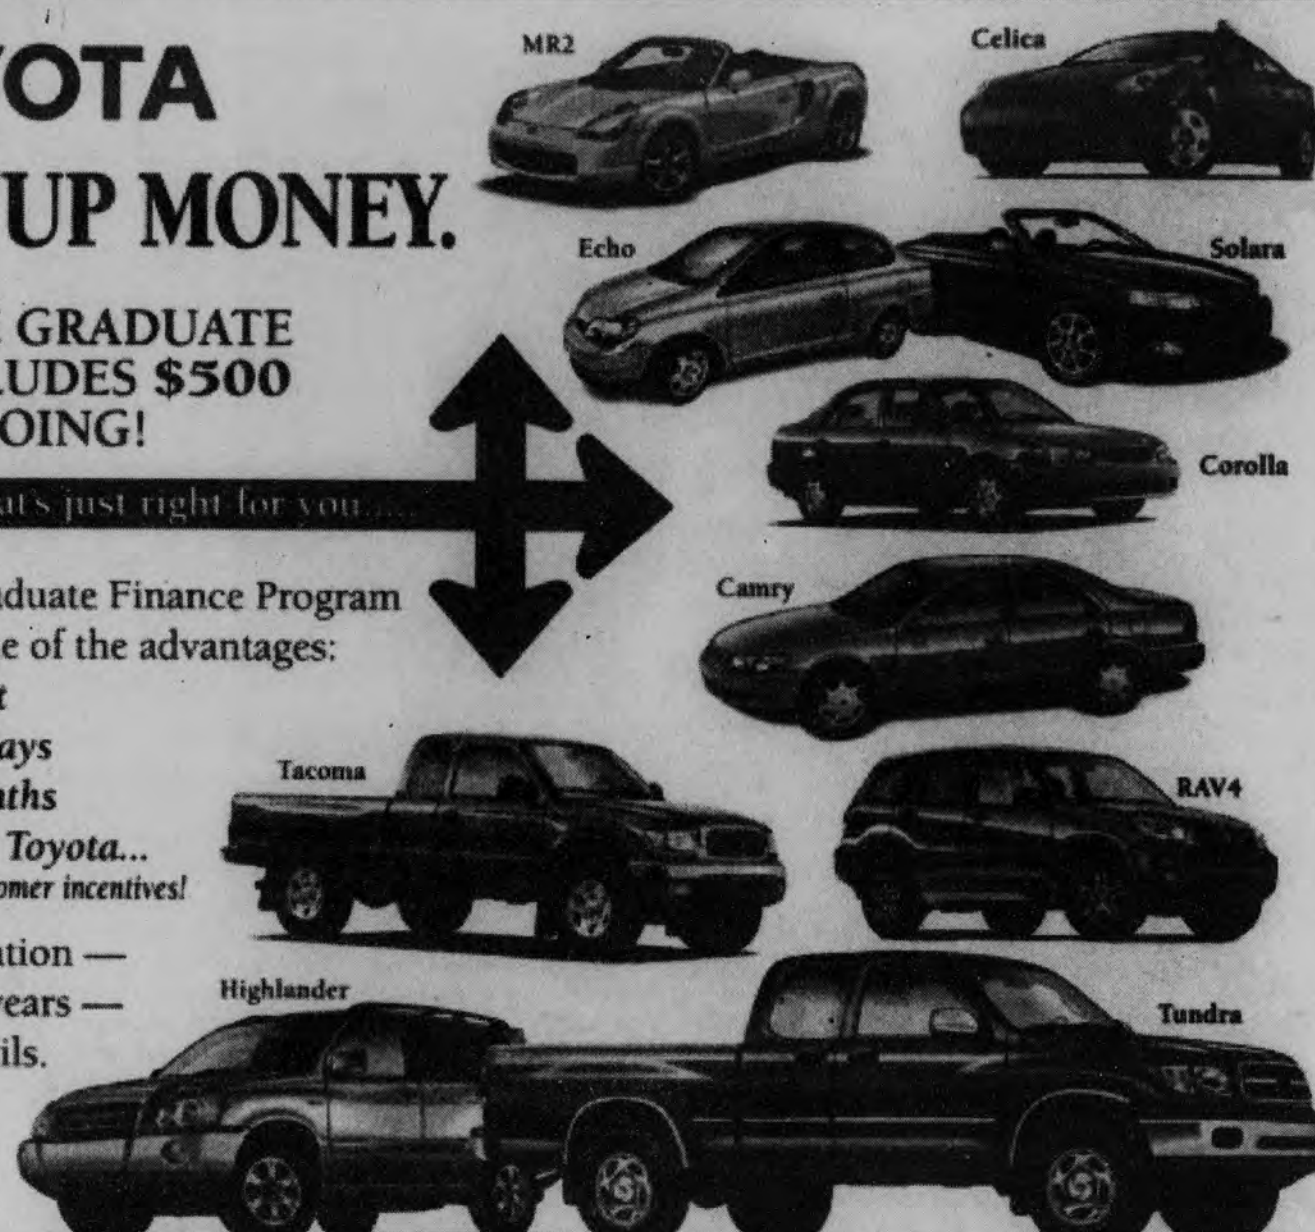

And now there's a Toyota College Graduate Finance Program that's just right, too. Here are some of the advantages:

- No Down Payment
- No Payment for 90 days
- Finance up to 72 months
- Get $500 Cash Back From Toyota... in addition to any other current Toyota customer incentives!

So if you're within 4 months of graduation — or if you graduated within the past 2 years — Ask your Toyota dealer for all the details.

www.gettoyota.com

Toyota College Graduate Finance Program available to qualified applicants thru Toyota Financial Services. Not all applicants will qualify. Some restrictions and limitations apply. Cash back offer subject to geographic limitations and offer expires 6/30/01. See dealer for details.

SCIENCE & TECHNOLOGY

Are humans alone in intelligence?

By CARMEN MAURIELLO
Sports Editor

The answer is yes, and it's a lot closer than you think. The University's animal behavior laboratory houses these thinking beings: Hamadryas baboons, capuchins and squirrel monkeys. These primates have demonstrated cognitive skills in counting numbers and in comparing sizes and shapes.

Animal behaviorists have gained profound insights into human nature by analyzing the social, psychological and physiological attributes of primates, and recent thrusts within the field have been in emphasizing field research and promoting wildlife conservation.

The study of animal behavior most likely began—as most other fields of study have—as an attempt by humans to understand the world in which we live. As researchers began observing animals in particular, primates, they noticed numerous similarities between these species and humans.

"With primates, the more you look at them, the more you realize that the things they do are similar to us, like their social behaviors of reconciliation and deception," Dhaval Vyas, a sophomore animal behavior major, said.

"They have rules and morals and it gives us insights as to how we could have developed that and how our societies could have developed from primitive tool users to building cities."

Over the past 20 years, one of the focal points within animal behaviorism has been communication with the Great Apes—especially the chimpanzees. While researchers have been successful in teaching primates sign language, which has been publicized through a slate of movies starring signing primates, Animal Behavior Director Douglas Candland notes that the difficulty lies in "understanding whether an animal is in fact conveying meaning to human beings (in its communication)."

Another hotly-debated issue in the field today is whether primates are self-aware, meaning that they have a grasp on their position within their environment.

"Many philosophers would draw a line in terms of ethics on whether an animal is aware of itself," said Candland, founder of the program in animal behavior at the University and chair since 1969. "I think it's quite certain that chimpanzees, at least, are aware of what they are and who they are, something a human infant really doesn't recognize for a couple of years."

Vyas also affirms primates' self-awareness, pointing to the highly organized social structure that some species of primates—in particular, baboons—live. A community of baboons contains a social hierarchy that ranges from a dominant male down to the weakest members of the community, and a baboon's social ranking has important implications in food, mating and other matters within the community.

"If you know what rank you are, and if you have an indication about your ability to move up or down the rank, then you know your position among the group," Vyas said. "To me, that's self-awareness."

More emphasis has been placed in Animal Behavior on field studies of the animals in their natural environment, which Candland strongly encourages his students to undertake since he believes that field work is essential in ascertaining a complete understanding of the animals.

Lori Oliver, a graduate student at the University, believes that the emphasis on field studies signifies a shift in focus within animal behavior that has allowed researchers to obtain a new perspective on the field.

"Early animal behavior work showed how abnormal things could happen in the development of humans through the course of their life, through various environmental or chemical factors," Oliver said. "Now more and more they're studying animals in their natural environment to get more of an evolutionary perspective rather than a generation-to-generation perspective."

Another growing movement in response to President Bush's proposal to initiate oil drilling in the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge: Two students in the University's animal behavior program recently participated in international conservation projects: Oliver contributed to the Budongo Forest Project in Uganda while Alex Piel '01 studied a type of endangered bird, the teal, in Madagascar.

Candland explained that conservation has much broader benefits than just protecting endangered species, which include alleviating the problems associated with our dwindling natural resources—particularly our fresh water supplies. "Animal behavior stands for something much larger, which is the health of the planet we live on," Candland said. "Animals are the fever that tells you that it's sick. When species go extinct because of our behavior, then we're destroying the planet we live on."

Courtesy of Public Relations

Douglas Candland explains aspects of animal behavior to a CBS news crew in a '99 interview for a program that discussed the finding of a feral child in Uganda.

Genome unveiling provides more questions than answers

By ALEX PIEL
Senior Writer

Even if you missed Francis Collins, the University's 1999 Spielman lecturer, the multiple projects undertaken last decade to map the entire human genome have been well publicized.

Two competing groups, sequencing the genome, were the National Human Genome Research Institute (NHGRI), led by Collins and a private group (Celera Genomics), led by Craig Venter. With an unlimited budget from the federal government, Collins, and his colleagues continued to move up the anticipated date of completion.

Finished earlier this month but published Monday, the results were prematurely released by the BBC this weekend unbeknownst to both Venter and Collins.

The news is causing a stir amongst those who understand the implications.

With the completion of this project, each and every of the 25-35,000 genes in the human genome can potentially be identified.

Originally, sequencing of the genome was an attempt to end many presently known diseases and to open the door sophisticated genetic manipulation.

Despite the research still needed to fully understand this very complex subject, there are a few answers we now have.

We know now that the motivating causes behind evolution and consequently most of the variation lies on the male-only Y chromosome. Other significant revelations include a surprisingly minute genetic difference between individuals, including those of different races.

One of the major benefits that was hoped to be gained from this project was a better understanding of the fundamental causes of diseases and their management.

For years geneticists have been predicting that complete knowledge of our genome would forever alter the field of medicine and offer potential cures for diseases from diabetes to cancer.

Before this project began, Collins had spent much of his time studying the origins of diseases and working to better understand their characteristics.

Now, however, with a step in the direction of genetic mastery, he claims the environment may have more influence than he once thought.

"We now know that the idea that one gene leads to one protein is false. We now know that the environment acting on biological steps may be as important in making us what we are as the genetic code," said Craig Venter, president and chief scientific officer for Celera Genomics.

Similarly, according to USA Today, project contributors from Japan are aware of the possible repercussions to biomedical and pharmaceutical companies.

"For companies that have concentrated solely on genetics, (these results) are bad news. We still need to figure out what happens beyond the gene in the working of the organism. And if you're going to be making a drug you need to still (understand) processes other than that of the gene," said Yoshiyuki Sakaki, of the Riken Genome Sciences Center, earlier this week.

Worse yet, according to BBC News, researchers have been humbled by their discovery that the human genome consists of no more than about 30-35,000 genes: a whopping 60-70,000 less than they anticipated.

To non-geneticists out there, that means the difference between human beings and other organisms is far less than we imagine and we, as a species, are far less complex than once thought.

"If anyone found the basis for the pride of our species in the number of genes we had, they may have to rethink it," said Eric Lander, head of genome sequencing at the Whitehead Institute at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

"There are only a few hundred genes that we have in the human genome that are not in the mouse genome," said Venter, agreeing with Lander.

So now what? Now that we have a blueprint of genes, where do we take this information?

"I would predict that in the next five to seven years we will uncover many medical factors involved in diabetes, high blood pressure, heart disease ... the common disorders," Collins said.

He added that new therapies based on this new knowledge could take years to verify. For now, the research continues into analyzing, at a molecular level, the differences between humans and mice, and humans and humans.

Clearly the potential of genetic manipulation has altered how we understand medicine and furthermore, demands we reassess our ethics, not only as a society, but more importantly as one on the frontier of medical discoveries foreign to even those leading the way.

In this country, ethics guide our behavior. We have used this format to moderate the steps we take, those as an individual, as a community, as a country. Technology, though, has superseded the very rules on which we have relied and we are venturing further into unexplored realms of discovery, neglecting to consider the potential ramifications, both social and medical, of such limitations, and ethical chaos this all provokes.

Despite the looming consequences about to effect us all, Dr. Collins proposes we press on. We advance now and ask why later. However, many are asking how we will be able to handle, to understand, and to incorporate our new discoveries.

University students study primate intellectual ability

By CARMEN MAURIELLO
Sports Editor

Several animal behavior students at the University are currently working on a project that tests the ability of primates to distinguish between quantities and, thus, develop a counting system (numerosity) in a social environment. The results of their research could bear important implications on the way primates involved in studies are housed.

Animal behavior major Alex Piel '01 devised this study after a project at Columbia University, which proved that primates can develop rules for numerosity through their ability to distinguish between and order different quantities of dots. But while touring the laboratory, Piel noticed the design of the experiment, which had the primates housed in isolation and only given small food pellets.

Piel was concerned with the study's isolated housing for primates, both for reasons of ethics, since it is unnatural for a primate to be removed from its community, and accuracy, since primates would perform differently in the study being removed from the distractions of their community.

"All primates are social," Piel said. "If you deprive a primate of its social group, then you completely transform the animal."

In response, Piel proposed an experiment that aimed to prove that the University's Hamadryas baboons and squirrel monkeys could achieve similar things to the primates in the Columbia study while living in a social group. A major obstacle to this project's success has been the many distractions that primates are faced with while living in a social community.

"The reason we're interested in mathematics is not to see what kind of mathematical geniuses there are here but to see how (primates) understand the world in which they live," Professor Candland said. "We would be very happy if we were able to map the animal mind in the same way that we try to map the human mind."

WANTED

The Bucknellian needs a new S&T Editor

If interested contact Josie (x74842) or Lynne (x74198)

Napster's fate insignificant in war against internet piracy

By PARKER TERRILL
Staff Writer

After a court decision by the 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals to shut down the popular file sharing program Napster pending a copyright infringement lawsuit, the record industry would appear to have taken a giant step in the fight to end Internet music piracy. However, the suspension of Napster would actually increase record companies' problems tenfold. With Napster shutdown, patrons need only go to one of the hundreds of other file-sharing startups trying to profit off the Napster revolution.

New sites and software have developed following the almost instant success of Napster. Applying the same idea of file sharing, sites such as Napigator, AudioGalaxy, OpenNap, Imesh and the recently bankrupted Scour will begin to be frequented by the almost 50 million previous Napster users. These struggling companies trying to rise to the level of success as Napster could triple their business in a matter of days.

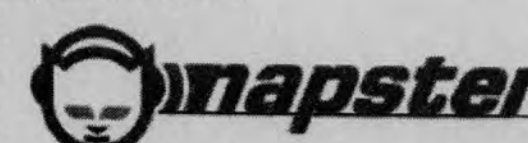

Record companies have a new problem to worry about as well. Napster and the other file sharing websites use a central index server, which aids the transportation of a file from one computer to another. This fact is what made Napster vulnerable to court actions due to a "contributory infringement" statute. Any device or person who aids in copyright infringement is just as liable as the person committing the infringement. However due to the Napster lawsuit, an old method of file swapping is coming back into fashion. The networking structure known as Peer-to-Peer performs similarly to Napster, but relies on software loaded onto a PC instead of a server. With this software, users can trade and swap various files but there is no responsible central organization to prosecute. The only liable bodies are the individual users of the software and the government cannot realistically prosecute millions of users.

Napster has claimed that it does not violate any copyright laws under the Audio Home Recording Act, which allows individuals to record music for their own personal use. For this defense to work, a judge must first rule that a personal computer falls under the classification of a "recording device". Internet law attorney Kevin Grierson has said of the trial, "Right now, it's a crapshoot."

Some of the language in the Sony case (Audio Home Recording Act) clearly supports their position, but the judge in the district court has made some preliminary findings of fact about the intent of Napster's founders that could be very damaging to their chances of success.

The fate of Napster notwithstanding, the record industry has a long battle ahead of it if it wishes to stop the trade of music on the Internet. Many Internet and record companies have joined forces to form music websites that provide access to songs, yet charge a small fee to cover royalty payments. Even Napster is in talks to possibly undertake such a venture if their lawsuit does not proceed as hoped. Yet, with so many options available, music sharing is here to stay.

Did you know ...

the Greenland ice sheet is melting at a rate that approaches the annual flow of the Nile River (51 billion cubic meters of water per year)?

Courtesy of State of the World 2001

questia

"In a duel, there is only one instant winner, at questiapromo.com there are thousands."

The Question Magazine

For a chance to instantly win a Dell® Laptop, Handspring Visors®, messenger bags and more, go to questiapromo.com!

Questia® is the new online service designed to help students write better papers, faster and easier.

questia
Better Papers. Faster.

questia is an online service designed to help you research and write your papers. It's the only online service that gives you access to over 20 million books and journal articles. questia is the only online service that gives you access to over 20 million books and journal articles. questia is the only online service that gives you access to over 20 million books and journal articles.

SUPER HEROES!

ALE MAN & CHICKEN MAN!
Love BJ's
Super Buffalo Wing SPECIAL!

12 for $4.95
24 for $7.95

Sunday - Thursday 9PM - Closing EAT IN ONLY!

17 North Market Street
SELINGROVE
374-9841

291 Nth Street
DANVILLE
275-5110

BookStore
AT BUCKNELL

Unpacking Sale

February 19th - 23rd

ROCK BOTTOM PRICES
on Clothing, Music, Books & Gift Items which we have selected just for you!

Items added daily as we continue our unpacking in Hunt Hall.

after this, the corporate ladder will be a piece of [cake].

In the course of facing challenges like this, you'll learn how to think on your feet. Stay cool under pressure. Take charge. Talk to an Army ROTC rep. You'll find there's nothing like a little climbing to help prepare you for getting to the top.

ARMY ROTC Unlike any other college course you can take.

BIRTHRIGHT of Sunbury

Free Pregnancy Test
Confidential Counseling

AN ABORTION ALTERNATIVE

Hours: Mon - Wed - Fri 12:30 to 4 pm

351 Woodlawn Ave.
Sunbury, Pa. 17837

570-286-8560
1-800-550-4900

When you can't see eye-to-eye with the IRS get an ear

Fact is, most federal tax returns go through without a hitch. But for tougher problems, you have powerful help.

Now the Taxpayer Advocate Service is here to help taxpayers who can't resolve an ongoing tax issue through the usual IRS channels. Or those who face significant hardship unless relief is granted.

Your personal Taxpayer Advocate can review the situation from a fresh point of view - yours. The same person works with you until the issue is resolved quickly and fairly.

To find out if you qualify for a personal Taxpayer Advocate, phone toll free 1-877-777-4778.

TAXPAYER ADVOCATE SERVICE

The Internal Revenue Service Working to put service first

PENN SUMMER 2001

Philadelphia, PA • Tel: 215.898.7128 • email: summer@axs.upenn.edu

Undergraduate and Graduate Courses

Programs for International Students

Programs for High School Students

Summer Abroad

Online Courses

HUNDREDS OF COURSES

- Beautiful historic campus
- Easily transferable credit
- College house amenities
- Social & cultural activities
- Convenient to New York & D.C.

www.upenn.edu/summer

Summer Session I May 22-June 29
Summer Session II July 2-August 10
12 Week Evening Session May 21-August 10

George Washington University Summer

WE'VE GOT IT ALL

CW Summer Sessions offers programs from 70 different areas of study with over 500 courses from May to August

Sessions start May 23 and July 9

- Columbian School of Arts and Sciences
- School of Business and Public Management
- Graduate School of Education and Human Development
- School of Engineering and Applied Science
- Elliott School of International Affairs
- School of Medicine and Health Sciences
- School of Public Health and Health Services
- Law School
- Center for Professional Development
- Off-Campus Graduate Programs

REGISTRATION BEGINS MARCH 28

The George Washington University
WASHINGTON DC

website: www.summer.gwu.edu
email: summer@gwu.edu (202) 994-6360

GW is an equal opportunity institution.

U-SAVE AUTO RENTAL

Low, Low Rates!

*We bill insurance companies direct.

*Major credit cards accepted.
*Must be 21 or older.

Earning the right to serve you each and every time.

524-0000

Rt.15 & Nth 7th St.
Lewisburg, Pa. 17837

Mon-Fri 8:00-5:00
Sat. 8:00-12:00

e-file

40 million people know e-file's the way to go

Join the 40 million people who will use IRS e-file this year.

It's fast, accurate, secure—and now you can even sign your tax return electronically.

Expecting a refund? You'll get it back in half the usual time. With Direct Deposit to your account, you can get it in as little as ten days.

Do you owe more tax? You can e-file your return now, then wait until April 15th to pay. You can even charge the balance to a credit card. Or pay by Direct Debit from your bank account.

Ask your tax preparer to e-file your return. Or check out the various options to e-file yourself. This year, you can e-file both federal and state tax returns.

For details, see your tax professional or visit us at www.irs.gov

American Academy of Dermatology (AAD)

"This message isn't about magic, it's about medicine."

Amanda was born with a serious skin condition. A red birthmark covered almost half her face. Left untreated, it could have damaged her self-esteem, and she wouldn't be the happy, outgoing child she is today. Most skin conditions are treatable. And while they won't disappear by magic, they can disappear with the help of a dermatologist. For more information, call 1.888.462.DERM or visit www.aad.org. Don't let anything get in the way of being a kid.

First Impressions Salon

Enjoy our weekly and monthly specials!

Tanning and Nail Services

716 West Market Street, Lewisburg, PA 17837
Phone: 522-9656

Call Today for Your Appointment. Cash and Checks Only.

Ya Can't BEAT The BONGO!

Bongo Bongo Dip!

A bubbly dip, topped with a choice of chicken, beef, or turkey. Served with a choice of pasta or rice. $5.95

ONLY AT BJ'S

17 North Market Street
SELINGROVE
374-9841

291 Nth Street
DANVILLE
275-5110

Tuesday is Bucknell Night at Imperial Lanes

Tuesday Nights
2 hour Special for $20
9:30 - 11:30 only

Rent-a-lane for up to 6 people
Call 742-9211 to Schedule
Private Parties
Sorority/Fraternity/Date Parties

Enjoy Rock-n-Bowl with Lane Quake Sound!
Leagues and Open Bowling Available

Arizona Cafe

Come Party at this!

Outdoor Patio and Fireside Dining

Quesadillas
Chicken Soft Tacos
Monster Burritos

Enchiladas
Seafood
Steaks

Most Meals $9 - $13 No Charge Cards (Checks Accepted)

Bring in this Coupon for 1 FREE virgin margarita with each entree purchased.

From Bucknell:
Take Market St (Rt 45)
Cross bridge and stay straight until ends.
Turn Right.
Exactly 4.0 mi on Left.

Open Tues-Thurs 11:30-9, Fri & Sat 11:30-10, Sun 11:30-8

CALL NOW Available for 2001/2002

Apartment and houses for rent

Close to Campus
Heat, washer/dryer, dishwasher included in some
Parking provided
1-6 bedroom units available
Professional 24-hour maintenance
Excellent services
Price range $275.00 - $1,200.00

Call: 570/524-2121 x 2

TBRNWOOD Rentals

Contact us for your off-campus housing needs.

hang ten, earn six*

summer sessions, hawaii!

*6 weeks, 6 credits, as low as $3,000 (based on typical costs of tuition, room & board, books, and estimated airfare)

Term 1: May 21-June 29 • Term 2: July 2-August 10

www.summer.hawaii.edu • toll-free 1 (800) 862-6628

University of Hawaii at Manoa, Summer Sessions

BUSINESS & POLITICS

Submarine mishap wrecks political havoc

By ALEXIS BEDEIAN
Staff Writer

In an emergency training exercise, a U.S. Navy submarine collided with a Japanese fishing boat on Friday, Feb. 9 near Pearl Harbor, HI. Of the 35 passengers aboard the Japanese trawler Ehime Maru, nine passengers remain missing. Four of the nine missing are teenage boys. The U.S. Coast Guard rescued the other 26 passengers.

The Ehime Maru left Ujajima, Japan on Jan. 10. Aboard the ship were 20 crew members, two teachers and 13 students from the Ujajima Marine and Fisheries High School. The students were learning commercial fishing and were scheduled to return to Japan next month.

However, the field trip came to a disastrous end when the 362-foot USS Greeneville submarine surfaced below the 181-foot Ehime Maru, causing the boat to fill with water and sink almost immediately. The question, however, has become whether such a disaster could have occurred if standard operating procedures had been followed.

The USS Greeneville was engaging in an exercise in which the submarine descends below the surface and quickly resurfaces within a short period of time. For safety measures, the submarine must first raise the periscope to search the perimeter for approaching ships.

The submarine also employs sonar to detect the sound of porpoises. Once the area is deemed clear, the submarine descends for about 10 to 15 minutes and quickly resurfaces. The exercise must be completed in a very short time frame to prevent any undetected vessels from entering the training area.

A Feb. 9 submarine accident has left nine feared dead, and has further strained relations between Japan and the U.S. military.

If standard operation procedures had been followed, an accident such as this would not have occurred. Navy officials said. The Ehime Maru should not have been able to enter into the training area undetected. This breakdown is currently under investigation.

Also in question is if the United States provided enough assistance to the crash victims. In interviews, some survivors of the wreck have not arrive until 30 minutes after the accident, and the first rescues were not made until almost 15 minutes later when the first ships arrived, according to Coast Guard spokesman Lt. Greg Fondran.

This incident has left the Japanese with concerns about the integrity of the U.S. Navy. Japanese Prime Minister Yoshiro Mori conveyed his concerns in a meeting with U.S. Ambassador Thomas Foley on Sunday. "The Japanese people are feeling deep distrust," Mori said. He also said, "The United States claims rescue was difficult because of high waves, but that explanation does not satisfy us."

President Bush, Secretary of State Colin Powell and Defense Secretary Donald Rumsfeld have all apologized to Japan. Condoleezza Rice, Bush's national security advisor, said Monday on CBS, "There is no evidence yet that proper procedures were not followed."

Jennifer Jensen, professor of political science, said of the tragic accident, "These sorts of incidents are very difficult in terms of public relations. Many Japanese citizens do not like having American bases in Japan, and these sorts of incidents raise more hostility."

"It is very important from a diplomatic perspective for the United States to deal with the investigation quickly and openly. Obviously, this is a tough line to walk: being fair to the personnel involved, and yet satisfying Japanese concerns."

RU-486 faces opposition

By AMANDA KAUFMAN
Staff Writer

Senator Tim Hutchinson, R-AR, together with Representative David Vitter, R-LA, introduced legislation on Feb. 6 that would tighten controls over the distribution of RU-486, also known as the "abortion pill."

The FDA approved the use of RU-486 for chemical abortions last September under unusual circumstances. Eager to get RU-486 to the market before the pro-choice Clinton administration left office, the FDA reviewed the drug on a "fast-track" time table. Guidelines specify that to be considered on the fast track, a drug must "provide meaningful therapeutic benefits to patients over existing treatments" to combat a "serious or life-threatening illness."

A pregnancy is surely not a serious or life-threatening illness; the approval never should have been fast-tracked to begin with, argued Vitter at last Tuesday's press conference. Nonetheless, the FDA review time was a mere six months, even faster than the average time for fast-tracked drugs.

Further complicating the debate, the company producing RU-486, Hua Lian Pharmaceutical, has a spotty record. As recently as 1998, the California Health Department found not only that the company had illegally sent a shipment of drugs to America, but that it contained the unapproved drug fluorouracil. In July 2000 in Cincinnati, the FDA confiscated a shipment from Hua Lian's factory "for false or misleading labeling and misbranding."

Further, the term "abortion pill" is a misnomer. The treatment actually consists of a number of pills administered over the course of seventy-two hours. First, the doctor provides RU-486, a man-made steroid designed to break down progesterone. Without progesterone, the fetus cannot survive. RU-486 starves the fetus while destroying the surroundings within the womb. Once the fetus is no longer viable, the woman returns to her doctor for a dose of misoprostol, which causes cramping and contractions. This chemical causes the mother's uterus to expel its contents "a process which can occur any time after she takes the drug. During her final doctor's office or clinic visit, a doctor will examine the woman to see if her abortion is complete. If the RU-486 abortion has failed, the woman may then be scheduled for surgical abortion."

Searle, a US pharmaceutical company, manufactures the second drug, misoprostol. Also known as cytotec, the drug is usually prescribed for peptic ulcers. Because of its possible side-effects, cytotec carries a warning label; explaining that the drug, if taken by pregnant women, can induce labor and cause the uterus to rupture, resulting in severe bleeding, hospitalization, surgery, infertility or death. Indeed, in the last three years, the FDA received reports of 30 cases of uterine rupture and 486 and sent a "Dear Doctor" letter to 200,000 health care providers reminding them that Searle has not studied, and the FDA has not approved, cytotec's use to induce abortions.

The new GOP legislation would require physicians prescribing the drugs to be qualified to handle complications of an incomplete abortion and to be trained to perform a surgical abortion if needed. Physicians also would be required to have admitting privileges at a nearby hospital in case of complications such as excessive bleeding. Currently the FDA requires only that abortion pill providers have plans in place to refer a woman for a surgical abortion if the medical abortion is incomplete. The bill would also require that physicians be able to read a sonogram in order to date the pregnancy.

Once an FDA ruling is finalized, it may only be undone through legislation. A spokeswoman for the agency said it is "unprecedented" for Congress to overrule an FDA decision. However, Secretary of Health and Human Services Tommy Thompson indicated that HHS will conduct its own investigation into the safety of RU-486.

The F-22 Raptor fighter jet is among the American weaponry whose effectiveness is under review by the Department of Defense.

Bush aims to improve military

By MELISSA FINKELSTEIN
Staff Writer

President Bush flew in Air Force One on official business for the first time on Monday, Feb. 12, 2001. His destination was Fort Stewart, Ga., the site of a military base, and also the site of Bush's first act as commander in chief of the U.S. military.

The Pentagon budget was the subject of Bush's speech today at Ft. Stewart, and Tuesday Bush's efforts continued when he traveled to Norfolk, Virginia.

According to CNN, Bush's two top goals in discussing the Pentagon budget specifically, and military security more generally, are the proposal of a $5.7 billion spending initiative, and the reinforcement of morale for U.S. armed service. Bush addressed a constituency of military personnel at Ft. Stewart saying, "America is not serving you well enough."

The Bush administration has signaled that financing is a problem that needs to be, and will be, corrected. Still, Bush acknowledged that "Our nation can never fully repay its debt to [its military]."

Critics point out that Bush's plan to redress military security spending is not necessarily a shift from Clinton-era policy. As reported by CNN, regardless of whether or not Bush proposes a spending increase, a 4.6 percent pay raise as initiated during Clinton's term, will be on target for military personnel.

Further, the proposed money that Bush would like to spend on developing defense technology is in line with Clinton-era spending given inflation. Critics of Bush's actions also remember the promises that he touted during his campaign, and are comparatively disappointed with the outline of Bush's concrete policy initiatives in the military arena.

Bush's $5.7 billion increase in military spending will not actually take effect until the fiscal year begins in October, which is another source of criticism. However, senior military officials believe that Secretary of Defense Donald Rumsfeld may be able to convince President Bush to give considerable aid to the military prior to the start of the fiscal year.

According to a CNN poll, the American people rank military security as lower in importance than issues such as education, the economy and concerns about energy crises. Yet, military security ranked as more important than tax cuts.

Concerns have arisen that Bush is spreading America's money too thin. Do we have enough to support $1.6 trillion in tax cuts, increase military spending by $5.7 billion, fund education reform, protect Social Security, and pay down the national debt?

Many politicians, such as senators Jim Jeffords (R-VT) and Tom Daschle (D-SD), are fearful that indeed we do not. With cabinet members now reporting to President Bush on the needs of their specific departments, it seems that funds may be running out.

There can be no doubt that military personnel deserve appropriate compensation for their service to this country. And certainly defense technology is not an area that the United States can ignore. The issue is if Bush can allocate money so as to best meet America's needs.

GOP congressmen seek limits on controversial drug RU-486.

Quote of the Week

"Can I see some ID?"

— Capitol Hill

bartender to Adam Putnam (R-FL), 26-year old and member of the House of Representatives.
(Courtesy of rollcall.com)

Slicker than Bill, hotter than Hillary... It's B&P!!
Email Mike, mboland@ if you'd like to write.

Ski resorts and conservationists work together to lessen the potential environmental impact of the skiing industry.

Ski resorts respond to environmental concerns

By ANDREA BEISSER
Staff Writer

The heart of ski season is upon us and while many are flocking to the ski slopes, resort operators around the country are making an effort to prove they have comprehensive environmental plans and are green at heart.

In recent years, environmental activists have aggressively targeted high-profile ski area expansions, notably Vail's so-called Cat III project, pointing out impacts to natural resources and insisting that developed ski terrain is growing out of proportion to the number of skiers and snowboarders.

Noting an increasingly ignorant public perception of the ski industry, the National Ski Areas Association, an industry trade group, took action. As a first step, the organization developed an environmental charter, dubbed "Sustainable Slopes." About 60 percent of the country's ski areas have signed on, agreeing to the charter's comprehensive set of environmental principles. Some state and federal agencies, along with a handful of environmental groups, have signed on as partners.

The kickoff for the campaign is Feb. 24, during the heart of ski season, when areas around the country will draw attention to their green programs. An environmental fact sheet posted on a Colorado ski industry trade group's website shows an impressive record of achievements.

Several resorts are working with state and federal agencies to reduce energy use and eliminate hazardous and toxic materials from their inventory. Some resorts have launched environmental education programs, while others help pay for local habitat restoration projects with grants funded partly by employee contributions.

Another common program at nearly every ski area is recycling. Vail's program has even added recycling stations near the top of the lifts.

In New Hampshire, ski resorts, land managers and conservationists have reached consensus on management of the national forest lands, where several ski areas operate. Ski area operators acknowledged the need to limit impacts to public lands, and signed on to the concept of a comprehensive plan that will address cumulative impacts.

A deal made in New England also puts a limit on resort expansions at pre-determined boundaries, with a promise of no disturbance of roadless areas.

Resorts and ski operations cannot achieve environmental consciousness alone, however. Active participation by skiers and snowboarders is essential to help create a sustainable future for the sport and the industry.

THE Bucknellian

The weekly campus newspaper of Bucknell University

February 23, 2001

Volume 127, Number 5

http://www.orgs.bucknell.edu/bucknellian

Ralph Nader to visit campus

By LAURA DAY
News Editor

The University welcomes former presidential candidate Ralph Nader to campus Wednesday. The President of the Green Party and its 2000 presidential candidate will address the public about his platform in "Searching for the Truth" and "World Trade and Globalization."

Nader's Green Party has become the third largest political party in the United States. Although Nader did not win five percent of the vote in the 2000 election, which would make the party eligible for federal matching funds in the 2004 election, he did play a crucial role.

Attracting much attention and support, the Green Party advocated campaign finance reform that would provide public funding of public campaigns. Other central platform issues included a gender equal rights amendment furthering protection of women's equality in education, employment and other areas and the campaign for a living wage for all workers.

In 1971, Nader founded Public Citizen, an organization devoted into six branches and works for consumer justice. Generally, the group protects consumers in front of Congress, advocates the termination of corporate subsidies, lobbies for safer foods, drugs, and medicines, represents citizens in precedent-setting law suits, watches nuclear and radioactive waste disposals, publicizes environmental protection and educates Americans on what the party calls the "imperialism of multinational corporations."

Born in Winsted, Conn. in 1934 to Rose and Nathra Nader, Nader graduated magna cum laude from Princeton University in 1955 and received his L.L.D. from Harvard University in 1958. In addition to his political career, he is a lawyer, consumer advocate and author.

He founded organizations such as the Center for Auto Safety and the Center for Women's Policy Studies. His publications include Action for a Change, 1972 and No Contest: Corporate Lawyers and the Preservation of Justice in America, 1996.

He has dedicated his life to service for the public since becoming famous after winning a lawsuit against GM about auto safety and establishing his "Nader's Raiders."

Although Nader may be seen as a jack-of-all-trades, he considers his most crucial job, "a full-time citizen, the most important office in America for anyone to achieve."

The program will start at 7:30 p.m. on Feb. 28 in the Weis Center and will be followed by a question-and-answer session and a book-signing. It is free and open to the public.

The program is co-sponsored by the Economics Department, Vice President for Academic Affairs, University Lectureship Committee, Management Department, Women's Studies Program, Political Science Department and Bucknell Student Government.

Former presidential candidate Ralph Nader speaks to the University on Feb. 28.

Sterling leads Partnership

By RACHEL LASKOW
News Layout Editor

For the past seven months, the Lewisburg Downtown Partnership has continued to make strides in improving the town. As the first full-time executive director, Linda Sterling hopes to deliver a downtown that the community wants.

"She's a deeply experienced Main Street manager (the Partnership is part of a national program called Main Street)," Interim Vice President for Student Affairs Charles Pollock '70 said. "Linda has extensive contacts in Harrisburg. She has Lewisburg plugged into the state level of main street development at a very high level. She's very creative and has been effective in working with quite a number people in her first year."

Before becoming executive director on Feb. 1, Sterling served as a consultant for the project—a project that hopes to unite the factions of the community. Starting in July 1999, Sterling and a task force composed of members from the University, the Borough and Lewisburg businesses worked together to research and resolve the community's concerns.

"The task force really understood the needs of the community," Sterling said.

After surveying the community and students, the committee was able to detect the core issues facing Lewisburg and developed a work plan based on these concerns.

"The students' opinions mirrored those of the community members," Sterling said.

Both groups agreed on the need to promote the town and to better understand its markets. The need for all community partners, including the University, to work together was also seen as a common concern.

"I have a belief that anytime there is an 'us' and a 'them' in a community, it hurts everyone. It is important that students feel welcomed into the community," Sterling said. "Bucknell students have a lot to offer Lewisburg and if we don't take advantage of that, we lose. It benefits all sides to understand each other a little better."

Pollock, who is also the president of the Partnership's board, recognizes the importance of community cooperation as well.

"The Partnership builds a sense of community—which is not a physical thing. There's a sense that we all share this space and have pride in it—all that will grow to benefit all of us," Pollock said.

The Borough and the University made a commitment to make annual donations to help fund the project. Also, the Lewisburg Business and Professional Association (LBPA) asked businesses for donations three different times from July 1999 to October 2000.

The Partnership, which became official on Aug. 4, 2000, hopes to make this an annual fund drive.

Another funding source is the Main Street grant, which $195,000 over five years. The Borough receives the money and gives it to the Partnership. Each year, the Partnership must show their accomplishments before they receive the next year's money.

With this grant, the Partnership is working on the Main Street Approach, a national movement to enhance LBPA efforts. Ongoing steps include planning and implementing downtown sales events and coordinating University-downtown events.

The goals include developing a solid funding base for the program, fostering leadership and volunteer management and strengthening communication and cooperation among business owners, the University, the Borough, other partners and the community.

Peter Van Emburgh—The Bucknellian's first full-time executive director, Linda Sterling hopes to improve Lewisburg.

The second point focuses on promotion, which aims to support and enhance LBPA efforts. Ongoing steps include planning and implementing downtown sales events and coordinating University-downtown events.

Thirdly, the Partnership will focus on economic restructuring. By

See STERLING, page A3

Provost/VPAA committee brings finalists to campus

By NATALIE CASP
News Editor

Three of the four finalists for the Provost/Vice President for Administrative Affairs position have been announced after the committee selected them from a pool of 62 applicants. The committee will bring the candidates to the University for on-site interviews beginning Monday, Feb. 28.

The finalists are Frank "Skip" E. Saal, Ph.D., dean of the college of arts and sciences and professor of psychology at Mississippi State University; Stephen H. Bowen, Ph.D., vice provost for instruction and dean of distance learning and professor of biological sciences at Michigan Technological University; and Eugene "Genie" P. Gerdes, interim vice president for academic affairs and professor of psychology at Bucknell University. The fourth finalist will be named soon.

Off-campus interviews were held earlier this month to determine who the final candidates would be.

"We were very pleased overall with how the off-site interviews went. Not only did we meet with all the candidates as arranged, the process itself went smoothly," said Deborah A. Abowitz, professor of sociology and anthropology and committee chair. "Being able to meet face-to-face with these candidates shaped the committee's recommendations for on-campus finalists."

Each of the candidates will meet with President Rogers, administrators, faculty, staff and students. The committee will then ask the campus community for feedback.

VPAA search advances

By NATALIE CASP
News Editor

With roughly 60 applicants, the search for the Vice President of Development and University Relations (VPUR) is progressing on schedule. By the end of March, the committee will recommend candidates to President Rogers for a final decision.

"We have about 60 applicants right now. It's not a precise number because in this search, as with several of the searches, we are trying very much to recruit people into the pool in addition to simply accepting applications," said Charles Pollock '70, interim vice president for student affairs and committee chair. "We will know shortly the definitive status of everyone who expressed some interest, but as of right now we have about 60 active candidates."

The committee is reviewing all applications before selecting candidates for

See VPUR, page A2

Both the men's and women's ski teams advance to the Regional Championship meet for the first time in five years. See page A8.

Rogers to participate in fifth Brigade

By PETER VAN EMBURGH
Editor-in-Chief

Members of the Bucknell Brigade approached University President Steffen Rogers last summer to introduce the incoming president to the project that was created in 1999 by alumna Jamie Cistoldi '99.

On March 10, the Brigade will depart from campus for its fifth mission trip to Nueva Vida, Nicaragua. Over the years the mission has received continued and enthusiastic support from all members of the University community to continue the Brigade after Cistoldi's graduation.

The original Brigade expedition established roots in Nueva Vida, where victims of the Hurricane were living in makeshift tents with no water or electricity. The members of the Brigade gathered to build a total of 15 basic shelters, as well as treat 350 patients in a clinic led by Stechschulte.

"I, along with all of the Brigade members, am looking forward to an especially exciting trip this time, as President and Mrs. Rogers are planning to join us," Student Director Hillary Billmeyer '01 said. "This is truly an inspiring event for all of us, as well as the members of the community of Nueva Vida."

Oliver said, "President Rogers' desire to take time out of his very busy schedule to travel to Nicaragua and join the Brigade reflects his personal commitment to Bucknell students, to innovative projects and to building a great service learning program at Bucknell."

University President Steffen Rogers and wife Athena will travel to Nueva Vida, Nicaragua, as part of the fifth Bucknell Brigade.

"I've heard about Habitat for Humanity and that is a good project, but to do something in Nicaragua—I've never seen anything like it!" Rogers said.

The Bucknell University Hurricane Relief Brigade to Nicaragua was born in 1999 when Cistoldi arranged a trip to Nicaragua to help the victims of Hurricane Mitch. Over the years the mission has received continued and enthusiastic support from all members of the University community to continue the Brigade after Cistoldi's graduation.

The original Brigade expedition established roots in Nueva Vida, where victims of the Hurricane were living in makeshift tents with no water or electricity. The members of the Brigade gathered to build a total of 15 basic shelters, as well as treat 350 patients in a clinic led by Stechschulte.

"I, along with all of the Brigade members, am looking forward to an especially exciting trip this time, as President and Mrs. Rogers are planning to join us," Student Director Hillary Billmeyer '01 said. "This is truly an inspiring event for all of us, as well as the members of the community of Nueva Vida."

Oliver said, "President Rogers' desire to take time out of his very busy schedule to travel to Nicaragua and join the Brigade reflects his personal commitment to Bucknell students, to innovative projects and to building a great service learning program at Bucknell."

Oliver said, "President Rogers' desire to take time out of his very busy schedule to travel to Nicaragua and join the Brigade reflects his personal commitment to Bucknell students, to innovative projects and to building a great service learning program at Bucknell."

Four missions later, in March, the Brigade intends to improve the new health clinic that was installed by past Brigade volunteers. Acquiring other students to share the enthusiasms is so interesting," Rogers said.

Bison Scoreboard

WOMEN'S BASKETBALL
Bucknell	67
Lehigh	74
fg	ft	r	p
Almind	2-7	0-0	3	4
Quimby	7-15	0-0	7	14
Creamer	6-21	2-2	0	15
LeBlanc	3-6	2-2	5	10
Franks	4-10	0-0	3	8
Rounly	4-7	7-7	6	15
Fleming	0-1	0-0	2	0
May	1-1	0-0	0	3
3pt.
Creamer	1-6
May	1-1
SEASON STATS
15-5 (5-1)
fg	pct	3-pt.	a	r	ppg
Franks	45-139	324	17-52	45	64	7.3
Quimby	97-203	478	0-0	26	149	15.0
May	9-25	360	3-11	27	11	1.4
Creamer	133-279	477	35-87	97	89	20.2
Helsing	9-25	360	6-14	8	17	3.6
Almind	134-285	470	6-17	24	102	17.2
Rounly	32-71	451	0-1	7	52	4.8
LeBlanc	41-87	471	0-0	25	119	6.2
Valdner	3-8	375	0-0	1	9	1.5
Fleming	5-12	417	0-0	0	25	9
Forrence	1-5	200	0-0	0	10	.8
Castillo	1-2	500	0-0	0	0	.4
Putnoky	0-0	.000	0-0	1	1	0
STATISTICS
COMPILED BY
MATTHEW
HERBERT '02
COURTESY OF
ATHLETICS
COMMUNICATION

Come Party at the

ARIZONA CAFE

Outdoor Patio and Fireside Dining

Quesadillas Enchiladas
Chicken Soft Tacos Seafood
Monster Burritos Steaks

Most Meals $9 - $13 No Charge Cards (Checks Accepted)

Bring in this Coupon for 1 FREE virgin margarita with each etree purchased.

From Bucknell:
Take Market St. (Rt. 45).
Cross bridge and stay straight until ends.
Turn Right.
Exactly 4.0 mi on Left.

Open Tues-Thurs 11:30-9, Fri & Sat 11:30-10, Sun 11:30-8
Reservations Recommended

U-SAVE AUTO RENTAL

Low, Low Rates!

*We bill insurance companies direct.

*Major credit cards accepted.

*Must be 21 or older.

Earning the right to serve you each and every time.

524-0000

Rt.15 & Nth 7th St.

Lewisburg, Pa.17837

Mon-Fri 8:00-5:00

Sat. 8:00-12:00

Tuesday is Bucknell Night at Imperial Lanes

Tuesday Nights
2 hour Special for $20
9:30 - 11:30 only

Rent-a-lane for up to 6 people
Call 742-9211 to Schedule
Private Parties
Sorority/Fraternity/Date Parties

Enjoy Rock-n-Bowl with Lane Quake Sound!
Leagues and Open Bowling Available

ON CAMPUS Physical Therapy Clinic

Monday - Friday 9 a.m. - 5 p.m.
Field House Athletic Training Suite

EVANGELICAL
SPORTS MEDICINE CENTER
577-1060

Physician prescription required. Please check insurance policy for restrictions.

who said there are no good [bars] on campus?

The best bars on campus don't serve drinks, they serve their country. You see, when you complete Army ROTC and graduate, you'll be an officer and get a set of gold bars. Register for an Army ROTC class today. Because there's no better buzz than the sense of accomplishment.

ARMY ROTC Unlike any other college course you can take.

Next Week:

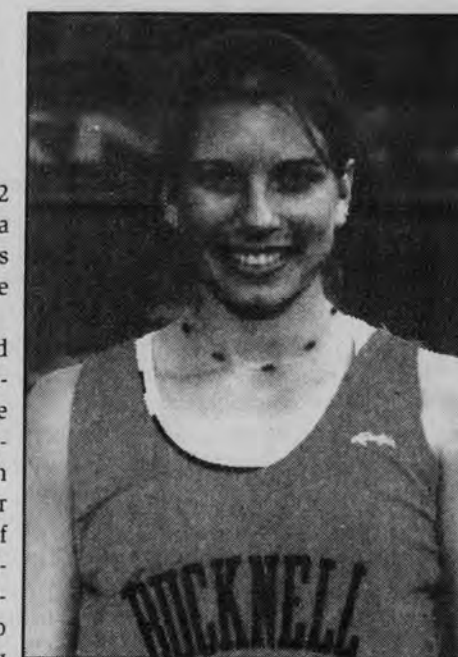

Men's Basketball at Albany
Women's Basketball at Albany
Wrestling-EIWA Championships
Water Polo vs. Salem-Teikyo
Track-IC4A Championships

THE BUCKNELLIAN Sports

Team of the Week:
The men's basketball team, who snapped a six-game Patriot League losing streak with consecutive home victories over League foes Colgate and Lehigh.

Athlete of the Week: Stephanie Bango '02

By CHRISTINE JACOBY
Staff Writer

Courtesy of Athletics Communication
Junior runner Stephanie Bango.

Stephanie Bango '02 was seen confiscating a large amount of gold this past weekend from the Naval Academy. Bango was awarded a total of four gold medals at the Patriot League Championships in Annapolis, winning both the 400- and 800-meter runs with times of 57.07—an ECAC qualifier—and 2:17.77, respectively. Bango was also the winning anchor leg in both the 4x400-meter and the 4x800-meter relays, and her time in the 400-meter run was the best in BU history.

"Overall, I was very pleased with my performance," Bango said. "I knew I was physically prepared for the meet, but I found confidence to be the key element in my success. The strength and encouragement from my friends, family and coaches helped me to have that confidence to win."

Both the men's and women's indoor track and field teams finished second place at the Patriot League Championships. The women finished second, after three previous championships, to Navy, who won its first indoor championship. Bango certainly did her share to guide the Bison to that high finish.

"Stephanie Bango is a true competitor. She is able to rise to any challenge that comes her way," said Assistant Track and Field Coach Joe Klim. "She competes to win. Tough, dedicated, focused and ready to perform is Stephanie Bango."

Women break BU win record

Achieve feat with an 88-60 win over Colgate but then stumble against Lehigh

By ANDREW BEVAN
Senior Writer

Not since the 1995-1996 season has a women's basketball team at Bucknell been as close to breaking the school record for wins in a season as this year's team. That record exists no more as this year's team returned home this past Saturday afternoon to the friendly confines of Davis gymnasium to post an 88-60 victory over Colgate and break the school record for wins with 19.

The Orange and Blue found themselves down by four, 20-16, with just over 10 minutes to play in the first half. Bucknell would reverse the course of the game quickly by exploding on a 30-8 run to take a 46-28 lead into the locker room. Freshman forward Desire Almind led all scorers with 13 points in the first half and the Bison shot 57% from the floor.

"We came out a little slow and looked a little flat at the beginning," Head Coach Kathy Fedorjaka said. "Our defense created our opportunities and got us shots and got us on the run."

"The passing was very, very good, especially in feeding the interior and this team is very, very good at getting good shot selection," Fedorjaka continued.

Bucknell continued its strong play in the second half, opening the frame on a 12-6 run to extend their lead at one point to 24-58-34. The closest the Red Raiders would get over the half would be 15 as the Bison ended the game on a 25-12 swing to win by 28 points. Almind and junior forward Vicki Quimby led all scor-

Courtesy of Athletics Communication
Monique LeBlanc '02 grabbed ten rebounds in Bucknell's 74-67 loss to Lehigh. LeBlanc and the Bison will challenge Albany on Saturday.

ers with 17 points and Quimby added 12 rebounds to record her third consecutive double-double of the season. Molly Creamer and Kate Rounsley scored 14 and 10 points respectively for the Bison.

"It was another strong team effort," Fedorjaka said. "The team is certainly happy with gaining the school record for wins but realizes that there is more work to do. 'It is an amazing accomplishment, one that I am glad to be a part of; however we are not going to stop at that, we have committed ourselves ever since we lost in the championship game last year to get back there and win,' Quimby said."

"Getting the record for most wins is special because it signifies how hard we've worked since the end of last season," junior co-captain Monique LeBlanc said. "We continue to set our goals higher and higher, and this was just one of many we hope to achieve."

The Bison looked to finish their regular season in League play with a victory over the Mountain Hawks of Lehigh on Wednesday night. This game was a battle from the start as both teams answered each other back and forth.

Gradually Lehigh began to pull away and with just over halfway left to play in the opening frame found themselves up by ten. The Bison would close it to two but the Mountain Hawks would keep working to push their advantage to eight, 42-34 at halftime.

Lehigh was a presence on the glass, out-rebounding the Bison by six and gained a lot of their second chance points

See WOMEN, page A6

Women's swimmers take second, men third at Patriots

By CHUCK VICENTE
Staff Writer

The Bucknell men's and women's swim teams excelled in the Patriot League Championship meet this past weekend at Colgate University. The much-anticipated event stretched three days long and gave way to many outstanding performances for the Bison, with the women's squad finishing in second place overall and the men in third.

After one day the Bucknell men and women found themselves in third and first place, respectively. Despite no individual medals, the women took an early team lead because of overall depth.

"The environment was exciting and our depth definitely carried us far," Senior Megan Jones said.

Freshman Daniela Faas continued her fine rookie season with a second place medal in the 500-yard free (5:02.71), while Junior Abby Weaver also swam a great opening day. She grabbed a fourth place finish in the 200-yard IM (2:10.42) and a fifth place in the 50-yard free (24.62).

Weaver joined teammates Darby Golino '03, Barbara Morgan '02 and Molly Lowe '01 to capture a silver medal in the 400-yard medley relay. Their time of 3:57.17 is the fourth best time in Bucknell history.

In the second day of competition, the women's team fell into fourth place behind Lehigh, Army and Navy. Although no individual medals were earned, a new Bucknell record was set in the 800-yard freestyle relay. The team, comprised of Faas, Kriztina Poda '04, Megan Jones '01 and Rebecca Dolan '03 set the new school record with a time of 7:50.16.

The Bison women concluded the third and final day of competition by earning 601 points—enough to edge both Army and Navy for second place. The silver medal performance was their best since 1995. Lehigh took first place honors with 637.5 points.

"We really came together as a team and supported each other. This was one of our biggest strengths," Weaver said. "The men's team also had an exciting tournament, highlighted by record-breaking performances and impressive individual finishes. The men were in third place after the first day, with Lehigh and Army leading.

Chris Neary '02 demonstrated early on why he is regarded as one of the top Patriot League swimmers, when he was first to touch the wall in the 50-yard free. His time of 20.65 was a personal best and third best in Bucknell history.

Neary earned a second gold medal as a part of the 200-free relay team, also consisting of Peter Garvin '04, John Ferriter '01 and Jeff Sharpe '01. The four-some's time of 1:23.14 was a Colgate pool record and the third best time in Bucknell history.

The second day of competition was just another opportunity for Neary to showcase his talents. He grabbed his second individual gold medal in the 50-yard fly with a time of 49.63. The bison men, however, remained in third place in the team scores.

The third and final day of competition held the Bucknell men in third place. The 400-yard free relay team comprised of the fearsome foursome—Neary, Garvin, Sharpe, and Ferriter—won a gold medal.

"It was an exciting meet," Ferriter said. "The energy at Colgate, with such a small deck space, was really high." Neary also had the chance to win a third individual gold, but in the 100-free preliminaries, his goggles pulled away from his face and filled with water. Subsequently, he finished last of the 16 qualifiers.

Despite the setback, Neary came back to win the consolation round finals in 45.45, a faster time than that of the event's final winner.

The men's team had a successful tournament but remained in third place for all three days.

"It was somewhat obvious halfway through the meet that we would end up in third while Army would take first and Lehigh would take second, but it was a successful meet on the whole," Ferriter said.

All in all, the Bucknell swimmers had an exciting weekend. Records were broken and medals won. The men finished third, a position they have held for the past six years, and the women finished second, a position they have not seen since 1995.

Now select members of both teams look forward to competing in the ECAC meet this weekend.

Struggles continue for Bucknell grapplers

By PAT EVANS
Staff Writer

Many times in sports a few small things go the other way, and the result is a lopsided score not indicative of the closeness of the competition. This is exactly what happened when Navy defeated Bucknell Friday 31-8, a score that doesn't reflect the nature of the meet.

Things began well for Bucknell when Josh Perrin '03 dominated his opponent 16-0 at 125 pounds. But the Bison's 5-0 lead was quickly turned around when the Midshipmen won four straight matches. Ryan Fasnacht '01 was able to end the losing streak by winning an 8-4 decision at 165 pounds, closing the lead to 15-8.

It was then that the Orange and Blue had an opportunity to come back and give the tough Navy squad a run for its money. Juniors Ben Chunko and Brian Neuman, two of Bucknell's most consistent wrestlers, were up next and the Bison were optimistic about their chances.

The Midshipmen also had strong

Chris Rivera—The Bucknellian

Brian Falciglia '02 scores points on the mat against his Bloomsburg opponent. Falciglia and the Bison are training for the EIWA Championships on March 3-4.

wrestlers in the 174- and 184-lb. weight classes, where Chunko and Neuman wrestled respectively. It took Navy's wrestlers an overtime to beat the resilient Bison, as each lost 3-1 in decisions.

"Both of them wrestled as hard as they could," Head Coach Tim Wittman said. "They just came up short."

Navy went on to win the final two matches and took the meet, but certainly not without a serious challenge from the Bison. Bucknell understands that the final score doesn't mean everything in terms of how the day went.

"I thought we really prepared ourselves well," Perrin said. "We just wrestled a lot of close matches that could have gone either way, and that made the difference."

Gold escapes Bison track teams at Patriots

By ROSE SEDO
Senior Writer

The Bucknell men's and women's indoor track & field teams finished in second place this past weekend at the Patriot League Championships.

The women, who had won the three previous championships, finished in second to Navy, who won its first indoor conference title. For the seventh straight year the Bucknell men's team also finished in second place, behind Army.

Leading the way for the men was senior Ryan Stairs, who won the 35 lb. weight throw with a toss of 58' 4 1/2". Also earning valuable points for the men were James Hollins '01 and Noel Powell '04 in the long jump, who finished second and third, respectively. Hollins only finished a half inch behind the leader with a jump of 23' 11 3/4". Powell finished behind his teammate with a leap of 23' 8", and now owns the fourth best leap in BU history. Hollins takes over the second best jump on the BU all-time performance charts. The Bucknell men's 4x800 relay team took second place to a strong Army team with a time of 7:40.70.

Brian Klotz '03 was also a bright spot for the men's team, as he moved into fourth all-time in the 400-meter run with a time of 49.76, giving him a fourth-place finish in the event. James Hollins '01 won the triple jump and earned ten points for the men with a leap of 47' 2 1/2".

The highlight of the weekend for the women's team was Stephanie Bango '02 being named the women's track athlete of the meet. Bango was a dual winner in the 400-meter and 800-meter runs. With an ECAC qualifying time of 57.07, Bango won the 400-meter run, and crossed first in the 800-meter in 2:17.77. Her time in the 400-meter run is the second best time in BU history, and she was also the anchor leg in the Patriot League champion 4x400-meter and 4x800-meter relay teams.

The 4x800m relay team of LaTonya McSwain '02, Kelly McConnell '02, Laura Ryan '01 and Bango won the event with the eighth best time in BU history of 9:12.96.

Also breaking into the Bison record books during the final day of competition were Becki Marshall '02 in the mile (5:06.56 - tenth all-time) and freshman Jamie Lilien in the 55-meter hurdles (8.44, third all-time). The women's 4x400-meter relay team had the tenth fastest time on the Bucknell charts at 3:55.16 and the 4x800-meter relay at 9:12.97 is eighth all-time. In the triple jump, junior Andrea Nyce leaped 36' 11 1/2" to move her up to seventh on the Bison all-time charts.

Unfortunately, even with such strong results and performances, there was still some disappointment in the second-place overall finish of the women.

"It was a little surprising, (Navy) really hammered us," Assistant Coach Joe Klim said. "We still had a lot of people perform really well, but they were ready. They were just the better team that day."

The indoor track teams will now have some time off to prepare and train for the ECAC-IC4A Championships to be held in Boston, Mass. on March 3-4.

—Assistant Coach Joe Klim

Sports

The Montreal ... Americans?

Guess what? The Montreal Canadiens were sold a week ago to an American businessman.

While not many Americans care about this monumental event, it is a huge deal in Canada. After all, they are the Montreal Canadiens, not the Montreal Americans or even the New York Canadians. The Canadiens are the second winningest franchise in pro sports and their sale is like the Yankees being bought by the Japanese.

Selling to an American is like selling their soul to the Devil, but unfortunately this seems to be the present and future state of Canadian hockey.

A country with so much passion and love for the game, Canada now only has six teams out of the current 30, down from a third of the teams just eight years ago. The biggest problem that the Canadian teams have to face is increasing salaries and taxes. The Winnipeg Jets and Quebec Nordiques moved to Phoenix and Colorado in the early 1990's, and it is possible that we could see Calgary, Edmonton, or Ottawa move within the next decade.

Taking salaries for granted, Canadian teams are forced to pay outrageous local taxes compared to American teams. Montreal, for example, has to pay $11 million in local taxes just to be able to open the doors of the Molson Center, while at least 14 U.S. cities pay no local taxes at all.

In all, the 24 U.S. franchises pay a total of $5.5 million (Canadian) in local taxes. There is no way that the Canadian teams can overlook this fact. Throw in increasing salaries and the franchises just can't compete. In fact, Vancouver has lost $150 million since 1995, and that figure continues to grow.

While it looks as if four of the Canadian franchises will make the playoffs this year, the chances of seeing the Stanley Cup brought back north are still slim. Ottawa has the best chance, but I really don't see them getting by New Jersey or Philadelphia. The fact that a U.S. city has won every Stanley Cup since 1993 has left a sour taste in the mouths of most Canadians.

But in a way, they only have themselves to thank for the decline of Canadian hockey. The day Wayne Gretzky was traded to the Los Angeles Kings from Edmonton has become the day that hockey in Canada died. With that single move, the NHL turned its focus to warm weather, U.S. cities with money to throw around. Who would have ever guessed that hockey could survive in San Jose, Florida, Carolina, or even Dallas? Hockey is quickly becoming an American sport.

Seeing Canada as an untapped resource, the NBA reversed the NHL's trend and gave two franchises to Canada, an idea that I still have a problem grasping. Lets face it: basketball is purely an American sport. While the Toronto Raptors were incredibly lucky to get Vince Carter, the Vancouver Grizzlies have had nothing go right for them. Since their inception they have won roughly 20 percent of their games and have horrible attendance. The recent news out of Vancouver is that they are going to be sold and moved to the U.S., possibly to New Orleans. I could have told you basketball wasn't going to work in Vancouver, but David Stern apparently didn't receive my memo.

And in baseball, we see the same thing. The Toronto Blue Jays are losing money, and the Montreal Expos are on their last legs. They have a promising team, but they play in a bad stadium and have no television deal. They can't even draw 10,000 fans on a good night and as a result could move to Washington, DC anytime now. Pretty soon what will be Canada's loss will become the U.S.'s gain.

This is just a reminder that sports franchises are businesses and operate to create a profit while trying to be successful at the same time. Teams can no longer compete in small markets and thus are forced to either cut payroll and try to rebuild every year, or to simply move to greener pastures.

Taking the Grizzlies out of Vancouver or the Expos out of Montreal isn't that big of a deal because basketball and baseball are American sports. But hockey is Canadian. Canadian kids don't dream of winning the Super Bowl or the World Series, but of lifting the Stanley Cup some day.

While I am not Canadian, I love the game for what it is: the last of the four sports to have been corrupted by money and economics and I understand just how important hockey is to Canada. Over half of the players in the NHL are Canadian and, as a result, Canada should have some powerful franchises. But without the means, the teams won't be able to compete.

New owner George Gillett says he will not move Les Habitants out of Montreal and that the Maple Leafs are safe because of Toronto's sound economy, but the other four cities could be in trouble. For all the economic success that Alberta is currently having, they can't even help save their hockey teams, which is a little troubling.

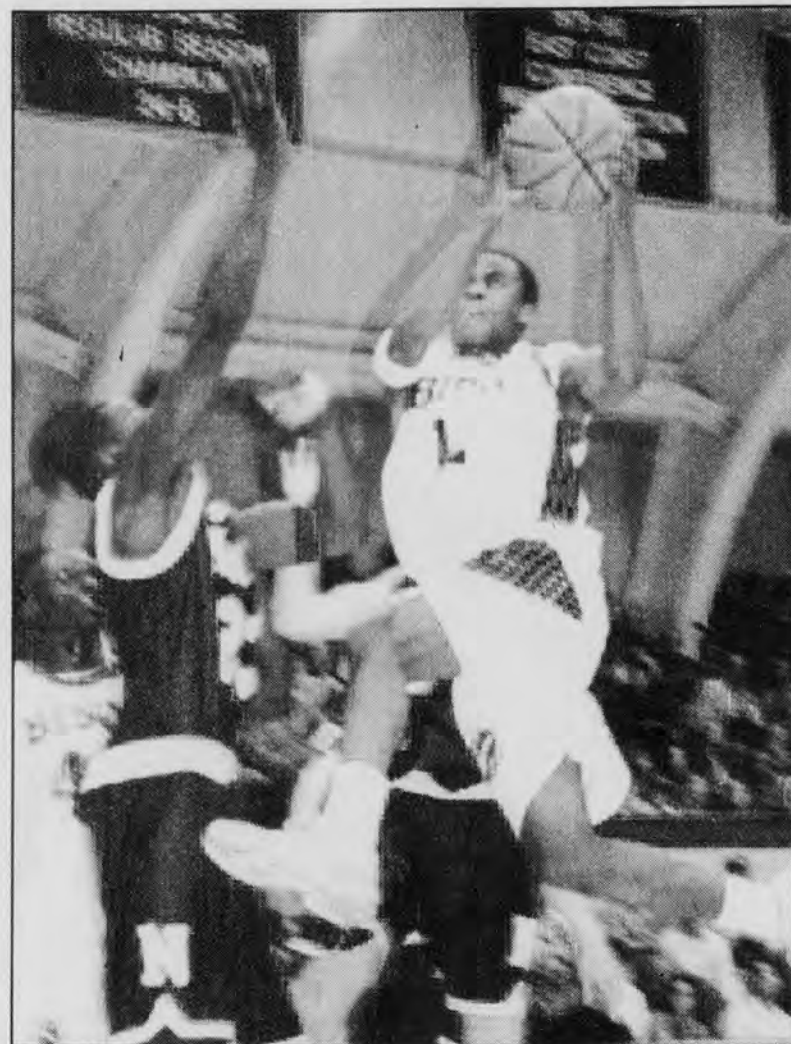

Unless the Canadian government steps in to help the franchises, we will see them move south to cities like Portland, OR and Houston, TX. If that does indeed happen in the future, we may finally see the truth death of hockey in Canada.

Sports Trivia

By Justin McCarthy

- 1) What was the longest winning streak in NCAA men's basketball this season?
- 2) What is the NCAA men's basketball record for most consecutive games with a three-pointer made?
- 3) Who are the only two NBA players to have a career scoring average over 30 points per game?

Miracle shot seals Bison win

Chris Rivera—The Bucknellian

Co-captain Bryan Bailey '02 scored 21 points against Lehigh. Bailey and the Bison will travel to Albany this Saturday for a non-conference tilt at 7:30 p.m.

crowd roared and Bison players and coaches celebrated the impossibility around them.

Finishing off the stunned and bewildered Mountain Hawks in overtime was more of an obligation than a challenge, and the Bison did just that, outscoring Lehigh 9-5 and completing the improbable victory, 82-78.

"I told the coach I could make it [the shot], the crowd was behind us, and it was awesome for everyone," said Werner, the sophomore game-saver.

Werner fouled out early in overtime, but not before he had contributed 23 points in 41 minutes, including the miracle-basket which forced overtime.

"He's [Werner] a little peculiar," said Bison head coach Pat Flannery after the game, "because he takes that shot every day in practice and the whole bench laughs at him. But then they always say he can probably make it."

The Bison started the game dominating Lehigh in all aspects and jumping out to an early 13-3 lead. They led nearly the entire first half of play, although the Mountain Hawks were able to keep the game close with short runs of their own and clutch shooting by forward Matt Logie, who finished the game with 25 points.

Bucknell was not able to hold on to a 38-33 halftime lead though, as Lehigh exchanged leads with the Bison before going ahead 56-55 and eventually stretching its advantage to 69-65 late in the game.

"We hung in there and battled, the kids wanted it real bad and sometimes funny things happen," Flannery said. A clutch 3-pointer by Werner brought the Bison to 70 points, although Lehigh was able to convert on two free-throws to give them 73 points, setting the stage for what was to come next.

"That was the play, we were supposed to throw up a shot from somewhere in the middle," said Bison co-captain Bryan Bailey '03. Bailey finished the game with 21 points in 42 minutes, including six points in overtime.

"The Coach always yells at me when I practice that shot," said Werner with a smile. "He says I should take free-throws instead."

In overtime, Lehigh pulled to within two points at 80-78, but Logie was called on a traveling violation with 21.7 seconds left, forcing the Mountain Hawks to make a foul on the Bison possession. Bailey converted on both of the ensuing free-throws, giving the Bison an 82-78 lead and securing the win.

"I thought we accomplished everything we wanted to tonight," said Flannery. The team committed only 13 turnovers in the contest, a big reason why they were able to stay within striking distance late in the game.

Baikal Lalugha '03, who fouled out of the contest, finished with 13 points, and Dan Blankenship '03 contributed to the win with 11 points and six assists. Additionally, departing senior Mike Seek was part of the on-court winning effort for the first time this season, scoring two points.

For Lehigh, Alan Goff finished with 13 points and Ed Lacayo and Matt Crawford each had 12 points to go along with Logie's 25 points.

Things had begun to turn around for the slumping Bison Sunday as they defeated Colgate 71-60, thereby ending a six game losing streak. With the victory, Flannery earned his 200th career victory as a head coach.

"These kids are resilient and it's nice to see them smiling again," commented Flannery. "It's good to come in here and get a win against a team like Colgate."

Ironically, the string of six defeats the Bison have endured began with a last-minute 63-62 loss at the hands of Colgate Jan. 24. A big reason for the Bi-

See BASKETBALL, page A6

By ANDREW BURR
Sports Layout Editor

was about to behold.

It may have been a wrenching, see-saw battle for 40 minutes between the Bison (12-14, 4-8) and Lehigh (2-14, 6-5), but nothing could have prepared Davis Gymnasium for the spectacle it

Skiing qualifies for Regionals

By CARA FISHER
Contributing Writer

For the first time in five years, both the Bucknell men's and women's ski teams have qualified for the Mid-Atlantic Regional Championship meet. The meet takes place this weekend in Snowshoe, West Virginia.

An exciting and thrilling accomplishment, qualifying for Regionals requires finishing in the top four of nine teams in the Allegheny conference. The team will compete against other collegiate teams ranging in location from Maine to South Carolina for a chance to go to the National Championship meet in Bogus Basin, Idaho.

Everyone on the team is excited at the high level of competition they will face at the regional race. "Regionals is probably one of the best meets," Megan McDonald '02 said. "There is great competition and we get to ski against teams that we haven't competed against during the regular season."

Besides possibly being the last race for the seniors, Regionals presents the perfect opportunity for the ski team to challenge themselves, stretch their abilities to a higher level and, most importantly, have fun at the same time.

All nine teams in Bucknell's Allegheny conference, including Penn State, Navy, Villanova, University of Maryland and University of Pennsylvania, meet each weekend at a designated mountain to compete in slalom events on Saturday and giant slalom events on Sunday.

The Bucknell team is divided into the fixed A team, which is comprised of experienced racers, and the B team, a rotated group of skiers who are learning how to race.

"We've got some talented freshmen and sophomore skiers, who have proven their ability and willingness to improve," Danny Mitchell '02 said. "We've had a great season, and I think

Courtesy of Wisp Mountain

Bryan Foster '01 has helped guide the men's skiing team into Regionals.

"We'll be strong in the upcoming years."

Everyone usually races both days, but only the A-team's scores determine who qualifies for the Regional meet at the end of the season.

Although Penn State consistently dominates each meet due to their size and varsity team status, Bucknell profits from every opportunity to ski against challenging and skillful competitors.

Not only do the teams have the chance to travel to several different ski resorts in the area, but each weekend also presents an occasion to develop ongoing relationships with team members from other schools.

"The ski team represents the perfect combination between a competitive challenge and a relaxed atmosphere," President Steph Swor '01 said.

The incredible camaraderie that exists between the members of the Bucknell team and the members of opposing ski teams contributes an unusual aspect to this sport.

"The other teams look to us to create a fun, comfortable environment where everyone can hang out and participate and get to know each other," Kevin Mueller '03 said. "Bucknell is especially good at bringing the different teams together."

Even though the team likes to have a good time, they remain a dedicated bunch of athletes. When the day of the meet arrives, they are out on the slopes early in the morning to compete against the clock and the conditions.

Standouts for the Bison include young as well as old. Freshman Lincoln Porter fared extremely well this year, as did Mueller, who earned all-conference honors by finishing in the top ten for the conference.

In addition to Mueller, Karen Goat, '01, and Megan MacDonald, '02, earned all-conference honors for the women's team.

In what is a time-consuming and sometimes exhausting schedule, the team practices every Wednesday at Penn State's hill, Tussey Mountain, then spends Thursday night tuning their skis and preparing for the weekend's competition. They depart Friday afternoon and return to campus Sunday night.

Even in the off-season, the team gathers together to practices and encourage team unity but they always find a way to balance work with play.

"We like to leave the 'skiing' in skiing and not get all wrapped up in the technicalities of racing," senior Adam Sgenci said. "We're not hardcore racers, but we get to race against top-notch varsity teams and hold our own, even though we're a small team without a coach."

Demonstrating their success on and off the mountain, the Bucknell women finished third overall in the conference, behind Penn State and Navy, while the men finished fourth behind Penn State, University of Maryland and Navy.

A quote from ski team alumnus Mike Lewis, '00 that appears on the ski team's web site, perfectly encapsulates the team's goals and aspirations: "Membership is open to anyone who can strap on two boards and get down the hill, no prior race experience is necessary. Everyone who joins our team is immediately welcomed into a family that has been maintained for over 30 years. Not only will you have the time of your life skiing with us, but you will experience an aspect of Bucknell that is not attainable elsewhere."

With enthusiasm, experience and determination, the Bison are guaranteed to represent Bucknell with style and skill in this weekend's events.

Bison Calendar

WOMEN'S BASKETBALL
Sat., Feb. 24 at Albany
5:30 p.m.

MEN'S BASKETBALL
Sat., Feb. 24 at Albany
7:30 p.m.

MEN'S & WOMEN'S SWIMMING
Feb. 24-25
at ECAC Championships

WATER POLO
Home Invitational Sat., Sun., Feb. 24-25
Saturday: 10:20 a.m. vs. Grove City
2:20 p.m. vs. Slippery Rock
7:40 vs. Salem International Sunday: 2 p.m. vs. Cumberland Valley

THE Bucknellian

SECTION B

February 23, 2001

Weekend Weather

Weather courtesy of weather.com

Hi: 42
Low: 21
FRIDAY

Hi: 39
Low: 26
SATURDAY

Hi: 47
Low: 29
SUNDAY

Selin's Grove Brewing Co. serious about its suds

By PETER VAN EMBURGH AND NATALIE CASP
Editor-in-Chief and News Editor

Nestled in the basement of a historical colonial mansion, the Selin's Grove Brewing Company incorporates its charming history into a broad selection of handcrafted ales and lagers brewed and served on site. Built in 1816, the quaint pub, located on Market St. in downtown Selingsgrove, offers not only ten beers on tap, but also a tasty, light-fare menu.

A lush "beer garden" and ivy covered trellis introduces the quaint atmosphere inside the lower-level tavern. Upon entering, the low-lying wooden rafters merge into the brick floor. Lanterns illuminate the antique wooden furniture, creating a dim and intimate atmosphere. The owners have clearly captivated the look of an old-fashioned tavern.

Those under 21 will need to bring a parent or guardian as ID is taken at the door, however. With limited hours of operation, Wednesday and Thursday (4 p.m. to 11 p.m.) and Friday and Saturday (12 p.m. to 12 a.m.), the Brewing Company's friendly staff accommodates a mass of patrons, even with a limited seating capacity. A larger, modern environment would undoubtedly ruin the carefully constructed scene from the past.

In addition to the comfortable atmosphere conducive to tranquil socializing, the Brewing Company offers a wide array of tasty homemade brews. To exercise our undeducated beer-tasting palates, we sampled a tray of the nine beers on tap in reduced sized four-ounce glasses. The brews ranged from 4.5 percent to 7.8 percent alcohol by volume.

Captain Selin's Cream Ale, light and smooth, is sweet and easy to drink steadily, but in moderation.

Golden in color, the hopped cream ale has a true American style, according to the Selin's Grove beer menu.

Saison, the Brewing Company's Belgian-style ale, has a spicy, distinctly different flavor. The first sip of Saison distracted us both: the intense flavor was initially a bit harsh, but the fruity aftertaste eliminated a lingering aversion. Saison incorporates orange, coriander and hops into the tangy wheat malt.

An appealing beer, Fireside Brown goes down easy. The rich and creamy beer is made with Fuggles, a type of U.S. hop, to create a fresh aroma. Fireside Brown, however, is not recommended for purchase in one of the Brewing Company's draft-to-go 1/2 gallon "growlers" because of its excessively foamy

See BREWERY, page B5

RIGHT: Entrance to the Selin's Grove Brewing Co.

BOTTOM: View from Market Street in Selingsgrove

Peter Van Emburgh—The Bucknellian

Hannibal takes a big bite in its first two weeks

Courtesy of hannibal.com

See page B7

Clinton's pardon of fugitive financier creates scandal

Forgiving Marc Rich could lead the ex-president into yet another mess, writes Amanda Kaufman

Marc Rich was indicted in 1983 in the United States on charges of fraud, engaging in illegal oil deals with Iran and evading more than $48 million in taxes. Rich, one of the world's most-wanted fugitives, renounced his U.S. citizenship after fleeing to Switzerland that same year. However, former President Clinton granted an eleven-hour pardon to the fugitive billionaire.

A House committee investigating the controversial pardon has subpoenaed three former White House staffers to testify about the matter. The committee, chaired by Indiana Republican Dan Burton, expects to hear from Beth Nolan White House counsel during the final days of the Clinton administration; Bruce Lindsey, deputy White House counsel; and a Clinton confidant; John Podesta, former White House chief of staff; and Jack Quinn, attorney for Marc Rich.

The Senate Judiciary Committee also is investigating Rich. The connection that has raised so many suspicions is that Denise Rich, Marc Rich's ex-wife, has been a major financial contributor to the Democratic National Committee (DNC) and to the Clinton library and is a close personal friend of Bill Clinton's. Denise Rich contributed an estimated $450,000 to the Clinton Presidential Library Fund, and according to the Federal Election Commission, more than $1.1 million to the Democratic Party and at least $109,000 to Hillary Rodham Clinton's Senate campaign.

In addition to political contributions, Ms. Rich gave $10,000 to the Clinton legal defense fund. She also gave the Clintons two end tables and chairs worth over $7,300. She gave President Clinton a saxophone. However, Ms. Rich was more than just a name on a check. She is reported to have made more than one hundred visits to the White House.

In considering the Rich pardon, Clinton did not consult the Justice Department pardon officers, as is normal procedure, but he did confer with the DNC's finance chairman—again fueling suspicions that the pardon was a quid pro quo for campaign contributions and personal gifts.

On Feb. 8, in the course of its first hearing on the Rich pardon, the House Government Reform

See PARDON, page B4

FORUM

EDITORIAL

Standardized testing necessary though improvement needed

The president of the University of California's state school system proposed to the Board of Regents and the faculty senate to eliminate the Scholastic Aptitude Test (SAT) from their admissions processes. The potential move will most likely launch a national dialogue among higher education institutions regarding the value and accuracy of this standardized test used in recruiting high school seniors.

After abandoning their affirmative action policies, the California schools underwent years of thorough examination to establish a better procedure for evaluating minority students, who traditionally score lower than white students on the SATs. The faculty and UC President Richard C. Atkinson feel that subject-specific testing is a better measure of a student's potential in a university environment.

While many may see California's move as radical, numerous institutions have already begun to deprecate the weight given to SAT scores. Instead, they look more closely at an applicant's overall high school performance-extracurricular activities, grade point average (GPA)-as well as essays, interviews and recommendations.

In an effort to reform national education standards, President George W. Bush will suggest offering "exit testing" for high school juniors and seniors, which will evaluate the student's knowledge of literature, mathematics, science and American history. Many education experts see this as a feasible, unbiased alternative.

The SAT-II's offer the sort of subject-specific testing that many experts believe most precisely measure an applicant's success within his or her high school's curriculum. The test has also proven to be a less "culturally biased" form of evaluation, giving students the chance to perform well in their chosen subjects of interest.

Atkinson fully intends to keep this test among the UC system's top admissions criteria, and also believes that a new form of standardized testing must be introduced. While he may be pulling for exit tests, it is not likely that they will be available in time to replace the SAT.

This uncertainty makes UC's decision seem too drastic, and rightfully so. The Bucknellian recognizes the necessity for some sort of standardized testing, but does not necessarily feel that the status quo is acceptable.

A level playing field must be established without ignoring the monumental differences in our nation's high school curricula. Upper income communities inevitably attract better teachers and receive generous funding while lower income areas suffer.

Underprivileged students statistically score lower on standardized tests than students attending schools in wealthier districts. A new format, like exit testing, may help to alleviate some of these educational inequities. Furthermore, without the SAT, a student's comprehensive strengths become more evident.

But, inevitably, inequities will always exist. We applaud California's decision, but only because it may help solve the problems created by the state's broad range of applicants, especially for minority students. The Bucknellian feels that the elimination of the SAT should be utilized by other states or systems on an as-needed basis-the diversity of applicants dictates whether a university can disregard the SAT.

Nonetheless, developing an across-the-board standard of evaluation is necessary. The SAT clearly does not function as a fair mode of assessment, and while a completely unbiased examination cannot exist, a more appropriate measure can and must be created.

bucknellian@bucknell.edu

Editors-in-Chief
Rebecca Rowland '02
Peter Van Emburgh '02

Managing Editor
Jim Leahy '03

Senior Editors
Matt Albert '01
Heather Napolitano '01
Matt Trunnell '01
Brian Watson '01

Business Manager
Mark Langer '02

News Editors
Laura Day '03
Natalie Casp '02
Rachel Laskow '03

Business and Politics Editor
Michael Boland '03
Maureen Oscadal '03

Forum Editor
Peter John '03
Peter Hackeman '04

Features Editors
Sandi-Jo Galati '04
Jolene Hart '03
Jason Rubinstein '04

Arts and Entertainment Editor
Krista Reisdorf '02
Kristi Johnston '03

Locking Horns

For $20, will Questia help students cheat?

Yes

No

By REBECCA ROWLAND
Editor-in-Chief

It has long been taboo and, in fact, illegal to use term paper services. Issues of plagiarism and forgery aside, it is academically unethical. Where, then, does Questia, a research service come in?

For $20 (ok, $19.95) a month, you are given unlimited access to Questia's research database. Any subject—any amount of information on that subject—will be researched by Questia and then presented to you with parenthetical citations. Sounds good huh?

Well, one of the most effective forms of studying is actually writing down information. When you search for books, read them looking for pertinent information and then work the quotes into your own paper you are ingesting the information (important information since you were assigned a paper on it) into your head. This knowledge can then be called upon by you at any point in time—to back up an argument, to use on the final, to impress people at parties.

This is the value of a liberal arts education; you learn a little about everything in order to make yourself a well-rounded educated person. By subscribing to Questia you are cheating yourself out of your $30,000 a year education (and adding $20 a month in extra fees).

Questia makes writing papers a mathematical process. You cannot use the "plug and chug" method as my eighth-grade algebra teacher used to call it when you write a paper. Its not what you find so much as the process of finding it.

When someone else does your research you are not cheating in the technical sense of the word—you could not get in trouble for plagiarism nor could you get in trouble for forgery. The cheating that you are doing is cheating yourself out of a good education.

This may be a sorry reason but I used Questia to research this article and that's all I came up with.

By JIM LEAHY
Managing Editor

The Bucknellian has recently run advertisements for a new company that promises to help you with your research provided you pay for their service. Questia, the heavily publicized, newly formed company claims to reduce the necessary time to do the boring task of research. Is this such a problem? I think not!

While I do not necessarily believe paying twenty dollars a month for something I can get free by logging on to Resnet or going down to the library which is a two minute walk from my room, what is the problem with doing so? They are not giving us exact portions of the text to use in our papers or even letting us plagiarize. We are just getting a simplified search of over 50,000 works.

They also are helping us compile our list of citations, something that takes an incredible amount of time to do with a lengthy research paper. If professors want us to provide these lists, what is the crime in getting it right.

Questia is also a very legitimate company, something many people have been asking since they launched their website. They raised over $150 million in venture capital to finance their initial operation. They have 300 employees in three cities. And, most importantly, they have a very impressive list of backers.

Many university press organizations and other school groups have signed on to not only give Questia their support but also to enable their publications to appear on the service which would gain them a larger audience.

Questia does not take the place of a trip to the Bertrand Library to browse the racks or a search of Lexis-Nexis or First Search (two things which the University provides for us free even though they cost thousands). However, it has to make our busy lives as students a little easier and less stressful.

Reality beginning to set in for second semester senior

By ALLYSON DEMERATH
Senior Writer

I'm a second semester senior. No matter how many times I say it, the novelty never seems to wear off. I admit I approached this semester with the infamous "seniorious" attitude. I wasn't exactly the motivated student I used to be. I honestly have probably spent as much time in the library this entire semester as I would have in one week of freshman year. Once you have a job, it's really hard to stay motivated. This is not to say that I don't care about learning or that I want to waste $15,000 of my parents' money, but it's the second semester of my senior year!

I am actually starting to see things in a different light. This is because I finally hit me that in a few short months I will be out in the real world (not this nice little bubble), supporting myself and working all hours of the day and night. Right now, it's very hard for me to even imagine it. I would argue that it can be very easy for University students (myself most definitely included) to forget that a world exists beyond our bubble. However, it does, and not everyone in it drives a Beamer.

Let me give you an example. Last week, I was in my 11a.m. class, my earliest class of the day, when the professor dimmed the lights and turned on a movie. Wonderful! I'm thinking to myself that I can zone out and catch up on an extra hour of sleep, but I didn't. As much as I would have liked to go on autopilot for the rest of the class, I was truly interested in the movie's material.

It was about a child psychologist and his interactions with children. He worked extensively with six families. During interviews with these children, they talked about what they wanted to be when they grew up. For some kids, it was important just to make it through high school without getting caught up in drugs or gangs. As I watched the film, I almost lost myself in it. I was completely enraptured by what these children were saying and how they were describing their lives.

By going abroad for part of my junior year, I really began to expand my horizons in ways that could never have happened at the University or even in this country. My outlook has been changing ever since that time. It took me until second semester of my senior year to really think about some of the things I have been learning.

As a freshman or even sophomore, I would have been more concerned with whether or not there was a test on the material covered in the film. I would have been so caught up in other things; the film would not have even fazed me. After all, it was just a film, and it's not like people like that actually exist, at least not here. When I walked out of the classroom, I was instantaneously surrounded by wealthy, intelligent and motivated people who have enormous potential.

I had two choices: I could leave the contents of the film behind and never give it a second thought or I could reflect for a minute on the opportunities I have been given and what I have done with them.

At the University, it's easy to do the former. As a homogeneous campus, students can lose themselves in the bubble. We don't think about people from different backgrounds because often we aren't exposed to them, or we ignore them because they aren't like us. At least, we don't think they are.

I appreciate that expanding one's horizons is a slow process. It took me four years just to start to learn how, and I'm at the tip of the iceberg. Even if it takes you until your senior year or even after that to start thinking critically about the world around you, make sure you at least try it. The revelations you have will change your life. I know this little bubble isn't the best place to do it, but try. Imagine a world where everyone is not exactly like you.

THE BUCKNELLIAN

Founded in 1896 as The Blue and Orange

Volume 127, Number 5
C-3952 BUCKNELL UNIVERSITY
LEWISBURG, PENNSYLVANIA, 17837
(570)-577-1520

BUCKNELLIAN@BUCKNELL.EDU
HTTP://WWW.ORG.BUCKNELL.EDU/BUCKNELLIAN

EDITORIAL POLICY

The editorials of The Bucknellian reflect the consensus of the Editorial Board as to the topics and general position. If a consensus could not be reached, the opinions expressed are those of the Editors-in-Chief. All other opinion material represents the views of the author and not necessarily those of The Bucknellian.

PUBLISHING POLICY

The Bucknellian is written, edited and published on 12 Fridays during each academic semester entirely by Bucknell students. The Bucknellian's fiscal affairs are overseen by an Advisory Board comprised of faculty, staff and administrators. All published material is chosen by the paper's editorial board without prior review by the Advisory Board, its adviser, the University or Bucknell Student Government.

SUBSCRIPTIONS POLICY

Subscriptions are available $45 per year and $30 per semester. To subscribe, send payment and address information to: The Bucknellian Subscriptions, Box C-3952, Lewisburg, PA 17837. Subscriptions are mailed first-class on the Monday of publication. Please send change-of-address information to the above location as well.

ADVERTISING POLICY

The Editorial Board of The Bucknellian reserves the right to deny any advertisements if offensive, illegal or in bad taste. For advertising rates, please contact the advertising managers at (570) 577-1085.

Copyright 2001 The Bucknellian

Science and Technology Editors
Lynne Waldman '01
Josiana Cetta '04

Sports Editors
Carmen Mauriello '02
Brooke Rea '02
Andrew Burr '04

Sports Statistician
Matthew Herbert '02

Darkroom Manager
Chris Rivera '02

Photo Editors
Paige Cull '01
Chris Rivera '02

Local Advertising Representative
Bryan Prins '04
National Advertising Representative
Amy Peloquin '03

Online Editors
Eric Fair '01
Brendan Putnam '03
Circulation Manager
Brian Klotz '03

Head Copy Editors
Kim Luedde '01
Debbie Ruggieri '01

Production Manager
Nick Olson '02

Adviser
James F. Lee

FORUM

Who will think of the children?

Napster provided music without the media controls

By DAVID MCGREEVY
Staff Writer

In a way, University students are lucky. The impending demise of Napster, which is starting to look pretty inevitable, will have essentially no effect on us; we've been making do without the beloved program for over a year now. I'd like to believe that the University's exile from the file-sharing masses hasn't significantly reduced our quality of life.

There are a number of good substitutes available, some of which are actually superior to Napster, and no one can take away man's inalienable right to tape songs from the radio.

In the final analysis, any ruling, whether it comes from a U.S. Circuit Court or a smallish northeastern university that makes it more difficult to hear the latest Kid Rock single, is one I can enthusiastically support.

I worry about the kids, though. This is a tough time to grow up, with school violence, the disintegration of the traditional family and the recent retirement of Mr. Rogers.

If it becomes any more difficult to get free music on the Internet and the only place the children can turn to is MTV or, heaven forbid, Top 40 radio, we can probably forget about the younger generation ever amounting to anything.

But first, a few cautionary words: I suspect that Napster, Gnutella, and other programs like them probably are illegal, or should be. Clearly, the creator of a song "owns" that song (or, more likely, their record company does, but to protect my idealism I'm going to try and ignore that distinction) and, as the owner of the song, is entitled to compensation.

The ethical musician is in a bit of a quandary here, however. Even rock stars need devotion were as important a part of the pop music scene as lukewarm turntable effects are now.

If you wanted to be "with it," it was vitally important that you denounce MTV and "sellouts" of all sorts at every possible opportunity. People were even making fun of MTV on MTV, which is pretty strange if you think about it.

I worry that the young kids, growing up in a world where their pop heroes express profound gratitude and respect for radio DJs and MTV award shows, will never realize that there is more to music than that.

That beyond the festering wasteland of bad pop music lies a vast and only barely hidden realm of good pop music. You won't discover the Jeff Buckley, the P.J. Harveys, or the Tom Waitses of the world on the Top 10, and even a good record store isn't much help - $15 is a lot to shell out to take a chance on an album by a band you've never heard.

Without Napster and its imitators, there would be no way to sample the wide array of eccentric, confusing, diverse and infinitely great music being made every day without spending oneself into bankruptcy.

We need free music on the Internet so that future generations (and ourselves, for that matter) can be exposed to the wonders that lie beyond the Billboard charts. Even Metallica would have to agree with that.

Equal tax relief for everyone?

By JOSH GUYAN
Senior Writer

President Bush has begun his term during an extremely accommodating environment for tax cuts. All the pieces needed for a big tax cut are seemingly falling into place just before he sends his plan to the Hill.

Recent projections for the surplus over the next decade were bumped up to $5 trillion. A mounting recession was evidenced by just over one percent growth last quarter. Last, but far from least, Federal Reserve Chairman Alan Greenspan recently gave qualified consent for a surplus-reducing initiative, basically a tax cut.

The Bush plan includes several cuts. First, the estate tax would be eliminated. This already holds bipartisan support because the wealthy hire accountants and lawyers to get them around these taxes anyway and the only ones who are hurt by it are small businesses and farms. One of President Clinton's big mistakes in his last few months in office was vetoing the congressional attempt to eliminate this tax.

Second, the plan seriously reduces the marriage penalty. Again, this proposal has broad bipartisan support, as well as it should. In terms of justice, there should be no tax penalty for two people to get married.

Third, the Bush proposal would restructure the marginal income tax scheme. Currently, our income tax system consists of five brackets. The Bush plan would consist of four brackets. The greatest percentage reduction is for the top bracket from 39.6% to 33%.

Fourth, Bush would raise the child tax credit and lastly, he would expand the annual cap on contributions to education savings accounts. These are both good proposals, but a small part of the total cut.

There are several current and potential problems with the Bush tax cut proposal. The biggest potential problem is that much of the surplus won't materialize.

some consideration.

The other major potential problem is the tax cut frenzy that often occurs on Capitol Hill as individual Republicans and Democrats try to write in cuts for their favorite contributors or constituents. This is what happened during the first Reagan tax cut in 1981 and it led to a bigger cut than the White House sent to Congress.

That, essentially was a big part of the fiscal irresponsibility kind of economic and social system we want.

The United States has the most unequal distribution of wealth of any Western, industrialized democracy (Western Europe, more specifically).

We also have the highest poverty rate, although it has been going down in the last few years. In a recent year the top one percent in our economy got 7 percent of the income and had 38.5 percent of the net worth. The top 10 percent received 27.9 percent of the income, and owned an astounding 72 percent of net worth.

The Bush tax cut gives 43 percent of the relief to the top one percent. It gives half of the cut to the top 5 percent of income earners. Essentially, not only would the Bush tax relief plan not help to address income and wealth inequality, it would actually make the problem worse.

Income and wealth inequality rose steadily since the early 1970s until 1996. Some of the greatest increases in inequality took place during the 1980s, some say due in part to the 1981 Reagan tax cut which also gave most of the relief to the wealthiest Americans.

President Bush has an excellent chance of getting most of his tax plan through both houses of Congress. This is mostly because a sizable tax cut is a good idea right now. Hopefully, Congressional Democrats will spend their energy and political clout trying to make the cut more consistent with distributive justice rather than adding their own cuts for their favorite groups.

Iraqi strikes are questionable

By GRETCHEN SCHROCK
Opinions Columnist

Following the defeat of Iraq in the Persian Gulf War, the senior aides to former President George Bush predicted that their favorite rogue dictator Saddam Hussein would be ousted from power in a matter of six months. If one has been even remotely aware of international events of the past decade, one would realize that that prediction never materialized despite the continual bombings and economic sanctions placed on Iraq during the Clinton administration.

Since Bush Sr. could not accomplish the feat of deposing a man likened to a modern version of Hitler and since the attempts of his unworthy successor to the presidential crown were unfruitful as well, the task has been bestowed upon the shoulders of Bush Jr. The question is whether he will walk the same foreign policy ground as his two predecessors. After Bush's recent actions toward Iraq, it is apparent that nothing has changed. Bomb, bomb, and then bomb some more, while praying that something will change for the better.

Last Friday, the Americans, along with their British allies, authorized air strikes against radar installations and anti-defense sites near Baghdad in an effort to protect the pilots that patrol the no-fly zone over northern and southern Iraq. In addition, the Bush administration wanted to send the message to the Iraqi government and most importantly, to its arch-nemesis Saddam Hussein, that they are determined to maintain adequate pressure upon Iraq. Of course, the pressure that they are planning on applying is the same amount that the Clinton administration applied and everyone can witness the effectiveness of that effort.

Saddam is still wielding unbelievable control over the Iraqi people with no sign of being ousted by his opposition. While some may argue that economic sanctions can be more strictly enforced, the opposition to harsher economic conditions upon the Iraqis is growing, not only among the Middle Eastern states, but also among the French, Russians, and numerous Asian countries. The Americans may perceive a roughish dictatorship with Satan at its helm, but other countries see a potential business market where Sony televisions and Renault cars could be sold on every Baghdad block.

The rest of the world is yelling to the Bush administration to get rid of their Cold War mentality. They want the Americans to realize that international economic dynamics and globalization will loosen the grip of Saddam Hussein more quickly than denying the Iraqi people of basic foodstuffs and then bombing their homes, claiming the American military commanders were really aiming for some military installation.

With a foreign policy of sanctions and bombing that only affect the common people of Iraq and not the governmental elites, is it still inconceivable to imagine why Iraqis flock to Saddam? He is promising the preservation of their dignity, pride and independence from the ruthless West, which is supposedly out to destroy their way of life and forcefully impose their democratic values and beliefs upon them. Of course, Washington is not doing much to alter this image. Bomb, bomb, and bomb. Starve and deprive.

I am not asserting that Saddam has not committed terrible atrocities and should not reap the consequences of such actions. It is undeniable that he has committed crimes against the Kurds in northern Iraq and the Shiites in southern Iraq, while denying basic human rights to all Iraqis and building weapons of mass destruction that threaten the stability of the entire world. However, the U.S. is equally guilty when its missiles kill and maim innocent civilians who have no effect on the governmental discourse or actions in Baghdad. The U.S. government is equally criminal when it consciously denies food, medicine and other essentials to the Iraqi people for fear that those items will privilege only the wealthy and powerful in the government. Furthermore, how can the American government claim that the legitimate Iraqi government is inherently evil for building chemical, biological and nuclear weapons when our own government maintains thousands of nuclear warheads? Does this comparison seem like a double standard?

British Prime Minister Tony Blair said, according to the New York Times, "Operations such as the one last night would not be needed if Saddam stopped attacking us. But as long as he does, I will continue to take the steps necessary to protect our forces and to prevent Saddam from once again wreaking havoc, suffering, and death." What about the havoc, suffering and death wreaked by the American and British bombings? Who is going to protect the innocent Iraqis? The answer: no one.

Be opinionated.
Write for Opinions.
Email April at ajohn@bucknell.edu
to help out.
Thanks

BUSINESS & POLITICS

2000 presidential candidate and longtime activist Ralph Nader will speak at the Weis Center on Feb. 28.

Nader's message sounds familiar

By MICHAEL BOLAND
Business and Politics Editor

Strike up the band—Ralph Nader's coming to Bucknell! The consumer advocate and recent presidential candidate will venture to the Land of Frozen Hair Gel to speak on one of his favorite topics, "World Trade and Globalization."

I should mention from the outset that Ralph Nader is not one of my favorite politicians. Though slightly less clever, he reminds me of the Grinch. He's Green, he's eternally dour about the same silly subject, and he stole Al Gore's Christmas by siphoning just enough left-wing votes to give George W. the presidency (and don't get me wrong; I'm glad he did). But I digress.

Without even hearing his speech, we should have a rough idea of what he is going to say: he'll complain about the two-party system, big business, stuff like that; all well and good. A lot of people are looking forward to I'm cool with that, by even go; it's ex- of my classes. If the University Race/Gender Re-few other departments) wants to invite Comrade Nader to come speak, fine with me. But I would argue that on the whole, the people in charge of such things could probably do a better job achieving a political balance in selecting political speakers. Take a look at the biggest names the University has hosted in the last year or two, and see if you notice a trend.

Dr. Manning Marable was here earlier this month, courtesy of Multicultural Affairs; he detailed "The Plight of African-Americans in the 21st Century." Dr. Marable is a brilliant man and a respected scholar but he is also significantly left-of-center. This is fine—his political views should not make him ineligible to speak. But you can add to that radical historian Howard Zinn's talk at the Weis Center last semester, sponsored by the Bucknell Student Lectureship Committee, and scientist/philosopher Richard Dawkins' lecture last year.

Nader, Marable, Zinn, Dawkins... an impressive group of thinkers, to be sure. Certainly, each has a strongly held point of view that's worth hearing—but I just wonder if things could be a little more balanced. All of these speakers are pretty liberal. The list of notable conservative speakers appearing at the University is a bit lacking; in fact, I don't know if there have been any.

Such imbalance only supports what us right-wingers have been whining about for years—the apparent predominance of liberal thinking in academic circles. That's certainly not the University's fault, but let's be honest, this isn't Berkeley. There are a considerable number of conservative students here. The student body would be well served by complementing (not replacing) the Marables and Zinns with equally well-regarded thinkers from the right.

Why not a presentation by Ward Connerly on the problems with affirmative action, or Steve Forbes on the virtues of a flat tax? Neither is so busy so as to be unattainable, and by virtue of their celebrity, an appearance here would make the University look very good. Most importantly, we'd all get to hear something different.

Of course, all students would be welcome, not just conservatives. The point, as with any guest speaker, is not to appease ideological students by bringing in sympathetic voices, but to benefit the entire student body by discussing issues and stimulating political dialogue. Certainly that's all anyone is after; even, I'm sure, the people doing the scheduling now.

Conservative speakers are out there, we just have to work harder at bringing them in. Meanwhile, I'll see you all on Wednesday. I'll be the quiet kid in back with the Bush/Cheney button.

ARE YOU?

- Democrat?
- Republican?
- ?????????

B&P wants you! Email mboland@. No offense to all you ?'s out there.

JPM a force in the new economy

Once a family owned business, JPM is now a multinational corporation, writes Staff Writer Michael Gorman

Ask most University students about the town of Lewisburg, and the phrase "home to a multinational corporation" will probably not be the first thing out of their mouths. However, as the home to JPM corporate offices, Lewisburg is exactly that.

Founded by Bucknell alumnus and Lewisburg resident Jay P. Mathias, JPM has grown from a family business operating out of the Mathias family's house to a multinational corporation listed on the NASDAQ exchange. The company currently operates plants and/or offices in Pennsylvania, California, the Czech Republic, Mexico, Germany and Singapore, and has received numerous accolades for its growth and performance.

Mathias started JPM in his mother's house with relatives who were more than willing to assist in his new venture. JPM received its first contract to manufacture cable leads from RCA in 1949 for $187,000.

Over the next few years, the business quickly outgrew the family home as well as the family labor supply, with demand for cable assemblies and technologies increasing exponentially.

The company prospered in the small town of Lewisburg, reaching $4 million in sales in 1966. Remarkably clairvoyant, Mathias chose to diversify the operations of JPM by becoming a major supplier for IBM in the budding computer industry.

In 1968, Mathias and his brothers (partners in the firm) elected to sell the company to Harvard Industries, with the understanding that they would stay on to run the company. However, when Harvard Industries failed and was forced to file for bankruptcy five years later, Mathias bought back JPM and the company returned to family ownership.

By 1980, the company had annual sales in excess of $8.5 million, and was beginning a major expansion with a new plant in South Carolina. Unfortunately, Mathias never lived to see its completion. The founder of JPM passed away on Sept. 17, 1981.

While the company has always been a success, its greatest days were undoubtedly the 1990s. Pursuing a strategy of growth through acquisition, JPM purchased controlling interests in several international competitors, including Electronica Pantera of Guadalajara as well as several European firms.

Riding the wave of the now-famous "technology boom" of the mid-'90s, the family business went public in 1996, with one of the highest-performing Initial Public Offerings of the year.

The successful IPO fueled JPM's expansion, giving it the extra capital to become one of the major cable assembly suppliers in the world.

After receiving numerous accolades and experiencing rapid growth during the late 1990s, JPM had an off year in 2000 (what tech-related company didn't?), and its stock price reflected that as it dropped precipitously. The performance was nearly unavoidable as shifts in the marketplace and internal restructuring altered the operations of the firm, requiring them to implement changes in their operations.

However, with new changes in management, reductions in costs, and other alterations to their operations, JPM likely will not be down for long. The world is going wireless, and JPM is now prepared to serve this new, high-growth market by developing infrastructures and producing high speed data transfer technologies for the future.

While the company has come a long way since its humble beginnings in 1949 and is obviously seeking maximum profits, the management team at JPM also prides itself on maintaining the same standards, values, and dedication to their workers as when it began operation back in 1949.

With the demand for technologies continually growing, and JPM's positioning for the wireless age, it is likely to be a mainstay of local and international commerce for years to come.

JPM has been headquartered in Lewisburg since its founding, 52 years ago.

Quote of the Week

"I don't think there is any doubt that some of the factors in his pardon were attributable to his large gifts. In my opinion, that was disgraceful."

—Former President Jimmy Carter on Clinton's last-minute pardons

Thousands of KGB dollars allegedly intended for FBI Agent Hansen.

Suspected spy arrested

By JIM LEAHY
Managing Editor

Since the end of the Cold War, the relationship between the United States and Russia has improved markedly as arms control and a cooling of wartime tensions took over. The leaders of the two nations have also begun to talk amicably and the nations were, for the most part enjoying a good relationship.

While they may deny it, each nation is continually looking over the other's shoulder, and spying continues. That truth was affirmed on Tuesday, Feb. 20, when the FBI arrested its own 27-year veteran agent Robert Philip Hansen on charges that he aided the KGB and Russia by passing them secrets for almost fifteen years.

The 103-page affidavit filed in U.S. District Court by the U.S. government details the case that the FBI has been building on Hansen for the past few months as they began to learn more and more about the nature of the crime, which FBI director Louis Freeh described as "the most traitorous action imaginable."

The FBI got wind of the espionage when a routine internal audit exposed the existence of a "mole" inside the Bureau. According to an MSNBC.com report, the FBI was then able to narrow down its case when it obtained a trove of KGB documents that included details on the informant's activities.

According to the document, "there is probable cause to believe that, beginning in 1985 and continuing to the present, Robert Philip Hansen, a United States citizen, has conspired with officers and agents of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and with its political successor state, the Russian Federation to commit espionage against the United States on behalf of a foreign government, specifically the Soviet Union or Russia, and has in fact engaged in such espionage."

The charges include comprising "numerous human sources of the United States Intelligence Community, dozens of United States Government classified documents, United States Intelligence Community technical operations of extraordinary importance and value, including specific electronic surveillance and monitoring techniques and precise targets of the United States Intelligence Community."

Hansen gave the KGB something more. He gave that intelligence agency the names of three KGB agents working as double agents for the United States.

Two of these agents were captured, imprisoned and later executed by Russia in separate espionage cases. As reward for these actions, Hansen received cash and diamonds worth a combined $1.4 million.

The affidavit goes on to detail more of his work over the 15-year period. The FBI has recovered communications between Hansen and the KGB via written correspondence, phone and other electronic means.

They have discerned how he obtained the documents, transferred them and also what he called himself ("B") to keep his identity secret. Hansen's arrest and alleged crime came as a shock to those who live in the Vienna, Va. neighborhood where he lived with his wife and six children. He was picked up while leaving a package of classified material for his Russian handlers in a park near his home. His attorney described his client as "emotional" about the arrest.

What confuses investigators most is the lack of a motive in the case. Hansen was not spending exorbitant amounts of money and he joined the KGB program voluntarily. There was never a time when he was forced to spy on the United States.

But he was very professional in his actions, keeping his true identity from the KGB for the entire time he worked for them. The organization only learned his real name when the arrest was made.

Espionage is a crime punishable by death. If Hansen is found guilty, he could spend the rest of his life in prison. Language coming from the Attorney General and FBI, however, indicates a possible desire to pursue the death penalty.

PARDON From page B1

Committee released a set of emails sent back and forth between some of the parties involved in trying to get Rich a pardon. A Jan. 10, 2001 email from Avner Azulay, managing director of Rich's foundation, to Jack Quinn, Rich's counsel (and formerly Clinton's White House counsel), linked the pardon effort to DNC Finance Chairman Beth Dorez.

Attempting to clear his name, Clinton wrote an Op-ed piece for the Sunday edition of The New York Times, giving eight reasons for pardoning Rich and his former partner Pius Green. He gave five reasons which were directly related to his conclusion that the case was improperly handled when criminal charges were filed in 1983.

Clinton argued that a civil court should have handled the case, and he fashioned the pardon to allow for the pursuit of new civil charges. He added that many high-ranking Israeli officials and Jewish community leaders urged the former president wrote that "the case for the pardons was reviewed and advocated" by three prominent Republican attorneys and by Jack Quinn.

All those mentioned denied involvement. The column, as published in early editions of the paper, said the pardon applications were "reviewed and advocated" by the attorneys.

But, during the press run, Clinton's office called to ask that the column be changed to say "the case for the pardons was reviewed and advocated" specifically by the three Republican attorneys. This rewording was based on the trio's involvement in Rich's defense in 1983.

However, after the GOP lawyers protested publicly, it became apparent that none were involved in the pardon. Even the revised column left the impression that the three were directly involved in the pardon review. Clinton's office called the suspicious line "a poorly worded sentence."

Now, Clinton, Denise Rich, and others involved in the process of pardoning Marc Rich will have to face the House Committee and the Senate Judiciary Committee.

Clinton pardoned financier Marc Rich, who was indicted in 1983 on charges of fraud.

Clinton pardoned financier Marc Rich, who was indicted in 1983 on charges of fraud.

Clinton pardoned financier Marc Rich, who was indicted in 1983 on charges of fraud.

bucknellian@bucknell.edu

FEATURES

Dragon rises with Asian awareness

By SARAH GUDENKAUF
Staff Writer

Next week, Feb. 26 through March 3, is Asian Awareness Week at the University. The theme this year is "Asian Awakening: The Dragon Rises."

The goal of Asian Awareness Week is to reach out to those in the community who never come out to these kinds of events and to spread awareness to those that have been untouched by Asian culture. Ann Lee, president of Students for Asian Awareness at Bucknell (SAAB) and public relations director for Asian Awareness Week, said.

The week will be filled with many different activities that celebrate a variety of Asian cultures. Many of the University's multicultural organizations play a large part in this event. SAAB sponsors the event with the help of the Korean Student Association, Chinese Cultural Association, Japan Society, South Asian Students Association, Middle Eastern Association and the International Students Office.

"Asian Awareness Week is the biggest event that SAAB and all the other cultural organizations sponsor," Lee said, expressing that the event is important to the University. "This week is so important to our club because it embodies our mission statement: to increase awareness of the Asian and Asian-American heritage through campus-wide functions, and to promote multicultural education for a multi-ethnic society. This is essential for the University as a whole if we want to become a more open-minded and diverse campus."

A different activity will be held each day. On Monday, the memorable event.

For those interested in going abroad, students and faculty will speak on Wednesday about their

On Thursday, from 7 - 10 p.m. in the Terrace Room, students and faculty are invited to be decorated with henna body art.

Tina Kim, a Korean comedian will be entertaining on Friday night at 9 p.m. in the Bison.

The major event of the week, the Asian Dinner, will take place on Saturday evening at 6 p.m. in Larison Dining Hall. Entertainment will include dancing and singing, and a delicious variety of various Asian foods will be offered. The meal will consist of native dishes from Japan, the Philippines, India, Korea, Thailand, China, Vietnam, Burma, the Middle East and Pakistan.

"What I enjoy most about this week is the Asian Dinner. It is a time when all the cultural organizations get the opportunity to bond more closely, and to celebrate our different cultures in food and exciting entertainment," Lee said.

Asian Awareness Week concludes on Sunday at noon in Walls Lounge with an opportunity for students and faculty to speak with University alumni.

It is anticipated that Asian Awareness Week will be just as successful and popular this year as in years past.

"Asian Awareness Week is such a good event because it is a time in which the multicultural clubs pull together to create a variety of fun events," Sofia Abraham, a member of South Asian Students Association, said.

Those who are interested in learning more about Asian Awareness Week should visit <http://www.students.bucknell.edu/patel/aawinfo/aawinfo.htm>.

Bez Torabi—The Bucknellian

Asian Awareness Week promises to provide many fascinating cultural activities for all students. The most popular event is the Asian Dinner next Friday in Larison Dining Hall.

campus community can learn how to make sushi from 6 - 8 p.m. in the Terrace Room. Life-sized Asian monopoly Tuesday night from 8 - 11 p.m. in Smith 300, promises to be a fun and experiences traveling and living in Asia at noon in Walls Lounge (Langone Center). Also on Wednesday is a martial arts demonstration from 7 - 8 p.m. in Larison Dining Hall.

MG101 offers business experience for students

By JOE ROSENHEIM
Staff Writer

In Management 101, student-run businesses are asked to employ the cut-throat, profit-seeking tactics of the standard American company. Then they take all their profits and give them to charity.

Each year, students in the introductory class are organized into groups and asked to start their own companies. The students are required to devise and research a marketing idea, and once they have done this, are allowed to take out a loan from the management board to get themselves started.

The companies must then either sell a product or provide a service to repay the loan and make a profit, and they then donate their profits to a charity of their choice. The students are also required to devote time to the charity through work.

"We just require that the companies choose a project in which half of that mission is community-related," Assistant Professor of Management Tammy Hiller, who teaches the class along with Professor John Miller, said.

"This is first of all a service project," Miller said. "Recent causes have included nature trails, senior citizens homes and Northumbhead. Crystal India Pale Ale, commonly referred to as IPA, resembles Sam Adams or Killians in taste and body. This bitter and fruity beer is named after the beer exported from England to India during British rule, according to the Selin's Grove beer menu.

BREWERY From page B1

Another full-bodied beer, Old Trail ESB, is a richer version of the Cream Ale. ESB's inclusion of Cascade creates a bitter but redeeming taste of a pale ale.

The beer with the highest alcohol by volume of the beers we sampled, Ardennes Triple, comes with a three-drink limit.

Surprisingly, this mellow tasting beer was neither dark nor bitter. The dry, crisp finish masked its high alcohol content.

The Razz Merry Ale, a unique blend made with whole raspberries, hardly tasted like a traditional beer. The ruby-colored beer includes a lasting fruity taste of raspberry seeds.

The history of the Selin's Grove Brewing Company comes alive in the White Horse Porter. According to the Selin's Grove beer menu, "Porter was a favorite of George Washington whose white horse was said to have spent its last days grazing behind Governor Snyder's mansion. Because of the scarcity of malted barley in George's day, ingredients such as molasses were often employed to make ale." The tavern, true to history, uses five different malts and a touch of molasses to sweeten and add smoothness to a traditional porter.

Described as having a bitter-sweet separation from its cousin porter, the Shade Mountain Oatmeal Stout was characterized by our server as a house favorite. The silky dark beer creates a unique rich texture and flavor.

The beer sampler provided an in-depth introduction to the Company's brews in a quantity-controlled serving. Individual serving sizes vary in size; four ounces glasses, half pints, pints, pitchers and 1/2 gallon growlers help moderate consumption while maintaining the exceptional affordability of the beers.

All of the food on the Brewing Company's menu is homemade and priced reasonably. Certainly, the focus of the pub centers around quality beer in an appealing, cozy atmosphere. Everything else the brewery offers is simply an added bonus.

Selin's Grove BREWING

Company's brews in a quantity-controlled serving. Individual serving sizes vary in size; four ounces glasses, half pints, pints, pitchers and 1/2 gallon growlers help moderate consumption while maintaining the exceptional affordability of the beers.

All of the food on the Brewing Company's menu is homemade and priced reasonably. Certainly, the focus of the pub centers around quality beer in an appealing, cozy atmosphere. Everything else the brewery offers is simply an added bonus.

Black History an integral part of U.S. History

A Features commentary by Dr. Linden F. Lewis

James Baldwin once noted that white America does not yet really know that black America exists. What does he mean by this statement?

It is not that African-Americans are totally invisible, but that white America very often refuses to engage our consciousness, to move beyond our corporeal self—our physical being, what Frantz Fanon calls the "fact of blackness."

Baldwin again notes that white America is trapped in a history that it does not understand; until it understands this history, it cannot be released from it.

The short and simple answer is that any history that purports to be a history of the US, which does not substantively address the contribution of African-Americans to the political economy of this country is an unabashed falsehood masquerading as universal truth.

One of the reasons why white America neglects this most crucial aspect of its history is, quite frankly, it would force white Americans to confront some very painful memories. There is no way to sanitize the history of people of African descent in this country.

It is a history replete with violence, brutality, exploitation, deceit, racism and greed. It is a history characterized by lack of recognition. There are few people who are willing to enter through this door.

The cold reality is that America's celebration and commitment to the fundamental ideals of liberty, democracy and especially freedom, was made possible largely as a result of the struggle of African-Americans to extend the meanings of those concepts, and to advance the rights, not only for themselves, but for every other marginalized group in this country. That, I would argue, is the enduring legacy of African-Americans to the enrichment of history.

Finally, we should be mindful of the imposition of silence on black history. I am referring here to the black history as a perfunctory celebration of firsts—a celebratory kind of history. Over the years, white America has become very comfortable with such a display of flattery.

Though it is important that we recognized such facts, we have to move beyond simply acknowledging that George Washington Carver invented the peanut, that Benjamin Franklin helped to complete the layout of Washington D. C. and built his own clock, or that Dr. Charles Drew recognized the importance of blood transfusions and the preservation of blood plasma—then of course died because as a black man he couldn't get a transfusion after becoming involved in an accident.

It is good to know these facts but there is a tendency to treat them as data to be stored out of reach of everyday life experiences. These facts become archived, and, in a way, also silenced, only to be paraded once a year, during the shortest month of the year.

In addition, we need to be learning about the long rich tradition of resistance because it is that struggle which provides the opportunity for the great black achievements to be realized later.

We need to become more familiar with the names of people such as Henry Highland Garnet, the escaped slave of Maryland and spokesman for the liberation of people in bondage. We need to be more informed about the Virginia blacksmith Gabriel and his brother Martin the preacher, who organized slaves and plotted to secure their freedom. We should be more familiar with the likes of Lemuel Haynes, the black member of the Massachusetts militia who urged Americans to extend the conception of freedom. America must come to terms with the political contribution of Fannie Lou Hamer and the unflinching activism of Claudia Jones in Harlem. Our knowledge of Rosa Parks needs to be broader than her act of resistance in Montgomery. This is also the history that Americans inherited.

White America coming to grips with a black history is fundamentally about embracing a new philosophy of history, a history which is not afraid of examining the process of long, hard, fought struggles, of a class and racial nature.

History is dynamic. We make history every day. It is not simply about the past, it is very much connected to the present, and more importantly, it has everything to do with the future.

The author is an Assistant Professor of Sociology at Bucknell University

Girls & SPORTS

by Justin Borus and Andrew Feinstein

RETIREMENT INSURANCE MUTUAL FUNDS TRUST SERVICES TUITION FINANCING

Why is TIAA-CREF the #1 choice nationwide?

The TIAA-CREF Advantage.

Year in and year out, employees at education and research institutions have turned to TIAA-CREF. And for good reasons.

- Easy diversification among a range of expertly managed funds
- A solid history of performance and exceptional personal service
- A strong commitment to low expenses
- Plus, a full range of flexible retirement income options

For decades, TIAA-CREF has helped professors and staff at over 10,000 campuses across the country invest for—and enjoy—successful retirements.

Choosing your retirement plan provider is simple. Go with the leader: TIAA-CREF.

THE TIAA-CREF ADVANTAGE

Investment Expertise

Low Expenses

Customized Payment Options

Expert Guidance

Ensuring the future for those who shape it™

1.800.842.2776

www.tiaa-cref.org

For more complete information on our securities products, call 1.800.842.2776, ext. 5569, for prospectuses. Read them carefully before you invest. • TIAA-CREF Individual and Institutional Services, Inc. and Teachers Personal Investors Services, Inc. distribute securities products. • Teachers Insurance and Annuity Association (TIAA), New York, NY and TIAA-CREF Life Insurance Co., New York, NY issue insurance and annuities. • TIAA-CREF Trust Company, FSB provides trust services. • Investment products are not FDIC insured, may lose value and are not bank guaranteed. © 2001 Teachers Insurance and Annuity Association—College Retirement Equities Fund, New York, NY 0102

FOR RENT

LEWISBURG: Apts & houses near BU campus. 1-6 bdrm units. Parking provided. Heat, washer/dryer, dishwasher included in some. Prof. 24-hour maintenance. Range: $275–1,200/mo. for 2001/2002. CALL NOW Brynwood Rentals Ph: 570/524-2121 x 2.

SAKUNTALA

Fine Indian Cuisine

Try us, it's wonderful!

Vegetarian Buffet Dinner: $6.95
Non-Vegetarian Buffet Dinner: $8.95
Open Monday thru Friday 12:00 noon to 9:00 pm
Saturdays 4:00 pm to 9:00 pm
236 Iron Street, Lewisburg, Phone 389-0281
www.sakuntala.com

University of Pittsburgh
Summer Registration Day
February

www.pitt.edu/~summer

Argentina
Chile
Costa Rica
Cuba

Institute for Study Abroad
BUTLER UNIVERSITY

Study Abroad Meeting

Meet the representative:

Amy Bartnick Blume

Monday, February 26

Interested Student Meeting

2:00 – 4:00 pm

Langone Center Room # 241-B

www.isabutler.org

World OPPORTUNITIES

Northwestern College of Chiropractic

Northwestern can provide you with an education uniquely focused on the 21st century. Just ask our 4,000 alumni. They are practicing from America to Zimbabwe, as solo practitioners and in interdisciplinary settings. They know that our FOCUS ON EXCELLENCE has earned us an international reputation as a pioneer in chiropractic education, patient care and scientific research. Northwestern is a limited enrollment, private institution featuring a well-rounded, rigorous educational program integrating the basic and clinical sciences, diagnosis, X-ray, chiropractic therapeutics, wellness care and practice management. Our pioneering clinical internship programs, interdisciplinary study opportunities and a state-of-the-art student clinic provide our graduates with an UNPARALLELED CLINICAL FOUNDATION. Add our Career Services Center, where we assist our graduates in job placement, and you can understand why our graduates have such a high satisfaction level with their careers. For a personal visit or more detailed information, call a Northwestern admissions counselor at 1-800-888-4777 or go virtual at www.nwhealth.edu.

A college of
NORTHWESTERN HEALTH SCIENCES UNIVERSITY
2301 W. 84th St.
Minneapolis, MN 55431

Vennari's Pizzeria

Large Pizzas from $5.99
Small Pizzas from $3.99
Free Delivery Available
Monday thru Friday 11:00 am - 11:00 pm
Saturdays 11:00 am - 11:00 pm
Sundays 11:00 am - 11:00 pm

First Impressions Salon

Enjoy our weekly and monthly specials!

Tanning and Nail Services

716 West Market Street, Lewisburg, PA 17837
Phone: 522-9536
Call Today for Your Appointment. Cash and Checks Only.

SUPER HEROES!

ALE MAN & CHICKEN MAN!
Love BJ's

Super Buffalo Wing SPECIAL!

12 for $4.95
24 for $7.95

Sunday - Thursday
9PM - Closing
EVEN ONLY!

17 North Market Street
SELINGROVE
374-9841

291 Main Street
DANVILLE
275-5110

Arts & Entertainment

“Game” pleases Tutstin crowd

Actors perform Marivaux's comedy, “The Game of Love and Chance”

By KACY O'BRIEN
Senior Writer

“The Game of Love and Chance” premiered this past weekend with success. The audience was in hysterics every night as the cast wheeled, manipulated, interrogated and startled each other.

The play was set “in-the-round” with unknown audience members walking through the set to get to risers on each of the four sides. Various benches, a circular fountain, and several garden walls defined the courtyard and were amply used by the actors to display themselves, assert their power and form tableaux of compromising positions.

Period costumes, wigs, corsets, cravats and the like set the scene for the fight to overcome class barriers through love. Lisa Britt '04 and Ian McNaughton '01 played the aristocratic lovers, Silvia and Dorante, whose pride nearly kept them apart. The obvious passion and inhibitions exhibited by both actors were captivating.

Kate McDevitt '01 and Jay Klaitz '01 played the servant lovers, Lisette and Harloquin. The two posed as the aristocrats, looking ridiculous with their flamboyant promenading, but still absolutely delightful to watch.

This weekend's production at the Tutstin Theatre stars (from L-R) Kate McDevitt '01, Jay Klaitz '01, Ian McNaughton '01, Lisa Britt '04.

The audience was so involved in the performance by McDevitt and Klaitz, that when Harloquin directed a question to the audience about revealing his identity, he was met with a firm “yes” from an 8-year-old in the risers, who later received a dirty look when Lisette became angry at the confession.

Brandon Dust '01 performed as Orgon, Silvia's father, and Mike Moran '03 entertained as Mario, Silvia's brother. Father and son connive the entire time to complicate the lovers' plans for the sake of their own sheer enjoyment, winning the amusement of the audience.

All of the actors, including Josh Beckerman '02 as the valet, maintained the appropriate and complex social graces and movements for the time period. Live music of the Baroque period added to the ambience of the stage. Clever staging by director Bob Gainer, professor of theatre, allowed the actors to share their thoughts with the audience. The actors were able to play just outside the boundaries of the courtyard when another character was present, while still soliloquizing within the garden walls.

After the show, clapping, laughing, hooting and whistling accompanied the bows. “The Game of Love and Chance” was a success, and a great way for the four graduating seniors in the cast to wrap up their careers at the University.

Piano virtuoso plays Weis Center

By NICOLE WIEDERSPIEL
Staff Writer

Pianist Paavali Jumppanen performed at the Weis Center last Friday, Feb. 16, for an audience consisting of Lewisburg residents and quite a few University students in attendance as well. It was a captivating performance, and a rarity to see a musician with such talent at the age of 26.

Jumppanen began the concert by playing J.S. Bach's “English Suite No. 6” and a few of Liszt's works. After intermission, he played several 20th-century pieces, including those of Sibelius, Klam, Hannikainen and Dutilleux (for whom Jumppanen has performed Dutilleux's “Sonata.”)

Jumppanen's piano-playing was intensely emotional. Each note could be felt and heard distinctly, yet the music flowed gracefully and was played with ease. Even his renditions of well-known pieces by Bach and Liszt displayed his virtuosity, as he made them sound dynamic and exciting. His performance of Liszt's “La Lugubre Gondola No. 1” was especially noteworthy, powerful enough to immerse the audience into the deep melancholy of the piece. The more modern pieces he played were impressive and performed with great skill.

Jumppanen, a native of Espoo, Finland, has recently won first prize in the 2000 Young Concert Artists Auditions and has won five other prestigious awards, including first prize in Finland's Maj Lind Competition at age 19. He is also this year's recipient of the Pennsylvania Prize. Until recently, he has studied at the Music Academy of Basel in Switzerland. Jumppanen will debut in New York on Feb. 20 and in Washington, D.C. on Mar. 5.

Two exhibits hit gallery

The Bucknell Art Gallery focuses on photography in Europe and the concept of walking, writes Krista Reisdorf, A&E editor

The Bucknell Art Gallery will be hosting two new exhibits, “Walking” and “Richard Wentworth: Photographs,” from Feb. 26 through April 6.

“Walking” will be located in the main gallery, and will display work from artists such as Eleanor Antin, Hamish Fulton, Sharon Harper, and Tom Marioni.

The exhibit focuses on contemporary artists whose works reflect the concept of walking, both by watching people walk and by walking themselves.

“Walking in cities may be understood primarily in sociopolitical terms (tourism, commuting and surveillance) while in the rural context, the focus shifts to explorations of leisure, pilgrimage and nature,” Stuart Horodner, director of the Bucknell Art Gallery, said.

Some of the artists even attached pencils or video cameras to their bodies as they walked, to use it as a drawing method.

“These artists take a most familiar activity and use it to generate complex works about place, presence and human agency,” Horodner said.

“Richard Wentworth: Photographs” will be located in the project room linked with the Bucknell Focus on Europe. The photos are mostly taken in London, and use ordinary objects to create meaningful art and reflect on people resolving everyday problems.

“Whether it is a chair being used to reserve a parking spot, or a fence railing holding up a lost glove, these photographs examine the ongoing residue of public and private energies,” Horodner said.

The Bucknell Art Gallery is located on the third floor of the Langone Center and is open 11 a.m. to 5 p.m. on weekdays, and 1 p.m. to 4 p.m. on weekends. An opening reception will be held from 5 p.m. to 7 p.m. Tuesday, Feb. 27 in the gallery.

“Hannibal”'s greusome antics in bad taste

Ridley Scott misses his mark as the new adventures of Hannibal Lecter fall flat

By MARY AGNES
Staff Writer

Jonathan Demme's “Silence of the Lambs” was terrifying, intriguing and disturbing. “Hannibal,” Ridley Scott's follow-up, is mostly nauseating. As a rule, sequels are more gory, but the collection of gruesome gimmicks that infest this one make a pronounced effort to fill the audience with such disgust.

The film is set 10 years from where “Silence of the Lambs” left off. We find ourselves back again with Clarice Starling, a name that is spoken out loud many times throughout the film in a desperate attempt to remind the audience of Jodie Foster's previous, superior creation. Julianne Moore's new Starling surrounds herself with creepy pictures, sits alone in dark rooms and repeatedly shouts out command lines to men (a la Dana Scully from “The X-Files”), although her words come out about as hard as cool-whip. Moore is a fine actress, but she can't fill the huge shoes that Foster left to fill. Every time she says “Doctor Lecter,” we can tell that she must have studied those Hannibal lectures on art, mingles at the opera, and enjoys scooping out fine cookware. Every time the well-mannered murderer mutters, “okie, dokie,” “goodie, goodie,” or “ta, ta,” he earns a giggle. While amusing, this Hannibal is completely upstaged by the original Lecter whose mysterious and pure evil gave everyone nightmares.

As the very first scene opens we are drawn in—almost too closely—to a ghoul-like-looking man named Mason Verger (a completely unrecognizable Gary Oldman).

Verger is a former patient of Doctor Lecter, and through flashbacks later in the film we see how Verger, who invited Lecter over for an evening of “entertainment,” was dragged by Lecter and then talked into cutting off his face with a piece of glass and feeding it to his own dogs.

Verger, a twisted rich man, is now on a mission to get revenge on Hannibal; he wants to feed him to gigantic, man-eating boars.

As if this doesn't deviate enough from what we really want to see, a huge chunk of screen time is then wasted when we meet and follow Pazzi (Giancarlo Giannini), an Italian cop who is trying to capture Hannibal at his home in Florence in order to collect the $3 million Verger is offering as a reward.

Hannibal does have a few shining moments, the best of which deal with murky boundaries of Hannibal and Starling's relationship. Does he want to eat her or kiss her? And could she ever pull the trigger? Also, the film is shot beautifully, especially the scenes in Florence.

In his review of “Silence of the Lambs,” Roger Ebert said the film dealt with a “list of great universal fears and dreams.” “Hannibal” is a dumpster full of recycled imagery.

Allusions flash on the screen, the worst of which include unsubtle crucifixion shots and Macbeth-esque hand washing.

Perhaps someone was thinking this sort of alignment might somehow bring a shred of class to the film, but it only pronounces its inadequacy.

Fitzwilliam String Quartet to end visit with concert

By KRISTA REISDOFF
A&E Editor

The Fitzwilliam String Quartet will be wrapping up their visit to the University by performing their final concert in a series of three on Monday, Feb. 26.

In their third performance, the quartet will be joined by various music professors, including Christopher Para, Mary Hannigan and Martha Gibbs Hill. The program will consist of music by Henry Purcell, Giacomo Puccini and Wolfgang Amadeus Mozart.

During their stay, the British quartet played two other free concerts and also found time to meet with music classes and workshops.

Four Cambridge students established the Fitzwilliam String Quartet in 1968, and the quartet's popularity can be attributed to their connection with Dmitri Shostakovich, a Russian composer.

The members of the quartet are Lucy Russell, violin, Jonathan Sparey, violin, Alan George, viola, and Jonathan Cohen, violoncello.

The quartet is unique in its use of classical instruments that suit the music they choose to perform. They have entertained on BBC broadcasts and have performed Haydn's “Seven Last Words” on a live broadcast.

The Fitzwilliam String Quartet has visited the University before, as affiliate artists from 1978 to 1986, and returned in both 1998 and 2000.

The quartet will be performing the last concert of its residency at 8 p.m. on Monday, Feb. 26 in Rooke Chapel. Admission is free.

Courtesy of www.earlymusic.org

ATTENTION SENIORS

ORDER YOUR SENIOR STEIN!

Stop by the Film Counter at

the BookStore AT BUCKNELL

to place your order!

LAST DAY TO ORDER IS APRIL 2, 2001

SCIENCE & TECHNOLOGY

Is there life beyond the Internet?

By JESSICA FRIEDMAN
Staff Writer

Close your eyes for a minute and imagine yourself in a little room with white walls, a bed, maybe a few posters and books on a shelf. Sounds kind of like a college dorm room, but there's something missing—the eternal glow emanating from your computer screen.

I'm sure most of you can imagine leaving your computer for other activities, or maybe even turning it off for the night—but what if someone were to tell you that the University was no longer offering Internet services to its students? No 24/7 network access, no Instant Messenger, not even e-mail!

Yes, that's when the panic sets in. And with the constantly expanding Internet technology, college students are becoming increasingly susceptible to Internet addiction.

At first, the word "addiction" may seem too strong. To most people, this word is associated with substances such as drugs, alcohol or cigarettes and behaviors such as gambling or excessive exercising.

However, I was astonished to discover that there exists a growing body of research on a psychological condition called Internet Addiction Disorder (IAD).

Although a bona fide Internet Addiction Disorder may or may not exist, the American Psychiatric Association has established several diagnostic criteria for this condition, three or more of which must be present during a 12-month period.

According to CNN, these include tolerance (a need for increasing time on the Internet to achieve satisfaction), two or more withdrawal symptoms after reduction of Internet use that impair social, personal or occupational functioning and using the Internet to relieve or avoid withdrawal symptoms.

Also, losing track of time while accessing the Internet; increasing time spent trying out new Internet activities, restlessness or irritability when trying to cut down on Internet use; and surfing the web to escape problems or to relieve feelings such as guilt, anxiety, depression, loneliness or boredom.

I know that after reading this list, I had to stop and think about the motivations behind my own Internet use. Many people, especially college students, can identify with at least one of these symptoms, but for most, myself included, it is a much milder addiction or compulsion that ebbs and flows with the ups and downs in social and academic life.

After all, the Internet does provide students with something to do. In this respect, how can surfing the web be any more harmful than playing video games for three hours a day?

My feeling is that because the high-speed Internet access is so easy to use, and is something that most of us don't get at home (with dial-up modem connections), we feel pressed to get as much out of it as we can.

Consequently, when we do go home and are forced to abstain from online activities, even for a weekend, we become acutely aware of how dependent we are on this ready-made form of entertainment.

There exists a growing body of research on a psychophysiological condition called Internet Addiction Disorder... and with the constantly expanding Internet technology, college students are becoming increasingly susceptible to Internet addiction.

With more college campuses offering faster and more reliable Internet access to their students, a student culture is being created via e-mail, web surfing, instant messaging, home-page production and interactive role-playing games. The fact that Americans today are becoming more and more reliant on technology that provides instantaneous results (e-mail instead of snail mail, online shopping instead of driving to the mall, visiting cnn.com instead of picking up a newspaper) also contributes a growing dependence on the Internet.

E-mail addresses or Instant Messenger screen names are now the preferred mode of contact rather than telephone numbers or mailing addresses. So why are college students among the most affected?

Internet access is a necessity on college campuses, since it is a powerful tool for academic study, research and communication.

But do we really need to spend 20 hours a week online? Several factors contribute to the increased vulnerability of college students to developing Internet dependence, including psychological and developmental characteristics of the student, ready access to the Internet and the expectation that most colleges have of student Internet or computer use.

College-age students face two important tasks: developing a sense of identity and developing meaningful relationships. For many young adults, the transition into college is extremely stressful, and addictive behaviors, not limited to Internet use, serve as a coping mechanism and a means by which personal conflicts can be avoided.

Development of healthy social relationships can also be severely hindered by excessive Internet use; when the majority of a person's interpersonal contact occurs online, the sense of what a relationship is becomes distorted. The free and unlimited access to the Internet further encourages students to spend even more time online, since they have no financial reason to limit their Internet use.

Additionally, the extension of the campus network into residence halls means that students don't even have to leave the comfort of their own rooms to get connected.

Computer and Internet use is often required in many college courses. This can be very beneficial in creating technologically literate members of society, but it becomes dangerous when people start having difficulties balancing their activities online with other parts of their lives.

More common than a full-blown addictive disorder is the somewhat milder condition of Internet dependence. Students are drawn to the Internet through the World Wide Web, the graph point-and-click portion of the Internet.

Often, people suffering from this condition find greater comfort in the virtual reality of cyberspace than from interacting with real people. The addictive behavior becomes so consuming that classes, friends and sleep begin to seem less and less important. So what do you make of all those nights of staying up until 2 a.m. trying to find something interesting on the Internet?

Occasional excessive Internet use is not detrimental, as long as a harmless hobby doesn't turn into a compulsion. More research is needed to fully understand the scope and implications of Internet addiction, but for now, it is enough to realize that these behaviors can easily be taken too far. Advice for the hopelessly addicted? You have to change your behavior in order to change your thinking. So sign off on Instant Messenger, turn off your monitor, and turn on the cable TV (to the Learning Channel, of course). Now that's college life.

Pope names patron saint of the Internet

By MONICA MONTGOMERY
Senior Writer

The Catholic Church has established patron saints for every aspect of life. Many of these saints have been around for thousands of years, and as you might think, are rather boring. To be honest, many of them are.

There is St. Joseph, the patron saint of the Church, St. Thomas the Apostle, the patron saint for people in doubt, and to keep up with current events, St. Valentine, the patron saint of lovers. However, there are many saints that are a little strange to say the least, including St. James, the patron saint of hat-making, St. Basil, the patron saint of hospital administrators, St. Clare, the patron saint of television, and St. Christopher, the patron saint of motorists.

Recently, the Catholic Church and Pope John Paul II have begun keeping with modern times.

The Pope just announced he is considering adding a new patron saint to the list.

Introducing... Saint Isidore of Seville, the patron saint of Internet users and computer programmers!

St. Isidore of Seville, who lived in the 7th century, was the Archbishop of Seville, and probably one of the most learned men of his day.

According to CNN.com, St. Isidore is believed to have written the world's first encyclopedia. But this is not the only step that the Pope has done to modernize the Catholic Church.

In 1996, the Vatican went online with the website www.vatican.va, which hosts thousands of Catholic Church documents and papal speeches.

Two years later, the Pope himself went online, showing his Sunday sermons on the Vatican's web page.

So next time your computer crashes, or you get the Romeo and Juliet virus from your friend, remember, you now have a saint to which you can pray.

Did you know ...
Antarctica is covered by a sheet of ice that averages 6,500 feet thick?

Courtesy of www.britannica.com

THE Bucknellian

The weekly campus newspaper of Bucknell University

http://www.orgs.bucknell.edu/bucknellian

March 2, 2001

inside
Section B
Sports
Water Polo sweeps Invitational.
See page A10.

Rec and Athletic Center delayed

By CARMEN MAURIELLO
Sports Editor

University philanthropists Kenneth and Elaine Langone, alongside University President Steffen Rogers, Athletic Director John Hardt and University Trustees, donated hard hats and broke ground on the University's new recreation and athletic center on Oct. 28, 2000. Four months later, the divots unearthed by their shovels remain the only progress in the facility's construction.

During Sunday night's Bucknell Student Government (BSG) meeting, Interim Vice President for Student Affairs Charles Pollock '70 and Physical Plant Director Dennis Hawley '72 provided reasons for this delay, in addition to revealing the new construction schedule and several of the inconveniences that the construction will create.

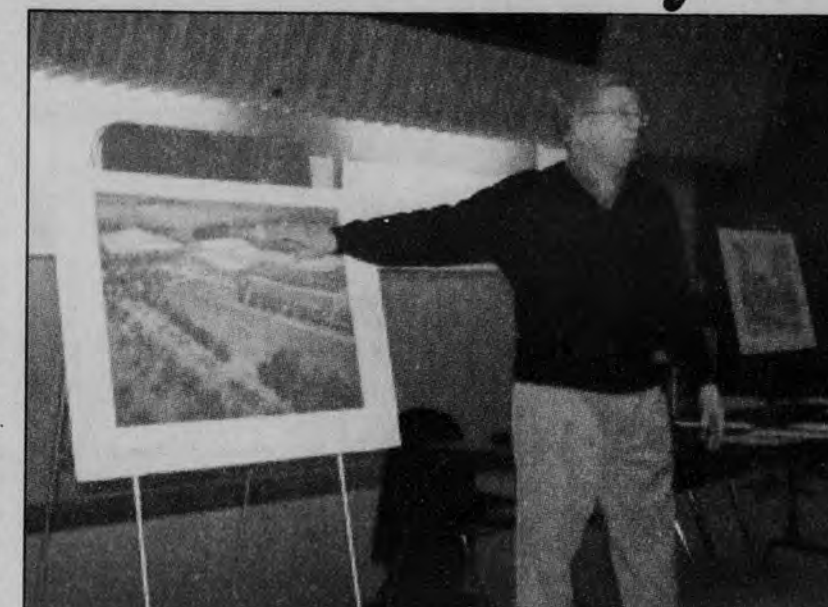

Pollock explained that cost discrepancies are responsible for holding the project behind schedule, as contractors posed higher figures than those initially projected by the architects.

We had to do the normal process of deciding where we could trim back... and get the project back within the authorized budget," Pollock said.

He stated that the cuts didn't need to be very significant because the University's Board of Trustees agreed to expand the project's budget from about $30 million to roughly $32 million.

The biggest change in the new construction plans is that Freas-Rooke Pool, which was originally earmarked to be paved over and made into a gymnasium for recreation and training, is now scheduled to hold part of the new fitness center. This major cost-cutting move will actually increase the square footage of the fitness center which was originally designed to be 15,000 square feet.

The plans for the new gymnasium were also altered; the original design of the facility had Pollock showed plans for the new Recreation and Athletic Center Sunday.

3,000 retractable seats, with the potential to add 1,000 extra seats for special events. With the new design, the arena will permanently hold 4,000 seats.

Other changes in the blueprints mainly relate to downgrading some of the high-end components, many of which Hawley said were more appropriate for a convention center than an athletic facility.

These cut backs include de-

See DELAY, page A4.

"It Wasn't Me"—It's Shaggy

By PETER VAN EMBURGH
Editor-in-Chief

Put the rumors to rest—the Concert Committee has announced that The Bucknellian that Shaggy will be performing in the Gerhardt Fieldhouse on April 20. Currently the Billboard's number one artist in album sales, Shaggy's single "It Wasn't Me" holds the number two spot on Billboard's singles chart.

"We're ecstatic to be bringing Shaggy to Bucknell," Concert Committee Officer Justin Knox '01 said.

The concert committee distributed a concert survey to the campus community and Shaggy had an overwhelming response, according to Concert Committee Chair Spring Potoczak '01.

"This will be one of the biggest shows at Bucknell so far. And we know that Shaggy will put on an entertaining show that will have everyone on their feet," Potoczak said. "It's going to be a show the whole campus will enjoy."

Every year, the concert committee tries to book "big name acts" that will appeal to the majority of the campus. The committee

See SHAGGY, page A4

VPFA search underway

By NATALIE CASP
News Editor

Immediately after Margaret Plympton announced her resignation in December, University President Steffen Rogers initiated a search for a new Vice President for Finance and Administration (VPFA). Rogers is chairing the search committee and will also ultimately choose the VPFA.

"When Peggy Plympton resigned, I was in Georgia and called Mitch Cherin to tell him that we could not wait to form the search committee to get the ad out and determine the job description. The two of us made slight revisions in the ad used to recruit Peggy and placed it in The Chronicle for Higher Education," Rogers said.

Creating the job description and placing the advertisement eliminated a large task for the search committee, though committees typically work together on that process.

"Usually the committee forms the ad and job description, but we had to work fast in order to get the ad out in January so we would be within the normal window for recruiting national candidates," Rogers said. "There are some advantages to having a jump start on this search. At our first committee meeting, rather than talking about the ad and the job description, we can begin to talk about the candidates."

The committee met for the first time Thursday to review the applications for the position.

"We already have about 35 applicants. It looks like we have an extremely

See VPFA, page A3

Above: Ralph Nader held a press conference before his speech. Right: Nader spoke to the packed Weis Center.

By LAURA DAY
News Editor

A 2000 year old Chinese proverb states, "To know and not to act, is not to know."

With no seat to spare, famed consumer activist and former Green Party Presidential Candidate Ralph Nader spoke Wednesday night to the University community, imploring his audience to use its education to make a difference in society. Nader's lecture, "World Trade and Globalization," focused on the imperialistic powers of corporate control and the importance of citizenship.

Living in a country dominated by corporations and subjected to decisions of the World Trade Organization, Nader emphasized the need for consumer awareness and action. "We don't even know we're growing up corporate," Nader said.

Many students are not taught corporate crime in law school or college and remain submissive to its power. Nader spoke adamantly against submitting to the corporate giants and quoted Cicero: "Freedom is participating in power."

Nader encouraged his listeners not to stand idle; he questioned, "How will you look back on your life ... you will have trained yourself in some vocation in order to get a job. This is the private citizen. But, what about the public citizen part of your life?"

He elaborated on the ills of the current "free-trade" system and urged his audience to "create that bridge—that civic motivation" to combat corporate imperialism. Nader also encouraged students not to

See NADER, page A4

University works toward greener campus

By RACHEL LASKOW
News Layout Editor

Over the past ten years, campus greening efforts have turned an environmental policy at Tufts University into a nationwide endeavor. With the help and encouragement from national organizations such as Second Nature and the Association of University Leaders for a Sustainable Future, college campuses around the world are becoming more environmentally sound.

The Tallotres Declaration, which asks universities to take specific actions to prevent environmental problems, was one of the first steps in this process. Hundreds of universities around the world have signed this document, but our university has not.

"We had great hopes that Bucknell would be able to sign onto The Tallotres Declaration and we continue to emphasize to President Rogers the importance of Bucknell adopting this declaration," Professor of Biology and Environmental Advisory Committee (EAC) Member Warren Abrahamson said. University President Rogers has not ruled out the possibility of eventually incorporating the Declaration into the University.

"At this point in time, we'd have to sit down and talk about what signing the Declaration means for this university," Rogers said. "If we sign a declaration like that, I would want it to be an empty signature. I would want us to follow through. Just signing the declaration without having meaningful actions standing behind it would be troubling."

Although the University has not signed the Declaration, it has been working towards a greener campus since 1992. During that year, former University President and Professor of Biology Gary Sojka created the Bucknell University Greening Task Force to serve as a clearinghouse for environmental concerns on campus and to make recommendations to the president for short-term and long-term environmental changes. The Task Force was originally chaired by Sojka and Professor of Religion Mary Evelyn Tucker and then later co-chaired by Civil Professor of Civil and Environmental Engineering Jeffrey Evans and Carol Inghat, former University Relations employee.

Former Vice President for Finance and Administration Peggy Plympton created the EAC, a group of students, faculty, staff and administrators that focuses on campus greening efforts.

It is important to have a green campus on two levels: Our mission is to educate students to the best of our ability and if we don't offer lessons reflected in our actions that promote environmental awareness, we are sending a poor message," Evans said. "Secondly, it is simply the right thing to do for the environment and everyone needs to be thinking in this way."

In April 1997, the EAC presented greening initiatives to former University President William Adams. In October 2000, the initiatives were presented to Rogers.

"At a 'coffee' that was held in the fall, 25 or so people showed up and all of them had expertise and interest in the environment. In my mind, that goes beyond a discussion of the greening of the campus," Rogers said. "The opportunity extends into having a curricular emphasis and building a center of excellence around the environmental sciences. I'm excited about the opportunity—it's one that you would not expect to have at a university of our size."

While Rogers supports the general movement, no specific proposals have reached his desk.

"I don't personally have the time to take a leadership role on this issue, so I expect the faculty members with this interest to provide the leadership. We'll have to explore our options and see what is feasible for Bucknell," Rogers said.

Some committee members feel, however, a lack of outward enthusiasm from the administration.

"Unless we can get the top administration of Bucknell to encourage and support greening, Bucknell will continue to be in a country club-like atmosphere," Abrahamson said.

At some point, most likely after his senior staff is in place, Rogers hopes to implement environmentally sound tactics for the campus.

"There are a lot of initiatives out there that have been done at other campuses that we should investigate, but, unfortunately, feasibility is dependent upon location, size, and even, for instance, the type of trash you create. That's not to say we can't do a lot better," Rogers said.

In the past, the University has taken steps to work towards a greener campus. The new power plant has an efficiency of 80 percent. It uses natural

See GREENING, page A3

Refraction and internal reflection of light rays create the array of colors in rainbows since each color of light is bent a slightly different angle as it passes through a water droplet.

As the incident light rays emerge from droplets and separate, they produce the spectrum of colors characteristic of rainbows. The brightest rainbows are produced from light rays emanating from droplets after only one internal reflection.

For more information about the physics behind rainbows visit www.britannica.com.

Build your resume. . .

Write for S&T.
Contact lwaldman@jctta.com or jctta@jctta.com if interested

Public Safety Log

February 21, 2001

THEFT OF UNIVERSITY PROPERTY—An employee notified Public Safety that two outdoor type speakers were missing from Dana Engineering building where they were mounted on the wall with security screws which had been cut. No witnesses or suspects could be located. East Buffalo Township Police Department was notified. The incident is under investigation.

DAMAGED VEHICLE / HIT & RUN—A student reported to Public Safety that unknown person(s) had scratched the driver's side, front, and rear doors while his vehicle was parked in the Special Interest Houses lot. Lewisburg Police Department was notified. The incident is under investigation.

NON-REPORTABLE VEHICLE ACCIDENT—A student notified Public Safety that his vehicle sustained minor damage when he drove over a culvert on Curtain Ave., Lewisburg. No injuries or property damage occurred. East Buffalo Township Police Department was notified.

SUSPICIOUS PERSONS / TRESPASS WARNING—Public Safety responded to Smith Hall for the report of suspicious persons disturbing students in the building. Lewisburg Police Department responded and identified the two male visitors. The individuals cooperated in leaving campus as requested.

February 22, 2001

UNDERAGE CONSUMPTION—Public Safety responded to Swartz Hall for the report of an alcohol overdose. Upon further investigation, a female was identified as a student under the age of 21, who admitted to consuming alcohol at the Phi Gamma Delta Fraternity. She appeared to be very ill, and was transported by ambulance to the hospital for treatment. East Buffalo Township Police Department was notified. She was issued citations for underage consumption and public drunkenness. Phi Gamma Delta was cited for fraternity alcohol violations.

February 23, 2001

INFORMATION / MINOR VEHICLE ACCIDENT—While on parking detail, a Public Safety vehicle was backed into by a student vehicle that had pulled behind the university vehicle. The front license plate broke off the student vehicle. There were no other damages and no injuries occurred.

INFORMATION / VEHICLE ACCIDENT—An employee's vehicle was struck by a student driven vehicle, while the employee was backing from a parking space in the Seventh Street Lot. The bumper of the employee's vehicle sustained minor damage and no injuries occurred.

February 24, 2001

PUBLIC DRUNKENNESS / UNDERAGE DRINKING—Lewisburg Police Department arrived at the Public Safety office with a student whom the police had observed walking with difficulty in the middle of Route 15. Citations were issued for public drunkenness and underage drinking.

PROPERTY DAMAGE—Public Safety responded to Fraternity Road for the report of vandalism to a university vehicle parked there. The driver's side molding had been removed from the vehicle. No witnesses or suspects could be located. The incident is under investigation.

INFORMATION / HARASSMENT—A student reported to Public Safety that another student was making harassing phone calls and emails to her. The individual requested no criminal action at this time and will meet with the Dean of Students to discuss the situation.

MEDICAL TRANSPORT—A student contacted Public Safety and requested transportation to Evangelical Community Hospital Emergency room for treatment of a possible infection. Student Health Services transported the student to the hospital. The individual later returned to campus.

February 25, 2001

MEDICAL TRANSPORT—Public

Safety responded to the fieldhouse for the report of a visitor with rapid respiration and stomach pains. The individual was transported for treatment to Evangelical Community Hospital Emergency room by ambulance and was later released.

INFORMATION—While on routine patrol, Public Safety found a sign on the ground at the corner of Dent Drive and Stadium Road. The sign was returned to the Physical Plant with a work order filed to reinstall.

February 26, 2001

BU PROPERTY DAMAGE—An employee reported to Public Safety that a window was broken in Davis Gym. No witnesses or suspects could be located in a search of the area.

THEFT—An employee reported to Public Safety that unknown person(s) had taken a wireless computer hub from a room in Dana Engineering. East Buffalo Township Police Department was notified. The incident is under investigation.

February 27, 2001

MEDICAL ASSIST—Public Safety responded to Walker Street for the report of an employee who had fallen. The individual who sustained head and knee injuries was transported by ambulance to Evangelical Community Hospital Emergency room for treatment and returned home by personal transportation.

NON-EMERGENCY MEDICAL TRANSPORT—An employee requested transportation for an ill student. The individual was transported by Student Health Services to Evangelical Community Hospital Emergency room for treatment and later returned to campus.

TAMPERING WITH FIRE EQUIPMENT—Public Safety responded to a fire alarm activation at Swartz Hall and found that unknown person(s) had activated a pull station without purpose. The incident is under investigation.

Incidents under investigation

The process and results of Public Safety's investigations

With roughly two-thirds of the incidents reported in each week's Public Safety log classified as "under investigation," readers often wonder what happens to an incident after its appearance in the log.

The life of an incident has eight stages, according to Director of Public Safety Vincent DeCerio.

Initially, Public Safety responds to a call and assesses the situation to determine if an offense has occurred. If so, the officers gather information and secure evidence at the scene.

If the nature of the offense requires further involvement, Public Safety then notifies the necessary authorities—usually the local police or University deans.

At that point, Public Safety interviews the victim, perpetrator and witness—whichever happens to be involved—and takes statements from each of the parties.

After the evidence and statements are gathered, Public Safety generates and distributes an incident report. With the completion of the initial report, the course of action for each specific incident is then determined; the incident can be handed over to another office; investigated, evaluated and solved; closed due to lack of a viable offense or lack of evidence; or prosecuted internally, externally or a combination of both. If warranted, a Public Safety alert is issued.

Finally, adjudication of the incident is carried out, either through the Community Judicial Board or a local judge.

Public Safety cleared 61 percent of the 419 reported incidents in 2000.

"Clearance means that the complaint or incident has been resolved in some manner—an arrest, the filing of charges in the judicial system, determining the incident to be unfounded for any number of reasons, or a resolution through mediation," DeCerio said. "Clearance, in effect, means that we solve the crime or bring the incident to some closure."

Public Safety improved its clearance rate substantially; in 1994, the office cleared 29 percent of its cases—just 133 of the 455 reported incidents. The state average of cleared incidents is 49 percent.

Every call that Public Safety receives prompts a report.

"We write a report on every call," DeCerio said. "If the incident is determined to be unfounded, we simply write a report, close it and file it. Otherwise, we follow the routine steps for conducting an investigation."

All incidents reported to Public Safety are considered public knowledge. The resolution of investigated incidents, though not published by The Bucknellian due to space constraints, are also considered public knowledge. The Bucknellian is not responsible for editing the content of the Public Safety Log. Any reader wishing to learn of an investigation's status may contact Public Safety.

October 19, 1996

INFORMATION/ODOR OF SMOKE—A Public Safety Officer responded to Smith Hall where a partially burned ear of corn was located in the stairwell. The incident is under investigation.

Resolution: An RA reported to Public Safety that she smelled smoke in the Smith Hallway around 3:20 AM. Public Safety investigated and discovered one ear of partially, recently burned corn in the 3d floor Smith stairwell. Upon a search of the hall, no suspects or persons were able to provide us with information about the incident. We conjecture that someone may have been trying to set off the fire alarm by creating smoke and failed, or perhaps someone was hungry and trying to make popcorn. We closed this case as "unable to investigate further or to determine if crime was intended."

November 15, 1997

DISORDERLY CONDUCT—While on routine patrol, a Public Safety Officer observed a deer carcass on the porch of Kappa Sigma fraternity. Lewisburg Police Department was notified and the Pennsylvania Game Commission removed the animal. The incident is under investigation.

Resolution: A student security aid making his rounds discovered a deer carcass on the front porch of Kappa Sigma around 4:30 AM. The deer had been partially burned and mutilated, and the intestines removed. Public Safety investigated this in cooperation with the Lewisburg police and learned that the deer had been driven to the Alumni House and dropped off by persons unknown, dragged to the back of Phi Gamma Delta and placed on the fire pit there, then dragged across the Kappa Sigma yard and placed on the porch of Kappa Sigma. Parts of the deer were found throughout the area. An investigation determined that a Phi Gamma Delta brother had found the deer in their fire pit, thought it a joke by Kappa Sigma, and placed it on the Kappa Sigma porch. Public Safety was unable to determine who brought the deer to campus initially, but the police believed that someone hit the deer with a car and disposed of it on campus. The student who found and moved the deer carcass was charged by the Pennsylvania Game Commission with various game law violations, including failure to properly dispose of an animal carcass, and was fined.

March 28, 1999

UNDERAGE CONSUMPTION/PUBLIC URINATION—While on routine patrol, Public Safety observed a University student urinating in the front lawn of Phi Kappa Psi Fraternity. The student did not have a wristband. The student was issued citations for underage consumption and public urination.

Resolution: The student was at the Phi Kappa Psi fraternity and told the officer he was served there. He was under 21 and did not have a wristband, which would have permitted him to be served at the fraternity party. He was charged with disorderly conduct for urinating in public and underage drinking. The fraternity was charged with serving a minor alcohol. Both were found responsible by the University Judicial Board, fined and sanctioned.

April 11, 1999

UNDERAGE CONSUMPTION/ODOR OF SMOKE—Public Safety responded to the Academic quadrangle for the report of a visitor running nude through the area. East Buffalo Township Police responded and issued the individual citations for underage consumption, disorderly conduct and possession of a fraudulent ID.

Resolution: The nude runner in the academic quad was observed by one of the University's student security workers who notified Public Safety and apprehended him. The nude runner was approached and found to be an intoxicated guest of a University student. He said he had no ID. Following through with University policy, Public Safety called the police because the suspect refused to identify himself. When the police arrived, Public Safety clothed the male and transported him to the hall of the student he was visiting. He gave the police officer a false driver's license, a stolen Georgetown University ID and a false name. He was finally identified by the police, who charged him with underage drinking, disorderly conduct and possessing a false driver's license and ID. He later paid a substantial fine for the offenses to the Magistrate and was banned from campus. Public Safety returned the ID to the owner at Georgetown.

April 12, 2000
DISORDERLY CONDUCT/RECOVERED PAINTBALL GUN—Public Safety responded to Larson Hall for the report of three students shooting paintballs in their rooms and causing damage. Public Safety recovered the paintball gun along with paintballs. Citations for disorderly conduct were issued.

Resolution: Through an investigation, Public Safety identified the student that night, after which he admitted guilt. Public Safety charged him in the University Judicial System with disorderly conduct, creating a hazardous condition and possession of a paintball gun. He was found responsible by the Judicial Administrator, fined and given probation and community service. Public Safety confiscated the paintball gun. He could not have it until the last day of school at which time he took it home.

April 15, 2000
DISORDERLY CONDUCT—A student reported to Public Safety that a male had struck her with a toilet plunger while she attended a function at Phi Gamma Delta Fraternity. The incident is under investigation.

Resolution: The intoxicated fraternity brother of Phi Gamma Delta Fraternity got into an argument with a female visitor to the party and poked her with a plunger. She called Public Safety. Public Safety investigated and found the person responsible. She did not wish for police involvement. Public Safety charged him with disorderly conduct and harassment. He was found responsible, fined and given probation and community service by the University Judicial Board. He also had to write a letter of apology to the female student.

September 10, 2000
CRIMINAL MISCHIEF—A student at Hunt Hall reported to Public Safety that upon return to her room, she found a male asleep in her bed. Public Safety located the male and identified him as a visiting University alumna. Upon further investigation the student reported the male had urinated in her dresser drawer causing considerable damage to articles of clothing. The male was cited by the Lewisburg Police Department for disorderly conduct and criminal mischief and will also be cited by the University.

Resolution: Public Safety investigated this and proved that the male had committed these acts. Since he was an alumna, he did not go through the University Judicial System, but instead was charged by Lewisburg Police with disorderly conduct, criminal mischief and harassment. He was fined $100, plus $1,200 restitution to the student for damage, and placed on one year's probation. He also received a "persona-non-grata" (banned from campus until further notice) letter from the University for his conduct.

February 2, 2001
INFORMATION/SUSPICIOUS INCIDENT—A student reported that an unknown male visitor requested assistance from a female student to adjust his jogging clothing at the Fieldhouse. The student felt uncomfortable with the request and spoke with Public Safety. The incident is under investigation.

Resolution: The student was uncertain as to whether or not this was a legitimate request or a possible flasher. Since the requester did not do anything wrong and the complainant had no other information, after Public Safety searched the area, we closed the case. We placed an alert with a description of the person on the officers' alert board should this occur again.

A special report

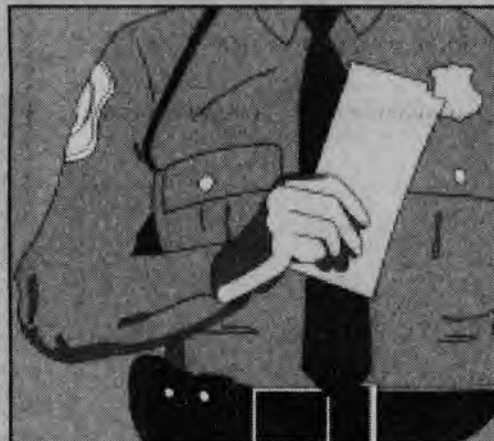

By NATALIE CASP
News Editor

Public Safety receives prompts a report.

"We write a report on every call," DeCerio said.

"If the incident is determined to be unfounded, we simply write a report, close it and file it. Otherwise, we follow the routine steps for conducting an investigation."

All incidents reported to Public Safety are considered public knowledge. The resolution of investigated incidents, though not published by The Bucknellian due to space constraints, are also considered public knowledge. The Bucknellian is not responsible for editing the content of the Public Safety Log. Any reader wishing to learn of an investigation's status may contact Public Safety.

Highlights of resolved incidents from previous Public Safety Logs

Borough Council appoints Bergonia to vacant seat

By REBECCA ROWLAND
Editor-in-Chief

The 3rd Ward seat on the Lewisburg Borough Council and Vacancy Board was filled last Tuesday with the appointment of University employee Peter Bergonia. Five members of the council voted for Bergonia, among them Borough Council President Yvonne Morgan and Council Vice President Judy Wagner.

"I have been active in volunteer work in this community for many years and I felt it was time to become involved in borough government," Bergonia told the Council. "I have the interests and concerns of the rest of my neighbors and feel I can contribute to the governing process."

Bergonia has been a resident of Lewisburg for 30 years, living on St. Louis Street for 20 of them. Bergonia also serves as the utilities supervisor of the Physical Plant.

Professor of Political Science John Peeler and Matthew Cole '01 also submitted their names as candidates.

"I believe [the community] thinks [being associated with the University] is a plus because Bucknell is such an important part of Lewisburg," Peeler said. "But the University community shouldn't expect to dominate."

Bergonia echoed that statement, saying, "Being involved with the University is a plus in my eyes, [but] I am not a spokesman for the University."

While Bergonia has made it clear that he will not use his position on the council to advance the agenda of the University, there are some who think that a connection between the University and the council is not only fine, but desirable.

"I wanted to bring the students' perspective to the council and give us a more equitable share in the decisions of the council," Cole said of his candidacy. "There are several townspeople who are so radically against students that we need an ally in the council to be a voice of reason for the students."

Professor Peeler agreed, saying, "The Council needs to have members who understand the University."

Cole, having lived downtown for five of his eight semesters at the University, is a strong advocate of retaining students' privileges to live off-campus. The crux of his and his supporters' argument rests in the learning experience of living off-campus.

"I have gone through the fourth ranked engineering program in the nation, but have learned so much more during the past four years... living off-campus has been a big part of that," Cole said. "If the administration were to eliminate that opportunity, everyone would lose."

Complaints of noise violations, decreasing property value and a general disrespect for the non-student community have plagued the off-campus living issue. While members of the University's administration have said they would like to see all students back on campus by 2010, there is opposition to this proposal. Cole saw running for a seat on the Borough Council as one way of advancing the position. "The student body is large enough that if someone were to aggressively go after something like a seat on the council, and got students involved and out to vote, they could win and create a big stir," Cole said. Despite the fact that he has no immediate plans to be a voice of the University community, Bergonia brings experience in community service, along with familiarity and admiration for Lewisburg and its residents, to the council.

Peter Bergonia was appointed to the Borough Council Tuesday, Feb. 20.

"My wife Jackie and I have raised four children in this neighborhood," Bergonia said. "We care about it."

Bergonia will serve as councilman for the rest of 2001.

World Briefs

Strong quake hits Pacific Northwest

SEATTLE, Washington (CNN) — A strong earthquake shook the Pacific Northwest on Wednesday, shattering windows in downtown Seattle and rattling Portland, Ore., for nearly half a minute. There was no immediate word of injuries.

The quake, estimated at a preliminary magnitude of 7.0, hit at approximately 10:55 a.m., according to federal officials at the West Coast and Alaska Tsunami Warning Center in Palmer, Ala. Seismologists at the University of Washington said the epicenter of the quake was 11 miles northeast of Olympia, about 30 miles southwest of Seattle.

Thirteen die in UK rail crash

GREAT HECK, England (CNN) — Thirteen people have died and more than 50 were injured after a high-speed train crash on one of the fastest sections of track in Britain.

The accident happened when a passenger train ploughed into a Land Rover jeep towing a trailer that had slid down a motorway embankment onto the rail track.

The train, which was traveling at more than 100mph derailed and smashed into a freight train traveling on parallel track and in the opposite direction.

Milosevic investigation ordered

BELGRADE, Yugoslavia — Prosecutors have ordered police to carry out a criminal investigation into former Yugoslav President Slobodan Milosevic.

A statement from the Belgrade prosecutor's office said on Wednesday that the inquiry was the first legal step in a process that could result in Milosevic's arrest.

Police are to investigate allegations that Milosevic smuggled more than 400 pounds of gold first to Switzerland then to two other unnamed countries, before he was forced from power last year.

Palestinian girl—latest victims of Mideast violence

JERUSALEM (CNN) — Palestinian gunfire apparently wounded a young Palestinian girl traveling north of Jerusalem on Wednesday in a car bearing Israeli license plates, according to Israeli police.

According to police, the girl was not seriously injured. Palestinians have previously opened fire on vehicles traveling through the area of the West Bank where Wednesday's shooting took place. Police had no further information on the incident.

Refugees leave Kalimantan in droves

JAKARTA, Indonesia — International aid officials are bracing themselves for a wave of refugees to arrive in Indonesia's East Java from the troubled Central Kalimantan province.

Little violence has been reported in the region Wednesday, as Indonesian security officials patrolled the area with orders to shoot on sight.

Police are cracking down after 10 days of ethnic violence that has claimed hundreds of lives. They shot five people who were caught looting shops in the Central Kalimantan town of Sampit, and in the provincial capital, Palangkaraya.

Soldier on trial for Chechen murder

ROSTOV-ON-DON, Russia — A landmark trial has begun of a Russian army commander charged with murdering an 18-year-old Chechen woman in the breakfast republic.

The trial of Colonel Yuri Budanov, who is charged with kidnapping and murdering Heda Kungayeva, is a rare prosecution amid claims of abuses by Russian forces in Chechnya.

Proceedings opened on Wednesday as the Council of Europe's human rights commissioner Alvaro Gil-Robles flew to Chechnya to investigate the current situation in the republic.

Fresh fighting on Kosovo border

BUJANOVAC, Yugoslavia — Violence has broken out again in southern Serbia's Presevo Valley, with a Serb policeman injured in a clash with ethnic Albanian guerrillas.

The incident happened as a NATO-delegation was due to arrive at the nearby town of Bujanovac to discuss the crisis in the area with Serbian Deputy Prime Minister Nebojsa Covic. The violence has claimed an estimated 30 lives in southern Serbia over the last year.

Bush makes first stop on tax-cut tour

BEAVER, Pennsylvania (CNN) — President George W. Bush took his arguments for $1.6 trillion in federal tax cuts over 10 years on the road Wednesday, making his first stop in Beaver, Pennsylvania.

There, the president held a panel discussion dubbed a "leadership forum," including Caroline Renninger, chief executive officer of Control Concepts, and other business leaders.

"The best way to do it is to treat everybody fair and say, 'If you pay taxes, you get relief,'" said Bush, who was answered by a round of applause.

Sell-off on Wall Street

NEW YORK (CNN) — Fears that interest rates won't fall anytime soon sparked a major U.S. stock market sell-off late Wednesday.

The losses came after Alan Greenspan, the Federal Reserve chairman, told Congress that the economy, though weak, may have improved recently. Those words disappointed investors who hoped a more dire outlook from the powerful banker would prompt the immediate rate cut Wall Street craves.

"Greenspan's not panicking," said John Lonski, economist at Moody's Investors Service.

But some investors did, sending the Nasdaq composite index toward another 26-month low. The Dow Jones industrial average tumbled more than 100 points.

Compiled by Laura Day,
courtesy of cnn.com

West Branch announces winners

The nationally published literary magazine held a contest for students

By JENNIFER JENCURA
Staff Writer

The editors of West Branch literary magazine recently announced the prize-winning stories and poems from their first literary contest held last semester. West Branch receives more than 1,000 submissions each year from professional adult writers across the country, but this was the first time the magazine sponsored a contest for Bucknell undergraduates. The contest was announced in October and submissions to the contest were due mid-November; winners were announced Jan. 30.

Newly created this past fall, the contest was organized by editors Michael Carlin and Andrew Ciotola.

"When I was considering meaningful ways to use our grant money, I corresponded with several editors at other university-based literary journals to find out how they've developed their relationships with their host institutions," Managing Editor Andrew Ciotola said. "Many have contests like this one. Since there is so much interest in creative writing among Bucknell students, I thought the contest idea would work very well here."

West Branch awarded $300 and one-year subscriptions to the winners. First-place winners in fiction and poetry each received $100; second-place winners received $50 each and all winners, including honorable mention, were given subscriptions to the literary magazine. The contest received approximately 40 short stories and 140 poems for consideration from 67 students.

"Since we are not a typical campus publication, but rather a national magazine for emerging and established writers, it would be unfair of us to publish "in-house" writing," Ciotola said. "We would consider it a serious conflict of interest to publish anyone associated with Bucknell. We held the contest, in part, to reach out to the wider Bucknell community. I believe the idea was a very good one."

Although most of the staff at West Branch took part in the preliminary judging, the final awards were decided at a nearly three-hour meeting between editors Paula Closson Buck, Michael Carlin and Ron Mohring, the resident in creative writing. Originally the editors planned to have only first and second-place awards for each category, but in the end, they decided to also give honorable mentions.

"It took us a long time because it was awfully hard to narrow the field down to one first-place winner and one second-place winner in each category," Associate Editor Michael Carlin said.

Students were judged on a variety of literary aspects.

"What we were looking for was work that demonstrated not only artistic accomplishment but also depth and ambition," Editor Closson Buck said.

Editors also looked for unique styles.

"What I looked for were stories and poems that took risks, had something to say, and were vivid, concise and some way surprising in their exploration of language and subject matter," Carlin said.

Although the majors of the winners varied, the majority were either English majors or minors. The winners found out about the contest either from English professors, signs or emails. Hillary DePiano '02, an English and theater double major, credits her creative writing class as motivation for her first-place story "Aurora."

"I've always been intrigued by the idea of creation," DePiano said. "I felt really honored and surprised to win, especially since I had forgotten about the contest until I received notification that I won. I wrote this piece in about a half a week because it was due for my creative writing seminar. The story is basically about the process of creation and authorship."

Katie Hays '03, winner of the poetry category and second-place winner of the story category, submitted one piece of fiction and three poems, the maximum number of submissions allowed.

"The motivation for the story is my grandfather's death," McCloy said. "I wrote the poem about a week after he died. I submitted it because I write poetry and this was a chance to let other people read it and show me their opinion."

West Branch plans to offer the same literary contest next fall, as a complement to the English Department's Smithsonian Prize in Creative Writing held each spring.

Sponsored by the University, the Pennsylvania Council on the Arts, the Alumni Association for the Arts and the Stadler Center for Poetry, West Branch is a national magazine of poetry, fiction, essays and reviews published twice yearly. The magazine is named after the western branch of the Susquehanna River, the body of water overlooked by the University.

"We saw a good number of strong submissions this year, so I greatly encourage students to re-enter the contest next year," Carlin said.

Awards in poetry were presented to Katie Hays, first-place, "Denying Myopia"; Kellar McCloy, second-place, "Supper"; as well as three honorable mentions, Carmen Mauriello '02, "Underground Pain"; Mary Agnes '01, "Relativity"; and Emily Lohr '01, "Silent Prayer. Hillary DePiano and Katie Hays were awarded first and second place for their stories, "Aurora" and "Fishmother and the Game," respectively. All six of the winning literary works are currently posted on the West Branch webpage.

Although she is happy to have won, Hays understands that the judging of writing is a subjective process. "I know that my poem and story may have been dismissed in another contest and that other pieces in this contest may win in the future. Winning does not make me feel that what I've written is 'good' or even finished," Hays said. "It's a nice feeling though, to think that the story or the poem may have communicated some character, place or theme to someone."

Although she is happy to have won, Hays understands that the judging of writing is a subjective process. "I know that my poem and story may have been dismissed in another contest and that other pieces in this contest may win in the future. Winning does not make me feel that what I've written is 'good' or even finished," Hays said. "It's a nice feeling though, to think that the story or the poem may have communicated some character, place or theme to someone."

Although she is happy to have won, Hays understands that the judging of writing is a subjective process. "I know that my poem and story may have been dismissed in another contest and that other pieces in this contest may win in the future. Winning does not make me feel that what I've written is 'good' or even finished," Hays said. "It's a nice feeling though, to think that the story or the poem may have communicated some character, place or theme to someone."

Although she is happy to have won, Hays understands that the judging of writing is Susquehanna sophomore death puzzling, shocking

By NATALIE CASP

News Editor

After what has already been a dismal year for college campuses across the country, another student at a neighboring university died on Monday.

Susquehanna University sophomore Matthew Black, 19, of Huntington Pa., was found dead by his roommate just before noon on Monday.

Jared Gorenz, Black's roommate and fellow sophomore Crusader, called Selingsgrove Police and EMS personnel to their room in West Hall, according to police reports.

An autopsy was performed Tuesday morning; preliminary investigations reveal Black most likely died from asphyxiation, but complete toxicology results may not be available for several weeks or months, according to Snyder County Coroner Bruce Hummel.

Susquehanna University President L. Jay Lemons released a statement Tuesday morning in memorial of Black.

"We are deeply saddened by the loss of a member of the Susquehanna University community and our hearts go out to Matt's family, friends and classmates," Lemons wrote. "They have our deepest sympathy and prayers that God may comfort them through this difficult time."

Black's hall-mate Patrick Bagnell, according to a Susquehanna University press release, said, "It's just been really eerie here [in West], really quiet. It's just been really shocking."

Sources reported that flowers and notes piled up outside Black's second floor room in West Hall. Students stood near the door, some crying, others just staring in disbelief.

The University has already reached out to grieving students by offering extended counseling.

Director of Counseling Dr. Kathy Bradley said shock will be one of the first things people feel. She held open office hours Monday and Tuesday and will be taking appointments from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m. Wednesday through Friday for students who feel the need to talk, according to a press release.

"It is shocking, especially for those of you that might have seen Matt [Sunday]," Bradley said to students at a Monday night meeting. "It's a hard thing to get your brain around."

Sophomore Zigmaz Kaknevicius was Black's resident assistant. According to a press release, he said the hall has been very quiet and people are taking it in their own ways. He added that many of Black's close friends have gone home.

"He was one of the nicest kids on the hallway. He always said 'hi,'" Kaknevicius said. "I would never have expected something like this."

According to Betsy Robertson, director of public relations, Black's family came to campus Tuesday. No plans have been made for a memorial yet, she said, and believes that it will more than likely be scheduled for after spring break.

Sororities celebrate Badge Day

The National Panhellenic Council (NPC), an umbrella organization for 26 national women's fraternities, will commemorate International Badge Day on Monday, March 5. The University's sorority women will wear their sorority pins and white shirts honoring their specific sorority affiliation. The theme of the year's Badge Day is, "enduring values, eternal friendships... honor your badge on International Badge Day!"

Press Release

Recent research done by the Research Initiative of the NPC and the North American Interfraternity Conference (NIC) indicates that members of sororities and fraternities have a higher retention rate as college students, tend to donate larger gifts to charities and are more likely to be involved in community service and civic affairs during adulthood.

These positive results of sorority and fraternity membership were confirmed by NPC Chairperson Marian K. Williams (Kappa Kappa Gamma).

"As Greek women around the continent display their badges on International Badge Day, they can take pride in knowing that to be Greek is to embody the enduring values that we all believe in: community involvement and pride, academic achievement, leadership, integrity, and lifetime friendships," Williams said.

For more information about NPC's International Badge Day, contact the NPC Office at (317) 872-3185 or visit NPC's website at www.npcwomen.org.

Courtesy of Charlotte Schmidt

You Can't BEAT the BONGO!

Bongo Bongo Dip!

A delicious hot, cheesy dip, topped with melted cheese, mushrooms, and shredded chicken. Served with Tostitos Cornitos. Enough to share!

$5.95

ONLY AT

77 North Market Street
SKELINGROVE
374-9841

201 Hill Street
DANVILLE
275-5170

Nader inspires packed Weis Center

NADER From page A1

put limits on their liberal education at the University, claiming that the "great gap in formal education today is citizen training."

Considering the most important job to be that of a public citizen, Nader has dedicated his life to being a "consumer advocate." Since graduating from Harvard Law School, he has founded over 50 advocacy groups, helped create the Environmental Protection Agency and founded the Clean Air Act and National Traffic and Motor Vehicle Safety Act.

He also brought the corporate giant General Motors to trial, after investigating inadequate automobile safety precautions, and won. Today, safety measures such as seatbelts, tighter door locks and contractible steering compartments are practically taken for granted. However, as a result of Nader's efforts, the death rate due to automobile accidents has plummeted from 5.6 deaths per 100 vehicles to 1.6 deaths.

Nader was instrumental in passing the Freedom of Information Act which gives citizens the right to government documents.

"Information is the currency of democracy," Nader said. "Are we going to make knowledge count?"

Stressing the importance of putting knowledge into action, Nader touched on examples of corporate domination and how consumers can fight it. The principal regulator in today's society is not the government, but in the hands of businesses, according to Nader.

"The remoteness of our government structure is even more undermining of our democracy," Nader said.

Health insurance fraud and abuse by insurance firms—examples of corporate crimes—have accounted for $110 billion in the last year, Nader reported. This money would cover half of all Americans who do not have health insurance.

However, corporate crimes do not stop with monetary consequences.

Consumers today are victims of contracts with seemingly endless fine print, relieving corporations of responsibility and limiting their liability. This restricts the consumer's protection against faulty products from certain industries.

"[Corporations] have become so imperial. Sometimes when you sign a contract you have to give up your right to go to trial and must settle for binding arbitration," Nader said.

"Corporations are quite different than you and me—they can be in thousands of places at once and they can undermine communities."

Today, corporations continue to exercise their control, but despite the economic power of the United States, many consumers' rights have fallen to the wayside due to business dominance.

In comparing the United States to Western Europe, the latter has provided its citizens with universal health coverage, full-paternity leave, additional public transit, trade union rights and increased retirement benefits. According to Nader, corporate imperialism impedes these improvements in America.

Nader again roused the members of his audience by demanding whether or not "[they] will allow themselves to be trivialized. There is too much power concentrated in the hands of the few who make decisions for the many... and the most serious injustices in the world today won't be addressed by the corporate giants," he said.

Among these injustices are environmental degradation, child poverty and cancer as a result of smoking. The U.S. also has a higher infant mortality rate than Western Europe and a rapidly increasing poverty rate. However, "far house in the summer and fall of 2002 as the Annex is renovated into the new training room. The exact locations in the Fieldhouse where the equipment will be transported have yet to be determined, but the balcony above the racquetball courts seems likely.

Hawley recognized the significance of these inconveniences for students and other members of the University community, but he stressed the need for cooperation for the successful completion of the new athletic complex, the largest construction project ever undertaken by the University.

"During the two year construction period, we are still going to have special events (in the current athletic complex), the sports teams need to practice there, the recreational users need access, and we still have to play all of the sports that we play now there," Hawley said. "So, of course, the construction process has to be sensitive to the athletes, students, visitors and spectators. But it's not going to be easy. There will be inconveniences to endure. Everyone's cooperation is extremely important."

Tickets for the April 20 show go on sale on Wed., March 21 and will be available to those with BUID only until Mon., March 26. After which time they will be available to the general public. There will be no ticket limit per person.

"I am so surprised that Bucknell was able to get Shaggy," Joe Marut '03 said. "I, along with many other Bucknell students, am looking forward to his performance."

"I believe Shaggy will overwhelmingly accomplish all of those objectives," Knox said.

This semester, the concert committee was able to secure Shaggy, a popular pop/rap/reggae, a stark contrast from past venues such as Dave Matthews and Foo Fighters.

Shaggy's "Hotshot" (MCA) begins its fourth week on No. 1 on The Billboard 200, after selling another 271,000 copies in the U.S.

"The students on the committee are very pumped for this show and I am particularly happy for the seniors on the committee who will have this to look back on as their last show," Assistant Dean of Students and Director of Campus Activities and Programs Kari Conrad said. "I would encourage the Bucknell students to get their tickets early as recent conversations with local radio stations indicate a huge draw is likely from the general public."

Shaggy's "Hotshot" (MCA) begins its fourth week on No. 1 on The Billboard 200, after selling another 271,000 copies in the U.S.

"The students on the committee are very pumped for this show and I am particularly happy for the seniors on the committee who will have this to look back on as their last show," Assistant Dean of Students and Director of Campus Activities and Programs Kari Conrad said. "I would encourage the Bucknell students to get their tickets early as recent conversations with local radio stations indicate a huge draw is likely from the general public."

Shaggy's "Hotshot" (MCA) begins its fourth week on No. 1 on The Billboard 200, after selling another 271,000 copies in the U.S.

"The students on the committee are very pumped for this show and I am particularly happy for the seniors on the committee who will have this to look back on as their last show," Assistant Dean of Students and Director of Campus Activities and Programs Kari Conrad said. "I would encourage the Bucknell students to get their tickets early as recent conversations with local radio stations indicate a huge draw is likely from the general public."

Shaggy's "Hotshot" (MCA) begins its fourth week on No. 1 on The Billboard 200, after selling another 271,000 copies in the U.S.

"The students on the committee are very pumped for this show and I am particularly happy for the seniors on the committee who will have this to look back on as their last show," Assistant Dean of Students and Director of Campus Activities and Programs Kari Conrad said. "I would encourage the Bucknell students to get their tickets early as recent conversations with local radio stations indicate a huge draw is likely from the general public."

Shaggy's "Hotshot" (MCA) begins its fourth week on No. 1 on The Billboard 200, after selling another 271,000 copies in the U.S.

"The students on the committee are very pumped for this show and I am particularly happy for the seniors on the committee who will have this to look back on as their last show," Assistant Dean of Students and Director of Campus Activities and Programs Kari Conrad said. "I would encourage the Bucknell students to get their tickets early as recent conversations with local radio stations indicate a huge draw is likely from the general public."

Shaggy's "Hotshot" (MCA) begins its fourth week on No. 1 on The Billboard 200, after selling another 271,000 copies in the U.S.

responsibility and limiting their liability. This restricts the consumer's protection against faulty products from certain industries.

"[Corporations] have become so imperial. Sometimes when you sign a contract you have to give up your right to go to trial and must settle for binding arbitration," Nader said.

"Corporations are quite different than you and me—they can be in thousands of places at once and they can undermine communities."

Today, corporations continue to exercise their control, but despite the economic power of the United States, many consumers' rights have fallen to the wayside due to business dominance.

In comparing the United States to Western Europe, the latter has provided its citizens with universal health coverage, full-paternity leave, additional public transit, trade union rights and increased retirement benefits. According to Nader, corporate imperialism impedes these improvements in America.

Nader again roused the members of his audience by demanding whether or not "[they] will allow themselves to be trivialized. There is too much power concentrated in the hands of the few who make decisions for the many... and the most serious injustices in the world today won't be addressed by the corporate giants," he said.

Among these injustices are environmental degradation, child poverty and cancer as a result of smoking. The U.S. also has a higher infant mortality rate than Western Europe and a rapidly increasing poverty rate. However, "far house in the summer and fall of 2002 as the Annex is renovated into the new training room. The exact locations in the Fieldhouse where the equipment will be transported have yet to be determined, but the balcony above the racquetball courts seems likely.

Hawley recognized the significance of these inconveniences for students and other members of the University community, but he stressed the need for cooperation for the successful completion of the new athletic complex, the largest construction project ever undertaken by the University.

"During the two year construction period, we are still going to have special events (in the current athletic complex), the sports teams need to practice there, the recreational users need access, and we still have to play all of the sports that we play now there," Hawley said. "So, of course, the construction process has to be sensitive to the athletes, students, visitors and spectators. But it's not going to be easy. There will be inconveniences to endure. Everyone's cooperation is extremely important."

Tickets for the April 20 show go on sale on Wed., March 21 and will be available to those with BUID only until Mon., March 26. After which time they will be available to the general public. There will be no ticket limit per person.

"I am so surprised that Bucknell was able to get Shaggy," Joe Marut '03 said. "I, along with many other Bucknell students, am looking forward to his performance."

"I believe Shaggy will overwhelmingly accomplish all of those objectives," Knox said.

This semester, the concert committee was able to secure Shaggy, a popular pop/rap/reggae, a stark contrast from past venues such as Dave Matthews and Foo Fighters.

Shaggy's "Hotshot" (MCA) begins its fourth week on No. 1 on The Billboard 200, after selling another 271,000 copies in the U.S.

"The students on the committee are very pumped for this show and I am particularly happy for the seniors on the committee who will have this to look back on as their last show," Assistant Dean of Students and Director of Campus Activities and Programs Kari Conrad said. "I would encourage the Bucknell students to get their tickets early as recent conversations with local radio stations indicate a huge draw is likely from the general public."

Shaggy's "Hotshot" (MCA) begins its fourth week on No. 1 on The Billboard 200, after selling another 271,000 copies in the U.S.

"The students on the committee are very pumped for this show and I am particularly happy for the seniors on the committee who will have this to look back on as their last show," Assistant Dean of Students and Director of Campus Activities and Programs Kari Conrad said. "I would encourage the Bucknell students to get their tickets early as recent conversations with local radio stations indicate a huge draw is likely from the general public."

Shaggy's "Hotshot" (MCA) begins its fourth week on No. 1 on The Billboard 200, after selling another 271,000 copies in the U.S.

"The students on the committee are very pumped for this show and I am particularly happy for the seniors on the committee who will have this to look back on as their last show," Assistant Dean of Students and Director of Campus Activities and Programs Kari Conrad said. "I would encourage the Bucknell students to get their tickets early as recent conversations with local radio stations indicate a huge draw is likely from the general public."

Shaggy's "Hotshot" (MCA) begins its fourth week on No. 1 on The Billboard 200, after selling another 271,000 copies in the U.S.

"The students on the committee are very pumped for this show and I am particularly happy for the seniors on the committee who will have this to look back on as their last show," Assistant Dean of Students and Director of Campus Activities and Programs Kari Conrad said. "I would encourage the Bucknell students to get their tickets early as recent conversations with local radio stations indicate a huge draw is likely from the general public."

Shaggy's "Hotshot" (MCA) begins its fourth week on No. 1 on The Billboard 200, after selling another 271,000 copies in the U.S.

"The students on the committee are very pumped for this show and I am particularly happy for the seniors on the committee who will have this to look back on as their last show," Assistant Dean of Students and Director of Campus Activities and Programs Kari Conrad said. "I would encourage the Bucknell students to get their tickets early as recent conversations with local radio stations indicate a huge draw is likely from the general public."

Shaggy's "Hotshot" (MCA) begins its fourth week on No. 1 on The Billboard 200, after selling another 271,000 copies in the U.S.

"The students on the committee are very pumped for this show and I am particularly happy for the seniors on the committee who will have this to look back on as their last show," Assistant Dean of Students and Director of Campus Activities and Programs Kari Conrad said. "I would encourage the Bucknell students to get their tickets early as recent conversations with local radio stations indicate a huge draw is likely from the general public."

Shaggy's "Hotshot" (MCA) begins its fourth week on No. 1 on The Billboard 200, after selling another 271,000 copies in the U.S.

"The students on the committee are very pumped for this show and I am particularly happy for the seniors on the committee who will have this to look back on as their last show," Assistant Dean of Students and Director of Campus Activities and Programs Kari Conrad said. "I would encourage the Bucknell students to get their tickets early as recent conversations with local radio stations indicate a huge draw is likely from the general public."

Shaggy's "Hotshot" (MCA) begins its fourth week on No. 1 on The Billboard 200, after selling another 271,000 copies in the U.S.

"The students on the committee are very pumped for this show and I am particularly happy for the seniors on the committee who will have this to look back on as their last show," Assistant Dean of Students and Director of Campus Activities and Programs Kari Conrad said. "I would encourage the Bucknell students to get their tickets early as recent conversations with local radio stations indicate a huge draw is likely from the general public."

Shaggy's "Hotshot" (MCA) begins its fourth week on No. 1 on The Billboard 200, after selling another 271,000 copies in the U.S.

"The students on the committee are very pumped for this show and I am particularly happy for the seniors on the committee who will have this to look back on as their last show," Assistant Dean of Students and Director of Campus Activities and Programs Kari Conrad said. "I would encourage the Bucknell students to get their tickets early as recent conversations with local radio stations indicate a huge draw is likely from the general public."

Shaggy's "Hotshot" (MCA) begins its fourth week on No. 1 on The Billboard 200, after selling another 271,000 copies in the U.S.

"The students on the committee are very pumped for this show and I am particularly happy for the seniors on the committee who will have this to look back on as their last show," Assistant Dean of Students and Director of Campus Activities and Programs Kari Conrad said. "I would encourage the Bucknell students to get their tickets early as recent conversations with local radio stations indicate a huge draw is likely from the general public."

Shaggy's "Hotshot" (MCA) begins its fourth week on No. 1 on The Billboard 200, after selling another 271,000 copies in the U.S.

"The students on the committee are very pumped for this show and I am particularly happy for the seniors on the committee who will have this to look back on as their last show," Assistant Dean of Students and Director of Campus Activities and Programs Kari Conrad said. "I would encourage the Bucknell students to get their tickets early as recent conversations with local radio stations indicate a huge draw is likely from the general public."

Shaggy's "Hotshot" (MCA) begins its fourth week on No. 1 on The Billboard 200, after selling another 271,000 copies in the U.S.

"The students on the committee are very pumped for this show and I am particularly happy for the seniors on the committee who will have this to look back on as their last show," Assistant Dean of Students and Director of Campus Activities and Programs Kari Conrad said. "I would encourage the Bucknell students to get their tickets early as recent conversations with local radio stations indicate a huge draw is likely from the general public."

Shaggy's "Hotshot" (MCA) begins its fourth week on No. 1 on The Billboard 200, after selling another 271,000 copies in the U.S.

"The students on the committee are very pumped for this show and I am particularly happy for the seniors on the committee who will have this to look back on as their last show," Assistant Dean of Students and Director of Campus Activities and Programs Kari Conrad said. "I would encourage the Bucknell students to get their tickets early as recent conversations with local radio stations indicate a huge draw is likely from the general public."

Shaggy's "Hotshot" (MCA) begins its fourth week on No. 1 on The Billboard 200, after selling another 271,000 copies in the U.S.

"The students on the committee are very pumped for this show and I am particularly happy for the seniors on the committee who will have this to look back on as their last show," Assistant Dean of Students and Director of Campus Activities and Programs Kari Conrad said. "I would encourage the Bucknell students to get their tickets early as recent conversations with local radio stations indicate a huge draw is likely from the general public."

Shaggy's "Hotshot" (MCA) begins its fourth week on No. 1 on The Billboard 200, after selling another 271,000 copies in the U.S.

responsibility and limiting their liability. This restricts the consumer's protection against faulty products from certain industries.

"[Corporations] have become so imperial. Sometimes when you sign a contract you have to give up your right to go to trial and must settle for binding arbitration," Nader said.

"Corporations are quite different than you and me—they can be in thousands of places at once and they can undermine communities."

Today, corporations continue to exercise their control, but despite the economic power of the United States, many consumers' rights have fallen to the wayside due to business dominance.

In comparing the United States to Western Europe, the latter has provided its citizens with universal health coverage, full-paternity leave, additional public transit, trade union rights and increased retirement benefits. According to Nader, corporate imperialism impedes these improvements in America.

Nader again roused the members of his audience by demanding whether or not "[they] will allow themselves to be trivialized. There is too much power concentrated in the hands of the few who make decisions for the many... and the most serious injustices in the world today won't be addressed by the corporate giants," he said.

Among these injustices are environmental degradation, child poverty and cancer as a result of smoking. The U.S. also has a higher infant mortality rate than Western Europe and a rapidly increasing poverty rate. However, "far house in the summer and fall of 2002 as the Annex is renovated into the new training room. The exact locations in the Fieldhouse where the equipment will be transported have yet to be determined, but the balcony above the racquetball courts seems likely.

Hawley recognized the significance of these inconveniences for students and other members of the University community, but he stressed the need for cooperation for the successful completion of the new athletic complex, the largest construction project ever undertaken by the University.

"During the two year construction period, we are still going to have special events (in the current athletic complex), the sports teams need to practice there, the recreational users need access, and we still have to play all of the sports that we play now there," Hawley said. "So, of course, the construction process has to be sensitive to the athletes, students, visitors and spectators. But it's not going to be easy. There will be inconveniences to endure. Everyone's cooperation is extremely important."

Tickets for the April 20 show go on sale on Wed., March 21 and will be available to those with BUID only until Mon., March 26. After which time they will be available to the general public. There will be no ticket limit per person.

"I am so surprised that Bucknell was able to get Shaggy," Joe Marut '03 said. "I, along with many other Bucknell students, am looking forward to his performance."

"I believe Shaggy will overwhelmingly accomplish all of those objectives," Knox said.

This semester, the concert committee was able to secure Shaggy, a popular pop/rap/reggae, a stark contrast from past venues such as Dave Matthews and Foo Fighters.

Shaggy's "Hotshot" (MCA) begins its fourth week on No. 1 on The Billboard 200, after selling another 271,000 copies in the U.S.

"The students on the committee are very pumped for this show and I am particularly happy for the seniors on the committee who will have this to look back on as their last show," Assistant Dean of Students and Director of Campus Activities and Programs Kari Conrad said. "I would encourage the Bucknell students to get their tickets early as recent conversations with local radio stations indicate a huge draw is likely from the general public."

Shaggy's "Hotshot" (MCA) begins its fourth week on No. 1 on The Billboard 200, after selling another 271,000 copies in the U.S.

"The students on the committee are very pumped for this show and I am particularly happy for the seniors on the committee who will have this to look back on as their last show," Assistant Dean of Students and Director of Campus Activities and Programs Kari Conrad said. "I would encourage the Bucknell students to get their tickets early as recent conversations with local radio stations indicate a huge draw is likely from the general public."

Shaggy's "Hotshot" (MCA) begins its fourth week on No. 1 on The Billboard 200, after selling another 271,000 copies in the U.S.

"The students on the committee are very pumped for this show and I am particularly happy for the seniors on the committee who will have this to look back on as their last show," Assistant Dean of Students and Director of Campus Activities and Programs Kari Conrad said. "I would encourage the Bucknell students to get their tickets early as recent conversations with local radio stations indicate a huge draw is likely from the general public."

Shaggy's "Hotshot" (MCA) begins its fourth week on No. 1 on The Billboard 200, after selling another 271,000 copies in the U.S.

"The students on the committee are very pumped for this show and I am particularly happy for the seniors on the committee who will have this to look back on as their last show," Assistant Dean of Students and Director of Campus Activities and Programs Kari Conrad said. "I would encourage the Bucknell students to get their tickets early as recent conversations with local radio stations indicate a huge draw is likely from the general public."

Shaggy's "Hotshot" (MCA) begins its fourth week on No. 1 on The Billboard 200, after selling another 271,000 copies in the U.S.

"The students on the committee are very pumped for this show and I am particularly happy for the seniors on the committee who will have this to look back on as their last show," Assistant Dean of Students and Director of Campus Activities and Programs Kari Conrad said. "I would encourage the Bucknell students to get their tickets early as recent conversations with local radio stations indicate a huge draw is likely from the general public."

Shaggy's "Hotshot" (MCA) begins its fourth week on No. 1 on The Billboard 200, after selling another 271,000 copies in the U.S.

"The students on the committee are very pumped for this show and I am particularly happy for the seniors on the committee who will have this to look back on as their last show," Assistant Dean of Students and Director of Campus Activities and Programs Kari Conrad said. "I would encourage the Bucknell students to get their tickets early as recent conversations with local radio stations indicate a huge draw is likely from the general public."

Shaggy's "Hotshot" (MCA) begins its fourth week on No. 1 on The Billboard 200, after selling another 271,000 copies in the U.S.

"The students on the committee are very pumped for this show and I am particularly happy for the seniors on the committee who will have this to look back on as their last show," Assistant Dean of Students and Director of Campus Activities and Programs Kari Conrad said. "I would encourage the Bucknell students to get their tickets early as recent conversations with local radio stations indicate a huge draw is likely from the general public."

Shaggy's "Hotshot" (MCA) begins its fourth week on No. 1 on The Billboard 200, after selling another 271,000 copies in the U.S.

"The students on the committee are very pumped for this show and I am particularly happy for the seniors on the committee who will have this to look back on as their last show," Assistant Dean of Students and Director of Campus Activities and Programs Kari Conrad said. "I would encourage the Bucknell students to get their tickets early as recent conversations with local radio stations indicate a huge draw is likely from the general public."

Shaggy's "Hotshot" (MCA) begins its fourth week on No. 1 on The Billboard 200, after selling another 271,000 copies in the U.S.

"The students on the committee are very pumped for this show and I am particularly happy for the seniors on the committee who will have this to look back on as their last show," Assistant Dean of Students and Director of Campus Activities and Programs Kari Conrad said. "I would encourage the Bucknell students to get their tickets early as recent conversations with local radio stations indicate a huge draw is likely from the general public."

Shaggy's "Hotshot" (MCA) begins its fourth week on No. 1 on The Billboard 200, after selling another 271,000 copies in the U.S.

"The students on the committee are very pumped for this show and I am particularly happy for the seniors on the committee who will have this to look back on as their last show," Assistant Dean of Students and Director of Campus Activities and Programs Kari Conrad said. "I would encourage the Bucknell students to get their tickets early as recent conversations with local radio stations indicate a huge draw is likely from the general public."

Shaggy's "Hotshot" (MCA) begins its fourth week on No. 1 on The Billboard 200, after selling another 271,000 copies in the U.S.

"The students on the committee are very pumped for this show and I am particularly happy for the seniors on the committee who will have this to look back on as their last show," Assistant Dean of Students and Director of Campus Activities and Programs Kari Conrad said. "I would encourage the Bucknell students to get their tickets early as recent conversations with local radio stations indicate a huge draw is likely from the general public."

Bison Scoreboard

Women's Basketball

Bucknell	80
Albany	64
	fg	ft	r	p
Almind	5-10	9-10	7	19
Quimby	0-3	2-2	6	2
Creamer	9-19	3-4	6	23
LeBlanc	2-4	2-2	6	6
Franks	3-7	4-5	7	10
Rounly	1-10	7-7	9	19
Flemming	3-3	1-4	5	7
May	0-0	4-4	2	4
3pt.
Creamer	2-4

3pt.

Cramer 2-4

SEASON STATS

20-7 (5-1)

	fg	pct	3-pt.	a	r	ppg
Franks	45-139	.324	17-52	45	64	7.3
Quimby	97-203	.478	0-0	26	149	15.0
May	9-25	.360	3-11	27	11	1.4
Creamer	133-279	.477	35-87	97	89	20.2
Helsing	9-25	.360	6-14	8	17	3.6
Almind	134-285	.470	6-17	24	102	17.2
Rounly	32-71	.451	0-1	7	52	4.8
LeBlanc	41-87	.471	0-0	25	119	6.2
Valdner	3-8	.375	0-0	1	9	1.5
Fleming	5-12	.417	0-0	0	25	9
Forence	1-5	.200	0-0	0	10	8
Castillo	1-2	.500	0-0	0	0	4
Putnoky	0-0	.000	0-0	1	1	0

STATISTICS

COMPILED BY

MATTHEW

HERBERT '02

COURTESY OF

ATHLETICS

COMMUNICATION

Men's Basketball

Bucknell	76
Albany	67
	fg	ft	r	p
Werner	5-9	7-11	12	17
Lalugba	7-12	2-4	9	19
Ramage	3-10	6-6	4	15
Blankenship	0-2	0-4	3	0
Bailey	6-9	8-11	2	20
Quinn	1-3	2-2	1	5
Hardenbergh	1-2	0-0	2	3
Slater	0-0	0-0	4	0

3pt.

Ramage 3-7

Quinn 1-2

Hardenbergh 1-2

SEASON STATS

13-14 (2-4)

	fg	pct	3-pt.	a	r
bailey	101-228	.443	25-57	57	69
luluga	119-225	.529	0-0	26	162
ramage	40-107	.374	20-55	15	24
blankenship	63-127	.583	13-41	53	40
werner	63-155	.406	5-17	28	93
santos	11-32	.344	0-0	19	43
bennet	15-38	.320	1-6	2	18
webber	5-22	.227	1-14	2	11
roddgers	2-2	1.000	1-1	0	1
ardenberg	21-59	.356	3-22	10	49
nyambi	2-9	.222	0-2	0	2
skornik	1-6	.167	0-0	5	17
slater	12-24	.500	0-2	3	20
white	0-0	.000	0-0	0	2
quinn	2-13	.154	2-8	2	8

Baseball

Bucknell	024	100	030	10	16	1
Liberty	122	020	200	9	6	3
AB	R	H	RBI	BB	K	AB
Joseph	5	2	2	1	0	1
Fishman	5	0	1	0	0	0
Eiben	5	1	1	1	0	0
Lindberg	5	1	2	1	0	1
Ritz	5	2	2	0	0	0
Cann	1	1	0	0	1	0
Batterson	1	0	1	0	0	0
Gething	2	1	2	0	0	0
Herron	4	2	2	4	0	0
Scheetz	5	0	2	0	0	1

Pitching:

H R ER BB K AB

Aron 3.2 3 5 3 6 4 12

Grant 3.1 3 4 4 2 2 12

Allen 1.0 0 0 0 0 0 3

Farmery 1.0 0 0 0 1 1 3

Women's Tennis

Bucknell	6
Cleveland State	1
Singles
1. Martain (CSU) def. Wurzburg
2. Iglis (B) def. Serafini (CSU)
3. Berthod (B) def. Shade (CSU)
4. Bishop (B) def. Johnson (CSU)
5. Maisel (B) def. Green (CSU)
6. Wurzburg (B) def. Bezar (CSU)

Doubles Winners

2. Maisel/Pugno

3. Loyd/Downing

Men

21 out of 34

Men's Notables

200 IM

5. Sheehan 1:55.92

400 IM

5. Sheehan 4:08.35

100-breast

15. Saffos 1:00.97

200-back

12. Feintheil 1:55.78

200-breast

17. Saffos 2:12.28

Women

12 out of 31

Women's Notables

500-free

17. Poda 5:13.45

20. Dolan 5:11.96

150-free

18. Weaver 24.88

200-free

16. Lowe 2:09.49

100-free

14. Lowe 58.85

100-free

7. Faas 17:31.56

10. Weaver 53.36

Individual Scoring

Goals: Rea 5, McLaughlin 4,

Cull 2, Stahler

Assists: McLaughlin 3,

Schober 3, Hofstetter

Steals: McLaughlin 2,

Chesterfield 2, Schober 2, Cull

2, Hofstetter 1, Stahler 1, Rea

1, Clarke 1

Ejections Drawn: Stahler 2,

Rea

Saves: Sussman 17

Saves: Chesterfield 11

Swimming

Bucknell	6
Cleveland State	1
Singles
1. Martain (CSU) def. Wurzburg
2. Iglis (B) def. Serafini (CSU)
3. Berthod (B) def. Shade (CSU)
4. Bishop (B) def. Johnson (CSU)
5. Maisel (B) def. Green (CSU)
6. Wurzburg (B) def. Bezar (CSU)

Doubles Winners

2. Maisel/Pugno

3. Loyd/Downing

Men

21 out of 34

Men's Notables

200 IM

5. Sheehan 1:55.92

400 IM

5. Sheehan 4:08.35

100-breast

15. Saffos 1:00.97

200-back

12. Feintheil 1:55.78

200-breast

17. Saffos 2:12.28

Women

12 out of 31

Women's Notables

500-free

17. Poda 5:13.45

20. Dolan 5:11.96

150-free

18. Weaver 24.88

200-free

16. Lowe 2:09.49

100-free

14. Lowe 58.85

100-free

7. Faas 17:31.56

10. Weaver 53.36

Individual Scoring

Goals: Rea 5, McLaughlin 4,

Cull 2, Stahler

Assists: McLaughlin 3,

Schober 3, Hofstetter

Steals: McLaughlin 2,

Chesterfield 2, Schober 2, Cull

2, Hofstetter 1, Stahler 1, Rea

1, Clarke 1

Ejections Drawn: Stahler 2,

Rea

Saves: Sussman 17

Saves: Chesterfield 11

Dance marathon heating up

Shane Battier is the leader of a talented and experienced Duke squad.

By ROB SCHMICKER
Staff Writer

The playoffs: the sacred land that all pro sports teams hope to reach in their quest for a championship.

But the playoffs are also selective, as only a small proportion of the teams are able to compete in the second season.

This is not true, however, in college basketball, where virtually all teams have a shot of making the postseason. This is what makes March Madness the most exciting time of year for sports fans.

And it's right around the corner. But before the Big Dance even starts, we are treated to one of the best spectacles in sports: Championship Week. All season long, teams have been battling their rivals for higher seedings in the playoffs. For the smaller conferences, like the Patriot League, a team with 20 wins won't make it into the NCAA Tournament if they slip up in their conference tournament, which is why they are so important.

There are six major conferences where the conference tournaments aren't as important. Starting with the ACC, which has regained its title as the toughest conference in America, we see that North Carolina, Duke, Maryland, and the so-called "Giant Killer" Virginia are in no matter what happens to them in the ACC Tournament.

Wake Forest started off the year 12-0 and were ranked as high as fifth in the nation before they hit the conference schedule. They are now 7-8 in the ACC and have dropped out of the polls, but still warrant some serious consideration for an at-large bid. They beat Kansas by 31 and their losing conference can be overlooked since it is the ACC. Georgia Tech (16-10, 8-7) is the other team on the bubble, but wins against Kentucky, UCLA and a sweep of Virginia could get them in. Both teams deserve a bid in my mind, but only one will make it leaving the ACC with five teams.

Next comes the crazy Big East where nothing has gone as planned this year. Instead of being ruled by Seton Hall, we have seen a very balanced conference led by surprising Boston College. As always, they will receive their normal six bids, led by Syracuse, Georgetown, Notre Dame, and BC. That leaves four teams battling for the last two births. UConn picked up a huge win over Monday, but their out-of-conference schedule is nothing to write home about.

Providence, Villanova, and West Virginia are the other bubble teams, all who deserve serious consideration. In the end, I like Providence and West Virginia to sneak in, but always beware of St. John's, who could get hot and win the Big East Tournament.

In the Big Ten there are six teams that are locks for the tournament. Michigan St. and Illinois lead a talented group made up of Ohio St., Wisconsin, Iowa, and the Indiana Hoosiers, who make the tournament in their first year since the Bob Knight firing.

There are no bubble teams here, but Penn St. could open some eyes with a good tournament showing.

A little further west, the Big 12 is led by powerhouse Iowa St. and Kansas, but from there it's a little cloudy. Texas and Oklahoma seem to be in as well, leaving Missouri and Oklahoma St. on the bubble.

Missouri's hopes were all but shattered after their 15-point loss to Texas on Monday, but the Tigers could sneak in with a good showing in the Big 12 Tournament.

Ultimately, neither bubble team will make it though, leaving the Big 12 with four teams dancing.

That leaves the other two major conferences, both of which couldn't be more different. The Pac-10 will receive four bids, led by current no. 1 Stanford and Pre-Season no. 1 Arizona, along with Cal and UCLA. That leaves USC, who has gone cold of late, on the outside looking in.

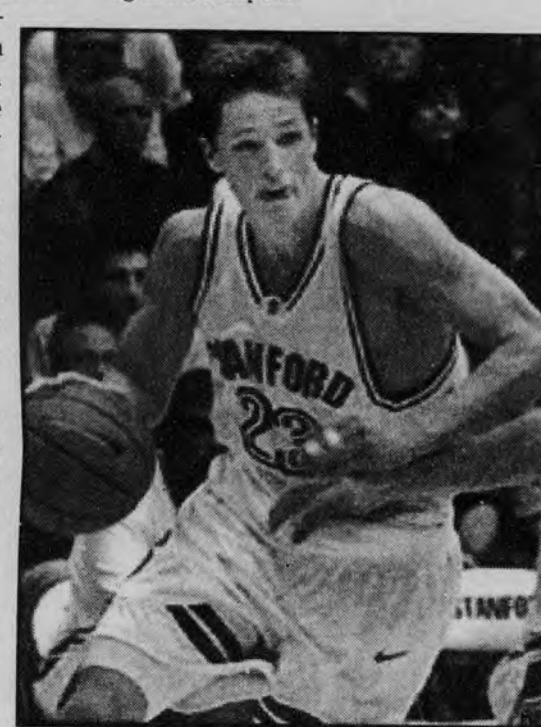

The SEC, on the other hand, has no dominant team, but could see six teams getting in. Last year's runners-up, Florida, have stayed in the hunt all year even with the departure of Mike Miller and can't be overlooked in March. The other teams that look to be locks are Ole Miss, Tennessee, Alabama, and Kentucky, who has been one of the hottest teams in the nation since starting 2-5. The other spot goes to a personal favorite, Georgia. They are 15-12 on the year, but have played the toughest schedule in America. They swept Tennessee and have road SEC victories against Ole Miss and Florida. If they can win the remaining two and then a game in the SEC tournament, I can't possibly see how the Dawgs can be overlooked.

After careful analysis, it seems that 31 teams are assured spots, but that could change once the conference tournaments start. If teams from the mid-strength conferences like Creighton (23-6, 14-4) or Butler (20-7, 11-3) are upset in their respective tournaments, they still could make it into the Big Dance. If they do, then they're single-handedly bursting many bubbles, as there won't be enough spots for all the deserving teams. Besides the top six conferences, there are 25 more automatic births, with 14 coming in one-bid conferences. That leaves nine at-large spots for a couple dozen teams, assuming everything goes right in the smaller conferences.

So, who besides the aforementioned 31 teams will make it to the dance? No one knows, and that is what makes it so much fun. After a long season that starts in October, every team has a clean slate. It is reasonable to believe that Army, or even Bucknell could get hot and represent the Patriot League. As a matter of fact, there is a Cinderella team in every conference. Who are they? Only they know, but they are ever so close to showing their face.

That is what makes March Madness so great. Unless there is money riding on it, everyone roots for the underdog. Gonzaga has shocked the country the past two years and look to do it once again. We all know they won't go all the way, but we cheer for them anyway. Ultimately, though, look for Illinois, North Carolina, Duke and Arizona to be dancing in Minneapolis.

Casey Jacobsen has helped lead Stanford to the no. 1 ranking in NCAA basketball.

PROMISING FUTURE AWAITS HOCKEY

HOCKEY

FROM PAGE A10

Bison, Chris Newhouse '02

knocked a rebound from the pads of the Lafayette netminder, sending the game to overtime.

With a second chance, the Bison sent out their first line of Nate Ledyard '02, Newhouse and Silvestri, but the line was still a little tired from their frantic efforts to tie the game at the end of the third period. As a result, Lafayette put one past Van

Dillen, who faced a total of 25 shots, to win 4-3 and send the teams to a third and deciding game.

Lafayette again struck first blood just two minutes into Game 3 with the man advantage, and then added another in the second to put Bucknell at a two-goal disadvantage heading into the third period. With the outlook appearing bleak, the Bison found a hole in the Lafayette goalie at about the halfway mark, breathing some life into the squad.

While Van Dillen would remain strong the rest of the game (facing 38 shots overall), it would not be enough as the Bison were whistled for two costly penalties in the final minute (one coincidental). As a result, they were left with only an even

5-on-5 with Van Dillen on the bench, and were unable to score the 2-1 victory crowned Lafayette the 2000-01

DVCHC champions.

"We fell a little short in the end. I thought we should've won," Bryan

Hnetinka '01 said.

But despite the loss, no one can say the Bison had a disappointing season. They placed second in their new league, and came within a goal of being the champions. Even though they won their championship last year, this year's season was a far greater accomplishment in the sense that the DVCHC is a more competitive league.

Patriot League

Bison prepare for Patriot League showdown

Chris Rivera—The Bucknellian

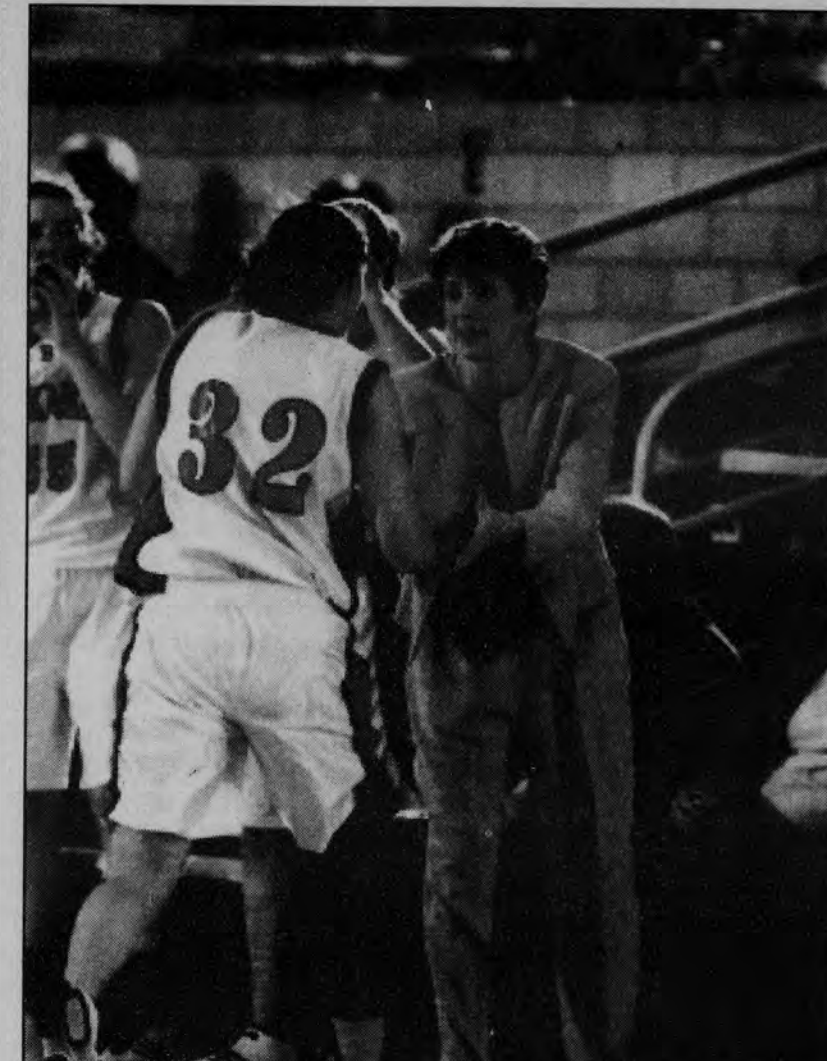

Chris Rivera—The Bucknellian

(Left) Desiree Almind '04, the Patriot League's premier rookie, makes a move on a Holy Cross defender.

(Above) From left to right: Monique LeBlanc '02, Molly Creamer '03 and Vicky Quimby '02.

(Right) Head Coach Kathy Fedorjaka gives instructions to guard Kate Franks '03.

Courtesy of Athletic Communications

The most successful women's basketball team in University history gains second seed in search of Patriot League crown

BY ANDREW BEVAN
Senior Writer

The Bucknell women's basketball team traveled to Albany this past Saturday to finish their regular season against a tough non-conference opponent in the Albany Great Danes. After battling back and forth with the home team for most of the contest, the Bison pulled away thanks to a decisive run late in the second half and a spectacular showing from the free throw line. In the end, the Bison won by 16, 80-64.

With this win the Orange and Blue finish the regular season at 20-7 overall and become the first team in school history to accomplish a 20-win season. The win also gives the Bison momentum heading into this weekend's Patriot League Tournament in Annapolis, Md., where the Bison will enter as the second seed for the third consecutive year.

The Albany game was tight from the opening tip as both teams answered each other back and forth. The Bison opened up a seven-point lead, 22-15 with 6:10 to play in the first half. Albany countered with a 10-2 run to go ahead by one, 25-24 with 4:02 left. Bucknell responded with a 7-0 run to go up 31-25.

In a tough shooting first half for the Bison, in which they shot just 30% from the floor, they missed their last seven shots over the final 1:42 of the opening frame to go into the locker room with a four-point lead, 31-27.

"We played very good defense in the first half and boxed out and rebounded well and I was very excited about that because if you can do those things well, you will be fine," Head Coach Kathy Fedorjaka said.

Bucknell pushed its advantage to six just over three minutes into the second half, but the Great Danes bounced back with a 15-6 tear to take over the lead, 46-43. Sophomore point guard Molly Creamer tied the game at 46 with a free throw. After that it was all Bucknell as the Bison exploded on a 14-0 run.

"Molly was huge in that run for us. She started it and she ended it," Fedorjaka said.

The Orange and Blue hit 14 out of 15 free throws in the final three minutes to secure their victory. "Free throw shooting is absolutely critical in the stretch run and it certainly gave us a boost," Fedorjaka said.

Creamer led all scorers with 23 points and needs only 17 more to become the first sophomore in school history to net 1,000. Freshman Desiree Almind added 19 points as well, while Jade Fleming '04 scored a career-high seven points on 3-3 shooting and Kate Rounsley '02 poured in nine points and hauled down a game-high nine rebounds.

"Jade Fleming gave us a big presence defensively and on the rebounding end as well," Fedorjaka said.

"I was proud of our kids and how they did a good job of winning the ball game, especially in the conditions of it being a non-conference game on the road and it was Albany's senior night," Fedorjaka said.

Junior captain Monique LeBlanc agreed with Fedorjaka about the importance of the win and the momentum it gives the team heading into the Patriot League Tournament. "The Albany win was great because it gave us our 20th win of the season, which is an excellent milestone, and allowed us to start concentrating on the tournament," LeBlanc said.

Bucknell now turns to the Patriot League tournament this weekend at Navy where they are the #2 seed for the third year in a row. The Bison will play Colgate, the #7 seed, in the first round at 5:30 on Friday. They defeated the Red Raiders twice this year in league play, but the Bison are not taking the Red Raiders lightly by any means, knowing that one loss could end their championship hopes.

"Colgate plays very aggressively and they don't hold back and we have to be ready for that," Fedorjaka said.

"I think we've got a great chance to play in the championship game, but first we have to focus on our first round match up against Colgate. We've got to play solid defense and rebound well, along with executing our offenses through. If we do that, we've got a good shot at moving on to the second round playoff game," Rounsley said.

Fedorjaka believes that her team can be successful if it takes care of the fundamentals. "If we focus on defending, rebounding and taking care of the ball, we will be ok," Fedorjaka said.

Should the Bison defeat Colgate, they will face the winner of the quarterfinal game between #3 seed Lehigh and #6 seed Lafayette. Lehigh, the favorite in this matchup, has been the only Patriot League team besides Holy Cross to defeat the Bison this season.

That 74-67 defeat came just two games ago, on Feb. 20, in Bucknell's final home game. Lehigh's triumph could give the Mountain Hawks the edge in momentum and confidence if the two were to meet in the tournament, but looking to avenge the loss could add fuel to the Bison's fire.

The other potential semifinal challenger, Lafayette, appears less problematic on paper. The Orange and Blue handily defeated the Leopards in both meetings this season, a 69-46 triumph in Easton followed by an 83-44 shellacking at Davis Gym.

If the Bison were to win their semifinal game, lurking in the championship game will most likely be Holy Cross, who receives a bye in the quarterfinal round due to its #1 seed and then faces the winner of the #4 Army versus #5 Navy matchup. A trip to the finals cannot be assumed for Holy Cross, however, since Army handed them their first league loss, 87-71, on Saturday, Feb. 24.

But the Bison are not looking that far ahead, as Fedorjaka has instilled in them the valuable mindset of taking the tournament one game at a time.

"We need to come out with intensity and fire right from the opening tip, we can't wait to turn it on after five minutes have passed," Vicky Quimby '02 said. "Everyone gets a fresh start here and no team can be taken lightly. If we just stay focused and play our game then we should do well."

Fedorjaka's methods carried the Bison into the championship game this year, and the Bison have the mindset, talent and cohesion to go even further this season.

QUARTERFINALS

SEMIFINALS

Patriot League Women's Tournament Schedule

1 Holy Cross
Sat., March 3
1:30 p.m.
4 Army
Fri., March 2
3 p.m.
5 Navy

Winner of 4 vs. 5

Championship
Wednesday, March 8 at site of top-seeded team
7:30 p.m.

SEMIFINALS

Winner of 2 vs. 7

Sunday, March 4
1:30 p.m.

Winner of 3 vs. 6

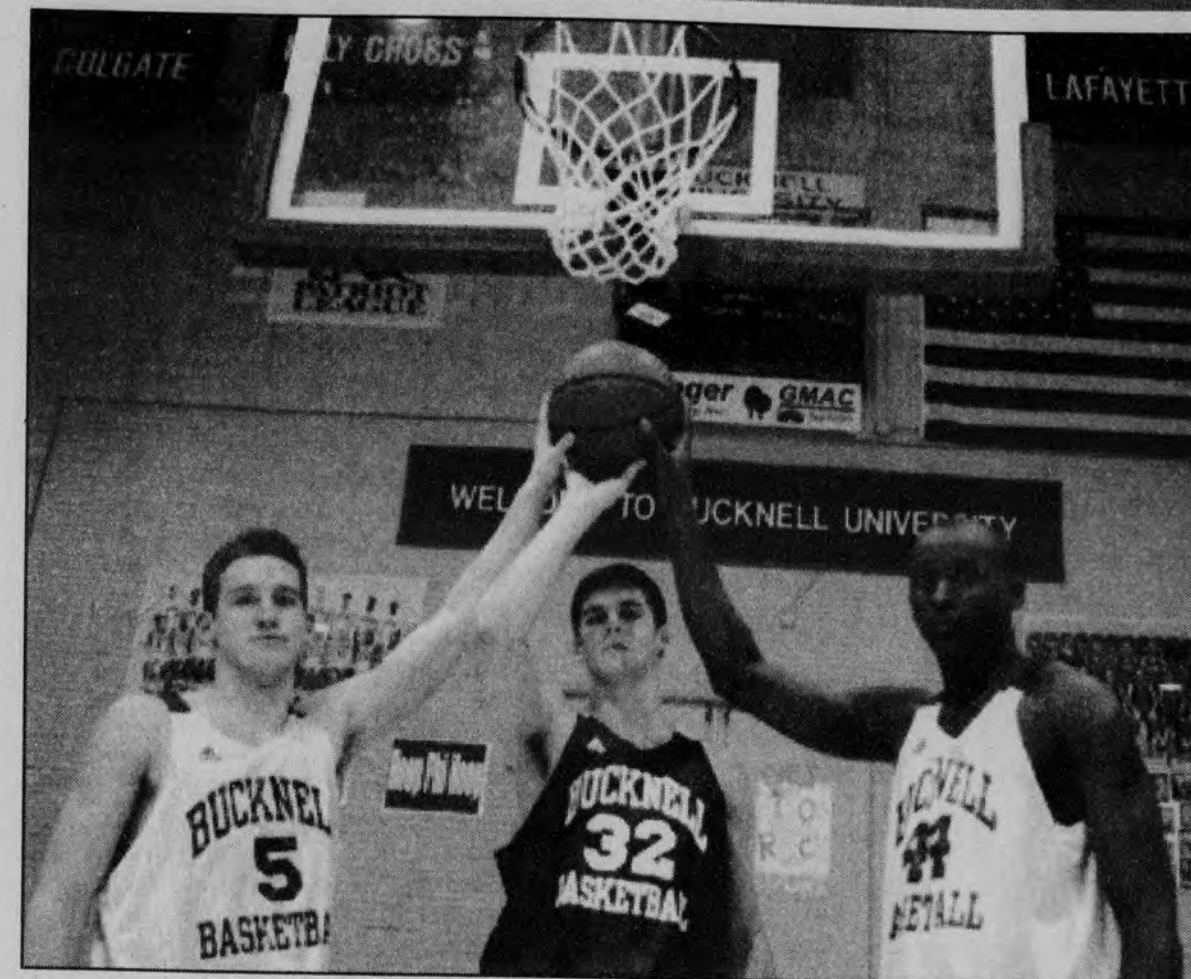

QUARTERFINALS

Bucknell 2

Sat., March 3
11 a.m.
Colgate 7

Lafayette 6
Sat., March 3
1:30 p.m.
Lehigh 3

Tournament Previews

Chris Rivera—The Bucknellian

Courtesy of Athletic Communications

Winning streak gives Bison hope in league tournament

After a disappointing season, the men's basketball team looks to ride a late-season surge towards success in league championship

BY ANDREW BURR
Sports Layout Editor

Maybe it just wasn't their year.

After all, the team was young and inexperienced, with just one starting senior and a predominantly first-year bench. There had been injuries—many injuries—to players like co-captains Jake Ramage '01 and Bryan Bailey '02, as well as to key substitutes. There had been heartbreaking, last minute losses to Lafayette, Colgate and American, not to mention the especially distressing Feb. 14 loss to Army, which sent Bucknell to the very bottom of the Patriot League.

Circumstance gave the Bison every reason to think this was a lost season. Courage and pride gave them every reason to fight back.

It's funny that way, what a good team can really do when it decides it wants to play. The Bison, with a rejuvenated offense (and a small, last second miracle), have strung together a three-game win streak, their longest of the season. More importantly though, this revival comes on the heel of an exhausting six-game slide, and directly precedes the first round of the Patriot League tournament.

"These were the three biggest wins all season, in terms of helping us build momentum and get our confidence back up," Ben Slater '04 said.

While the last three wins have not been monuments of perfection, they have proved that this Bison group has not quit on Head Coach Pat Flannery, and further, that they cannot be counted out of contention in Annapolis.

A lot of guys were down during the losing streak," Dan Blankenship '03 said. "We knew we could play with anyone, but we weren't concentrating or making any adjustments. Now we can head in with a full head of steam."

The winning streak started with a sound victory over Colgate Feb. 18, the team's first win in nearly a month. Ironically, it was a last-second, 63-62 loss at Colgate that began the Bison slide.

Bucknell was able to continue its success with a come-from-behind, 82-78 overtime victory against Lehigh, a game Flannery called "a good indicator of how far we've come this season." Brian Werner '03 provided the heroics, making a 60-foot mercy shot at the buzzer to send it into overtime.

"The coach always yells at me when I practice that shot," Werner said after the game. "He says I should take free-throws instead."

The team's latest effort, a 76-67 victory against Albany, capped off the win streak and worked to ensure Bison momentum entering the tournament. The win improved the Bison to 4-8 in the league and 13-14 overall.

Fighting to a 34-34 halftime deadlock, Albany took a 52-44 second half lead thanks to a 10-3 run. The Bison closed to 54-48 with 9:14 left, and took the lead in the following minutes with a 12-0 run of their own. Bailey scored 10 of the 12 points in that span, and finished with 20 points. Albany moved to within two points at 66-64, but Bucknell scored 10 of the next 13 points to secure the win.

"We thought we were the better team," Blankenship said, "although we had trouble getting the ball inside on offense in the first. Once we were able to do that, everything else seemed to fall into place."

The Bison put four players into double figures in the contest, including Bailey with 20, Boakai Lalugba '03 with 16 and Ramage with 15. Werner finished with 17 points and 12 rebounds, giving him a double-double.

The Bison finished tied for fifth in league standings with Lafayette, although they will enter the tournament as the sixth seed. Scheduled to play No. 3 seeded Colgate (6-6, 13-14) in the opening round of the tournament, optimism on the team is high, albeit cautious.

"The whole team feels real good," Jordan Hardenbergh '04 said. "We've improved a lot, we're playing well, and everyone knows this is the perfect time to be playing well."

The Bison were victimized earlier this season against Colgate, losing 63-62 thanks to a 3-point-er by Tim Sullivan with just 15 seconds remaining. Bucknell was able to avenge that loss however, with a strong, 71-60 victory over the Red Raiders when the teams met just three games ago.

"Considering last time we played Colgate and the time before that when we barely lost, we feel confident we can move on," Hardenbergh said.

A Bison victory against Colgate would mean a semi-final contest against No. 7 seeded Army (3-9, 9-18) or No. 2 seeded Navy (9-3, 17-11). Bucknell split contests with Army this season and would be favored in that matchup, although the Bison dropped both games to Navy, who is expected to meet Holy Cross in the Patriot League final.

Aside from the momentum the Bison win streak gives them heading into the first round, the wins are also a testament to how much this team has matured over the season.

"The coach really emphasizes the first five minutes of the second half," Blankenship said. "For a while we struggled and lost that battle every time."

Now though, Hardenbergh said, "we've learned how to take control of the game and hang on to it. Even though we may still be fighting when we have a lead, we are making sure we keep it."

Still, there are a number of concerns the Bison will have coming into their match with Colgate. Perhaps the team's biggest problem this year has been maintaining consistent offensive pressure on its opponent, relying solely on its defense to win games.

"When we play sound and don't rush on offense, there isn't a team in the league that can beat us," Slater said. "When we panic we get into trouble."

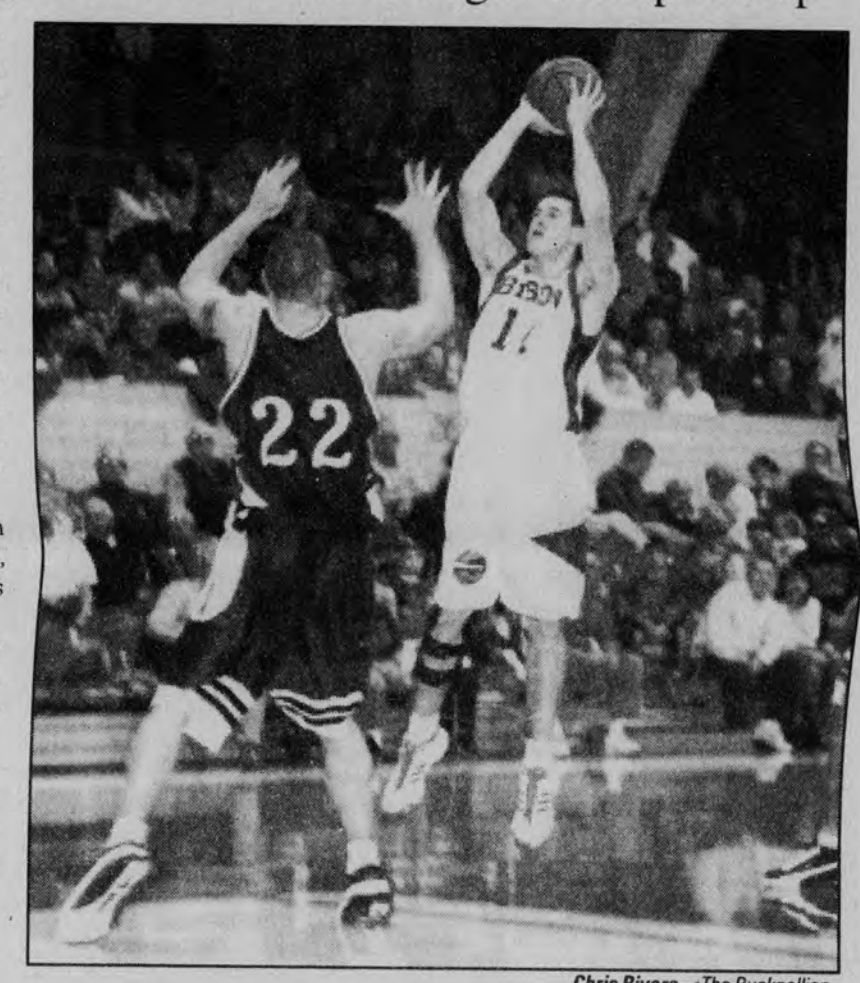

Although the team has been better about getting out in front of teams and staying there, forfeiting early leads has been a season-long problem. That goes back to maintaining pressure on the offensive end of the court though.

"We have to get what we want on offense," Blankenship said. "There are a lot of guys on this team who can create their own shots, so our tendency is to hurry up and shoot. We have to make the other team's defense work more."

Injury-wise, the team could not be in much better condition. A major concern Flannery has had all season is the excessive amount of minutes his starters have had to play, but that problem should be remedied by a healthy Bison squad.

Although the Bison will miss 6-11 center Davorin Skornik '04 (torn tendons in hand), the big man represents about the only injury that will significantly affect the team. Roland Webber '04 is practicing again after spraining his ankle and Slater is back from a dislocated shoulder. Sharpshooter Ramage has regained his form after mid-season knee surgery and Bailey is close to 100 percent after an ankle sprain.

"We're going in knowing we can win, not overconfident and not cocky, but we know we can win," Slater said.

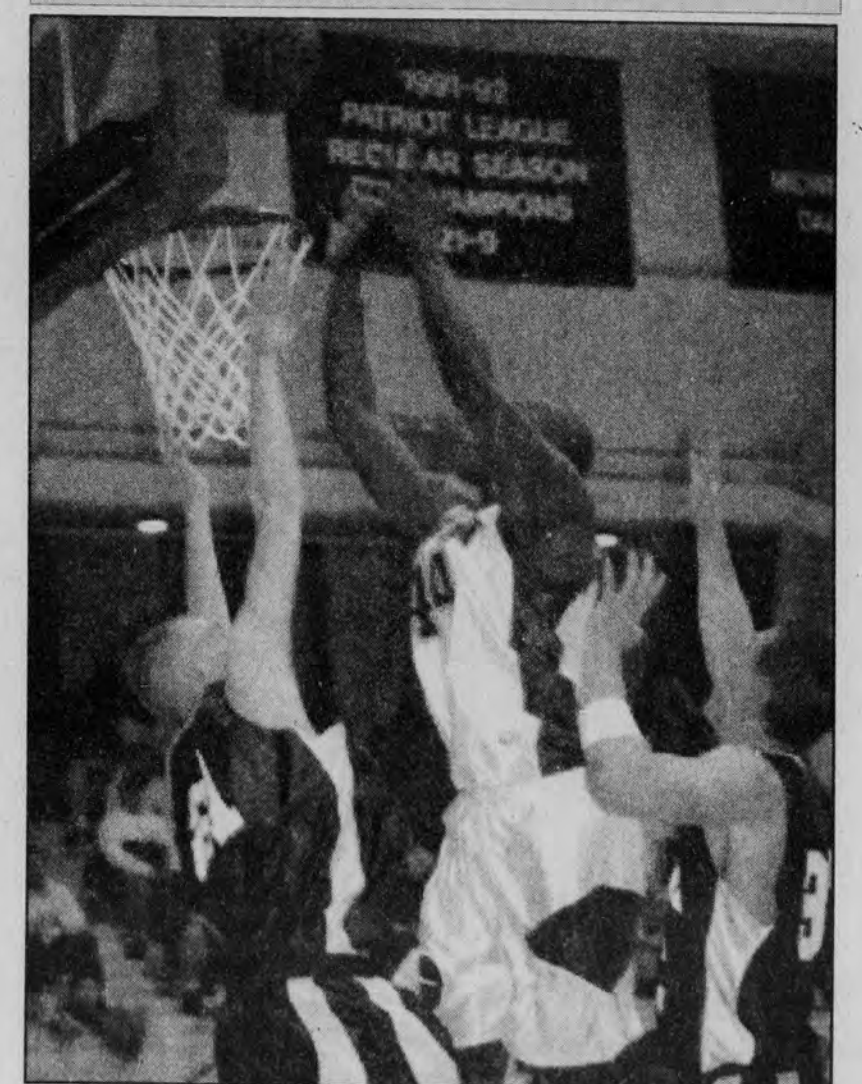

Chris Rivera—The Bucknellian

(Top left) Dan Blankenship '03, Brian Werner '03 and Boakai Lalugba '03.

(Top Right) Head Coach Pat Flannery looks to ride the momentum of the three-game winning streak into the Championships.

(Above) Co-captain Jake Ramage '01 has regained his form from beyond the arc.

(Below) Lalugba '03 leads the Bison with 210 rebounds this season.

Chris Rivera—The Bucknellian

Courtesy of Mapquest.com

For directions to the U.S. Naval Academy, go to www.navyports.com/local/directions.html

QUARTERFINALS

SEMIFINALS

Patriot League Men's Tournament Schedule

4 Lehigh
Sat., March 3
4 p.m.
5 Lafayette

Winner of 4 vs. 5

Championship
Friday, March 9 at site of top-seeded team
4:30 p.m. (ON ESPN)

SEMIFINALS

Winner of 2 vs. 7

Sunday, March 4
1:30 p.m.

Winner of 3 vs. 6

QUARTERFINALS

Navy 2

Sat., March 3
11 a.m.
Army 7

Bucknell 6
Sat., March 3
1:30 p.m.
Colgate 3

Sports

Passion stands in the way of NASCAR

Okay, raise your hand if you've heard of stock car racing... alright a few. Now raise your hand if you've heard of NASCAR... okay, a few more. Now raise your hand if you've heard the name Dale Earnhardt, and I know you have because you all used to watch "Home Improvement" starring the delightful Tim Allen and teenage heartthrob, Jonathan Taylor Thomas.

Dale Earnhardt was the Michael Jordan of NASCAR racing. He loved the game with a fire and intensity not often seen in sports these days, as cliché as that may seem. Unfortunately, that's where the cliché ends... it ended on Sunday, Feb. 18 as Earnhardt spun into the wall on turn four of the last lap of the Daytona 500—a time when more people's attention was riveted to the track than at any other.

As the race finished and the ambulance cut Earnhardt's lifeless body out of the car, people still had no clue as to the seriousness of the crash. An autopsy later revealed that Earnhardt had a skull fracture running from forehead to the back of his head, a broken sternum, a broken left ankle and eight broken ribs.

Earnhardt's death has been the most recent fatality in a series of four over the past 10 months. But this death has rippled through the NASCAR community in a way that none before have. The tragic circumstances of the death were exacerbated by the fact that this happened on the last lap of the greatest race that the sport has to offer. And when a jubilant audience becomes a tear-stricken congregation, questions must be asked about the safety of the sport.

Since "the incident," the integrity of the NASCAR higher-ups such as Bill France and Mike Helton has been called into question. Sports analysts criticize both France and Helton, claiming they have disrespected the memory of Earnhardt by not canceling any races and continuing on with the schedule. They further claim that their decision is financially motivated and that they refuse to let their sponsors down. As much as I'm sure that's a factor in the decision, I think it's unfair and rude to make such a claim.

In addition, a lot of dissension has arisen as to whether or not NASCAR should reevaluate the safety precautions of the sport. The media calls for sweeping changes and new rules. They cry for soft walls, different headgear, enforced neck protection for the drivers and limits on engine power forcing slower speeds.

Unfortunately, the answer doesn't lie in a new helmet (which doctors say wouldn't have done anything more to protect Earnhardt) or a 20 mph slowdown (the current figure that is being tossed around). However, I'm sure it makes little difference if you're barreling down the track at 180 mph or 160 mph. Either way, you better have some last will and testament prepared. And that is the risk that every stock car driver understands and accepts. Actually, not just accepts, but desires.

The speed is just a reflection of the intensity of the sport and the heart of its competitors. There is no way that you or I could possibly understand this drive. But perhaps it's best demonstrated in a story from the 1997 Daytona 500. Earnhardt was involved in an accident that flipped his car over like a chew toy in the final lap. As he was helped towards the ambulance, he looked back and saw that all four wheels were still on the car.

"Will it still start?" he asked. When he realized it did, he hopped back in and finished the race.

The history of the sport is teeming with such stories of those who took third degree burns to their faces and drove the next week, and similar tales of perseverance.

That is the intensity and ferocity found in many NASCAR drivers. And a speed reduction can't diminish the fire that burns in the hearts of these men. To those who would have the speed limits reduced in NASCAR, Earnhardt once stated, quite eloquently, "If you're not a race driver, stay the hell home. Don't come here and grumble about going too fast. Get the hell out of the race car if you've got feathers on your legs and butt."

NASCAR may be dealing with one of the worst tragedies that has taken place in the history of the sport, at a time when they are striving so hard for credibility after just having made a multi-million dollar network deal. But the fact of the matter is, Dale Earnhardt, like most racers, couldn't live without the sport. In 1988, when Bobby Allison had a crash that ended his racing career, he reminisces "I wish I had died. My life was great then."

As for other safety precautions, I'm all for it. I'm pro-anything that will save lives. Sports stopped being about death a long time ago. But to rob, not the fans, not the owners, but the competitors, of the fire that burns is more serious than most realize.

The decision is not as cut and dry as people might think. And perhaps the answer lies not in us, the audience, nor the owners, nor the media. Maybe the answer lies in those who play the sport and who choose to put their lives in danger every week. Put the question before them and see how they respond. Action must be taken, but not drastic and irrational action.

Until then, let us reflect on the life and legacy that has left us too quick-

Polo sweeps BU Invitational

Chris Rivera—The Bucknellian

A Bison attacker eyes the cage as she goes one-on-one against the goalie.

By MOLLY GOELLER
Staff writer

In front of a home crowd last weekend, the Bucknell women's water polo team extended its record to 5-1 with three victories against Grove City, Slippery Rock and Salem International.

The Bison were a dominating force in their first game of the tournament, defeating Grove City 14-4. Senior co-captain Julie McLaughlin and junior Brooke Rea led the Bison scoring with four goals apiece. Junior Dana Clarke also added two goals, while classmate Adrienne Schober tallied four assists.

This solid win gave the Bison confidence going into the next game against Slippery Rock, a team they battled several times last season. The Bison came out strong and got up on Rock 4-3 in the first quarter, a lead they would not relinquish for the rest of the game.

Going into the half up 7-5, the Bison could not let up on either end. A solid defense held Rock to only one goal each in the third and fourth quarters, and BU's counterattack brought them an 18-9 victory.

Rea and McLaughlin once again led the Bison scoring with five and four goals, respectively. Senior co-captain Paige Cull netted two goals, and sophomore Katy Stahler one. Schober again led assists with three. Goalie Lindsay Chesterfield '03 recorded an impressive eight saves in the second half, and her presence in the cage was crucial to the Bison's victory.

"Playing goalie this season has been great," Chesterfield said. "Our team plays extremely well together, which has strengthened our defensive abilities. This success has a lot to do with our team unity, both in and out of the pool."

Saturday night the game that the Bison had been waiting for finally arrived. "Revenge was on Bucknell's mind as thoughts of our loss to Salem during last year's Invitational were fresh," Head Coach John Ziegler said. Bucknell was ready to make their record for the day 3-0 by registering a win against Salem International.

Both teams came out shooting, and the score was tied 5-5 at the end of the first quarter. In the second, the Bison managed to shut out Salem, while racking up three goals of their own. With only a three goal lead going into the second half, the Bison were prepared to step up their play.

Cull scored three times for the Bison during the third quarter to bring Bucknell's lead up to 14-6. It was all over for Salem after this stretch, and Bucknell rotated in "B" team players to finish out the game. Bucknell held Salem to three in the fourth quarter and finished with an 18-9 win.

Cull led the Bucknell attack with five goals, while McLaughlin and Rea were each close behind with three. Schober tallied two goals, while plenty of other Bison saw action: Kim Kaczor '01, Allison Hernandez '01, Katy Stahler '03, Liz Wilmarth '03, and Kelly Hofstetter '04 all netted one for the Orange and Blue. Cull had an impressive four steals, while Junior Meredith Stevens had three. Chesterfield racked up 15 saves as well as one steal.

The Bison performed at exceptional levels this past weekend, dictating the potential for continued success throughout the duration of their season. "I am so proud of our program after this weekend," Cull said.

Bucknell defeated old time rivals and proved themselves to some conference teams. "We have beaten everyone in our league except Princeton, who we haven't played yet," Cull said. "Going into our first league tournament next weekend with a 5-1 record is unbelievable."

The Bison will travel to Salem International in West Virginia this weekend to face league rivals Salem, Villanova, George Washington and Princeton.

Chris Rivera—The Bucknellian

Junior Brooke Rea (right) provides pressure on her opponent.

Ice hockey finishes second in conference

Bison lose momentum and drop league championship series, 2-1, to Lafayette

By KEVIN LOGAN
Senior Writer

The Bucknell ice hockey team was a rookie in a new league this year. The Bison had a team loaded with rookie players. And they had a rookie coach. But much as it may sound like an obstacle, it didn't turn out to be. Having decided to leave their old Mason-Dixon Collegiate Hockey League to join the more competitive Delaware Valley Collegiate Hockey Conference this season, the Bison hockey club proved it had what it takes to compete at a new level... and more.

Not only did the squad finish the 2000-01 regular season second in the league at an impressive 15-3-0 (15-6-1 overall), but they earned themselves a spot in the championship series, played this past weekend against no. 1 Lafayette (15-2-1). The Bison dropped their series against the Leopards, 2-1, giving the squad a second place finish in the DVCHC. Having split their two regular season meetings, it was shaping up to be an exciting DVCHC finals between Bucknell and Lafayette, both teams looking to settle the score in a head-to-head matchup. The Bison had defeated the Leopards in their opening game of the season, and now were battling to close out their DVCHC debut in true championship style.

Game 1 of the best-of-three series brought them one step closer. Jumping out to a 3-0 lead, the ice seemed to slant in Bucknell's favor, and the Bison never looked back. Thanks to a pair of two-goal efforts from Eric Silvestri '03 and Drew Spagnola '04, the Bison trampled the Leopards 7-2. Freshman Harrison Hertzman netted his first career goal, and goal-ter Paul Van Dillen '01 was once again solid between the pipes, allowing just two goals on 37 shots.

"We stepped it up a notch... actually a couple notches. Nobody expected us to go this far."
—Mike Bronowicz '03

See HOCKEY, page A7

Courtesy of Athletic Communications

Junior slugger Ian Joseph was selected as a Patriot League All-Star last season.

Baseball hits the Diamond

The Bucknell baseball team has headed to the diamond this spring in impressive form. After five games against VMI and Liberty, the Bison stand at 3-2. On Sunday, the Bison registered a 10-9 victory over Liberty, avenging a 6-1 loss on Saturday. Check out the next issue of The Bucknellian after Spring Break for preview of the Bison baseball squad.

WOMEN'S BASKETBALL		MEN'S BASKETBALL
March 2-3, at Patriot League Tournament		March 3-4, 9 at Patriot League Tournament
Fri., March 2: 5:30 p.m. vs. Colgate		Sat., March 3: 1:30 p.m. vs. Colgate
WATER POLO		BASEBALL
Salem-Teikyo (League Games) March 3-4		Sat.-Sun., March 3-4
Saturday: 10:00 a.m. vs. Villanova		Sat. 12:00 p.m. vs. Cornell (2)
2:00 p.m. vs. Salem-Teikyo		Sun. 12:00 p.m. vs. Cornell (2)
7:00 vs. George Washington		WRESTLING
Sunday: 12:30 a.m. vs. Princeton		Fri.-Sun., March 2-4
MEN'S & WOMEN'S TRACK & FIELD		EIWA Tournament
Fri.-Sun., March 2-4		MEN'S LACROSSE
at IC4A Championships		Tues., March 6 at Maryland
		3:00 p.m.

Sports Trivia

By Justin McCarthy

- 1) What NCAA Division I basketball team has won the most games since the start of the 1999-2000 season?
- 2) What NBA coach has the highest winning percentage without ever reaching the NBA finals?
- 3) Who was the last NHL team to win an overtime game this season?

Philadelphia Flyers

THE Bucknellian

SECTION B

March 2, 2001

Weekend Weather

Weather courtesy of weather.com

Hi: 44
Low: 25
FRIDAY

Hi: 42
Low: 18
SATURDAY

Hi: 40
Low: 24
SUNDAY

An around the world perspective

By KAREN LANGHAUSER,
LAUREN POTENTE AND
JACKIE KORDIAK
Contributing Writers

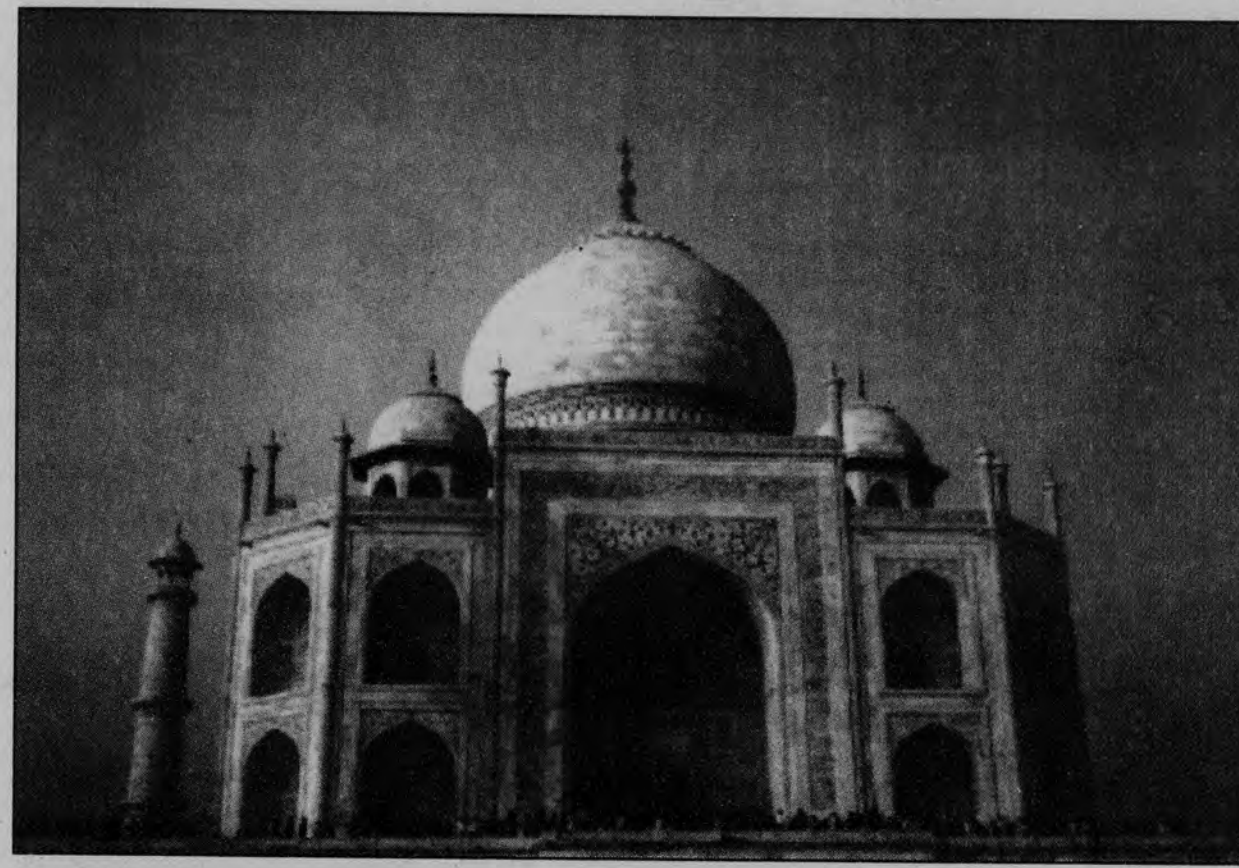

Sep. 13, 2000: As we stood at the bottom of the gangway of the SS Universe Explorer, docked in Vancouver, British Columbia, we stared straight into the face of our next 100 days. Physically, we knew where we were going; we had repeated the itinerary of our journey countless times to family and friends: "I'm going around the world on a ship—Japan, China, Vietnam, Malaysia, India, Egypt, Turkey, Croatia, Spain and Cuba." But what we did not realize was where that journey would take us. Everything up to that point had promised us that Semester at Sea would change our lives forever. As we stepped onto our new "home," we were filled with emotions powerful enough to evade description, even now.

Our two-week, landless stretch across the Pacific was filled with many "firsts"—our first doses of sea sickness, our first impressions of our 700 shipmates, our first time being away from our friends and family with virtually no way to communicate, and our first taste of a new type of academia.

We had all joked about what school would be like on a ship—sunbathing and partying—a cruise, if you will. This was a far cry from what we encountered. Education on our floating campus presented a huge change from the Lewisburg surroundings to which we had grown so accustomed.

We were now sitting in class, peering out at the vast open space of the blue-green seas, listening to faculty members incorporate cultural, economic, geographical and social aspects of countries we were about to experience firsthand. Courses were offered in a broad range of fields, just as they are on "normal" college campuses. But unlike grounded college campuses, we had the unique opportunity to integrate fieldwork and acquired knowledge of nine foreign countries on location.

See SEA, page B5

ABOVE: The Taj Mahal stands tall above Agra, India.

BELOW: An elephant in the marshes.

Pictures courtesy of authors

Student club competes in MIT competition

Sloan School looks for best business plan

By ANDREW DAVIDSON
Senior Writer

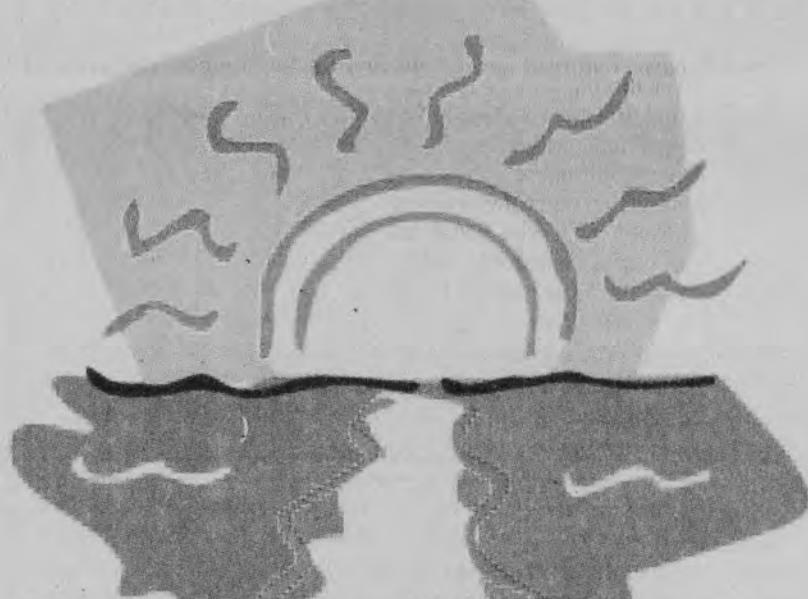

For the past six months, a small group of students have been working diligently to develop a new business idea into a feasible business plan. They are part of one of the newest student organizations on campus seeking BSG recognition. The group calls themselves Bucknell Entrepreneurs (BE). Their goal is to be recognized at a national business plan competition. The list of competitions they are entering includes a submission to the nationally recognized Massachusetts Institute of Technology 50K contest.

"The task won't be easy," Pat Creighton '03 club member said. "These competitions are known for drawing a large number of exceptional ideas and business plans." Still, the club members are optimistic that their ideas have a place in corporate America.

Club founder Ed Reilly '02, describes the proposed business: "We plan to capitalize on a currently unrecognized market niche of developing technologies that could be crucial components of new businesses. Our business model couples leery, post-Internet-crazed investors with verified, institutionally developed technologies managed by experienced entrepreneurs. Basically, our services lower capital investment risks while allowing institutions to recover a greater part of their research expenses through significant equity stakes of new businesses."

See CLUB, page B9

Enjoy Spring Break

The Bucknellian will be back on March 23

NASA's NEAR probe lands itself safely on asteroid Eros

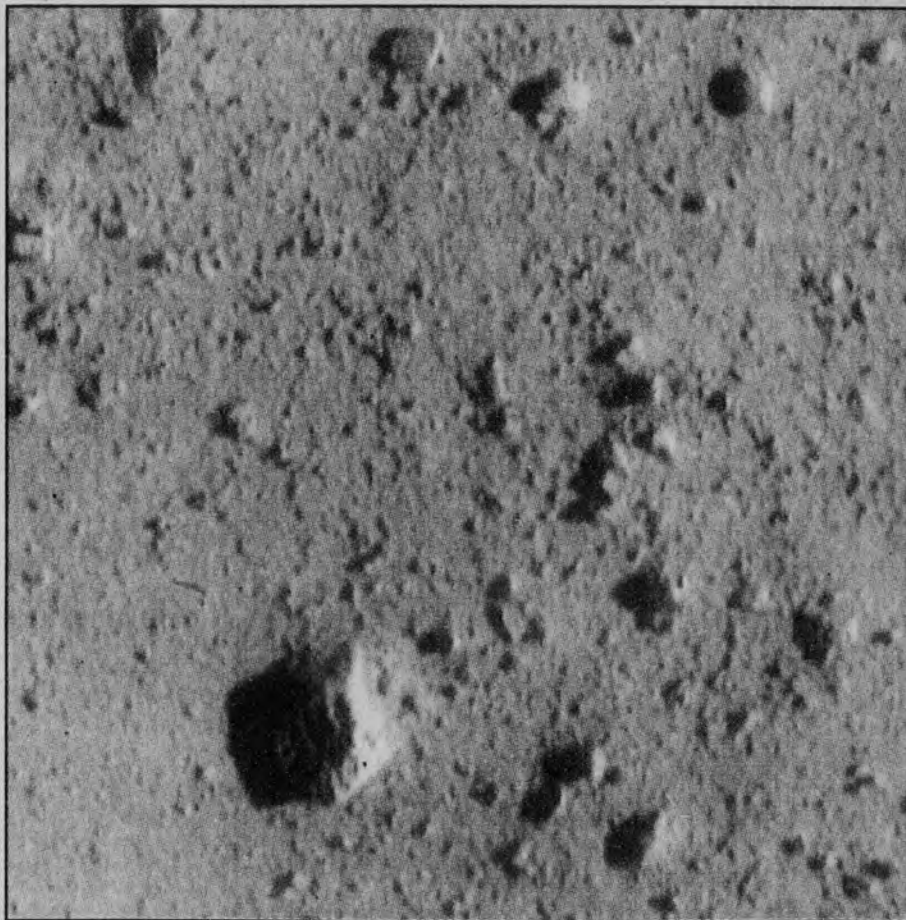

By PARKER TERRILL
Staff Writer

Much to the delight of the scientific community, the NEAR Shoemaker, a robotic probe, landed on the asteroid Eros on Feb. 12. NEAR was launched from Cape Canaveral in early 1996, and has orbited Eros continually, searching the surface of the asteroid with beams from remote sensing instruments.

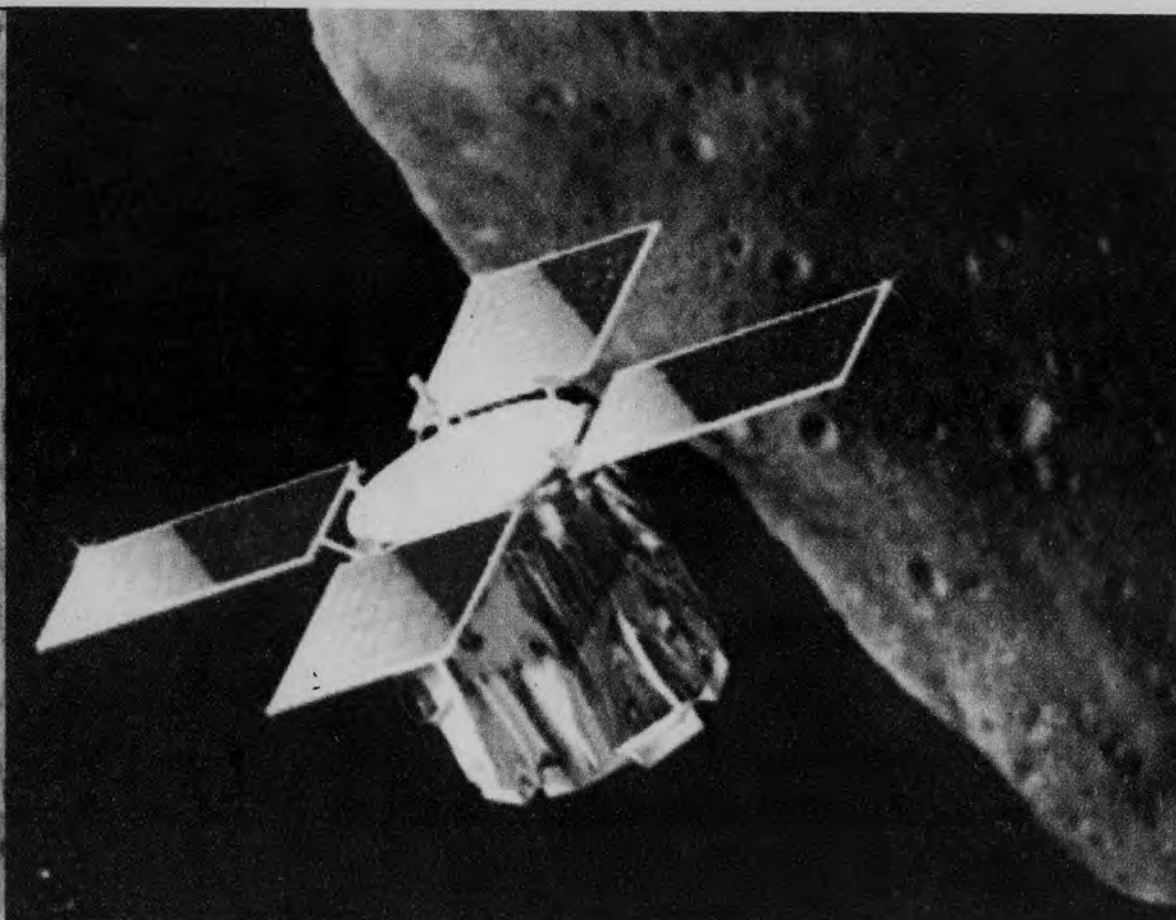

A product of the Johns Hopkins University Applied Physics Laboratory, NEAR attempted to identify remnants of the past by analyzing rock strata. The tasks performed by NEAR, as well as the successful landing, have sparked debate in the exploration of space.

The recent landing of NEAR on an asteroid has fueled the debate concerning whether robots or humans should explore space. With advancements in technology, robots have acquired the ability to perform tasks once performed by astronauts and thus many believe it is unnecessary for humans to face the dangers that may be encountered during a mission.

Currently, the fundamental reason for space exploration, according to Space.com, is the search for life on other planets. Human space exploration has inspired imagination in many individuals. Although space exploration contains an immense element of excitement, the public has lost interest due to their feelings that the exploration of space is not necessary at the current time.

Courtesy of near.jhuapl.edu

Courtesy of NASA.gov

See NEAR, page B10

LEFT: A picture of the surface of Eros, taken as the NEAR probe approaches the surface. RIGHT: Computer model of the NEAR probe with Eros in the background.

Sports

Passion stands in the way of NASCAR

Okay, raise your hand if you've heard of stock car racing... alright a few. Now raise your hand if you've heard of NASCAR... okay, a few more. Now raise your hand if you've heard the name Dale Earnhardt, and I know you have because you all used to watch "Home Improvement" starring the delightful Tim Allen and teenage heartthrob, Jonathan Taylor Thomas.

Dale Earnhardt was the Michael Jordan of NASCAR racing. He loved the game with a fire and intensity not often seen in sports these days, as cliché as that may seem. Unfortunately, that's where the cliché ends... it ended on Sunday, Feb. 18 as Earnhardt spun into the wall on turn four of the last lap of the Daytona 500 a time when more people's attention was riveted to the track than at any other.

As the race finished and the ambulance cut Earnhardt's lifeless body out of the car, people still had no clue as to the seriousness of the crash. An autopsy later revealed that Earnhardt had a skull fracture running from forehead to the back of his head, a broken sternum, a broken left ankle and eight broken ribs.

Earnhardt's death has been the most recent fatality in a series of four over the past 10 months. But this death has rippled through the NASCAR community in a way that none before have. The tragic circumstances of the death were exacerbated by the fact that this happened on the last lap of the greatest race that the sport has to offer. And when a jubilant audience becomes a tear-stricken congregation, questions must be asked about the safety of the sport.

Since "the incident," the integrity of the NASCAR higher-ups such as Bill France and Mike Helton has been called into question. Sports analysts criticize both France and Helton, claiming they have disrespected the memory of Earnhardt by not canceling any races and continuing on with the schedule. They further claim that their decision is financially motivated and that they refuse to let their sponsors down. As much as I'm sure that's a factor in the decision, I think it's unfair and rude to make such a claim.

In addition, a lot of dissension has arisen as to whether or not NASCAR should reevaluate the safety precautions of the sport. The media calls for sweeping changes and new rules. They cry for soft walls, different headgear, enforced neck protection for the drivers and limits on engine power forcing slower speeds.

Unfortunately, the answer doesn't lie in a new helmet (which doctors say wouldn't have done anything more to protect Earnhardt) or a 20 mph slowdown (the current figure that is being tossed around). However, I'm sure it makes little difference if you're barreling down the track at 180 mph or 160 mph. Either way, you better have some last will and testament prepared. And that is the risk that every stock car driver understands and accepts. Actually, not just accepts, but desires.

The speed is just a reflection of the intensity of the sport and the heart of its competitors. There is no way that you or I could possibly understand this drive. But perhaps it's best demonstrated in a story from the 1997 Daytona 500. Earnhardt was involved in an accident that flipped his car over like a chew toy in the final lap. As he was helped towards the ambulance, he looked back and saw that all four wheels were still on the car.

"Will it still start?" he asked. When he realized it did, he hopped back in and finished the race.

The history of the sport is teeming with such stories of those who took third degree burns to their faces and drove the next week, and similar tales of perseverance.

That is the intensity and ferocity found in many NASCAR drivers. And a speed reduction can't diminish the fire that burns in the hearts of these men. To those who would have the speed limits reduced in NASCAR, Earnhardt once stated, quite eloquently, "If you're not a race driver, stay the hell home. Don't come here and grumble about going too fast. Get the hell out of the race car if you've got feathers on your legs and butt."

NASCAR may be dealing with one of the worst tragedies that has taken place in the history of the sport, at a time when they are striving so hard for credibility after just having made a multi-million dollar network deal. But the fact of the matter is, Dale Earnhardt, like most racers, couldn't live without the sport. In 1988, when Bobby Allison and a crash that ended his racing career, he reminisces "I wish I had died. My life was great then."

As for other safety precautions, I'm all for it. I'm pro-anything that will save lives. Sports stopped being about death a long time ago. But to rob, not the fans, not the owners, but the competitors, of the fire that burns is more serious than most realize.

The decision is not as cut and dry as people might think. And perhaps the answer lies not in us, the audience, nor the owners, nor the media. Maybe the answer lies in those who play the sport and who choose to put their lives in danger every week. Put the question before them and see how they respond. Action must be taken, but not drastic and irrational action.

Until then, let us reflect on the life and legacy that has left us too quickly.

COMMENTARY

AARON DEROSA
Staff Writer

Polo sweeps BU Invitational

A Bison attacker eyes the cage as she goes one-on-one against the goalie.

By MOLLY GOELLER
Staff writer

In front of a home crowd last weekend, the Bucknell women's water polo team extended its record to 5-1 with three victories against Grove City, Slippery Rock and Salem International.

The Bison were a dominating force in their first game of the tournament, defeating Grove City 14-4. Senior co-captain Julie McLaughlin and junior Brooke Rea led the Bison scoring with four goals apiece. Junior Dana Clarke also added two goals, while classmate Adrienne Schober tallied four assists.

This solid win gave the Bison confidence going into the next game against Slippery Rock, a team they battled several times last season. The Bison came out strong and got up on Rock 4-3 in the first quarter, a lead they would not relinquish for the rest of the game.

Going into the half up 7-5, the Bison could not let up on either end. A solid defense held Rock to only one goal each in the third and fourth quarters, and BU's counterattack brought them an 18-9 victory.

Rea and McLaughlin once again led the Bison scoring with five and four goals, respectively. Senior co-captain Paige Cull netted two goals, and sophomore Katy Stahler one. Schober again led assists with three. Goalie Lindsay Chesterfield '03 recorded an impressive eight saves in the second half, and her presence in the cage was crucial to the Bison's victory.

"Playing goalie this season has been great," Chesterfield said. "Our team plays extremely well together, which has strengthened our defensive abilities. This success has a lot to do with our team unity, both in and out of the pool."

Saturday night the game that the Bison had been waiting for finally arrived. "Revenge was on Bucknell's mind as thoughts of our loss to Salem during last year's Invitational were fresh," Head Coach John Ziegler said. Bucknell was ready to make their record for the day 3-0 by registering a win against Salem International.

Both teams came out shooting, and the score was tied 5-5 at the end of the first quarter. In the second, the Bison managed to shut out Salem, while racking up three goals of their own. With only a three goal lead going into the second half, the Bison were prepared to step up their play.

Cull scored three times for the Bison during the third quarter to bring Bucknell's lead up to 14-6. It was all over for Salem after this stretch, and Bucknell rotated in "B" team players to finish out the game. Bucknell held Salem to three in the fourth quarter and finished with an 18-9 win.

Cull led the Bucknell attack with five goals, while McLaughlin and Rea were each close behind with three. Schober tallied two goals, while plenty of other Bison saw action: Kim Kaczor '01, Allison Hernandez '01, Katy Stahler '03, Liz Wilmarth '03, and Kelly Hofstetter '04 all netted one for the Orange and Blue. Cull had an impressive four steals, while Junior Meredith Stevens had three. Chesterfield racked up 15 saves as well as one steal.

The Bison performed at exceptional levels this past weekend, dictating the potential for continued success throughout the duration of their season. "I am so proud of our program after this weekend," Cull said.

Bucknell defeated old time rivals and proved themselves to some conference teams. "We have beaten everyone in our league except Princeton, who we haven't played yet," Cull said. "Going into our first league tournament next weekend with a 5-1 record is unbelievable."

The Bison will travel to Salem International in West Virginia this weekend to face league rivals Salem, Villanova, George Washington and Princeton.

Junior Brooke Rea (right) provides pressure on her opponent.

Ice hockey finishes second in conference

Bison lose momentum and drop league championship series, 2-1, to Lafayette

By KEVIN LOGAN
Senior Writer

The Bucknell ice hockey team was a rookie in a new league this year. The Bison had a team loaded with rookie players. And they had a rookie coach. But much as it may sound like an obstacle, it didn't turn out to be. Having decided to leave their old Mason-Dixon Collegiate Hockey League to join the more competitive Delaware Valley Collegiate Hockey Conference this season, the Bison hockey club proved it had what it takes to compete at a new level... and more.

Not only did the squad finish the 2000-01 regular season second in the league at an impressive 15-3-0 (15-6-1 overall), but they earned themselves a spot in the championship series, played this past weekend against no. 1 Lafayette (15-2-1). The

Bison dropped their series against the Leopards, 2-1, giving the squad a second place finish in the DVCHC.

Having split their two regular season meetings, it was shaping up to be an exciting DVCHC finals between Bucknell and Lafayette, both teams looking to settle the score in a head-to-head match-up. The Bison had defeated the Leopards in their opening game of the season, and now were battling to close out their DVCHC debut in true championship style.

Game 1 of the best-of-three series brought them one step closer. Jumping out to a 3-0 lead, the ice seemed to slant in Bucknell's favor, and the Bison never looked back. Thanks to a pair of two-goal efforts from Eric Silvestri '03 and Drew Spagnola '04, the Bison trampled the Leopards 7-2.

Freshman Harrison Hertzman netted his first career goal, and goal-

"We stepped it up a notch... actually a couple notches. Nobody expected us to go this far."
—Mike Bronowicz '03

Junior slugger Ian Joseph was selected as a Patriot League All-Star last season.

Baseball hits the Diamond

The Bucknell baseball team has headed to the diamond this spring in impressive form. After five games against VMI and Liberty, the Bison stand at 3-2. On Sunday, the Bison registered a 10-9 victory over Liberty, avenging a 6-1 loss on Saturday. Check out the next issue of The Bucknellian after Spring Break for preview of the Bison baseball squad.

Bison Calendar

WOMEN'S BASKETBALL
March 2-3, at
Patriot League Tournament
Fri., March 2: 5:30 p.m. vs. Colgate

SALEM-TEIKYO (League Games) March 3-4
Saturday: 10:00 a.m. vs. Villanova
2:00 p.m. vs. Salem-Teikyo
7:00 vs. George Washington
Sunday: 12:30 a.m. vs. Princeton

MEN'S BASKETBALL
March 3-4, 9 at
Patriot League Tournament
Sat., March 3: 1:30p.m. vs. Colgate

WOMEN'S HOCKEY & LACROSSE
Fri.-Sun., March 2-4
at ICAA Championships

BASEBALL
Sat.-Sun., March 3-4
Sat. 12:00 p.m. vs. Cornell (2)
Sun. 12:00 p.m. vs. Cornell (2)

WRESTLING
Fri.-Sun., March 2-4
ETWA Tournament

MEN'S LACROSSE
Tues., March 6 at Maryland
3:00 p.m.

The Bucknellian

March 2, 2001

Weekend Weather

Hi: 44 Low: 25 FRIDAY	Hi: 42 Low: 18 SATURDAY	Hi: 40 Low: 24 SUNDAY
-----------------------------	-------------------------------	-----------------------------

An around the world perspective

By KAREN LANGHAUSER,
LAUREN POTENTE AND
JACKIE KORDIAK
Contributing Writers

Sep. 13, 2000: As we stood at the bottom of the gangway of the SS Universe Explorer, docked in Vancouver, British Columbia, we stared straight into the face of our next 100 days. Physically, we knew where we were going—we had repeated the itinerary of our journey countless times to family and friends: "I'm going around the world on a ship—Japan, China, Vietnam, Malaysia, India, Egypt, Turkey, Croatia, Spain and Cuba." But what we did not realize was where that journey would take us. Everything up to that point had promised us that Semester at Sea would change our lives forever. As we stepped onto our new "home," we were filled with emotions powerful enough to evade description, even now.

Our two-week, landless stretch across the Pacific was filled with many "firsts"—our first doses of sea sickness, our first impressions of our 700 shipmates, our first time being away from our friends and family with virtually no way to communicate, and our first taste of a new type of academic.

We had all joked about what school would be like on a ship—sunbathing and partying—a cruise, if you will. This was a far cry from what we encountered. Education on our floating campus presented a huge change from the Lewisburg surroundings to which we had grown so accustomed.

We were now sitting in class, peering out at the vast open space of the blue-green seas, listening to faculty members incorporate cultural, economic, geographical and social aspects of countries we were about to experience firsthand. Courses were offered in a broad range of fields, just as they are on "normal" college campuses. But unlike grounded college campuses, we had the unique opportunity to integrate fieldwork and acquired knowledge of nine foreign countries on location.

See SEA, page B5

NASA's NEAR probe lands itself safely on asteroid Eros

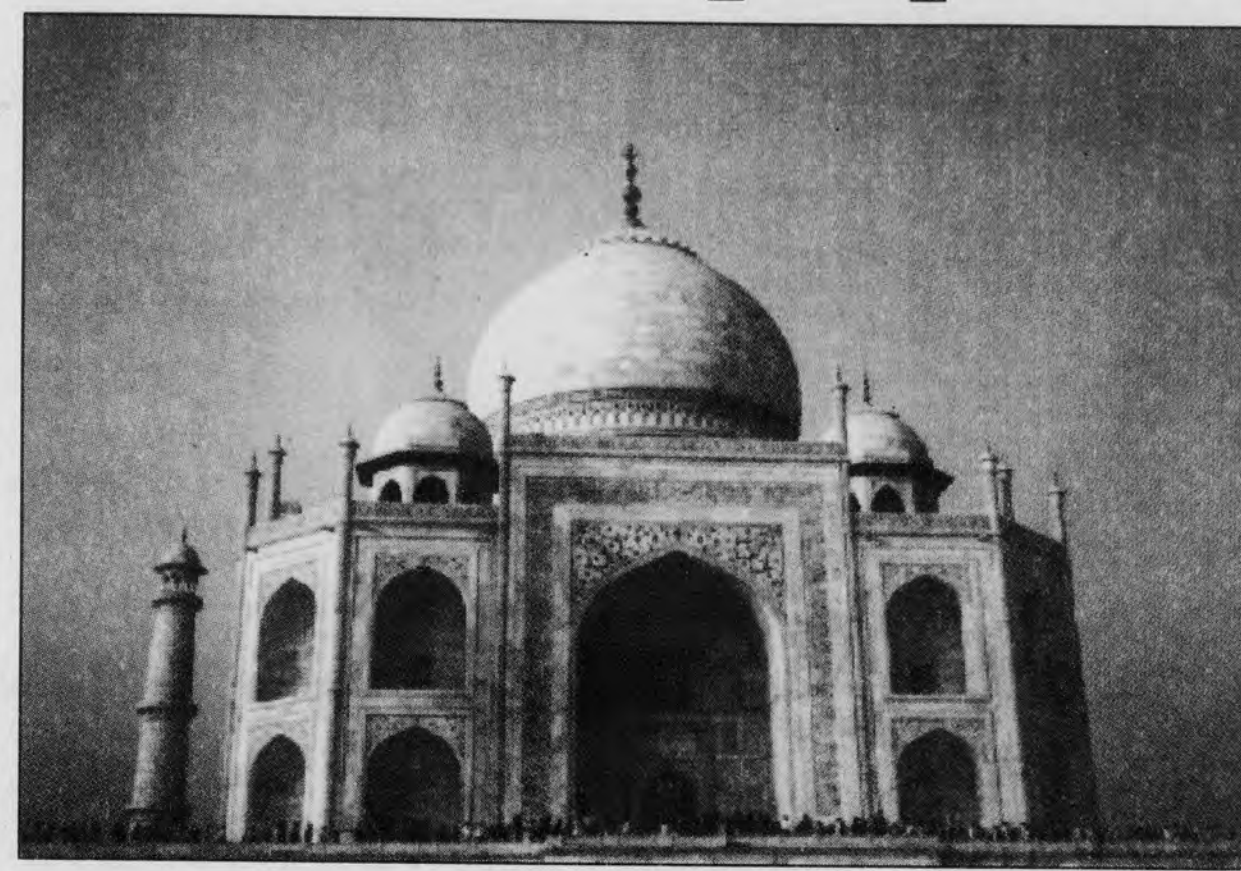

By PARKER TERRILL
Staff Writer

Much to the delight of the scientific community, the NEAR Shoemaker, a robotic probe, landed on the asteroid Eros on Feb. 12. NEAR was launched from Cape Canaveral in early 1996, and has orbited Eros continually, searching the surface of the asteroid with beams from remote sensing instruments.

A product of the Johns Hopkins University Applied Physics Laboratory, NEAR attempted to identify remnants of the past by analyzing rock strata. The tasks performed by NEAR, as well as the successful landing, have sparked debate in the exploration of space.

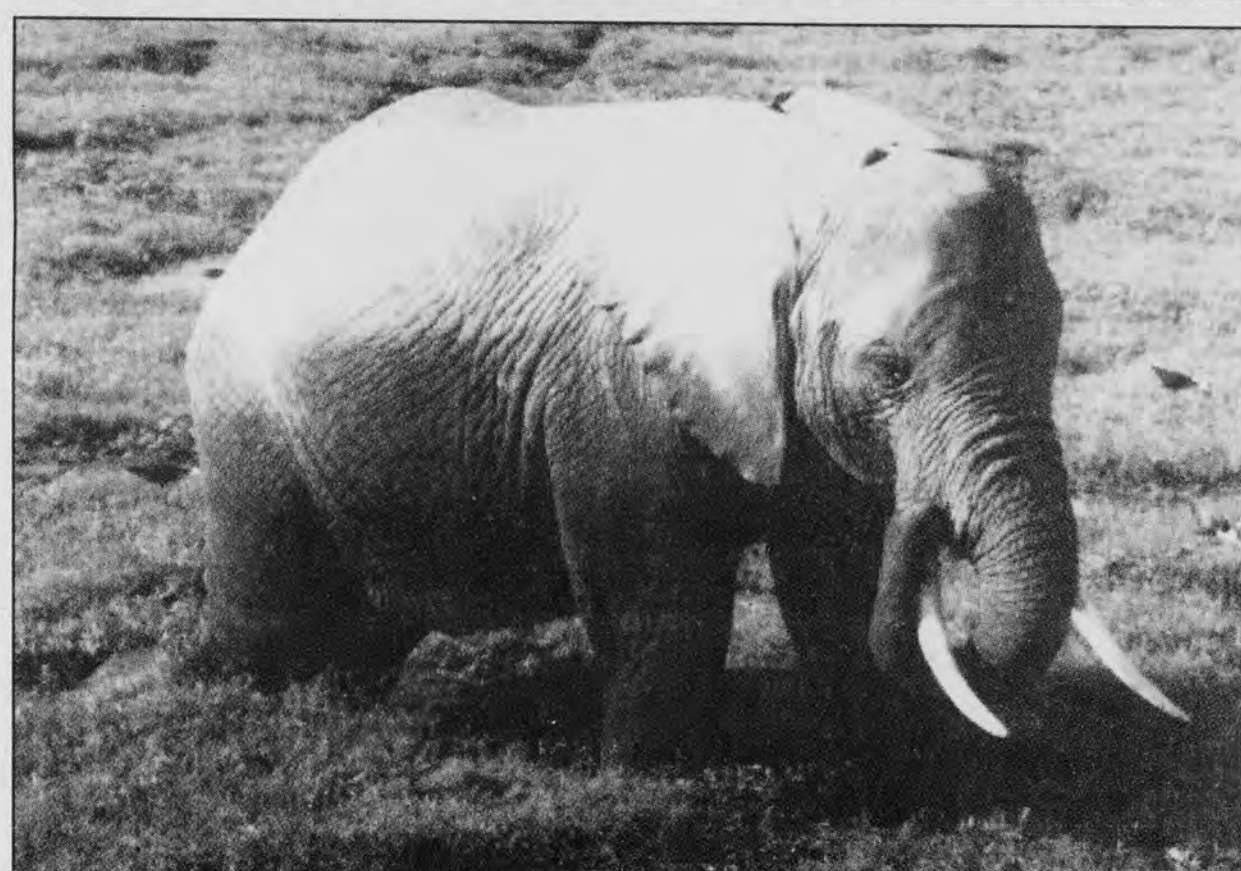

The recent landing of NEAR on an asteroid has fueled the debate concerning whether robots or humans should explore space. With advancements in technology, robots have acquired the ability to perform tasks once performed by astronauts and thus many believe it is unnecessary for humans to face the dangers that may be encountered during a mission.

Currently, the fundamental reason for space exploration, according to Space.com, is the

ABOVE: The Taj Mahal stands tall above Majera, India.
BELOW: An elephant in the marshes.

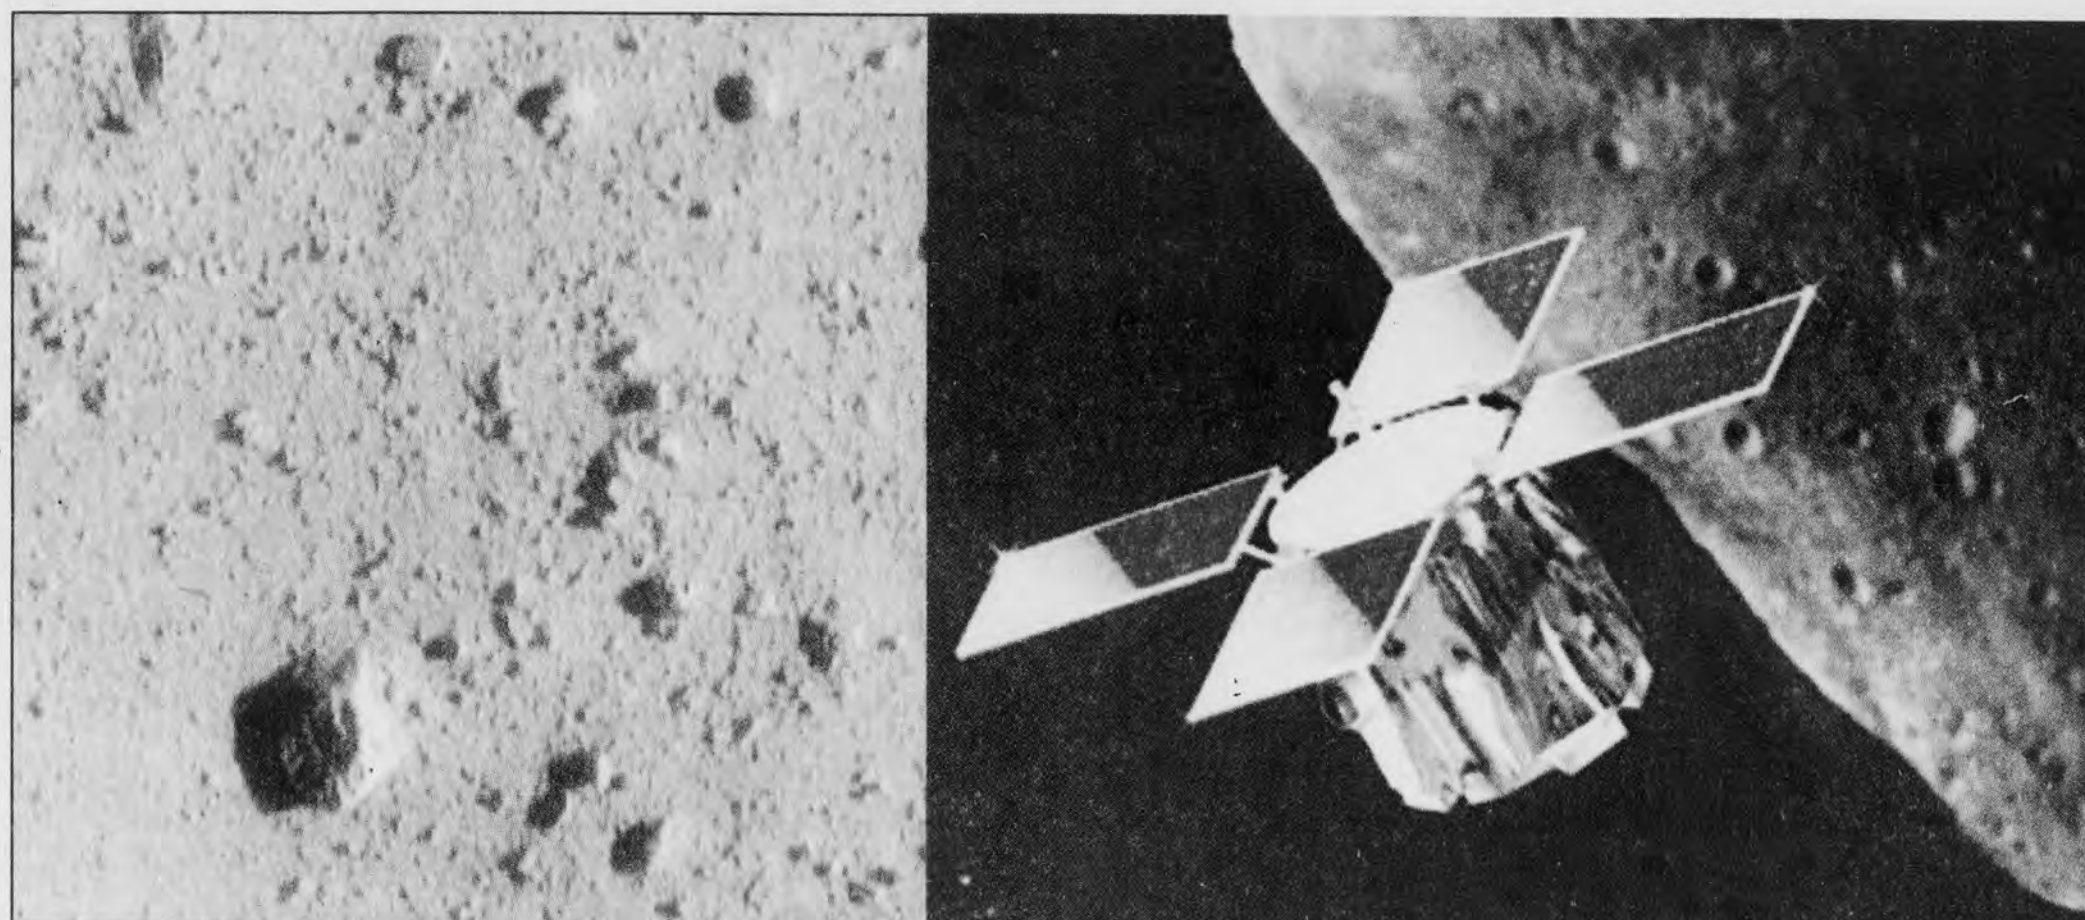

Pictures courtesy of authors

Enjoy Spring Break

The Bucknellian will be back on March 23

LEFT: A picture of the surface of Eros, taken as the NEAR probe approaches the surface.
RIGHT: Computer model of the NEAR probe with Eros in the background.

search for life on other planets. Human space exploration has inspired imagination in many individuals. Although space exploration contains an immense element of excitement, the public has lost interest due to their feelings that the exploration of space is not necessary at the current time.

See NEAR, page B10

Sports Trivia

By Justin McCarthy

- 1) What NCAA Division I basketball team has won the most games since the start of the 1999-2000 season?
- 2) What NBA coach has the highest winning percentage without ever reaching the NBA finals?
- 3) Who was the last NHL team to win an overtime game this season?

1) Boston Celtics 2) Larry Brown 3) New York Islanders

FORUM

EDITORIAL

Planning of Recreation and Athletic Center justified

Though the plans for the University's new Recreation and Athletic Center have been underway for quite some time, students are just now learning what all they've contributed to the facility—or haven't contributed, for that matter.

At Sunday's forum sponsored by Bucknell Student Government (BSG), students voiced concerns regarding the administration's lack of attention to student input and absence of recognition for students' financial contribution. Each student contributes $25 per year for a project that many won't see completed in their time here. Furthermore, students raised the issue that their direct input was not heard and therefore not factored into what has been promised as "a facility for all students" at the administration.

Additional concern comes from students after severe delays and project changes were announced; the project is nearly one academic year behind schedule and has fluctuated in price from $23 million to over $50 million before the final budget of $32 million was approved.

The Bucknellian staff sympathizes with students, yet we gently remind the student body that our voice was heard; two BSG members—our elected representatives—have been included as the "students' voice" from the beginning of the project. And while $25 per student per year is a significant contribution—$2 million over the next 20 years—we have to remember what the University is giving us: the biggest construction project this school has ever undertaken.

The recreational aspect of this facility has never been compromised; in fact, the plan for the fitness center increased even more from the original from 15,000 square feet allotted. Considering 70% of our students participated in varsity athletics in high school, this facility will serve as both a recruiting tool for prospective students (for varsity and non-varsity students alike) and as a building block for stronger intramural and recreational programs. Recreational and varsity sports will be able to occur simultaneously.

While the initial shock of the magnitude of this project—and the magnitude of the changes—still troubles some students, The Bucknellian supports the administration's decision to follow status quo for students' input, that of BSG, on a project of this size. Our BSG representatives have expressed their willingness to relay the student body's opinions on this project to the team coordinating the construction.

The delay is significant, as are the many changes, but the final product will leave the University improved in a way we can't quite fathom just yet. The administration, simply put, is going to great lengths to build an amazing state-of-the-art facility for us. We, the students, are the reason for this project.

And while the final blueprints may have been approved already, plans for interior amenities can always be adjusted. The Bucknellian urges students to communicate their preferences with BSG. Regarding the lack of recognition for the students' gift of $2 million, The Bucknellian thanks the University Relations office for amending the sign at the construction site to reflect the students' gift.

bucknellian@bucknell.edu

Editors-in-Chief
Rebecca Rowland '02
Peter Van Emburgh '02

Managing Editor
Jim Leahy '03

Senior Editors
Matt Albert '01
Heather Napolitano '01
Matt Trunnell '01
Brian Watson '01

Business Manager
Mark Langer '02

News Editors
Laura Day '03
Natalie Casp '02
Rachel Laskow '03

Business and Politics Editor
Michael Boland '03
Maureen Oscadal '03

Forum Editor
April John '03
Peter Hackman '04

Features Editors
Sandi-Jo Galati '04
Jolene Hart '03
Jason Rubinstein '04

Arts and Entertainment Editor
Krista Reisdorf '02
Kristi Johnston '03

Letters to the Editors

Rumors of RAC confirmed by letter

To the Editor,

I have recently heard from several people that our athletic center is going to be redone. While I love hearing this, at the same time I find the information unsettling. I want to know more about this so-called gym renovation. When exactly is it going to be redone? What exactly is going to be done? Are they simply going to add a few new machines or completely destroy the old gym in order to create a new one that will accommodate approximately thirty six hundred students plus faculty and staff?

Going to the gym now can be a very stressful experience. However, now is the perfect time to work out, what with spring break being a week away! Anyone planning a beach vacation is striving to get that perfect "beach body." We want to burn those dreaded calories on treadmills and stair-masters and tone and shape muscles with the weight machines.

Yet, this is not always possible. Between certain hours of nearly everyday, except maybe Saturday, the Annex Weight Room is packed.

Black History Alive program facts set straight

To the Editor,

In the February 16th issue, an article, entitled "Black History Comes Alive" was written on the Black History Alive Program presented in celebration of Black History Month. As a contributor to the program and a resident of 7th St. house, I was ecstatic to see that the story made front page. I was equally delighted at how well the writer captured the atmosphere of the event and expressed fairly well all of its intricacies.

However, I was very disappointed to read that on the second floor, presenting information on the Civil Rights Movement, she found "a video of Martin Luther King and other civil rights leaders was shown." This information was not true. There was no such video.

Perhaps, she had not toured the entire house and that was OK. However, I did not feel it was OK to take assumptions or hearsay about what was presented and state them as if they were facts.

This was particularly frustrating in light of the fact that students responsible for this time period worked hard to find and present information about the Civil Rights Movement that people typically do not think of. Our entire aim was to challenge people to go beyond Martin Luther King, Malcolm X, etc. and to see the Civil Rights Movement from a broader perspective.

We wanted to shed light on some of the events that took place at that time that aren't always highlighted or noted.

So what was on the second floor covering the time period of the Civil Rights Movement? There was a tribute to four little girls who had been killed in a church bombing. Their deaths was an event that I found to be both most gripping and potentially pivotal at that time.

The bombing took place at Sixteenth St. Baptist church, which had been a headquarters for the Civil Rights movement in Birmingham, AL. It was where many of the protests were led from and a central place for leaders to meet. On Sunday, Sept. 15th, 1963 as the congregation transitioned between Sunday school classes and worship service, a Klu Klux Klansmen sent a bomb through the basement of the church.

Denise McNair (age 12), Cynthia Wesley (age 14), Addie Mae Collins (age 14), and Carole Robertson (age 14) were killed instantly as they were freshening up for the morning service. Their bodies lay one on top of the other—one decapitated and another with a brick in the side of her head.

The death of these innocent little girls shook the nation, particularly the city of Birmingham.

This was just one event that took place in that time period that I felt deserved more attention, and we presented that in the form of "A Tribute to the Four Little Girls."

In addition to the tribute, we also had displays on how the Civil

Anyone who has ventured in between the hours of 3 and 5:30 during the week knows what I'm referring to.

It is nearly impossible to get a treadmill or stair-master. If you should happen to walk in and see one available, do not hold your breath. It maybe you'll be lucky enough to secure a working treadmill but understand that incline may not be an "option."

More likely than not, however, you will succumb to asking one of the lucky runners or climbers, "How much longer do you have?" "Oh, you just got on? Forty minutes, ok," sigh and walk on to ask the next person the same question. Then, "Oh, someone is already getting on after you, ok." Finally, you find a stair-master that will be available in fifteen minutes.

Wow! What a relief! You did not walk all the way to the gym in the blistering cold for nothing. Maybe you can even fit in a few weight machines while you wait, sure to keep your eyes on your "claimed" stair-master or treadmill so that no one else tries to steal it from you.

If you work out a lot at the gym, or at least try to, you probably are familiar with a scenario similar to this. How can four treadmills (one of which is broken on any given day), six or eight stair-masters and few stationary bikes possibly satisfy the aerobic needs of the Bucknell community? Sure, there are aerobic classes, but even those have been known to fill up if you do not get there early. Looking at other gyms at similar schools makes me wonder why Bucknell has not taken a greater interest in maintaining our athletic center.

I only hope that these rumors of a newly constructed athletic center are true and tailored to fit the needs of the Bucknell community. Lastly, I hope that I am able to experience it.

Stacey Gawronski '03

Editor's note: Please see the article on page A1 and the editorial for further information on this topic.

Rights Movement affected the Puerto Rican Community, White Involvement in the Movement and Current Issues of Civil Rights. I understand the mistake of the writer, as we all tend to connect the Civil Rights Movement with Martin Luther King, Jr. Nevertheless, I wanted to clarify what actually was presented on that floor and to make known the conscious efforts being made to touch areas in the Civil Rights Movement that perhaps go unnoticed.

Nakhia Hopkins '01

Editorial validity questioned

To the Editor,

I am writing in response to an editorial written by the Business and Politics Editor. I begin first by pointing out the strange topic combination of business and politics. I agree in many cases they are related, yet I, along with many other students with whom I have talked, believe that they should never be likened as one in a single news column. But I will forgive that error and chalk it up to a lack of interest in writing for The Bucknellian.

In any case, the topic of the article "Nader's Message Sounds Familiar", was quite possibly one of the most inane, narrow-minded articles I have ever read. The so-called editor of this column made a feeble attempt to wittily mock the appearance of Ralph Nader on campus. It seems his point was to bring attention to the fact that the university has not in recent years sponsored a conservative speaker. Sure he can argue his point, that is obviously his right, it is after all an editorial, but I ask him to do it professionally.

Being assinine to prove a point only makes the argument seem more meaningless. I admit that I am not an overt supporter of Ralph Nader but I do respect his views, and am open-minded enough to listen to his message.

In response to the final paragraph of his editorial, obviously he has not worked as hard at bringing a conservative speaker to campus as he has at hypocritically bashing an orator that I guarantee will give one of the best attended appearances of the year.

Sincerely,
Anthony J. Pinheiro '01

THE BUCKNELLIAN

Founded in 1896 as The Blue and Orange

Volume 127, Number 6

C-3952 BUCKNELL UNIVERSITY
LEWISBURG, PENNSYLVANIA, 17837
(570)-577-1520

BUCKNELLIAN@BUCKNELL.EDU
HTTP://WWW.ORG.BUCKNELL.EDU/BUCKNELLIAN

EDITORIAL POLICY

The editorials of The Bucknellian reflect the consensus of the Editorial Board as to the topics and general position. If a consensus could not be reached, the opinions expressed are those of the Editors-in-Chief. All other opinion material represents the views of the author and not necessarily those of The Bucknellian.

PUBLISHING POLICY

The Bucknellian is written, edited and published on 12 Fridays during each academic semester entirely by Bucknell students. The Bucknellian's fiscal affairs are overseen by an Advisory Board comprised of faculty, staff and administrators. All published material is chosen by the paper's editorial board without prior review by the Advisory Board, its adviser, the University or Bucknell Student Government.

SUBSCRIPTIONS POLICY

Subscriptions are available $45 per year and $30 per semester. To subscribe, send payment and address information to: The Bucknellian Subscriptions, Box C-3952, Lewisburg, PA 17837. Subscriptions are mailed first-class on the Monday of publication. Please send change-of-address information to the above location as well.

ADVERTISING POLICY

The Editorial Board of The Bucknellian reserves the right to deny any advertisements if offensive, illegal or in bad taste. For advertising rates, please contact the advertising managers at (570) 577-1085.

Copyright 2001 The Bucknellian

Science and Technology Editors
Lynne Waldman '01
Josiana Cetta '04

Sports Editors
Carmen Mauriello '02
Brooke Rea '02
Andrew Burr '04

Sports Statistician
Matthew Herbert '02

Darkroom Manager
Chris Rivera '02

Photo Editors
Paige Cull '01
Chris Rivera '02

Local Advertising Representative
Bryan Prins '04
National Advertising Representative
Amy Pelouquin '03

Online Editors
Eric Fair '01
Brendan Putnam '03

Circulation Manager
Brian Klotz '03

Head Copy Editors
Kim Luedee '01
Debbie Ruggieri '01

Production Manager
Nick Olson '02

Adviser
James F. Lee

University missing radical-conservatism

By TOM ELLIOT
Staff Writer

There comes a time in every young man's life when he is called to a certain duty. I recently experienced one of these callings—a calling to embark on a crusade for knowledge. The call came as clear as crystal. I knew I had to leave, and leave now.

I packed my bags, justified skipping the rest of my classes for the week and headed to cold and rainy DC. I attended the 28th annual Conservative Political Action Conference pumped up and equipped with a relentless passion for "the truth." (Like my man Ralph Nader).

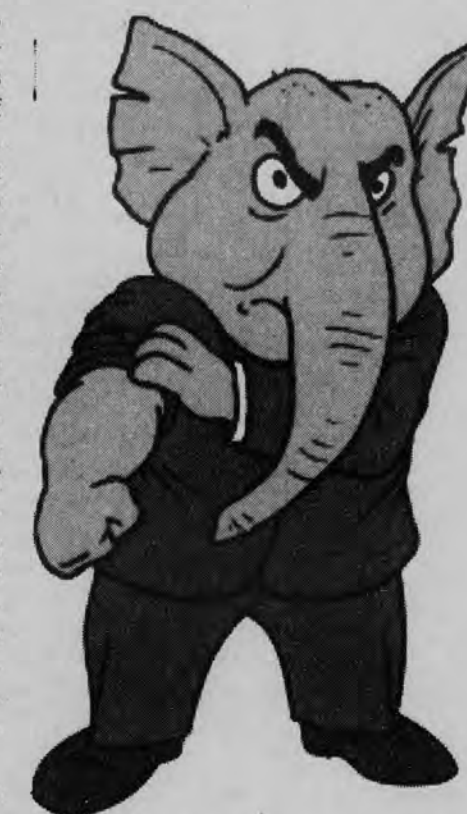

The truth was soon to hit me like a brick wall. Apparently this fine institution was short changing me (and you). Apparently the constitution isn't a living, breathing document, apparently free markets have some benefits and apparently the United States has done some good things in the past century.

Is this school liberal? Of course, but what college campus isn't? This, like every other university, is being run by the same activists who lamented Nixon and the Vietnam War. These are the soldiers who have created this neo-liberalism that we have come to enjoy.

This neo-liberalism I speak of has primarily dropped any connotation of freedom that the word once possessed. This is the 30 year movement that has been highlighted with themes of increased government, political correctness and, of course, made it trendy to run camps based on the persecuted minorities, the asperity of the homosexual, the urgency of issues surrounding vulnerable senior citizens and the mothers-bearing-unwanted-babies.

My point is that we have been taught us that the term "colored people" is derogatory and these people should now be referred to as "people of color." While these two terms are grammatically identical, one is inappropriate and one is not.

The University has become very un-American. I do not need to see the touting of specific types of people and their contributions. I can appreciate everyone as fellow and equal Americans without an Asian Awareness Week or a Black History Month. You could have a Monaco-American appreciation day, but I still think I will view them as good Americans, similar to myself. The Monaco-Americans' contributions to society could be minimal or none whatsoever and I wouldn't care at all nor view them any differently.

There is a large misconception in today's society that if you force immersion in something, you produce tolerance and acceptance. Intuitively speaking, it makes sense; pragmatically speaking, it doesn't. Just because the administration hosts "The Vagina Monologues" does not mean I am going to go and become a more enraged feminist than I already am.

Its time we become satisfied with equal rights, there is no need for special rights. Its time to end the bitterness and the negativity—we aren't victims. Its time to step up and rise to a greater, more courageous and more respectable call; a call to justice, to freedom and for the American way.

Next time you hear your professor talking about the past atrocities of subversive American attempts at collapsing communism in Nicaragua or Cuba be radical, say "God bless America!"

Controversial Questia deemed OK

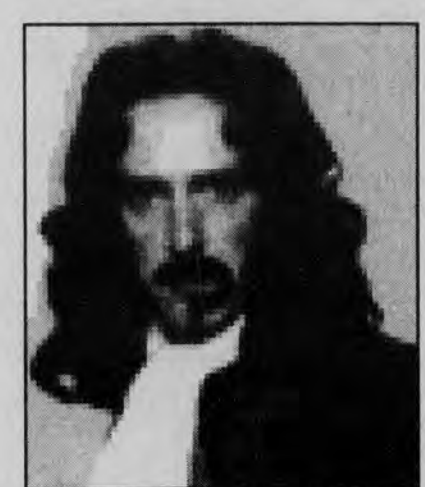

By ALLYSSON DEMERATH
Senior Writer

So have you heard about it yet? If you have been perusing any recent issues of the Bucknellian, you may have noticed an advertisement for some website called Questia. This particular company has been running half page ads in our beloved Bucknellian.

However, these ads may not have caught your attention yet. Or if they did, chances are you passed over them because they were so incredibly cheesy, not to mention confusing.

In fact, I had to stare at one for about five minutes before I actually figured out what they were trying to sell, and I'm a fairly intelligent person. The layout of the ad is much like that of a Q&A column. Instead of just explaining what their company does, they have designed the advertisement to give the impression that people wrote into them requesting information.

The "Question Marquis" then responds to the questions. They also feature a picture of this guy in the ad; he looks like a shady ghostly murderer. The entire ad is written in wannabe French, which actually sounds more like pig Latin. If you tried to ascertain what this company was selling, you would discover they were offering quite a valuable resource.

Courtesy Questia.com

Despite their pathetic attempts at advertising, Questia has a promising service to offer the college student. Essentially, they have developed a website, www.questia.com, to help students with research efforts. Students are able to type in keywords and the site produces a number of articles and resources on the subject. It's like using a more advanced ArticleFinder.

That whole tedious process of doing research for your next paper... eliminated. But it's going to cost you! A subscription runs about $19.95 a month. Questia has so much confidence in themselves that they'll even sign you up for a free 48-hour subscription to see how you like it.

Plus, the site offers a free tour. You learn about how you can have access to books, articles and encyclopedias from any Internet connection.

You can also find the most relevant issues by using tools such as: Quick Search, Power Search or Explore by Topic. Once you find these priceless pieces of information, the site allows you to use the Highlighter, Margin Notes and Bookmark features at your convenience. Plus, the program will automatically create footnotes, endnotes, parenthetical references and bibliography pages with just the click of your mouse. You can create online folders that allow you to access your saved information anytime anywhere.

It almost sounds to good to be true. Yet I think Questia is simply making our lives just a bit easier. However, with this convenience, you are bound to encounter some criticism. Many professors and perhaps students would argue that this is cheating. I mean, you are paying someone to help you find information to write a paper.

However, I would claim that the same argument could be made for hiring librarians, except the school pays them instead of us. The bottom line is that we are past the days of typewriters or handwritten papers. Our culture is becoming so incredibly technologically efficient; we as students should be exposed to newest research methods. Chances are, in about five years, sites like this will be the norm. It will not even be a question as to whether or not students should use them.

This type of research already exists in the workplace. There it goes by a different name: intern. Once we are all out in the working world, we will find that there is simply not enough time to do research of this nature on our own. Therefore, we must call on outside resources, whether from another person or the actual Internet, to help us gather information. Plus, many companies already have their own database where compiled information like this can be found.

I foresee Questia being the next trend among students who are looking to create even more accurate and relevant papers. As long as the student is the one actually writing the paper, I see no problem with having accessible information provided for a small fee.

Do you know who they think you are?

By KELLEN ALEXIS SMITH
Contributing Writer

The University has a very serious problem. This problem, however, is not one that you could die from or even one that could put your life in jeopardy. The problem that Bucknell has is... its over consumption of goods, a.k.a.—the need to keep up with the Jones' of BU.

There are many of you out there that feel the need to spend every penny you own just to be like what you think that everyone else here is like. So in your pursuit to fit in with many of the materialistic, fake, SUV or luxury car driving people that you know you have nothing in common with, you swipe yourself into debt buying J.Crew, Banana Republic, Coach, Aldo, Enzo, and all of the other brands that you never really wore on a regular basis until you came here.

The need to fit in with the "Bucknell Image" is an unhealthy one. "Why do so many Bucknellians, who obviously have some sort of intelligence to be at Bucknell, take part in such a stupid act?" Well the reason is—many people don't feel that they would be thought of any type of wealth here if they don't.

Unfortunately, many people here think that to be thought worthy of the opportunity to be part of the Bucknell community you have to be just like all those people in the higher ranks of the socio-economic ladder. What we fail to realize in our pursuit of Bucknell happiness and future debt is that we are only doing ourselves a disservice. These people that you are trying to befriend with your acts of dishonesty aren't really your friends, they are friends with the person they think you are, not with the real you. So, Bucknell, before you charge that ski trip for next weekend, that J.Crew sweater you don't need or whatever else you think is going to make you acceptable to what is actually a small minority of people here, think "Is this who I really am?" and "Is this really the image that I want people to remember me by?"

Israeli Labor Party sells soul to Sharon

By GRETCHEN SCHROCK
Opinions Columnist

Selling one's precious soul to Satan in return for a few measly earthly rewards, namely power, has always been an ill-advised idea; however, the Israeli Labor Party has ignored this ancient wisdom and agreed to join a unity government with right-wing Prime Minister Ariel Sharon at its dark helm. Why is such a development an ominous sign for Israeli politics and the Middle East peace process?

One would assume that building a broad-based coalition government would permit greater levels of stability in the Israeli state, something that has been completely lacking in the last five months of clashes between the Israelis and the Palestinians that has claimed 409 lives, in which 337 were Palestinians. Yet, the agreement to join the unity government will force the Labor Party to undoubtedly make concessions to the right-wing politicians, while forgetting their own moderate stances of peace with Israel's neighbors and equality for Israel's Arab citizens.

The possibility of Sharon and his party accepting moderate policies regarding the Palestinian situation is very unlikely. The reasoning is that Sharon, perceived to be a war criminal in some political circles for his actions in the Israeli invasion of Lebanon in 1982, triggered the recent Palestinian uprising by visiting the Temple Mount in a flamboyant display of nationalism.

How can one expect such a right-wing nationalist with no respect for other ethnic and religious groups to follow such moderate policies as those of the Labor Party? For the past two decades, peace with Israel's Arab neighbors through the return of territory captured by Israel in the 1967 Middle East War has been a cornerstone of the Labor position.

Sharon may try to convince the Israeli citizens that he favors peace but when actually negotiating peace conditions, he will deny the assertion that Israel must return territory, using the issue of national security as his excuse.

One of the commitments made by Sharon for the establishment of the unity government was the promise to abide by any agreements with Israel's Arab neighbors and the Palestinians that were endorsed by the Knesset, the legislative arm of the Israeli government. If one wants to get technical with this condition, it can be argued that only the 1993 Oslo accord recognizing the principle of land for peace would be honored by the new government and that the territorial concessions promised by former Prime Minister Ehud Barak would be ignored.

Yet, the new government has promised that it will not abandon the goal of trading land for a final peace settlement with the Palestinians. The refusal of Sharon to restart peace talks until those Palestinians stop attacking his innocent citizens with stones somehow might delay the accomplishment of this goal.

Forget that Israelis are throwing bullets out of guns at unarmed Palestinians. Forget that the new government is entrenched in policy contradictions.

What induced the Labor Party to agree to a coalition with the Likud Party? Eight Cabinet seats and the opportunity to fill the high-profile ministries of defense and foreign affairs was all that it took to convince Labor to sign the dotted line on its contract with its ideological arch-enemy.

In addition, the possibility of acting as moderating force against the hard line approach of the Likud Party towards the peace process and international relations was another attractive feature of joining the government. Considering that the unattractive alternative was a coalition government between the Likud Party and a host of several small right wing and ultra-religious parties, the Labor Party had little choice.

As Ephraim Sneh, the deputy defense minister in the Barak government said to The New York Times, "There is only one reason to do this, and that is the chance to influence the course of government to a moral, reasonable, responsible, moderate policy. The Israeli people are terribly concerned about the possibility of adventurism of a right wing government and would expect us to counterbalance it."

This columnist hopes that, for the benefit of the Middle East region, the Labor Party will possess the influence and political might to overcome the nationalist and right wing tendencies of the new government. Otherwise, stability, peace, and a chance for happiness among the disenfranchised and stateless Palestinians will be lacking.

The future of the country and the surrounding region is entrusted in the abilities of these two parties to maintain a relationship of respect and understanding, assisted by constant negotiation on conflicting political viewpoints.

Sharon must not disappoint his citizens by neglecting to follow through with his promises. Most importantly, the Labor Party must not ignore its moderate positions on numerous policy issues or extremism will run amok in Israel, igniting greater domestic and foreign instability.

Got somethin' on your mind?

Write a Letter to the Editors!

Box C-3952 Bucknell University
Lewisburg, PA. 17837

bucknellian@bucknell.edu

FEATURES

Appletree Alley closes after 20 years printing

By KATIE HEISE
Senior Writer

It's the end of the world as we know it. Well, not exactly, but one Lewisburg man's 20-year love affair with the printing press is winding to a close, marking the end of an era in his long and busy life.

The Press of Appletree Alley, owned and run by Barnard Taylor, has closed its doors after several decades of producing unique volumes that were the delight of bibliophiles around the globe.

In its heyday, Taylor's press, located in a converted garage, released more than 30 books in collaboration with the University.

Its editions included volumes dedicated to poets-in-residence, the works of faculty, alumni and writers-in-residence, selections from the Bertrand Library's special collections and even works by such famous authors as George Bernard Shaw, William Butler Yeats and D.H. Lawrence.

Each page was drafted and constructed with painstaking care to produce true literary treasures, marked by the union of beautiful graphics and words of wisdom or flights of fancy.

The success of Appletree Alley was due, in part, to significant community support. Many of Taylor's manuscripts were selected by former Lewisburg Area High School English teacher Mary Chenoweth Stratton and Ann de Klerk, former director of the library and information services at the University.

Taylor would then contact one of the artists with whom he worked to commission the most magical imagery that made the writers' words come alive. Among those who lent their hands to the artistry of Appletree Alley were University professor Rosalyn Richards, alumnus Stephen Craft and Taylor himself.

Though Taylor was partial to the unique appearance of English wood engravings, he allowed the artists complete liberty in their designs.

"I think they wanted to be free," he told The Daily Item. "We didn't tell them what to do or how to do it."

That opening of the door to interpretation and creation is precisely what gives each tome its distinctive charm and elegance.

In the shop, Taylor and students and community volunteers

the Pennsylvania Academy of Fine Arts and completed his degree at Lycoming College before entering the fast-paced world of mass media. Taylor, a lifelong learner, even went on to earn his master's degree in fine arts from Penn State while in his 50s.

During his distinguished career, he served as a designer for a Philadelphia publisher, as a news reporter and as director of public relations at both Juniata College and Geisinger Medical Center.

An avid artist, Taylor also designed publications for many academic institutions and took his one-man show of abstract watercolors on the road for a tour of universities and public libraries.

After retirement, he resolved to pursue his desire to print special books, encouraged by his longtime friend John Wheatcroft, professor emeritus of English at the University. The path was far from easy.

In contrast to the peaceful retirement he may have imagined, Taylor worked around the clock to finish multiple projects at various stages of production.

"The shop was right behind me," he said. "I was always in the shop, and I was always in the shop."

After retirement, he resolved to pursue his desire to print special books, encouraged by his longtime friend John Wheatcroft, professor emeritus of English at the University. The path was far from easy.

In contrast to the peaceful retirement he may have imagined, Taylor worked around the clock to finish multiple projects at various stages of production.

"The shop was right behind me," he said. "I was always in the shop, and I was always in the shop."

After retirement, he resolved to pursue his desire to print special books, encouraged by his longtime friend John Wheatcroft, professor emeritus of English at the University. The path was far from easy.

In contrast to the peaceful retirement he may have imagined, Taylor worked around the clock to finish multiple projects at various stages of production.

"The shop was right behind me," he said. "I was always in the shop, and I was always in the shop."

After retirement, he resolved to pursue his desire to print special books, encouraged by his longtime friend John Wheatcroft, professor emeritus of English at the University. The path was far from easy.

In contrast to the peaceful retirement he may have imagined, Taylor worked around the clock to finish multiple projects at various stages of production.

"The shop was right behind me," he said. "I was always in the shop, and I was always in the shop."

After retirement, he resolved to pursue his desire to print special books, encouraged by his longtime friend John Wheatcroft, professor emeritus of English at the University. The path was far from easy.

In contrast to the peaceful retirement he may have imagined, Taylor worked around the clock to finish multiple projects at various stages of production.

"The shop was right behind me," he said. "I was always in the shop, and I was always in the shop."

After retirement, he resolved to pursue his desire to print special books, encouraged by his longtime friend John Wheatcroft, professor emeritus of English at the University. The path was far from easy.

In contrast to the peaceful retirement he may have imagined, Taylor worked around the clock to finish multiple projects at various stages of production.

"The shop was right behind me," he said. "I was always in the shop, and I was always in the shop."

After retirement, he resolved to pursue his desire to print special books, encouraged by his longtime friend John Wheatcroft, professor emeritus of English at the University. The path was far from easy.

In contrast to the peaceful retirement he may have imagined, Taylor worked around the clock to finish multiple projects at various stages of production.

"The shop was right behind me," he said. "I was always in the shop, and I was always in the shop."

After retirement, he resolved to pursue his desire to print special books, encouraged by his longtime friend John Wheatcroft, professor emeritus of English at the University. The path was far from easy.

Appletree Alley, which has delighted readers worldwide for 20 years, is on exhibit in the Bertrand Library.

Courtesy of ISR

He Said, She Said

Are Guys Just as High-Maintenance as Girls?

By ELISE CITRIN, JENNIFER COMER, AND SARAH JOHNSON
Features Columnists

Most men say that they don't like high-maintenance girls, but it is usually true that those men are even more high-maintenance themselves. So what makes a boy "high-maintenance"? There are two types: those who are high-maintenance physically and those who are high-maintenance mentally.

If you remember "Valentines Day Goggles" (our last column), we discussed high-maintenance girls (the ones that are showered and ready for their eight o'clocks and still had time to get coffee.) Boys may laugh at that, but they are just as guilty.

From the beginning, Taylor's goals were to achieve a professional standard of craftsmanship, create imaginative, distinctive designs, explore various methods of production, and, above all, to print rare, valuable words in a style that would enhance the message of the author.

He has accomplished just that, as he well realizes. "I am grateful to have been able to realize a long-held dream... to create beautiful books. It is a source of satisfaction, as I regretfully close the Press, that the... books I created with the assistance of many devoted volunteers are now on the shelves of major libraries worldwide, and in the hands of collectors of fine books," Taylor said as he prepared for the stilling of the presses.

Though Taylor's eyesight is failing and the press has shut down, the University has ensured that Appletree Alley will not soon be forgotten.

An impressive exhibit, "A Tribute to the Press of Appletree Alley, 1981-2001," will grace the lobby and the exhibit area on Lower Level 1 of the Bertrand Library, until Aug. 10 of this year, taking members of the University community on a fascinating journey through the press's history and accomplishments.

Credit to article by Patrick McArdle in the 2/11/01 issue of The Daily Item, the University press release at <http://www.departments.bucknell.edu/pr/releases/>.

So men, I know the ladies will agree with me when I say that we would rather be with someone that we can laugh with as opposed to someone who spends hours trying to decide which Abercrombie shirt looks best with his khakis.

What ever happened to the laid-back, chill kind of guy that was always fun to be around? He certainly does not go to this university. Instead, we have guys who are tan with good hair and perfectly shaped eyebrows.

So men, I know the ladies will agree with me when I say that we would rather be with someone that we can laugh with as opposed to someone who spends hours trying to decide which Abercrombie shirt looks best with his khakis.

Subway and Subversions face off at lunchtime

By ANDRÉS SOLTÉN
Senior Writer

Sandwiches are the staple of a good lunch diet and the sub is a tasty and healthy way to fill up in between classes. We recently compared the subs available at Subversions, located in The Bison, to the sandwiches at Subway, located next to the train tracks at 434 Market Street.

First, you must decide between the six-inch or 12-inch subs. Whether at Subversions or Subway, this is an important decision. The six-inch is a good meal when complemented with chips and a soda.

The 12-inch sub should be saved for two scenarios: either you are very hungry or you are planning to eat half of it at the moment and save the other half for later. The 12-inch is also a great way to bring food on a road trip. Subs are very good in general because they can easily be eaten on the run.

Subversions has special meals for their different subs and sandwiches. Make use of these meals because they include a medium soda and chips. For example, the six-inch Roast Beef Sub meal, although not listed as a meal, goes for $3.69. This is a very competitive price. The same meal at Subway came out to $3.79.

The roast beef sub at Subversions included cheese, lettuce, tomato and either mayonnaise or mustard. Any good place for subs must rely on the ability to customize a meal. Subversions does a very good job of offering many possibilities ranging from cheeses to pickles.

The sub itself tasted pretty good. It had an impressive amount of roast beef, especially in comparison to Subway's meal. In fact, most of the subs were more filling in Subversions than in Subway's. The turkey sub at Subversions is also an excellent choice for lunch.

"The 12-inch Italian sub is really good. I usually switch between that and the meatball sub," University student said. Both subs are $3.95. The real difference between Subversions' subs and Subway's subs is that Subversions' feel "heavier." The recent advertisements for Subway stress the low fat content of their sandwiches. Occasionally, it takes some work to finish a Subversions sandwich, but even the 12-inch sandwiches at Subway feel more like a light meal because they are "lighter" on the stomach.

Subway has a wider variety of sandwiches, condiments and even cookies. They also have a wider variety of meals to choose from. Additionally, Subway is able to customize a sandwich better than Subversions. If you are one of those people who needs to have a sandwich made exactly a certain way, you are probably better off at Subway.

Vegetarians are probably better off at Subway, because they have a wider assortment of vegetables to choose from. Vegetable subs are also cheaper at Subway.

However, it is much better to get a sub from Subway and take it for the road. While the seating and facilities are adequate, it is nicer to eat somewhere more open.

So, which one should you go to for a good sub? It depends on the situation. If you like smooth, light subs that taste good and are affordable, drop by Subway.

If Subway sandwiches just don't fill you up, definitely get a 12-inch sub at Subversions. For long trips, like returning home for Spring Break, grab a sandwich for the road from Subway.

For a good snack or meal during the midday rush, be sure to arrive early to avoid the lines at Subversions.

Around the world in 100 days

An abroad perspective by students on a semester at sea

SEA From page B1

Tiananmen Square became not just a mythic-textbook place of student protests, but an actual atmosphere of communism, nationalism and social interaction, with silent green uniformed soldiers observing every move. The Taj Mahal was no longer a picture on a page, but a breathtaking experience, which allowed us to feel the cool marble of its body and hear the hollow echoes within its walls.

We learned by touching, tasting, smelling, listening and seeing. Knowledge from class fit together perfectly (or sometimes not so perfectly) with our experiences and the "big picture" began unfolding before our eyes.

Participation in the Fall 2000 Semester at Sea voyage was not without its surprises. We quickly learned the importance of flexibility. As we drifted through the Saigon river, the Ho Chi Minh harbor in view, our plans were abruptly and jarringly changed.

The seven blaring whistles ordering us out to our lifejackets and report to our life boat stations informed us unequivocally that this was not a joke the SS Universe Explorer had crashed into another ship. The other ship had plunged directly into the cabins of our shipmates, lodged our ship in a mud bank, and given us all a good scare.

With some rearranging, minor delays, legal issues and compassion, our voyage continued on, virtually unscathed—but this was not the only obstacle we were to crash into during our voyage.

Tensions between the United States and the Middle East were increasing. With the bombing of the American ship off the coast of Yemen, we realized that although our ship itself was a sanctuary, we were far from being immune to the problems of the world. The decision was made before we arrived in India that travel in the Middle East was not safe for Americans and that our voyage would have to be re-routed.

We would never get to see Egypt, Turkey, Croatia or Spain, but instead we would have the opportunity to experience Kenya, South Africa and Brazil. The entire shipboard community had a matter of days to acquire new educational materials, receive vaccinations and make travel arrangements in our new ports.

It is impossible to describe our experiences in a single article. In a way, writing this article has been much different types of governments, religions and cultural practices, among countless other concepts which shocked and enthralled us.

Visiting three of the world's communist countries, we were exposed to a type of government, which we had previously only read about in textbooks and newspapers.

China, Vietnam and Cuba introduced us to a way of living that we could barely comprehend as citizens of a democratic nation. As with most forms of government, there are both positives and negatives to communism and we witnessed both sides during our visits.

When speaking to college students and citizens of these communist nations, we were shocked at their overwhelming sense of loyalty to their government. It seemed as though they were refraining from disclosing (and perhaps even believing) the reality of certain situations. For example, when we asked college students about the 1989 incident in Tiananmen Square, their immediate response was to inform us that what we had heard were lies and no lives having quite a bit of the countries, yet we were still received with smiles, hugs, enthusiasm and a lot of patience. People went out of their way to accommodate us in any facet, whether it be personally escorting us to places we had pointed out to them using hand gestures and English maps, or translating for us in situations where we obviously needed assistance. On numerous occasions, we and other Semester at Sea students were welcomed into the homes of people we had just met, with hopes of them introducing us to their families, friends and cultures. We could not have asked for a better reception and we are eternally grateful to all who helped us along our journey.

Of course, we will never forget the aesthetic sights of our voyage, which took our breath away with their beauty, and forever imprinted them in our memory.

In Japan, we were awestruck by the Hiroshima bombing and its transformation into a city of peace. In China, we walked through Tiananmen Square and witnessed the powerful enormity of the Great the streets. In Cuba, our parcels were searched to make sure we had not purchased anything predating the Communist Revolution. On the positive side, however, communism brought with it reduced crime rates, educated citizens and closely-knit communities—all which appealed to us as Americans.

Wall. In Vietnam, we crawled through Vietcong tunnels in the Cu Chi village. We floated down the Ganges River in India and witnessed its sacred rituals. We went on camp-

During our voyage, we also came in contact with over 20 different religions. We had the opportunity to visit different places of worship, attend services and interact with people of contrasting beliefs. From light incense outside the To-dai-ji Temple in Japan to witnessing Islamic women protesting an increase in their own equal rights in Kenya to watching spirits possess the body of a Candomble follower in Brazil, we saw the dramatic distinctions and similarities of the world's religions. More importantly, we learned that the passing of moral judgments has no place in religion as it is difficult to determine the bounds of right and wrong when it comes to an individual's faith.

Although all nine countries were dramatically different, they all seemed to be united by one common factor: the hospitality and genuine kindness of the people we encountered greatly exceeded any expectations we brought with us.

We arrived in each port, 700 students—few of us who spoke the native language and most of us having quite a bit and acceptance, with great importance. Tutu's presence alone filled the room with an aura of compassion and strength.

Then, on our final night in our final port, Semester at Sea was invited to a speech, question-and-answer session, dinner and celebration hosted by Fidel Castro. We received an up-close view of communism directly from one of history's most well-known Communist leaders.

As the exciting evening came to a close, American students and Cuban students were linked arm in arm, swaying to the music of a Cuban band. It was a breaking down of barriers between nations that was perhaps symbolic of our entire voyage—as well as a remarkable ending to a remarkable 100 days.

Now that we have returned to the United States, our feelings about this voyage of discovery are fueled with emotion and yet, at the same time, somewhat garbled. At times, we stop and realize how lucky we are to have what we have in the United States—food, shelter, security—things many of us take for granted each day. But then, in the same thought, we remember how we witnessed the true happiness of people with virtually no material belongings and we wonder if we as Americans—as a society of people

At a stop in Maasai Village in Kenya, the authors came in contact with unimaginable poverty.

Courtesy of the authors

*"We shall not cease from exploration
At the end of all our exploring
Will be to arrive where we started
And know the place for the first time*

—T.S. Eliot

ing safaris in Kenya and slept in tents guarded by Maasai Warriors. In South Africa, we saw the jail cell that was home to Nelson Mandela for much of his life. We trekked through the Amazon Rainforest in Brazil and visited the home of Ernest Hemingway in Cuba. These examples are merely scratches on the surface of the opportunities we had to experience amazing sights.

Although these sights offered us physical amazement, perhaps the pinnacle of our trip came from the emotional welcomes we received from two world renowned leaders—Archbishop Desmond Tutu in South Africa and President Fidel Castro in Cuba. During Desmond Tutu's visit to our ship, we saw the impact one leader can have on a society. His speech to our shipboard community inspired us to take our roles as part of a new generation, one of change

ing safaris in Kenya and slept in tents guarded by Maasai Warriors. In South Africa, we saw the jail cell that was home to Nelson Mandela for much of his life. We trekked through the Amazon Rainforest in Brazil and visited the home of Ernest Hemingway in Cuba. These examples are merely scratches on the surface of the opportunities we had to experience amazing sights.

Although these sights offered us physical amazement, perhaps the pinnacle of our trip came from the emotional welcomes we received from two world renowned leaders—Archbishop Desmond Tutu in South Africa and President Fidel Castro in Cuba. During Desmond Tutu's visit to our ship, we saw the impact one leader can have on a society. His speech to our shipboard community inspired us to take our roles as part of a new generation, one of change

ing safaris in Kenya and slept in tents guarded by Maasai Warriors. In South Africa, we saw the jail cell that was home to Nelson Mandela for much of his life. We trekked through the Amazon Rainforest in Brazil and visited the home of Ernest Hemingway in Cuba. These examples are merely scratches on the surface of the opportunities we had to experience amazing sights.

Although these sights offered us physical amazement, perhaps the pinnacle of our trip came from the emotional welcomes we received from two world renowned leaders—Archbishop Desmond Tutu in South Africa and President Fidel Castro in Cuba. During Desmond Tutu's visit to our ship, we saw the impact one leader can have on a society. His speech to our shipboard community inspired us to take our roles as part of a new generation, one of change

ing safaris in Kenya and slept in tents guarded by Maasai Warriors. In South Africa, we saw the jail cell that was home to Nelson Mandela for much of his life. We trekked through the Amazon Rainforest in Brazil and visited the home of Ernest Hemingway in Cuba. These examples are merely scratches on the surface of the opportunities we had to experience amazing sights.

Although these sights offered us physical amazement, perhaps the pinnacle of our trip came from the emotional welcomes we received from two world renowned leaders—Archbishop Desmond Tutu in South Africa and President Fidel Castro in Cuba. During Desmond Tutu's visit to our ship, we saw the impact one leader can have on a society. His speech to our shipboard community inspired us to take our roles as part of a new generation, one of change

ing safaris in Kenya and slept in tents guarded by Maasai Warriors. In South Africa, we saw the jail cell that was home to Nelson Mandela for much of his life. We trekked through the Amazon Rainforest in Brazil and visited the home of Ernest Hemingway in Cuba. These examples are merely scratches on the surface of the opportunities we had to experience amazing sights.

Although these sights offered us physical amazement, perhaps the pinnacle of our trip came from the emotional welcomes we received from two world renowned leaders—Archbishop Desmond Tutu in South Africa and President Fidel Castro in Cuba. During Desmond Tutu's visit to our ship, we saw the impact one leader can have on a society. His speech to our shipboard community inspired us to take our roles as part of a new generation, one of change

ing safaris in Kenya and slept in tents guarded by Maasai Warriors. In South Africa, we saw the jail cell that was home to Nelson Mandela for much of his life. We trekked through the Amazon Rainforest in Brazil and visited the home of Ernest Hemingway in Cuba. These examples are merely scratches on the surface of the opportunities we had to experience amazing sights.

Although these sights offered us physical amazement, perhaps the pinnacle of our trip came from the emotional welcomes we received from two world renowned leaders—Archbishop Desmond Tutu in South Africa and President Fidel Castro in Cuba. During Desmond Tutu's visit to our ship, we saw the impact one leader can have on a society. His speech to our shipboard community inspired us to take our roles as part of a new generation, one of change

ing safaris in Kenya and slept in tents guarded by Maasai Warriors. In South Africa, we saw the jail cell that was home to Nelson Mandela for much of his life. We trekked through the Amazon Rainforest in Brazil and visited the home of Ernest Hemingway in Cuba. These examples are merely scratches on the surface of the opportunities we had to experience amazing sights.

Although these sights offered us physical amazement, perhaps the pinnacle of our trip came from the emotional welcomes we received from two world renowned leaders—Archbishop Desmond Tutu in South Africa and President Fidel Castro in Cuba. During Desmond Tutu's visit to our ship, we saw the impact one leader can have on a society. His speech to our shipboard community inspired us to take our roles as part of a new generation, one of change

ing safaris in Kenya and slept in tents guarded by Maasai Warriors. In South Africa, we saw the jail cell that was home to Nelson Mandela for much of his life. We trekked through the Amazon Rainforest in Brazil and visited the home of Ernest Hemingway in Cuba. These examples are merely scratches on the surface of the opportunities we had to experience amazing sights.

Although these sights offered us physical amazement, perhaps the pinnacle of our trip came from the emotional welcomes we received from two world renowned leaders—Archbishop Desmond Tutu in South Africa and President Fidel Castro in Cuba. During Desmond Tutu's visit to our ship, we saw the impact one leader can have on a society. His speech to our shipboard community inspired us to take our roles as part of a new generation, one of change

ing safaris in Kenya and slept in tents guarded by Maasai Warriors. In South Africa, we saw the jail cell that was home to Nelson Mandela for much of his life. We trekked through the Amazon Rainforest in Brazil and visited the home of Ernest Hemingway in Cuba. These examples are merely scratches on the surface of the opportunities we had to experience amazing sights.

Although these sights offered us physical amazement, perhaps the pinnacle of our trip came from the emotional welcomes we received from two world renowned leaders—Archbishop Desmond Tutu in South Africa and President Fidel Castro in Cuba. During Desmond Tutu's visit to our ship, we saw the impact one leader can have on a society. His speech to our shipboard community inspired us to take our roles as part of a new generation, one of change

ing safaris in Kenya and slept in tents guarded by Maasai Warriors. In South Africa, we saw the jail cell that was home to Nelson Mandela for much of his life. We trekked through the Amazon Rainforest in Brazil and visited the home of Ernest Hemingway in Cuba. These examples are merely scratches on the surface of the opportunities we had to experience amazing sights.

Although these sights offered us physical amazement, perhaps the pinnacle of our trip came from the emotional welcomes we received from two world renowned leaders—Archbishop Desmond Tutu in South Africa and President Fidel Castro in Cuba. During Desmond Tutu's visit to our ship, we saw the impact one leader can have on a society. His speech to our shipboard community inspired us to take our roles as part of a new generation, one of change

ing safaris in Kenya and slept in tents guarded by Maasai Warriors. In South Africa, we saw the jail cell that was home to Nelson Mandela for much of his life. We trekked through the Amazon Rainforest in Brazil and visited the home of Ernest Hemingway in Cuba. These examples are merely scratches on the surface of the opportunities we had to experience amazing sights.

Although these sights offered us physical amazement, perhaps the pinnacle of our trip came from the emotional welcomes we received from two world renowned leaders—Archbishop Desmond Tutu in South Africa and President Fidel Castro in Cuba. During Desmond Tutu's visit to our ship, we saw the impact one leader can have on a society. His speech to our shipboard community inspired us to take our roles as part of a new generation, one of change

ing safaris in Kenya and slept in tents guarded by Maasai Warriors. In South Africa, we saw the jail cell that was home to Nelson Mandela for much of his life. We trekked through the Amazon Rainforest in Brazil and visited the home of Ernest Hemingway in Cuba. These examples are merely scratches on the surface of the opportunities we had to experience amazing sights.

Although these sights offered us physical amazement, perhaps the pinnacle of our trip came from the emotional welcomes we received from two world renowned leaders—Archbishop Desmond Tutu in South Africa and President Fidel Castro in Cuba. During Desmond Tutu's visit to our ship, we saw the impact one leader can have on a society. His speech to our shipboard community inspired us to take our roles as part of a new generation, one of change

ing safaris in Kenya and slept in tents guarded by Maasai Warriors. In South Africa, we saw the jail cell that was home to Nelson Mandela for much of his life. We trekked through the Amazon Rainforest in Brazil and visited the home of Ernest Hemingway in Cuba. These examples are merely scratches on the surface of the opportunities we had to experience amazing sights.

Swartz Hall: the mansion on the hill

A Features commentary
by Sarah Wilson

Each day last summer I ran expectantly to the mailbox, awaiting the housing packet that would tell me where and with whom I would live for the next thirty weeks of my life. Of course, I was secretly hoping to be placed in some dorms more than others; who wouldn't want to be in the New Residence Hall or Smith Hall? Besides the buildings I hoped for, there was also the one I longed to avoid: Swartz Hall.

When I had spent the night at the University as a prospective, my host, who lived in a spacious triple in Larison, spoke to me about the atrocities of Swartz Hall and advised me to avoid it if at all possible.

Imagine my disappointment upon receiving my housing packet and seeing that my room location was exactly where I had feared it would be. "Well," I told everyone, "at least I'm close to the Academic Quad."

People are quick to complain about Swartz Hall: the building is unpleasant, the smell is overwhelming and the furniture is terrible. Unlike the New Residence Hall, we don't have lounges for every floor and Uptown has to be obnoxious, right? I've been present countless times to hear Swartz called "The Ghetto on the Hill," and the overwhelming feeling on campus is that Swartz is not a great place to live.

"I'm very glad that I didn't get placed in Swartz Hall. It is really ugly compared to some of the other dorms on campus, and it just seems so dirty and dark. I actually feel kind of bad for anyone who has to live there," Charles Markley '04, who lives in Larison, stated. This feeling is similar across campus. Most people who do not live in Swartz hate it. They call it "the ghetto" and do not even think of it as an accurate representation of dorm life here at the University.

A few weeks ago, I got a last-minute call to host a prospective student from Texas. She was coming in a few minutes and she had no where to stay—I was the last hope. As the caller was searching through her papers, she briefly hesitated. "Oh, you live in Swartz? Well... I guess I have no other options; Swartz will have to do," she said, and my jaw dropped to the floor. Even the University has an unhealthy view of Swartz Hall—they don't want prospective students to see it as the typical housing option!

Swartz Hall has a long and dynamic history. The James S. Swartz Residence Hall was first dedicated on Oct. 15, 1955 and named after a University trustee and Chairman of the Board. It was much different then, with only the two wings in the front and the John Houghton Harris Dining Hall where Uptown is now located.

When it was first opened, it housed only 222 first-year men. By 1975, Harris Cafeteria had closed and turned into recreation lounges, the first floor had been remodeled into separate TV lounges, and women were now living in Swartz as well. And as for the building itself, obviously it was still very new, and many wanted to live there.

"New Swartz was considered the best dorm uphill because it had air conditioning and was new in '73, I believe. It looked great... the students would watch several miniseries or weekly shows on the television down in the lounge (where Uptown is now)... we even had a baby grand piano in the basement of Swartz," recalls alumna Robin Menzies Bentzen '77, who was so fond of Swartz Hall that both she and her now-husband lived there for three years.

"It was great. We had Swartz Field to play sports on (now New Residence Hall) and had our own Swartz parking lot (now the Weis Center and the new music building)." Apparently, Swartz has not always been so detested.

So, is Swartz the worst dorm on campus? Maybe, to those students accustomed to living downhill or in the New Residence Hall, but it really is just a matter of preference. To us current Swartz residents, living here isn't that bad. Every dorm has its benefits and annoyances, Swartz included.

Yes, the building and furniture may be old, but that gives it such character. The rooms are not much different than in the other dorms, and I was right in thinking that it is very convenient to be so close to the Academic Quad and the library. And Uptown is not really that annoying; it's great to be close to it when you want to grab late-night wings. I'm certainly not expecting everyone to rush out and put Swartz down on their housing forms for next year, but it seems that the only people who seem completely dissatisfied with Swartz Hall are those not living in it.

I was initially a little

FEATURES

Appletree Alley closes after 20 years printing

By KATIE HEISE
Senior Writer

It's the end of the world as we know it. Well, not exactly, but one Lewisburg man's 20-year love affair with the printing press is winding to a close, marking the end of an era in his long and busy life.

The Press of Appletree Alley, owned and run by Barnard Taylor, has closed its doors after several decades of producing unique volumes that were the delight of bibliophiles around the globe.

In its heyday, Taylor's press, located in a converted garage, released more than 30 books in collaboration with the University. Its editions include volumes dedicated to poets-in-residence, the works of faculty, alumni and writers-in-residence, selections from the Bertrand Library's special collections and even works by such famous authors as George Bernard Shaw, William Butler Yeats and D.H. Lawrence.

Each page was drafted and constructed with painstaking care to produce true literary treasures, marked by the union of beautiful graphics and words of wisdom or flights of fancy.

The success of Appletree Alley was due, in part, to significant community support. Many of Taylor's manuscripts were selected by former Lewisburg Area High School English teacher Mary Chenoweth Stratton and Ann de Klerk, former director of the library and information services at the University.

Taylor would then contact one of the artists with whom he worked to commission the most magical imagery that made the writers' words come alive. Among those who lent their hands to the artistry of Appletree Alley were University professor Rosalyn Richards, a alumnae Stephen Craft and Taylor himself.

Though Taylor was partial to the unique appearance of English wood engravings, he allowed the artists complete liberty in their designs.

"I think they wanted to be free," he told The Daily Item. "We didn't tell them what to do or how to do it."

That opening of the door to interpretation and creation is precisely what gives each tome its distinctive charm and elegance.

In the shop, Taylor and student and community volunteers

the Pennsylvania Academy of Fine Arts and completed his degree at Lycoming College before entering the fast-paced world of mass media. Taylor, a lifelong learner, even went on to earn his master's degree in fine arts from Penn State while in his 50s.

During his distinguished career,

Appletree Alley, which has delighted readers worldwide for 20 years, is on exhibit in the Bertrand Library.

Courtesy of ISR

After a test copy passed inspection, the final product was run through the press, once for each color used. The finished limited edition of 100 to 250 copies was then sent to master binder Don Rasmussen in Wilkes-Barre.

The story, however, does not end there. Unknown even to Taylor himself, he spent much of his life in preparation for his unique endeavor.

As a child, he aspired to follow in the footsteps of his uncle, an illustrator for The Saturday Evening Post and Cosmopolitan. He studied art for three years at reer, he served as a designer for a Philadelphia publisher, as a news reporter and as director of public relations at both Juniata College and Geisinger Medical Center.

An avid artist, Taylor also designed publications for many academic institutions and took his one-man show of abstract watercolors on the road for a tour of universities and public libraries.

After retirement, he resolved to pursue his desire to print special books, encouraged by his longtime friend John Wheatcroft, professor emeritus of English at the University. The path was far from easy.

In contrast to the peaceful retirement he may have imagined, Taylor worked around the clock to finish multiple projects at various stages of production.

"The shop was right behind the house, so I worked whenever I could get out there and get things done," he explained. "There was always something that needed to be done, mailing lists to prepare, prospectus ..."

The financial incentives were minuscule, but Taylor looks back upon the age of Appletree Alley fondly, as a labor of love. He finds all the reward or payment he desires in seeing his works featured in the collections of prestigious institutions such as Yale, Oxford and the University of Adelaide in Australia and in the appreciation of book lovers.

From the beginning, Taylor's goals were to achieve a professional standard of craftsmanship, create imaginative, distinctive designs, explore various methods of production, and, above all, to print rare, valuable words in a style that would enhance the message of the author.

He has accomplished just that, as he well realizes. "I am grateful to have been able to realize a long-held dream ... to create beautiful books. It is a source of satisfaction, as I regretfully close the Press, that the ... books I created with the assistance of many devoted volunteers are now on the shelves of major libraries worldwide, and in the hands of collectors of fine books," Taylor said as he prepared for the stilling of the presses.

Though Taylor's eyesight is failing and the press has shut down, the University has ensured that Appletree Alley will not soon be forgotten.

An impressive exhibit, "A Tribute to the Press of Appletree Alley, 1981-2001," will grace the lobby and the exhibit area on Lower Level 1 of the Bertrand Library, until Aug. 10 of this year, taking members of the University community on a fascinating journey through the press's history and accomplishments.

Credit to article by Patrick McArdle in the 2/11/01 issue of The Daily Item, the University press release at <http://www.departments.bucknell.edu/pr/releases/>.

He Said, She Said

Are Guys Just as High-Maintenance as Girls?

By ELISE CITRIN, JENNIFER COMER, AND SARAH JOHNSON
Features Columnists

Most men say that they don't like high-maintenance girls, but it is usually true that those men are even more high-maintenance themselves. So what makes a boy "high-maintenance?" There are two types: those who are high-maintenance physically and those who are high-maintenance mentally.

If you remember "Valentines Day Goggles" (our last column), we discussed high-maintenance girls (the ones that are showered and ready for their eight o'clocks and still had time to get coffee.) Boys may laugh at that, but they are just as guilty.

Just last week, I saw a boy who was so tan, he looked like he had just returned from Spring Break in Jamaica. Even though it is February, I decided to give him the benefit of the doubt, but that's when I realized the tan was not the only thing that was odd about this boy. His hair had recently been highlighted and I also decided that his eyebrows had just been waxed.

As I was wondering what other parts of his body might be waxed, I noticed what seemed to me to be a clear but not too subtle nail polish on his fingernails. I decided to do a little investigative work and the next time I visited Nancy's Nu-Wave tanning salon, I asked the receptionist how many men from the University frequent her business. I was not shocked when she told me that quite a few come in, but they always come at the oddest hours to assure they are not seen by a fellow student. A regular at Nancy's myself, I began to ponder exactly what extreme efforts these men must have to go through just to impress the ladies.

Now, let's move on to men that are high-maintenance mentally. This group of guys can be even more exhausting than the first. One example is someone who can never admit that he is wrong and will handle adverse situations with far less maturity than a female. You know the type. They're really thinking, "I am going to give you the silent treatment and not talk to you for a month unless I really want or need something and then it is okay to talk to you."

Another example is someone who will blow up at you and call you names that are not even appropriate discussion for an only-brothers event at a fraternity. This type of high-maintenance guy will be able to somehow assign blame to you and convince you that things are your fault. He'll excuse the name-calling by saying that he had no other choice than to use those words.

What ever happened to the laid-back, chill kind of guy that was always fun to be around? He certainly does not go to this university. Instead, we have guys who are tan with good hair and perfectly shaped eyebrows.

So men, I know the ladies will agree with me when I say that we would rather be with someone that we can laugh with as opposed to someone who spends hours trying to decide which Abercrombie shirt looks best with his khakis.

Subway and Subversions face off at lunchtime

By ANDRÉS SOLTÉN
Senior Writer

Sandwiches are the staple of a good lunch diet and the sub is a tasty and healthy way to fill up in between classes. We recently compared the subs available at Subversions, located in The Bison, to the sandwiches at Subway, located next to the train tracks at 434 Market Street.

First, you must decide between the six-inch or 12-inch subs. Whether at Subversions or Subway, this is an important decision. The six-inch is a good meal when complimented with chips and a soda. The 12-inch subs should be saved for two scenarios: either you are very hungry or you are planning to eat half of it at the moment and save the other half for later. The 12-inch is also a great way to bring food on a road trip. Subs are very good in general because they can easily be eaten on the run.

Subversions has special meals for their different subs and sandwiches. Make use of these meals because they include a medium soda and chips. For example, the six-inch Roast Beef Sub goes for $3.69. This is a very competitive price. The same meal at Subway came out to $3.79.

The roast beef sub at Subversions included cheese, lettuce, tomato and either mayonnaise or mustard. Any good place for subs must rely on the ability to customize a meal. Subversions does a very good job of offering many possibilities ranging from cheeses to pickles. The sub itself tasted pretty good. It had an impressive amount of roast beef, especially in comparison to Subway's meal. In fact, most of the subs were more filling in Subversions than in Subway's. The turkey sub at Subversions is also an excellent choice for lunch.

"The 12-inch Italian sub is really good. I usually switch between that and the meatball sub," University student said. Both subs are $3.95.

The real difference between Subversions' subs and Subway's subs is that Subversions' feel "heavier." The recent advertisements for Subway stress the low fat content of their sandwiches. Occasionally, it takes some work to finish a Subversions sandwich, but even the 12-inch sandwiches at Subway feel more like a light meal because they are "lighter" on the stomach.

Subway has a wider variety of sandwiches, condiments and even cookies. They also have a wider variety of meals to choose from. Additionally, Subway is able to customize a sandwich better than Subversions. If you are one of those people who needs to have a sandwich made exactly a certain way, you are probably better off at Subway.

Vegetarians are probably better off at Subway, because they have a wider assortment of vegetables to choose from. Vegetable subs are also cheaper at Subway. However, it is much better to get a sub from Subway and take it for the road. While the seating and facilities are adequate, it is nicer to eat somewhere more open.

So, which one should you go to for a good sub? It depends on the situation. If you like smooth, light subs that taste good and are affordable, drop by Subway.

If Subway sandwiches just don't fill you up, definitely get a 12-inch sub at Subversions. For long trips, like returning home for Spring Break, grab a sandwich for the road from Subway.

For a good snack or meal during the midday rush, be sure to arrive early to avoid the lines at Subversions.

Around the world in 100 days

An abroad perspective by students on a semester at sea

SEA From page B1

Tiananmen Square became not just a mythic-textbook place of student protests, but an actual atmosphere of communism, nationalism and social interaction, with silent green uniformed soldiers observing every move. The Taj Mahal was no longer a picture on a page, but a breathtaking experience, which allowed us to feel the cool marble of its body and hear the hollow echoes within its walls.

We learned by touching, tasting, smelling, listening and seeing. Knowledge from class fit together perfectly (or sometimes not so perfectly) with our experiences and the "big picture" began unfolding before our eyes.

Participation in the Fall 2000 Semester at Sea voyage was not without its surprises. We quickly learned the importance of flexibility. As we drifted through the Saigon river, the Ho Chi Minh harbor in view, our plans were abruptly and jarringly changed. The seven blaring whistles ordering us to put on our lifejackets and report to our life boat stations informed us unequivocally that this was not a joke: the SS Universe Explorer had crashed into another ship. The other ship had plunged directly into the cabins of our shipmates, lodged our ship in a mud bank, and given us all a good scare. With some rearranging, minor delays, legal issues and compassion, our voyage continued on, virtually unscathed—but this was not the only obstacle we were to crash into during our voyage.

Tensions between the United States and the Middle East were increasing. With the bombing of the American ship off the coast of Yemen, we realized that although our ship itself was a sanctuary, we were far from being immune to the problems of the world. The decision was made before we arrived in India that travel in the Middle East was not safe for Americans and that our voyage had been lost. In Nha Trang, Vietnam, we were shaken from our mosquito-netted beds at 6 a.m. by the sound of communist propaganda blaring through the streets. In Cuba, our parcels were searched to make sure we had not purchased anything predating the Communist Revolution. On the positive side, however, communism brought with it reduced crime rates, educated citizens and closely-knit communities—all which appealed to us as American visitors.

During our voyage, we also came in contact with over 20 different religions. We had the opportunity to visit different places of worship, attend services and interact with people of contrasting beliefs. From lighting incense outside the To-dai-hi Temple in Japan to witnessing Islamic women protesting an increase in their own equal rights in Kenya to watching spirits possess the body of a Comdoble follower in Brazil, we saw the dramatic distinctions and similarities of the world's religions. More importantly, we learned that the passing of moral judgments has no place in religion as it is difficult to determine the bounds of right and wrong when it comes to an individual's faith. Although all nine countries were dramatically different, they all seemed to be united by one common factor: the hospitality and genuine kindness of the people we encountered greatly exceeded any expectations we brought with us. We arrived in each port, 700 students—few of us who spoke the native language and most of us having quite a bit more affluence than the citizens of the countries, yet we were still received with smiles, hugs, enthusiasm and a lot of patience. People went out of their way to accommodate us in any facet, whether it be personally escorting us to places we had pointed out to them using hand gestures and English maps, or translating for us in situations where we obviously needed assistance. On numerous occasions, we and other Semester at Sea students were welcomed into the homes of people we had just met, with hopes of them introducing us to their families, friends and cultures. We could not have asked for a better reception and we are eternally grateful to all who helped us along our journey.

Of course, we will never forget the aesthetic sights of our voyage, which took our breath away with their beauty, and forever imprinted them in our memory.

In Japan, we were awestruck by the Hiroshima bombing and its transformation into a city of peace. In China, we walked through Tiananmen Square and witnessed the powerful enormity of the Great safaris in Kenya and slept in tents guarded by Maasai Warriors. In South Africa, we saw the jail cell that was home to Nelson Mandela for much of his life. We trekked through the Amazon Rainforest in Brazil and visited the home of Ernest Hemingway in Cuba. These examples are merely scratches on the surface of the opportunities we had to experience amazing sights.

Wall. In Vietnam, we crawled through Vietcong tunnels in the Cu Chi village. We floated down the Ganges River in India and witnessed its sacred rituals. We went on camp

Although these sights offered us physical amazement, perhaps the pinnacle of our trip came from the emotional welcomes we received from two world renowned leaders—Archbishop Desmond Tutu in South Africa and President Fidel Castro in Cuba. During Desmond Tutu's visit to our ship, we saw the impact one leader can have on a society. His speech to our shipboard community inspired us to take our roles as part of a new generation, one of change

ing safaris in Kenya and slept in tents guarded by Maasai Warriors. In South Africa, we saw the jail cell that was home to Nelson Mandela for much of his life. We trekked through the Amazon Rainforest in Brazil and visited the home of Ernest Hemingway in Cuba. These examples are merely scratches on the surface of the opportunities we had to experience amazing sights.

Although these sights offered us physical amazement, perhaps the pinnacle of our trip came from the emotional welcomes we received from two world renowned leaders—Archbishop Desmond Tutu in South Africa and President Fidel Castro in Cuba. During Desmond Tutu's visit to our ship, we saw the impact one leader can have on a society. His speech to our shipboard community inspired us to take our roles as part of a new generation, one of change

ing safaris in Kenya and slept in tents guarded by Maasai Warriors. In South Africa, we saw the jail cell that was home to Nelson Mandela for much of his life. We trekked through the Amazon Rainforest in Brazil and visited the home of Ernest Hemingway in Cuba. These examples are merely scratches on the surface of the opportunities we had to experience amazing sights.

Although these sights offered us physical amazement, perhaps the pinnacle of our trip came from the emotional welcomes we received from two world renowned leaders—Archbishop Desmond Tutu in South Africa and President Fidel Castro in Cuba. During Desmond Tutu's visit to our ship, we saw the impact one leader can have on a society. His speech to our shipboard community inspired us to take our roles as part of a new generation, one of change

At a stop in Maasai Village in Kenya, the authors came in contact with unimaginable poverty.

Courtesy of the authors

like our voyage around the world—so much to say and so little space to do so. We could have easily spent our entire 100 days in any one country and still not come close to seeing and learning everything. Experiences came on us quickly and transitions were abrupt. And the result? A novel full of images, but without a deadline to figure out our ending. More concretely, however, our voyage gave us a taste of dramatically had been lost. In Nha Trang, Vietnam, we were shaken from our mosquito-netted beds at 6 a.m. by the sound of communist propaganda blaring through the streets. In Cuba, our parcels were searched to make sure we had not purchased anything predating the Communist Revolution. On the positive side, however, communism brought with it reduced crime rates, educated citizens and closely-knit communities—all which appealed to us as American visitors.

During our voyage, we also came in contact with over 20 different religions. We had the opportunity to visit different places of worship, attend services and interact with people of contrasting beliefs. From lighting incense outside the To-dai-hi Temple in Japan to witnessing Islamic women protesting an increase in their own equal rights in Kenya to watching spirits possess the body of a Comdoble follower in Brazil, we saw the dramatic distinctions and similarities of the world's religions. More importantly, we learned that the passing of moral judgments has no place in religion as it is difficult to determine the bounds of right and wrong when it comes to an individual's faith. Although all nine countries were dramatically different, they all seemed to be united by one common factor: the hospitality and genuine kindness of the people we encountered greatly exceeded any expectations we brought with us. We arrived in each port, 700 students—few of us who spoke the native language and most of us having quite a bit more affluence than the citizens of the countries, yet we were still received with smiles, hugs, enthusiasm and a lot of patience. People went out of their way to accommodate us in any facet, whether it be personally escorting us to places we had pointed out to them using hand gestures and English maps, or translating for us in situations where we obviously needed assistance. On numerous occasions, we and other Semester at Sea students were welcomed into the homes of people we had just met, with hopes of them introducing us to their families, friends and cultures. We could not have asked for a better reception and we are eternally grateful to all who helped us along our journey.

Of course, we will never forget the aesthetic sights of our voyage, which took our breath away with their beauty, and forever imprinted them in our memory. In Japan, we were awestruck by the Hiroshima bombing and its transformation into a city of peace. In China, we walked through Tiananmen Square and witnessed the powerful enormity of the Great

Wall. In Vietnam, we crawled through Vietcong tunnels in the Cu Chi village. We floated down the Ganges River in India and witnessed its sacred rituals. We went on camp

safaris in Kenya and slept in tents guarded by Maasai Warriors. In South Africa, we saw the jail cell that was home to Nelson Mandela for much of his life. We trekked through the Amazon Rainforest in Brazil and visited the home of Ernest Hemingway in Cuba. These examples are merely scratches on the surface of the opportunities we had to experience amazing sights.

Although these sights offered us physical amazement, perhaps the pinnacle of our trip came from the emotional welcomes we received from two world renowned leaders—Archbishop Desmond Tutu in South Africa and President Fidel Castro in Cuba. During Desmond Tutu's visit to our ship, we saw the impact one leader can have on a society. His speech to our shipboard community inspired us to take our roles as part of a new generation, one of change

ing safaris in Kenya and slept in tents guarded by Maasai Warriors. In South Africa, we saw the jail cell that was home to Nelson Mandela for much of his life. We trekked through the Amazon Rainforest in Brazil and visited the home of Ernest Hemingway in Cuba. These examples are merely scratches on the surface of the opportunities we had to experience amazing sights.

Although these sights offered us physical amazement, perhaps the pinnacle of our trip came from the emotional welcomes we received from two world renowned leaders—Archbishop Desmond Tutu in South Africa and President Fidel Castro in Cuba. During Desmond Tutu's visit to our ship, we saw the impact one leader can have on a society. His speech to our shipboard community inspired us to take our roles as part of a new generation, one of change

ing safaris in Kenya and slept in tents guarded by Maasai Warriors. In South Africa, we saw the jail cell that was home to Nelson Mandela for much of his life. We trekked through the Amazon Rainforest in Brazil and visited the home of Ernest Hemingway in Cuba. These examples are merely scratches on the surface of the opportunities we had to experience amazing sights.

Although these sights offered us physical amazement, perhaps the pinnacle of our trip came from the emotional welcomes we received from two world renowned leaders—Archbishop Desmond Tutu in South Africa and President Fidel Castro in Cuba. During Desmond Tutu's visit to our ship, we saw the impact one leader can have on a society. His speech to our shipboard community inspired us to take our roles as part of a new generation, one of change

ing safaris in Kenya and slept in tents guarded by Maasai Warriors. In South Africa, we saw the jail cell that was home to Nelson Mandela for much of his life. We trekked through the Amazon Rainforest in Brazil and visited the home of Ernest Hemingway in Cuba. These examples are merely scratches on the surface of the opportunities we had to experience amazing sights.

Although these sights offered us physical amazement, perhaps the pinnacle of our trip came from the emotional welcomes we received from two world renowned leaders—Archbishop Desmond Tutu in South Africa and President Fidel Castro in Cuba. During Desmond Tutu's visit to our ship, we saw the impact one leader can have on a society. His speech to our shipboard community inspired us to take our roles as part of a new generation, one of change

Swartz Hall: the mansion on the hill

A Features commentary by Sarah Wilson

Each day last summer I ran expectantly to the mailbox, awaiting the housing packet that would tell me where and with whom I would live for the next thirty weeks of my life. Of course, I was secretly hoping to be placed in some dorms more than others; who wouldn't want to be in the New Residence Hall or Smith Hall? Besides the buildings I hoped for, there was also the one I longed to avoid: Swartz Hall.

When I had spent the night at the University as a prospective, my host, who lived in a spacious triple in Larison, spoke to me about the atrocities of Swartz Hall and advised me to avoid it if at all possible. Imagine my disappointment upon receiving my housing packet and seeing that my room location was exactly where I had feared it would be. "Well," I told everyone, "at least I'm close to the Academic Quad."

People are quick to complain about Swartz Hall: the building is unpleasant, the smell is overwhelming and the furniture is terrible. Unlike the New Residence Hall, we don't have lounges for every floor and Uptown has to be obnoxious, right? I've been present countless times to hear Swartz called "The Ghetto on the Hill," and the overwhelming feeling on campus is that Swartz is not a great place to live. "I'm very glad that I didn't get placed in Swartz Hall. It is really ugly compared to some of the other dorms on campus, and it just seems so dirty and dark. I actually feel kind of bad for anyone who has to live there," Charles Markey '04, who lives in Larison, stated. This feeling is similar across campus. Most people who do not live in Swartz hate it. They call it "the ghetto" and do not even think of it as an accurate representation of dorm life here at the University.

A few weeks ago, I got a last-minute call to host a prospective student from Texas. She was coming in a few minutes and she had no where to stay—I was the last hope. As the caller was searching through her papers, she briefly hesitated. "Oh, you live in Swartz? Well ... I guess I have no other options; Swartz will have to do," she said, and my jaw dropped to the floor. Even the University has an unhealthy view of Swartz Hall—they don't want prospective students to see it as the typical housing option!

Swartz Hall has a long and dynamic history. The James S. Swartz Residence Hall was first dedicated on Oct. 15, 1955 and named after a University trustee and Chairman of the Board. It was much different then, with only the two wings in the front and the John Houghton Harris Dining Hall where Uptown is now located.

When it was first opened, it housed only 222 first-year men. By 1975, Harris Cafeteria had closed and turned into recreation lounges, the first floor had been remodeled into separate TV lounges, and women were now living in Swartz as well. And as for the building itself, obviously it was still very new, and many wanted to live there. "New Swartz was considered the best dorm uphill because it had air conditioning and was new in '73, I believe. It looked great ... the students would watch several movies or weekly shows on the television down in the lounge (where Uptown is now) ... we even had a baby grand piano in the basement of Swartz," recalls alumna Robin Menzies Bentzen '77, who was so fond of Swartz Hall that both she and her now-husband lived there for three years.

"It was great. We had Swartz Field to play sports on (now New Residence Hall) and had our own Swartz parking lot (now the Weiss Center and the new music building)." Apparently, Swartz has not always been so detested.

So, is Swartz the worst dorm on campus? Maybe, to those students accustomed to living downhill or in the New Residence Hall, but it really is just a matter of preference. To us current Swartz residents, living here isn't that bad. Every dorm has its benefits and annoyances, Swartz included.

Yes, the building and furniture may be old, but that gives it such character. The rooms are not much different than in the other dorms, and I was right in thinking that it is very convenient to be so close to the Academic Quad and the library. And Uptown is not really that annoying; it's great to be close to it when you want to grab late-night wings. I'm certainly not expecting everyone to rush out and put Swartz down in their housing forms for next year, but it seems that the only people who seem completely dissatisfied with Swartz Hall are those not living in it.

"I was initially a little upset about being placed in Swartz, but it has really turned out for the best, the building has a lot of character and the location is great," current Swartz resident Matt LoGiudice '04 stated. "My friends and I are so content with Swartz, we are planning on living here again next year."

The residents love to joke about the stereotypes regarding the dorm, but I honestly haven't met any Swartz resident that hates it here. It just feels like home now. Of course, there are still things that would be nice to have: more televisions, artwork on the walls and new laundry facilities, but every dorm on campus has a wish list. Swartz residents do not feel like they are missing out on the college experience because of where they live. Swartz is a great residence hall, and those who live here seem to enjoy it. Keep an open mind, and give Swartz Hall a chance.

always wanting —will ever experience genuine happiness. Poverty does not always translate as unhappiness, nor does wealth guarantee satisfaction.

Across the globe, the United States is put on a pedestal and there were times during our voyage when this image haunted us with guilt, as we were not quite sure, (and still are not), whether or not we deserved such status. However, as the American flag was raised high over the SS Universe Explorer as our voyage came to its close in New Orleans, we realized that "home" would never again look the same to us. Walking down the gangway for the last time, we carried our home within us, rather than around us.

Chris Rivera—The Bucknellian

It is rumored that the admissions office has a sign which reads "Do not bring prospective students into Swartz Hall."

Each day last summer I ran expectantly to the mailbox, awaiting the housing packet that would tell me where and with whom I would live for the next thirty weeks of my life. Of course, I was secretly hoping to be placed in some dorms more than others; who wouldn't want to be in the New Residence Hall or Smith Hall? Besides the buildings I hoped for, there was also the one I longed to avoid: Swartz Hall.

When I had spent the night at the University as a prospective, my host, who lived in a spacious triple in Larison, spoke to me about the atrocities of Swartz Hall and advised me to avoid it if at all possible. Imagine my disappointment upon receiving my housing packet and seeing that my room location was exactly where I had feared it would be. "Well," I told everyone, "at least I'm close to the Academic Quad."

People are quick to complain about Swartz Hall: the building is unpleasant, the smell is overwhelming and the furniture is terrible. Unlike the New Residence Hall, we don't have lounges for every floor and Uptown has to be obnoxious, right? I've been present countless times to hear Swartz called "The Ghetto on the Hill," and the overwhelming feeling on campus is that Swartz is not a great place to live. "I'm very glad that I didn't get placed in Swartz Hall. It is really ugly compared to some of the other dorms on campus, and it just seems so dirty and dark. I actually feel kind of bad for anyone who has to live there," Charles Markey '04, who lives in Larison, stated. This feeling is similar across campus. Most people who do not live in Swartz hate it. They call it "the ghetto" and do not even think of it as an accurate representation of dorm life here at the University.

A few weeks ago, I got a last-minute call to host a prospective student from Texas. She was coming in a few minutes and she had no where to stay—I was the last hope. As the caller was searching through her papers, she briefly hesitated. "Oh, you live in Swartz? Well ... I guess I have no other options; Swartz will have to do," she said, and my jaw dropped to the floor. Even the University has an unhealthy view of Swartz Hall—they don't want prospective students to see it as the typical housing option!

Swartz Hall has a long and dynamic history. The James S. Swartz Residence Hall was first dedicated on Oct. 15, 1955 and named after a University trustee and Chairman of the Board. It was much different then, with only the two wings in the front and the John Houghton Harris Dining Hall where Uptown is now located.

When it was first opened, it housed only 222 first-year men. By 1975, Harris Cafeteria had closed and turned into recreation lounges, the first floor had been remodeled into separate TV lounges, and women were now living in Swartz as well. And as for the building itself, obviously it was still very new, and many wanted to live there. "New Swartz was considered the best dorm uphill because it had air conditioning and was new in '73, I believe. It looked great ... the students would watch several movies or weekly shows on the television down in the lounge (where Uptown is now) ... we even had a baby grand piano in the basement of Swartz," recalls alumna Robin Menzies Bentzen '77, who was so fond of Swartz Hall that both she and her now-husband lived there for three years.

"It was great. We had Swartz Field to play sports on (now New Residence Hall) and had our own Swartz parking lot (now the Weiss Center and the new music building)." Apparently, Swartz has not always been so detested.

So, is Swartz the worst dorm on campus? Maybe, to those students accustomed to living downhill or in the New Residence Hall, but it really is just a matter of preference. To us current Swartz residents, living here isn't that bad. Every dorm has its benefits and annoyances, Swartz included.

Yes, the building and furniture may be old, but that gives it such character. The rooms are not much different than in the other dorms, and I was right in thinking that it is very convenient to be so close to the Academic Quad and the library. And Uptown is not really that annoying; it's great to be close to it when you want to grab late-night wings. I'm certainly not expecting everyone to rush out and put Swartz down in their housing forms for next year, but it seems that the only people who seem completely dissatisfied with Swartz Hall are those not living in it.

"I was initially a little upset about being placed in Swartz, but it has really turned out for the best, the building has a lot of character and the location is great," current Swartz resident Matt LoGiudice '04 stated. "My friends and I are so content with Swartz, we

Arts & Entertainment

Nine Days, one night, many fans

By SCOTT ACKLEY
Staff Writer

Nine Days performed at Uptown last Saturday to an enthusiastic and excited crowd. The band just finished touring with SR-71 and then returned home to New York to work on a new album. On the weekends they tour at nearby venues such as the University.

The concert began with the opening student band, Liam and Me, who was very popular with the crowd. The mob screamed and cheered as they performed a range of their songs and covers. The crowd asked for several encores, and they were not disappointed.

At 11:15 p.m., Nine Days appeared and gave everyone quite a show. The band performed most of the songs from their album, The Madding Crowd, including their hits "If I Am" and "Absolutely (Story of a Girl)." They demonstrated a lot of energy, which surprised some people. "They are a lot edgier live," one fan said.

The pinnacle of the concert was their performance of "Absolutely." John Hampson started the song with a little interlude of Led Zepplin's "Stairway to Heaven." During the song, Nine Nine Days band members perform their music at Uptown in front of an enthusiastic student crowd.

Days flawlessly merged into Lynyrd Skynyrd's "Sweet Home Alabama," and then back out again.

"The band did a great job of playing 'Absolutely' ... the whole crowd was really into it," another fan said.

Some other highlights were their cover songs, as they played energized and updated renditions of The Buggles' "Video Killed the Radio Star" and Bob Dylan's "All Along the Watchtower."

Overall, the concert was a success.

"The show was great," one fan said. "I discovered what a talented band they really are. I would never have realized it if I hadn't come."

"We knew it was going to be great"

Bucknellian reporter gets up close and personal with the members of Nine Days

After the Nine Days concert on Saturday night, I had the pleasure and honor of interviewing two members of the band: Brian Desveaux, vocals and guitar and Nick Dimichino, bassist, writes Staff Writer Scott Ackley gining, there wasn't a particular keyboardist. We had people play keyboard parts on the songs that needed it. Actually, Jeremy Dean (keyboardist) joined as more of a saxophone player originally.

BD: Yeah, but we made him into a keyboard player. Actually, he did play a little we are a pop-rock band. I think we are more of an album sort of band. The general public doesn't know that yet. We are thought of as "that band with the one song." We know that whenever you buy a CD, it's a gamble, and we try to make the whole album good so you get your money's worth.

BD: We wanted to make a CD that will mean something to us—and hopefully our fans—10 or so years from now.

ND: We also want to be known as a good live band, because we know that it's another gamble when you lay down $20 or $30 to see a live band and we don't want to disappoint.

SA: How do you decide who sings which songs? Do you sing the ones that you write?

BD: Yeah, pretty much. John sings what he writes and I sing what I write. That's the reason we left our old band. We found it weird when the lead singer of the group was singing our songs.

SA: It is really neat how your group has two singers.

BD: Yeah, but we caught a lot of flak for it in the beginning. People didn't get why we had two singers.

SA: What was the best venue that you ever played?

BD: Since we are from New York, it definitely has to be Madison Square Garden. It was awesome. We only sang our two songs, "Absolutely" and "If I Am," but it was a great experience.

SA: What is life like on the road?

ND: Great; 24 hours go by like nothing. We do try to go swimming or to the gym whenever we can, so we don't become totally lethargic. It is amazing looking back over the past year at things that we have done. We have done so many things, including playing for the president, which was great.

BD: I remember when we joined the Third Eye Blind tour, we arrived and there was a huge food tent and we were playing at this big amphitheater. We knew it was going to be great.

SA: Do you enjoy playing smaller venues like tonight?

BD: Did it look like we had fun?

SA: Yes, very much so.

BD: We love to play small venues.

Courtesy of www.nine-days.com keyboard, so he asked us if he could give it a try. It worked out pretty well.

SA: Ten or 20 years from now, how would you like people to view your music and in which genre do you think you will be classified?

ND: Hmm, genre ... I don't know. I guess

Scott Ackley (SA): How did you guys choose Nine Days as the name of your band?

Brian Desveaux (BD): That is our most common question. Actually, we are tempted to write a song on our next album called "Why We Call Ourselves Nine Days." In the beginning we were not a band and it was just John (guitar and vocals) and I. We made three albums before the release of The Madding Crowd. We wrote a few songs that we really believed in, went to the studio with Nick and Trevor and recorded the album. The last song that we were going to record was a song called "Nine Days of Rain." On the track sheet, they just wrote "Nine Days" for short. I thought that had a nice ring to it. I asked the guys how long we had been recording and they told me it had been nine days. So that was when Nine Days recorded its first album.

SA: The keyboard adds a lot to your music, but it isn't exactly what you call a common instrument in a rock band. How and when did you decide that you wanted a keyboard player?

BD: A lot of our earlier stuff was ... well, I wouldn't call it country, but it was getting away from the great, big rock sound. We started out writing songs that we felt were good from the acoustic guitar and worked from there.

Nick Dimichino (ND): Actually, in the be-

African-American drama group debuts

By KRISTA REISDORF
A&E Editor

Nyambi Nyambi '01 has spent the last four years at the University on the courts, playing for the basketball team. Now that the season is coming to an end and he won't be participating in spring training, Nyambi wondered what he could do with his free time. The answer? Start a theater group on campus that will perform African-American dramas.

Nyambi hopes to create a multicultural theater group with people of all colors and backgrounds, who are interested in having fun and entertaining audiences with intelligent and fascinating African-American plays.

"This group will be for everyone," he said. "I want these plays to have colorful casts."

Nyambi's inspiration stems from the fact that he has always been interested in theater, but also from previous University students who have attempted this same feat. Nyambi saw a play directed by Amy Sass '96 entitled "For Colored Girls Who Have Considered Suicide When the Rainbow is Enuf." Sass actually went out and found women of different races in the University community who were interested in performing. Nyambi found the interest in the play encouraging, as well as the colorful cast, which consisted of black, white, Hispanic and Asian participants.

"The play was amazing and the turnout was great," Nyambi said. "I thought, 'We can bring this back.'"

Donald Jones '00 was another source of inspiration. He has been the only African-American theater major since 1988, and had roles in several plays, including one of the leads in "Guys and Dolls."

"The roles Don performed were of color-blind casting," said Bob Gainer, chair of the theater department.

Gainer has taught at the University for 16 years, and the only time the department has produced African-American drama was when there was an African-American student majoring in theater. Carolyn Ball '88 directed Sam Art-Williams' play "Home" to fulfill her senior thesis project as a theater major.

"These things are often initiated by the energy of the students," Gainer said.

Energy has definitely played a factor in Nyambi's plan. He brought the idea to Susan Chast, a visiting professor of theater, who has helped Nyambi put his plans into action.

"Susan is like a catalyst, trying to help the process," Gainer said. "She helped to start another African-American drama group at the College of William and Mary."

At William and Mary, Chast and another professor created two African-American drama classes and Chast also directed "Six Degrees of Separation." Afterwards, a student from her class decided to start a drama club. Chast assisted the group with guidelines, production and schedules.

I get my energy from the students, and then whatever they are working for happens," she said. "Nyambi is the driving force and the driving energy."

Chast has agreed to direct the plays unless a student comes forward and wants to direct, in which case she will assist the student director. Her enthusiasm for theater will undoubtedly be an asset for Nyambi and his work.

"One of the wonderful things about theater is that it brings people into a room," Chast said. "I'm so interested. I enjoy the work and I want to see the theater."

Meanwhile, Nyambi has been doing his homework, reading African-American plays every day for the last couple of weeks. Choosing the right play can be an arduous process, and one that requires a substantial amount of thought.

"There are a lot of great plays from African-American descent," Nyambi said. "I don't want to go for a play that punches race down people's throats; this tends to push people away when presented. I want to focus on plays of normal, everyday life."

It's about the performances, and showcasing the great plays of a multicultural background to broaden the spectrum of Bucknell.

—Nyambi Nyambi '01

Nyambi has enlisted the help of Moonakshi Ponnuswami, a professor of English who teaches an African-American plays on campus. Ponnuswami will be bringing her knowledge of the dramas to this group.

"I'm young to drama in terms of the knowledge of all these plays," Nyambi said.

If there is enough student interest, Ponnuswami will become the advisor of the drama group when Chast leaves next year. She will probably have someone in the theater department collaborate with her for production purposes. Her African-American drama course also serves as a great pool for the people who will be choosing and performing the plays.

"In the last seven or eight years, African-American plays on campus have often come from this course," Ponnuswami said.

It appears that Nyambi has the support and dedication that is needed for this project.

"Why couldn't there be an African-American drama group?" Gainer said. "I think it's a great idea. It's very exciting when students are able to explore their heritage through drama."

Nyambi will be having an interest meeting at 7:30 p.m. on Tuesday, Mar. 6 in the Langone Center Cave. He can also be contacted via e-mail at nyambi@bucknell.edu. Anyone who is interested should attend the meeting. Help Nyambi make history at the University.

"They say that theater is probably the last place where you can hear the truth," Nyambi said. "People should welcome it with open arms."

We Brake for Nobody pleases LC audience

Members of "We Brake for Nobody" improv a skit as part of their performance for a crowd of students.

By HILARY DEPIANO
Staff Writer

they have come a long way since their creation three years ago.

"Building up a new group was hard," said president and group founder, Ben Wellington '02. "The first thing we had to do was make ourselves known by having a few shows, but after that, the real challenge was incorporating ourselves into some of the Bucknell traditions like Parents' Weekend. I felt this show was one of our better performances."

We went all out with advertising this time, as we were sick of hearing people say they didn't know we had a show. Our best form of advertising is always the oddest, which in this case was two giant snow blobs on campus.

This past weekend's show featured a few new elements for the troupe, including four new games and a new video opening that introduced the members in an over-the-top action-film style.

"Our video opening for this weekend's show was our first attempt at something new, and it went off really well," said Wellington. "If the amount of laughter in the forum during the video was any measure, that assessment seems quite correct."

In addition to the video, the troupe show. Our best form of advertising is always the oddest, which in this case was two giant snow blobs on campus.

This past weekend's show featured a few new elements for the troupe, including four new games and a new video opening that introduced the members in an over-the-top action-film style.

"Our video opening for this weekend's show was our first attempt at something new, and it went off really well," said Wellington. "If the amount of laughter in the forum during the video was any measure, that assessment seems quite correct."

In addition to the video, the troupe

show. Our best form of advertising is always the oddest, which in this case was two giant snow blobs on campus.

This past weekend's show featured a few new elements for the troupe, including four new games and a new video opening that introduced the members in an over-the-top action-film style.

"Our video opening for this weekend's show was our first attempt at something new, and it went off really well," said Wellington. "If the amount of laughter in the forum during the video was any measure, that assessment seems quite correct."

In addition to the video, the troupe

show. Our best form of advertising is always the oddest, which in this case was two giant snow blobs on campus.

This past weekend's show featured a few new elements for the troupe, including four new games and a new video opening that introduced the members in an over-the-top action-film style.

"Our video opening for this weekend's show was our first attempt at something new, and it went off really well," said Wellington. "If the amount of laughter in the forum during the video was any measure, that assessment seems quite correct."

In addition to the video, the troupe

also performed four new games: Irish Drinking Song, Name-a-lator 2000, QVC and Public Service Announcement. It's funny if it works well ... It was good to perform after such a long hiatus."

Long hiatus? True. So, what has the troupe been up to since last semester? "It was basically two nights of performances and a day of workshops," Merritt said. "We had the opportunity to work and socialize with groups, both improv and sketch, from other colleges. We learned a few more tricks of the trade and some tricks never to do, ever."

Merritt is speaking of the 12th Annual National College Comedy Festival that the group attended a few weeks ago at Skidmore.

The festival included about 17 schools from the entire Northeast and featured a number of groups that did many different styles of comedy, from sketch comedy and videos to the skit style of the University's troupe. While there, the troupe had workshops with both Kevin McDonald from "Kids in the Hall," and the only female writer of "The Daily Show with Jon Stewart."

They also had a chance to share ideas and games with the other groups.

"The shows were the most exciting part about the weekend," Wellington said. "It all came together in four separate performances. While there were other groups who did improv, our style of short games, one after the other, turned out to be quite different and much faster-paced than any of the other groups. Being a brand new group with little experience, it's always nerve-racking to perform amongst other improv troupes. But we definitely held our own, and I was very pleased with our performance and the audience reaction. It is also very exciting to see other schools perform, as you can always pick up games and ideas from one another."

Overall, the group was very pleased with their performance at the festival.

"After the show, tons of people were approaching us and saying that we were excellent, and more than a few adults said that we were the best troupe they had seen there out of 17 schools," said Moran of their Skidmore performance.

"This is most likely my last year since I'll be graduating in May, with Chaz," Merritt said. "Improv has become a big part of my life. I have had the privilege of working with the best guys possible and watching them grow and improve as a group."

The next time to catch the troupe will be on Siblings' Weekend and if this past show was any indication, your siblings will be in for a treat. That the group has risen to this level of quality in their short-lived career makes them one of the most exciting up-and-coming groups on campus. If you have the opportunity to catch one of their shows, certainly give them a chance. You may be pleasantly surprised at the comic punch this little group provides.

—Ben Wellington '02

Vocalist Yatcko performs senior concert

By MATT GRIFFEN
Staff Writer

Alissa Yatcko '01 performed her senior recital on Sunday, Feb. 25 in the Sigfried Weis Music Building Recital Hall, displaying her own musical talent, but also showcasing the abilities of other individuals. Assisted by Lou Ann Potter on piano, the first half of the recital featured Yatcko as a conductor for a small select choir. Members of the University Choral and the Rooke Chapel Choir came together to sing traditional choir pieces, as well as more modern arrangements.

"The choir performed beautifully and professionally," Yatcko said. "It was so great to conduct a group of talented musicians who also happen to be my friends."

The choir performed six pieces, including an original composition by Jeffrey Leeman '01 and a soprano solo sung by Alexandria Shammass '01.

"I'm especially grateful to Jeff for writing 'Tota Pulchra Est' for the choir," Yatcko said. "He put a lot of creative effort into that piece, and it was really beautiful. I'm honored to have premiered it."

After a brief intermission, Yatcko treated the audience to four additional pieces, accompanied again by Lou Ann Potter. Her first piece, written by G.F. Handel, featured Curtis Olson '02 on trumpet.

"Working with Curt was great," Yatcko said. "He's a fabulous trumpet player and we had so much fun putting the Handel pieces together."

Immediately following this work, Yatcko performed three operatic pieces by Henry Purcell. Olson lent his trumpeting skills once more to assist Yatcko with four Alessandro Scarlatti arias.

"The Scarlatti was probably the most challenging," Yatcko said. "It was also the most fun because Curt and I both really enjoyed the music."

Yatcko ended the recital with "Fair Robin," an upbeat song from the modern opera "Tartuffe." Following a grand display of appreciation from the audience, Yatcko encoored with a sentimental piece that looked back on her years of education and looked forward to her impending graduation. All of the performers seemed very pleased with the final product of the recital. In the reception that followed, Yatcko expressed her gratitude for everyone's support.

"I'm really happy with my recital," she said. "It was a pleasure."

Olson summed up the result of the evening's events.

"It was fabulous," he said. "I think the entire performance was a success."

Senior Alissa Yatcko acknowledges her performers in Sunday's concert in the new Sigfried Weis Music Building recital hall.

"Foreplay" and "I'm Herbert" to hit Tustin this weekend

By KACY O'BRIEN
Senior Writer

The theater department will present "Foreplay, or The Art of the Fugue" and "I'm Herbert," a student showcase double-bill this weekend.

Directed by Allison Bagby '02, the two one-acts focus on "sex, love, and senility," taking the audience through the stages of miniature golf dates (cheesy pick-up lines and all) in "Foreplay," and finishing up with a senile couple who has a tough time remembering their own names (let alone the names of past lovers) in "I'm Herbert."

Showcases are run entirely by students, with a faculty member serving as advisor to the director. Directors are given a small budget to fund their projects, covering everything from the set to posters. Casts are usually small and crew is limited to two people. Cast members for these two shows include Christi Schuman '01, Steve Pincioti '02, Evans Mitchell '03, Jack Gendron '04, Brittany Bohn '04 and Kyle McGee '04.

Watch the cast rehearse, test and torment one another this weekend. If golf has never been exciting for you, prepare to catch otherwise when "Foreplay" hits the stage. You'll love the antics of the elderly in "I'm Herbert." Support your friends and fellow students and see the showcase this weekend at 8 p.m. on Friday and Saturday in the Tustin Studio Theatre. Tickets are $1 at the door.

Go home, enjoy Spring Break .. then come back and write for A&E! Contact Krista reisdorf@

BIRTHRIGHT of Sunbury

Free Pregnancy Test
Confidential Counseling
Pregnancy Support Services
Hours: Mon - Wed - Fri 12:30 to 4 pm

351 Woodlawn Ave.
Sunbury, Pa. 17837
570-286-8560
1-800-550-4900

Best Tasting Mexican Food
In The Area
654 ROUTE 13 • LEWISBURG • 523-8900

Because everyday
is the perfect
occasion for casual fine
dining at...

The Victorian
Lady

115 Old Turnpike Road
Lewisburg, PA 17837
Lunch: Mon.-Fri. 11:00-2:00
Dinner: Thurs.-Sat. 5:00-9:00
Phone: (570) 523-8090
www.victorianladyrestaurant.com

5 minutes from campus

University of Pittsburgh Summer 2001 Registration begins February 1

www.pitt.edu/~summer

Now hiring for the 2001-2002
academic year...

Want a cool job on campus that allows you to use your computer skills and experience to help people?

Want a cool job that looks great on your resume?

Need a cool job that provides some extra cash?

Get a job@ISR

Information Services & Resources

Apply beginning 2/26/01 online at:
<http://www.isr.bucknell.edu/jobs/employment.html>

Deadline for applications: Friday, 3/9/01
Interviews held the week of 3/19/01

Apply on-line
by 3/9/01!

24 Hour Towing
PA Inspection
Foreign & Domestic Repairs
Rollback Towing
Buck's SERVICE
Rte. 15 & N. 7th St.
Lewisburg, PA 17837
(570) 523-1132
SUNOCO GAS
24 Hours
Rte. 15 & 192

FOR RENT

LEWISBURG: Apts & houses
near BU campus. 1-6 bdrm units. Parking provided.
Heat, washer/dryer, dishwasher included in some.
Prof. 24-hour maintenance.
Range: $275 -1,200/mo.
for 2001/2002. CALL NOW
Brynwood Rentals
Ph: 570/524-2121 x 2.

First Impressions Salon
Enjoy our weekly and monthly specials!
Tanning and Nail Services
1716 West Market Street, Lewisburg, PA 17837
Phone: 522-4636
Call Today for Your Appointment. Cash and Checks Only.

Susquehanna Valley
Limousine Inc.
With a long tradition of quality service to the Bucknell Community, SVL offers:
Service to and from destination, door to door
Schedule your own charters to and from airports for books.
Rate sharing network to cut down on costs.
Many available vehicles: vans, town car
and limousine bus.
Service 24 hours a day, 7 days a week.
For more information or to make reservations
call
1.800.685.5567

BY SUPER HEROES!
ALE MAN & CHICKEN MAN!
Love BJ's
Super Buffalo Wing
SPECIAL!
12 for $4.95 Regularly $5.95
24 for $7.95 Regularly $9.95
Sunday - Thursday
9PM - Closing
EAT-IN ONLY!
17 North Market Street
SELINGROVE
374-9841
291 Mill Street
DANVILLE
275-5110

BUSINESS & POLITICS

Mideast dignitaries welcome Powell

By MICHAEL DUBZINSKI
Staff Writer

Secretary of State Colin Powell set out for his first Mideast visit this past weekend facing anti-U.S. attitudes that surfaced after recent bombings of the Iraqi missile sites. During the eve of Powell's departure, Palestinians burned U.S. flags while Israeli tanks and weapons retaliated against Palestinian gunmen as squabbles over borders persist.

Powell's main concern during the Mideast visit was to reach out and work with other U.S.-supportive countries in the region to decide how to uphold sanctions against Iraq and prevent Saddam Hussein from building weapons of mass destruction, NBC News' Andrea Mitchell reported.

Powell also affirmed that the rogue leader has more money today than he did during the onset of the Persian Gulf War, money that may allow for the formation of nuclear weapons and other defensive measures.

The Secretary of State's first meeting this past Sunday was with Russian Foreign Minister Igor Ivanov. It addressed joint U.S.-Russian measures of dealing with Iraq's failure to recognize UN sanctions and persistent disregard of the no-fly zones.

Both leaders also approached the topic of missile defense and the need for both countries to consider cutbacks in offensive arsenals.

According to MSNBC, Russia's proposed flexibility with military defense made Powell's meeting with Ivanov considerably productive.

However, because of the recent UN bombings,

Secretary Colin Powell made his first visit to the Middle East.

U.S. opposition soared in Arab countries, especially in the target nation of Iraq where Powell was greeted by lawmakers chanting, "Down, down USA," and "Powell's trip is a trip of shame opposed by all free Arabs."

Although this had made the trip a little more difficult, Powell maintained that the bombings signified that the United States would not allow sanctions to be evaded by Iraq. However, Powell was willing to accept any suggestions that may allow the sanctions to be effectively enforced with minimum impact on the Iraqi people.

Amid controversy between the Israelis and the Palestinians, Powell first met on Sunday with Palestinian leader Yasser Arafat, stating that when violence subsides between both countries, President Bush will play a role in negotiating peace between the two nations.

During Powell's meeting with the outgoing Israeli Prime Minister, Ehud Barak, and new Israeli Prime Minister, archconservative Ariel Sharon, some leaders expressed discomfort with the bombings—for which Powell stated he had no apologies.

CNN reported that many civilians in the region feel that the bombings occurred to distract U.S. attention to the conflict between Israeli-Palestinian peace efforts.

In realizing a need for security cooperation, Powell told the Israeli leaders that an easing of economic curbs were necessary. But Barak insisted that the United States reduce Palestinian aggression before Israel will engage in further peace talks.

He also paid tribute to the six million Jews killed in the Nazi Holocaust by visiting Israel's Yad Vashem National Holocaust Memorial and lighting a flame to honor both victims and survivors.

Powell made his way to Cairo, where he met with Egypt's Foreign Minister, Amr Moussa, who stated that he does not see any threat to the state of Egypt from Iraq.

As his first Mideast visit came to an end, Powell also made a stop in the ally country of Jordan to discuss the tightening of border controls with neighboring Iraq. King Abdullah of Jordan at the Raghdan Palace greeted Powell with a warm welcome of U.S. ties in dismantling oppression from Saddam Hussein.

While Powell visited the Mideast, President Bush met with British Prime Minister Tony Blair at Camp David in Maryland to discuss the tightening of missile defense in Baghdad. Both world leaders vowed to foster cooperation in future handling of foreign issues.

Republican outreach an empty gesture

Rev. Jesse Jackson and Rep. Charlie Rangel (D-NY) have been outspoken critics of Pres. Bush and the Republican Party in general.

By ALEXIS BEDEIAN
Staff Writer

lamation of 1863.

This document was supposed to abolish slavery, when in actuality, it didn't free any slaves. It was merely a tool for Lincoln to save face.

The Emancipation Proclamation was Lincoln's way of pretending to care about blacks when he was mainly concerned with keeping his constituents pleased and getting re-elected. It wasn't until the ratification of the 13th, 14th, and 15th Amendments in 1865 that blacks were freed from slavery, given citizenship rights and black males were given the right to vote.

But in this grand effort one rooted in philanthropy and genuine concern, or is this merely a guise for the GOP desire for re-election and gaining an edge over the Democrats?

In this effort, Bush and his fellow

GOP members have been meeting with minority entrepreneurs, black college presidents and members of the Congressional Black Caucus.

Bush has also said that he is considering methods of decreasing racial profiling, a practice in which a person's race or ethnicity is considered in determining suspects or making traffic stops.

Other GOP efforts include collaborating with black entrepreneurs to celebrate

Black History Month and proposing a monument be erected in honor of black contributions to the nation.

What does a monument have to do with black rights? What does it have to do with the seemingly systematic disenfranchisement of minorities in Florida in November's presidential election? What does it have to do with the devastatingly high amount of minorities incarcerated? Why does a monument matter when today people who commit race-related hate crimes are still getting off with a slap on the wrist?

A monument is a symbol. It is not a solution; it's merely a pacifier, a consolation prize.

American History is full of consolation prizes.

Historian Howard Zinn shows us one of the earliest examples of this: Abraham Lincoln's Emancipation Proclamation.

As the Civil War over slavery grew more and more bloody by the day, criticism against Lincoln and the abolitionists was becoming widespread.

Lincoln had to act fast, and the result was the Emancipation Proclamation.

But the underlying issue is this: blacks voted against Bush by a 9-1 margin—the widest since

Barry Goldwater ran in 1964, according to the Joint Center for Political and Economic Studies, a black-oriented think tank.

Republicans know that unless they can successfully appeal to blacks, their support from blacks will continue to be dismal.

Many blacks continue to be skeptical about the Republican outreach.

Rep. Eddie Bernice Johnson, D-Texas, who heads the Congressional Black Caucus said, "We are looking for issues to be addressed—monuments are wonderful, but we want something done about living people and rights that seem to be crumbling before our eyes. We know the difference between symbolism and respect."

— Gov. George Clinton, 1787, arguing against the adoption of the Constitution

Quote of the Week:

"...the ten miles square [Washington, D.C.]...

would be the asylum of the base, idle, avaricious and ambitious..."

— Gov. George Clinton, 1787, arguing against the adoption of the Constitution

L-R: Pat Creighton '00, Lauren Mosler '03, Eric Molitor '01, Ed Reilly '02

Entrepreneurs compete nationally

CLUB From page B1

The new business concept is the result of several months of in-depth research and many in-library loan requests. We see a distinct market and are working to fill it. It's quite exciting."

Club member Lauren Mosler '03 espouses the academic benefits of the club: "As an economics major," she said, "being part of this club has been a great opportunity for me to broaden my business knowledge and have fun at the same time."

The club provides a unique experience typically reserved for graduate M.B.A. students: creating a viable business plan. Currently, no courses offered at the University focus on how to write a complete business plan, which integrates all the disciplines of business administration.

At the same time, the club allows its members to develop their own entrepreneurial skills. "Evolving our ideas from a vague concept to a completely new business model has been an amazing experience" Eric Molitor '01 said. "We have been fortunate to receive assistance from many staff members."

The club collectively praised the assistance of several Bucknell faculty and staff members, including Candice Busch, Jon Vernam and Dr. Charles Moran. The club is hoping to expand next year with more student members and by encouraging alumni experienced in business to get involved. Reilly explained, "There is a lot we don't know about starting a business. Experience is key to being successful with entrepreneurial work. Then it occurred to us that this would be a great way to involve experienced alumni with a team of students."

Eventually, the club hopes to have multiple teams submit entries to the competitions and to start a business plan competition at Bucknell to encourage campus entrepreneurs.

Bucknell Entrepreneurs is open to all interested students, regardless of major. "We would like a variety of students to participate. For example, we need the technical skills of engineers, some of the basic knowledge used by science students, and the creativity of artists. Everyone has something unique to contribute," Reilly said.

Writing a business plan isn't the only thing the club emphasizes. "We have to have fun, too," Mosler said. To lighten the atmosphere of the sometimes arduous business discussions, toys—from slinkies to silly putty—cover the table during each meeting. The club has even incorporated the toys into their brainstorming sessions.

Creighton said, "We use funny money to encourage brainstorming and creativity. Then, we auction the toys off to the highest bidder."

Write for B&P—Contact
Mike (x75028, mboland@)

Supreme Court considers religion, public schools

By ANDREA BEISSER
Staff Writer

On Wednesday, Feb. 28, the Supreme Court heard a difficult case addressing religious freedom issues in the tight-knit farming community of Milford, New York. The Court was asked to rule on several controversial First Amendment issues.

First is whether a public school that permits speakers to use its facilities after school hours to conduct religious sessions can forbid such activities if they are deemed "too religious." Is the Milford school district, by forbidding this instruction in its facilities, engaging in discrimination that violates the Free Speech guarantees of the U.S. Constitution?

Another unsettled question involves a government official's determination whether speech is a "discussion of morals from a religious viewpoint" (which is deemed permissible speech) or if it is "religious instruction" (which is deemed impermissible speech). Described by both sides as a "friendly disagreement," the case was brought to court in Sept. 1996 after Milford denied the school bus service that the district had been providing, to transport children to Good News Club meeting facilities at the Milford Center Community Church.

The Good News Club, a community-based youth group with national support from the Christian missionary organization Child Evangelism Fellowship, ministers to children between the ages of six and 12. The Club's officials applied under a school policy for space to meet in the school to accommodate children unable to get out to the church.

Milford Superintendent Robert C. McGruder denied the request in October, stating to Good News representatives that he understood the request to be "the equivalent of religious worship rather than the expression of religious views or values on a secular subject matter." Several months later the Good News Club's attorney, Thomas J. Marcelle, contacted the school to inform officials that denying the club access to a public building that admits clubs such as the Girl Scouts, the Boy Scouts and the 4-H Club, violated the Good News Club's civil liberties.

Milford School officials decided to reconsider the request, focusing on the activities and material associated with the sessions. After reviewing the material, which included Christian songs and bible verses, Milford officials denied the request to use school facilities. In March 1997, the club responded by filing suit in U.S. District Court, alleging violations of the club's right to free speech under the First and 14th Amendments, to equal protection under the 14th Amendment, and to religious freedom under the 1993 Religious Freedom Restoration Act.

U.S. District Judge Thomas J. McAvoy dismissed Good News' case on cross-motions for summary judgment, concluding that the school was "a limited public forum" and had never allowed religious groups to meet on campus in the past. The judge noted that the club intended to teach religious instruction, not morals and values in a religious context, like the Boy Scouts.

In a 2-1 opinion, the 2nd Circuit Court of Appeals affirmed, ruling that the school did not discriminate against the club because of their Christian beliefs but rather rejected their application because the subject matter of the meetings violated the limited public forum clause by teaching religious instruction rather than secular subjects from a religious viewpoint. The U.S. Supreme Court agreed to hear the Good News Club's appeal when the 8th Circuit Court of Appeals reached a different ruling in a similar case.

Attorneys representing both sides are struggling to solve the issue and follow the law, despite its ambiguity with respect to the kind of material that is allowed within the Christian group. Frank W. Miller, the attorney representing the school, commented, "From the school's perspective, we did not want this fight" and added, "school officials are not trying to be the champions of church and state, they are just trying to follow the law."

Good News Club attorney Thomas J. Marcelle said, "Here we have some of the most brilliant legal minds who can't agree and we are asking school superintendents who are not lawyers to make these decisions, so you can appreciate the bind they are in. We don't know what the law is right now. We need the Supreme Court to clarify it."

Justice Scalia is said to be supportive of religion in the public square.

Quote of the Week:

"...the ten miles square [Washington, D.C.]... would be the asylum of the base, idle, avaricious and ambitious..."

— Gov. George Clinton, 1787, arguing against the adoption of the Constitution

SCIENCE & TECHNOLOGY

What is homosexuality?

By ALEX PIEL
Senior Writer

Homosexuality has become a highly debated issue in American politics and—unlike the past problems of gays in the military—the American public continues to resist accepting homosexuals. Homosexuality continues to be the center of court cases with legal battles occurring in regard to adoption, marriage and even inheritance.

It is not surprising, then, that as the Human Genome Project has been recently completed, geneticists and anthropologists alike have begun inquiring into what homosexuality is.

Present-day approaches to homosexuality often have legal, religious or medical foundations. As recently as the Middle Ages, homosexuality was widely accepted and even sometimes encouraged by societies uninfluenced by the Christian church throughout the world. Only towards the end of the 20th century did homosexual acts begin to earn condemnation and social rejection, which continues to the present day.

Since then, researchers from all disciplines have been investigating homosexuality, providing varying viewpoints concerning the issue. For example, zoologist and taxonomist Alfred Kinsey, who studied sexual behavior of American adults in the mid-1940s, supported a more tolerant view of homosexuality. His work "revealed that a significant number of his research participants reported having engaged in homosexual behavior to the point of orgasm after age 16."

In addition, Kinsey found that 10 percent of the men in his sample and close to 8 percent of the women "had been more or less exclusively homosexual in their behavior for at least three years between the ages of 16 and 55."

The recent mapping of the human genome has allowed scientists to further investigate questions regarding homosexuality. One question concerns the existence and possible evolutionary adaptation of homosexuality in humans and other species. Jack Lucentini of The Washington Post reports that evolutionary biologists and anthropologists are trying to use new-found knowledge of our genetic makeup to delve into the nature vs. nurture debate.

The principle function of homosexuality is said to be the establishment or strengthening of social bonds which can work to benefit individuals. "The recognition of how widespread same-sex courtship is, and that it has an adaptive significance, is a growing trend," Joan Roughgarden of Stanford Earth and Biological Sciences Departments said.

These bonds can lead to individuals or groups of individuals out-competing and eventually out-reproducing their peers.

As typical Western societies have condemned same-sex attraction, anthropologists must examine ancient cultures, traditional tribes and non-human animal species to look for evidence.

As early as the ancient Greeks, homosexuality has been documented as a means of increasing social status or prestige. Evidence of this is seen in much of the early writings with younger boys intellectually and sexually admiring older men.

In Plato's Symposium, Alcibiades wrote, "So there I was, my friends, alone with him [Socrates] at last. My idea, naturally, was that he'd take advantage of the opportunity to tell me whatever it is that lovers say when they find themselves alone; I relished the moment."

Similarly, we see examples of such same-sex eroticism in more recent tribal groups. In New Guinea, a group called the Sambia use homosexual interactions to emphasize and develop social bonds used mainly in defense of territory.

Examples of homosexual tendencies are not limited to our own species. Among our closest relatives, the bonobos, same-sex copulatory behavior is seen frequently between individuals. Migrating between groups, females are often initiated into a new group after an intense "sexual contact" with the dominant female from the host group. According to primatologists, this event eases group tension with the arrival of the new member and is a sign both of submission and acceptance.

Same-sex interactions such as this serve to create alliances between individuals, increase social rank and allow for better access to resources. Like most societies, higher rank means better access to mates and consequently, better chances of gene propagation.

Other examples of homoeroticism include female-female pairs in gulls, geese, and tern species and male-male pairs in swans. In most of these species, mates make only genetic contributions before same-sex pairs reunite to raise offspring.

With this clash between state and federal control, no real solution is apparent. However regulation appears to be the best answer. Online betting will continue in the U.S., but at least lawmakers can gain some control over how it continues.

Online betting is a very profitable industry and therefore difficult to legislate. Lawmakers in Nevada, where most legal U.S. online gambling sites are located, have allowed gambling sites to operate as long as customers use a modem to connect to the Internet stating, "It's just an extension of telephone betting, it doesn't involve the Internet at all."

With this clash between state and federal control, no real solution is apparent. However regulation appears to be the best answer. Online betting will continue in the U.S., but at least lawmakers can gain some control over how it continues.

Online betting is a very profitable industry and therefore difficult to legislate. Lawmakers in Nevada, where most legal U.S. online gambling sites are located, have allowed gambling sites to operate as long as customers use a modem to connect to the Internet stating, "It's just an extension of telephone betting, it doesn't involve the Internet at all."

Online betting is a very profitable industry and therefore difficult to legislate. Lawmakers in Nevada, where most legal U.S. online gambling sites are located, have allowed gambling sites to operate as long as customers use a modem to connect to the Internet stating, "It's just an extension of telephone betting, it doesn't involve the Internet at all."

Online betting is a very profitable industry and therefore difficult to legislate. Lawmakers in Nevada, where most legal U.S. online gambling sites are located, have allowed gambling sites to operate as long as customers use a modem to connect to the Internet stating, "It's just an extension of telephone betting, it doesn't involve the Internet at all."

Online betting is a very profitable industry and therefore difficult to legislate. Lawmakers in Nevada, where most legal U.S. online gambling sites are located, have allowed gambling sites to operate as long as customers use a modem to connect to the Internet stating, "It's just an extension of telephone betting, it doesn't involve the Internet at all."

Online betting is a very profitable industry and therefore difficult to legislate. Lawmakers in Nevada, where most legal U.S. online gambling sites are located, have allowed gambling sites to operate as long as customers use a modem to connect to the Internet stating, "It's just an extension of telephone betting, it doesn't involve the Internet at all."

Online betting is a very profitable industry and therefore difficult to legislate. Lawmakers in Nevada, where most legal U.S. online gambling sites are located, have allowed gambling sites to operate as long as customers use a modem to connect to the Internet stating, "It's just an extension of telephone betting, it doesn't involve the Internet at all."

Online betting is a very profitable industry and therefore difficult to legislate. Lawmakers in Nevada, where most legal U.S. online gambling sites are located, have allowed gambling sites to operate as long as customers use a modem to connect to the Internet stating, "It's just an extension of telephone betting, it doesn't involve the Internet at all."

Online betting is a very profitable industry and therefore difficult to legislate. Lawmakers in Nevada, where most legal U.S. online gambling sites are located, have allowed gambling sites to operate as long as customers use a modem to connect to the Internet stating, "It's just an extension of telephone betting, it doesn't involve the Internet at all."

Online betting is a very profitable industry and therefore difficult to legislate. Lawmakers in Nevada, where most legal U.S. online gambling sites are located, have allowed gambling sites to operate as long as customers use a modem to connect to the Internet stating, "It's just an extension of telephone betting, it doesn't involve the Internet at all."

Online betting is a very profitable industry and therefore difficult to legislate. Lawmakers in Nevada, where most legal U.S. online gambling sites are located, have allowed gambling sites to operate as long as customers use a modem to connect to the Internet stating, "It's just an extension of telephone betting, it doesn't involve the Internet at all."

Online betting is a very profitable industry and therefore difficult to legislate. Lawmakers in Nevada, where most legal U.S. online gambling sites are located, have allowed gambling sites to operate as long as customers use a modem to connect to the Internet stating, "It's just an extension of telephone betting, it doesn't involve the Internet at all."

Online betting is a very profitable industry and therefore difficult to legislate. Lawmakers in Nevada, where most legal U.S. online gambling sites are located, have allowed gambling sites to operate as long as customers use a modem to connect to the Internet stating, "It's just an extension of telephone betting, it doesn't involve the Internet at all."

Online betting is a very profitable industry and therefore difficult to legislate. Lawmakers in Nevada, where most legal U.S. online gambling sites are located, have allowed gambling sites to operate as long as customers use a modem to connect to the Internet stating, "It's just an extension of telephone betting, it doesn't involve the Internet at all."

Online betting is a very profitable industry and therefore difficult to legislate. Lawmakers in Nevada, where most legal U.S. online gambling sites are located, have allowed gambling sites to operate as long as customers use a modem to connect to the Internet stating, "It's just an extension of telephone betting, it doesn't involve the Internet at all."

Online betting is a very profitable industry and therefore difficult to legislate. Lawmakers in Nevada, where most legal U.S. online gambling sites are located, have allowed gambling sites to operate as long as customers use a modem to connect to the Internet stating, "It's just an extension of telephone betting, it doesn't involve the Internet at all."

Online betting is a very profitable industry and therefore difficult to legislate. Lawmakers in Nevada, where most legal U.S. online gambling sites are located, have allowed gambling sites to operate as long as customers use a modem to connect to the Internet stating, "It's just an extension of telephone betting, it doesn't involve the Internet at all."

Online betting is a very profitable industry and therefore difficult to legislate. Lawmakers in Nevada, where most legal U.S. online gambling sites are located, have allowed gambling sites to operate as long as customers use a modem to connect to the Internet stating, "It's just an extension of telephone betting, it doesn't involve the Internet at all."

Online betting is a very profitable industry and therefore difficult to legislate. Lawmakers in Nevada, where most legal U.S. online gambling sites are located, have allowed gambling sites to operate as long as customers use a modem to connect to the Internet stating, "It's just an extension of telephone betting, it doesn't involve the Internet at all."

Online betting is a very profitable industry and therefore difficult to legislate. Lawmakers in Nevada, where most legal U.S. online gambling sites are located, have allowed gambling sites to operate as long as customers use a modem to connect to the Internet stating, "It's just an extension of telephone betting, it doesn't involve the Internet at all."

Place your bets ... online?!

By PARKER TERRIL
Staff Writer

A number of bills have recently been introduced into the House and Senate proposing new legislation of the Internet and Internet companies. The main targets of these bills include Internet privacy, online gambling and Spam (unsolicited e-mail). However this is not the first time that such bills have been introduced.

Last year nearly identical bills to the ones being considered now were cleared in the House only to fall short in the Senate. The main target of the proposed online legislation however, is online gambling. Many gambling bills are currently under consideration and if any number of these bills are passed this year, Internet accessibility and usage could be greatly affected.

The online gambling industry is an almost completely unregulated industry. U.S. gambling laws are very limiting and because of this, most gaming sites operate in other countries. Congress is looking at possible ways to regulate, tax or even ban online gambling in the U.S.

A bill to end most forms of Internet gambling proposed by Senator John Kyl from Arizona and Representative Robert Goodlatte from Virginia fell just short of being passed last year due mainly to the strong opposition of then Vice President Al Gore. However, the bill has been reintroduced and shows significant promise of passing this year. "We're going to give it another try," said Goodlatte, of his hopeful bill. This proposed bill bans U.S. citizens from partaking in some types of online gambling, mainly casino style sites with virtual card games and slots, but still allows other forms such as horse racing and dog racing sites to operate.

If such a bill were to be passed, it could not be easily enforced and definitely would not end Internet gambling in the U.S. Simply shutting down all U.S. companies will not solve the problem. Sites operating outside the country are not within the jurisdiction of U.S. law, but are still accessible to American gamblers. The next logical step would be to prosecute the individuals using the sites, but this remains too costly and time consuming. Many congressmen have showed support for a different Internet gambling bill proposed by Jim Leach of Iowa.

This bill aims simply to prevent credit from being used as a means of payment at gambling sites. This bill brings the appeal of feasibility and imposing regulations rather than an all out ban.

Online betting is a very profitable industry and therefore difficult to legislate. Lawmakers in Nevada, where most legal U.S. online gambling sites are located, have allowed gambling sites to operate as long as customers use a modem to connect to the Internet stating, "It's just an extension of telephone betting, it doesn't involve the Internet at all."

Online betting is a very profitable industry and therefore difficult to legislate. Lawmakers in Nevada, where most legal U.S. online gambling sites are located, have allowed gambling sites to operate as long as customers use a modem to connect to the Internet stating, "It's just an extension of telephone betting, it doesn't involve the Internet at all."

Online betting is a very profitable industry and therefore difficult to legislate. Lawmakers in Nevada, where most legal U.S. online gambling sites are located, have allowed gambling sites to operate as long as customers use a modem to connect to the Internet stating, "It's just an extension of telephone betting, it doesn't involve the Internet at all."

Online betting is a very profitable industry and therefore difficult to legislate. Lawmakers in Nevada, where most legal U.S. online gambling sites are located, have allowed gambling sites to operate as long as customers use a modem to connect to the Internet stating, "It's just an extension of telephone betting, it doesn't involve the Internet at all."

Online betting is a very profitable industry and therefore difficult to legislate. Lawmakers in Nevada, where most legal U.S. online gambling sites are located, have allowed gambling sites to operate as long as customers use a modem to connect to the Internet stating, "It's just an extension of telephone betting, it doesn't involve the Internet at all."

Online betting is a very profitable industry and therefore difficult to legislate. Lawmakers in Nevada, where most legal U.S. online gambling sites are located, have allowed gambling sites to operate as long as customers use a modem to connect to the Internet stating, "It's just an extension of telephone betting, it doesn't involve the Internet at all."

Online betting is a very profitable industry and therefore difficult to legislate. Lawmakers in Nevada, where most legal U.S. online gambling sites are located, have allowed gambling sites to operate as long as customers use a modem to connect to the Internet stating, "It's just an extension of telephone betting, it doesn't involve the Internet at all."

Online betting is a very profitable industry and therefore difficult to legislate. Lawmakers in Nevada, where most legal U.S. online gambling sites are located, have allowed gambling sites to operate as long as customers use a modem to connect to the Internet stating, "It's just an extension of telephone betting, it doesn't involve the Internet at all."

Online betting is a very profitable industry and therefore difficult to legislate. Lawmakers in Nevada, where most legal U.S. online gambling sites are located, have allowed gambling sites to operate as long as customers use a modem to connect to the Internet stating, "It's just an extension of telephone betting, it doesn't involve the Internet at all."

Online betting is a very profitable industry and therefore difficult to legislate. Lawmakers in Nevada, where most legal U.S. online gambling sites are located, have allowed gambling sites to operate as long as customers use a modem to connect to the Internet stating, "It's just an extension of telephone betting, it doesn't involve the Internet at all."

Online betting is a very profitable industry and therefore difficult to legislate. Lawmakers in Nevada, where most legal U.S. online gambling sites are located, have allowed gambling sites to operate as long as customers use a modem to connect to the Internet stating, "It's just an extension of telephone betting, it doesn't involve the Internet at all."

Online betting is a very profitable industry and therefore difficult to legislate. Lawmakers in Nevada, where most legal U.S. online gambling sites are located, have allowed gambling sites to operate as long as customers use a modem to connect to the Internet stating, "It's just an extension of telephone betting, it doesn't involve the Internet at all."

Online betting is a very profitable industry and therefore difficult to legislate. Lawmakers in Nevada, where most legal U.S. online gambling sites are located, have allowed gambling sites to operate as long as customers use a modem to connect to the Internet stating, "It's just an extension of telephone betting, it doesn't involve the Internet at all."

Online betting is a very profitable industry and therefore difficult to legislate. Lawmakers in Nevada, where most legal U.S. online gambling sites are located, have allowed gambling sites to operate as long as customers use a modem to connect to the Internet stating, "It's just an extension of telephone betting, it doesn't involve the Internet at all."

Online betting is a very profitable industry and therefore difficult to legislate. Lawmakers in Nevada, where most legal U.S. online gambling sites are located, have allowed gambling sites to operate as long as customers use a modem to connect to the Internet stating, "It's just an extension of telephone betting, it doesn't involve the Internet at all."

Online betting is a very profitable industry and therefore difficult to legislate. Lawmakers in Nevada, where most legal U.S. online gambling sites are located, have allowed gambling sites to operate as long as customers use a modem to connect to the Internet stating, "It's just an extension of telephone betting, it doesn't involve the Internet at all."

Online betting is a very profitable industry and therefore difficult to legislate. Lawmakers in Nevada, where most legal U.S. online gambling sites are located, have allowed gambling sites to operate as long as customers use a modem to connect to the Internet stating, "It's just an extension of telephone betting, it doesn't involve the Internet at all."

Online betting is a very profitable industry and therefore difficult to legislate. Lawmakers in Nevada, where most legal U.S. online gambling sites are located, have allowed gambling sites to operate as long as customers use a modem to connect to the Internet stating, "It's just an extension of telephone betting, it doesn't involve the Internet at all."

Online betting is a very profitable industry and therefore difficult to legislate. Lawmakers in Nevada, where most legal U.S. online gambling sites are located, have allowed gambling sites to operate as long as customers use a modem to connect to the Internet stating, "It's just an extension of telephone betting, it doesn't involve the Internet at all."

Online betting is a very profitable industry and therefore difficult to legislate. Lawmakers in Nevada, where most legal U.S. online gambling sites are located, have allowed gambling sites to operate as long as customers use a modem to connect to the Internet stating, "It's just an extension of telephone betting, it doesn't involve the Internet at all."

Online betting is a very profitable industry and therefore difficult to legislate. Lawmakers in Nevada, where most legal U.S. online gambling sites are located, have allowed gambling sites to operate as long as customers use a modem to connect to the Internet stating, "It's just an extension of telephone betting, it doesn't involve the Internet at all."

THE Bucknellian

The weekly campus newspaper of Bucknell University

March 23, 2001

http://www.orgs.bucknell.edu/bucknellian

Volume 127, Number 7

Section B

Abroad Perspective:
Bath,
England

B&P

Commentary:
Bush misconceptions explored

See page B1

See page B10

AK-47 found in dorm room

By REBECCA ROWLAND
Editor-in-Chief

In what was supposed to be a routine dorm check, custodial workers found an AK-47 with ammunition in a student's room last Monday. The student—who has not been publicly identified—will face University charges and appear before the Community Judicial Board (CJB).

Although possession of an AK-47 is not illegal in the state of Pennsylvania, the Student Handbook prohibits the storage of "firearms, ammunition and hunting equipment" in dorm rooms due to the fact that they "pose a fire and/or safety hazard and infringe on the rights of others." The handbook does note, however, that hunting rifles can be stored in the Public Safety office.

This allowance is more of a nod to the rich hunting tradition of Pennsylvania than anything else—the demand to create a holding facility for firearms on campus is minimal and very few guns are currently held in Public Safety's custody.

"We have never had more than three or four rifles in storage at any one time," Director of Public Safety Vincent DeCercio said. "[And] we have been doing this for 20 years."

The protocol for keeping a gun with Public Safety is complicated, involving paper work and strict regulations on where and how a gun can be on campus.

"Persons who wish to hunt bring unloaded rifles to Public Safety, which we check, sign in and lock up. They may only transport them directly to and from our office from off campus," DeCercio said. "The hunters must take the rifles off campus immediately if they are going to use them for hunting."

See AK-47, page A4

University President Steffen Rogers and his wife, Athena, traveled Nueva Vida, Nicaragua, for the dedication of the clinic built by the Bucknell Brigade.

"The day of the dedication was absolutely incredible—the villagers were dressed in their finest—sure they, were second and third hand clothes, but they were clean. They danced, played and sang to us, the festivities went on for several hours."

—President Rogers

Students damage SAE and SAM houses

By RACHEL LASKOW
News Layout Editor

The Sigma Alpha Mu (SAM) and Sigma Alpha Epsilon (SAE) University-owned fraternity houses were burglarized on March 1. The Lewisburg Police Department received a phone call to report to the SAE house for a possible burglary in progress.

When police arrived at the scene, Public Safety already had the building secured. The two suspects, Frank Roessler '01 and Charles Reiter '01, both members of Phi Gamma Delta (Fiji), fled the building and were apprehended by Lewisburg Police and Public Safety.

"I commended the officers of Public Safety and the Lewisburg Police for responding to the break-in so swiftly," said former SAE president John Steingger '01.

With further investigation, damage such as broken doors, broken bathroom fixtures and water damage was found in the SAE house. According to Lewisburg Chief of Police William Neitz Jr., the damage in the SAE house totaled $1,040.50.

As a follow-up investigation, Lewisburg Police discovered that the SAM house was also entered. The SAM house had damage to the bathroom that, according to Neitz, totaled $362.

According to Dean of Fraternity and Sorority Affairs Roy Baker, the University repaired the damages and the suspects repaid the University.

"All the major damage, kicked-in door, toilets, wet ceiling tiles and broken window were fixed the next morning after the incident. I was impressed with how fast Physical Plant and the custodial staff was able to fix the major damage," Steingger said.

According to Baker, the suspects set off the security system when they entered the SAE house.

See HOUSES, page A2

CDC responds to changing job market

By JENNIFER JENCHURA
Staff Writer

General Electric (GE) recently announced that more and more corporations are focusing on hiring seniors who either interned with corporations or are from nearby universities. More companies are cutting back on-campus interviews and are focusing their recruiting efforts on fewer schools. Because Bucknell is not located near a metropolis, the Career Development Center Laura Denbow said.

The trends that GE has seen in its own organization apply to large corporations everywhere.

Denbow estimates that in the next few years some companies will probably come to campus solely to recruit underclassmen for internship positions.

"[The CDC] needs to focus on underclassmen just as much as seniors in the job hunt," Denbow said.

Two weeks ago at the March Administrative Forum, Denbow made the University faculty aware of GE's new trend.

"In the early 1990's the tendency was to recruit at many schools, and over the past five years this focus has shifted. Companies found that recruiting at more schools is not the most effective way. Now companies are deepening their relationships with fewer schools," Denbow said.

Although GE has nearly cut their "executive school" list in half, the University continues a strong relationship with the company.

"Bucknell is one of 38 executive schools across the nation which GE has shifted. Companies found that recruiting at more schools is not the most effective way. Now companies are deepening their relationships with fewer schools," Denbow said.

Although GE has nearly cut their "executive school" list in half, the University continues a strong relationship with the company.

"Bucknell is one of 38 executive schools across the nation which GE

has shifted. Companies found that recruiting at more schools is not the most effective way. Now companies are deepening their relationships with fewer schools," Denbow said.

Although GE has nearly cut their "executive school" list in half, the University continues a strong relationship with the company.

"Bucknell is one of 38 executive schools across the nation which GE

has shifted. Companies found that recruiting at more schools is not the most effective way. Now companies are deepening their relationships with fewer schools," Denbow said.

Although GE has nearly cut their "executive school" list in half, the University continues a strong relationship with the company.

"Bucknell is one of 38 executive schools across the nation which GE

has shifted. Companies found that recruiting at more schools is not the most effective way. Now companies are deepening their relationships with fewer schools," Denbow said.

Although GE has nearly cut their "executive school" list in half, the University continues a strong relationship with the company.

"Bucknell is one of 38 executive schools across the nation which GE

has shifted. Companies found that recruiting at more schools is not the most effective way. Now companies are deepening their relationships with fewer schools," Denbow said.

Although GE has nearly cut their "executive school" list in half, the University continues a strong relationship with the company.

"Bucknell is one of 38 executive schools across the nation which GE

has shifted. Companies found that recruiting at more schools is not the most effective way. Now companies are deepening their relationships with fewer schools," Denbow said.

Although GE has nearly cut their "executive school" list in half, the University continues a strong relationship with the company.

"Bucknell is one of 38 executive schools across the nation which GE

has shifted. Companies found that recruiting at more schools is not the most effective way. Now companies are deepening their relationships with fewer schools," Denbow said.

League extends scholarship policy

By BRIAN WATSON
Senior Editor

The Patriot League's tenth anniversary was marked with the release of John Feinstein's The Last Amateurs, a book that chronicled the 1999-2000 men's basketball season and told the "incredible stories" of the figures that compete for the love of the game, unhindered by scholarship and booster influence.

The tenth anniversary will now mark something of a rebirth in the conference—Presidents from each Patriot League institution voted on March 9 to extend the conference's scholarship policy, allowing each school to offer both academic and athletic merit-based aid.

The motion was passed by a vote of four to three. The new policy will be effective with the classes of 2006, which will include next year's recruits.

While the League office would not specify which way each school voted, University officials expected Holy Cross, Lehigh, Army and Navy derly Conduct Ordinance that will add firmer language and give police authority to make more arrests, as opposed to citations.

See PL, page A4

"We need to clearly define the difference between citation and arrest," said Police Chief William Neitz Jr.

Currently, police cannot physically remove a violator from the scene unless it is a second offense. The new ordinance would give police more latitude in removing offenders. "The police would have more tools," Wagner said.

Violations would include public drunkenness, littering, destruction of property, excessive noise and fighting. Penalties for such offenses could range from $300 fines to up to 90 days in jail.

In addition to disorderly conduct violations, the ordinance would also outline strict consequences for land-derly Conduct Ordinance that will add firmer language and give police authority to make more arrests, as opposed to citations.

"We need to clearly define the difference between citation and arrest," said Police Chief William Neitz Jr.

Currently, police cannot physically remove a violator from the scene unless it is a second offense. The new ordinance would give police more latitude in removing offenders. "The police would have more tools," Wagner said.

Violations would include public drunkenness, littering, destruction of property, excessive noise and fighting. Penalties for such offenses could range from $300 fines to up to 90 days in jail.

In addition to disorderly conduct violations, the ordinance would also outline strict consequences for land-derly Conduct Ordinance that will add firmer language and give police authority to make more arrests, as opposed to citations.

"We need to clearly define the difference between citation and arrest," said Police Chief William Neitz Jr.

Currently, police cannot physically remove a violator from the scene unless it is a second offense. The new ordinance would give police more latitude in removing offenders. "The police would have more tools," Wagner said.

Violations would include public drunkenness, littering, destruction of property, excessive noise and fighting. Penalties for such offenses could range from $300 fines to up to 90 days in jail.

In addition to disorderly conduct violations, the ordinance would also outline strict consequences for land-

Public Safety Log

March 16, 2001
INFORMATION—Public Safety responded to the Langone Center for the report of an unauthorized person in the restricted areas of the building. The individual also provided false identification when approached by an employee. The individual was gone when Public Safety arrived.

INFORMATION—Public Safety responded to the Bucknell West Mods for the report of a cat in one of the buildings. Pennsylvania Pets removed the animal from campus.

March 17, 2001

INFORMATION—Public Safety responded to Phi Gamma Delta for an escort request. The individual was unauthorized to be on campus and was escorted off campus.

INFORMATION / BROKEN

WINDOW—Public Safety responded to Davis Gym for the report of a broken window. No witnesses or suspects could be located in a search of the area.

INFORMATION—A student's parent complained to a Public Safety reference to the phone outage. The complaint was forwarded to the Telephone Office.

March 18, 2001

INFORMATION / MEDICAL TRANSPORT—Public Safety transported a student to Evangelical Community Hospital Emergency room for treatment of an eye infection. The individual was later returned to campus.

POSSIBLE ACT 64 / UNFOUNDED—Public Safety responded to the New Residence Hall for the report of the odor of marijuana. Nothing was located in a plain view search of the unoccupied room and the report was determined to be unfounded.

March 19, 2001

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF—A female University employee reported to Public Safety that unknown person(s) had scratched her vehicle while it was parked in the lower Davis Gym Parking Lot. East Buffalo Township Police Department was notified of the criminal mischief incident.

March 20, 2001

INFORMATION—A student reported to Public Safety that he observed two males handling a pistol outside of Vedder Hall. The individual could not determine if this was a pellet gun. The area was searched, but no suspect could be located. Lewisburg Police Department was notified and advised of the incident.

INFORMATION / BROKEN

Teaching program overhauled

By LAURA DAY
News Editor

The Pennsylvania State Legislature has completely transformed the certification requirements for undergraduates seeking to become teachers. In an overhaul of the certification program, the state outlines new procedures for University students obtaining teaching certification.

As a result of the new criteria, the University is instituting a process to verify the qualifications of candidates. The new Pre Certification for Initial Preparation (Pre Cip) program was developed by Education Department Chair Margaret Kastner in response to the new law. After this year, any incoming student who wants to teach will have to apply to Pre Cip the second semester of his sophomore year.

Current juniors seeking certification should have already applied for student teaching and will not be affected by the new state law.

Current sophomores will want to examine the options carefully and individual programs may need to be re-evaluated for many of them.

Current first year students will most likely have new options in the curriculum, but the details remain uncertain. First year students can choose to finish their teaching program under current state regulations, but may prefer the new legislation. Pre Cip should be finalized for the incoming class of 2005.

Kastner urges all students who have "any thought that they might want to get certified to teach to submit to [Pre Cip] at the time of spring registration."

If students do not apply to Pre Cip during this registration, they will not be admitted at a later date unless they complete two English courses, two math courses, three semesters worth of University credits, and maintain a G.P.A. of 2.8 the first year, and 3.0 the following year.

"The ramifications of [Pre Cip] on current students are to allow them the maximum flexibility if they elect to seek certification," Kastner said. "It's a legal hoop at this point, but it will eventually be a useful advising mechanism."

Downtown concerns addressed

By RACHEL LASKOW
News Layout Editor

The Lewisburg Downtown Partnership hosted a town meeting on March 9 to solicit suggestions to improve Lewisburg. Borough Council members, Partnership members, Lewisburg residents and University students gathered at the Donald Heiter Community Center to share their ideas and express concerns.

"One intent of the meeting is for new beginnings," Tom Grbenick, program director of the Community Resource Center at SEDAC-Council of Governments and the host of the meeting, said.

According to Lewisburg resident Steven Beattie, one concern is the vacant store fronts in downtown Lewisburg.

"We have a problem with store fronts and we want to bring businesses in here. We need to identify stores that downtown needs to have and market to them," Beattie said.

According to Partnership Executive Director Linda Sterling, the Main Street approach suggests that the Partnership does marketing research before expanding.

"We need to cultivate a market and the foot traffic to support it," Sterling said.

William "Bo" Cole, Partnership Board of Directors member and Cole's Hardware owner, agrees that businesses need to be successful.

"The cost of doing business has increased over the past few years. We want businesses on Market Street to prosper, not just survive," Cole said.

"The solution for the downtown problem goes beyond the merchants and Market Street," Grbenick added.

According to Lewisburg resident Penn Garvin, the common space used to be the center of town, but now it is the Susquehanna Valley Mall. Garvin suggested that downtown does not sell staple items and that is why many people gravitate toward the mall.

"If you don't have options, what are you going to do?" Garvin said.

According to Borough Council member Barbara Krohn, downtown is unique because of its personal service that is not found at the mall.

"Certainly not all of your needs can be met downtown," Grbenick said.

One way to improve downtown is to market it with other regions, therefore encouraging cooperation among towns, according to Borough Council member Stacy Hink.

Lewisburg resident Richard McGinnis agreed with Hink and believes Lewisburg should be a regional focus. He suggested that downtown stores be open for late nights throughout the year, not just at Christmas time.

Attracting people to Lewisburg was a common goal among many of the attendees.

According to Lewisburg resident and Professor of Chemistry John Cooper, many people see the fast food restaurants on Route 15 and do not even realize that Lewisburg is there.

Grbenick discovered Lewisburg in another way.

"I saw lights that I couldn't believe. From that moment I was hooked," Grbenick said.

Although downtown businesses are an essential part of Lewisburg, living in town is also key to improvement. The University factors into this.

"We want to work toward better communication between students who live downtown and adults who live downtown," said Bucknell Student Government Community Chair Katie Quinn-Kerins '03.

According to Cooper, living downtown is changing: Sixth and Seventh Streets are no longer acceptable places to raise a family.

According to Krohn, who lives on a street with University students, students and families have different lifestyles.

"There needs to be more understanding on everyone's part," Krohn said.

Grbenick ended the meeting on a positive note: "Nobody would say, 'I'm from East Buffalo Township.' They would say, 'I'm from Lewisburg.'"

Forum solicits complaints about Public Safety

By NATALIE CASP
News Editor

Discrepancies in policy, concern for student safety and frustration with Public Safety motivated Bucknell Student Government (BSG) to host an open forum, allowing students to relay detailed accounts of unsatisfactory encounters with the Department of Public Safety and its officers. Slow response to emergencies, inconsistent citation of parking violations, unprofessional approaches to situations and basic disorganization within the department topped the list of student complaints during the meeting on March 8.

The intent of the meeting, which was organized by the Student Affairs Committee of BSG, was to register complaints with BSG so that student representatives could meet with Public Safety officials and communicate the students' concern with the office. Furthermore, BSG hopes to collaborate with Public Safety in producing a handbook that would ideally alleviate common misconceptions in Public Safety protocol.

"To improve the relationship with Public Safety for the students' benefit, we have to hear from students what their actual complaints are," Congress Member Andy Findlay '03 said.

Findlay, a member of the student affairs committee, recognizes the unhealthy relationship between students and Public Safety.

"There are two aspects—how the officers react to the students and how the students react to the officers—but right now we're focusing on the students' complaints," Findlay said.

Though few in number, the students who attended the meeting were asked to write down specific complaints that they have with the office. Afterwards, Findlay compiled the grievances into one anonymous document to submit to Public Safety.

"I was one of the first students to see/respond to the student that had a seizure and had fallen in Coleman Hall. Another student called Public Safety, told them what had happened, and asked them to call an ambulance. Several minutes later, a Public Safety officer 'strolled in,' asked what happened, and when I asked if an ambulance had been called for, he said 'Uh, no.' When I heard him talk into his walkie-talkie, I heard him say, 'I guess I need an ambulance to Coleman, someone has fallen.' The student was in dire need of medical attention—he was gushing blood, choking, still seizing, had hit his head, etc. Basically, I was very concerned about the disorganization and lack of urgency to such an emergency," one of the students wrote.

A member from the Community Judicial Board (CJB) attended the meeting and pointed out that in some instances, Public Safety's procedures have negatively affected CJB's trial process.

"I serve on the Community Judicial Board and have heard several cases where the conduct of Public Safety has disturbed me. The Public Safety officers, serving as the aggrieved party, have many times (apparently) not complied with the regulations that they are supposed to abide by. These actions can make a huge difference in the Board's decisions which can permanently change the lives of students. From what I've heard of the policies, they seem sufficient, but the officers need to follow them or else [the policies] are useless."

Rogers served as the chair of the VPFA search committee until March 8 when he stepped down from the position.

"I had a former Direct Report from Clemson apply to the position, so I stepped down so that it wouldn't hurt his chances or any of the other candidates' chances," Rogers said. "I didn't want there to be even the hint of impropriety in the process."

According to Rogers, bringing the candidates to campus is the exciting and most important stage of the search process.

"We're moving now and no longer in a hiatus. We're bringing real live people to the campus, and we actually have people to talk to. I'm really excited. I didn't expect to be excited, but I am. We can finally put a team in place," Rogers said.

The finalists for the Vice President for Student Affairs position were announced Tuesday. The first finalist, Robert Sanborn, vice president for student services at the University of Tulsa, arrived on campus yesterday, while the remaining three are scheduled as follows: Lois Stark, vice president for student affairs and dean of students at Coe College, will be on campus April 4-5; Charles Pollock, interim vice president for student affairs at Bucknell University, will meet with officials there April 11-12; and Nadine Jenkins, vice president for student services at Sul Ross State University, is scheduled for on-campus meetings April 18-19.

Vice President for Development and University Relations (VPDUR) finalist Vincent M. Maniaci, vice president for institutional advancement at Bellarmine University, was on campus earlier this week. The other VPDUR finalists, Sally C. Holland, director of development at Williams College, and Robert J. Kallin, director of development at Bowdoin College, will be on campus March 26-27 and April 2-3 respectively.

"There's certainly a flurry of activity going on here," Rogers said.

Dean of Students Richard Ferraro attended the meeting and said one of the goals of the forum is to clear up policy discrepancies so that mistakes can be avoided. Personnel problems, Ferraro said, will also be addressed.

Some of the students at the meeting, though, said that officers sometimes carry frustration from one unpleasant incident into their other responses.

"Public Safety sees students who park illegally as the same drunken, swearing students from the night before. They treat us poorly," one student said.

Another student at the meeting noted that Public Safety is not always the party at fault in mishandled incidents; students, specifically intoxicated students, commonly overreact and use harsh language towards the officers.

Ferraro urged students to remain calm when dealing with Public Safety.

"Sometimes people panic," Ferraro said. "A small incident can get escalated out of control when students use poor judgment and overreact."

Ferraro said that the relationship between students and Public Safety will not improve until both students and officers leave past incidents behind them.

"The courtesy has to go both ways," Ferraro said. "But report it if you feel Public Safety mishandled the situation."

One of Findlay's goals is to improve the relationship between students and Public Safety.

"Right now, we're not trying to change policy, but rather, improve the relationship," Findlay said. "This is something that can be done by working with the two groups and then the appropriate officials can deal with policy problems."

Improving that relationship, according to Findlay, requires educating both the students and the officers. As outlined in the committee's proposal, the pamphlet, which should be completed in April, will consist of three sections: what Public Safety can do, what they cannot do and what a student should do if involved in a negative encounter with a Public Safety officer.

Because the pamphlet will most likely not be ready for distribution by the end of the current semester, BSG will host another forum for students that will focus on the information in the pamphlet.

According to the committee's proposal, a new program will be developed for Freshman Orientation where the pamphlet will be issued and explained by an administrator. This will educate the next class entering the University about Public Safety's role. Other presentations will be available for upper-class students, Greek and independent alike.

BSG President Nate Sorber '02 feels that these forums are necessary for educating student and gathering their input.

"The 40 people who make up BSG do not account for all of the students' opinions and experiences that occur on campus. Therefore, we're seeking students' opinions so that we can become more informed," Sorber said. "When we don't have the feedback from students, we fill in the voids with what we, BSG, think and then try to represent students. But their actual participation positively influences processes, such as the Public Safety issue at hand."

Sorber, along with Ferraro, urged students to contact BSG or the Dean's office with complaints or suggestions.

Director of Public Safety Vincent DeCecchio was invited to the first forum, but he was unable to attend.

VP finalists brought to campus

By NATALIE CASP
News Editor

Within the next few weeks, finalists for the four different vice presidential positions will visit the University for on-campus interviews, meetings and open forums. University President Steffen Rogers, who chaired the search committee for the Vice President for Finance and Administration (VPFA) position but stepped down, expects to have his administrative team selected before the end of the school year.

All three of the finalists for the Provost/Vice President for Academic Affairs (VPAA) position have visited campus; the search committee will make its recommendation to Rogers soon.

"The committee is scheduled to meet very shortly after the last candidate completes his campus visit. We'll deliberate on the candidates and the campus feedback we have received," Deborah A. Abowitz, professor of sociology and anthropology and chair of the search committee, said earlier this semester. "We hope to be able to arrive at a set of recommendations and to share them with President Rogers fairly quickly."

According to Rogers, bringing the candidates to campus is the exciting and most important stage of the search process.

"We're moving now and no longer in a hiatus. We're bringing real live people to the campus, and we actually have people to talk to. I'm really excited. I didn't expect to be excited, but I am. We can finally put a team in place," Rogers said.

The finalists for the Vice President for Student Affairs position were announced Tuesday. The first finalist, Robert Sanborn, vice president for student services at the University of Tulsa, arrived on campus yesterday, while the remaining three are scheduled as follows: Lois Stark, vice president for student affairs and dean of students at Coe College, will be on campus April 4-5; Charles Pollock, interim vice president for student affairs at Bucknell University, will meet with officials there April 11-12; and Nadine Jenkins, vice president for student services at Sul Ross State University, is scheduled for on-campus meetings April 18-19.

Vice President for Development and University Relations (VPDUR) finalist Vincent M. Maniaci, vice president for institutional advancement at Bellarmine University, was on campus earlier this week. The other VPDUR finalists, Sally C. Holland, director of development at Williams College, and Robert J. Kallin, director of development at Bowdoin College, will be on campus March 26-27 and April 2-3 respectively.

"There's certainly a flurry of activity going on here," Rogers said.

Dean of Students Richard Ferraro attended the meeting and said one of the goals of the forum is to clear up policy discrepancies so that mistakes can be avoided. Personnel problems, Ferraro said, will also be addressed.

Some of the students at the meeting, though, said that officers sometimes carry frustration from one unpleasant incident into their other responses.

"Public Safety sees students who park illegally as the same drunken, swearing students from the night before. They treat us poorly," one student said.

Another student at the meeting noted that Public Safety is not always the party at fault in mishandled incidents; students, specifically intoxicated students, commonly overreact and use harsh language towards the officers.

Ferraro urged students to remain calm when dealing with Public Safety.

"Sometimes people panic," Ferraro said. "A small incident can get escalated out of control when students use poor judgment and overreact."

Ferraro said that the relationship between students and Public Safety will not improve until both students and officers leave past incidents behind them.

"The courtesy has to go both ways," Ferraro said. "But report it if you feel Public Safety mishandled the situation."

One of Findlay's goals is to improve the relationship between students and Public Safety.

"Right now, we're not trying to change policy, but rather, improve the relationship," Findlay said. "This is something that can be done by working with the two groups and then the appropriate officials can deal with policy problems."

Improving that relationship, according to Findlay, requires educating both the students and the officers. As outlined in the committee's proposal, the pamphlet, which should be completed in April, will consist of three sections: what Public Safety can do, what they cannot do and what a student should do if involved in a negative encounter with a Public Safety officer.

Because the pamphlet will most likely not be ready for distribution by the end of the current semester, BSG will host another forum for students that will focus on the information in the pamphlet.

World Briefs

USDA seizes possibly diseased sheep in Vermont

GREENSBORO, Vt.—Federal agents in Vermont on Wednesday seized one of two flocks of sheep that may have been exposed to transmissible spongiform encephalopathy, a class of illness that includes "mad cow" disease.

No case of mad cow disease has ever been found in sheep, but the U.S. government was taking no chances.

Agents removed 233 sheep from the Greensboro, Vt. farm of Houghton Freeman. A separate flock of about 126 sheep, related to Freeman's animals but owned by Linda and Larry Failace of East Warren, is also slated for seizure.

Macedonia rebels declare ceasefire

SKOPJE, Macedonia—Ethnic Albanians rebels have declared a ceasefire in its border battle with Macedonian forces.

The ceasefire was called by the rebel National Liberation Army that has been fighting government troops from positions in the hills above Tetovo.

A rebel commander read a statement in Pristina, Kosovo saying: "We have always been for dialogue not for war. We declare a unilateral ceasefire to open the road to dialogue. There is no time limit."

False IDs fool gun background checks

WASHINGTON (CNN)—A government report released Wednesday indicates that the nation's system of instant background checks for firearms purchasers stumbles when potential buyers use false identification.

The General Accounting Office sent undercover agents with false IDs to gun dealers in five states.

The undercover operation, requested by Rep. Henry Waxman, D-California, found that investigators equipped with false IDs were able to purchase firearms in every instance.

Foot-and-mouth reaches Netherlands

THE HAGUE, Netherlands—Foot-and-mouth disease has been confirmed in the Netherlands, the country's agriculture ministry has said.

A spokesman told CNN the livestock disease has been confirmed on a farm in the east of the country and was so strongly suspected on another nearby site that it was being treated as a second confirmed outbreak.

The Netherlands is the second country in mainland Europe to be infected with the highly contagious disease, which swept through the UK since it was first identified last month.

Mitchell panel tours Gaza

KARNI CROSSING, Gaza—A U.S.-led fact-finding panel resumed its inquiry into Israeli-Palestinian violence on Wednesday with a tour of Gaza and interviews with key leaders from both sides.

The panel, headed by former U.S. Sen. George Mitchell, had been delayed by Israeli elections that saw Ariel Sharon oust Ehud Barak as prime minister.

U.S. names North Korea No. 1 Asian enemy

SEOUL, South Korea—The United States has stepped up its war of words with North Korea, labeling the communist country its worst enemy in Asia.

"I define North Korea the number one enemy state when I look across my area of responsibility," said U.S. Pacific Forces commander Adm. Dennis Blair.

U.S. President George W. Bush did not hide his skepticism toward North Korea during talks with South Korean President Kim Dae-jung earlier this month.

He stressed the North's arms exports to Iraq, Iran, Pakistan and Syria and its suspected build-up of long-range missiles.

Skull may redefine human ancestry

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP)—A 3.5 million-year-old skull has been found in Kenya, and scientists say it might evict the Ethiopian fossil nicknamed "Lucy" from the line of direct human ancestry.

The skull dates back to about the same time as Lucy, whose bones represent the species Australopithecus afarensis.

But the scientists say the skull belongs to a completely different and previous unknown creature, which they named Kenyanthropus platyops.

Mori returns to political headaches

TOKYO, Japan—Japanese Prime Minister Yoshiro Mori's return from the U.S. takes place amid speculation about his replacement and more bad news regarding the economy.

Mori, who made a brief stop in Hawaii following a summit in Washington with U.S. President George W. Bush, agreed to presidential elections within his own party that could pave the way for his departure as early as next month.

But confusion persists over when he will actually exit the political stage as well as over who will take his place.

Milosevic: Yugoslavia under threat

LONDON, England—Ousted Yugoslav President Slobodan Milosevic says violence by ethnic Albanian rebels in Macedonia could spread.

Milosevic told an Israeli newspaper that rebels in Macedonia threatened the unity of what remained of the Yugoslav federation—the republics of Serbia and Montenegro.

Compiled by Laura Day,
courtesy of cnn.com

Butler wins social justice award

By RYAN DELAHANTY
Staff Writer

Janice Butler, Director of the Women's Resource Center and co-director of the Bucknell Brigade in Nicaragua, has recently been honored as this year's recipient of the Virginia Travis Lectureship Award in Social Justice.

"I am very honored and humbled by this recognition," Butler said. "I feel very lucky to be able to work for social change, knowing that I have the support of wonderful colleagues."

Tom Travis, professor of International Relations and for whose family the award is named, added in a campus-wide e-mail.

"Janice is richly deserving of this award. She has long been a dedicated, compassionate, magnanimous and active supporter of social justice in the campus, Lewisburg, central Susquehanna, and global communities."

Admittedly, things have not always been easy for Butler.

"There have been some challenging times during my 12 years at Bucknell, but it is gratifying to see progress along the way," Butler said. "Knowing sexual assault survivors can count on receiving the advocacy they need seeing students challenge their assumptions about race and gender, being an ally for the gay and lesbian community, working side by side with poor people in Nueva Vida as part of the Bucknell Brigade, or helping students staff and community folks build bridges of understanding—these are the kinds of things that help me keep doing the work I do. Social justice work is really collective work."

Travis notes, "She has been an avid advocate and supporter of rights for women, victims of domestic violence, gay, lesbian, and transgendered persons, and disadvantaged impoverished people in the developing world. Her activities have helped many people meet their basic needs and live lives of greater dignity and self-esteem."

Butler will be presenting a lecture on social justice April 12th. A reception will be held after the program in her honor.

Kappa Sig sanctioned, plans reform

By KRISTA REISDOERF
A&E Editor

The Community Judicial Board enforced sanctions on the Alpha Phi Chapter of Kappa Sigma Fraternity on Feb. 27, when the board charged the organization with disorderly conduct.

"The problem with a dry campus is that people who are 21 would be prohibited from drinking, and they shouldn't have to be treated in that fashion," Ferraro said. "The law is important, but the driving force is student safety and drinking in moderation."

Ferraro also stressed the need for more effective alcohol programs that compel students to think about their actions.

"We need to have really good programs that would give the students a critical view of alcohol abuse," Ferraro said. "Many students think of stereotypes when they think of alcohol... like John Belushi in 'Animal House.' They need to think about the legal and long-term consequences so they can do what is smart and right."

Meanwhile, Kappa Sigma is taking the opportunity for change very seriously. They are working hard to obey these sanctions, but are also seeing it as a chance to promote the unity of their organization.

"We have a new set of leadership coming in, so we're fired up and have a lot of new ideas," Laskowski said. "We're using this as a chance to re-examine what we stand for... many times it gets lost in the social aspect. The social side is good, but we also need to remember things like brotherhood, scholarship and community."

However, the Community Judicial Board has given the fraternity the opportunity to make changes, especially since the brothers accepted responsibility for their actions.

Formal balls have long been a part of the history of the University, but fell out of popularity in the last decade. In an effort to bring back a school-wide formal, Chrysalis was re-born. In its first year, 1,300 students, faculty, alumni and staff attended the night of elegance in the fieldhouse with music by the Chery Poppin' Daddies.

Last year's Chrysalis was another hit with Standing Room Only playing the music of the last decade in a countdown to the new millennium. After two years of success, the University will bring in the popular KC and the Sunshine Band.

The band, which was formed in 1973, has sold well over 75 million albums, won three Grammy awards and an American Music Award. Their songs are instantly recognizable due to their appearance in several commercials, movies and television shows. Among their hits are "Boogie Shoes," "Get Down Tonight," "That's the Way (I Like It)" and "Rock Your Baby."

JOB

From page A1.

specifically targets," Chief Human Resource Officer for GE Supply Ron Villani '08, said. "Typically our executive schools are close in proximity because it is easier to build and gain relationships. Lewisburg is in the middle of nowhere." Villani is also the University Executive for GE.

"Internships are very important. They give students and employers a chance to evaluate each other," Villani said.

In order to keep a company coming back, strengthening the relationship between the school and the employer plays a large role.

"At our executive schools, like Bucknell, we have a commitment to participate in other things like guest lecturers and to be on campus more than just for our recruiting interviews," Villani said. "We are still committed to campus recruiting. It is important to be visible."

Companies play a "numbers game" by examining the retention rate of returning employees.

"Research suggests that 50 percent of last year's class is looking for their second job," Denbow said. "Today's organizations want to be more cost effective. By losing employees, companies lose money in two ways: recruiting efforts and training new hires."

GE is one of the most popular employers of Bucknell seniors; 13 students in the class of 2000 and nine students in the class of 1999 secured their employment with GE.

Corporations look for students with experience, specifically internships.

"Most importantly, employers want to see evidence of an applicant's experience. Companies now see internships as a bridge between college and the job-market," Denbow said. "Internships are almost more important than full-time work."

Companies want to visit campuses with a history of high employment retention rates because each visit costs time and money and pulls current employees away from their jobs.

"Organizations look at which schools their better hires came from; and many of those that stay a substantial amount of time (three to five years) were interns," Villani said.

Each year the CDC distributes a post graduate survey. Of those who responded from the class of 2000, 19 percent of students secured employment through on-campus interviews, compared with 21 percent of the class of 1999.

"I don't expect [the on-campus interview statistic] to increase, however using Internet/on-line listing and job fairs to gain employment (which received 16 percent and 1 percent of the 2000 class, respectively) will probably rise in the coming years," Denbow said.

Companies view schools in a particular geographic location as a sign where students want to live in the future. Because the University is situated away from city life, the CDC must think creatively about how to bring students and employers together.

"There is nothing to be alarmed about. [GE's generalization] has given us an opportunity to be proactive and respond," Denbow said. "We have noticed the career industry changes over the past couple years."

The CDC looks to technology as the future of communicating with companies. With the e-recruiting system established last year, companies can collect resumes online and start the hiring process without visiting campus.

"GE and many companies use the Internet as a vehicle to communicate with students, get resumes, and begin job interviews," Villani said.

In addition to job fairs this year in Boston, New York, Philadelphia and Washington DC, the CDC is also planning more off-campus trips next year to cover a wide array of industries.

Denbow offers a simple solution. "If students are not in the company's backyard, then we will bring the students to the company," she said.

Niladri Mukhopadhyay '01 used the New York Finance Fair held last September to secure his job with Morgan Stanley Dean Witter (MSDW).

"Morgan Stanley Dean Witter doesn't come to Bucknell," Mukhopadhyay said.

However, MSDW was at the Finance Fair.

"I used e-recruiting to submit my resume," he said. An alumni contact then responded to Mukhopadhyay's inquiry.

Although the Internet makes posting resumes easy, connecting with an employer is still important.

"You can e-mail resumes, but you have to remember that thousands of others are doing the same thing. I got to talk to [my contact person] face-to-face at the fair and that makes all the difference," Mukhopadhyay said. "My contact person remembered me and helped prepare me for the interviews."

Recent mergers have also affected the recruiting game.

"When companies merge, there are fewer organizations. If a school had a relationship with one of the merged companies, that association can significantly change as companies rethink recruiting efforts."

"Sometimes our relationships with companies change as the companies take time to adjust to their merger before thinking about recruiting," Denbow said.

However, even merged companies still for interns.

"Companies won't stop recruiting; they still need young talent. Most merged companies do not cut down on interns," Denbow said.

Compared to previous years, Denbow estimates that there will be heightened activity from businesses in the early fall.

"In the job market there will probably be peaks in the fall when students return to campus as well as in the spring, after a company assesses its budget," Denbow said. "By having companies come in the fall to recruit both interns and those seeking full-time employment, it's a one-stop-shop."

Next year the CDC plans to offer internship recruiting beginning in early fall instead of after winter break. Consequently, companies which typically make campus visits in the fall can interview prospective interns as well.

"By starting recruiting efforts earlier, companies get exposed to Bucknell students before other schools," Mukhopadhyay said.

The CDC is also putting more emphasis on maintaining strong relations with the company.

"In the past we were concerned with focusing on the opportunity with the company, not the company," Denbow said. "Now we look to deepen our relations with the company."

So far, the CDC's efforts have succeeded.

"Because GE has a strong relationship with Bucknell, we continue to do there, even if it is a little out of the way," Villani said.

LC

From page A1

"It's excellent that we're getting it out, but the main objective is to modernize Bostwick," he said. "We're primarily trying to make it an updated and more functional space. The recently purchased tables and chairs were part of this project as well. Those same tables and chairs will be utilized after the renovation is complete."

The cafeteria will close during spring break 2002 and remain closed until the end of the summer.

"[Where students will eat is] one of the things we're still working out-Larison, Uptown, the Terrace room and other spaces within the LC are all options that are being discussed, but nothing has been decided at this point. The kitchen is currently planned to remain open and in its same location," Lippencott said.

Though the kitchen will remain open, students are reassured that the area will not be exposed during the asbestos abatement. Lippencott hopes that construction won't impact students in other parts of the LC next year.

"A lot depends on how the logistics work out; we may have to look at temporary routes for waste removal, supplies and construction equipment," Lippencott said. "The impact next year will mostly be to students dining locations."

Currently, Dining Services transports food from the kitchen to satellite locations on campus, including the Seventh Street Cafe, Marts Hall and the Physical Plant Cafe.

The renovation schedule for next year has not been finalized, but this semester's ground floor work will help Physical Plant plan for the renovations in Bostwick.

"We're going to take another look at the schedule available now that we've got some experience with the ground floor, we more accurately know what the first floor asbestos work will require for time and money, so we consequently know better what we should have remaining for other phases of the project," Lippencott said.

Planning for this project, Lippencott said, has been complicated.

"We consider cost, scope and quality as the primary factors in managing a project like this one. The cost of everything we'd like to do in the facility exceeds what's funded, we have schedule that's shorter than what we'd like, but we also don't want to sacrifice quality-each is opposed to the other factors. That's what makes this business fun," Lippencott said.

Shortly after the LC Mall reopens, work on the mallroom will begin, according to Lippencott. During the summer, the mallroom will be temporarily located in the ground floor of Hunt Hall and will only affect summer students. The Bookstore will reopen in the LC at the end of July or the beginning of August. Bostwick will reopen in Fall 2002 after closing for renovations in March 2002.

PL

From page A1

to vote for the extension with Bucknell, Lafayette and Colgate opposing.

"[The vote] included a reaffirmation that the core principle that athletes should be representative of the student body as a whole would be upheld," Pollock said.

The Patriot League currently utilizes an Academic Index (AI)—based on grade point averages (GPA) and standardized test scores—to set minimum academic standards for individual student-athletes and teams in basketball and football. The Index takes into account the scores of each school's past four entering classes (which constitutes its current student population) in determining how far a team's average can deviate from the rest of the student body. Currently, a team can only fall one standard deviation below the all-student norm to comply with League policy.

While this requirement has not led to many problems in the past, Pollock feels that, "Right now, there are no teeth in the policy."

The vote requires each member institution to use its own discretion in determining the extent to which its policies will be augmented.

The conference's Policy Committee has been charged with finding new means of enforcing the academic standards of the league, particularly with regard to student-athletes receiving merit-based aid. Pollock is hopeful that the committee will complete its work and announce its plans shortly.

Patriot League Executive Director Carolyn Schlie Femovich sees the benefits in the new policy: "Without a doubt, offering athletic scholarships above need can be an added competitive advantage for a program," she said. "However, those institutions who choose to award athletic scholarships in basketball or other sports may actually enhance their opportunity to attract outstanding students who are also athletically gifted."

While some may view the vote as being dramatically altering the Patriot League's principles, Pollock believes that this change has been progressive, having begun years ago with the allowance of permissive aid for basketball players in 1998 and non-league sports, and with the admittance of American University and the grandfathering of its scholarship program within the last year.

"This was treated very much as a codification, a formalizing of an evolutionary process within the League," he said.

Pollock said the University will not fully address the vote's results until the next round of long-range planning that includes the Board of Trustees. He emphasized that athletic merit aid will not be considered except in the context of other forms of merit aid, including notably academic merit aid. He did say, however, that the Committee on Admissions and Financial Aid has begun examining the issue.

"The prevailing assumption is that not a great deal of change will take place soon throughout the league's broad landscape. Certainly no change will occur here any time soon," Pollock said.

Femovich agreed: "Although League financial aid policies for will become more permissive, we expect that there will be minimal, if any change in institutional practices regarding the awarding of aid to athletes in the near future."

While noting that the schools expected to vote for the extension have already acted—Lehigh and Holy Cross began offering merit-based aid to basketball players in 1998 and Lafayette has offered academic scholarships for years—Pollock expects that member institutions will move "very cautiously" in re-examining their policies.

Next Issue:

Men's lax vs. Lafayette

Baseball vs. Slippery Rock

Softball vs. Columbia

Men's tennis vs. St. Francis

Women's water polo vs. Villanova

THE BUCKNELLIAN Sports

Bison hungry for League crown

Return of ten starters and seven All-League players has baseball poised for success

By ANDREW BEVAN
Senior Writer

Russ Lindberg '01 (#29) tells a Bison teammate that he's in standing up.

The days are getting longer and warmer and what else could that mean but that spring is here and that America's pastime is ready to get back into full swing.

The Bucknell baseball team returns starters in all but one position, including seven players who made all-league honors last season. In his 20th season Head Coach Gene Depew looks to take the team to its sixth straight appearance in the Patriot League Championship after being upset last year by Army in the final game of the tournament.

"What happened was an extremely disappointing end to last year's season," Depew said. "There is no doubt that this team's goal is to avenge the loss and be competitive in the league."

The captains for this year's squad are senior catcher Brad Gething and senior shortstop Chris Herron. Gething earned second team all-league honors in the Patriot League last season as the Bison's designated hitter and he will alternate in that role this year with the other catcher on the team, fellow senior Patrick Cant.

Herron will switch positions this year, moving over to second base to fill the void left by the graduation of former three-time all-leaguer Tyler Prout.

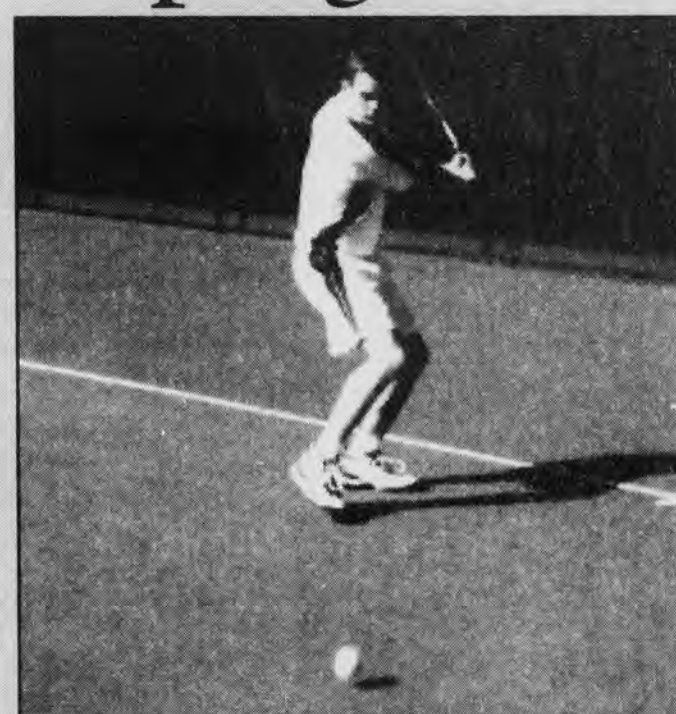

Two-time all-league selection John Dibonaventura '01 returns at third for the Orange and Blue and will lead off for Bucknell for the third year in a row. Kevin Eiben '01 is back in left field after a great season on the gridiron and senior Mike emerged as the frontrunner for the position and will likely see the majority of time at that position for the Bison.

Rounding out the infield at first base is veteran Russ Lindberg '01 in his third year as the starter.

The outfield is anchored by senior and returning all-league first-teamer Ian Joseph. Joseph led the conference in both runs scored (53) and stolen bases (27) last year and will lead off for Bucknell for the third year in a row. Kevin Eiben '01 is back in left field after a great season on the gridiron and senior Mike

Bison swing into spring 3-1

Alex Davydov '02 is playing in the #1 position for Bucknell.

By SCOTT KLOSS
Staff Writer

Bucknell men's tennis team kicked off its spring season with a 2-1 showing at the Spring Break Tennis Tournament in Hilton Head Island, S.C.

The Bison improved their record to 3-1 with a convincing 6-1 win at home against Franklin and Marshall Monday.

The Bison's opened the season with a victory over LaSalle, 7-0, at Hilton Head. In singles play, co-captains Hayes Hoppie '01 and Alex Davydov '02 each recorded wins, along with Todd Jacobs '03, Scott Allen '02 and Jeff Gould '01. Rounding out the matches was a decisive win by Allen and Lee Scarborough '01 in doubles play.

On Weds., March 14th the Bison were back at it again, this time facing Quinnipiac. In an exciting victory that came down to the final match between Scarborough and his opponent, Bucknell showed it has the determination to succeed. Scarborough turned up his game and defeated his opponent for the victory, finishing off a 4-3 overall win.

"Lee Scarborough playing at #6 won a tough match while both teams were watching. He was under a lot of pressure and came through to clinch the victory," Head Coach Bob Hammerle said.

Stepping up is one thing the men's tennis team will have to keep doing with an injury-riddled lineup and tough competition.

"We started off as expected against LaSalle, then finished well against Quinnipiac," Davydov said. "Lee [Scarborough] was his opponent to the ground. We lost to Belmont, but we gained experience which will help us in the long run."

Last Monday against Franklin and Marshall, the Bison turned in another bright performance with a 6-1 victory. The Bison got the match started by winning all three doubles matches to claim the doubles points.

Gould and Jacobs, Allen and Scarborough and Davydov and Mike Rinaldi '03 all recorded wins in doubles action, while in singles action the Bison won at the second through sixth rankings, with only Davydov falling short to a very-slick opponent.

Bucknell improves to 3-1 overall and will host St. Francis this Saturday at 1:00 p.m.

Russ Lindberg '01 (#29) tells a Bison teammate that he's in standing up.

The days are getting longer and warmer and what else could that mean but that spring is here and that America's pastime is ready to get back into full swing.

The Bucknell baseball team returns starters in all but one position, including seven players who made all-league honors last season. In his 20th season Head Coach Gene Depew looks to take the team to its sixth straight appearance in the Patriot League Championship after being upset last year by Army in the final game of the tournament.

"What happened was an extremely disappointing end to last year's season," Depew said. "There is no doubt that this team's goal is to avenge the loss and be competitive in the league."

The captains for this year's squad are senior catcher Brad Gething and senior shortstop Chris Herron. Gething earned second team all-league honors in the Patriot League last season as the Bison's designated hitter and he will alternate in that role this year with the other catcher on the team, fellow senior Patrick Cant.

Herron will switch positions this year, moving over to second base to fill the void left by the graduation of former three-time all-leaguer Tyler Prout.

Two-time all-league selection John Dibonaventura '01 returns at third for the Orange and Blue and will lead off for Bucknell for the third year in a row. Kevin Eiben '01 is back in left field after a great season on the gridiron and senior Mike emerged as the frontrunner for the position and will likely see the majority of time at that position for the Bison.

Rounding out the infield at first base is veteran Russ Lindberg '01 in his third year as the starter.

The outfield is anchored by senior and returning all-league first-teamer Ian Joseph. Joseph led the conference in both runs scored (53) and stolen bases (27) last year and will lead off for Bucknell for the third year in a row. Kevin Eiben '01 is back in left field after a great season on the gridiron and senior Mike emerged as the frontrunner for the position and will likely see the majority of time at that position for the Bison.

Rounding out the infield at first base is veteran Russ Lindberg '01 in his third year as the starter.

The outfield is anchored by senior and returning all-league first-teamer Ian Joseph. Joseph led the conference in both runs scored (53) and stolen bases (27) last year and will lead off for Bucknell for the third year in a row. Kevin Eiben '01 is back in left field after a great season on the gridiron and senior Mike

Gould and Jacobs, Allen and Scarborough and Davydov and Mike Rinaldi '03 all recorded wins in doubles action, while in singles action the Bison won at the second through sixth rankings, with only Davydov falling short to a very-slick opponent.

Bucknell improves to 3-1 overall and will host St. Francis this Saturday at 1:00 p.m.

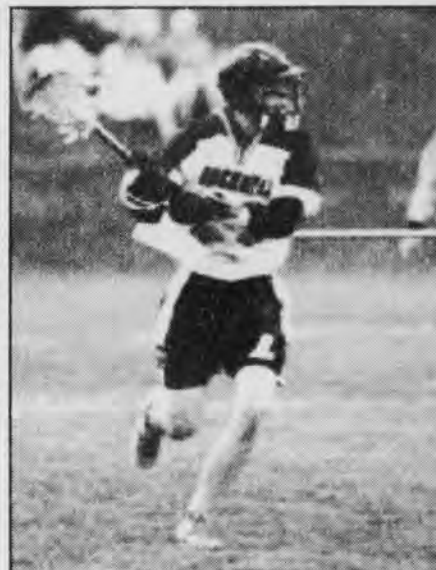

Team of the Week:

The men's lacrosse team, who opened up Patriot League play 2-0 after an important 11-10 victory over perennial League contender Army.

Athlete of the Week:

Dennis Geraghty '03

By DAVE TOMAINO
Staff Writer

Courtesy of Athletics Communication
Attacker Dennis Geraghty '03.

It is March and madness is upon us. In a month headlined by college hoops, office pools and questions such as, "Where is Hampton and how did they win?" the question that should be asked is, "Who is Dennis Geraghty '03 and how do you stop him and the rest of Bucknell lacrosse team?"

Head Coach Sid Jamieson had found some input on Geraghty.

"He has great size and excellent finishing skills, and always seems to find the open space in the defense."

This is evident as Geraghty has a team high 13 goals this season, already tripling his goal output from his rookie campaign. Geraghty burst onto the college scene with three goals last season against Army. It was deju vu plus two this past Saturday, as Geraghty found the net five times for the Orange and Blue, as the 15th ranked Bison edged the Black Knights, 11-10.

Jamieson points out that a solid team effort is notching the goals for this colossal attacker. "His teammates are drawing the focus away from Dennis," Jamieson said. "Double-teams elsewhere are springing him free, and he is taking advantage by finishing his shots well," Jamieson said.

Witnessing the finishing skills of Geraghty has been as riveting as watching a Bobby Knight press conference minus the chair toss. "Dennis is just reaching his potential and we are very pleased with his progress," Jamieson said.

It could get ugly for Bison foes in the months to come.

Geraghty tallied five goals to help the Bison move to 2-0 in Patriot League play. "We were able to put things together on offense," Geraghty said. "I was getting open and people were hitting me with nice assists."

Winning the Patriot League—which would put them into the NCAA tournament—is a primary goal for the Bison this season. The League is strong this year, and one loss could ruin any chances of that happening. "We're going to play better teams," Kelly said. "We're going to need to get if we want to win the bigger games."

Bucknell will face Lafayette next, another important League game. The squad is confident that if they play consistently, that they will be able to accomplish their goals this season. "We need a consistent high level of play with no peaks and valleys," coach Jamieson said. "We have to go out to play our best every time."

"Stanford is a very good team. We stepped up and were playing awesome as the game ended," said Raffaele. Bucknell suffered its third consecutive loss against Berkley in close game. They led in the first half and went into the second half on top, 9-5.

The second half posed a challenge for the Orange and Blue as they were unable to score a goal until the final minutes of play sending the contest into overtime where Berkley was able to finish them off, 12-11.

Again Raffaele had an outstanding performance with six goals. Holiday managed to add two goals, and Amy Hasler added her second goal of the season.

On the defensive end, Nicole Kallis '03 held strong in the net as goalie, saving 17 shots.

In their final California game, the Bison found themselves yes still searching for that elusive first victory, their opponent this time St. Mary's. Although Coach Jordan didn't think it was their best performance, they came out ahead in the end for their first win of the season. "I didn't think we played the season. Stanford won the game 15-10."

See LAX, page A8

Susquehanna Valley Limousine Inc.

With a long tradition of quality service to the Bucknell Community, SVL offers:

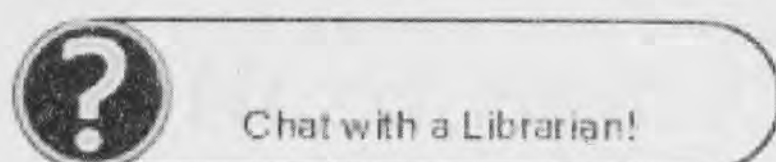

- Service to and from destination door to door
- Schedule your own hours to and from airports or hotels
- Hourly charter network by up/down on cost
- Most available vehicles van, four car, and limousine line
- Service 24 hours a day 7 days a week

For more information or to make reservations call:

1.800.685.5567

Real time reference is here!!

Get answers to research questions by chatting online with the reference desk.

Available whenever the library is open http://www.isr.bucknell.edu/rchat

You Can't BEAT the BONGO!

Bongo Bongo Dip!

A Subbly Hot, Cheesy Blend of Spinach, Sour Cream, Water, Cheddar, Herbs & Cheddar. Cheesy, Sauced with Tomato Sauce. Great for Dipping. ENOUGH TO SHARE!

$5.95

11 North Market Street
HILLMAN
374-3841

ONLY AT
B

221 North Street
DANVILLE
275-5110

Come Party at the:

ARIZONA CAFE

Outdoor Patio and Fireside Dining

Quesadillas
Chicken Soft Tacos
Monster Burritos

Enchiladas
Seafood
Steaks

Most Meals $9 - $13 No Charge Cards (Checks Accepted)

Bring in this Coupon for
1 FREE
virgin margarita
with each entree
purchased

From Bucknell:
Take Market St (Rt 45)
Cross bridge and stay
straight until ends.
Turn Right.
Exactly 4.0 mi on Left.

Open Tues-Thurs 11:30-9, Fri & Sat 11:30-10, Sun 11:30-8
Reservations Recommended

ATTENTION ALL FIRST YEAR STUDENTS

Do you want a chance to learn more about the Greek system by hanging out with fraternity and sorority members?

Participate in Greek Week during the week of March 26th and watch fraternities and sororities compete in fun and ridiculous events to come out on top as the winner of Greek Week.

Houseparty wristbands for first year students will be distributed during the last event of Greek Week held in the field house on Thursday, March 29th. These wristbands are necessary to participate in Houseparty events.

So, come out and have fun!
HOPE TO SEE YOU ALL THERE!

Discover Great Food Made Fresh

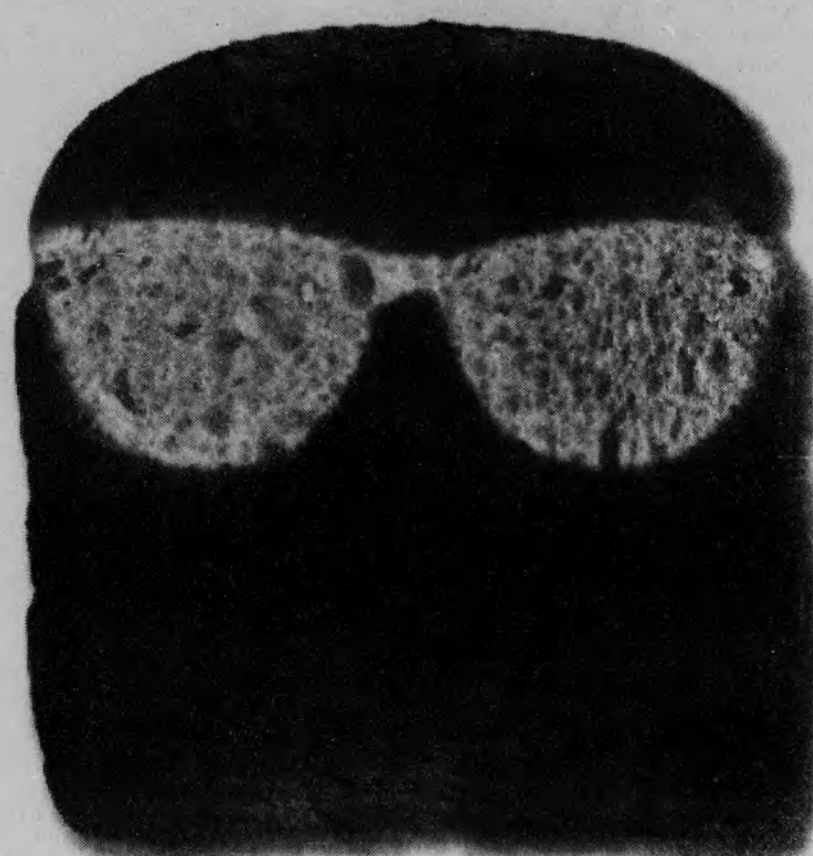

Buffalo Bill's

ALL ITEMS ARE AVAILABLE FOR TAKE OUT

- Burritos • Tacos • Fajitas • Enchiladas • Quesadillas • Big Burgers • Large Salads • Wings • Large Grating Menu • 5 Pool tables • Game Room • Friendly Atmosphere • Students Love Us! • Largest Selection Of Vegetarian Foods In Town

THE SLUTRANE
Bucknell's Best Band
Playing At Buffalo Bill's
APRIL 18TH

552-8200 • 654 RT 18 • LEWISBURG

Because everyday
is the perfect
occasion for casual fine
dining at...

The Victorian Lady

115 Old Turnpike Road
Lewisburg, PA 17837
Lunch: Mon.-Fri. 11:00-2:00
Dinner: Thurs.-Sat. 5:00-9:00
Phone: (570) 523-8090
www.victorianladyrestaurant.com

5 minutes from campus

travel free

>free of hassles
>free of rip offs
>free for you with 10 friends!

...Get 10 friends to go and you'll go free!

European Discovery
from $975
14 days including Amsterdam, Paris, and Rome

Council Travel
www.counciltravel.com
1-800-2COUNCIL

Experience Council with a group of friends booked on the same trip at the same time and the 11th person travels free or everyone in your group gets 10% off. Prices are valid only and do not include taxes.

Just one sunburn can more than double your risk of skin cancer. So if you're going to be outside, be sun smart. Wear SPF 15 sunscreen and reapply often. For more information call 1-877-PA-HEALTH or visit our website at www.health.state.pa.us.

WE'RE THERE. For Your Health. For Your Community.

you know that little voice
inside that says "I can't"?
this summer,
[crush it].

Bring your "can-do" attitude to Camp Challenge. Where you'll get paid to learn how to become a leader and acquire skills that'll help you meet the challenges you'll face in your career. Apply today at the Army ROTC department, with no obligation. Before that voice tells you to take a vacation.

ARMY ROTC Unlike any other college course you can take.

Bison Scoreboard

SOFTBALL		WOMAN'S LAX		WOMEN'S TENNIS		Baseball		WATER POLO
Bucknell	000 010 00	R H E	Bucknell	9	Bucknell	6	Bucknell	303 300 12	R H E
Marist	010 000 00	1 2 3	Ohio	8	LaSalle	1	Navy	034 101 00	12 14 1
		1 4 1						9 14 3
AB R H RBI BB K		Individual Scoring		Singles		AB R H RBI BB K		Individual Scoring
Dugan	4 0 0 0 0 0	Goals: Evans 4, Raffaele 2, Montefusco 1, Holiday 1, Evans 1		1. Donahue (LS) def. Wurzburg		Joseph	5 1 2 1 1 0	Goals: Rea 3, Schober 2, Hofstetter 1, McLaughlin 4, Cull 1, Stahler 1, Rea 3, Webber 1, Ford 3, Wilmoth 3
Dohoney	3 0 0 0 0 0	Assists: Evans 1, Montefusco 3, Evans 1, Nuss 1		2. Iglis (B) def. Blissick (LS)		Fishman	1 0 0 0 0 0	Assists: McLaughlin 3, Schober 3, Hofstetter
Janowski	1 0 0 0 0 0	Saves: Richards 11		3. Berthod (B) def. Rafter (LS)		Eiben	4 1 1 1 1 1	Ejections Drawn: Stahler 2, Rea
Gill	4 0 0 0 0 0			4. Maisel (B) def. Erickson (LS)		Lindberg	3 2 3 0 1 0
Ford	2 0 0 0 1 0			5. Wurzburg (B) def. Hess (LS)		Ritz	5 2 3 4 0 0
Morgan	4 3 1 1 0 0			6. Pugno (B) def. Toner (LS)		Cann	3 0 0 0 0 1
Stackhouse	2 0 0 0 1 0			Doubles Winners		DiBonaaventura	4 3 2 4 0 0
Fitch	2 0 1 1 0 0			2. Wurzburg/Pugno		Gething	4 2 1 0 1 1
Titus	3 0 0 0 0 0			3. Maisel/Downing		Herron	4 0 1 1 0 0
Pitching:						Scheetz	4 1 1 0 0 1
Box						Pitching:
						IP H R ER BB K AB		Saves: Chesterfield 11
						McDowell 2.0 3 3 2 2 9
						Lockett 4.1 9 6 6 3 1 20
						Miller 1.2 2 0 0 1 0 7

MEN'S LAX

Bucknell (17) 11
Army 10

Scoring Quarter 1st 2nd 3rd 4th
BU 1 7 1 2
UNC 3 3 0 4

Individual Scoring

Goals: Sanders 2, Geraghty 5, Hogue 1, Copelan 1, Loesch 1, Lane 1

Assists: Sanders 1, Copelan 1, Cutillo 1, Cheng 1, Juels 1

Saves: Sussman 14

MEN'S TENNIS

Bucknell 6
Franklin & Marshall 1

Singles

1. Abdul-Misih(FM) def. Davydov
2. Gould (B) def. Emkey (FM)
3. Allen (B) def. Patniak (FM)
4. Jacobs (B) def. Kumar (FM)
5. Scarborough (B) def. Thornhill
6. Rinaldi (B) def. Glencorse (FM)

Doubles Winners

1. Goulds/Jacobs
2. Allen/Scarborough
3. Davydov/Rinaldi

Meet the man behind the stats! Join the Bucknellian Sports Staff!

First Impressions Salon

Enjoy our weekly and monthly specials!

Tanning and Nail Services

1716 West Market Street, Lewisburg, PA 17837
Phone: 522-9636

Call Today for Your Appointment. Cash and Checks Only.

Second Thoughts?

- Having second thoughts if medical school or graduate school is right for you at this moment?
 - Have you considered working at a top pharmaceutical company for a few years before heading back to school?
 - Work on process research for biologicals such as HIV vaccines, vectors for gene therapy and biocatalytic systems.
- See your research make a real impact in the world!

Breakthrough medicines. Treatments that offer a new lease on life. At Merck, improving patient health isn't just what we do. It's who we are, sharing a passion for life that brings out the best in a diverse workforce of 60,000 people. That's why Merck enjoys over $32 billion in annual sales as one of America's largest pharmaceutical companies, while being honored by Fortune as one of "The 100 Best Companies To Work For in America."

We are looking for BS/MS biologists, biochemists, chemical engineers, biochemical engineers and biomedical engineers for our site at West Point, PA (25 miles north of Philadelphia).

If you have an outstanding academic record (GPA of 3.4/4.0 or higher) and have biologically oriented research experience, then mail your resume to: Recruiting 2001, WP17-201, P.O. Box 4, West Point, PA 19486, or e-mail to: bioprocess_research@merck.com

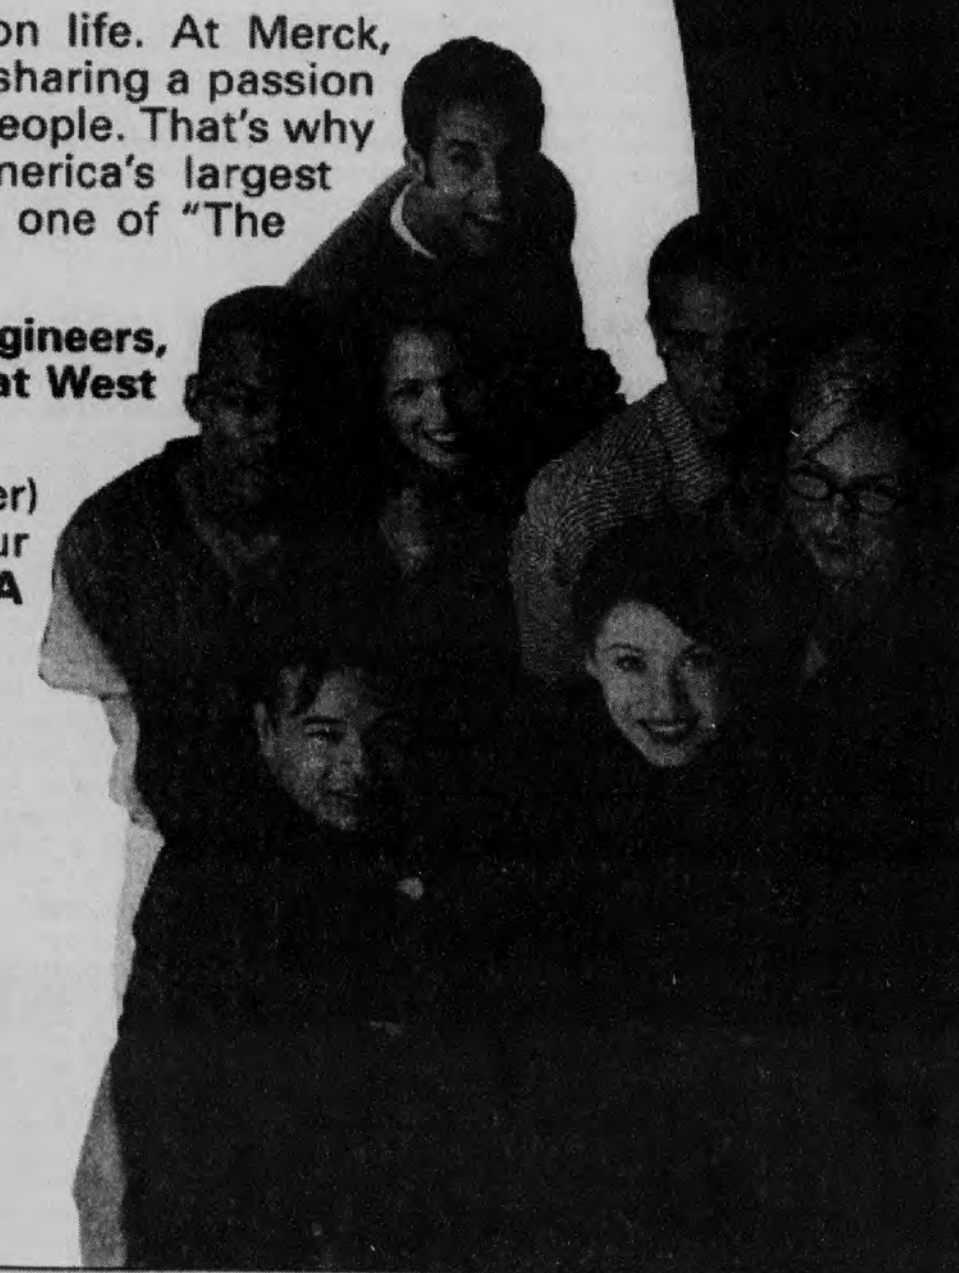

We are an Equal Opportunity Employer, M/F/D/V.

COMMITTED TO BRINGING OUT THE BEST IN MEDICINE
www.merck.com

It's what we do.
It's who we are.

At Merck, our first priority is improving the quality of life for people around the world. People who use our products. People who develop them. People like you. Join us in making a world of difference.

Sports

Ian Joseph giving back to Bucknell athletics

All-Patriot League outfielder also works for athletic communications and helps organize Bucknell's intramural program

By BRIAN KLOTZ
Staff Writer

A month into his final season as a Bucknellian, baseball player Ian Joseph '01 is doing great things, in more ways than one.

While posting respectable stats on the diamond, Joseph is one of the three people in charge of organizing Bucknell's student-run intramural program and works for the sports information office, all in addition to his academic responsibilities as a civil engineer. Recent successes in being named to the Pepsi-Johnny's Quik classic all-tournament team during a recent tournament in Fresno, California, and raising Bucknell's all-time stolen base record to 77, point the way for an impressive season to come.

Head baseball coach Gene Depew notes that Joseph is a big contributor to the team.

"Ian puts up consistently good performances," said Depew. "He's a four year starter, his leadoff, and plays center field; he's always someone we can count on."

As far as Joseph sees it, being successful leads back to advice he received in his early years of baseball.

"A coach of mine told me once not to get to down at down times or too up at the up times," Joseph said. "I take that attitude to game and it keeps me relaxed and levelheaded."

When talking about "early years," one can look all the way back to when Joseph was six years old and playing little league.

"My mom asked me what sports I was into playing, and I ended up playing soccer, basketball, and little league baseball," remembered Joseph.

In his hometown of Novelty, Ohio, Joseph was a four-sport high school athlete. He played football, soccer, basketball, and baseball, but baseball was his high point. A four year letter winner in the sport, Joseph knew his junior year he wanted to continue in college.

"I put a lot more time into baseball than any of my other sports," he said.

Bucknell's academic and baseball reputations lured Joseph here in the fall of 1997, and he came in well prepared and with ambitious goals in mind. "The summer league I played in back at home helped me adjust because of the competitive level of play," remarked Joseph. "At the time I got here, we had two senior outfielders, and I wanted to make myself better to compete my sophomore year for a spot."

Over the course of the last three years, Joseph has improved in nearly every area of his game. In runs, hits, RBIs, and stolen bases, he has seen steady improvement, and has put himself on track for two Bucknell all-time records. His current career stolen base mark of 77 is already the best in Bucknell history, and he is fast approaching the record for runs scored with his present total of 131.

Apart from baseball, however, Joseph has filled his schedule to the brim in other areas of Bucknell's athletic program. As one of the leaders of the intramural program, Joseph helps to coordinate meetings, does scheduling, and makes sure that things run smoothly as a problem solver. Rose Ewan, who is in charge of the Bucknell Intramural Sports program, is impressed with Joseph's dedication to the program.

"Ian usually comes right off the practice fields to our meetings," Ewan said. "He has put in good bit of time into the program, and his calming personality when there is a problem and positive stance on things are important. We would not have an intramural program without what Ian does for us."

Joseph is also an active member of the sports information team taking stats. "A little while back, the former radio announcer asked me and my roommate if we needed a job," said Joseph. "As it is now, I go to as many of the other sporting events as I can."

Brett Earnest '03 who works in the sports information office thinks highly of Joseph and his work.

"He's very good at what he does and is always someone you can count on when something needs to be done," said Earnest. "Even with his busy schedule, he finds time to help out the athletic department."

"The money I earn by working in sports information and intramurals helps to pay for school," commented Joseph about his motivation to be so active. "But besides that, I like to help by giving back to the sports program that's given so much to me."

Coach Depew expects to see great things out of Joseph before the season is up. "He's definitely one of the people that has provided leadership for us," he said. "I expect him to be the league leader in stolen bases and to set the school record in runs scored. His approach to the game is admirable; he comes to play every day."

Courtesy of Athletics Communication
Ian Joseph '01 is one of the Patriot League's premier outfielders.

Women's polo goes 5-4 in California

By MOLLY GOELLER
Staff Writer

The Bucknell women's water polo team faced some tough competition in their recent League Tournament, as they battled Villanova, Salem International, George Washington and Princeton, but only managed a 1-3 record. The Bison rebounded by posting a 5-4 mark during the California spring break trip.

In the first game of the League tournament, the Bison fought to the bitter end against rival Villanova, as they took the game into sudden death overtime, but lost 12-11. The fourth quarter of the game ended in a tie, forcing the game into overtime, where the Bison earned two ejections.

Villanova scored a final goal, ending the game in sudden death. Senior Paige Cull and junior Brooke Rea led the team's scoring with three goals each.

After the disappointing loss, the Bison were hungry for a win. They dominated Salem in their second game of the tournament, as they walked away with a commanding 19-6 win. Rea, Liz Wilmarth '03 and Daniella Faas '04 each contributed three goals.

Entering their third game of the day, the Bison were tired, yet still played a strong game against George Washington, posting an impressive second half. However, George Washington ended the game with a two-point edge over the Bison, leaving the

Chris Rivera—The Bucknellian
Kelli Hofstetter '04 protects the ball while looking for a teammate

Bison with a 12-10 loss. Sophomore Katie Stahler and freshman Kelly Hofstetter each placed three goals in the net for the Bison.

Bucknell faced Princeton in its final game of the tournament, but were disappointed with their 10-7 loss. While the Bison's offense performed well, Princeton matched the Bison with a strong defensive line. Rea added three goals to the score, while Cull, Stahler, Julie McLaughlin '01 and Adrienne Schuber '02 each added a goal of their own.

After an exhausting weekend tournament, the Bison began preparing for their spring training trip in California, where they played nine games over the course of nine days, finishing with a 5-4 overall record.

At the Cyote Invitational the Orange and Blue dominated the pool in their first game with an impressive 10-6 victory over Cal Tech. Goalie Lindsay Chesterfield '03 was strong in the net with eight saves and four steals.

The Bison faced a tough San Bernardino in their second game of the Invitational. While they came on strong in the second half of the game, there wasn't enough time to pull out victory, as they suffered an 8-7 loss. McLaughlin and Hofstetter lead the scoring with two goals each.

The Bison handily won their third game, 6-2, as they held Chapman scoreless during the last three quarters of the game. The Bison finished the Invitational with a strong 10-3 win over Biola.

During some head to head competition, the Bison brought down LaVerne in the closing seconds after a nerve-racking game. The Bison's 9-8 victory was fueled by McLaughlin's four goals.

With little rest after the LaVerne game, the Bison were back in the water facing a tough Cal Baptist squad. Though the Bison presented a strong offensive line, they were not able to tackle Cal Baptist and lost 11-1.

The Claremont/Pomona Invitational was Bucknell's final tournament of the training trip.

After playing what Head Coach John Zeigler called "the best half of water polo yet this season," Bucknell just could not finish, giving up a one point loss to Santa Clara. Rea lead the team's scoring with three goals.

Next up for the Bison was the University of Texas, whom Bucknell would top 11-6. All of the Bison saw playing time, and McLaughlin lead the team with four goals.

The final game for the Bison was a re-match against San Bernardino. While the scoring was fairly even after the first half of play, San Bernardino pulled out an 8-5 victory over the Bison.

"I think we all played pretty well. The team was not very strong, and we all played very well against them," Ingels said. "We took all of the singles flights except the first, where Jill (Wurzburg) played very well but still struggled the whole match against a very good La Salle player. Mostly, it was just nice to play outside."

The Bison won two of the three doubles flights as Beth Wurzburg

Women's tennis splits games in S.C.

By CAITY SELLECK
Staff Writer

In the warm sun of the outdoor courts of South Carolina, the Bucknell women's tennis team went 1-1 last week, decisively beating La Salle and falling to a very strong and well-trained Quinnipiac.

Scoring in the Bison's decisive 6-1 win over La Salle in singles play, where no match lasted beyond two sets, was junior co-captain Kristin Ingels in Flight Two, 8-3, and Maisel and freshman Sarah Downing defeated Rafter and Toner in Flight Three, 8-3.

On Weds., March 14, the Bison, despite strong play, fell to a very tough Quinnipiac team, 5-2. In singles play, Bucknell took only the third and the fifth singles flights, where Maisel beat Piazza (6-2, 6-3) and Pugno took Nagle (6-4, 6-4). The Bison did not win any of the doubles flights.

Bucknell had three practices over the break, where they mainly focused on playing outside. Coach Rebecca Helt said, "Our main focus of the practices over spring break were to practice our game while facing the elements."

Along with practicing and participating in tournaments, the team also used this training trip to relax and to bond as a team. Maisel said, "We all got to know each other better on this trip, which was really good for our team chemistry. We mostly just hung out and enjoyed the good weather, which helped us get a lot closer to each other."

The Bison will travel to Hempstead, N.Y. on Saturday to compete against Hofstra, and then they will head to Emmitsburg, Maryland to challenge Mount Saint Mary's.

and Pugno defeated Erickson and Hess in Flight Two, 8-3, and Maisel and freshman Sarah Downing defeated Rafter and Toner in Flight Three, 8-3.

On Weds., March 14, the Bison, despite strong play, fell to a very tough Quinnipiac team, 5-2. In singles play, Bucknell took only the third and the fifth singles flights, where Maisel beat Piazza (6-2, 6-3) and Pugno took Nagle (6-4, 6-4). The Bison did not win any of the doubles flights.

Bucknell had three practices over the break, where they mainly focused on playing outside. Coach Rebecca Helt said, "Our main focus of the practices over spring break were to practice our game while facing the elements."

Along with practicing and participating in tournaments, the team also used this training trip to relax and to bond as a team. Maisel said, "We all got to know each other better on this trip, which was really good for our team chemistry. We mostly just hung out and enjoyed the good weather, which helped us get a lot closer to each other."

The Bison will travel to Hempstead, N.Y. on Saturday to compete against Hofstra, and then they will head to Emmitsburg, Maryland to challenge Mount Saint Mary's.

Along with practicing and participating in tournaments, the team also used this training trip to relax and to bond as a team. Maisel said, "We all got to know each other better on this trip, which was really good for our team chemistry. We mostly just hung out and enjoyed the good weather, which helped us get a lot closer to each other."

The Bison will travel to Hempstead, N.Y. on Saturday to compete against Hofstra, and then they will head to Emmitsburg, Maryland to challenge Mount Saint Mary's.

BISON AT 7-7 AFTER BUSY SLATE BASEBALL

FROM PAGE A5

the tournament well, defeating Miami (Ohio) 12-9.

The squad suffered some setbacks in their next few contests, falling to Portland 8-2, Illinois 18-6, and Fresno State 13-7. The loss to Fresno State was especially tough because the Bison held a 7-4 advantage in the seventh inning with two outs and no runners on and a two-strike count on the batter but ended up losing the contest.

The team gained a valuable win in their next contest, defeating League rival Navy, 12-9. The Bison finished out the tournament with a loss to Miami (Ohio) exacted some revenge on the batter but ended up losing the contest.

"It was a productive trip," Depew said. "We played against very good competition and saw excellent pitching and very good hitters and we competed with everyone there."

"Playing in Fresno helped us to discover really how good we can be, and the caliber of team that we can beat," Myers said.

The tournament consisted of Big Ten defending champion Illinois as well as nationally ranked #9 Notre Dame and Fresno State, ranked #25 in the country.

Joseph and Lindberg were selected as all-tournament players in the Fresno tournament and Lindberg as well as named Patriot League player of the week for this past week. He currently leads the team with 5 home runs and is batting .440 with 17 RBIs.

"Russ has great power and the potential for a great year," Depew said.

Farmery has received League honors as well, being named the Patriot League player of the week for the first week of March. He has a .00 ERA in 6 appearances and has three wins and one save already.

The Bison suffered a setback Wednesday in the first game since break, falling to neighborhood rival Bloomsburg, 5-4.

The squad has a series of out-of-conference matchups over the next week and a half against the likes of Duquesne, Slippery Rock and Penn State before opening League play at home on March 31 against Lafayette.

"The chemistry on this team is phenomenal and we have a solid group of seniors providing leadership on and off the field. Their experience will prove vital as the season wears on," Grant said.

Having prepared for those games with almost three months of practice earlier this year, the team goes into their busy schedule confident and strong. "We have been working hard all year to develop our fundamentals as well as our strategies and skills," Morgan said.

This hard work was put to the test over Spring Break, when the team traveled to Fort Meyers, Fla. to compete in 11 games and train outdoors.

SOFTBALL FROM PAGE A10

newcomer Melissa Monday.

Second-best last year in batting with a .326 average, Meredith Gill '03 will likely be a standout at shortstop. Backing Gill up are two tri-captains in the outfield, Demetriades and Senior Steph Morgan, as well as Junior Lauren Titus. Demetriades earned an All-Patriot League honors last season and looks to repeat that again in 2001.

"We have a good nucleus of returning players with experience and maturity, as well as some very good freshman who should become more comfortable with college competition as we play more games," Breneman said.

With depth and a long period of indoor practice on their side, the Bison look to turn a few heads this season.

"We are really looking forward to surprising people in the league this season since we were picked to finish last," Morgan said. "The games with Army and Lehigh are both very important, but we are looking forward to beating both of them as well as everyone else in our league."

The team travels to Colgate this weekend to play both Colgate and Duquesne. The game can be heard on live audio from the Bucknell athletic website.

up to our level, but we came through when we needed to and hung tough both offensively and defensively," said Jordan.

Ashley Evans led the offensive drive with a hat trick while Nuss also had a strong two goal performance. But the victory was gained by a strong defensive effort, defined by Kallas' only allowing six goals with 14 saves.

"Hopefully St. Mary's was the game that is going to turn our season around," said Raffaele.

Interestingly enough, last season began with three losses followed by a win. Bucknell played its first home game on Tuesday night versus Ohio and won, 9-8. The team's record is now 2-3.

"Early season improvements are focused on playing a full game. Consistent play will win Bucknell games. I believe we must eliminate a lot of unforced errors—things that we can control. If we do that, we will raise the entire level of our game," said Jordan.

The team travels to Colgate this weekend to play both Colgate and Duquesne. The game can be heard on live audio from the Bucknell athletic website.

Cinderellas crack Sweet 16

Courtesy of ESPN.com
J.P. Blevins has led Kentucky to the Sweet 16.

By ROB SCHMICKER
Senior Writer

Every year, the NCAA Men's Basketball Tournament has a different story and this year is no exception. While there have been many twists, the main theme so far has been the emergence of the mid-major conferences.

Leading up to the tournament, the media focused on how several mid-major conferences deserved more than one berth in the tournament but wouldn't get them because of the politics of college basketball. Simply put, these teams aren't able to attract competition from the power conferences because the bigger schools have no reason to travel. Forced to play teams from worse conferences, strength of schedule is the big reason why Richmond (21-6) was slighted in favor of Georgia (16-14).

Twelfth-seeded Gonzaga then defeated 13th seeded Indiana State in the second round and thus earned a date with the Spartans. But the second round wasn't as kind to Florida and North Carolina, who were stunned by Temple and Penn State. The Nittany Lions pressured the Heels all day, forcing 22 turnovers, and Brendan Haywood's fifth foul with a minute remaining spelled the end for the underachieving Heels.

For the first time since 1955, Penn State is trying to take some of the spotlight off its football team and focus on its basketball team. However, they will be no match for Temple, who will go on to lose to Gonzaga in the Elite 8. Gonzaga is no longer an underdog; Casey Calvary and Dan Dickau are the most underrated players in the nation, and will lead Gonzaga to the promised land known as the Final Four.

The other region that has gone awry is the Midwest, where I ultimately predict Maryland defeating Stanford in the Regional Finals. The Terrapins almost didn't make it this far, as they narrowly defeated George Mason in a game that will well once again haunt the Wildcats.

While none of the smaller schools will ultimately win, they have gained more respect. No team besides the top seed is safe—just ask Iowa St and Kentucky. While the Wildcats are still alive, they were scared in the first round by Holy Cross. The Crusaders lost 72-68, but in the process have given the Patriot League some hope for the future. Even though I bleed Bucknell Orange and Blue, for one day I can say I rooted for the enemy and I was proud of them. They, along with several other teams, have shown the big boys that they can play with them on any given day. And from now on, no game will be a guaranteed victory.

In the East, I like Duke to advance to the Final 4, but it won't be

Courtesy of ESPN.com
Loren Woods and the Wildcats are peaking at the right time.

nell Orange and Blue, for one day I can say I rooted for the enemy and I was proud of them. They, along with several other teams, have shown the big boys that they can play with them on any given day. And from now on, no game will be a guaranteed victory.

In the East, I like Duke to advance to the Final 4, but it won't be

IM Corner

Basketball A Championship
Team Orenthal defeated Best Kept Secrets 54-40

Basketball B
Quarter Final
Fighting Amish defeated Team Herb Sem-Prual

Basketball C
Championship
Vedder Vertigo defeated The Masons 26-17

Racquetball Champion
Sig Ep A

Final Basketball Standings
Basketball A
1. Team Orenthal 6-1
2. Best Kept Secrets 6-1
3. KDR A 5-2
4. Rounders 3-4
5. Vedder Vertigo 3-4
6. J-House 2-5
7. High Court 2-5
8. DU 0-7

Basketball B
Division 1
1. Sig Ep B 6-0
2. Team Herb 5-1
3. Chi Phi 4-2
4. PC Load Letter 2-4
5. Krispy Robin 2-4
6. Wet Heads 1-5
7. DU B 0-6
Division 2

Basketball C
Division 1
1. Vedder Vertigo 6-2
2. Supreme Court 3-2
4. Los Jugadores 2-3
4. Hired Goons 2-3
6. Sig Ep A 0-3

Basketball C
Division 1
1. Vedder Vertigo 6-2
2. Financial Panthers 5-3
2. Lady's Men 5-3
4. Sig Ep C 4-4
5. LL Vegas 0-8

Billiards Standings
1. The Bull Run Hustlers 7-1
2. Sig Ep 8-2
3. Vedder Vertigo B 6-4
4. Vedder Vertigo 3-6
5. Pool Sharks 1-6
5. Smith Sophs 1-6

Bowling Standings
1. Vedder Vertigo B 7-1
2. Sig Ep A 4-4
3. Vedder Vertigo 3-5
4. PC Load Letter 2-6
5. Harry Balps 1-7
5. TKE 1-7
5. French Tickers 1-7
5. Sig Ep B 1-7
9. BWB 0-8

Racquetball Standings
1. Sig Ep A 4-0
2. Vedder Vertigo 2-2
3. Sig Ep B 0-4

Billiards Standings
1. The Bull Run Hustlers 7-1
2. Sig Ep 8-2
3. Vedder Vertigo B 6-4
4. Vedder Vertigo 3-6
5. Pool Sharks 1-6
5. Smith Sophs 1-6

Bowling Standings
1. Vedder Vertigo B 7-1
2. Sig Ep A 4-4
3. Vedder Vertigo 3-5
4. PC Load Letter 2-6
5. Harry Balps 1-7
5. TKE 1-7
5. French Tickers 1-7
5. Sig Ep B 1-7
9. BWB 0-8

Racquetball Standings
1. Sig Ep A 4-0
2. Vedder Vertigo 2-2
3. Sig Ep B 0-4

Billiards Standings
1. The Bull Run Hustlers 7-1
2. Sig Ep 8-2
3. Vedder Vertigo B 6-4
4. Vedder Vertigo 3-6
5. Pool Sharks 1-6
5. Smith Sophs 1-6

Bowling Standings
1. Vedder Vertigo B 7-1
2. Sig Ep A 4-4
3. Vedder Vertigo 3-5
4. PC Load Letter 2-6
5. Harry Balps 1-7
5. TKE 1-7
5. French Tickers 1-7
5. Sig Ep B 1-7
9. BWB 0-8

Racquetball Standings
1. Sig Ep A 4-0
2. Vedder Vertigo 2-2
3. Sig Ep B 0-4

Billiards Standings
1. The Bull Run Hustlers 7-1
2. Sig Ep 8-2
3. Vedder Vertigo B 6-4
4. Vedder Vertigo 3-6
5. Pool Sharks 1-6
5. Smith Sophs 1-6

Bowling Standings
1. Vedder Vertigo B 7-1
2. Sig Ep A 4-4
3. Vedder Vertigo 3-5
4. PC Load Letter 2-6
5. Harry Balps 1-7
5. TKE 1-7
5. French Tickers 1-7
5. Sig Ep B 1-7
9. BWB 0-8

Racquetball Standings
1. Sig Ep A 4-0
2. Vedder Vertigo 2-2
3. Sig Ep B 0-4

Sports

Cinderellas crack Sweet 16

Courtesy of ESPN.com
J.P. Blevins has led Kentucky to the Sweet 16.

By ROB SCHMICKER
Senior Writer

Every year, the NCAA Men's Basketball Tournament has a different story and this year is no exception. While there have been many twists, the main theme so far has been the emergence of the mid-major conferences.

Leading up to the tournament, the media focused on how several mid-major conferences deserved more than one berth in the tournament but wouldn't get them because of the politics of college basketball. Simply put, these teams aren't able to attract competition from the power conferences because the bigger schools have no reason to travel. Forced to play teams from worse conferences, strength of schedule is the big reason why Richmond (21-6) was slighted in favor of Georgia (16-14).

Twelfth-seeded Gonzaga then defeated 13th seeded Indiana State in the second round and thus earned a date with the Spartans. But the second round wasn't as kind to Florida and North Carolina, who were stunned by Temple and Penn State. The Nittany Lions pressured the Heels all day, forcing 22 turnovers, and Brendan Haywood's fifth foul with a minute remaining spelled the end for the underachieving Heels.

For the first time since 1955, Penn State is trying to take some of the spotlight off its football team and focus on its basketball team. However, they will be no match for Temple, who will go on to lose to Gonzaga in the Elite 8. Gonzaga is no longer an underdog; Casey Calvary and Dan Dickau are the most underrated players in the nation, and will lead Gonzaga to the promised land known as the Final Four.

The other region that has gone awry is the Midwest, where I ultimately predict Maryland defeating Stanford in the Regional Finals. The Terrapins almost didn't make it this far, as they narrowly defeated George Mason in a game that will well once again haunt the Wildcats.

While none of the smaller schools will ultimately win, they have gained more respect. No team besides the top seed is safe—just ask Iowa St and Kentucky. While the Wildcats are still alive, they were scared in the first round by Holy Cross. The Crusaders lost 72-68, but in the process have given the Patriot League some hope for the future. Even though I bleed Bucknell Orange and Blue, for one day I can say I rooted for the enemy and I was proud of them. They, along with several other teams, have shown the big boys that they can play with them on any given day. And from now on, no game will be a guaranteed victory.

In the East, I like Duke to advance to the Final 4, but it won't be

Courtesy of ESPN.com
Loren Woods and the Wildcats are peaking at the right time.

Sports

League headed into rough waters

As the Patriot League heads into the new century, so many things are changing. From new facilities to new members and traditions, the league is but a shell of its former self. Perhaps the most visible change is the outcome in the vote on the most controversial and divisive issue of all—scholarships.

To start, I must give a "Ray" to Bucknell for standing up for the original mission of the league. We have decided along with Colgate and Lafayette that we will not follow the trend to an athletic atmosphere that isn't traditional. For lack of a better term, the Bison are not following the herd.

Following the release of John Feinstein's The Last Amateurs: Playing for Glory and Honor in Division I College Basketball, the League is ironically moving away from that. Mr. Feinstein's book may soon not apply to the Patriot League. We may very well see one of its older books, A March to Madness: The View from the Floor in the Atlantic Coast Conference, fit better. But let's hope not.

Basketball is not the only sport that will feel the effects of the move towards scholarships that has begun in the league. Each sport, with the sole exception being football, will begin to see a revolution in its makeup when the money teams will begin to take control of the competition and the relative parity we enjoy now will slip away.

The Patriot League was founded fifteen years ago as a Division I-AA football conference and began offering competition in all sports ten years ago. In 1986, six schools decided to form a league that would center on student-athletes, not athletes. The original members of the league included Bucknell, Colgate, Davidson, Holy Cross, Lafayette and Lehigh. Over the past fifteen years, the league has also seen the inclusion of ten other schools, including current full members Army and Navy and joining members American and Georgetown (football).

But there are problems that the mostly successful league faces over the next few years. It is only a matter of time before we find out what happens to an athletic association in the NCAA Division I program when it begins to allow a broad array of scholarships after a long period without them. And then there is the problem of a league divided on such a crucial issue.

The NCAA basketball tournament and the Patriot League basketball tournament embody the problem that the league will be facing. They are probably the most exciting of any sporting event. Every game is played on a razor's edge, win and move on or lose and go home. Plus, scholarships in basketball can mean real success or failure for a team and can help a league immensely in the national spectrum.

This March, I had the good fortune of attending not only the Patriot League tournament but also a session of NCAA Tournament round one play. And, let me tell you, I have never had so much fun. College basketball is the best spectator sport around and watching it live is even better.

The League tournament was held this year on the beautiful Annapolis campus of the United States Naval Academy. Alumni Hall, home to the Mids, was the center of activity. But the activity, except for the basketball, was not that riveting. The first two women's games drew crowds of around 700. The men's games, the following afternoon, were not much better. The 2,200 people there could have fit into Davis Gym. But Alumni Hall holds 5,700 people. You could hear the crickets.

Attendance aside, the basketball was great. The players were into their games and the fans there were too. The athletes are good players in smaller schools. About the only problem with the games was the officiating. But that is another subject for another article. Jeez, it's had in a funny sort of way. I don't know how the coaches keep their sanity during the games. I would be thrown out in two minutes if I were on the sidelines.

The NCAA tournament, currently in its second week, was everything I thought it would be. Fun, loud and a lot like the professional game—except for the presence of live pep bands. Unfortunately the site is the worst building in sports—the Nassau Veterans Memorial Coliseum on Long Island.

The games were exciting and so was the general atmosphere. The fans were there for the basketball and camaraderie and the affinity for a particular school. But the game seemed professional, like the Knicks or Lakers or Bulls. This wasn't the Bison basketball I am used to. The kids playing were part of their school for the basketball more than the academics. Use of the word student-athlete by the public address announcer seemed strange.

But that is where our league is heading. Next season, as American signs on, we will hold our basketball tournament at a neutral site, the 5,900-seat Shaw Place Arena, in the Washington metro area. Explained by the league as a "very attractive location for our teams, alumni, fans and media," it is apparent that the league is looking for more media visibility and perhaps a larger advertising revenue stream. The basketball will become increasingly commercialized and not what we are accustomed to. It just seems wrong. And it seems risky to me.

The Patriot League is headed to trouble in the next few years. Bucknell isn't. The administration and trustees have made a commendable decision to put tradition first and to keep to the mission on which this school was founded. We are sticking to our academic roots and allowing our student-athletes to remain just that. And because of that, we should all give a round of applause to the University.

COMMENTARY

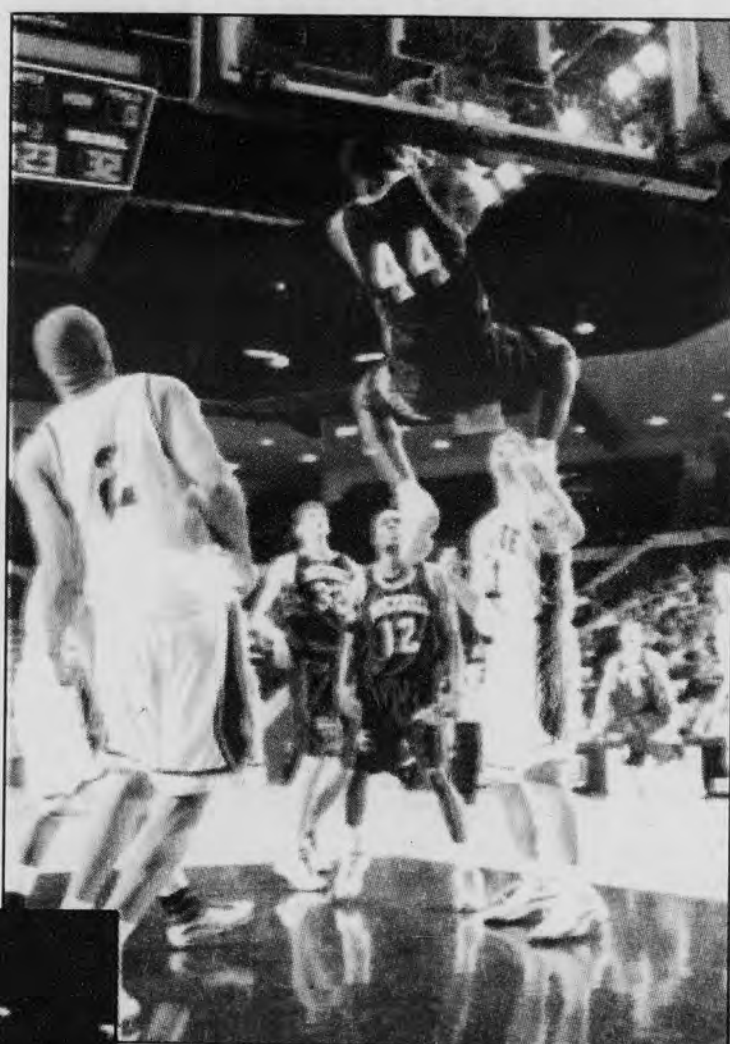

JIM LEAHY
Managing Editor

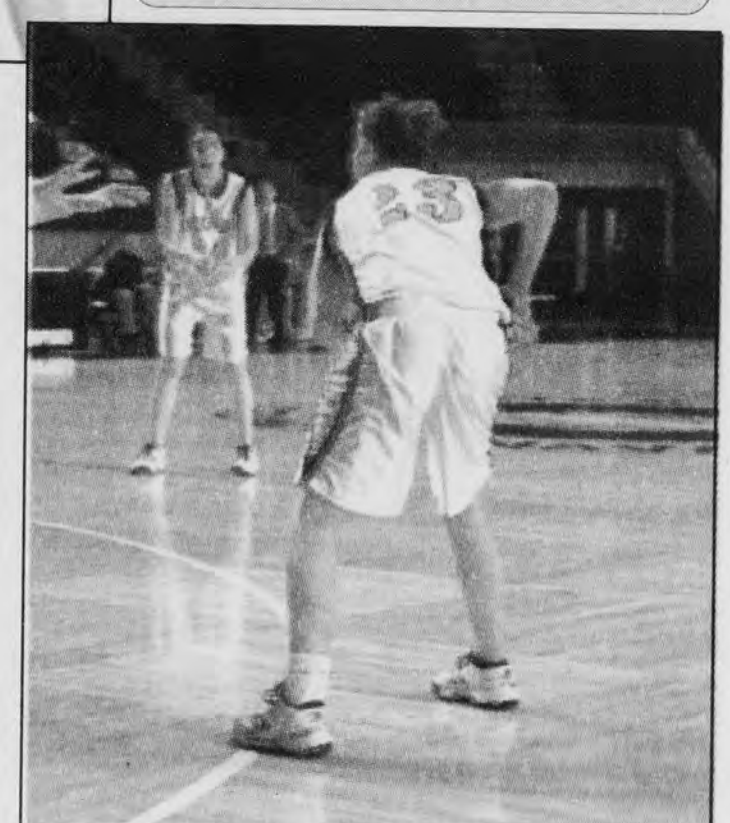

Scenes from the tournament

Above Left: Jake Ramage '01 gets an open look beyond the arc.

Above Right: Boakai Lalugba '03 smashes a reverse dunk.
Center: The Bison mascot finds a Bucknell cheerleader.
Bottom Left: Vicky Quimby '02 snags a rebound against Colgate.
Bottom Right: Molly Creamer '03 (#23) looks for Monique LeBlanc '02 at the top of the key.

All pictures were shot by Matt Albert '01 of The Bucknellian.

Softball confident about spring season

By BROOKE REA
Sports Editor

A squad that captain Jenna Demetriades '02 calls "outstanding," returns from a successful spring break trip to Florida and looks optimistically to the season ahead. Under the guidance of new Head Coach Janelle Breneman and benefiting from the addition of six new freshmen, the softball team promises to have one of its best showings ever this spring.

The Bison only lost two players from the 2000 team to graduation and return seven of last year's nine starters. The experience of returning players combined with the new talent of the incoming class gives BU confidence, depth and a more competitive level of play than they were capable of last season.

"I'm very optimistic about the season," Demetriades said. "I have seen huge improvements in our play since the fall season, and especially since last year."

The team may have sensed something missing behind the plate earlier this year, as the graduation of starting catcher Kristina Tan left that position open, but the spot is now hotly contested by three eager players. Junior Kathy Zeevalk brings experience, as she played in 14 games last season, starting in ten, but competition from newcomers Jenna Fitch '04 and Angela Stackhouse '04 may heat things up behind the plate.

Kelly Dugan '02, a starter for the past two years, returns as the lone first baseman and will be a dominating presence on offense and defense.

Also contending for the position is Kelly Dugan '02, a starter for the past two years, returns as the lone first baseman and will be a dominating presence on offense and defense.

See SOFTBALL, page A8

Bison Calendar

WOMEN'S LACROSSE
Friday, March 23
at Colgate 2:00 p.m.
Saturday, March 24
vs. Duquesne (at Colgate) 10 a.m.

MEN'S TENNIS
Saturday, March 24
ST. FRANCIS (PA) 1 p.m.
Sunday, March 25
at West Chester 2 p.m.

SOFTBALL
Friday, March 23
COLUMBIA (2) 2:30 p.m.
Saturday, March 24
ABLANY (2) 1:30 p.m.
Sunday, March 25
SIENA (2) 2:00 p.m.

WOMEN'S TENNIS
Saturday, March 24
at Hofstra 1 p.m.
Sunday, March 25
at Mount St. Mary's 1 p.m.

Outdoor Track
at North Carolina

LACROSSE
Saturday, March 24
SLIPPERY ROCK 12 noon
Sunday, March 25
SLIPPERY ROCK (2) 12 noon

WOMEN'S TENNIS
Saturday, March 24
at Hofstra 1 p.m.
Sunday, March 25
at Mount St. Mary's 1 p.m.

WOMEN'S TENNIS
Saturday, March 24
at Hofstra 1 p.m.
Sunday, March 25
at Mount St. Mary's 1 p.m.

MEN'S LACROSSE
Saturday, March 24
LAFAYETTE 1 p.m.

WOMEN'S WATER POLO
League Games March 24-25
Friday: GEORGE WASHINGTON 1 p.m.
Saturday: VILLANOVA 9 a.m.
PRINCETON 9:30 a.m.

SALEM-INTERNATIONAL 7:30 p.m.

PRINCETON 9:30 a.m.

THE Bucknellian

SECTION B

March 23, 2001

Weekend Weather

Weather courtesy of weather.com

Hi: 53
Low: 31
FRIDAY

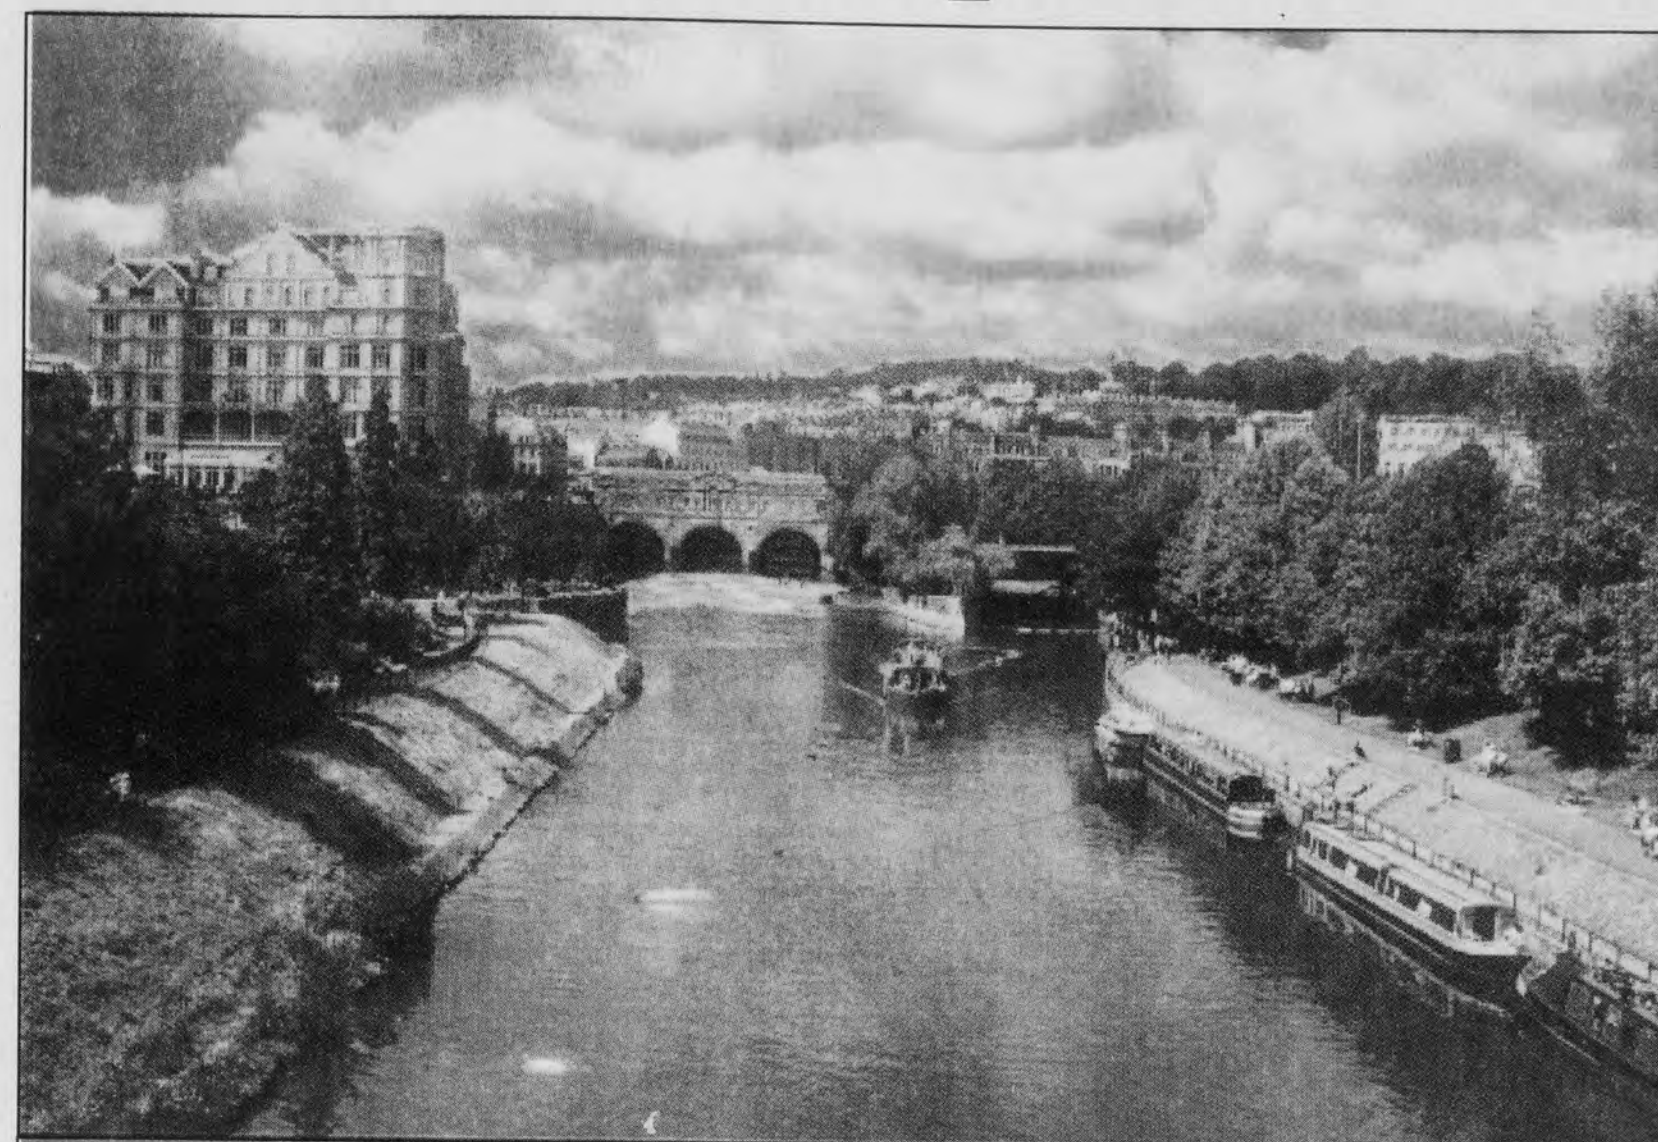

Hi: 47
Low: 23
SATURDAY

Hi: 40
Low: 22
SUNDAY

An Abroad Perspective from Bath, England

The River Avon winding its way through picturesque Bath. Pulteney Bridge is in the background.

By NEIL ANGUS
Contributing Writer

Once the leaves had fallen completely from the trees near the end of last October, I could finally see into the Bath Rugby Stadium from my bedroom window, perched high across the river on the third floor of 14 North Parade.

I had always heard the chants, celebrations, and dismays of the crowd as the summer began to unwind into fall, but I still hadn't been to a game. Until I could see right in through the bare branches, I only saw Bath Rugby Club action in the form of game highlights and re-caps on the BBC.

As fall swept in, I became a secret spectator, spying on muddy practice sessions in the empty stadium and watching late afternoon victories in front of capacity crowds. Only when I could see this spectacle from the outside did I finally realize that I had to get in. One day, when the work was piling up for everyone, two friends and I decided to go.

It was beautiful inside. The pitch was green and fat, and the royal blue of the Bath players' jerseys was peppered throughout the crowd. Our tickets put us in a standing section in the corner of the field, and looking up before the game started I saw my sky-high box seat across the river, vacant for once because I was finally inside. I wondered if anyone else was watching from above, behind little windows outside the stadium like I had.

See ABROAD, page B7.

Rafael Burgos is bringing the National Orchestra of Spain to Weis Center

See page B9

Michael Malbin brings debate to campus

By MELISSA FINKELSTEIN
Staff Writer

A "shift in the political climate" has occurred according to Michael J. Malbin, Executive Director of the bipartisan Campaign Finance Institute. Malbin spoke at Bucknell University on Tuesday, March 20, a well-timed event as Malbin himself recognized.

On the same night that the Senate debate on the McCain-Feingold Campaign Finance bill entered its second day, Michael Malbin discussed this very issue, claiming that a problem does indeed exist. Malbin evoked the name Denise Rich as a symbol of the controversy surrounding campaign finance. While President George W. Bush stands behind a program that would ban soft money contributions by corporations, but not by individuals, Malbin indicated that Senator John McCain (R-AZ) would have two words in response: Denise Rich.

This name is probably familiar to almost every American. According to Dr. Malbin, Denise Rich's contribution of $1.5 million to the DNC, and her former husband's subsequent pardon by President Clinton, is an indication of corruption in the current system. While no hard evidence exists to support this claim, Malbin finds it "hard to believe that there was no quid pro quo."

The efforts of campaign finance laws to curb corruption have eroded significantly over the past decade. Malbin cited figures indicating that soft money usage has increased from $20 million in the 1988 election to $487 million in 2000. Forty percent of the money that funds political activity is soft money, or contributions made by corporations, unions, interest groups, and individuals.

Legislation aimed at curbing these figures may fail to recognize the ill effects of such actions. The McCain-Feingold bill proposes to ban soft money contributions to political parties. The problem with this proposal is that parties overwhelmingly support challengers, and as this bill makes no effort to replace the money it seeks to ban, competition in the political arena could go way down.

Another feature of the McCain-Feingold bill addresses non-party interest group activity in politics, which according to Malbin is very significant. Under current laws, transactions by these groups do not have to be disclosed if the group is not expressly advocating a particular candidate in the course of its activities. But as Dr. Malbin explained, this simply means that for example, a commercial paid for by an interest group cannot contain the words "Vote for John Smith." The ad can promote, or come out against an issue, even announcing a candidate's stance on that issue.

See MALBIN, page B10

Russia's Mir coming back to Earth today

See page B5

Sports Trivia

By Justin McCarthy

- 1) What Division I school has the longest current winning streak in the first round of the Men's NCAA Basketball Tournament?
- 2) What Division I school has appeared in the most consecutive NCAA Tournaments (and the streak is still alive)?
- 3) What school has the longest drought of winning their conference tournament?

Answers: 1) Kentucky, 2) Kentucky, 3) Kentucky

FORUM

EDITORIAL

The University's weapons policy must be re-examined

In light of recent events, it seems safe to say we cannot escape the presence of guns on school campuses—even at the collegiate level.

Over Spring break during room inspections, members of the physical plant staff found an AK-47 and ammunition in a student's room. The weapon, which is classified as a "sub-machine gun" on the AK website, was not locked up, but found in plain view as inspections cannot proceed beyond a surface scan of the dorm.

The Student Handbook expressly prohibits the presence of, "weapons including firearms, ammunition, and hunting equipment in dorm rooms. The Department of Public Safety will store hunting rifles."

In terms of sanctions for this offense, the handbook states that, "a sanction is imposed which takes into consideration the severity of the incident and any special circumstances involved." This loophole takes all certainty out of the disciplinary aspect of this situation, the aspect that, according to many, is the most crucial.

Considering the potential "severity of the incident," the sanction should be very stiff. AK-47s were designed with military use in mind and are widely known as assault rifles, not hunting rifles. However, the student may claim "a special circumstance"—"I meant to bring it to Public Safety and just forgot to before break"—and be punished far less severely than necessary.

We understand that many students may have a vested interest in hunting in the surrounding areas. However, it is comforting knowing that most of the hunting rifles are registered and secured by Public Safety.

What concerns us is the fact that the AK-47 was not secured. It was present in someone's dorm room. We are not implying that this student had a malicious intent, but anyone could have accessed this weapon. A roommate, roommate or friend.

We at The Bucknellian find it very unsettling that the sanctions for having a candle in ones dorm room are specifically and unwaveringly spelled out—"letter of censure; confiscation of the candle(s)/incense; 10 hours of University service; loss of priority number in the next room selection process; loss of off-campus living privilege for the next academic year"—while there is a significant loophole for the possession of weapons in residence halls.

We understand that candles pose a very serious fire hazard but it seems almost comical to talk about the potential dangers of a candle in comparison to those of an AK-47. However, guns and ammunition are also severe fire hazards in keeping with the University's concern over fire safety.

If a fire breaks out in a residence hall and one student has a gun—or even worse, ammunition—in his room, the firefighter checking the room for trapped victims could be seriously injured by the exploding ammunition.

We would like to clarify that, as of yet, the student has not been sanctioned and that the University still has the opportunity to severely punish him. However, based on the guidelines set out in the handbook, the likelihood that the student will receive a punishment equaling that of having a candle or incense in the rooms looks minimal.

Considering the loophole in the residence policies regarding weapons in residence hall, The Bucknellian challenges the administration to take a strong stance against the possession of deadly weapons on campus. In light of the recent Williamsport high school shooting and numerous other similar incidents, it is imperative for the University to have an established policy against possession of guns.

Not only is a gun a fire hazard but it is a deadly weapon; while we will not speculate the intended purpose of the sub-machine gun, the University should act swiftly to protect the safety of the students in the residence halls and the interests of the campus community.

Editors-in-Chief
Rebecca Rowland '02
Peter Van Emburgh '02

Managing Editor
Jim Leahy '03

Senior Editors
Matt Albert '01
Matt Trunnell '01
Brian Wattson '01

Business Manager
Mark Langer '02

News Editors
Laura Day '03
Natalie Casp '02
Rachel Laskow '03

Business and Politics Editor
Michael Boland '03
Maureen Oscadal '03

Forum Editor
April John '03
Peter Hackman '04

Features Editors
Sandy Jo Galati '04
Jolene Hart '03
Jason Rubinstein '04

Arts and Entertainment Editor
Krista Reisdorf '02
Kristi Johnston '03

Letters to the Editors

Republican outreach to African-Americans a complicated issue

To the editor,

The article by Ms. Bedeian, "Republican Outreach an Empty Gesture", missed the point entirely. The conclusion the people have made regarding the results of the election, and Mr. Bush's inauguration as president, is not that the Republicans must not care for black voters because they were outvoted in the African-American demographic, but rather that Republicans are simply not their preferred candidates for holding public office.

The entire disenfranchisement speculation in Florida was simply a misinterpretation of the voter error that was such a controversial issue during the post-election coverage, and not even a political issue.

Ms. Bedeian's article seems to chastise Bush for proposing a monument commemorating the contributions of blacks to American society. In other words, an act of awareness, an act of symbolism not unlike those that members of the left have successfully supported for years with the same intention of making Americans think that they care.

My question is this: how can Bush win back the support of African-Americans without appearing to be a "pretender," but while the odds are already stacked against him? Bedeian's commentary proposes a lose-lose situation for President Bush: either he tries and fails to win support, or he abandons all hope in the first place. What does that make him, in lieu of a pretender—a racist, perhaps?

I find it interesting how people compare Bush, the "compassionate conservative," with Abraham Lincoln, who was so liberal for his time that his election was enough to guarantee the secession of the South from the Union. The party affiliations are totally irrelevant; what matters here is how these men stood on the political spectrum. On one side there is Bush, the "pretender" who lost the black vote, and on the other side there is Lincoln, the "pretender" who eventually won the black support.

To accuse Lincoln of being an abolitionist simply because he wanted more votes is an outrage. Surely in noting this distinction Mr. Howard Zinn has brought up, Bedeian does not then condone the flipside of the politics at the time, which was pro-slavery?

Meanwhile, though I am not enthused about many of the policies of the current president, to write him off as a "pretender" as well is a thoughtless act. Such an argument has about as much substance as accusing Al Gore of "pretending" to be concerned about Southern male white voters through his ties to the South and his own roots in the tobacco farming industry, when Gore seemed to be campaigning against the tobacco industry.

But the underlying issue is this: a solid majority of Southern male whites did not want Gore to be President. Yet this is not enough evidence to conclude that Mr. Gore can never go home again.

Ever since the civil rights movement, African-Americans have overwhelmingly embraced the Democratic Party, regardless of the president. But this is no reason to infer that the Republicans are quacks about diversity just because the blacks aren't giving them a bear hug. Now you've gone back on your word and so early in your term that

Christopher Mote '04

Let's Show Some Class

By JOSH GUYAN
Staff Writer

The University campus was honored a few weeks ago with a visit and lecture from Ralph Nader. By now everyone knows how important Ralph Nader is and what a big deal it was to get him to come here. Several students and groups on campus spent significant time and effort during and since the election to get the presidential candidate to come speak to us.

I am an usher at the Weis Center for the Performing Arts where the speech was held and I was very impressed with the turnout, both among University students and faculty, and from the surrounding community. This was not so much because I am a huge supporter of Ralph Nader. I actually much of what he says extreme and colored by an uncompromising ideological bent to the detriment of reality and workable progress, but because here was a guy coming to the University to give a substantive lecture about important political issues, and so many students attended.

I admittedly have a pessimistic view about the political awareness and activeness of our student body, so I was duly impressed by our showing. At the Weis Center we couldn't even let all the students and faculty in who came out to see the lecture, much less any significant amount of citizens from the community. We ended up turning hundreds of people away.

I was able to see most of the lecture including the question-and-answer period and although I certainly didn't agree with much of what Mr. Nader said, I found it to be an interesting and informative discussion of major U.S. and global political and economic problems. Hopefully, the school and its many organizations will be getting more speakers like Mr. Nader from across the political spectrum.

My disappointment came about an hour or so into the lecture when I noticed several people (mostly students) getting up and leaving. I don't want to come down too harshly because I know students are busy and Mr. Nader definitely ran much longer than most people reasonably expected.

However, as I saw student after student getting up and leaving it became apparent that the numbers were approaching a point where Mr. Nader might notice the slow but steady trickle out the door. Whether or not he did notice, it was embarrassing and unfair to the others who had been turned away.

There were several hundred people turned away from the Weis Center who would probably have been happy to stay for the entire lecture. I understand that several professors required or gave extra credit to their students for attending the lecture and many of those students may have been the ones who left early.

As much as I understand why a professor would want his/her students to attend that lecture, there was more than enough natural demand for seats. Forcing or subtly coercing students to attend a lecture they aren't naturally motivated to attend leading to many of them leaving early may not have been the best policy in this situation.

Professors' class policy aside, I hope that the next time we get a major speaker here to discuss important issues that students will have the respect and class to stick around to the end if at all possible.

Science and Technology Editors
Lynne Waldman '01
Josiana Cetta '04

Sports Editors
Carmen Mauriello '02
Brooke Rea '02
Andrew Burr '04

Sports Statistician
Matthew Herbert '02

Darkroom Manager
Chris Rivera '02

Photo Editors
Paige Cull '01
Chris Rivera '02

Local Advertising Representative
Bryan Prins '04
National Advertising Representative
Amy Peloquin '03

Online Editors
Eric Fair '01
Brendan Putnam '03

Circulation Manager
Brian Klotz '03

Head Copy Editors
Kim Luedde '01
Debbie Ruggieri '01

Production Manager
Nick Olson '02

Adviser
James F. Lee

THE BUCKNELLIAN

Founded in 1896 as The Blue and Orange

Volume 127, Number 7

C-3952 BUCKNELL UNIVERSITY

LEWISBURG, PENNSYLVANIA, 17837

(570)-577-1520

BUCKNELLIAN@BUCKNELL.EDU

HTTP://WWW.ORG.BUCKNELL.EDU/BUCKNELLIAN

EDITORIAL POLICY

The editorials of The Bucknellian reflect the consensus of the Editorial Board as to the topics and general position. If a consensus could not be reached, the opinions expressed are those of the Editors-in-Chief.

All other opinion material represents the views of the author and not necessarily those of The Bucknellian.

PUBLISHING POLICY

The Bucknellian is written, edited and published on 12 Fridays during each academic semester entirely by Bucknell students. The Bucknellian's fiscal affairs are overseen by an Advisory Board comprised of faculty, staff and administrators. All published material is chosen by the paper's editorial board without prior review by the Advisory Board, its adviser, the University or Bucknell Student Government.

SUBSCRIPTIONS POLICY

Subscriptions are available $45 per year and $30 per semester. To subscribe, send payment and address information to: The Bucknellian Subscriptions, Box C-3952, Lewisburg, PA 17837. Subscriptions are mailed first-class on the Monday of publication. Please send change-of-address information to the above location as well.

ADVERTISING POLICY

The Editorial Board of The Bucknellian reserves the right to deny any advertisements if offensive, illegal or in bad taste. For advertising rates, please contact the advertising managers at (570) 577-1085.

Copyright 2001 The Bucknellian

FORUM

Bush to EPA: "Just Kidding!"

By AARON DEROSA
Staff Writer

Can you hear that? That's the sound of Christie Todd Whitman, the newly appointed administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency, crying over a leather-bound notebook filled with Virginia pulp paper as she sips from her Styro-foam coffee cup while waiting in traffic on the Beltway in her 1979 Ford Pinto that belches more noxious gases than Chris Farley after Thanksgiving dinner.

I don't think President Bush could have done a better job of screwing over this country, let alone Ms. Whitman, as he did when he rescinded his campaign promise to tackle safety issues regarding carbon dioxide emissions last week.

By the way, while you're at it, George, why don't you head down to the local zoo and start taking potshots at the giraffes. Or you could always rip up the rose garden. I'm sure that would be great for the environment.

ment. George ... oh George ... you promised. You told us you were going to work for the environment. You told us you were going to tackle the dangerous carbon dioxide levels. You told us the coal companies weren't going to win this time. Et tu George?

Now you've gone back on your word and so early in your term that trust you again. I don't mind telling you it hurts. I don't even want to think of how Christie Todd Whitman must feel. She vowed for you Mr. President. She said that you were committed to environmental safety and that you were prepared to take on the coal industry and reduce gases that contributed to the greenhouse effect—a situation that has become much more serious than most have realized recently, at least so say your scientific advisors. You left her out to dry, Mr. President.

Your comrades claim that the campaign promise was a mistake—well that's uplifting. I'm glad to know you consulted your colleagues before making a pledge that was so influential in persuading people to vote you into the highest elected office in the world. That gives me a nice warm feeling in the pit of my stomach that you communicate your intentions well with others, a skill I think that is fairly important if one is to be the leader of the free world.

You claim that the decision is based on the fact that the economy is in a slowdown and new regulations would force electricity prices to skyrocket and would be a particular problem in places like California that are already experiencing power shortages.

Yet our economy has been in a slowdown since early September, around the same time when Greenspan raised the interest rate to slow down the booming stock market. Your statement about "mandatory reduction targets" was delivered on Sept. 29, a time when economic factors were becoming a concern. There was plenty of time to rescind your statement before Election Day.

As for the power shortages, California and other states have been experiencing these problems for over a year now. Even this past summer in New York and New Jersey, residents were forced to turn off their air conditioners because of power concerns. This is nothing new and most certainly no excuse to retract a campaign promise.

I'll tell you what happened, though, President Bush. You sold your soul to coal, which would be a delightful rhyme if it didn't mean that in 100 years, average temperature would increase by 10 degrees Fahrenheit.

You've made yourself a shill. President Bush, which is not only degrading to yourself, but to your office and to this country. Don't write checks your administration refuses to cash. That's not fair to your constituents.

You've Got Mail ... From the President

By DAVID MCGREEVEY
Senior Writer

To most of us, a president is more of an abstract concept than a real, living person. The overwhelming majority of Americans will never meet him. We can read about presidents in newspapers, of course, and hear their voices on the radio if we're so inclined, but the only way most people have of seeing a president is on TV. From that point of view, it looks like I don't know George W. Bush any better than I know Urkel.

This isn't the case for everyone, though. Presidents are people. They eat. They watch movies. They have friends. And, as seen in a recent issue of the New York Times, they send potentially embarrassing emails.

According to the article, published on March 17, President Bush sent a message to 42 of his closest email buddies a few days before his inauguration explaining that, since his communications would now be archived as part of the presidential record, he could no longer keep in touch electronically "since I do not want my private conversations looked at by those out to embarrass."

I don't want to speculate about what kind of embarrassing things Bush could be saying in these emails—even the president is entitled to a certain level of privacy, and if he wants to keep some things between himself and his fraternity buddies I suppose that's fine. I'm just really curious to know what it's like to be on George W. Bush's private mailing list.

The Times piece says he sent very brief messages, in all lower-case letters, on an almost daily basis. He discussed events of the presidential campaign, but also enjoyed just keeping in touch with his friends.

I have to admit, with some embarrassment, that this is not what I expected.

Like I said, I don't actually know President Bush, but he looks to me like the sort of person who would send his friends forwarded chain letters ("If you don't send this message to 50 people in the next 24 hours the outcome of the 2000 election will be ambiguous at best") or long lists of off-color jokes.

America Online users like Bush (formerly G04B@aol.com) have acquired a reputation, deserved or not, as the most incompetent, most glib, and least intelligent.

gent of internet users, a reputation that corresponds quite nicely with one popular perception of the new president, but one that seems to be contradicted by the Times report.

In Bush's mature email habits prove, once and for all, that he's not as stupid as so many of us would like to think?

The use of all lower-case letters is technically wrong, of course, but lots of people do it. I don't think it's fair to criticize him for something like that. It could be a lot worse—he could be using all caps.

Only the 42 people in Bush's address book know what he sent them, but unless it was something along the lines of "gore dummy" I want be president" he's probably better at staying in touch than most of us are.

I'm also saddened, but not really surprised, to learn that the guy I so desperately want to see as a major league jerk has almost three times as many friends listed on his computer as I do.

George W. Bush's proficiency with email makes him seem a lot more credible as a sophisticated, intelligent person. Why doesn't that make me any happier?

Proposed campaign finance reform still misses the point

By GRETCHEN SCHROCK
Opinions Columnist

The enduring battle between campaign finance reform and big money politics is reaching its peak this week as the U.S. Senate is in the midst of a heated two-week debate over a reform bill placed before it by Republican Senator John McCain of Arizona. This proposed legislation is poised to end the "tyranny" of massive monetary contributions that have plagued political campaigns by completely banning unlimited large donations to the national political parties.

This bill, co-sponsored by Democratic Sen. Russell D. Feingold of Wisconsin, would also prohibit corporations and labor unions from running issue advertisements before elections.

Will corporate, labor, and other special interests lose their influence in the political arena as a result of this legislation? While the proposal's advocates are attempting to sever the ties between special interests and politics, the power of special interests will not decrease. Another part of the McCain-Feingold bill calls for an increase on the limit of cumulative regulated individual contributions to all federal candidates and parties during a single year from $25,000 to $30,000.

However, who are the only people financially capable of donating such large amounts of money to political campaigns? Not the homeless man down the street trying to stay warm, not the hungry child crying in its mother's arms, not the elderly population fighting to obtain the medical care they need while on a fixed income, but the wealthy corporate executives with homes across the globe and sports cars neatly tucked away in large garages. Though the reform bill is admirably trying to reduce the influence of corporate interests, it will fail in its execution due to this specific facet.

Yet, the McCain-Feingold proposal is more palpable to the concerned citizen than the bill sponsored by Republican Sen. Chuck Hagel of Nebraska, in which soft money donations by corporations and unions to political parties would only be limited rather than banned. This limit for soft money donations by individuals, unions, corporations, or committees would be $50,000 a year or $120,000 over a two-year election cycle. In addition, the current limits on regulated donations would be tripled, which means that the cumulative limit to which an individual could give to all federal candidates and parties would increase to $75,000 from $25,000.

Who would be the only people capable of writing a check for such a large amount? Not troubled teens in the inner cities without chance at a quality education, not unemployed parents unable to provide for their growing families, but the rich corporate executives with at least a six-figure salary and designer clothes.

The Bush administration, which entered the White House on a wave of soft money, is secretly promoting Hagel's proposed legislation. Senate Majority Leader Trent Lott, R-Miss., also supports Hagel's version of campaign finance reform and was quoted by The New York Times as saying, "I don't think the chances of McCain-Feingold passing as it is are really that good. You've got different groups that are concerned about different parts of it."

Those groups that Sen. Lott mentions are undoubtedly corporations and unions, who are worried that their precious power will begin to wane among politicians. To the despair of Sen. Lott, the McCain-Feingold bill does have a decent chance of passage with an even split among Democrats and Republicans in the Senate and the appearance that the needed 60 votes for ending a filibuster and pushing the bill to final passage will be reached. The only obstacles to passage are the numerous amendments that must be considered throughout the debate.

Opponents claim that this campaign finance reform bill would unconstitutionally infringe on the right to free speech. This bill will finally give the middle-and-lower class citizens of this country the opportunity to voice their needs and opinions over the noise created by the millions of dollars pouring onto the laps of politicians from special interests. How will the right to free speech be infringed upon when more citizens can have a say in their form of government?

Opponents also argue that the national political parties will be weakened by the possibility that contributions will be channeled to less accountable groups. The Democratic and Republican points of view are not the only ones that exist on the national political scene and if our country is truly a democracy, other political groups should have an equal chance to adequately and fairly express their opinions.

During his opening statement to the Senate as reported by The New York Times, Sen. John McCain truthfully admitted, "Most Americans do believe that we conspire to hold on to every single political advantage we have lest we jeopardize our incumbency by a single lost vote. Most Americans believe that we would let this nation pay any price, bear any burden, for the sake of securing our own ambitions no matter how injurious the effect might be to the national interest."

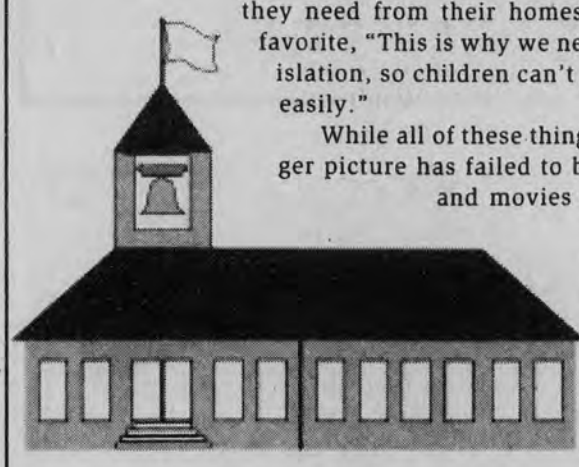

It is indeed time to consider the effect of soft money donations on the national interest. Listen to the desperate cry of the homeless, the hungry, the elderly, those in need of proper medical care, the troubled teens, the uneducated, the unemployed, and all the other marginalized groups in our society. Their voices are that of the national interest, not the greedy complaints of the elite.

Got somethin' on your mind?

Write a Letter to the Editors!

Box C-3952 Bucknell University
Lewisburg, PA. 17837

bucknellian@bucknell.edu

missing; families aren't composed the same way, yet it is still up to the legal guardians to kids on the right track. Children have many more ways to get hold of things that are illegal (in some areas guns and drugs are more accessible to children under the age of 15 than textbooks and mentors).

The real problem is that we have failed our children. We fail to listen to them. Communication is essential to a healthy child. If you never ask your child how his/her day was you will never know that they are having a problem. If you never ask your child if he/she needs help with anything in school you can never help him/her.

Communication is what our children are lacking. They cannot raise themselves. Television is in no way equal to a parent. We need to start talking to our children again. Families, no matter what the composition, need to be together. Our children are crying out for us to listen, but we aren't.

Throughout this article I have repeatedly referred to these children as our children. This is done intentionally. While some of us may not have children of our own yet, we will. If we do nothing now, what will school be like for our own children? It will be a war zone for them just to learn how to add and subtract. None of us want that for these unborn children, and we should not want that for those that are in school now. It is up to us as tomorrow's leaders to do something. What will you do, before it's too late?

bucknellian@bucknell.edu

TOYOTA CALL IT START UP MONEY.

New
TOYOTA'S COLLEGE GRADUATE
FINANCE PLAN INCLUDES $500 TO GET YOU GOING!

There's sure to be a Toyota that's just right for you...

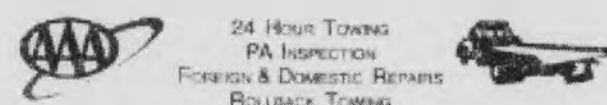

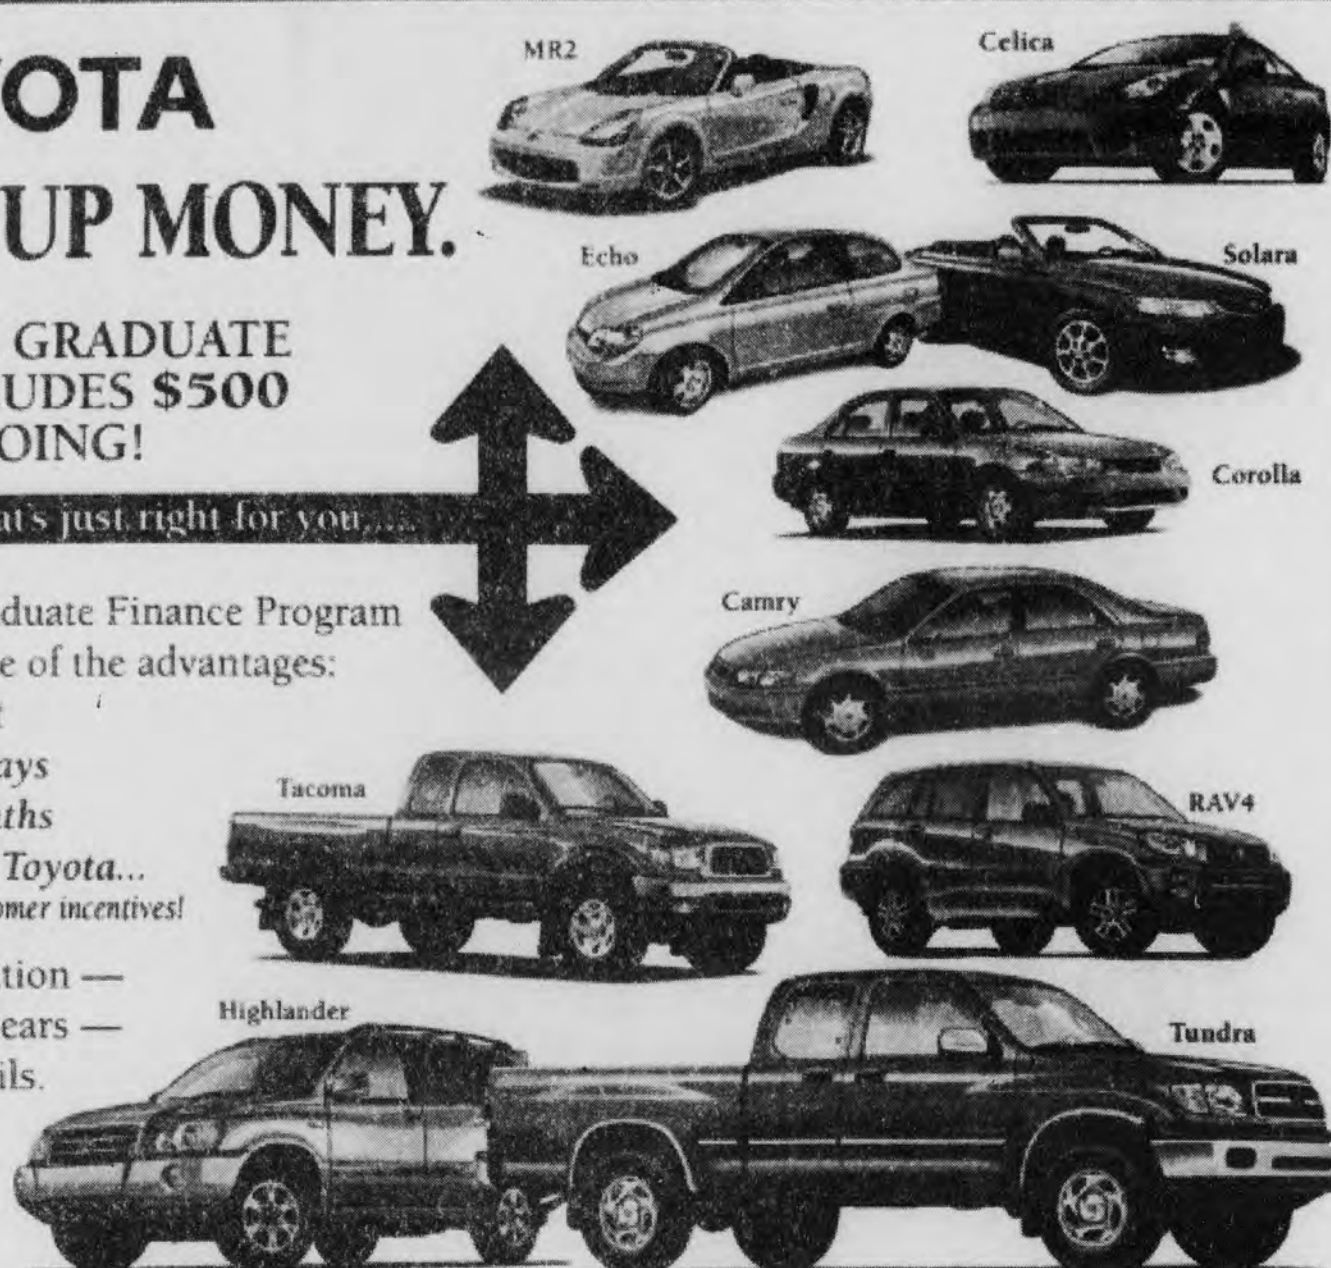

And now there's a Toyota College Graduate Finance Program that's just right, too. Here are some of the advantages:

- No Down Payment
- No Payment for 90 days
- Finance up to 72 months
- Get $500 Cash Back From Toyota... in addition to any other current Toyota customer incentives!

So if you're within 4 months of graduation — or if you graduated within the past 2 years — Ask your Toyota dealer for all the details.

www.gettoyota.com

Toyota College Graduate Finance Program available to qualified applicants thru Toyota Financial Services. Not all applicants will qualify. Some restrictions and limitations apply. Cash back offer subject to geographic limitations and offer expires 9/30/01. See dealer for details.

PA Inspection
Foreign & Domestic Repairs
Rollback Towing

Buck's SERVICE

24 Hours Towing
PA Inspection
Foreign & Domestic Repairs
Rollback Towing

Service Gas
24 Hours
Rts. 15 & 192

ON CAMPUS Physical Therapy Clinic

Monday - Friday
8 a.m. - 5 p.m.
Field House Athletic Training Suite
577.1060

EVANGELICAL
COMMUNITY HOSPITAL
SPORTS MEDICINE CENTER

Physician prescription required.
Please check insurance policy for restrictions.

Low, Low Rates!

*We bill insurance companies direct.

*Major credit cards accepted.
*Must be 21 or older.

Earning the right
to serve you each and every time.

524-0000

Rt. 15 & Nth 7th St.
Lewisburg, Pa. 17837
Mon-Fri 8:00-5:00
Sat. 8:00-12:00

ALE MAN & CHICKEN MAN!
Love BJ's
Super Buffalo Wing
SPECIAL!

12 for $4.95 Regularly $5.95
24 for $7.95 Regularly $9.95
Sunday - Thursday
9PM - Closing
EAT IN ONLY!

17 North Market Street
SELINGROVE
374-9841
291 Mill Street
DANVILLE
275-5110

SCIENCE & TECHNOLOGY

What is homosexuality?

By ALEX PIEL
Senior Writer

In the 1950s, Ford and Beach provided a review of studies done on homosexuality in non-human animals. They found that "homosexual behavior was widespread among various non-human species and in a large number of human societies."

Using samples from various taxa, they discovered that homosexual behavior was conventional and accepted in over 40 of the 76 societies in their sample.

Much of the problem for Joan Roughgarden, professor of Earth and Biological Sciences at Stanford University, and her colleagues is the confusion of terms used when discussing homosexuality. Researchers insist we must work as a society to avoid distinguishing "gay" and "straight" individuals.

In the non-human animal world, there is no distinction between these ideas. Instead, claims Roughgarden, scientists and society alike should concentrate on a more impartial notion of homosexuality.

Roughgarden explains also that scientific evidence may serve to help explain both homosexuality and homophobia. As a result of these bonds established by the homosexual behavior, individuals, especially those higher ranking, would feel threatened by such behaviors. Hierarchy and vulnerability would result, causing increased anxiety in the group to try and eliminate such "conspiracies."

Support for new theories explaining homosexual behaviors in animals are far from unanimous. Some scientists believe there is a "gay gene" and that there are adaptive roles for homosexuality.

"Many highly respectable individuals of ancient and modern times have been homosexuals, several of the greatest men among them (Plato, Michelangelo, Leonardo da Vinci, etc.). It is a great injustice to persecute homosexuality as a crime, and cruelty too..."

called "sexual antagonism" and hypothesizes that the expression of a gene depends on gender.

For example, when present in females, this gene would provoke homosexuality but in males cause an increase in sexual productivity. Despite the disparity between the expressions of this gene, it would evolve since males having the gene would transmit it to their offspring.

There are many scientists who remain skeptical of scientific explanations of homosexuality's biological origins. Much of the evidence from ancient groups has been re-interpreted and presently conflicts with once-accepted rules of sexuality.

"My feeling is that evolutionary theory mainly helps us understand why most people are heterosexual and why homosexuality is rare—it's not reproductively productive," Lee Ellis, associate sociologist at Minot State in North Carolina said.

But this may not necessarily be true.

Most individuals who engage in homosexual behavior are, in fact, bisexual," wrote R.C. Kirkpatrick of the Nature Conservancy.

That is to say, an animal can use homosexual tendencies to gain alliances and strengthen social bonds while proceeding to increase mating tactics and, consequently, offspring numbers.

The idea that organisms are both heterosexual and homosexual is not novel. One of the great minds of the 20th century suggested this in 1905.

Sigmund Freud felt that all human beings were innately bisexual, only becoming homosexual or heterosexual as a result of influences from parents and society.

For Freud, homosexual orientation should not be viewed as a type of pathology. "Homosexuality is assuredly no advantage, but it is nothing to be ashamed of, no vice, no degradation, it cannot be classified as an illness.

ness; we consider it to be a variation of the sexual function produced by a certain arrest of sexual development. Many highly respectable individuals of ancient and modern times have been homosexuals, several of the greatest men among them (Plato, Michelangelo, Leonardo da Vinci, etc.). It is a great injustice to persecute homosexuality as a crime, and cruelty too..."

In a letter Freud sent to the Vienna Press in 1930, he concluded, "Homosexuality has been present throughout history and among all peoples... the laws which penalize it represent an extreme violation of human rights."

Today homosexuality remains prevalent in a host of societies. It is seen in our ancestral cultures and, according to records, was accepted as recently as 150 years ago. Two of history's greatest thinkers, Plato and Freud, recognized and accepted homosexuality as part of society, considering it neither shameful or dishonorable, instead inherent and natural.

According to CNN, it does not appear that any legal repercussions will follow from the gag. "Our lawyers tell us that the investigation will probably be dropped," Krenak said. However, Inform has not come away unscathed, many unamused customers will be protecting their data with another company this year.

Second in a series

Internet company threatens customers

By PARKER TERRILL
Staff Writer

A German data protection company, in an advertising pitch gone bad, struck panic and fear into 2,400 prospective clients who most likely will now be taking their business elsewhere.

The internet company Inform AG was attempting to lure new clients into visiting its booth at the upcoming information, technology and telecommunications trade fair CeBIT, one of the largest in Europe. A promotional letter in the form of a ransom note was mailed to companies who would be attending the fair reading, "We know everything. Follow our directions, or else you're finished. No cops, no tricks!"

The letter was in a font imitating an old-fashioned type writer and had Inform AG's logo at the bottom followed by the seal of the fictitious "Front for International Data Protection."

The problem however was that the second letter which read, "Come to the meeting point at CeBIT, Hall 2, at Inform AG... This is your only chance! Bring your data to safety!" never arrived or came four days after the first message, due to a bulk mail error in the German post office.

Felicia Krenak, Inform AG's marketing director stated, "It was mailed on a Thursday, and a lot of people did not receive it until the following Tuesday. We hadn't expected it to take that long."

Approximately 5 percent of the recipients took the threats so seriously that they alerted their companies security department or the police. An investigation was promptly begun at the prosecutor's office in Cologne. And when Inform was made aware of the confusion it had created, it quickly sent out a third letter reading, "Please excuse us if we disturbed you. Of course we will no longer use or send this mailing."

According to CNN, it does not appear that any legal repercussions will follow from the gag. "Our lawyers tell us that the investigation will probably be dropped," Krenak said. However, Inform has not come away unscathed, many unamused customers will be protecting their data with another company this year.

Did you know ...

Pluto takes 248 years to circumnavigate the Sun while Mercury only takes 88 days?

Courtesy of World Almanac

Write for
S&T

Contact Josie x74842
or Lauren x74518

Mir completes its 14 year voyage

By NAT IVANICK
Staff Writer

Look! Up in the sky! It's a bird, it's a plane... no, it's the Mir space station! On March 22, 2001, the Mir space station will be reentering Earth's atmosphere and crashing somewhere into the Pacific Ocean.

Mir, a Russian space station that has orbited the earth for 14 years is by far the most famous space station ever launched.

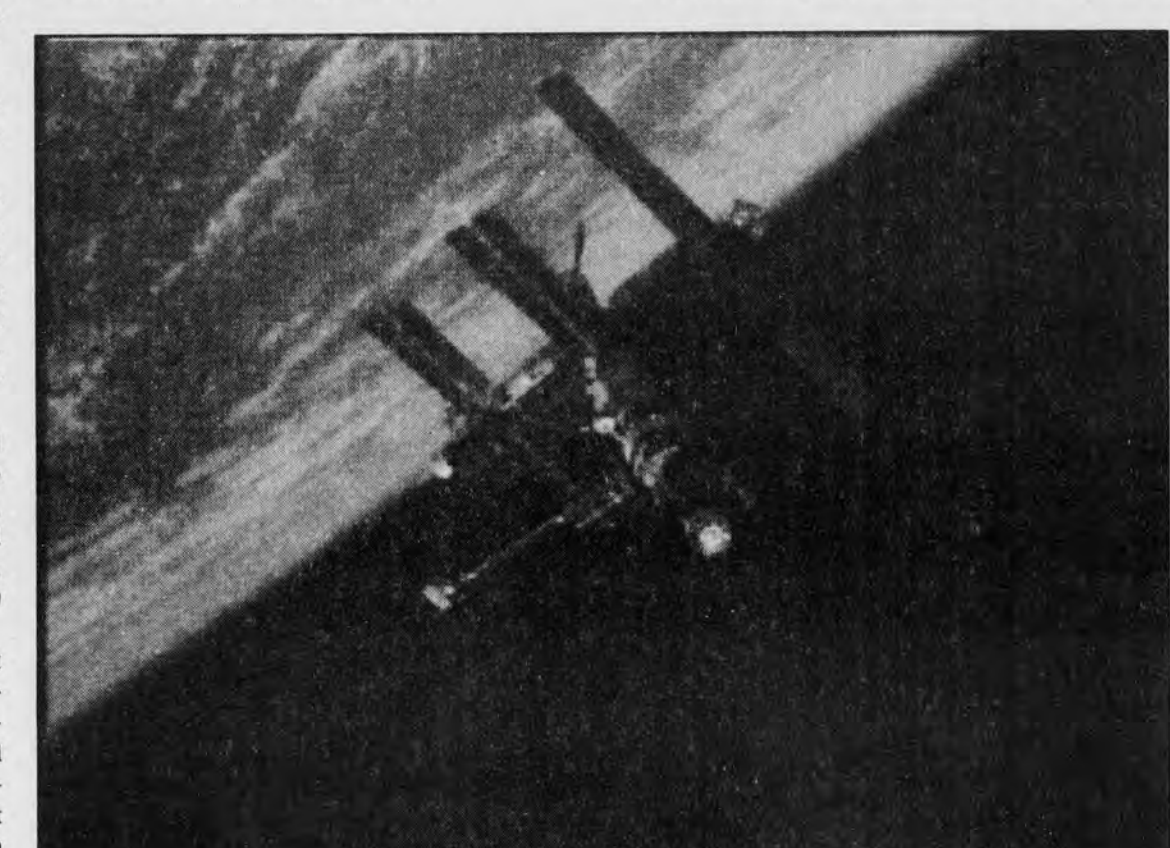

It has orbited the earth more than 80,000 times, having hosted over 104 people, and some 25,000 experiments.

Mir has cost the Russian government $4.2 billion to build and maintain. Recently, the government experimented with allowing private citizens to pay for a trip to Mir to help offset the cost, but this ultimately failed.

The Russian government, however, has decided that it is time to let the costly expenditure come crashing down, quite literally.

A major reason for this is two serious accidents that occurred in 1997 on Mir. In February 1997, an oxygen-generating canister burst into flames filling the space station and emergency escape capsule with smoke, endangering the two cosmonauts aboard.

Courtesy of Nasa.gov

MIR Space Station, launched by the Russian government makes a final orbit around Earth.

The fire was eventually subdued, but the flames still damaged the inside of the space station. Several months later, a cargo ship crashed into the space station during a practice docking run.

According to The Associated Press, NASA has been pressuring Russia for some time now to abandon Mir, and help take on the new challenge of funding the International Space Station, or

This collision created an air leak that had to be sealed before the two crew members on board were asphyxiated.

In addition to these two major accidents, the wear and tear of 14 years in space has taken its

ISS. Of Mir's original 120 tons, only 40 to 50 are expected to survive reentry into Earth's atmosphere.

Russia has planned a drop zone in the center of the South Pacific between Australia and South America.

According to CNN, the pieces could fall anywhere in a drop zone 4,000 miles long, and 100 miles wide.

But if you are nostalgic because you never got a chance to see Mir, never fear. For only $6,500, you and roughly 50 other people could see the debris in its final moments before it crashes into the Pacific.

The Herring Media Group is chartering a plane for anyone willing to drop that kind of cash and risk their lives in the process.

The plane will be flying in the drop zone, but does not plan to be closer than 200 miles to the actual debris.

If you still can't make up your mind, it should be noted that a steak dinner will be included before the flight, and that drinks on the plane are free.

IF YOU THINK IT WAS TOUGH GETTING INTO COLLEGE, TRY GETTING OUT OF PAYING FOR IT.

WHERE SMART STUDENTS GO

Your single source for practical tips on student loans, credit card management, career choices, and even interview skills. Plus everything else you need to make real-life decisions in the real world.

you can deal with it.com

PHEAA
Pennsylvania Higher Education Assistance Agency

FEATURES

Sibling's Weekend: 2001 Preview

A B.U.G.S. Life

By BEN PFEIFFER
Staff Writer

In anticipation of what promises to be one of the most exciting weekends of the spring semester, RHA and ACE are finalizing preparations for Siblings' Weekend 2001, which begins Friday and continues throughout this weekend. This year's events feature a new theme, "A B.U.G.S. Life" (Bucknell University's Greatest Siblings), as well as some of the most popular programs from previous years. New events such as Casino Night on Friday, will provide an even greater number of activities for the University's students and their siblings.

The centerpiece of the weekend will once again be the carnival and picnic held in the Fieldhouse from 11 a.m. until 4 p.m. on Saturday. The carnival will feature an obstacle course, a giant slide and, a favorite from last year, the joust. The picnic offers a huge selection of carnival food and admission is free.

Other popular programs returning include "Make Your Own Video," a DJ night at Up-town, movies to be shown throughout the weekend and an open mic night at Seventh Street Cafe. Events will begin Friday evening, run throughout the weekend and conclude with a free brunch in Larison Dining Hall on Sunday morning.

ACE and RHA have been hard at work since last semester preparing for this weekend and both organizations expect it to be the most successful Siblings Weekend yet. "Siblings' Weekend is a great opportunity for students to show their siblings the best of Bucknell and enjoy themselves at the same time," Carol Varano '03, RHA president, said.

A complete schedule of the weekend is available on the RHA website at www.bucknell.edu/rha/ and the entire campus community is encouraged to attend all of the events scheduled.

Friday, March 23

Time	Activity	Location
2-4 PM	Registration	Downhill LC
8 PM	Casino Night	Terrace Room
9:30 PM	Top 40: DJ Smitty	Uptown
10:30 PM	A Bug's Life	LC Forum
11 PM	Late Night Music Series: Open Mic	7th Street

Saturday, March 24

Time	Activity	Location
11 AM-4 PM	Picnic and Carnival	Fieldhouse
4 PM	"Dying to Drink" Car Crash Sim	Faculty Court
4 PM	Bucknell Comedy Improv Troupe	LC Forum
5-8 PM	First International Auction of the New Millennium	Terrace Room
8 PM-12 AM	Make Your Own Movie	Bison
9:30 PM	A Bug's Life	Vaughan Lit.
8 PM	Two Past Midnight Concert	Rooke Chapel
9:30 PM	Agent of Good Roots	Uptown
10:30 PM	Rocky and Bullwinkle	Vaughan Lit.

Sunday, March 25

Time	Activity	Location
10 AM	Continental Brunch	Larison Dining Hall

Lewisburg prison inmates visit campus

The Penitentiary's ICC program spoke to members of Catholic Campus Ministry

By ADAM TURBETT
Staff Writer

When most of us think about the Lewisburg prison, we think of the maximum-security section that houses violent criminals. However, there is more to this jail than meets the eye.

Affiliated with the Lewisburg Penitentiary is a program called the ICC. The inmates in this program are held in type of boot camp atmosphere. For example, inmates must ask permission of superiors to go to walk past them and every morning they are subject to inspections.

Each day, the convicts must go through physical fitness tests and must also attend some academic classes. In addition the inmates must talk to outsiders about their experiences, about their lives before prison and about the ICC program.

The members of the Catholic Campus Ministry were visited by three of the inmates who belong to this program on the Thursday, March 8.

When many think of criminals, they tend to picture the stereotypical image of a big, violent was not much different than a "normal." The inmates shared with students also told of a hope for the future and of a deep connection with God.

One of the first things that the ICC makes the inmates do is to take responsibility for their crime. Each of the inmates that talked to us realized that they had made a mistake and that their jail time was appropriate punishment.

One inmate admitted that he was a convicted drug dealer and, when he got out of jail, that he was going to go back to his old neighborhood to make a difference. He plans to tell the people that he used to deal with that he sees drugs and dealing drugs as a waste.

Each inmate that spoke either discovered or re-discovered his faith while in jail, with the help of the ICC.

These inmates will be released once they finish with the ICC so each one is now only months away from seeing their families and friends again.

The convicts are looking forward to making changes in their lives once they return to the outside world.

Chris Rivera—The Bucknellian

Although members of the ICC program are merely months away from release, the gates of the federal penitentiary in Lewisburg still confine them. The only time they get to leave the grounds is to visit with students.

However, the inmates that talked with the CCM members seemed extremely nice, and each dents their stories of past wrongs and the consequences that came from them. However, their sto-

Earth-conscious students work to reduce waste in Caf

By ANONYMOUS
Staff Writer

The Environmentally Minded Students' Association has spent Saturday evenings since the fall of '99 washing dishes in the Cafeteria. EMSA is the student-run environmental organization that address issues on a campus, local and national level.

EMSA noticed that on Saturdays students always had to use Styrofoam dishes and plastic utensils. These dishes, plastic utensils and cups were simply being thrown away, creating a large amount of waste every weekend.

This waste is what first attracted the attention of EMSA. They then contacted Dining Services to see what they could do to lower the use of disposable dishes and utensils. Dining Services explained that on Saturdays they do not have enough staff to wash dishes. EMSA decided to volunteer to wash dishes on Saturday nights from 5 to 8 to make possible for Dining Services to use the washable plates, utensils and cups that are used for all other meals.

By washing dishes, EMSA hopes to reduce what they refer to as our ecological footprint, or the effect of actions of people has on the environment.

John Wesley, a member of EMSA, believes that helping in the Cafeteria has benefits other than protecting the environment. "It is really good for students to make bonds with different support staff and people who work at the University; it creates a much better atmosphere for them to work in and for us to live in."

Other organizations on campus have volunteered to help EMSA on Saturday nights. Kerry O'Donnell, a member of BSG who volunteered along with her fellow freshman BSG members to assist EMSA one Saturday evening was very impressed by the dedication of the students who give up a portion of their Saturday to help.

"I think it is wonderful to see my fellow students reaching out to help our campus community and thinking about global environmental issues," O'Donnell said.

Washing dishes is not all that EMSA does to reduce stress on the earth by the use of Styrofoam products. They also created reusable mugs that can be purchased in Dining Services locations around campus with low freshman BSG members to receive a 10 percent discount on the cost of their meal.

In addition to food-related waste, another concern of EMSA involves the amount of paper used on campus. They would like to see the University use 100 percent recycled paper and implement a program where campus printers would print on both sides of the paper.

Anyone interested in the activities of EMSA or who wishes to help wash dishes can attend weekly meetings at 9 p.m. on Tuesdays in the Langone Center room 232, or contact Beth Oesterling at eoesteri@bucknell.edu.

FEATURES

An abroad perspective: a semester in Bath

ABROAD From page B1

The game itself was a thriller. It was won by the home team 34-32 as a drop goal by the visiting Sale Sharks flew wide of the posts at the last second.

(the very reason for the city's name), a sandwich shop we liked to call "The Tasty Barn," and a popular pub called The Huntsman.

Further exploration helped us find the best french fries in England at a burger joint called Manhattan Burger, classic films at the video store down ter break, a week in which I practically scaled the entire United Kingdom from Brighton to Edinburgh by train, making stops in Nottingham, Sunderland and Newcastle along the way.

I began to realize that England wasn't just a place where people ate fish and chips, watched football, and drove tiny cars. Every village and every city has a different flavor. The local flavors within England are just as distinct from each other. Thatched-roof houses in Stratford, the perfect balance of history and modernity in London, and yes, the endless swaths of those famous white sheep meandering green hills in Avesbury—I passed through these places quietly and tasted something of the essence of England at each one.

When I finally had to pack my things and walk away from Bath, I was eager to see my family and friends across the ocean again, but I wasn't really ready to leave. The final few days seemed like everything was going to be a "last" last walk to the Royal Crescent, last pint of Foster's at The Huntsman, last game of snooker watched on television, last look into that rainy rugby stadium from my bedroom window above.

I knew that someday I'd be back, but I hoped it would never be just a place from my past, a section in a dusty photo album. I also knew that when I did come back, I would still know where everything was, and would walk along some of my old routes to see if anything had changed. I imagine, though, that not too much will.

My flight from London was an early one and it was dark and wet when I awoke to pack the last of my belongings. One of my flatmates, Matt, was also taking the 6:30 train into Gatwick Airport, and he began to move about in the bathroom soon after I stuffed and zipped everything shut. Moving my luggage to the landing outside our door, my other flatmates were waking up to see us off and we had a final few sleepy-eyed laughs in the hall before Matt and I had to shake their hands and go.

Stepping out into the street and trudging to the train station in a steady drizzle, I got my final look of Bath under the washed yellow of a streetlight. Down North Parade, turn left, then all the way down Pierrepont Street to its end with an entire semester on my back and in my hands. We waited at the platform, got on the train when it arrived, and rolled eastward. That rumbling train ride into London was a quiet one.

I didn't take much back home with me in my

Out for a pint in a pub with the Dean of Students the last night in London.

Courtesy of Neil Angus

Map courtesy of Mapblast.com

The Mercantile: purveyor of fun, funky and functional goods

By KATY ZACHRY
Staff Writer

If you are looking for a store with personal, small-town atmosphere and appealing merchandise, Pennsylvania Mercantile Inc. is the place to go. A popular local source of many dormitory purchases, Pennsylvania Mercantile proves that a welcoming atmosphere coupled with unique products ensures a retailer loyal customer base.

This eclectic Market Street shop is home to a collection of contemporary household items, unique stationery, educational children's toys, the ever-popular Vera Bradley collection of bags and more.

As an established part of the Lewisburg community since 1981, Pennsylvania Mercantile has changed in both location and size. Under the direction of storeowner Hilda Clemens and her son, the shop changed locations 14 years ago from 106 Market Street to its current location at 319 Market Street in order to be in better proximity to the hub of activity. According to 15-year store manager Laurie Slear this move "enhanced business by a huge amount."

"It's very similar to how it's always been instead on a larger scale," Slear said. "We increased business and we increased inventory."

It is difficult to classify Pennsylvania Mercantile as a certain type of store based on its merchandise. Everything from cookie cutters and soap dishes to butterfly chairs and magazine racks is found within the store. Upon entering, customers go through a housewares section with kitchen, bath and bedroom accessories, followed by a stationery section including CDs and oil lamps, then to the medley of Vera Bradley merchandise, and finally a children's section, displaying lifelike puppets and educational games.

When asked to label Pennsylvania Mercantile Inc., Slear, a Lewisburg native, refers to it simply as a "lifestyle store."

"We feel we sell functional as well as unusual merchandise, and our prices are always a factor; they are always within reason. We want people to think 'I can use this, and it's reasonably priced.'"

If practical and affordable are two aims of Pennsylvania Mercantile, there is no doubt it has achieved its mission. It is considered an invaluable part of Lewisburg, with both the college campus and Lewisburg residents benefiting.

"Not a day goes by when people don't have positive comments about

While many female town resi-as frequent customers. On occasions, men come into the store knowing they will leave with an appropriate gift for their wives. More importantly, this appropriate item will be wrapped for no extra charge.

The gift-wrap bonus is just one component of the friendly, personal service Pennsylvania Mercantile strives to impart. Slear, who used to work in other retail venues that lacked personal service, is convinced that it is a necessary aspect of a successful retailer. "Personal service is so important, and that personal touch makes a difference," she said.

There is a wide range of ages among the store's female customers, and this diversity is considered when purchasing merchandise for the store.

"You don't want too formal or cutesy," Slear said. "We do have girls of all ages as well as retired women. It could be the worst day ever, but we'll still sell stickers."

With personal service and unique, affordable items, it is no wonder Pennsylvania Mercantile Incorporated has thrived in the Lewisburg community.

Chris Rivera—The Bucknellian

Thriving in the Lewisburg community since 1981, Pennsylvania Mercantile at 319 Market Street is a model store for unique gifts and model service.

the store. I think the town really needs something like this," said Slear.

dents are familiar with Pennsylvania Mercantile, the store rarely sees men ers."

Tuesday is Bucknell Night at Imperial Lanes

Tuesday Nights
2 hour Special for $20
9:30 - 11:30 only

Rent-a-lane for up to 6 people
Call 742-9211 to Schedule
Private Parties
Sorority/Fraternity/Date Parties

Enjoy Rock-n-Bowl with Lane Quake Sound!
Leagues and Open Bowling Available

Trunk Show

Pennsylvania Mercantile
319 Market Street
Lewisburg, PA 17837
523-7300

Invites You to a
VERA BRADLEY
SPRING TRUNK SHOW
April 6, 2001 • 10 am - 7 pm

15% off all Vera Bradley
Purchases & Orders
Day of Show

Meet Joyce, Vera Bradley's representative
Refreshments • Special Drawing

Help us out.
Write for Features.

Cardio Kicks!
HIT LIKE A GIRL.

With: Laura Kamienski
& Danielle Snyder

Drop-in and monthly discounts with student ID. Cut out this ad and bring it with you for a free class!

(One coupon per person)

You'll love this.
It's the workout with pulse-pounding music and martial arts moves in an atmosphere that crackles with excitement.

only at
KICKS MARTIAL ARTS
FOR WOMEN

106 Market St., Lewisburg
850-4685
www.kicks4women.com
Member National Women's Martial Arts Federation

Girls
&
SPORTS
by Justin Borus and Andrew Feinstein

Arts & Entertainment

Dinner wraps up Asian Awareness Week

By RUTH LI
Staff Writer

Beautiful Oriental-style canopies, cascading drapes of delicate fabric, shimmering centerpieces of water-suspended flowers, and rosebud-accented napkins completed the elegant atmosphere of the annual Asian Dinner.

Hosted by the multicultural organization, Students for Asian Awareness at Bucknell (SAAB), the Asian Dinner is the pinnacle of the Asian Awareness Week celebration. The dinner was attended by University faculty, students, as well as alumni and friends.

The preparation for the dinner, as well as all the other events for Asian Awareness Week, began last November, and the SAAB's executive members have been working hard ever since.

Dishes were planned and prepared by SAAB members and other Asian cultural groups on campus. Aside from a delicious dinner menu, the event also hosted an array of entertainment.

The entertainment got off to a lively start with rave, hip hop and break dancing. The upbeat musical tones combined with dynamic movements of talented University student dancers elicited much enthusiasm from the audience.

Matt Harlow '02, who showed his talent and skills in the rave and break dancing performances, commented on the role of promoting Asian awareness.

"Break dancing is a free form, an expression of emotion," he said. "It is in essence a communication of ideas and feelings which are very prominent in the Asian culture.... inclusion of break dancing adds to the objective of Asian awareness promoted by the dinner."

The second act of entertainment was a traditional Japanese dance that is performed at the Hanagasa Festival. Hanagasa are traditional Japanese umbrellas. Dancers Doi Sensei, Marissa Morris '02, Geny Silbert '02, Nobu Tamura '01, and Wynne Wong '04 performed the beautiful Japanese traditional dance with graceful and fluid movements.

The dance was followed by a string of performances starting the vocal talents of Pawin Sriusvagool '03 and Brinya Tananone '04, who sang Thai love and proposal songs, including a piece from the Notting Hill soundtrack, "When You Say Nothing at All."

The student dancers perform traditional dances at the Asian Awareness dinner and dance.

An elegant rendition of classical Chinese fan dance was then performed by Sarah Wagner '01, who has been studying Asian culture and dance since her freshman year. Dressed in simple Chinese style, Wagner performed the fan dance with grace, capturing the melodic music in soft, willowy motions and fluid movements of a decorative Chinese fan.

The rich arrangement of entertainment ended with a modern Indian dance, which closed the evening celebration. The dance, entitled "Bhangra-Pairon Mein Bandhan Hai," was lively and upbeat, concluding the event in high spirits. Yamini Laks '03 and Sofia Abraham '02 were instrumental to the development of the choreography for this concluding dance performance.

Japanese ginger pork and Miso soup, the Vietnamese dish known as Goi-Ga, Burmese fried noodles with vegetables and chicken, and white rice to accompany all.

The dinner menu finished with three desserts—Un Helvasi (a Middle Eastern sweet pastry made with flour, butter, sugar and cinnamon), a Pakistani fruit cart that consisted of a medley of sliced fruits in an orange juice sauce and Kulfi Ice Cream, another Pakistani dish made from soft creamy Indo-pak ice cream.

For the cultural groups who put the event together, promoting cultural awareness events is the mission statement of their organizations. Rohan Duggal '01, a member of SAAB and a participant in the final Indian dance, believes in the importance and significance of cultural awareness on the Bucknell campus.

"The Asian Awareness dinner displayed the unique characteristics of different cultures, but still managed to link them under a single theme which is what we, as a society at Bucknell, experience day in and day out," he said.

Julie Luu '03, choreographer and dancer for the Hip Hop dance, summarizes the week of events and its influence on the campus.

"The culmination of Asian Awareness week at Bucknell signified the dedicated goal of promoting a more culturally diverse and intricately entwined society at the University," she said. "Asian Awareness Week was a great success, and it enabled the entire campus to be a part of a culture that they may not have ever had contact with before.... The chaos has not ended. Asians will continue to make noise, on this campus and beyond."

Hoy performs senior concert

By ANDREW CLUGSTON
Staff Writer

The recital hall of the Sigfried Weis Music Building hosted the Junior Recital last Sunday afternoon, featuring violinist Matthew Hoy, assisted by David Cover and Jeffrey Leeman '01 on piano.

Hoy is active in the University's music scene as Concertmaster of the Bucknell Orchestra and a member of both The Bison Chops and the Rooke Chapel Singers.

The program was Brahms' "Sonata No. 1 in G Major," the first four movements of Bach's "Partita No. 2" for violin solo, and the "Tango No. 2" by Albeniz. With a program influenced by four centuries, Hoy demonstrated a sincere and rich musicality, rendering tribute to the range of styles.

The lyrical and introspective "First Violin Sonata in G Major" was played with luscious tone and insight. Throughout the three movements, Hoy demonstrated a sincere and rich musicality, rendering tribute to the range of styles.

The 15-track CD represents the culmination of two years of recording and much commitment on the part of the group. Included are familiar favorites from the group's repertoire, along with seven new songs.

Like the first album, Gender Gap incorporates a wide variety of musical styles as diverse as the 15 members who comprise the group. From Dido to Dispatch to '80s pop, the CD offers something for even the most hard-to-please music connoisseur, and it is no surprise that Two Past Midnight is immensely proud of its latest effort.

"We're really excited about the sound quality of Gender Gap and expect the album to be well received," said Mark Crawshaw '01, a member of Two Past Midnight.

Gender Gap will be made available to the University community following a CD release concert. The show will feature the debut of many of the group's new songs, originally performed by artists such as Sarah McLachlan, Steppenwolf, and Reel Big Fish, along with the performance of Choeur du Roi, a talented group from the University of Richmond.

"It's gonna be a great time for everyone involved. We're looking forward to a night of mind blowing entertainment," Crawshaw said.

Tickets for the Two Past Midnight CD release concert are currently on sale for $5 in the Langone Center lobby. The concert will take place at 8 p.m. on Saturday, Mar. 24 in Rooke Chapel.

Hoy's interpretation emphasized the link of the "Sonata" with Brahms' own "rain" songs from his Opus 59 of 1873, sustained and encouraged by the delicate accompaniment work Brahms composed to

"The Bach's performance was the culmination of the practice which I started back in April of last year," Hoy said. "What was especially difficult was standing up there by myself, trying to get those four movements stylistically correct, without music."

Hoy's hard work and diligence paid off, for he seemed to possess the technical and emotional resources to meet the musical challenge, from the solemnity of the "Allemanda" to the lively pace of the "Gigue."

Hoy delighted his audience with his final piece, the "Tango No. 2"—a fine atmospheric and evocative musical gem. Hoy demonstrated the charming and colorful, sometimes dreamy celebration that is the "Tango." "Personally, the Bach is a little too heavy a piece to end the concert," Hoy said. "I chose the Albeniz to allow the audience to leave with a catchy tune in their heads."

Courtesy of Matt Hoy

Two Past Midnight promotes its new CD with concert

Gender Gap will be released on Saturday in Rooke Chapel

By LAUREN SHABAB
Staff Writer

Following the successful release of its debut, self-titled album in 1997, the University's co-ed a cappella group, Two Past Midnight, has done it again. Gender Gap, the group's second CD, will be released on Saturday, Mar. 24, in conjunction with a celebratory concert of the same name.

The 15-track CD represents the culmination of two years of recording and much commitment on the part of the group. Included are familiar favorites from the group's repertoire, along with seven new songs.

Like the first album, Gender Gap incorporates a wide variety of musical styles as diverse as the 15 members who comprise the group. From Dido to Dispatch to '80s pop, the CD offers something for even the most hard-to-please music connoisseur, and it is no surprise that Two Past Midnight is immensely proud of its latest effort.

"We're really excited about the sound quality of Gender Gap and expect the album to be well received," said Mark Crawshaw '01, a member of Two Past Midnight.

Gender Gap will be made available to the University community following a CD release concert. The show will feature the debut of many of the group's new songs, originally performed by artists such as Sarah McLachlan, Steppenwolf, and Reel Big Fish, along with the performance of Choeur du Roi, a talented group from the University of Richmond.

"It's gonna be a great time for everyone involved. We're looking forward to a night of mind blowing entertainment," Crawshaw said.

Tickets for the Two Past Midnight CD release concert are currently on sale for $5 in the Langone Center lobby. The concert will take place at 8 p.m. on Saturday, Mar. 24 in Rooke Chapel.

Dispatch brings crowds to Uptown

Band performs selections from their new CD, Who Are We Living For?

By CHAD FLOOD
Staff Writer

It's pretty amazing that Uptown can go from an echoing, nearly empty dance club one night to bursting at the seams the next, all due to a single event. Anyone who passed the club Saturday night had to know something special was going on. The line to enter wrapped all the way around one side of Swartz Hall in anticipation of what would become one of the most popular events at Uptown this year—the second coming of Dispatch.

With influences ranging from James Brown change," Urnst said. "If you listen to our four albums in succession, you can tell that this isn't too far of a stretch from what we have done in the past."

The only change the band noticed was the luxury to take their time and make an album that would make everyone involved happy.

"We had no inhibitions when recording," Heimbald said.

The end result speaks for itself.

Both members agreed strongly that playing live is what really fuels the band's engine. The energy they feel onstage, as well as the connection to the audience, is something they feel no other experience can give them.

After watching their performance at Uptown, there is no denying the truth in what they said. Playing stirring renditions of new songs such as "Passerby," as well as older numbers, including "Bang Bang" and "Bullet Holes," Dispatch kept an undeniable hold over the audience for the entire show. The crowd favorite, "The General," sent an electricity through the crowd that I have seldom seen at any concert.

The moment of the night may have been when the band dropped their guitars and jammed with drummer Brad Corrigan for a rare full band drum solo. The feeling of being onstage with the band was present throughout the evening.

The band said they have some pretty big opportunities opening up for them in the coming months, so be sure to watch for them throughout the summer. Check their website, <http://www.dispatchmusic.com/>, for any information.

Courtesy of www.studentcity.com

Dispatch comes back to Bucknell to perform for another packed house at Uptown.

and Led Zeppelin to the Beastie Boys and Red Hot Chili Peppers, the band's own mix of reggae, rap, funk and rock is no surprise. With the release of their latest album Who Are We Living For?, many fans felt that the heavier, more rock-driven songs foreshadowed change in the band. However, when talking to members Chad Urnst and Pete Heimbald before the concert, Urnst said he doesn't think the album sounds any different from their previous work.

"We don't think this album was much of a

Arts & Entertainment

National Orchestra of Spain performs for a captive Weis Center audience

By LACY GONZALEZ
Staff Writer

A crowd filled the Weis Center on Friday, Mar. 2, and as the lights dimmed the audience eagerly waited to hear the renowned National Orchestra of Spain (Orquesta Nacional de España).

The orchestra, composed of over 120 professional musicians, has performed in numerous concert venues across Europe, the United States, Latin America and Asia, as well as its official home, Spain's National Auditorium. It performs an extensive repertoire of beautiful 18th-, 19th-, and 20th-century orchestral compositions and does a great deal to promote lesser-known contemporary Spanish compositions.

The orchestra's conductor, Rafael Fruhbeck de Burgos, is the music director of the Radio Symphony Orchestra in Berlin. He is a regular guest conductor of most major European ensembles, and has also conducted most of the major orchestras in the United States and Canada.

Maestro Fruhbeck de Burgos was not the only famous musician in the program. The concert included pieces featuring award-winning piano soloist Leonel Morales and guitar soloist Pepe Romero, second generation in the legendary Romero guitar family and consequently the Romero Quartet.

The program included pieces by Spanish composers Isaac Albéniz, Joaquín Rodrigo, Antón García Abril and Manuel de Falla. From the moment when the first lively notes of "Castilla" from "Suite Española" were released, the huge, pure sound of the full orchestra and the contemporary pieces with subtle Spanish flavor kept the audience rapt and waiting. The music snapped with castanets and vibrated with flamenco guitar strumming.

The first piece, "Suite Española," was written by Spanish nationalist composer Isaac Albéniz and consists of five movements, each representing a city or province of Spain. These ranged from "Granada," a low, nostalgic serenade, to "Sevilla," a light-hearted piece inspired by gypsy dances.

Then followed "Concierto de Aranjuez," written by Joaquín Rodrigo, a prominent Spanish nationalist and French composer who was blind from the age of three. This piece featured Pepe Romero and included the mournful "Adagio," which includes a poignant dialogue between guitar and French horn and was a favorite of audience members.

The third piece, "Concierto for Piano and Orchestra" by Antón García Abril, was commissioned in 1966 for the "Radio Nacional de España" and featured three contrasting movements and brilliant piano solos by Leonel Morales.

The last two pieces were written by Manuel de Falla and were derived from a racy folk ballet called "The Three Corners Hat."

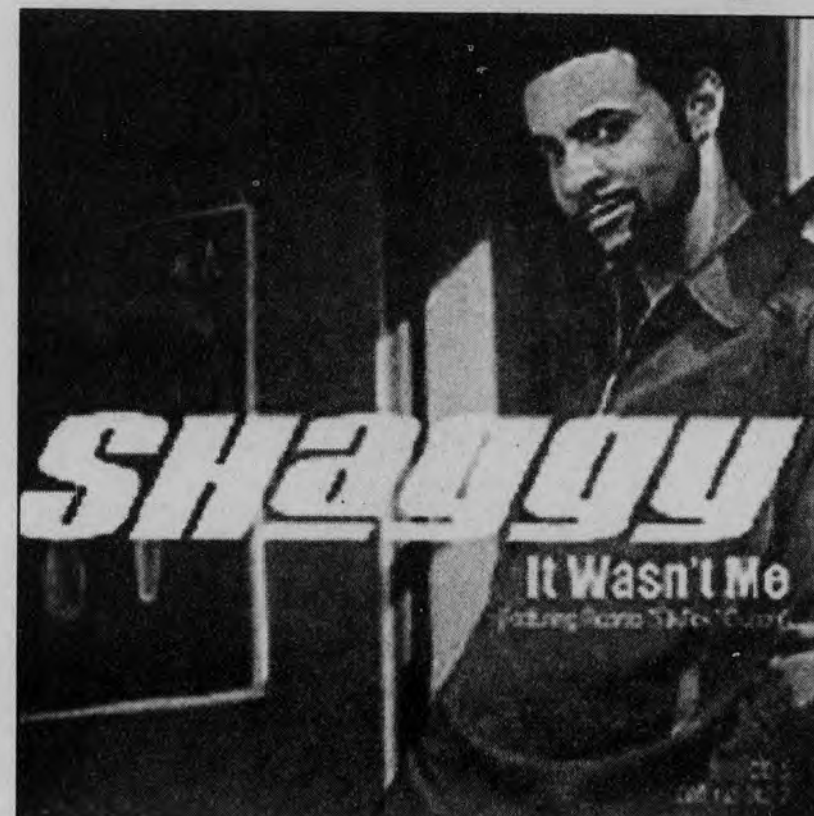

The concert ended with an encore and appreciative applause. Not a word of introduction, explanation, or salutation was spoken at all during this event. The concert was given in complete silence, excepting the music. Whether this was due to the language barrier or not, it served to prove the existence of music as a form of communication on its own. No words were needed to further the swelling sounds of a full orchestra and the shimmering brilliance of brass instruments, flying violin bows, and the rich shades of brown and gold in the Weis Center.

Columbia Artists Management Inc.

Guitarist Pepe Romero joined the Orchestra on their trip to campus.

Top acts coming to campus in April

Shaggy in the Fieldhouse!
Don't miss this one.
Tickets on sale now.
April 20.

KC and the Sunshine Band plays at Chrystalis.
April 28 in the Fieldhouse.

Friends and Survivor battle on Thursday nights

By ALEX COSTOS
Staff Writer

Let me ask you one question: what do you watch at 8 p.m. on Thursday nights? If you watch NBC or CBS, you are participating in a very well-planned battle between television networks—a battle that will be ongoing until the end of "Survivor: The Australian Outback."

CBS's "Survivor" dominated the 28 rolled around, "Survivor 2" held on to 78 percent of the Super Bowl's audience. There were 45.4 million people watching the premiere—7.5 million people less than the 52.9 million people watching the special episode of "Friends" that followed the Super Bowl in 1996. The competition then leaned in favor of NBC, but finally on Feb. 1 at 8 p.m., the shows went head-to-head.

"Friends" lost its title for being the most popular show at 8 p.m. on Thursday nights. 28.8 million people watched "Survivor 2," while 22.1 million faithful fans watched "Friends."

While the still very popular "Friends" may have lost the first head-to-head battle and several ones following that, they are still putting together ways to try and increase the number of viewers in the future. Winona Ryder will be guest starring in an upcoming episode and there is a rumor that she will participate in a kiss with one of the female "Friends" stars. How about that for a ratings booster? We'll see.

Whether you watch "Survivor: The Australian Outback," or remain a "Friends" fanatic, there is always something to watch on Thursday nights at 8 p.m.

Courtesy of www.friendsplace.com

Dave Matthews Band brings a new style to his latest CD

By CHAD FLOOD
Staff Writer

For most of the Bucknell community, nothing could be more exciting than a new release by the Dave Matthews Band. I personally have seen over a dozen of their shows and will continue to do so until they decide to stop performing. After three studio efforts and numerous live recordings of the acoustic, folk, jazz and rock blend that has made DMB one of the top acts in America, most people would imagine they know what to expect from a new album. Everyday, released Feb. 27, proved them wrong.

The songs are short and snappy, the melodies are catchier, and the electric guitar dominates on most of the album. Replacing producer Steve Lillywhite with pop mogul Glen Ballard, the Dave Matthews Band has created 12 new tracks that will surprise even the most diehard fans.

While tracks like "When the World Ends" and "Everyday" will show that the band has not completely departed from their original song-writing efforts, the overall feel of the album is unlike anything on their previous records. The guitar riffs are quick and almost impulsive, leading to more of a rock ambience than classic DMB sound. However, this turns out to be a great way for the band to expand its musical catalog while still keeping close ties to its roots. The intro to the jumpy "So Right" screams urgency, and the electric hum on slower tracks like "The Space Between" and "If I Had It All" (my favorite track) give them a fullness that could not be reached if Matthews had decided to stay with the acoustic guitar.

The Dave Matthews Band has a reputation as one of the best live bands in America, finishing third in total concert revenue last year, coming in behind Tina Turner and "NSYNC. They often perform long jams and improvisations in their act, making each show unique. With Everyday, Ballard realized these tactics were not necessarily studio-friendly, and helped the band to produce an album that can be listened to at home.

Many fans worry that the new songs will not play well when the band tours this summer. I had the privilege to witness "I Did It," the first single, live at a recent taping of the "Late Show with David Letterman," and I can honestly say there is no reason to get nervous. As for both Everyday and the upcoming summer tour—these songs rock.

Get in touch with your artistic side.
Write for A&E
Call Krista at 75255

Fraternities - Sororities - Clubs - Student Groups

Student Groups earn $1,000 - $2,000 this semester with the easy Campusfundraiser.com three hour fundraising event. No sales required. Fundraising dates are filling up quickly, so call today! Contact Campusfundraiser.com at (888) 923-3238, or visit our website at www.campusfundraiser.com

BIRTHRIGHT of Sunbury

Free Pregnancy Test
Confidential Counseling
Pregnancy Support Services

Hours: Mon - Wed - Fri 12:30 to 4 pm

351 Woodlawn Ave.
Sunbury, Pa. 17837

570-286-8560
1-800-550-4900

BUSINESS & POLITICS

Stock market takes a dive; Federal Reserve intervenes with rate cut

By MICHAEL GORMAN
Staff Writer

What began as the bursting of the tech-bubble has turned into a full-fledged bear market on Wall Street.

Previously, market declines were the result of over-valued dot-coms that finally got a dose of reality. Now, the uneasiness has spread to all sectors of the market. Weak corporate sales and falling expectations have driven both major indexes down in recent weeks.

Last week the Dow Jones Industrial Average (DJIA), representing mainly blue chips, was down over 800 points in one of the worst weeks ever. This week had not been as severe, until Wednesday, when the Dow Jones closed at a two-year low, according to Reuters. Whatever recovery had been made was lost.

Furthermore, certain sectors of the economy—such as airline tickets, clothing and medical care—showed the beginnings of inflationary pressures, lessening the possibility of another market-pleasing rate cut any time soon.

At the outset of the week, there was a glimmer of hope as the markets rebounded in anticipation of the Federal Open Market Committee (FOMC) meeting on Tuesday. Unfortunately, the committee and its venerable chairman cut rates by 50 basis points, 25 points less than many on the Street were looking for, and hoping for. The DJIA ended the day down 240 points.

Tuesday's rate cut was not as deep as Wall Street had hoped, the resulting stock sell off shed hundreds of points off of NASDAQ and Dow Jones.

The FOMC must be careful over the next few months. Granted, it must act independently, and was not designed to be a slave to market expectations, but if it continues to take action that markets perceive as weak, it risks losing the confidence of investors.

If people no longer believe that the FOMC will take strong enough actions to help the nation recover, the committee could lose a great deal of its influence.

If the markets continue to falter, the overall economy could be in even more trouble. More than ever, financial markets and economic health are tied together. Over 40 percent of Americans have a stake in the financial markets, whether through retirement accounts or direct investment. A large decline in the financial markets would mean a massive reduction in wealth for those with money invested.

Healthy levels of consumer spending and consumer confidence are necessary to pull an economy out of a slowdown; decreases in wealth due to declines in the financial markets will similarly cause confidence and spending to fall. These decreases in spending and confidence will further hurt corporate profits, resulting in a sort of self-fulfilling prophecy.

What is needed to stop this downward spiral is bold action to not only freeze the decrease in confidence and spending, but actually cause them to increase again.

In the long run, the difference between a 50-point cut and a 75-point cut is not significant enough to severely harm a recovery in any empirical sense. However, the psychological impact is immeasurable.

Actions such as larger tax cuts may allow people to believe that the government is taking necessary action, and will instill in them renewed confidence in the health of the economy.

Common political misconceptions explored

President Bush and his entourage—including Pennsylvania Gov. Tom Ridge (right)—tour a small business in Beaver, PA.

Abortion, tax cuts, and thick-headed, cold-hearted Republicans: Does the American public have it all wrong? Staff Writer Dominic Puccio investigates.

Over the past few months I have become irritated with the numerous misconceptions surrounding George W. Bush and the Republican Party. Too many Americans have bought into the lies and propaganda created and circulated by liberal Democrats.

We've all heard this one: Bush's tax cut favors the rich. It caters to the top one-percent. In her article "About those Reagan tax cuts," columnist Mona Charen paraphrases Senator Tom Daschle, D-S.D., who whines that those Americans making larger salaries will receive a larger refund. Um, I know this is third grade math and all, but shouldn't those who pay more in taxes get more back?

In fact, if we are to be truthful, it is really the wealthy who get the short end of the stick. Ms. Charen explains that it is fair for the upper classes to pay more in taxes, because a specific percentage applied to a larger number will yield a greater product than if applied to a smaller number. However, it is not fair that tax rates increase progressively—in other words, the wealthy are forced to pay a larger percentage of their income to the government.

According to the Internal Revenue Service, an individual making $26,250 dollars a year pays 28% of his income to the government, whereas an individual making $268,350 a year pays 39.6% to the government. The wealthy are being penalized for making more money; these are the politics of redistributing the wealth—socialism. Even after the tax cut, it is the wealthy, not the poor, who receive the raw end of the deal.

Here's a second argument: evil and to be defeated, evidence, libel, report this claims such anti-abortion respect for a woman's right to choose," or "They want to drill in Alaska because they hate the environment."

These comments, and countless others, are nothing but downright lies. Conservatives oppose abortion because they view it as the murder of an innocent human life. Conservatives promote drilling in Alaska because they realize we must find a domestic source for oil in order to reduce dependence on OPEC and foreign countries. To continue importing oil at the rate we do today is to keep oil-rich leaders like Saddam Hussein in power. The statement "Republicans are evil" is an accusation, not an argument, and it cannot be supported.

Here's my favorite misconception: George W. Bush is stupid. Ooh, way to go! You figured out the secret—W. is really a moron! I can't believe how many people actually buy into this outrageous lie. If only I could count the number of times I've heard someone say, "Bush! That man couldn't even tie his own shoes!" Political analysts echo similar sentiments, as do the talk shows, comedians, sketch comedy programs, and so on.

In truth, George W. Bush is an extremely intelligent man. According to his official biography, A Charge to Keep, he graduated from Yale University with a bachelor's degree and received an M.B.A. from Harvard Business School. For a short time he served as managing general partner of the Texas Rangers baseball franchise, and subsequently was elected to consecutive four-year terms as the Governor of Texas.

The best is the way Bush handles this criticism. He's heard it, he knows about it, and he doesn't seem to care. He has too much self-confidence to worry about what other people think of him. He just holds his head high and continues to do his job, contributing more in his first two months of office than Clinton did in eight years.

I'm not sure which is sadder: the fact that many Americans believe in these lies, or the fact that liberals sat around and came up with them. The ugly name-calling reminds me of third-graders on the playground at recess.

We as Americans must not accept the lies and propaganda of the liberal Democrats. We must be skeptical. We must question what we are told, question the common wisdom. We must seek the truth.

B&P... the page you don't bring home to mother. Email Mike, mboland@

Quote of the Week:

On "Perseverance Month":

"This is preservation month. I appreciate preservation. It's what you gotta do when you run for President. You gotta preserve."

—President George W. Bush
January 28, 2000 in N.H.

Bush reverses CO₂ campaign pledge

In light of recent energy crisis, greenhouse gas will not be regulated as a pollutant

By AMANDA KAUFMAN
Staff Writer

Heated debates concerning CO₂ emissions have surrounded Capitol Hill lately, and President Bush's contradictory statements have further muddled an already-complex issue.

On Sept. 29, the AP reported that then-candidate Bush promised to treat CO₂ emissions as pollutants when it came to power plant regulations. "We will require all power plants to meet clean air standards in order to reduce emissions of sulfur dioxide, nitrogen oxide, mercury and carbon dioxide within a reasonable period of time," said Candidate Bush.

However, President Bush has now decided not to pursue mandatory reductions in CO₂ output. This shift has distanced Bush from comments made by Environmental Protection Agency Administrator Christine Todd Whitman, and from some other Bush administration staffers who support CO₂ limitations.

Of the chemicals Bush mentioned in his speech, CO₂ is the only one not listed as a pollutant within Clean Air Act criteria. However, some environmentalists believe CO₂ is destructive. CO₂ is a key "greenhouse" gas that many scientists believe is contributing to global warming by retaining heat inside Earth's atmosphere.

But it has never been regulated as a pollutant under the Clean Air Act by cause it has no clearly defined detrimental human health or environmental impact, except as it applies to concerns about global warming.

Courtesy of www.sciencenews.org
President Bush has been criticized for a flip-flop on CO₂ emissions.

Despite these concerns, Bush has decided to put off pursuing CO₂ limitations. Since CO₂ is, among other things, a byproduct of the burning of fossil fuels and industrial activity, significant reductions of man-made CO₂ output would entail dramatic cutbacks in energy usage and industrial activity with potentially massive negative economic impacts.

The CO₂ issue will certainly be addressed again, according to Reuters. In a letter to Sen. Chuck Hagel (R-Neb.), Bush wrote that he still supports a "comprehensive and balanced energy policy that takes into account the importance of improving air quality." However, since the science about global warming is not yet settled, Bush believes "we have to research more fully what the causes are so we can know what the solutions are."

He is not willing to encourage a shift to natural gas during a time of economic doubt, high oil prices, and limited oil supplies. But Bush's statements do leave open the window of hope that when the economic and energy situations are improved, the issue can be reopened.

A decision may come sooner than expected, though. Republican Senators Jim Jeffords of Vermont and Susan Collins of Maine joined Republican Rep. Sherwood Boehlert of New York in cosponsoring corresponding legislation with Sen. Joe Lieberman (D-Conn.) and Rep. Henry Waxman (D-Calif.).

Similar legislation was introduced last year, getting the support of 122 House members and 15 senators. "This year's numbers should be much higher since this is the number one issue for the environmental community," predicted Jonathan Banks, deputy director of the group Clear the Air.

If Congress were to pass this legislation, the president could still block it with a veto.

As Sen. Larry Craig (R-Idaho) put

it, "If you attempt to regulate carbon dioxide, you will regulate us into a permanent energy crisis in this country."

How is CO₂ so crucially related to the energy crisis and the economy? Bush said he now fears CO₂ regulations would lead to higher electricity prices as more utilities shift to natural gas from cheaper coal. Gas emits far less CO₂ than coal, which now runs half the nation's power plants. Many Americans have made the painful realization that gas is not as readily available as they may wish.

Bush defended his switch in policy, telling White House reporters that he has adopted a "common sense" approach. He explained, "We use a lot of coal and we need a lot of coal [to run the country]. ... I was responding to reality, and reality is the nation has got a real problem when it comes to energy."

Republicans siding with Bush fear that CO₂ limitations right now would lead to severe economic distress reminiscent of the gas lines of the 1970's. In fact, the Competitive Enterprise Institute analysis of the Energy Department report showed that CO₂ caps on power plants would cost $60 to $115 billion a year.

"This means that the entire (Bush) tax cut would be swallowed up by entire CEI analyst Chris Horner.

The CO₂ issue will certainly be addressed again, according to Reuters. In a

Bucknellian

The weekly campus newspaper of Bucknell University

March 30, 2001

http://www.orgs.bucknell.edu/bucknellian

Volume 127, Number 8

Features

Student spends spring break at Dominican Republic orphanage. See page B4

Sports

Water polo captains guide team to become league contenders. See page A6

Jeff Greenfield of CNN will speak at Commencement. Courtesy of CNN.com

President Bush and his entourage—including Pennsylvania Gov. Tom Ridge (right)—tour a small business in Beaver, PA.

Jeff Greenfield, senior analyst for CNN's "Inside Politics," will be the keynote speaker for Commencement on Sunday, May 20. Greenfield covered the 2000 presidential election for CNN, along with then President Bill Clinton's impeachment and trial, the death of John F. Kennedy Jr. and, most recently, he hosted CNN's seven-part series, "Democracy in America."

"We're extremely pleased that Jeff Greenfield has accepted our offer to speak at this year's Commencement," University President Steffen Rogers said. "I'm looking forward to hearing his remarks."

The Commencement Speaker Committee asked seniors, by means of email, who they wanted to address the class of 2001 during the Commencement service.

"We received quite a few responses; students requested a broad range of individuals including athletes, news anchors, comedians, politicians, television show hosts and other figures in the media," Senior Class President and committee member Kristy Wagner said. "Before compiling students and committee members' suggestions, we met with President Rogers to discuss the characteristics we should seek in a speaker."

According to Wagner, the Committee members offered the biographies of possible candidates to be read in Commencement Speaker Committee meetings. The Committee also had to consider its budget and the availability of speakers.

"While a big name celebrity speaker would make commencement more memorable for some people, I think that it is more important to have someone who can speak appropriately about the real world we are about to enter," Jeff Sharpe '01 said.

According to Wagner, the Committee reviewed the biographies of possible candidates before making a recommendation to Rogers. Rogers asked Greenfield earlier in this week to be the keynote speaker for graduation. Greenfield confirmed late Wednesday afternoon.

BSG acquires administrative link for cable TV issue

By RACHEL LASKOW
News Layout Editor

For the past year and a half, Bucknell Student Government's (BSG) Fiscal Committee has been investigating the implications of installing cable TV on campus. Last Friday, the Committee took another step in the process and met with Associate Vice President for Information Services and Resources (ISR) Ray Metz, Interim Vice President for Student Affairs Charles Pollock '70 and Director of Housing and Residential Life Dan Remley to propose cable to the administration.

After the meeting, Pollock agreed to be the liaison between the students and the administration. "My role is to ask the President's Staff if this is enough of an issue to authorize the ISR staff to expedite the investigation of what it will cost and how long it will take," Pollock said. "BSG has done a lot of good leg work. They need the University to step in at this point and get answers to those key questions."

The Committee is pleased to be working with Pollock. "His support is definitely essential for the progress to continue with getting cable TV and he seems like he's willing to make the effort to get the administration to decide how they feel," Committee member Katy Timmer '04 said.

Cost is one of the largest obstacles in bringing cable to dorm rooms. According to the Committee, it will cost approximately $750,000 to $1,000,000 to install cable. There will also be additional costs such as upkeep, personnel and billing.

"It's a considerable sum of money. Once we verify how much, the next questions are 'Is it worth it?' and 'How do we pay for it?'" Pollock said.

The Committee has researched numerous funding options, such as adding money to the Student Activities Fee or a BSG school-wide referendum to give money to the project.

"We have collected all the information and done the research and now we need the help of someone that can make the decision to fund cable," Committee member Emily Rentschler '03 said.

If cable is installed, there will be access to news programs such as CNN and faculty could have TV channels for classes.

During the last semester, the Committee conducted a student survey and received 40 responses: 93.1 percent want cable TV and 6.8 percent do not. Of the 93.1 percent, 60.4 percent prefer cable as a mandatory service while 32.7 percent prefer cable as an optional service.

Sixty-seven percent of the students would be willing to pay for the service while 33 percent would not be willing to pay.

"While cable TV will be used for entertainment and sports, I know a lot of students also want cable to stay informed about news around the area and world. When we did surveys of the students, there were over two thirds in favor of getting cable television so there is definitely student support," Timmer said. "Faculty, particularly economics and other departments, will like the idea of having campus stations, which would be available to show videos for."

Pollock agrees that students will be more informed with the addition of cable. Although cable will be used for entertainment purposes, it also has educational value. The University will have up to five channels to air class videos and on-campus programs.

"[Cable] has potential to better connect students with what's going on in the

BSG assesses Fair Wage campaign

BCEJ urges BSG to endorse the campaign that would give University workers an income above the poverty line, writes news editor Laura Day

Since the most recent issue of the Catalyst, a publication of the Bucknell Coalition for Economic Justice (BCEJ), the debate for a "Fair Wage" for all University employees has intensified. At Sunday's Bucknell Student Government (BSG) meeting, as representatives of the administration, Director of Personnel Services Cathy Sweeney and University Controller Dennis Swank participated in a question and answer session with students. BSG is debating an endorsement to support the Fair Wage Campaign at the University.

Swank echoes that sentiment.

"Bucknell has always maintained wage rates that are competitive and in most cases above the regional market because of the expectations we have for the staff," Swank said. Sweeney said that since the University strives to offer employees optimal compensation packages, there is little need for third-party involvement, such as unions.

"In addition to paying competitive wages, the University's total compensation package includes an excellent set of employee benefits," Swank said. "For example, the University provides comprehensive health care insurance options for employees and their dependents. The budget for this benefit alone will exceed $6 million in 2001-02 and is increasing at rates of more than 20 percent annually."

However, members of BCEJ worry that the administration won't further aid employees by giving them a living wage.

"The administration's ambivalence is somewhat troublesome. If the administration's stance is one that avoids third parties, then who is going to help these people and their families? The University certainly hasn't so far," BCEJ member Raymond Prushnok '01 said.

Funding remains a principal obstacle to a living wage for University employees. In preparation for the BSG meeting, Swank conducted a preliminary analysis on the funding for a fair wage campaign. Although the Catalyst reported that providing all University employees with a living wage would cost approximately $500,000 annually, Swank estimated the amount to be "three to four times that."

"It is also important to note that this is not a one-time expense, but would be built into all future operating budgets," Swank said.

Swank emphasized that by increasing salaries to $9, all other salaries would most likely be proportionately increased—a very large expenditure.

According to Swank, there are

See WAGE, page A2

Chris Rivera—The Bucknellian
Greek Week featured karaoke and band performances (above) and "mud" wrestling (right) by members of fraternities and sororities. See page A2 for the story.

Chris Rivera—The Bucknellian

Ads spark controversy on campuses

An ethically questionable ad campaign is causing problems for college newspapers

By MICHAEL BOLAND

Business and Politics Editor

College newspapers around the country have come under unusually tough scrutiny in the last 30 days. An ad campaign originally intended to spark discussion has degenerated into a political free-for-all focused on volatile issues of race, the limits of free speech and the current state of political dialogue on college campuses.

Controversy arose when several student newspapers published a full-page advertisement created by David Horowitz, conservative scholar and president of the Center for the Study of Popular Culture.

In the ad created during Black History Month, Horowitz offered, "Ten Reasons Why Reparations for Slavery is a Bad Idea—and Racist Too."

The arguments contained therein have subsequently been described as everything from "eminently sensible," by columnist Tony Snow to "racist propaganda," by demonstrators at the University of Wisconsin.

In the ad, Horowitz argues that "there is no single group responsible for the crime of slavery" and many modern-day Americans have no connection to those who owned slaves. In fact, many have an ancestor who gave their lives to free slaves. According to Horowitz, slavery reparations is a "separatist" idea that will pit American against American, feeding a harmful, "victims" mentality among blacks.

Some minority students took offense to Horowitz's arguments and demanded apologies from papers that had published his ad. Some agreed, while others, such as Brown University's Daily Herald and Wisconsin's Daily Herald, refused, citing their freedom to publish advertisements of an ideological nature (within "reasonable limits"), an unscientific TIME poll from February 2000 registered 75 percent public opposition to the idea of reparations for slavery.

Speaking on "Fox News Sunday," Horowitz dismissed the idea that his view of reparations makes him a racist, instead focusing on the larger issue of stifled conservative thought and "racial McCarthyism [on college campuses]... any time a non-black person criticizes the self-appointed black-left leadership, they're accused of racism or they're accused of not caring about African-Americans."

According to Horowitz's website,

See AD, page B6

Sweeney examines merit-aid policy

By ANDREW BURR
Sports Editor

Three weeks ago the Patriot League awoke to a new challenge—the advent of academic and athletic merit-based aid for the first time in the BSG's ten-year history. Today, the challenge lies with each individual institution, representing potentially tremendous—albeit uncertain—opportunities for the schools involved.

The University, like the six other Patriot League members who participated in the academic/athletic aid policy debate, now faces the issues involved in offering new forms of aid.

Perhaps no person on this campus better understands those issues like Management Professor Tim Sweeney, the University's NCAA Faculty Athletics Representative (FAR).

In addition to teaching at the University for 21 years, Sweeney has been the FAR for Bucknell for 10 years. As the faculty representative to the NCAA, Sweeney's primary function is to "play a role in the institution such that the academic welfare of the student athlete is being respected."

Sweeney's other duties as FAR involve serving on the Committee of Athletics at Bucknell, which is comprised of faculty, athletic administrators and students who handle any conflicts between academics and athletics, participating in University search committees to hire various athletic department personnel, administering coaching certification tests and meeting regularly with Athletic Director John Hardt to stay aware of departmental policies and practices.

With firm knowledge and an extensive background in the school's athletic and academic history, Sweeney is a rigid advocate of the new opportunities afforded to the University by the recent affirmation of athletic merit-scholarships.

"Historically, this league has run into great difficulty competing successfully outside of the conference," he said. "In order for the Patriot League to compete effectively and provide an opportunity for success to our student athletes, athletic merit aid becomes an important element."

In addition to the commitment to competitive athletics the University must provide to its student-athletes, Sweeney believes that the merit-aid policy—if administered properly—it can be used to enhance the University's academic profile in regard to student athletes.

As a direct academic recruiting competitor with the Patriot League, the Ivy League now stands alone as the only Division I conference that does not issue merit-based scholarships. Whereas the Ivy League has brand name equity (a substantial amount of prestige associated with the university), the Patriot League, according to Sweeney, may be able to lure more academically successful student-athletes away from the Ivy League in the future with merit-based athletic scholarships.

Critics of merit scholarships contend that negative aspects of collegiate athletics—commercialization, high ticket prices, the compromise of academic goals in exchange for sports—will accompany the Patriot League's decision to issue scholarships. Ironically, the decision comes on the heels of best-selling author John Feinstein's release of The Last Amateurs, a book that lauds the forgotten value of the League's academics-first mentality.

But, according to Sweeney, "We have to remember that there are very fine institutions that have earned excellent academic reputations that are very strong in athletics."

Although he acknowledges that Bucknell "is not aspiring to be a Di-

See SWEENEY, page A2

Public Safety Log

March 22, 2001

INFORMATION/UNREGISTERED PARTY—While on routine patrol, Public Safety observed activity that indicated an unregistered party at Kappa Delta Rho Fraternity. The house officers stated that there were unwanted guests in the house. Public Safety assisted the Fraternity in removing unwanted guests from the house.

TAMPERING WITH FIRE EQUIPMENT—Public Safety responded to a fire alarm at Swartz Hall and found that unknown person(s) had activated a pull station. The alarm was reset. The incident is under investigation.

VANDALISM/THIEF OF SERVICES—An employee reported that a copy machine had been vandalized in Dana Engineering. Upon investigation, Public Safety observed that unknown person(s) had bypassed the card access unit in order to produce free copies. The incident is under investigation.

March 23, 2001

INFORMATION—Public Safety responded to Harris Hall for the report of the odor of marijuana. The report was determined to be unfounded after a search of the area.

ACT 64 VIOLATION—Public Safety responded to Harris Hall for the report of a suspicious odor of marijuana. Drug paraphernalia was found during a plain view search of a room. Lewisburg Police Department was notified and responded to the scene. University and criminal charges are pending.

TAMPERING WITH FIRE EQUIPMENT—Public Safety responded to a fire alarm activation at Harris Hall where unknown person(s) had activated a pull station on the ground floor without purpose. The incident is under investigation.

March 24, 2001

ALCOHOL VIOLATION—Public Safety encountered a student in Vedder Hall who admitted to consuming alcohol while under the age of 21 years. Citations were issued for underage consumption and alcohol possession.

ASSIST LOCAL POLICE—DUI—While on routine patrol, Public Safety observed a vehicle pass through the intersection of Moore Ave and South 7th Street at a high rate of speed. Lewisburg Police Department was in pursuit of the vehicle and did execute a traffic stop. The vehicle operator was identified as a former University student. Citations were issued for driving under the influence and moving violations.

HARASSMENT BY COMMUNICATION—A student reported to Public Safety that he received harassing phone calls in a Swartz Hall room. The source of the phone calls was determined with caller ID. The student did not want to initiate criminal charges at this time. Public Safety is following up on the complaint.

ACT 64 VIOLATION—Public Safety responded to Kress Hall for the report of a suspicious odor of marijuana. Drug paraphernalia was found during a plain view search of the area. Lewisburg Police Department was notified and responded to the scene. University and criminal charges are pending.

UNDERAGE CONSUMPTION/PUBLIC DRUNKENNESS—Public Safety observed an intoxicated female student at Hunt Hall. The student admitted to Public Safety that she did consume alcohol earlier in the evening although under the age of 21 years. Citations were issued for underage consumption and public drunkenness.

March 25, 2001

UNDERAGE CONSUMPTION/OPEN CONTAINER—While on routine patrol, Public Safety observed a male student walking at the rear of Sigma Phi Epsilon Fraternity carrying a can of beer. The student was stopped, admitted having consumed alcohol although under the age of 21 years. Citations were issued for underage consumption and an open container violation.

UNDERAGE CONSUMPTION/PUBLIC INTOXICATION—While on routine patrol, Public Safety observed a student vomiting on Fraternity Road. Public Safety spoke to the student who admitted to consuming alcohol although under the age of 21 years. Citations were issued for underage consumption and public drunkenness.

LARCENY—An employee reported to Public Safety that unknown person(s) had damaged a candy machine located at Vedder Hall. The incident is under investigation.

INFORMATION/RECOVERED BIKE—Public Safety responded to Swartz Hall for the report of a bicycle left in the hallway. The bike was moved to Public Safety for storage.

INFORMATION/POSSIBLE ACT 64—Public Safety responded to Vedder Hall for the report of the odor of marijuana. The officers could not locate the smell in a search of the area and the report was determined to be unfounded.

ACT 64—Public Safety responded to Vedder Hall for the report of a suspicious odor of marijuana. Drug paraphernalia was found during a plain view search of a room. Lewisburg Police Department was notified and responded to the scene. University and criminal charges are pending.

THEFT—An employee reported to Public Safety that unknown person(s) did remove four computer keyboards and four mice from computers located inside Dana Engineering. The incident is under investigation.

March 27, 2001

INFORMATION/ASSIST RA—Public Safety responded to Larison Hall to assist a Resident Assistant with students who were alleged to be stealing items from the building. The students admitted to taking dry markers from doors. Citations for property violations were issued.

House Party Weekend begins

By REBECCA ROWLAND
Editor-in-Chief

House Party Weekend, which was changed in early February from the first weekend in April to this weekend due to a conflict with Passover, officially begins today at 5 p.m.

Although rain is expected, most events will still be held outside as scheduled. Because University policy mandates that all fraternity parties move inside after 10 p.m., rainy evenings should not dampen any spirits.

In order to regulate the event, wristbands will be required for all students and guests wishing to attend events. Twenty-one-year-old students wishing to consume alcohol must wear a second wristband. The purpose of the wristbands, according to Dean of Fraternity and Sorority Affairs Roy Baker, is to keep unwanted "visitors" from attending the event which is strictly for students, their registered guests and alumni.

This will be the first House Party Weekend for both Dean of Students Richard Ferraro and University President Steffen Rogers. Speculation has been rampant as to whether either want to do away with this tradition.

"I don't think either will [do away with House Party] unless the students give them a reason to," IFC President Jarrell Gunther '02 said. "As long as everyone acts responsibly and there are no major issues, I think we will have House Party in years to come."

Greek Week events attract freshmen

In a twist of "American Gladiators" meeting "Double Dare" and "Star Search" meeting Disney World, Greek Week showcased the excitement and friendly competition of the fraternities and sororities at the University. Because the chilly weather, things were certainly heating up at the Mud Tween mud wrestling, a lip synch competition, a carnival and a God and Goddess competition. Greek Week previews the anticipated highlights: House Party Weekend.

Greek Week is an annual event to introduce freshmen to the Greek System, before recruitment officially starts next fall. At each event this past week, freshmen got a taste of what the Greek scene is all about.

Sponsored by the Interfraternity Council and Panhellenic, this year's Greek Week demonstrated the spirit of the award-winning fraternity and sorority system at the University. Each act received an enthusiastic set of unofficial backup singers as the audience chimed in.

At the end of the day, it was a tie for the girls karaoke acts, with Kappa Kappa Gamma and Kappa Alpha Theta vying for the points.

Talent resounded all over campus on Wednesday as Bucknell saw rare and unimaginable stunts being performed at the God and Goddess of the University competition. Schuyler Patton '01 of Sigma Phi Epsilon was crowned Greek God and Laura Hager '03 of Pi Beta Phi was the 2001 Greek Goddess.

Students recaptured the elusive youthful enthusiasm at a carnival held in the fieldhouse on Thursday.

Today kicks off the culmination of Greek Week with a weekend full of entertainment, barbecues and great live music. All the fraternities will bust open their doors and welcome in the campus in a celebration of House Party.

CABLE From page A1

wider world. I'm not sure all of it is beneficial. I defer personally to others who have made arguments that students feel arbitrarily isolated from a universe of information and from entertainment available via that medium," Pollock said.

Although students have the Internet and newspapers to receive information, cable will add another venue.

"The Internet and newspapers are effective in helping to escape the Bucknell bubble, but having the ability to view such events as the Olympics and Presidential election, without having to fight to watch them in the TV lounges, will take this effort even further,"

Former Committee Chair Jason Dolan '01 said.

Those opposed to installing cable fear excessive indulgence in entertainment TV. Supporters of cable TV insist students are able to use their own discretion in time management.

"The incorrect sentiment that has been expressed in the past was that students would spend too much time in their rooms watching meaningless television. The University needs to treat the students like the adults we are, and have confidence in our ability to manage our schedules. I think they are now getting that message," BSG President Nate Sorber '02 said.

Although cable TV is not definite, there has been a lot of progress made since the issue first came to BSG.

"When the issue first came to BSG over a year ago, there were many doubts about whether we could actually change something that we were told would be impossible," Dolan said. "We are now at a point where there is great deal of confidence that in the near future students will be able to access cable from their rooms, whether it be through the internet or their television sets."

According to Timer, the next step in the process is to get money and support.

Pollock agrees that the issue needs more importance in order for it to progress.

"We are at a point where we need more information to come to any reliable answer. The key to that is assigning the issue enough importance to allow the ISR staff to devote time to gather information and verify what BSG has done in a preliminary way," Pollock said.

Panhellenic President Katie Richardson '02 echoes this sentiment.

"That is a definite possibility if the students do not control themselves and respect the rules and regulations. However, I am confident that everyone will act responsibly and respectfully. We have gone to great lengths to educate the entire campus about what is expected of them this weekend," Richardson said.

Ferraro expects the event to run smoothly, but is aware of the potential problems if students use poor judgment.

"In talking to my staff, they have emphasized that a vast majority of folks enjoy Houseparty in a good and responsible way, that they respect the privilege and the tradition," Ferraro said. "But as one might expect, I have also heard some less complimentary accounts, about a small minority which acts foolishly and thoughtlessly."

The Office of Housing and Residential Life (OHL) is also becoming more vigilant this year; the outside doors to each residence hall will be locked starting Friday at 5 p.m. until Sunday morning in anticipation of the high number of non-student visitors on campus. They remind everyone to keep their keys with them at all times.

"I will look forward to seeing folks on Friday evening, and my wife and I will help staff the hotdog brigade on Saturday," Ferraro said.

Wristbands can be purchased at the hospitality station behind the library up until midnight tonight and during the day on Saturday.

Next Issue:

Men's lax vs. Hobart
Baseball vs. Lafayette
Softball vs. Lehigh
Men's tennis vs. Colgate
Women's tennis vs. Lehigh

Come-from-behind wins lift Bison

Strong second half play propels men's lax over Mount St. Mary's and Lafayette

By PAT EVANS
Staff Writer

The no. 13 Bucknell Men's Lacrosse team had back-to-back come-from-behind victories against Mount Saint Mary's, 14-10, and Lafayette, 14-9, after a Tuesday trip to Maryland had the Bison running home after losing to the no. one ranked Terps 8-4.

Saturday's game against Lafayette was the most important of the stretch because of its implications on the Bison winning the Patriot League. Bucknell remains undefeated in Conference play, and if they continue to dominate the League, they will have an automatic birth into the NCAA tournament.

Lafayette drew blood first, but the Orange and Blue retaliated immediately, jumping all over the Leopards and fashioned a 7-2 halftime lead. It was Rob Lane '03 that initiated the run for the Bison with two quick goals that disintegrated the only lead Lafayette would possess.

Dennis Geraghty '03 scored five goals in the game, despite being keyed on by Lafayette's defense. Although he didn't get things going on early, he scored four goals in the third quarter to put the Leopards away. "The offense was really going well," Geraghty said. "I was just finding the open seam and was in the right place at the right time."

Coach Sid Jamieson was pleased with the overall effort of his team, and felt that they got it done on both ends of the field. "The defensive end was creating good opportunities on offense," coach Jamieson said. "The longer the contest went the better it was for us."

The Mount Saint Mary's game was even more of a challenge for the Bison as they were down at halftime 7-5.

"We just weren't cashing in on the

Chris Rivera—The Bucknellian
Rob Lane '03 jukes the Lafayette goalkeeper and nets a goal for BU.

opportunities," coach Jamieson said. "But we realized it was a two half game."

The Bison came out after halftime and had a dominating third quarter that was the deciding factor in the game. Geraghty and Andrew Sanders '03 led the charge with two goals apiece while Michael Cheng '01 and Lane each scored their second goals of the game.

In the third quarter the Bison outscored three goals in the third quarter, putting the Bison in a commanding position.

"This is like bringing UCLA, Duke, Temple in here to play basketball," coach Jamieson said. "But we're very excited about this challenge, and we know that we can compete with these teams."

The Bison's schedule doesn't get any easier as they go on to face a very important League game against strongest team in the League, no. 12 Hobart. Georgetown, another nationally ranked team, will be right after that.

"This is like bringing UCLA, Duke, Temple in here to play basketball," coach Jamieson said. "But we're very excited about this challenge, and we know that we can compete with these teams."

Softball ironing out kinks after 2-6 week

Bison split doubleheaders with Albany and Siena but swept by Rider and Columbia

By BROOKE REA
Sports Editor

The Bison softball team went 2-6 in four doubleheaders over the past week, splitting a pair of games with Albany on Saturday and Siena on Sunday. Friday the Orange and Blue dropped two to Columbia and Tuesday they were defeated in both games at Rider. This weekend the team opens up Patriot League competition confident that all of its kinks have been worked out.

"For our last eight games we have been very inconsistent," Tri-Captain Steph Morgan '01 said. "We are not playing up to our potential. Our defense has been good, but our offense is not where it should be."

An offensive slump seemed to be the problem in Friday's contest with Columbia, as the Bison had trouble getting on the board in their first home game of the season. It wasn't until the fourth inning that a hit from junior outfielder Lauren Titus sent tri-captain Jenna Demetriades '02 in for

Chris Rivera—The Bucknellian
Pitcher Brandi Porter '03 throws to Kelly Dugan '02 for the force out.

dominant on the offensive end, slowly building its lead with one run in the second inning, three in the fourth and four in the fifth en route to the 8-0 victory. The day's play was highlighted by outstanding pitching from sophomore Brandi Porter, who struck out seven in the first game against Columbia.

"Our pitchers are moving the dominant on the offensive end, slowly building its lead with one run in the second inning, three in the fourth and four in the fifth en route to the 8-0 victory. The day's play was highlighted by outstanding pitching from sophomore Brandi Porter, who struck out seven in the first game against Columbia.

"Our pitchers are moving the dominant on the offensive end, slowly building its lead with one run in the second inning, three in the fourth and four in the fifth en route to the 8-0 victory. The day's play was highlighted by outstanding pitching from sophomore Brandi Porter, who struck out seven in the first game against Columbia.

"Our pitchers are moving the dominant on the offensive end, slowly building its lead with one run in the second inning, three in the fourth and four in the fifth en route to the 8-0 victory. The day's play was highlighted by outstanding pitching from sophomore Brandi Porter, who struck out seven in the first game against Columbia.

"Our pitchers are moving the dominant on the offensive end, slowly building its lead with one run in the second inning, three in the fourth and four in the fifth en route to the 8-0 victory. The day's play was highlighted by outstanding pitching from sophomore Brandi Porter, who struck out seven in the first game against Columbia.

"Our pitchers are moving the

Team of the Week:

The Men's lacrosse team beat Lafayette 14-9 and Mount St. Mary's 14-10. They fell to #1 Maryland 8-4 on Tuesday.

Athlete of the Week:

Lauren Potente '02

By DAVE TOMAINO
Staff Writer

When conjuring up thoughts of the 2001 Bucknell women's softball team, it was sure to be a season packed with offense. The Bison and their foes would get crooked numbers on the board, and the last team with bats in its hands would flex its muscles atop Mount Bucknell.

But no "Zena Warrior Princesses" are present at this year's bash. The women's softball team is exercising its right to bear arms this season, and Lauren Potente '02 has rarely been off target.

Head Coach Janelle Breneman has the explanation behind Potente's precision, "Lauren is getting ahead of the hitters, and establishing strikes with the first couple pitches."

This is allowing her more freedom of pitch selection and greater room for error. What has been more impressive this year for the "Mendoza hitters" could be the fact that she has walked only two batters in 30 innings of work or her perfect 4-0 record!

"You can attribute both to our overall successes as a team," said Breneman. "She is pitching well, and our defense is making the

Courtesy of Athletics Communication
Pitcher Lauren Potente '02.

Potente began the Bison surge this year on team's annual spring break trip to Florida. She posted a perfect 3-0 record, rendering two runs in 21 innings of work, while holding hitters just below the "Mendoza hitters". Those kinds of numbers would earn you a Cy Young in some leagues, but the Patriot League honored her performance by naming her their Pitcher of the Week.

"Lauren has this type of potential, I am not surprised by her performance thus far," Breneman said. When it happens every season it becomes a trend.

When it happens every season it becomes a trend.

When it happens every season it becomes a trend.

When it happens every season it becomes a trend.

Univeristy hosts alcohol screening

By ALY RENTROP
Staff Writer

The University will observe National Alcohol Screening Day, an event where students have the opportunity to complete a screening form asking specific questions about the individual's alcohol consumption, on Thursday, April 5.

Coordinator of Drug and Alcohol Programs Robert Thomas heads the screenings which have taken place the past few years. The purpose of the screenings is to subdue the binge drinking that occurs on campus. Thomas is responsible for most of the counseling for alcohol-related issues on campus.

The screenings originated from concerns about the amount of irresponsible drinking that occurs on campus, with a particular emphasis on curbing binge drinking. These tests are designed to help individuals assess their own drinking habits or those of their peers who have a possible drinking problem. Through a series of questions which are evaluated on site by Thomas or through outside consultation, students are able to receive input on their drinking tendencies or can help direct their peers at their help if it is needed. Thomas encourages students to fill out tests for their friends if they believe there is a need for them to seek help.

"[The screening] is for people who generally want to assess how their drinking is impacting their lives and the lives of others," Thomas said.

Thomas views this day as a way for students to not only identify whether they have a problem with alcohol, but to determine why they are having these problems.

Thomas hopes that individuals or groups of people utilize this day to heighten their awareness of their involvement with alcohol.

"This type of screening is designed to assist individuals in determining whether or not their current use of alcohol is problematic," Thomas said.

Thomas encourages students to contact him at his office in Zeigler Health Center at 577-1159 if they wish to learn more about their drinking habits or to discuss those of your peers.

The screening will take place from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. in the Scullery and from 4:30 to 6:00 p.m. in 2A14 on April 5 in the Langone Center.

Students who are unable to attend the screening day can call Thomas to set up an individual or group appointment

Chris Rivera—The Bucknellian
Members of the Student Emergency Response Volunteers (SERV) simulated an accident scene involving a collision between a drunk college student and a family last Saturday during a Siblings' Weekend event. SERV members cut the actors out of the wrecked vehicles, a LifeFlight helicopter airlifted a victim to Geisinger Hospital and the County Coroner removed one of the victims who "died" in the mock accident.

WAGE From page A1

only two ways to raise the funds needed to increase employee salaries: a raise in the comprehensive fee or a cutback in other expenditures. The Planning and Budget Committee assesses these options.

"One of the specific actions this group has suggested is adding hourly staff to the Planning and Budget Committee," Swank said. "A recommendation supporting the expansion of Planning and Budget Committee membership has been forwarded to that committee."

Members of BCEJ realize that the cost to the University of a living wage may be high. However, some students give priority to the moral issue at stake.

"This is not simply an issue of 'fiscal stringency.' We are setting an ethical precedent for ourselves and others to emulate," Prushnik said.

Members of BCEJ are working to raise awareness and gain support for the campaign through a school-wide petition. At press time, it was estimated that almost 1000 students, faculty and staff have signed the petition for a fair wage.

"BCEJ is the catalyst offer an opportunity for those to whom the University treats unjustly to be heard, providing a safe outlet for them to state how they are being wronged and their feelings about their situation," BCEJ member Rebecca Payack '01 said.

BCEJ has looked to other institutions for guidance, such as Wesleyan University, which provides its employees with a living wage with seemingly no increase in tuition.

While BSG continues to gather information from other universities, the administration, BCEJ and other groups on campus, it hopes to act on behalf of the students and make a decision before the end of the semester.

"If we choose to say that the living wage is important, it should be perceived that the students view this as a priority and the administration should interpret that as the student's voice," BSG President Nate Sorber '02 said. "When BCEJ initially came to BSG, the BSG representatives felt we only had one side of the issue. Before debating, we wanted the views of the administration and the students. Now, we think we have all the information compiled, an educated debate on the fair wage issue will be the next item on BSG's agenda."

"The University should not only be the nurturing mother of the student but also of the worker," Eosia Oghabon '01 said. The University needs to realize we are a community. Not only does the student feed at the tea of its nurturing mother but also the worker."

SWEENEY From page A1

vision I competitor in terms of a Duke or a Stanford, universities like Richmond and William and Mary balance strong academics with merit aid, and are more in our frame of reference."

The decision to issue merit aid in the Patriot League, while startling to some, did not surprise the professor.

"It's been an evolution very apparent to me in the mid 1990s," he said.

Sweeney cites broad changes in collegiate athletics over the last decade—the tremendous increase in media-generated revenue, the increased resources allocated by universities for facilities, players and coaches-as general facilitators for the Patriot League's decision. Sweeney states that the admittance of American University, which already issues merit-based aid, to the league in 2001, "made the vote superfluous... just a formality. American was the exclamation point on the decision."

Sweeney still has reservations about how effectively the University will utilize merit-based aid. While League officials have not disclosed which schools voted to affirm merit-based aid in the 4-3 decision, Bucknell was expected to oppose the motion. The vote only recognizes the right of Patriot League schools to issue merit scholarships; it does not actually force any action.

"In principle," Sweeney said, "three schools opposed the motion, which means the reality of the how [themselves three schools] respect the merit aid issue on their campuses remains to be seen. I think that Bucknell would be acting irresponsibly to not adopt a merit aid policy for selected sports."

Sweeney says that failing to adopt a merit aid policy "precludes opportunities" for the University's athletes and coaches to compete on a level playing field.

"There's a sense of urgency," he said, "because with every passing month Bucknell loses its competitive position as recruiting athletes unfold. I think the Board of Trustees needs to address this issue now, and put it on the agenda for its April meeting."

Last week's photos of President Rogers at the Nueva Vida clinic in Nicaragua were taken by Paul Susman. In the features section, the article "Earth-conscious students work to reduce waste in Caf" on page B6 was written by Sarah Gudenkauf. The Bucknellian apologizes for the inadvertent omissions.

Sports

Lacrosse: The real American pastime

Lax. What do these three letters mean to you? Lax-ative? Re-lax? No, boys and girls, lacrosse—the fastest game on two feet. A recent feeling of excitement has washed over me with the start of the NCAA lacrosse season. I check the Inside Lacrosse website to see what the standings are (Bucknell is #13 baby!), I break out my stick and play catch and I even go home sometimes over the weekends (!) to see the game in action. Sure partying is fun but how many times can you see Virginia take Hopkins to four overtimes before finally beating them 9-8?

In Maryland everyone plays lacrosse so I kind of assumed it was like that everywhere. I live 25 minutes away from the lacrosse Hall of Fame—imagine my surprise when my freshman year roommate thought my lacrosse stick had something to do with fishing! So with our team kicking major butt, I thought I'd take the time to explain lax to those of us whom, through no fault of our own, have not been exposed to the sport. You poor, poor creatures.

Lacrosse is primarily an East Coast sport, dominating the athletic cultures of New York (especially Long Island) and Maryland (especially the Baltimore area)—to kids in these states, the names of Gary Gait and Casey Powell carry just as much weight as any pro athlete. And while lacrosse has been given some mainstream exposure—Stifter and Oz in American Pie, Snake on "The Simpsons"—it never does the sport justice.

I cannot even express the feeling of sitting in the stands and watching a lacrosse game to those who haven't experienced it: it's football but everyone understands the rules; its baseball but the action is constant; its basketball where every fan knows someone who plays.

Lacrosse is made up of three primary actions—passing and scoring and checking. The skilled passing and footwork and the unbelievable goal scoring balance the aggressiveness of body checks and quick stick checks. Only ice hockey comes close to duplicating the game of lacrosse. The two are also the only sports that flow, for lack of a better term—the tempo of the game picks up steadily as the ball travels down the field, reaching a frenzied pitch around the crease until BAM! The ball is either put into the net or taken back towards the other end of the field, ready to start the cycle again.

The communal feeling of a lacrosse game is also unbelievable. I admit this is probably because the game is most watched on the college level, but every game I attend is filled with fans who know not only stats, but the players. Everyone reads the same publications (Inside Lacrosse), knows which hometowns and high schools are responsible for producing great players and is willing to share, debate and discuss this information with anyone around them. Imagine intensely debating the "recruiting" season and be referring to which high school juniors and seniors were going to have a chance to make it big!

Lacrosse is not some $45 ticket game where you sit next to someone who goes because basketball games have become social events, this is where the neighborhood kids, the former players (because almost every lacrosse fan has played the game, another advantage) and the parents of the players sit together, focused on the same thing—the game!

So why isn't lacrosse popular across the whole nation? I honestly can't say. Lacrosse has not traditionally been played on the West Coast; it started as a Native American mock-war game with tribes in the northeast. But as lacrosse fans move, the sport has begun to spread; Colorado has a fairly large fan base, as does California. In addition to the spread of college lacrosse, attempts have been made to expand the sport into the professional arena.

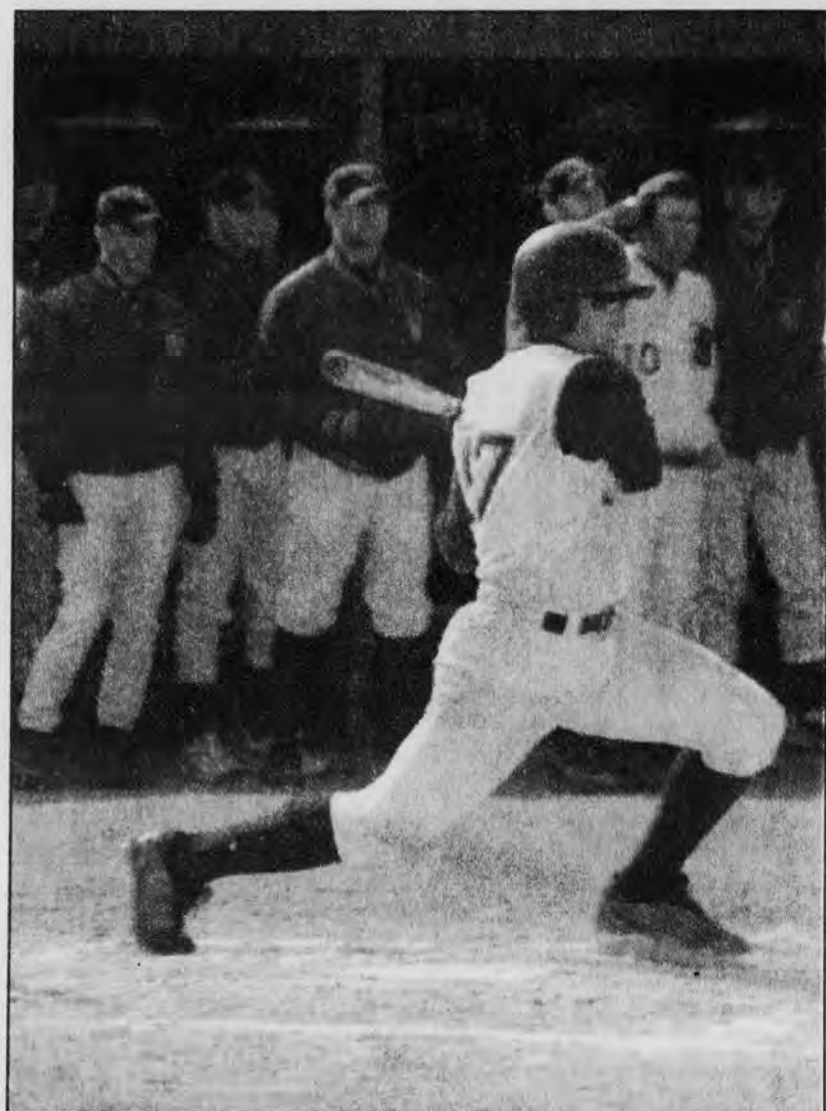

There are two major professional lacrosse leagues: the National Lacrosse League (NLL), an indoor type of box-lacrosse that is played in the winter and Major League Lacrosse (MLL), outdoor lacrosse that is played in the summer. The NLL has been around in various forms for a while; the MLL had its exhibition season last summer and is anticipating the start of its first season of real competition this June. I have been to games in both leagues and, as a fan, did not like what I saw.

I understand the concept behind box lacrosse. I really do—it's kinda like arena football in that the action is more condensed and intense. But how can you call it lacrosse when the field is roughly half of the size it normally is? And what's with the violence? The NLL looks like lacrosse with a little bit of pro-wrestling thrown in. Gary and Paul Gait are old; they can't keep getting thrown around like that!

The MLL, while slightly better, is nothing to write home about. What's with the shot clock? Half the fun of the game is watching the passing patterns and creative attempts to score a goal; giving these guys 90 seconds to score a goal or get out takes away the skill and turns it into a drive-down-the-midfield-and-get-a-shot-off kind of offense. And, please, the loud driving techno music has got to go. Not only is it distracting, it ruins the pitch of the game—instead of building in intensity until a goal is scored, it keeps the game at an unnaturally high energy level. I mean, come on, is not like basketball where these theatrics are needed.

For a good authentic lacrosse experience, head to the field next to Davis Gym this Saturday at 1 p.m. and watch the Bison take on League rivals Hobart. There will be no shot clocks, no techno and no out of control violence (well...), just good solid lacrosse. Like with every sport, lacrosse is better at the collegiate level so go on, embrace the sport you never knew you loved!

Bison in high gear for League play

Mike Ritz '01 rips a shot as his Bison teammates look on.

By ANDREW BEVAN
Senior Writer

Coming off a productive spring break trip to California, the Bucknell baseball team was looking forward to readying itself for opening Patriot League play. The Bison got things started with a home contest against neighborhood rival Bloomsburg last Tuesday, but were bested after the Huskies came from behind in the 5th inning, scoring three runs, en route to a 5-4 win for their 8th straight victory.

The Bison got on the board first by plating three runs on three hits in the bottom of the third. Larry Schetz '02 and senior co-captain Chris Herron opened up with singles before Ian Joseph '01 was hit by a pitch that loaded the bases. Left fielder Kevin Eiben '01 followed with a single to score Schetz. Herron scored next due to an error by Bloomsburg's second baseman on a ball hit by co-captain Brad Gething '01. John Dibonaventura '01 drove in the third run on a groundout. Zach Allen '03 went five innings on the hill for the Orange and Blue, giving up five runs, including back-to-back home runs in the top of the fourth. Bucknell stranded runners on second and third with one out in the bottom of the fourth. Freshman Kevin Miller relieved Allen in the sixth and pitched two scoreless innings to keep the Bison in the game. However, the Orange and Blue could only muster one run in the sixth off of a sacrifice fly from Herron.

"It was our first mid-week game of the season and I think that we did not do a good job of making the adjustment from going to class to the field. We struggled offensively and didn't get the right hit at the right time," Head Coach Gene Depew said.

Next, the Bison hosted Division II powerhouse, Slippery Rock, an invite to the Division II World Series last year, in doubleheaders on both Saturday and Sunday.

"This series was a preparation for the Patriot League start as we wanted to get used to the format of doubleheaders on consecutive days," Depew said.

The first game on Saturday marked the return of junior left hander Kevin McDowell from arm surgery last year. All of the scoring in the contest took place in the first inning as McDowell let one pitch get away from him and gave up a two-run homer. Bucknell's answer came from Dibonaventura's RBI single in the bottom frame, but that would be all the Bison would get in a 2-1 defeat as a pitcher's duel ensued. McDowell would settle down after the first, scattering two runs on two hits and striking out six in four innings of work. Miller continued his consistent relief efforts, hurling the last three innings, giving up two hits and striking out two.

"It was a well-pitched and well-played defensive game on both sides of the ball and the most positive thing was the strong performance of Kevin McDowell and Miller did another good job for us," Depew said.

In the nightcap, Chris Lackett '02 pitched the team's first complete game of the season, scattering six hits while striking out six and walking one in helping the Bison to a 9-2 victory. Dibonaventura was the leader on the offensive side, going 4-4 with four RBIs. Russ Lindberg '01 went 2-4 with a double and 2 RBIs and Mike Ritz went 2-4 with a triple to aid in the winning cause.

"We got real good pitching from Chris and got on track offensively, especially in the one through six positions in the lineup, which produced 13 hits in the game," Depew said.

In Sunday's first game, Ross Aron '02 went the distance and pitched the squad's first shutout of the season, striking out seven, walking one, and only giving up two hits. Lindberg went 2-3 with a double and the Bison plated three runs in the third and that was all they needed for a 3-0 victory.

In the final game of the series, Bucknell battled back from behind in impressive fashion to capture an exciting 5-4 extra-inning victory. The Orange and Blue came back from 3-0 and 4-3 deficits to win. The Bison knotted the game at 4 in the bottom of the seventh with a two-out single up the middle from Dibonaventura to score Joseph. In the bottom of the 9th, Ben Stoll '04, who was making his first collegiate start at shortstop, singled to lead off the inning. Left fielder, Eric Fishman '02, was intentionally walked by Slippery Rock in an effort to set up a double play. The strategy backfired as Gething singled and Stoll came sliding home, just beating the tag.

R. J. Grant '03 settled down after a rough start to keep the Bison in the game. Miller pitched well again in relief and Gregg Farnery '02 continued his dominance on the mound, pitching the last four innings of the game, giving up only two hits and keeping his 0.00 ERA intact. Dibonaventura was 2-4 in the game while Lindberg was 2-3 and Stoll went 2-4.

"We executed well down the stretch," Depew said.

"Coming off a difficult loss to Bloomsburg, we really bounced back this weekend against Slippery Rock. The entire pitching staff stepped it up and shut down the bats of one of the best Division II teams in the country. It was a great confidence booster going in to the opening games of the Patriot

Water polo loses steam at Bucknell Invitational

By MOLLY GOELER
Staff Writer

The Bucknell women's water polo team walked away from its recent league tournament at Freas-Rooke Pool with a disappointing 1-3 record. The Bison fell to league rivals George Washington, Villanova and Princeton, while capturing a win against Salem International.

The Bison opened their tournament on Saturday with an 11-8 loss to George Washington. Both teams played a competitive game, as the score was tied 5-5 after the first three quarters. However, the fourth quarter would prove to be the determining factor in the game. "The fourth quarter, normally our strongest, proved the difference as we allowed six goals in while only scoring three," Head Coach John Zeigler said.

Saturday night was a different story for the Bison, as they defeated Salem 12-8 in front of a packed group of energized fans. The Bison were fueled by enthusiasm from the crowd, as they captured ten goals in the first half of the game, allowing only two of Salem's shots into the cage. All of the Bison were able to see playing time in this game as they racked up an impressive victory over Salem.

Adrienne Schober '02 receives a pass during Sunday's game against Villanova

On Sunday morning the Bison played a grueling game, battling Villanova all four quarters of play, but the Wildcats walked away with an 8-5 win over Bucknell.

After the first two quarters of play, the Bison were down by three goals and were feeling the pressure to intensify their play.

In the third quarter, the Bison recorded three goals to Villanova's two, entering the fourth quarter down by only two goals. With a great quarter of play, Villanova would outscore the Bison, walking away with the win. Kelly Hofstetter '04 led the Bison's scoring with two goals.

Facing a tough Princeton team, the Bison knew that they would need to step up their levels of play in the final game of the tournament.

"The best thing about this weekend," said senior co-captain Paige Cull, "was the way that our team pulled together after two tough losses and decided that we were going to make the Princeton coaches nervous."

Despite great efforts put forth by the Bison, the women fell to Princeton 14-7. Cull led Bucknell's scoring efforts with three goals, while Hofstetter added two goals.

"The weekend was tough, but I really feel like we did all that we could to come out and do our best to beat the teams we needed to beat," Brooke Rea '02 said.

"It just didn't happen."

After last weekend's league games, the Bison now wait to hear if they will receive a bid to the ECAC Championships, which will be held at Princeton March 31-April 1. Bucknell's current record stands at 12-11.

The Bison will be heading to Grove City this weekend for an invitational, where they will face Iona, Penn State Behrend, Washington & Jefferson and Slippery Rock.

Bison Calendar

WOMEN'S LACROSSE

Sat., March 31
HOLY CROSS 12 p.m.
Sun., April 1
NIAGARA 12 p.m.

MEN'S TENNIS

Sat., March 31
at Binghamton 1 p.m.
Sun., April 1
at Colgate 1 p.m.

FOOTBALL

Sat-Sun, March 31-April 1
LEHIGH (2), 12 p.m.

OUTDOOR TRACK

Sat., March 31
at Susquehanna Invitational

BASKETBALL

Sat-Sun, March 31-April 1
LAFAYETTE (2) 12 p.m.

WOMEN'S TENNIS

Fri., March 30
at Lafayette 3 p.m.
Sat., March 31
at Lehigh 12 p.m.

MEN'S LACROSSE

Sat., March 31
HOBART 1 p.m.

WOMEN'S WATER POLO

Fri-Sat March 30-31
at Grove City Invitational

March 30, 2001

The Bucknellian

House Party Weather

Hi: 49	Hi: 56	Hi: 58
Low: 41	Low: 38	Low: 37
FRIDAY	SATURDAY	SUNDAY

Concert Chorale performs at the Weis Center

By LACY GONZALEZ
Staff Writer

The 63-member Concert Chorale, directed by Dr. William Payn and accompanied by David Cover, performed a concert of varied pieces from 16th, 17th, and 20th century composers. The mixed choral group presented its Spring Concert on Friday, Mar. 23 at 8 p.m. in the Weis Center.

The concert opened with "Sicut Cervus," a Latin a capella piece by 16th-century composer Giovanni Pierluigi da Palestrina. This piece, a Latin translation of a Psalm, set the relatively thoughtful mood that would prevail throughout the remainder of the concert.

The second piece was "Dona Nobis Pacem" from Bach's Mass in B Minor. Renee Brody '01 conducted this piece, as well as another later in the program. Brody is a music education major who had the opportunity to select, rehearse, and conduct two pieces with the Concert Chorale as part of her Advanced Conducting class.

"I thought Renee did a wonderful job, and she really put a lot of work into her conducting," said Meghann Peace '04, a member of the Chorale.

The first half of the concert closed with a cycle of pieces entitled "Mid-Winter Songs." This consisted of five movements based on poems by Robert Graves and set to music by contemporary choral composer Morten Lauridsen.

The pieces followed the theme of winter, death and rejuvenation, and included various mythological references. The five pieces made up a lengthy portion of the concert, but within them was a great variety of musical "highs" and "lows." These were all set against the rich tapestry of poetry that reflected the bleak time of year which is soon ending.

After an intermission, Dr. Payn took a few moments to acknowledge the senior members of the group. He spoke about each of the 13 seniors personally, relating the number of years each student spent in Concert Chorale, his/her major, and his/her plans for the future.

See CHORALE, page B8.

Dr. William Payn leads the Concert Chorale in song during their concert last Friday at the Weis Center for the Performing Arts.

MTV to invade campus next weekend

By CAROLYN STRICKLAND
Contributing Writer

The 2001 MTV Campus Invasion Tour will pop the Bucknell Bubble when it touches down on the University's campus on Friday, April 6.

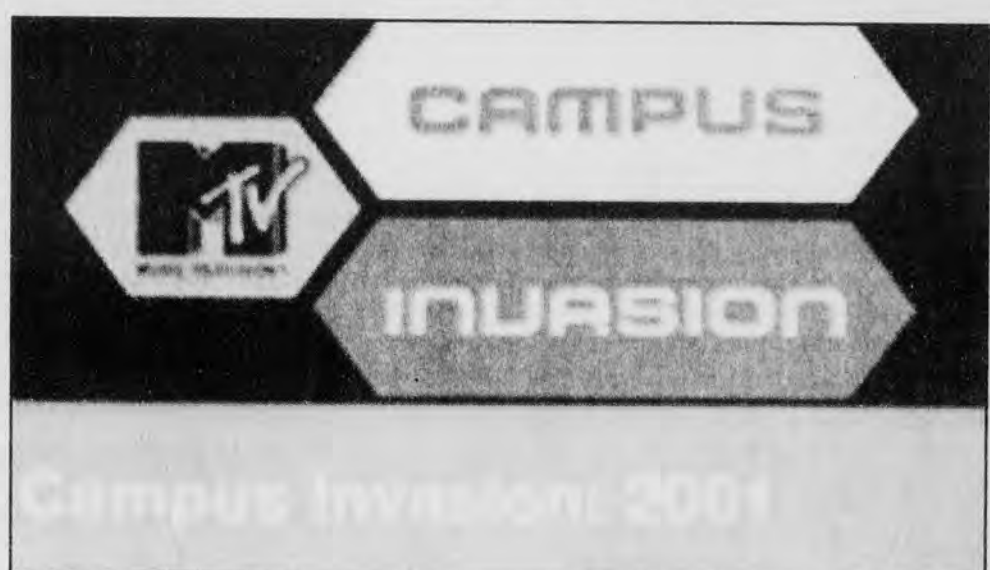

The tour includes both the MTV Village and a concert featuring three up and coming bands—Saliva, American Hi-Fi and Sum 41. The Village will be set up on the soccer field from noon to 5 p.m. and will include a variety of interactive stations sponsored by MTV, Arid and Toyota.

In the village, students will have the opportunity to jam on guitars and keyboards to their favorite tune at the virtual rock station, mix tracks like a professional DJ, check out their favorite TRL videos and more. The bands will perform at Uptown on Friday night—times to be announced later. This event is being brought to the University by ACE (Activities and Campus Events) and Uptown.

Carolyn Strickland is the Assistant Director of the Campus Activities and Programs

Courtesy of mtv.com

ROTC at Bucknell

By SARAH WILSON
Staff Writer

Leadership. Self-confidence. Teamwork. Community. Opportunity and challenge. After spending a few hours at the Sprad House, home to the University's Army Reserve Officer Training Corps program, these abstract ideals would have a serious meaning.

ROTC, the more common name for the program, was initiated at the University in 1931. Fifty years later the program is still going strong, with eighteen participants from the University, a part of the deadly duty participants of the "Bison Battalion," made up of Bucknell, Lycoming College, Bloomsburg University, Susquehanna University, and the Pennsylvania College of Technology.

Contrary to popular myth, ROTC is not all about the physical aspects of the Army. Physical training isn't even the largest part of the program. ROTC's commitment is like a club or other student organization, and many of its participants are members of other organizations as well, including sports teams and the Greek System.

ROTC participants are expected to attend one class per week, a "Leader Lab" once a month (where they do teamwork) and leadership activities such as Compass Land Navigation or ropes courses). Physical training three times a week and the culmination trip called Field Training Exercises, or FTX, happen twice per year, at the end of each semester, and are essentially the zenith of each program. FTX's include such activities as rappelling, day and night navigation, squad tactics and barrack inspection.

See ROTC, page B4.

Sports Trivia

By Justin McCarthy

- 1) Who is the only NBA player to make 2,000 career three-point shots?
- 2) Who is the only NBA player to win both the scoring and assist titles in the same year?
- 3) Before Kenyon Martin of the NJ Nets did it this season, who was the last overall #1 draft pick to record a triple-double in their rookie season? (Hint: The year was 1993)

ANSWERS: 1) RAY ALLEN 2) STEVE NISSENGER 3) RAY ALLEN

Spring Break abroad in the Dominican Republic

Children at the orphanage where Louise Welling worked as part of Orphanage Outreach. Welling spent her spring break teaching and helping with the disadvantaged kids of this Caribbean nation.

See page B5

Photos courtesy of Louise Welling

FEATURES

Spring break outreach in the Dominican Republic

Volunteer donors provide the clothing, school supplies and books—some minimum necessities for the orphans, as well as reinforcing self-confidence.

By LOUISE WELLING
Contributing Writer

Over spring break I did not take a typical trip to the islands; instead, I spent my week volunteering at an orphanage in the Dominican Republic.

This orphanage is one of several that are sponsored by Orphanage Outreach, a program headquartered in Arizona, which matches willing individuals with hands-on work opportunities at orphanages worldwide.

The goals of the program are to provide the basic necessities of food, clean water and clothes, as well as education to the children. The objectives of the program also include showing the children that they are special and providing them with self-confidence.

The orphanage where I was working is located in Esperanza, which, in Spanish, means "hope." The facility had been receiving help from Orphanage Outreach for only one year, and there were 90 volunteers enlisted to help get it on its feet. There are 20 boys permanently living in the orphanage, and each day 700 children from the neighborhood attend the orphanage elementary school.

In the mornings, I taught first grade with four other volunteers. There were around 30 children in the classroom each day, although the number varied with children coming in and out of the classroom all day long. All the supplies we used in teaching the children were donated by volunteers. The school itself did not have anything—no chalk, paper or even lights. The classrooms, as well as the rest of the orphanage, were made of cement walls and flooring with a tin roof and one small window, which provided all the light in the room. There were old and broken desks that seated two children each.

The four other volunteers and I gave the children coloring book pages and puzzles to work on, while we each took one or two children to work with at a time. We worked on an individual basis with the children on the Spanish alphabet, numbers, colors, simple math and reading.

When they became unable to concentrate any longer, we would switch off, letting them color and do puzzles with the group and taking new children off to the side with whom to work. We would break up the morning with periods of music and outside recreation (better known in the United States as recess!).

In the afternoons, I worked outside with other volunteers and men from the town on building a cement wall around the orphanage property to protect the children. This included digging dead tree stumps out of the rock-hard ground with a pick ax, mixing cement, digging a trench in which to begin building the wall, and then stacking the cement blocks.

This was challenging work—the 90-degree weather and blazing equator sun only added to the intensity of the project. But it provided an excellent opportunity to meet the locals and learn from them about life for the adults in the area, while improving my Spanish, since very few people there know English.

In the evenings the other volunteers and I would play outside with the children. There was a cement area with two basketball hoops and volleyball nets where the children liked to play. Two of the evenings, we watched "Toy Story" and "Toy Story 2" in Spanish on a television that had been hooked up to the truck of the executive director of the Orphanage Outreach Program.

I had an amazing time and enjoyed the experience. I spent lots of time just holding and hugging the children; they didn't seem to care that I couldn't speak much of their language, and just enjoyed the love and attention they were receiving.

It was sad, however, to see how poor the area was, and how much the people fantasized about leaving. Men would ask us to marry them so they could get a green card, and offered to work for us back in the United States. Women asked us to take their children back home with us.

Living at the orphanage for a week taught me a just how lucky I am to have grown up in our society. In a place called home for a week, there was no clean water, sewage waste spilled onto the streets and sidewalks, children walked around with no clothes on and adults were often unemployed and uneducated. I spent one afternoon at a house nearby the orphanage, where there were seven children and two adults living in a tiny three-room house. The only food they had for the family to eat was the eggs that their chicken had laid. With few material possessions, the family members emphasized their religious beliefs and their togetherness.

The Orphanage Outreach Program and their volunteers work to help them find employment. On Friday afternoon, when we were done with our teaching and work for the week, we went to one of the beautiful beaches of the Dominican Republic, about a two-hour drive from Esperanza. It was astounding to see the difference between the clean (and wealthy) area of the island compared to the poverty we had been surrounded by for the week.

We also visited an orphanage in Monticristi that Orphanage Outreach has been working with for six years. This orphanage was clean and modernized with computers, and the children had the education and skills firmly established to help them succeed in life. I am looking forward to returning to the orphanage in Esperanza and seeing the changes and improvements over the years as they continue to receive help from Orphanage Outreach.

Volunteers of Orphanage Outreach would spend time individually with the students in both academics and recreation.

to provide the people in Esperanza and other orphanages with education and opportunities to learn to be self-sufficient. The children are given clothing, school supplies and books that are donated by the volunteers, help them succeed in life. I am looking forward to returning to the orphanage in Esperanza and seeing the changes and improvements over the years as they continue to receive help from Orphanage Outreach.

Bucknell ROTC: a tradition of leadership and excellence

ROTC From page B1

ROTC serves many purposes here at the University. It is a place for students interested in joining any military branch to start their military careers. It is also a good organization to belong to if you desire to gain such attributes as discipline and confidence. However, the program seems to come down to one thing: "the overarching goal of ROTC is to develop leaders, not only for the military sector, but the civilian as well," stated Captain Brian Elliott '95, now an instructor for the ROTC program.

Students join ROTC for many different reasons. The new opportunities, the chance to be a leader, the idea of traveling and gaining exciting experiences, and the prospect of learning more about oneself and the way that one acts under pressure are all reasons students choose to become ROTC members.

All seniors will be commissioned shortly after commencement, and then, as Second Lieutenants, will then go on to serve in various parts of the Army for at least four years. This four-year commitment may include active duty, Army Reserve, or the National Guard. Many of the ROTC participants are planning careers in the military, and many have chosen to serve four years and then get a job in the civilian sector. Many non-scholarship ROTC members will choose to bypass the Army and go on to industry careers, calling upon the abilities they have gained through Bucknell's ROTC program.

"I've always wanted to have some sort of a military career, so I joined ROTC. I want to be involved in the military to gain experiences, travel, and open doors of opportunity," said engineer Joe Marut '03 who is also involved with other activities such as club baseball and the Greek System.

One interesting aspect of the ROTC program is the high number of women involved. Over half of the participants in ROTC are female. The University commissioned Sherry Grant, ROTC's first woman graduate, in 1976, only twenty-four years after its first male. The female participants in ROTC are no different than their male counterparts.

"The girls are sometimes more forward and aggressive than the males. I'm not sure if they feel they need to prove themselves, but some come in here knowing that the military is at least something they want to try," said ROTC's Military Personnel Technician Mrs. Carl.

Many Battalion Commanders, the highest-ranking senior in ROTC, have been women. The program's current Battalion Commander is Catherine Rasch '01. It is clear that women in military positions are taking the nation by storm, illustrated at the University.

The University has many extremely successful female ROTC graduates across the globe. Graduate Nancy Nykamp '84 wasn't planning on serving more than four years in the Army, but went on to work in various Military Intelligence branches. She has just reached the rank of Lieutenant Colonel. Second Lieutenant Karen Schleibohm '90 is now stationed just outside of Pusan, South Korea, continuing to use the skills she learned while jumping out of planes during ROTC.

This trend is reflective of the shift of male dominance within the military as well. There are only two branches of the military that women are not allowed to belong to: Infantry and Armor. This idea was confirmed by Captain Robert Haldeman, who spent seventeen years in the Army and now works for the University's ROTC program. "Females have broken through the ranks in the military," Haldeman said. The percentage of women in the military is quickly approaching half, a concept unfathomable only twenty years ago.

In many aspects, the two genders are equal, though participants are quick to point out that there isn't much competition. "We all hold our own. We don't compete against the boys, and we don't compete against other girls either. ROTC is where you compete only against yourself," said Jenny Schlack, '03, who not only participates in ROTC, but is involved in club rugby and cheerleading as well. The women in ROTC don't see themselves as gender trailblazers or pioneers, they see themselves as women who will work hard to achieve their goals and don't mind being the minority at times. These women are simply here for themselves.

The ROTC program may have attracted students for various reasons, but it is certain that they will retain their skills and have an edge when they graduate from the University, no matter what their plans are for the future.

PENN SUMMER 2001
Philadelphia, PA • tel: 215.898.7376 • email: summer@sat.upenn.edu

Undergraduate and Graduate Courses

Programs for International Students

Programs for High School Students

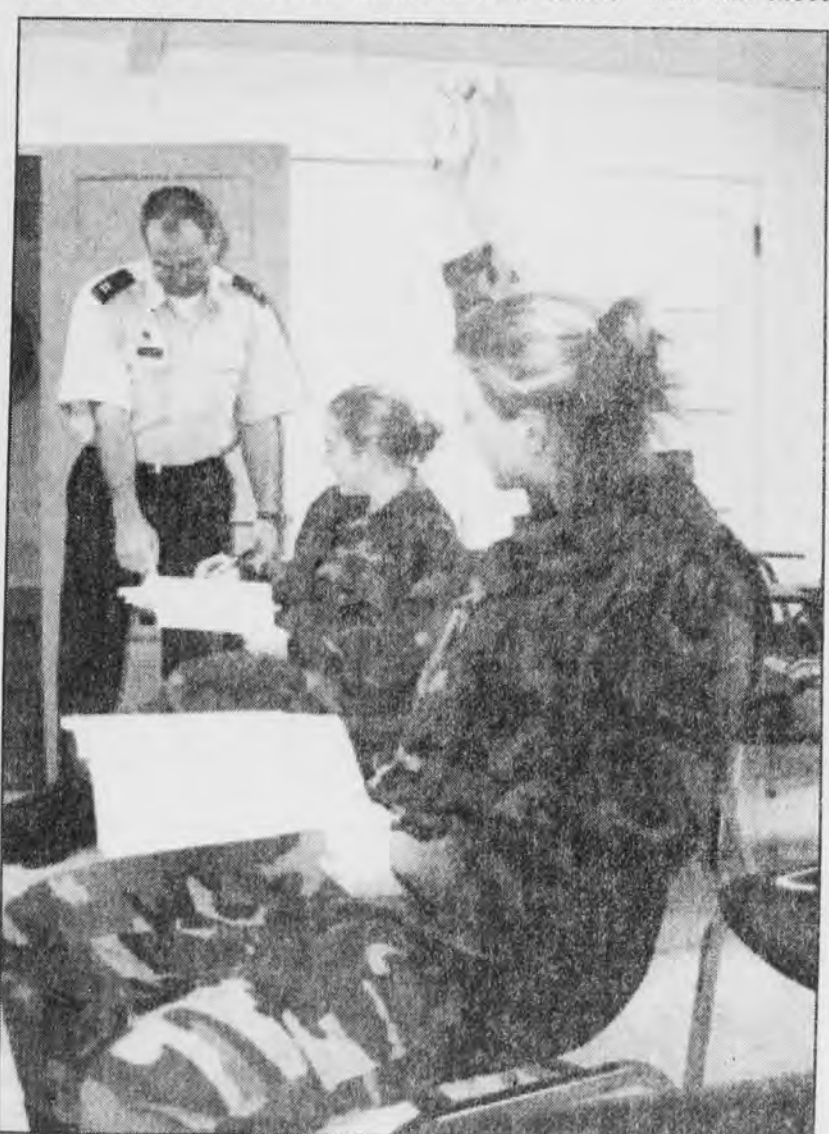

Summer Abroad

Online Courses

- Hundreds of courses
- Beautiful historic campus
- Easily transferable credit
- College-house amenities
- Social & cultural activities
- Convenient to New York & D.C.

www.upenn.edu/summer

Summer Session I May 22-June 29
Summer Session II July 2-August 10
12 Week Evening Session May 21-August 10

ROTC students attentively listen in one of their classes.

FEATURES

Aerobics with an edge: kickboxer Laura Kamienski

Cardio-Kicks! instructor known as "cardio lady" or "no means no girl" will take NO for an answer

By KEELEY PATTERSON
Staff Writer

A flood of students rush into the Fieldhouse dance studio to claim their area of the floor every Wed. and Fri. night at 5 p.m. A usual crowd is easily recognizable, often joined by new faces that have come along for the ride.

Prepared for an hour of sweat, music and pure empowerment, students line up in rows behind one woman, to shadow her every jab, hook and front kick.

First-timers are forewarned: aside from the usual prerequisite stretching one performs before working out, you'd better have your vocal chords warmed up as well.

Though this instructor is often referred to as the "cardio lady" or the "no means no girl," students know that she is so much more: a support, a guide, and a continual motivator, she is an inspiration for all women. She is Laura Kamienski, and she's speaking up.

Throughout her classes, this sassy Cardio-Kicks! instructor leads her students in a variety of chants, cheers and laughter. Anyone who has previously attended her class comes prepared to belt out intense renditions of "no means no!" in tune with a series of elbows, jumps and claps.

Kamienski was born in Syracuse, NY and spent her collegiate years at Edinboro University of Pennsylvania, earning her bachelor's degree in philosophy. She continues to read up on this subject matter, and her main interests lie within the areas of political philosophy and logic.

Kamienski found her way to Lewisburg out of love. She proves that an independent woman certainly can love a man, as she is happily married to Donald Rea, who works with Information Services and Resources (ISR) at the Bertrand Library.

As a fair sport class racer, Kamienski is an exuberant and dedicated mountain biker, aside from her avid martial arts work.

"...I fight with love / I laugh with rage / you gotta live light enough to see the humor / and long enough to see some change..." — Ani DiFranco she's not out riding a single track, Kamienski's heart and soul goes into the teaching and training of martial arts and self-defense. She was raped at the delicate age of 14, and suffered through an abusive relationship that dominated her for several years. It was not until her dogs were violently attacked by a woman in Sunbury that she felt her first "kick in the butt" to seek some self-defense classes.

With her discovery of "Billy Blanks" tape-tapes and the natural union between her love of dance and athletic training, Kamienski began her journey. After years of intense study, she has just returned from Palm Springs with two second-degree black belts: one issued through the Association of Women's Martial Arts Instruction and the other through the International Tae Kwon Do Union. She is also an active member of the National Women's Martial Arts Federation and the American Women's Self-Defense Association.

Her extensive martial art training has touched the areas of Krav Maga, Modern Arnis, American Wrestling, Shotokan Karate and Kickboxing. The choreography involved in her workouts is a key factor in keeping Kamienski motivated, but young women are her most potent inspiration.

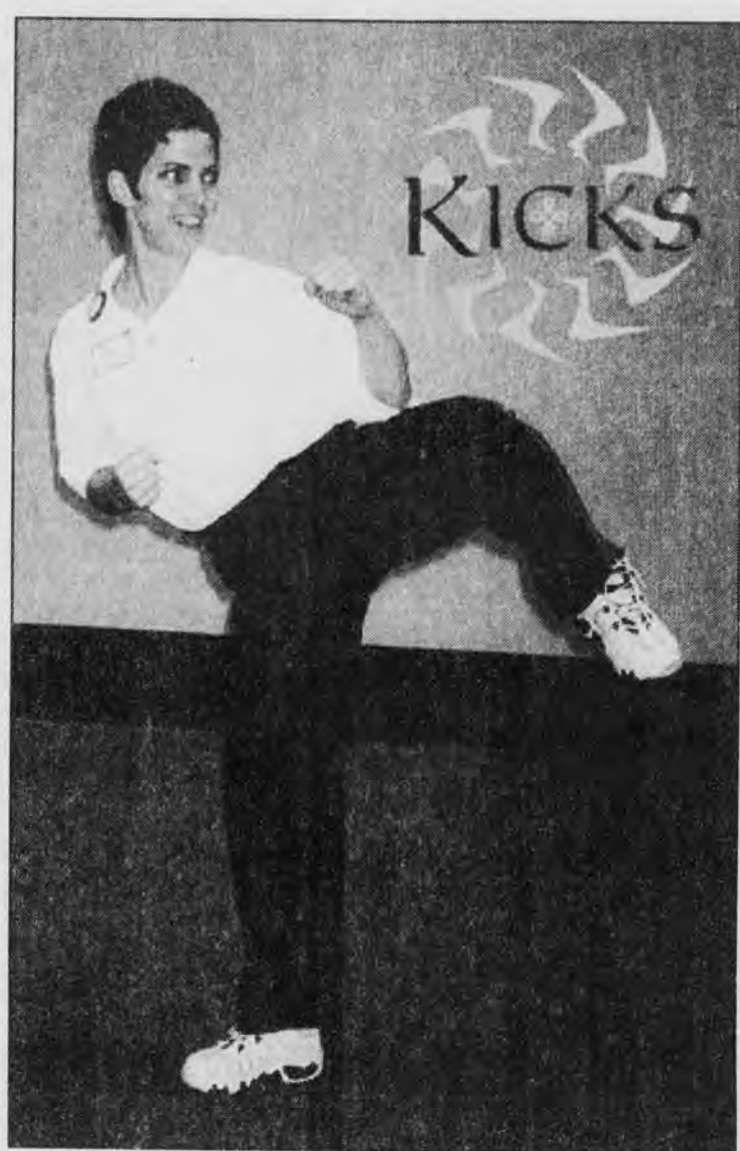

"Since I started teaching Cardio Kicks! I've noticed that a lot of the women are excited about how powerful they feel in the class," Kamienski said. Her instruction differs from the typical aerobics class in that students are learning actual physical techniques that can be utilized in self-defense.

Her work in women's self-defense has flourished over the past three years. Kamienski trained in pro-life women's such as Rape Aggression Defense Systems, ASPAP Women's Street Defense Intensive, and IMPACT Personal Safety and Self-Defense From the Inside Out.

Always enthusiastic about her opportunity to teach classes at the University, Kamienski encourages anyone who "could not be motivated to run on a treadmill like a gerbil on a wheel" to join her Wed. and Fri. at 5 p.m. in the dance studio. "I love you guys," Kamienski said, when asked about the classes she instructs at the University. "You are the fiercest women I teach!"

University students with ID will also receive major discounts on classes taught at Kamienski's brand new martial arts school, which officially opened on March 1. The school, Martial Arts Kicks for Women, is located at 106 Market Street, within walking distance. Kamienski suggests that students considering studying Tae Kwon Do begin classes now because a black belt can be earned in time for graduation.

Starting in April, ongoing self-defense classes will be held Mondays and Wednesdays at 7:30 p.m. Kamienski urges that no belts or ranks are necessary for participation. Kamienski thanks all the students who helped raise over $700 for charity by participating in the Susquehanna Valley Woman in Transition "Kick Back against Violence" fundraiser. Those unable to participate this year can look forward to next year's money-raising event, where "no means dough!"

Courtesy of Laura Kamienski

Student can receive discounts and earn a black belt in time for graduation at Kamienski's brand new martial arts school located at 106 Market Street.

Imperial Lanes offers students inexpensive bowling entertainment

By ANDRES SOLTRE
Senior Writer

Many students at the University whine and complain about the lack of activities available on or around campus. One activity that is fun, inexpensive and social is a sport often overlooked by the average college student—bowling. Imperial Lanes is a bowling alley located at 679 South Front St. in Milton. University students have frequented this bowling center for many years, and continue to do so.

Imperial Lanes has 16 lanes that support up to six bowlers per lane. All lanes have automatic computer scoring. This makes it very easy for even the most novice bowler not only to play with score, but also to see and understand how the scoring system works.

Before continuing, it is important to mention that lanes fill up very quickly, especially during the weekend. It is highly recommended that you call a good day or two ahead of time to reserve a lane. Call 742-9211.

Imperial Lanes has a long history with the University. In the last two or three years, Imperial Lanes has promoted special events for University students.

For example, every Tuesday night is Bucknell Student Night. This may very well be the best time for students to go bowling. The special is from 9:30 until 11:30. The charge is $20 for a lane for 2 hours, with a maximum of six bowlers per lane. Shoes are an additional $1.00.

With the shoes it comes out to just $4.33 for a student to bowl for two hours. That's less than a meal at the cafeteria, people! Speaking of food, Imperial Lanes also has a snack bar for refreshments and an assortment of snacks. Just kick back and relax with a drink and a pretzel while you watch your friends bowl.

Weekends are also fun because of Rock-N-Bowl Friday and Saturday. Starting at 9 p.m., the lights change color and music starts booming. This considerably adds to the enjoyment of a game of bowling. Nothing quite beats watching a friend getting his groove on after getting a strike. The cost is $15 an hour for a lane.

All of this certainly makes for a good bowling experience, but Imperial Lanes also has close ties with the community here at the University.

Virginia Hull, a full-time staff member who has worked at the bowling center since 1977, spoke of this long-standing relationship. "It's very nice for us," Hull said. "Freshmen, sophomores, juniors, seniors; they all come here to bowl. As turnover continues, we feel like we'll always have new students coming here to bowl."

The feeling of community at the University is also present at Imperial Lanes. "We get fraternities and sororities here all the time," Hull said. In fact, not only do fraternities and sororities frequent Imperial Lanes, but also there are four teams from the University that bowl in a league on Thursday nights.

Bowling is something that people of all ages and abilities can get into and enjoy. However, bowling is also one of the rare sports that can be played throughout an entire lifetime.

"For most [athletes], organized sports end after college," Virginia explained. "Bowling is something students can do after their college days are over." Imperial Lanes has certified instructors for those students interested in serious league bowling. For example, Andy Neuer from Milton was a professional bowler, and is now an instructor. He has a 235 average score.

Carol Zarr is the Junior Bowl Coordinator, and has an equally impressive 227 scoring average. Although Junior Bowl may sound like something for children, it actually consists of bowlers from about four years old to 21 years of age.

Chris Rivera—The Bucknellian

Imperial Lanes offers an escape that is close to campus.

The most important aspect of going to Imperial Lanes is the enjoyment that bowling and socializing brings. Reserving a lane for two hours means that you can bowl at a leisurely pace, without feeling like you need to rush before you get thrown off a lane.

So for those students moping around campus thinking of things to do, get a group of friends together and go to Imperial Lanes. You can retain the sense of community while going outside and doing something active, fun, and affordable. Especially make use of the special nights and Rock-N-Bowl. Whether you want to seriously invest your time in bowling, or just want to goof around, get together and go out to the Lanes.

To get to Imperial Lanes, take Market Street over the bridge and make a left at the traffic light. Go about three miles and it will be on the right hand side. And don't forget they have bumpers for all those truly talented student bowlers.

U-SAVE AUTO RENTAL

Low, Low Rates!

*We bill insurance companies direct.

*Major credit cards accepted.

*Must be 21 or older.

Earning the right to serve you each and every time.

524-0000

Rt. 15 & Nth 7th St.

Lewisburg, Pa. 17837

Mon-Fri 8:00-5:00

Sat. 8:00-12:00

SUPER HEROES!

ALE MAN & CHICKEN MAN!

Love It's Super Buffalo Wing SPECIAL!

12 for $4.95

24 for $7.95

Sunday - Thursday 9PM - Closing EAT IN ONLY!

17 North Market Street SELLSGROVE 374-9841

291 Mill Street DANVILLE 275-5110

BUSINESS & POLITICS

Bush boots ABA from judicial role

Citing fairness, ideological concerns, bar association will no longer prescreen judges

By ANDREA BEISSER
Staff Writer

The Bush administration decided last week to formally end the role of the American Bar Association (ABA) as a preliminary review board of potential judicial nominees.

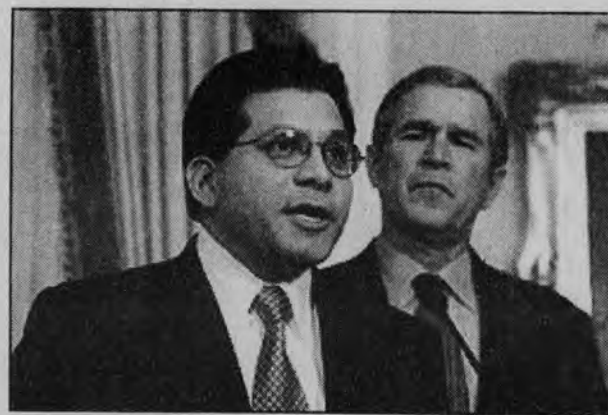

For 50 years the ABA has worked as a group to fulfill the duty of pre-screening Republican and Democratic administration nominees, receiving word of potential nominees before any candidates are announced.

The ABA's 15-member committee on the federal judiciary evaluates potential nominees for the White House or the attorney general. It interviews candidates, reviews their records and makes recommendations before a formal nomination.

According to ABA's website, the committee can rate a candidate well qualified, qualified, or not qualified, based on "integrity, professional competence, and judicial temperament."

According to White House Deputy Press Secretary Scott McClellan, White House Counsel Al Gonzales notified Martha Barnett, president of the ABA, as well as the senior Republican and Democrat on the Senate Judiciary Committee, Sens. Orrin Hatch (R-Utah) and Patrick Leahy (D-Vermont) by letter and by phone of the recent decision.

"The decision was based on the principle

White House Counsel Al Gonzales notified the ABA that its role screening judges will be greatly reduced.

that the American Bar Association should not receive a preferential role over all other interested parties," McClellan said. "We welcome their input and they will continue to have an important role in the process."

Many wondered if the position as a pre-screening committee has given the ABA an unfair advantage over other interested political organizations.

Gonzales, in his letter to the American Bar Association, voiced this opinion, saying that the prescreening tradition did put the ABA at an advantage.

He stated that the ABA voice on nominees should not be "heard before and above all others" and that the historical arrangement with previous administrations was "preferential" and neither "appropriate" nor "fair." As one Senator asked in 1994, "Why should the ABA and not the National Bar Association have preference?"

Some argued that giving the ABA pre-screening rights of nominees made the process more time-efficient. Bush's defenders pointed out that the ABA regularly took up to 30 days in reviewing an applicant's qualifications.

In other situations, the ABA did not even screen certain federal judicial candidates: the past three presidents, both Republican and Democrat, did not even submit names to the ABA's standing committee until after the nominees were publicly announced.

Some conservatives have also accused the ABA of having a liberal bias, pointing especially to its mixed review of Supreme Court nominee Robert Bork in 1987, despite his stellar resume. Bork was not confirmed by the Senate.

President Bush attempted to lighten the atmosphere around his decision by welcoming the ABA to play the same role as other groups once a nominee has been announced, promising that its views will be given just consideration.

Gonzales backed him when speaking to White House reporters: "The administration fully welcomes the ABA, like other interested parties, to provide suggestions regarding potential judges, once the President submits a nomination to the Senate. The ABA like every other interested party is free to evaluate and express its views concerning the President's nominee."

Clearly, Democratic concerns have arisen in the Senate to dilute such a high tax cut in fear of immediate recessionary relief that may lead to a depression in the near future. Instead, they want to pursue a $60 billion tax cut ensuring that the federal government will still have funds to combat any future federal deficits. As Sen. Kent Conrad (D-N.D.) perfectly states, "we cannot hold a stimulus package, one that is fatally flawed."

"We would all love to have higher returns under Bush's republican ideology of individual tax cuts. Has this ideology gone too far, though?"

The Hoover tax plan of the 1920's followed a similar route where high tax cuts benefiting the rich eventually drained the economy. Does the Great Depression ring a bell? And yes, thanks to former President Hoover, millions of Americans lost their jobs and the fear of Republican rule allowed for two decades of democratic regimes to follow.

Although Bush is still pushing a $1.6 trillion tax cut over the next ten years, the idea of a $60 billion rebate has become favored in the Senate. According to the New York Times, it has become increasingly difficult to reach a consensus concerning the details of the tax plan, but Mr. Bush will have to be willing to compromise in hopes of getting any tax cut passed anytime soon.

Evidently, the Democrats, along with the Republicans, also realize a need for immediate economic relief to stimulate the economy.

Moreover, he has also signaled that he may be open to discussion of estate tax repeal, in lieu of a faulty $1.6 trillion tax cut that was the pivot of his projected agenda and election victory (along with the bipartisan Republican United States Supreme Court Justices, I may add).

Rep. Sander Levin (D-MI) states, "we're not sure there's a tax cut that will stimulate the economy, but we're sure this one isn't." If anyone concerning this debate should be recognized for verity, it should be him.

Why not let the Bush tax cut proceed, watch it fail, and give the Democrats the satisfaction of correctly invalidating Bush's economic plan? Clearly, any American will be able to look back ten years from now and thank Democrats for saving the American economy from the original Bush tax plan, which I believe is doomed.

Why not let the Bush tax cut proceed, watch it fail, and give the Democrats the satisfaction of correctly invalidating Bush's economic plan? Clearly, any American will be able to look back ten years from now and thank Democrats for saving the American economy from the original Bush tax plan, which I believe is doomed.

Why not let the Bush tax cut proceed, watch it fail, and give the Democrats the satisfaction of correctly invalidating Bush's economic plan? Clearly, any American will be able to look back ten years from now and thank Democrats for saving the American economy from the original Bush tax plan, which I believe is doomed.

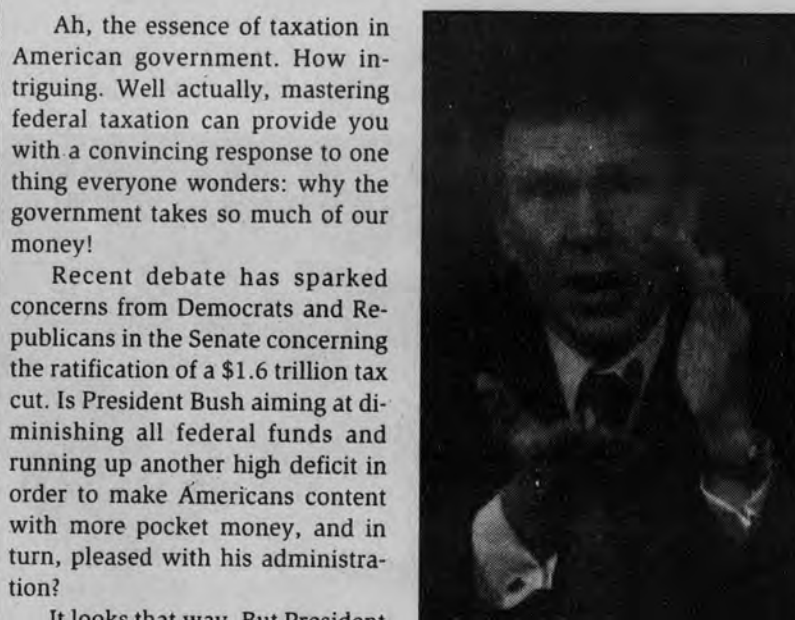

Why not let the Bush tax cut proceed, watch it fail, and give the Democrats the satisfaction of correctly invalidating Bush's economic plan? Clearly, any American will be able to look back ten years from now and thank Democrats for saving the American economy from the original Bush tax plan, which I believe is doomed.

Why not let the Bush tax cut proceed, watch it fail, and give the Democrats the satisfaction of correctly invalidating Bush's economic plan? Clearly, any American will be able to look back ten years from now and thank Democrats for saving the American economy from the original Bush tax plan, which I believe is doomed.

Why not let the Bush tax cut proceed, watch it fail, and give the Democrats the satisfaction of correctly invalidating Bush's economic plan? Clearly, any American will be able to look back ten years from now and thank Democrats for saving the American economy from the original Bush tax plan, which I believe is doomed.

Reaganomics, round two

But is it good for the country? A B&P commentary by Michael Dudzinski

Sen. Tom Daschle (D-S.D.) discusses a possible "tax rebate."

It looks that way. But President Bush cannot fool the American people any longer. We have been through similar circumstances during the 1980's and even before that. President Bush has carried Ronald Reagan's legacy of excessive spending and immediate tax relief, leaving the Democrats to combat the deficit after a Republican presidency.

Clearly, Democratic concerns have arisen in the Senate to dilute such a high tax cut in fear of immediate recessionary relief that may lead to a depression in the near future. Instead, they want to pursue a $60 billion tax cut ensuring that the federal government will still have funds to combat any future federal deficits. As Sen. Kent Conrad (D-N.D.) perfectly states, "we cannot hold a stimulus package, one that is fatally flawed."

"We would all love to have higher returns under Bush's republican ideology of individual tax cuts. Has this ideology gone too far, though?"

The Hoover tax plan of the 1920's followed a similar route where high tax cuts benefiting the rich eventually drained the economy. Does the Great Depression ring a bell? And yes, thanks to former President Hoover, millions of Americans lost their jobs and the fear of Republican rule allowed for two decades of democratic regimes to follow.

Although Bush is still pushing a $1.6 trillion tax cut over the next ten years, the idea of a $60 billion rebate has become favored in the Senate. According to the New York Times, it has become increasingly difficult to reach a consensus concerning the details of the tax plan, but Mr. Bush will have to be willing to compromise in hopes of getting any tax cut passed anytime soon.

Evidently, the Democrats, along with the Republicans, also realize a need for immediate economic relief to stimulate the economy.

Moreover, he has also signaled that he may be open to discussion of estate tax repeal, in lieu of a faulty $1.6 trillion tax cut that was the pivot of his projected agenda and election victory (along with the bipartisan Republican United States Supreme Court Justices, I may add).

Rep. Sander Levin (D-MI) states, "we're not sure there's a tax cut that will stimulate the economy, but we're sure this one isn't." If anyone concerning this debate should be recognized for verity, it should be him.

Why not let the Bush tax cut proceed, watch it fail, and give the Democrats the satisfaction of correctly invalidating Bush's economic plan? Clearly, any American will be able to look back ten years from now and thank Democrats for saving the American economy from the original Bush tax plan, which I believe is doomed.

Why not let the Bush tax cut proceed, watch it fail, and give the Democrats the satisfaction of correctly invalidating Bush's economic plan? Clearly, any American will be able to look back ten years from now and thank Democrats for saving the American economy from the original Bush tax plan, which I believe is doomed.

Why not let the Bush tax cut proceed, watch it fail, and give the Democrats the satisfaction of correctly invalidating Bush's economic plan? Clearly, any American will be able to look back ten years from now and thank Democrats for saving the American economy from the original Bush tax plan, which I believe is doomed.

Why not let the Bush tax cut proceed, watch it fail, and give the Democrats the satisfaction of correctly invalidating Bush's economic plan? Clearly, any American will be able to look back ten years from now and thank Democrats for saving the American economy from the original Bush tax plan, which I believe is doomed.

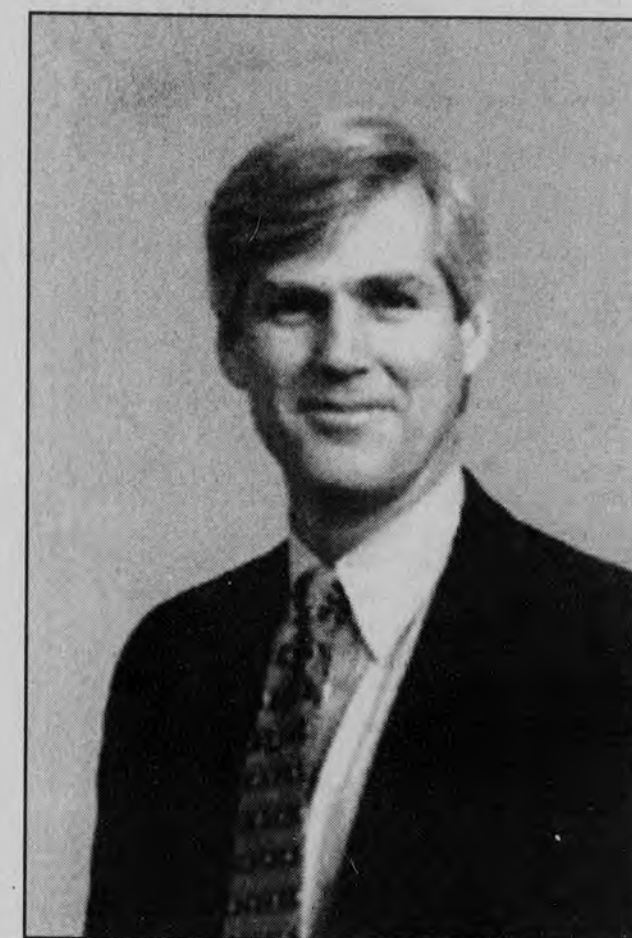

Why not let the Bush tax cut proceed, watch it fail, and give the Democrats the satisfaction of correctly invalidating Bush's economic plan? Clearly, any American will be able to look back ten years from now and thank Democrats for saving the American economy from the original Bush tax plan, which I believe is doomed.

SCIENCE & TECHNOLOGY

Dr. David Scadden presents stem cells: forever young?

By JOSIE CETTA
Science and Technology Editor

A lecture was held in the Rooke Chemistry Building this Monday, featuring Dr. David T.

Dr. David Scadden, associate professor of medicine at Harvard University, brings promise to the future of the regeneration of human tissues.

Scadden, an associate professor of medicine at Harvard University, and a 1975 University graduate.

Dr. Scadden has directed many cancer and AIDS research centers, but is especially renowned for his work with the protein p21 and stem cells. In his lecture, "Stem Cells: Forever Young," Dr. Scadden presented the possibility of genetic regeneration of human tissue.

Stem cells are cells that can grow into a range of tissues. They have the ability to divide for indefinite periods giving rise to specialized cells. Past research with embryonic stem cells have proved successful. These stem cells have demonstrated pluripotency, or the ability to give rise to most of the tissues in an organism. However, studies involving embryos bring with them ethical issues.

Neural stem cells, derived from the fetal brain, grow easily in cultures and can form a variety of brain cells. These cells may be able to repair damage done by diseases, such as Parkinson's and Alzheimer's, by rebuilding nerves. Neural stem cells could also potentially be made into insulin-producing cells. Human neural stem cells have been planted into the brains of mice with much success. These stem cells performed the same tasks as mouse cells and can even produce proteins.

The proposal for brain repair is not far off. The same control systems that regulate cell specialization in a fetus also operate in adult stem cells. Adult stem cells are an alternative to embryo stem cells.

These cells, although less efficient, settle the controversial issue over the use of embryonic cells. Adult stem cells are hard to isolate and are present only in small quantities. Cells would have to be grown in cultures to obtain adequate quantities for treatment. Also, adult stem cells often have more DNA abnormalities than younger cells.

Scadden was a part of a research team from the Massachusetts General Hospital that discovered the protein, p21, in March of last year. P21 controls the development and proliferation of hematopoietic stem cells, or cells in bone marrow and blood. The team found that p21 was capable of developing into any kind of blood cell. This meant that stem cells would no longer be limited in number.

Stem cells can develop into a variety of cells such as brain, muscle, cartilage and blood cells. P21 directs a cell either to remain in Go, the stage of the cell cycle in which non-proliferate cells remain suspended, or to continue on with proliferation.

The medical potential of stem cells is unlimited. For example, new, healthy cells can replace ailing tissues. Stem cells can assist in growing new organs as well.

For years, scientists have been looking for a way to increase the number of stem cells. There are some compounds, such as cytokines, that promote cell division.

Dr. Scadden and his research team focused on what was blocking the stem cells from dividing, instead of finding out how to invoke cell division.

Scadden and his team found a large amount of p21 in human bone marrow stem cells. His team examined cells in the p21 of knockout mice, and found that they had twice as many stem cells than humans. Drugs were injected into these mice to rid the p21. In this absence of p21, cell cycles were exhausted. Ninety percent of mice without p21 died.

Scadden believes that by releasing the p21 "brake," without using high levels of cytokines, we might be able to expand the number of stem cells.

"We can't say that there won't be a problem down the road," Scadden concluded. But the future looks promising for the regeneration of human tissues.

"We can't say that there won't be a problem down the road," Scadden concluded. But the future looks promising for the regeneration of human tissues.

"We can't say that there won't be a problem down the road," Scadden concluded. But the future looks promising for the regeneration of human tissues.

"We can't say that there won't be a problem down the road," Scadden concluded. But the future looks promising for the regeneration of human tissues.

"We can't say that there won't be a problem down the road," Scadden concluded. But the future looks promising for the regeneration of human tissues.

"We can't say that there won't be a problem down the road," Scadden concluded. But the future looks promising for the regeneration of human tissues.

"We can't say that there won't be a problem down the road," Scadden concluded. But the future looks promising for the regeneration of human tissues.

"We can't say that there won't be a problem down the road," Scadden concluded. But the future looks promising for the regeneration of human tissues.

"We can't say that there won't be a problem down the road," Scadden concluded. But the future looks promising for the regeneration of human tissues.

"We can't say that there won't be a problem down the road," Scadden concluded. But the future looks promising for the regeneration of human tissues.

"We can't say that there won't be a problem down the road," Scadden concluded. But the future looks promising for the regeneration of human tissues.

"We can't say that there won't be a problem down the road," Scadden concluded. But the future looks promising for the regeneration of human tissues.

"We can't say that there won't be a problem down the road," Scadden concluded. But the future looks promising for the regeneration of human tissues.

"We can't say that there won't be a problem down the road," Scadden concluded. But the future looks promising for the regeneration of human tissues.

"We can't say that there won't be a problem down the road," Scadden concluded. But the future looks promising for the regeneration of human tissues.

"We can't say that there won't be a problem down the road," Scadden concluded. But the future looks promising for the regeneration of human tissues.

"We can't say that there won't be a problem down the road," Scadden concluded. But the future looks promising for the regeneration of human tissues.

"We can't say that there won't be a problem down the road," Scadden concluded. But the future looks promising for the regeneration of human tissues.

"We can't say that there won't be a problem down the road," Scadden concluded. But the future looks promising for the regeneration of human tissues.

"We can't say that there won't be a problem down the road," Scadden concluded. But the future looks promising for the regeneration of human tissues.

"We can't say that there won't be a problem down the road," Scadden concluded. But the future looks promising for the regeneration of human tissues.

The future of forecasting

By JESSICA RYAN
Staff Writer

As April approaches, the scarves, parkas and sweaters have yet to be replaced with shorts and sandals. To many, it seems as though the warm weather may never arrive, and that the winter chill may linger permanently.

Many eagerly check the forecast daily, hoping to see rising temperatures and sunshine in the near future. Unfortunately, rising temperatures and sunshine have not surfaced in recent forecasts, leading individuals to only hope that the forecasts are incorrect, and that the desired conditions will surprisingly surface.

Currently, this hope of incorrect forecasts may be justified, as according to MSNBC Weather, accuracy is about 90 percent for a one-day forecast, approximately 85 percent for a two-day forecast, and somewhat uncertain in the days to follow.

With the current weather forecasting technology, it may be safe for individuals to hope for better conditions than are predicted. In the near future, new technology may give meteorologists the ability to predict weather more accurately, thus lessening the uncertainty inherent in the weather forecasts.

The new technology may allow the National Weather Service to expand the traditional five-day forecast to a forecast of seven days, with 85 to 90 percent accuracy for up to three days, according to MSNBC.

Furthermore, the new technology may provide yearly forecasts, such as if a particular winter may expect a high level of snowfall, or if a summer may expect drought conditions. In addition to temperatures and conditions, it can display advanced warnings for winter storms, tornadoes and hurricanes.

These developments in forecasting are the result of the technology of new satellites, such as the Advanced Weather Interactive Processing System. According to the National Weather Service, AWIPS has allowed for increased accuracy in forecasts, as well as extended forecasts due to features such as satellite imagery, Doppler Radar, automated weather observations, and computer-generated numerical forecasts, which are all generated at one work station.

According to statistical evidence, AWIPS, due to all of its features, has improved forecast accuracy, as well as warnings for impending storms.

Although it is not possible to improve the weather, it is now possible, as a result of the new technologies such as AWIPS, to have accurate forecasts of the weather for the next seven days in the future.

Although the weather may still prove to be undesirable, the forecasts may allow individuals to feel certain of their accuracy, and plan accordingly.

People may not have desirable weather conditions, but there may no longer be surprises in the forecasted weather, which, to the director of the National Weather Service, John Kelly, Jr., is the ultimate goal.

"Our vision," he says, "is to be America's no-surprise weather service, and we are well on our way."

"Our vision," he says, "is to be America's no-surprise weather service, and we are well on our way."

"Our vision," he says, "is to be America's no-surprise weather service, and we are well on our way."

"Our vision," he says, "is to be America's no-surprise weather service, and we are well on our way."

"Our vision," he says, "is to be America's no-surprise weather service, and we are well on our way."

"Our vision," he says, "is to be America's no-surprise weather service, and we are well on our way."

"Our vision," he says, "is to be America's no-surprise weather service, and we are well on our way."

"Our vision," he says, "is to be America's no-surprise weather service, and we are well on our way."

"Our vision," he says, "is to be America's no-surprise weather service, and we are well on our way."

"Our vision," he says, "is to be America's no-surprise weather service, and we are well on our way."

"Our vision," he says, "is to be America's no-surprise weather service, and we are well on our way."

"Our vision," he says, "is to be America's no-surprise weather service, and we are well on our way."

"Our vision," he says, "is to be America's no-surprise weather service, and we are well on our way."

"Our vision," he says, "is to be America's no-surprise weather service, and we are well on our way."

"Our vision," he says, "is to be America's no-surprise weather service, and we are well on our way."

"Our vision," he says, "is to be America's no-surprise weather service, and we are well on our way."

"Our vision," he says, "is to be America's no-surprise weather service, and we are well on our way."

"Our vision," he says, "is to be America's no-surprise weather service, and we are well on our way."

"Our vision," he says, "is to be America's no-surprise weather service, and we are well on our way."

"Our vision," he says, "is to be America's no-surprise weather service, and we are well on our way."

"Our vision," he says, "is to be America's no-surprise weather service, and we are well on our way."

"Our vision," he says, "is to be America's no-surprise weather service, and we are well on our way."

Cigarette smoke's hazardous effects on skin

By NATE IVANICK
Staff Writer

Doctors have done it again. Just when you thought you knew all the reasons why not to inhale tar and other toxins into your lungs, the doctors at St. John's Institute of Dermatology in London have now discovered yet another effect.

The researchers have found out why smokers tend to show signs of aging before nonsmokers. While this trend has been apparent for quite some time, no definite data had been found to support it. A study published in the Lancet Medical Journal shows that tobacco smoke activates a gene in the body that works to destroy collagen.

Collagen is a structural protein existing throughout the body that has the unique ability to be able to stretch, and then return to its normal length offering skin its youthful smoothness.

But why would the body contain a gene that would destroy collagen if it is so necessary to the body? In healthy skin, it is important for collagen to be broken down periodically so that it can be rebuilt. This renews the skin and helps to prevent possible imperfections that might accumulate otherwise.

An enzyme, known as matrix metalloproteinase-1, or MMP, is created due to smoking. When skin is damaged, by smoking for example, it responds by producing large amounts of repair mechanisms, including MMP, to break down the collagen and rebuild it.

According to The Daily News, smoking causes collagen to be destroyed faster than it can be replaced. As collagen becomes less prominent, the daily stressing caused by squinting, talking, laughing, smiling, frowning, or just about any other activity leads to wrinkles. Doctors found that even the simple act of pursing the lips to take a drag on a cigarette can lead to wrinkles.

In addition to damaging the skin in this way, smoking also triggers oxygen damage in cells, and can disrupt blood flow to cells. All of these unnatural stresses lead to older looking skin.

Does all this talk about wrinkles sound familiar? That is because smoking is found to have the same effect on the skin as overexposure to the sun. Unfortunately, too much smoke can't give you a tan.

Researchers first discovered this while studying the effects of artificial sunlight on MMP. They found that the levels of MMP in some people's skin were much higher than in others.

When examined further, it was discovered that people with high levels of MMP were smokers, while those with low levels of the enzyme were nonsmokers.

In light of this news, I have decided to expand the Science and Technology section of The Bucknellian into a beauty advice column as well. Don't smoke and don't fry your skin in the sun.

By following these instructions, not only will you be at a reduced risk for lung and skin cancer, but you will also look better later in life, and be at less risk for all the problems to which smoking and the sun lead.

By following these instructions, not only will you be at a reduced risk for lung and skin cancer, but you will also look better later in life, and be at less risk for all the problems to which smoking and the sun lead.

summer

NORTHWESTERN UNIVERSITY

www.northwestern.edu/summernu

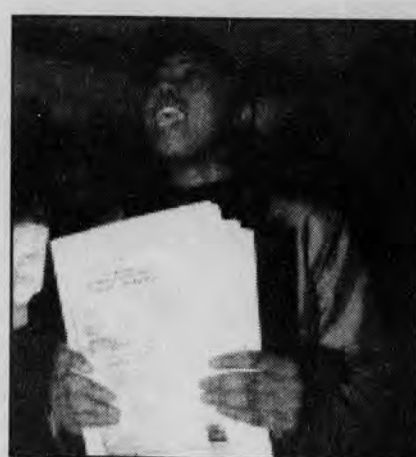

earn EARN FULL-YEAR CREDIT IN BIOLOGY, CHEMISTRY, PHYSICS AND FOREIGN LANGUAGES

progress ACCELERATE PROGRESS TOWARDS YOUR DEGREE fulfill FULFILL A DISTRIBUTION OR GENERAL EDUCATION REQUIREMENT live LIVE ON NORTHWESTERN'S LAKESIDE CAMPUS, JUST NORTH OF CHICAGO!

Call 800-FINDS-NU for a catalog.

Duke University's Camika Haynes protests a student publication's decision to print a Horowitz's ad.

dent response to the ad was mixed. "the [University] faculty members individually have been very supportive, both to me, and the decision to run the ad," a reaction that may surprise conservative observers such as Horowitz, who frequently claim that progressive college faculty are often the ones behind a great deal of campus "racial McCarthyism."

The Bucknellian has not received the reparations ad, and according to Managing Editor Jim Leahy '03, does not have a "comprehensive ad screening process" for determining what to fit for print.

"Since they are commercial in nature, papers have the right to deny advertising on any grounds with no violation of the First Amendment it is up to us as a paper to decide our level of tolerance," Leahy said. Leahy added that if he had a question about the propriety of any ad, he would consult the editors-in-chief's judgment.

"We have already instructed [National Advertising Representative] Amy [Pelouquin '03] that The Bucknellian will not accept this advertisement," said Editor-in-Chief Pete Van Emburgh '02.

The controversy, while almost a month old now, is far from settled, as some newspapers have received the ad but have not yet acted on it.

Horowitz is also soliciting contributions to his organization so that the ad campaign may continue.

Arts & Entertainment

Chorale performs Spring concert

CHORALE From page B1

This portion of the concert revealed to the audience the dedication and achievements of the seniors, as well as the vast assortment of academic interests they represent.

As a tribute to the seniors, Brody then conducted the Chorale in "The Lord Bless You and Keep You," which is a traditional Christian benediction set to a soft, lyric melody by contemporary composer John Rutter. The emotion was evident in the eyes of the conductor as the Chorale expressed its parting wishes for the seniors through music.

The concert ended with "Serenade to Music," a substantial choral setting from the early 20th century. "Serenade" is text is derived from Act V of Shakespeare's "The Merchant of Venice," and is set to a dramatic, moving score by composer Vaughan Williams. This piece featured soprano soloists Rachel Crane '03 and Alissa Yatcho '01 on soaring melody lines.

The text of "Serenade to Music" explores the nature of music on a personal level. The audience could surely relate to such lines as, "Here we will sit and let the sounds of music / Creep in our ears..." They responded enthusiastically at the finale of the concert, which was a much-appreciated reflection of the Chorale's diligent work throughout the year. As the Chorale members and the audience drifted out of the Weis Center, Shakespeare's words in "Serenade" remained appropriate: "Soft stillness, and the night, / Become the touches of sweet harmony."

Enemy at the Gates

Following the life of a Russian soldier in WWII

By ALEX COSTOS
Staff Writer

Imagine you are a Russian sniper in the year-long invasion of Stalingrad by Nazi Germany during World War II. You are in an abandoned warehouse, walking down a tattered, desolate hallway when you and your sniper partner come across a hole in the wall. You must jump the five-foot gap in the floor, which means you will be suspended in the air and visible to your enemy for less than one second due to the ten-foot wide hole in the wall of the hallway—a small risk.

You look at your partner and realize that it is his turn to cross "open terrain" first, giving the enemy a chance to locate and aim his weapon at you when you jump—a huge risk. You shake your partner's hand for good luck and he takes off running to gain speed for the simple jump. The second he takes off you are right on his heels, looking to cross the gap as quickly as possible to limit the enemy from targeting and shooting you.

You see your partner jump and you follow, landing safely on your feet across the gap. You look around to see no sign of your partner, only a spatter of blood on the wall. You realize the shot that just killed your partner was the most amazing sniper ever taken, a shot that was made in a quarter of a second. And then you swallow hard, realizing that the man that made that shot is working for Nazi Germany to hunt you down and kill you.

This is the basis for Enemy at the Gates, the new romantic war epic from director Jean-Jacques Annaud. Enemy at the Gates pits a young Russian man from the Ural Mountains against a trained, experienced Nazi German major during the brutal 1942-1943 siege of Stalingrad.

Vassily Zaitsev, played by Jude Law, is a soldier in the Red Army whose grandfather taught him how to shoot. In the constantly turning tides

Academy Award winners announced Sunday night

Gladiator takes home the night's top award

Courtesy of www.oscar.com

BEST PICTURE Gladiator Russell Crowe - Gladiator	WRITING - ADAPTED Stephen Gaghan - Traffic
ACTOR - LEADING Russell Crowe - Gladiator	WRITING - ORIGINAL Cameron Crowe - Almost Famous
ACTOR - SUPPORTING Benicio Del Toro - Traffic	FOREIGN LANGUAGE FILM Crouching Tiger, Hidden Dragon
ACTRESS - LEADING Julia Roberts - Erin Brockovich	MUSIC - SCORE Tan Dun - Crouching Tiger, Hidden Dragon
ACTRESS - SUPPORTING Marcia Gay Harden - Follies	MUSIC - SONG Bob Dylan - "Things Have Changed" - Wonder Boys
DIRECTING Steven Soderbergh - Traffic	COSTUME DESIGN Janty Yates - Gladiator
MAKEUP Rick Baker, Gail Ryan - Dr. Seuss' How the Grinch Stole Christmas

Chris Rivera—The Bucknellian

Dr. Payne directs the Concert Chorale in its Spring performance.

Phi Kappa Psi hosts annual "Battle of the Bands"

Proceeds benefit Susquehanna Valley Women in Transition

By SCOTT ACKLEY
Staff Writer

Seven local bands competed for top honors at the Phi Kappa Psi fraternity on Saturday night. This Battle of the Bands was a fundraiser for Susquehanna Valley Women in Transition.

Groups performed on alternate sides of the house, providing a continuous three hours of great music. Their styles ranged from the acoustic works of Neil Angis and Adam Jacob to the energetic entertainment of Liam and Me and The Extraterrestrial Band.

The night began with Phi Psi's own Neil Angis playing various covers, including an acoustic version of Fuel's "Shimmer." The next group to play was Smodge, whose unique style was a definite crowd pleaser. Angry Caesar followed Smodge, covering a couple of songs, including Foo Fighters' "Learn to Fly," and ending with a jam session.

The Extraterrestrial Band also took the stage and treated the audience to an incredible show, demonstrating great skill. The band's songs caused the fraternity house to jump with energy.

The crowd's level of enthusiasm was high as the band Liam and Me took the stage. The combination of the group's dynamics and vocals kept the performance at a feverish pace.

The group Slitrane slowed things down with a cover of Marvin Gaye's "Let's Get it On." Susquehanna University's Hardwood had a more mellow style, covering Matchbox 20's "If You're Gone," along with some original songs. The final act of the evening was Adam Jacob, ending the concert with his acoustic covers.

After all the groups played, the fans had the opportunity to voice their opinion as they voted for the best band.

In the end, the showmanship of The Extraterrestrial Band defeated the others, and the group won the first-place prize of $200. Second-place honors went to Hardwood and third-place honors went to Liam and Me.

The crowd seemed to enjoy the performances of the evening. One fan commented on the great variety of music, while another was impressed with the smooth operation of the event.

The big winner of the event was Susquehanna Valley Women in Transition. Through the high attendance and generosity of the University's student body, Phi Kappa Psi raised $700.

Scott Ackley—The Bucknellian

Phi Psi's own Neil Angis plays for the crowds on Saturday night.

bucknellian@bucknell.edu

Production designer Stout lectures at BU

Presents "Dinosaurs, Movies, Comics, and Theme Parks"

By KRISTA REISDORF
A&E Editor

William Stout, best known for his work as a production designer, visited the University last week to present his lecture "Dinosaurs, Movies, Comics and Theme Parks" and another lecture on his adventures in Antarctica. The Bucknell Student Lectureship Committee sponsored a dinner on Tuesday, Mar. 20, so select students and faculty were able to ask some questions, and Stout was able to share his experiences.

Stout has worked with celebrities like Steven Spielberg, George Lucas, Jim Henson and Michael Jackson, people that many only dream of meeting. And this from a guy who wasn't even contemplating a career in the movie industry.

"I wanted to be a doctor," Stout said.

However, after majoring in illustration at the California Institute of the Arts, Stout headed in a different direction. In the years that followed, Stout experimented with almost everything in his field. He paints, designs theme parks, creates children's books, designs stage shows, works as a production designer for films and television, creates comic books, and does just about everything you could possibly name.

Because he is a man with talents in all fields, students who were in the arts, engineering, biology and environmental programs found invaluable insights into their own fields," said Sarah Endyke '02, a member of the Lectureship Committee.

Sitting at a table with students and faculty, Stout appeared very laid-back. He was dressed in jeans and a button-down shirt, with a scarf tied around his neck for a touch of the outdoors.

Stout is known for his drawings, paintings and designs of dinosaurs, inspiring Michael Crichton's Jurassic Park and Spielberg's The Land Before Time series. He was given the 1984 Children's Choice Award for one of his books, "The Little Blue Brontosaurus." He said that his science background, from the days of wanting to be a doctor, actually helped him design his dinosaurs.

"It was great, because I was able to apply the science, especially anatomy, to reconstructing dinosaurs," Stout said. In the film industry, Stout has worked on such projects as Return of the Living Dead, Disney's Dinosaur, and Men in Black. He is also the designer of a live Harry Potter stage show.

However, another facet of Stout's experience has been designing theme parks, which stemmed from the interest people had in his work. When asked how he got into designing theme parks, his answer was simple.

"They just called me!" Stout exclaimed, laughing.

He worked for Walt Disney Imagineering, planning various theme parks, and has also worked with Michael Jackson on his Neverland theme parks.

Stout gave everyone a run-down on one of the parks he has been designing, the Wizard of Oz theme park in Kansas. He has definitely paid attention to details and making the attractions real; all park-goers will have the true Dorothy experience, tornado, flying monkeys, yellow brick road and all.

"If the place isn't believable to me, the public won't believe," Stout said. "I have to make it real for me." Stout was also able to share some of his adventures in Antarctica. He traveled there originally as a tourist after seeing photographs, but was so struck by the purity of the wildlife that he was inspired to paint it, and has returned several times.

"The photographs can't truly capture the beauty and the wide spectrum of color," Stout said.

He now works on saving and preserving the wildlife of Antarctica, as he discussed in one of his lectures here at the University.

"I thought he was really a fascinating man," Hillary DePiano '02 said. "He had a lot of interesting things to say. It's a shame the student body didn't realize who he was or what he has done. He's led a full life that should be an inspiration to others."

Even though Stout has countless accomplishments in many areas of his work, he has become better at dividing his time between all that he does. He believes that his focus should now be on his painting, and is toning down his other projects.

"I was really worried about dividing time for a while, but now I really want to concentrate on my painting," Stout said. "This year I'm going to be really picky about the jobs I choose outside of my painting."

Overall, the faculty and students appreciated Stout's visit.

"The Lectureship Committee was very pleased with the interest that William Stout stirred on campus, and we've received nothing but positive feedback from the students and the University community," Endyke said. Keep an eye out for William Stout's work, in any of its many forms. If you would like to see some of his creations, you can find them at <http://www.williamstout.com>.

Agents of Good Roots concert poorly attended

By CHAD FLOOD
Staff Writer

The only down side to the Agents of Good Roots concert at Uptown this weekend was that hardly anyone attended. The majority of people at the show were with the band or on its guest list, and a very small group of University students came. This was unfortunate because the band's rock-jazz combination sounded really great in the small setting.

The band members are not strangers to larger venues, having opened for the Dave Matthews Band on their 1998 summer tour, as well as headlining popular clubs over the last several years. Singer Andrew Winn and company delivered two powerful sets, each hitting on classic tunes from their prior albums and more recent songs from their latest release, Needle and Thread.

However, the band has taken a new direction in recent months. Its new album is far different from the previous One By One, which was clearly written for a popular audience. The band has since gone back to its roots, playing more jams and horn-fueled rock. With a new bassist and a re-emerged album, Agents of Good Roots is definitely worth a listen. Check the band out at <http://www.agentsofgoodroots.com>.

THE Bucknellian

The weekly campus newspaper of Bucknell University

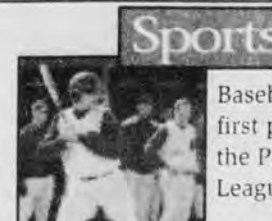

<http://www.orgs.bucknell.edu/bucknellian>

April 6, 2001

Volume 127, Number 9

Senate passes Campaign Finance Reform bill See page B8

Baseball holds first place in the Patriot League See page A8

Courtesy of Athletic Communications

The Bison defeated 12th-ranked Hobart Saturday and improved its chances to advance to the NCAA tournament for the first time

Ferraro pitches breathalyzer tests

Dean believes voluntary testing may give students defense against alcohol charges

By PETER VAN EMBURGH
Editor-in-Chief

At the request of students who feel they were wrongly cited for alcohol violations, Dean of Students Richard Ferraro is examining the feasibility of incorporating a voluntary breathalyzer test into campus policy.

If implemented, breathalyzer testing at the time of an incident would verify a student's blood alcohol content or whether to issue a citation for public drunkenness.

"The voluntary testing using breathalyzers would be very beneficial for students wrongly accused of consuming alcohol at all, or at a moderate level," Ferraro said.

Ferraro presented the issue—a student initiated, not administrative, issue—to the Committee on Complimentary Activities (CCA) and Bucknell Student Government (BSG) in order to solicit student reactions and input. Eventually, Ferraro hopes to hold a town hall meeting with the student body.

"My feel in talking with students is that they are supportive of the proposed concept, but they have some serious concerns about implementation," BSG President Nate Sorber '02 said. "Students are supportive of the concept if it remains the case that breathalyzers can only be used at the student's request."

Ferraro stresses that, if implemented, breathalyzer tests would be completely voluntary—students could request the test from a Public Safety officer or Public Safety could ask a student to take a breathalyzer, though an officer would not be able to force a student to take the test.

"While the voluntary testing may be offered [by a Public Safety officer], students will never be compelled to use it," Ferraro said.

Director of Public Safety Vincent DeCerio feels that breathalyzers could help eliminate false accusations of alcohol consumption.

"I think that breathalyzers, when used for internal purposes, would be beneficial to all members of the campus community and to the University's judicial board in that persons who have not been drinking alcohol can prove this assertion," DeCerio said.

Before BSG officially supports bringing breathalyzers to campus, the logistics of administering the test must be fine tuned.

"In regards to implementation, students are concerned about the correct usage [of breathalyzers] by Public Safety since this is a period when students view their relationship with Public Safety as strained—proper administration by the officers is one of the greatest concerns for students," Sorber said.

Furthermore, some students have expressed concern regarding whether a student will be automatically convicted for refusing to take a breathalyzer, either for privacy or self-incrimination. Ferraro disagrees.

"Breathalyzers take out the subjective nature of alcohol violations and bring it into an objective light," Ferraro said.

An underage student can be in the wrong place at the wrong time or can be wearing clothing that smells like beer without having consumed alcohol. Students of the legal drinking age who simply have had one or two beers could be accused of public drunkenness—yet in each of these cases, breathalyzers would eliminate the "plausible deniability" and students falling into the categories above would avoid citation.

"I believe that student sentiment can be expressed in the following manner: they want the ability to quickly clear themselves if wrongly accused, but they do not want to see an increase in those accusations," Sorber said.

Some schools have implemented involuntary usage of breathalyzers, but Ferraro asserts that the voluntary nature of the University's using breathalyzers "is the key to possibility" at the University.

"Dean Ferraro has assured me that this issue will have to be a student-driven initiative—it is not something coming from the administration, but instead being investigated by student request," Sorber said. "I think BSG's support or disapproval will have a large effect on whether this plan goes forward."

"Breathalyzers take out the subjective nature of alcohol violations and bring it into an objective light."

—Dean of Students
Richard Ferraro

Faculty opposes Greek plan

Plan for Prominence not endorsed by campus constituency

By LAURA DAY
News Editor

The University's Greek Life Task Force, in accordance with changes occurring to Greek systems nationwide, is proposing a complete overhaul of fraternity and sorority affairs on campus. However, the faculty voted on Monday not to endorse "Bucknell's Plan for Prominence in Greek Life."

The vote was consistent with the faculty's continuing stance on Greek Life—it voted 11 years ago to abolish the Greek system. The vote was never rescinded and therefore the Plan for Prominence is incongruent with the faculty's judgment of the Greek system.

"The faculty has the optimistic belief that it is possible to design the best living environment that we can," Faculty Chair Michael Payne said.

Many of the faculty believe that residential and social life needs to be broader in scope and focus, not centralizing around the Greek System.

Dean of Fraternity and Sorority Affairs Roy Baker was contacted, but had no comment on the faculty's vote.

According to Payne, there were three main concerns of the faculty when assessing the Plan for Prominence. With respect to a national tendency to revamp Greek systems to better accommodate all aspects of student life, Payne said some faculty would like to see the University modernize its social system to accommodate the increasing number of women on campus.

Furthermore, the faculty wants the University to focus more resources on social life in its entirety in order to retain more first-year students. Lastly, in light of recent alcohol overdoses around the country, the faculty is concerned for students' welfare.

Faculty voiced concern that the fraternities, rather than the sororities, have predominantly led the University's Greek System. With today's undergraduate population being more than 60 percent female, "is it legitimate to have the dominance of the social scene be men?" Payne questioned. Like Middlebury and Dartmouth, "many colleges and universities during the last decade have both reconsidered and reconfigured fraternity systems."

Some faculty would like to see more variety in activities on campus for women. Payne asked, "Why not have women's organizations as powerful as their increasing numbers?"

In addition to empowering female students in the University's social climate, the faculty is concerned that the Greek system may be turning students away from the University.

"A lot of [the students who transfer after their first year] object to the social scene here," Payne said.

The faculty opposes this perceived dominance of the Greek system.

"The idea is to not have a statement that one institution dominates social life," Payne said.

The faculty also opposed the Plan for Prominence because it worries about the connection between the Greek system and alcohol.

"Bucknell has been very fortunate, unlike neighboring institutions, to not yet have any alcohol-related deaths," Payne said. While not endorsing the Plan for Prominence, the faculty supports the suggested changes made by the Committee on Complimentary Activities. For example, it does not want the timing of recruitment to be changed to second-semester of the first-year.

Though the faculty contests the Plan for Prominence, it does present opportunities for an improved relationship between the faculty and Greek system, according to Dean of Students Richard Ferraro.

"The history between faculty and the Greek system has not been filled with close relationships," Ferraro said. "But, I think the plan creates the dynamics so that the gulf between the faculty, fraternities and sororities can be brought together."

"The Plan for Prominence, which calls for a new evaluation system of

Courtesy of Spencer Harris

House Party weekend brought students and non-students to parties, like this one at Kappa Delta Rho.

Crowded houses, mixed reactions

Administrators view House Party as a success but see room for improvement, writes Editor-in-Chief Rebecca Rowland

House Party 2001, held this past weekend, was met with mixed reviews from the administration. While the weekend managed to pass without any serious alcohol-related injuries or incidents, both Dean of Students Richard Ferraro and University President Steffen Rogers saw room for improvement.

"From what everyone has been telling me, the weekend went pretty well," President Rogers said. "We can do better but I was pleased with the behavior of the vast majority of students."

Director of Public Safety Vince DeCerio added to Rogers' statements, saying, "I was disappointed in the level of alcohol problems and the incidents of disorderly conduct."

This was the first House Party experience for both Ferraro and Rogers and many on the campus expressed anxiety about how both would react to the unique tradition.

While Ferraro did indicate that he was disappointed by the behavior of several students, he also commended many students on responsible conduct.

"During the weekend, I had many Bucknell students come up to me and ask how things were going," Ferraro said. "This was a commendable impulse, and it showed an increasing consciousness about the need to think about safety as well having fun during what is a complicated weekend."

While many students did indeed act commendably, many question if the burden of responsibility fell unfairly on the shoulders of a few students.

Greek student leaders manned wristband tables and each fraternity house was held accountable for their own risk management.

"I observed individuals at several fraternities who worked hard and responsibly at their front doors to keep good order, even when it detracted from their own good time," Ferraro stated.

This is not unusual, as it is standard operating procedure for each house to monitor their actions; however, the large population of non-student guests exacerbated this situation to an almost unbearable level.

"I have heard from students who would like to see major changes in the weekend," Rogers said. "Many complained of the over-crowded parties, citing out of town guests as a part of the problem. Students may decide to close the weekend to outside students."

Ferraro also addressed this issue, saying, "I think that there is merit in that suggestion, and in the weeks ahead we will discuss that closely."

Making changes in the weekend seems to interest both Rogers and Ferraro more than doing away with it.

While Rogers has commented that he would support student-based initiatives, Ferraro offered some suggestions as to how what he feels would be appropriate changes.

"Listening to bands and eating hogs dogs are fine, but it might be good to think about more sporting or carnival type activities, as well as a variety of food booths, that could add diversity to the day," Ferraro said.

"If we are dealing with Bucknell students, and if there is dedicated student leadership, that can be done," Ferraro added.

Public Safety Log

March 28, 2001

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF / CARELESS DRIVING—A student reported to Public Safety that a male threw stones at her car while she was driving through the Harris Parking Lot. Lewisburg Police Department was notified and spoke with the student. The male involved in the incident contacted Public Safety to report the student for driving at a high rate of speed. The incident is under investigation.

March 29, 2001

INFORMATION / STUDENT RETURNED TO CAMPUS BY LEWISBURG POLICE DEPARTMENT—Public Safety met Lewisburg Police Department at Smith Hall to assist with returning an intoxicated student who was observed carrying a real estate sign on South Sixth Street. The student was charged with underage consumption and littering after he attempted to discard the sign. Theft charges are pending.

INFORMATION / STUDENTS RETURNED TO CAMPUS BY LEWISBURG POLICE DEPARTMENT—Public Safety assisted Lewisburg Police Department with two intoxicated students who were observed on South Sixth Street tampering with street light globes. The individuals were charged with criminal mischief and underage consumption. Public Safety transported the students to their residence halls and turned them over to the RA.

MEDICAL ASSIST—Public Safety responded to the Langone Center for the report of an ill employee. The individual was transported by ambulance to Evangelical Community Hospital Emergency Room for treatment.

INFORMATION—Public Safety and East Buffalo Township Police Department responded to Swartz Hall for the report of possible terrorist threats against three students. A non-university student sent threatening and obscene comments through a computer instant messaging program. After an investigation, there was insufficient evidence for the filing of criminal charges. The individual was banned from campus.

MEDICAL ASSIST—Public Safety responded to the Field House for the report of an individual with a possible dislocated shoulder. The visitor was transported by ambulance to Evangelical Community Hospital for treatment.

INFORMATION—While on routine patrol, Public Safety observed a vehicle over the embankment between Snake Road and Trax Lot. The operator of the vehicle was contacted and advised that he failed to engage the gear shift of the manual transmission. Some property damage did occur in this incident, however no individuals were injured.

TAMPERING WITH FIRE EQUIPMENT—Public Safety responded to Hunt Hall for a fire alarm activation caused by unknown person(s) discharging a fire extinguisher. The incident is under investigation.

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF—An employee reported to Public Safety that he found graffiti on the walls in the men's restroom both in the Biology and Chemistry buildings. The incident is under investigation.

INFORMATION / MEDICAL AIDED / TRANSPORT—Public Safety responded to the Langone Center for the report of an injured employee. Public Safety transported the individual to Student Health Services for treatment. The employee was then transferred to Evangelical Community Hospital Emergency Room by ambulance for additional treatment.

UNDERAGE CONSUMPTION / PUBLIC DRUNKENNESS—An employee reported to Public Safety that he observed three males urinating in the area between Smith and Vedder Halls and he caught one of the males while the other two fled the area. The male was under the age of 21 and will be cited for underage consumption. The incident is under investigation.

TAMPERING WITH FIRE EQUIPMENT—Public Safety responded to a fire alarm at Swartz Hall and found that unknown person(s) had activated a pull station on the fourth floor. The incident is under investigation.

PUBLIC DRUNKENNESS / UNDERAGE DRINKING—Public Safety found a student under 21 years of age intoxicated in front of Delta Upsilon Fraternity. The male was cited for Public Drunkenness and Underage Drinking.

TAMPERING WITH FIRE EQUIPMENT—Public Safety responded to a fire alarm at Gateway Silberman and found that unknown person(s) had forcibly removed a smoke detector on the first floor. The incident is under investigation.

March 30, 2001

UNIVERSITY PROPERTY DAMAGE (THREE COUNTS)—Public Safety responded to Smith Hall, Swartz Hall and Gateway Silberman for the reports of broken windows. No witnesses or suspects could be located in a search of the areas.

POSSIBLE ACT 64—Public Safety responded to Bucknell West for the report of the odor of marijuana. No odor of marijuana could be detected and the report was determined to be unfounded.

TAMPERING WITH FIRE EQUIPMENT—Public Safety responded to a fire alarm at Kappa Delta Rho Fraternity and found that unknown person(s) had activated a pull station on the second floor. The incident is under investigation.

TAMPERING WITH FIRE EQUIPMENT—Public Safety responded to a fire alarm at Lambda Chi Alpha Fraternity and found that unknown person(s) had discharged a fire extinguisher. The incident is under investigation.

INFORMATION—Public Safety responded to Swartz Hall for the report of an unauthorized visitor who would not leave a student's room. Upon the request of Public Safety, the visitor left without incident.

TAMPERING WITH FIRE EQUIPMENT—Public Safety responded to a monitor trouble alarm at Swartz Hall and found that occupants had purposely removed a smoke detector on the fourth floor. The detector was placed back in position and the alarm was reset.

INFORMATION / UNIVERSITY PROPERTY DAMAGE—Public Safety responded to Trax Hall for the report of a broken window pane in an exterior door. No witnesses or suspects could be located. The window was repaired.

INFORMATION—Public Safety responded to Harris Hall for the report of a student behaving in an angry way and damaging personal and university property. The student was referred to the Dean's Office for follow up.

VANDALISM—Public Safety responded to the areas of Sigma Chi and Chi Phi Fraternities for the report of students removing the snow fence. No suspects were located in a search of the area.

UNDERAGE DRINKING—While on routine patrol, Public Safety observed an unknown female carrying a can of beer on Fraternity Road. When asked to stop, she threw the beer on the ground. She and her two friends were identified as non-university students who were drinking while under the age of 21. Charges are pending.

UNDERAGE DRINKING—While on foot patrol, Public Safety observed a student with an open container of beer. A citation for underage drinking was issued. Public Safety returned the individual to the RA on duty in his residence hall.

UNDERAGE DRINKING—Public Safety responded to Fraternity Road near Sigma Chi Fraternity for the report of an intoxicated student who admitted to consuming alcohol. A University citation for underage drinking was issued.

ACT 64 VIOLATION—Public Safety responded to Swartz Hall for the report of a suspicious odor of marijuana. Drug paraphernalia was found during a plain view search of a room. East Buffalo Township Police Department was contacted and responded to the scene. University and criminal charges are pending.

INFORMATION—Public Safety responded to Lambda Chi Alpha Fraternity for the report of loud music which was not turned off at the designated time. A University citation for violation of institutional policy, regulations and procedures issued.

SIMPLE ASSAULT—A University official reported to Public Safety that an assault had occurred at Sigma Phi Epsilon Fraternity. Upon investigation, it was reported that unwanted guests became involved in a fight with the fraternity which resulted in two students being injured. One brother was taken to Evangelical Community Hospital Emergency room for treatment of a broken jaw. One of the guests received a cut to the forehead. Public Safety attempted to locate the unidentified males by searching the area, but were unsuccessful. The incident is under investigation.

INFORMATION / MISSING PROPERTY—A student reported to Public Safety that his wallet was missing from inside the Lambda Chi Alpha Fraternity. The individual later found the wallet with all contents within.

INFORMATION—Public Safety responded to the Houseparty checkpoint on Lit Road for the report of two students carrying two cases of beer. The individuals were located and found to be over 21 years, therefore they were not detained.

DISORDERLY CONDUCT—Public Safety responded to the wristband tent on Fraternity Road for the report of a fight in progress. One male was identified and turned over to members of the Chi Phi Fraternity. The other individual could not be located.

DISORDERLY CONDUCT—An unknown person reported a fight in progress at Kappa Delta Rho Fraternity. Public Safety responded and observed a disturbance. The area was cleared. No victims or witnesses wished to make a formal report.

March 31, 2001

TAMPERING WITH FIRE EQUIPMENT / TWO PULL STATIONS—Public Safety responded to a fire alarm at Delta Upsilon Fraternity and found that unknown person(s) had activated two fire alarm pull stations. The incident is under investigation.

ODOR OF MARIJUANA / 2 LOCATIONS / ALCOHOL VIOLATIONS—Public Safety responded to Swartz Hall for the report of the odor of marijuana outside two rooms. Public Safety knocked on the room doors and were admitted but no drugs could be located in a plain view search of the room. Alcohol was found at one location. University charges are pending.

POLICY REGULATION / PROCEDURE—A citation was issued to Kappa Delta Rho Fraternity for failure to comply with the curfew for indoor music per the 2001 Houseparty policies and procedures.

VANDALISM / TAMPERING WITH FIRE EQUIPMENT—Public Safety responded to Delta Upsilon

Fraternity for a fire alarm and found that unknown person(s) had pulled a detector from the ceiling. No witnesses or suspects were located. Physical Plant replaced the detector and restored the system.

April 1, 2001

PUBLIC INTOXICATION / OPEN CONTAINER—While on routine patrol near Carnegie, Public Safety heard a student yelling obscenities. The visibly intoxicated individual, who was carrying a plastic mug of beer was stopped. Citations for public intoxication and open container were issued.

TAMPERING WITH FIRE EQUIPMENT—Public Safety responded to a fire alarm at Sigma Chi Fraternity and found that unknown person(s) had discharged a fire extinguisher on the second floor. The incident is under investigation.

INFORMATION—Public Safety responded to Swartz Hall for a fire alarm. While checking the building, Public Safety found a student who did not leave the building. There was a strong odor of marijuana but nothing was located in a plain view search of the area. A citation was issued for failure to leave the building during a fire alarm.

DISORDERLY CONDUCT / UNDERAGE DRINKING—While on routine patrol, Public Safety heard the sound of breaking glass and observed an individual walking away from the area. The individual was identified as a student who admitted to breaking a bottle and consuming alcohol while being under the age of 21. University citations were issued.

ASSIST LEWISBURG POLICE DEPARTMENT—Public Safety responded to Larison Hall to assist Lewisburg Police Department return a student to his residence. The individual had been found sitting beside the river at the corner of South Front and St. George Streets. Later the individual was again sitting at the same location. Lewisburg Police Department returned the student to the custody of the RA at that time. University and Lewisburg Police Department citations were issued for public drunkenness.

UNIVERSITY PROPERTY DAMAGE—Public Safety responded to the New Residence Hall for the report of a broken window. No witnesses or suspects were located in a search of the area.

UNAUTHORIZED PERSONS IN FIELDHOUSE—Public Safety responded to the Fieldhouse for the report of juveniles throwing tennis balls. The 14 juveniles who did not have memberships were identified, advised of University policy and escorted from the building. They left without incident. A trespassing notice was issued.

POLICY REGULATION / REGULATION / PROCEDURE—A citation was issued to Phi Kappa Psi Fraternity for failure to comply with the curfew for indoor music per the 2001 Houseparty policies and procedures.

VANDALISM / TAMPERING WITH FIRE EQUIPMENT—Public Safety responded to Phi Kappa Psi Fraternity for a fire alarm and found that unknown person(s) had removed a heat detector. No witnesses or suspects could be located. Physical plant replaced the detector and restored the fire alarm system.

April 2, 2001

MEDICAL ASSIST—Public Safety responded to Olin Science for the report of an employee who sustained a contusion on his head. This occurred when a projector screen fell from the ceiling striking him. The individual was transported by ambulance to Evangelical Community Hospital Emergency room for treatment and later returned to his home.

CJB sanctions student with AK-47

The University's Community Judicial Board, composed of four students and three non-student members of the faculty and/or professional staff met on Tuesday, April 3 to hear the charges brought against a student who owned what was described as an AK-47 semi automatic weapon that was found lying on his bed during a Spring Break room inspection. Also found in the room were 660 rounds of 39-millimeter ammunition, 5 ammunition clips and 520 rounds of 22-millimeter hollow point ammunition.

The student accepted responsibility for possession of a firearm and the ammunition. The Community Judicial Board found him responsible for "causing alarm, creating a hazardous condition by any act that serves no lawful purpose and causing justifiable apprehension of physical harm."

During the course of the hearing, it was determined that the student purchased the gun at a local rod and gun store three days before Spring Break. An employee of the rod and gun store certified that the "rifle is a Romanian Model SAR-2 which is cosmetically similar to an AK-47, but does not qualify as an assault weapon." He continued by indicating that "based on the original military definition and federal law, the rifle is not considered an assault rifle."

The respondent, who has owned a firearm since he was 12 years of age, is a member of the National Rifle Association and the Norry Gun Club which sponsors a civilian marksmanship program which requires the use of a rifle resembling a military weapon in order to compete. Finally, the student has stored other guns with the Department of Public Safety for the last two years.

Following the hearing of evidence, the Community Judicial Board met in closed session and, by vote of 5-2, imposed the following sanctions on the student, effective immediately. According to the Student Judicial System and Code of Conduct "In order for a student to be suspended from the University, there may be no more than one vote against the decision reached." Thus, to suspend a student, the vote must be, at a minimum, 6-1 in favor of the suspension.

1. The respondent has been suspended from the University for two semesters. However, this suspension has been remitted provided he is not found responsible for any Category I violation of the Student Code of Conduct on or off campus between April 3, 2001 and his Commencement from the University. Should he be determined responsible for a violation of the Student Code of Conduct during this time period, or fail to fulfill the other requirements listed, the sanction of suspension for two semesters will be immediately activated.

*2. The respondent is required to perform University Service by working regular hours for the Department of the Physical Plant on May 11, 12, and 14 preparing the campus for Commencement.

3. The respondent, through Associate Dean of Students Gerald Commerford, is required to write an anonymous apology to the University community for his actions.

4. The respondent is prohibited from living off campus during the 2001-02 academic year.

5. The respondent has forfeited the use of his room selection lottery number which will require that he select or be assigned to a residence hall room for 2001-02 after all the men in the Class of 2002 have been accommodated.

In determining the sanctions, the Community Judicial Board considered the intent of the respondent, the severity of the offenses, and the respondent's previous conduct record.

Courtesy of the Office of the Deans of Students fraternities and sororities, among other initiatives, can "be a plan for action and reform," Ferraro said.

FACULTY From page A1

"It can bring the Greek system to a new level of excellence."

The Plan for Prominence provides a venue to reward fraternities and sororities for outstanding contributions.

It can show "that they are doing things of worth," Ferraro said. Ferraro also seconds the faculty's desire to enhance student life and provide a social climate that appeals to "Greeks, non-Greeks and loners."

The University's Vision 2010 Plan will provide an opportunity to evaluate and modify all aspects of campus life.

Both Ferraro and the faculty hope to see residential life improvements incorporated into the long-range plan.

"I want Bucknell to be about diversity. We should provide a place that's comfortable for all students."

—Dean of Students Richard Ferraro

CORRECTION

The March 30 article on page B5, "Aerobics with an edge: kickboxer Laura Kamienski," implied that all students would be able to earn a black belt in karate before graduation. Only first year students would have enough time to earn a black belt before graduation. The name of Kamienski's martial arts studio was labeled incorrectly. The correct name is Kicks Martial Arts for Women.

Only three weeks left!

Write for news!
E-mail Laura (lday@) or Natalie (casp@)

Next Issue:

Baseball vs. Holy Cross

Softball vs. Army

Women's lacrosse vs. Lafayette

Track and Field—Colonial Relays

Women's Water Polo—Southern

Championships

Men's lax crushes Hobart, 12-4

Win solidifies team's status atop Patriot League and propels it in into top 10

By PAT EVANS

Staff Writer

Few things are sweeter than revenge. Last year the Bison were on their way to earning an automatic berth to the NCAA tournament before a loss to Hobart destroyed their chances. On Saturday, Bucknell dominated Hobart from start to finish, beating the 12th ranked Statesmen at home, 12-4.

"It's always nice to come back and knock them out like they did to us," Head Coach Sid Jamieson said of the win.

Dennis Geraghty '03 and Wes Fetchet '04 each scored four goals in the victory for the Bison. Geraghty brought his season goal total to 29, which leads the team. For Fetchet it was his first start of his Bucknell career and an impressive one at that.

Fetchet gave credit to the entire team for his successful debut. "The defense was doing a great job of getting me the ball and the team really helped me calm down before the game because I was pretty nervous."

Kelly Hogue '01 and Michael Cheng '01 did the rest of the scoring with three and one goals respectively. Cheng also helped the scoring effort with four assists in the win.

Despite only a few players doing the scoring, Jamieson was quick to give credit to the entire team.

"The difference in the game was our defense," he said. "We played with a lot of poise at both ends of the field, and we were very patient on the offensive side, taking time off the clock and scoring when we needed to score."

Chris Rivera—The Bucknellian

The lacrosse team has put itself in a good position for an NCAA berth.

Justin Sussman '03 had a phenomenal game in goal, saving 26 shots, and allowing only four goals against Hobart's explosive offense. Many of his saves came against one-on-one opportunities. His performance helped earn him the Patriot League Defensive Player of the week honor and, more impressively, the Division I co-player of the week. Sussman now leads the league and is ranked nationally with a save percentage of 67%. Despite The Statesmen's out shooting the Bison 47-30, the Herd was able to stifle the attack and capitalize on their own opportunities.

"Hobart shoots the ball a lot and they have kind of a run and gun type of offense," Jamieson said trying to explain the shooting difference. "Whereas we're much more patient with the ball."

The win has huge implications for the Bison. Hobart has been a nationally ranked powerhouse who usually owns the Patriot League and advances deep into the NCAA tournament year after year. With them out of the picture and with Colgate and Lehigh the only League games left, the Bison are very close to making Bucknell lacrosse history: a berth in the NCAA tournament. The Bison will clinch the bid if they win both, or the combination of one win and a Lehigh loss in any of the Mountain Hawks remaining four league games.

"Every game is a big game," Jamieson said. "But clearly when playing the potential winner of the league and the team that used to be in the driver's seat, it is especially big."

The trouncing of the twelfth ranked Statesmen helped the Bison crack into the top ten lacrosse teams in the nation into the number nine spot. But a win over Hobart without winning the Patriot League would be a huge disappointment for the Herd, which has had its eyes on the NCAA tournament bid since the beginning of the season.

"Our guys are going to stay focused and take care of business," Jamieson said. "Clearly, they can't get overconfident if they want to achieve their ultimate goals."

Polo makes impression at Grove City

By MOLLY GOELLER

Staff Writer

The Bucknell women's water polo team traveled to Grove City, Pa this weekend where they walked away with three victories and one defeat, besting Penn St. Behrend, Washington & Jefferson and Slippery Rock with their only loss at the hands of Iona.

"The team went to Grove City this past weekend ready to play," states Brooke Rea '02, "and everyone got a lot of playing time, which was great. It was a nice way to end the regular season and get everyone pumped for Southern this weekend."

The Bison faced Iona in their first game of the weekend, where they came up against a dynamite goalie. Bucknell had 33 shots on goal, with only 6 making it into the net. Katie Stahler '03 and co-captain Paige Cull '01 led the team's scoring with two goals apiece.

In their second game of the weekend, the Bison dominated Penn St. Behrend, recording a 12-1 win. Head Coach John Ziegler mixed up the Bison's line-up giving other players opportunities to see playing time. The Bison did not allow any goals into the cage during the first half of play, and continued that same success during the final quarter of the game. Daniella Faas '04 and Katelyn Webster '04 each recorded three goals for the Bison, while Liz Falmarth '03 and Dana Clark '02 added two more each. The Bison played a solid game against Washington & Jefferson, dominating with a 14-3 win. Bucknell came out strong, racking up 7 goals in the first quarter and allowing only 1 Washington & Jefferson goal into the cage. Lindsay Chesterfield '04 had an impressive game in the cage, recording 7 saves during the first three quarters of play. Leading the Bison's scoring efforts was Stahler, Clark, Rea and Adrienne Schober '02 with two goals apiece.

Chris Rivera—The Bucknellian

The water polo team is gearing up for the Southern Championships.

Inconsistent women's lax splits matches

By CHUCK VICENTE

Staff Writer

This past weekend, the Bucknell women's lacrosse team narrowly lost to Holy Cross but bounced back to beat Niagara.

On Saturday the Bison hosted the Holy Cross Crusaders in a close-fought battle, but in the end, the Crusaders pulled away with an 11-9 victory.

"I thought we played really hard on Saturday," Head Coach Barb Jordan said. "The game could have gone either way. We really improved on our midfield transition, and both offensively and defensively we did some really good things."

Holy Cross found the back of the net first with two unanswered goals. Senior tri-captain Ashley Evans countered their attack with one of cause of the emotions of Saturday's game. We played well enough to get a win, but it was not an easy win," Coach Jordan said.

Niagara was the first to score and held a slim 2-1 lead for much of the first half. In the closing eight minutes of the first half Bucknell scored an impressive five unanswered goals. Evans contributed two goals and Suzanne Raffaele '03 tallied two goals and dished out two assists. The end of the half saw the Bison with a solid 6-3 lead.

Niagara started the second half with a goal, much like the first, cutting their deficit to two. Raffaele responded to the Niagara goal with another goal of her own; she had four total that day. Niagara came as close as within one goal, but Bucknell secured their victory with two unanswered goals in the last five minutes of the game. The final score was 9-6. Bucknell's record is now 3-6 overall (0-2 in the Patriot League).

As the Orange and Blue look ahead towards two tough games, one being Saturday's league match up with Lafayette, Sunday's victory gives them some spirit.

"The win definitely helps our confidence. We have two tough games this week. I think we really need to play well on Wednesday [against Monmouth] so we have that momentum going into Saturday's game against Lafayette," said Jordan said.

If the team continues to play as a unit with consistency, their momentum should build up.

"We need to continue to play together as a team and keep the intensity that we had this weekend up," said Holiday.

Bucknell travels to Monmouth on April 4 and will host Lafayette on April 7.

Team of the Week:

The baseball team, who moved into first place in the Patriot League after sweeping a four-game series against Lafayette.

Athlete of the Week: Chris Lockett '02

By DAVE TOMAINO

Staff Writer

Location is everything.

For instance, trying to plant a palm tree in the hills of central Pennsylvania would be a futile effort. If the wintry weather did not stake its claim on the tree, it may fall prey to Fusarium wilt or Lethal yellowing.

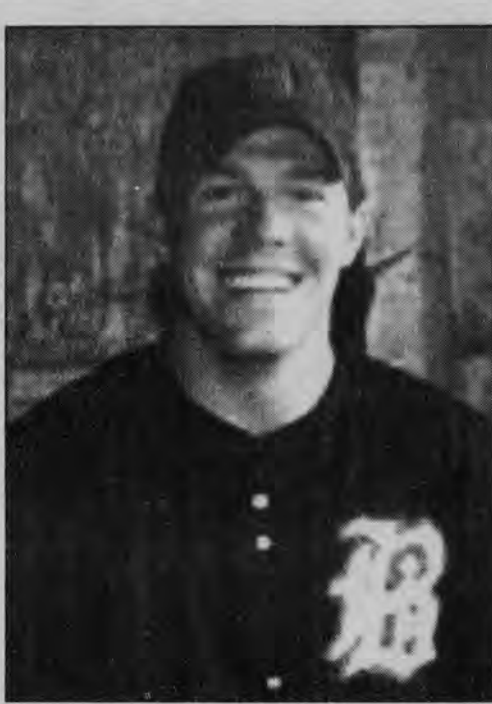

Location is just as vital for Bison starting pitcher Chris Lockett '02, whose early season struggles were related to location troubles. Now the junior slinger is riding the crest of a three game win streak. This feat is headlined by an impressive stretch of pitching where he has allowed a mere three runs in 14 innings of work.

Men's baseball coach Gene Depew knows why Lockett has transformed his fortunes. "His location is better because he refined his pitching mechanics he is also setting hitters up more effectively with his sharp breaking ball," Depew said.

Lockett has been a workhorse for the Bison this year in the starting rotation. He has pitched in a team high 37 innings this season, in which he has fashioned a league best four wins on the year. After a rocky start, the right-hander has made the transition from the bullpen to the starting rotation which, according to Depew, has alleviated some of his arm problems.

"It is much better for him to be on a schedule because he knows when he is going to pitch and ultimately it is better for his arm," Depew said.

With a 4-0 Patriot League mark, Lockett and company have the Bucknell men's baseball team located atop the league standings.

Courtesy of Athletic Communications

Bison pitcher Chris Lockett '02

PRESENTS

Saliva

AMERICAN Hi Fi

SUM★41

For MTV
Campus Invasion
Tour Dates, Check
Out MTV.comCAMPUS INVASIONARRID.
TOYOTA

DAY:

- See, Hear and Touch MTV at the FREE Interactive Village
- Play guitar and drums like a pro
- Take a VIRTUAL tour of MTV
- Learn how to mix music like a professional DJ
- Street art, hip hop timeline, interactive subway car
- Surround yourself with new music and technology
- Grab FREE STUFF
- WIN tickets to the show and a chance to meet Saliva, American Hi Fi or Sum 41
- Soccer Field / Rain location - Gerhard Fieldhouse
- Friday, April 6th Noon - 5pm

NIGHT:

- LIVE! Saliva, American Hi Fi, Sum 41, and more!
- FREE! After Party
- Lightning Round
- Free! MTV Students
- Specialty drinks at the show

Your term paper is due at 9 a.m.
It's 3 a.m.
The library's closed.
You need serious help.

Introducing questia.com.
The online library.

FREE* 1-WEEK TRIAL

Now you can view entire books for all your research. You'll save time with powerful tools like automatic footnote and bibliography builders, a dictionary, thesaurus, plus encyclopedia access. Even highlight and make notes in the margins of books. So you can write better papers, easier and faster. Hurry, sign up now for your free trial.

questia
Better Papers. Faster.

www.questia.com

*Free 1-week trial. Some restrictions apply. See questia.com for details. Questia is a registered trademark of Questia Inc. All other trademarks are the property of their respective owners.

Bison Scoreboard

SOFTBALL

Bucknell	000 074 0	11 13 2
Rider	310 040 0	8 8 1

	AB	R	H	RBI	BB	K
Dugan	3	0	0	0	1	1
Demetriades	3	1	1	4	0	0
Potts	3	0	1	0	0	0
Gill	3	3	2	0	1	0
Ford	3	1	2	1	1	0
Morgan	3	2	2	1	0	0
Dohoney	3	0	0	0	0	1
Fitch	3	0	1	0	0	0
Titus	3	0	0	0	0	0
Wood	4	0	1	0	0	0

Pitching:

	IP	H	R	ER	BB	K
Box	6.0	12	11	9	4	1
Porter	1.0	1	0	0	1	0

Men's LAX

Bucknell (13)	12
Hobart (12)	4

Scoring Quarter	1st	2nd	3rd	4th
BU	4	2	4	2
Maryland	0	2	1	1

Individual Scoring

Goals: Fetchet 4, Hogue 3, Geraghty 4, Cheng 1

Assists: Cheng 4, Hogue 1, Terracciano 1, Lane 1, Cutillo 1

Saves: Sussman 26

Woman's LAX

Bucknell	9
Niagra	6

Individual Scoring

Goals: Raffaele 4, Evans 3, K. Evans, Hasler

Assists: Monefusco 2, Raffaele 2, Evans, Holiday, Wright 1

Saves: Kallis 13

TRACK & FIELD

At SU Invitational Women's notables

Pole Vault
1. Nyce	11'7"
3. Klotz	9'6"
7. Bouzan-Kaloustia	8'6"
Hammer
1. Garcia	160'
2. Schaffer	136'5"
Discus
1. Lee	130'9"
800M
1. Bango	2:13.31
2. Ryan	100'HH
1. Lillen	15.46
400M
1. Shariff	1:03.93
Men's Notables
Hammer
1. Stairs	178'8"
2. Kaufman	165'2"
Finlan	105'3"
Discus
2. Mathews	160'1"

Women's TENNIS

Bucknell	2
Lehigh	5

Singles Winners

5. Maisel (B) def. Scott (L)
6. Wurzburg (B) def. Bramble

Doubles Winners

2. Wurzburg/Ingis
3. Maisel/Pungo

Baseball

Lafayette	000 040 0	4 5 2
Bucknell	000 470	11 9 0

Individual Scoring

	AB	R	H	RBI	BB	K
Joseph	3	1	2	1	1	0
Fishman	3	2	1	2	0	1
Lindberg	2	2	0	1	0	0
Ritz	3	1	0	1	1	0
DiBonaventura	3	2	1	0	0	0
Gething	3	1	1	0	1	0
Herron	2	0	1	3	1	0
Scheetz	3	0	2	1	0	0
Peck	3	2	1	3	0	1

Pitching:

	IP	H	R	ER	BB	K	AB
Grant	3.1	2	4	4	6	3	12
Allen	1.2	1	0	0	0	1	6
Farmery	2.0	2	0	0	0	1	8

Water Polo

Bucknell	8
Slippery Rock	7

Individual Scoring

Goals: Stalher 2, Hofsetter, Rea, Stevens, Clarke, Schober

Assists: Schober 2, Rea 2, Cull 2, Hernandez, Stahler

Ejections Drawn: Rea 3, McLaughlin

Saves: Chesterfield 11

Discover Great Food Made Fresh

Buffalo Bill's

THE SLUTRANE
Playing At Buffalo Bill's
APRIL 18TH
Karaoke every Tues. at 8

ALL ITEM ARE AVAILABLE FOR TAKE OUT

- Burritos • Tacos • Fajitas • Enchiladas • Quesadillas • Big Burgers • Large Salads • Wings • Large Grilling Menu • 3 Pool Tables • Game Room • Friendly Atmosphere • Students Love Us! Largest Selection Of Vegetarian Foods In Town

• 523-8900 • 684 RT 18 • LEWISBURG •

BIRTHRIGHT
of Sunbury

Free Pregnancy Test
Confidential Counseling
AN ABORTION ALTERNATIVE
Hours: Mon - Wed - Fri 12:30 to 4 pm

351 Woodlawn Ave.
Sunbury, Pa. 17837
570-286-8560
1-800-550-4900

Buck's SERVICE

24 Hour Towing
PA Inspection
Foreign & Domestic Repairs
Rollback Towing

Rts. 15 & N. 7th St.
LEWISBURG, PA 17837
(570) 523-1132

SUNOCO GAS
24 Hours
Rts. 15 & 192

Come join the sisters of Delta Delta Delta and support your favorite team at the TRI-DELTA TRIATHLON!!!

Fun Games, Great Prizes and lots of FUN!
Saturday, April 7th at 1:00 at the Smith Quad.
For more info, e-mail kjfoy@bucknell.edu
See you there!!!

Cardio Kicks!

With: Laura Kamienski & Denielle Snyder

Drop-in and monthly discounts with student ID. Cut out this ad and bring it with you for a free class!

(One coupon per person)

You'll love this. It's the workout with pulse-pounding music and martial arts moves in an atmosphere that crackles with excitement.

only at
KICKS
MARTIAL ARTS FOR WOMEN
106 Market St., Lewisburg
850-4685
www.kicks4women.com
Member National Women's Martial Arts Federation

Tuesday is Bucknell Night at Imperial Lanes

Tuesday Nights
2 hour Special for $20
9:30 - 11:30 only

Rent-a-lane for up to 6 people
Call 742-9211 to Schedule
Private Parties
Sorority/Fraternity/Date Parties
Enjoy Rock-n-Bowl with Lane Quake Sound!
Leagues and Open Bowling Available

Vennari's Pizza

Small Large Cheese Pizza $5.99 $6.99
Medium $6.99 $7.99
Extra Delivery $1.00
Phone 742-9211

Susquehanna Valley Limousine Inc.

With a long tradition of quality service to the Bucknell Community, SVL offers:

- Sedans and limos for all occasions, from formal to informal
- Fully equipped with air conditioning, music, and more
- Safe, reliable, and professional drivers
- Competitive rates and prompt service

For more information or to make reservations call:

1.800.685.5567

SAKUNTALA

Fine Indian Cuisine

Try us, it's wonderful

- Vegetarian Buffet Dinner: $6.95
- Non-Vegetarian Buffet Dinner: $8.95

Open Monday thru Friday 12:00 noon to 9:00 pm
Saturday 4:00 pm to 9:00 pm
236 Iron Street, Lewisburg Phone 389-0281
www.sakuntala.com

Because everyday is the perfect occasion for casual fine dining at...

The Victorian Lady

115 Old Turnpike Road
Lewisburg, PA 17837
Lunch: Mon.-Fri. 11:00-2:00
Dinner: Thurs.-Sat. 5:00-9:00
Phone: (570) 523-8090
www.victorianladyrestaurant.com

5 minutes from campus

Sports

NCAA's snub of 1996 men's lax not forgotten

Five years after Bucknell's undefeated squad was denied an NCAA bid, League-leading Bison eying the NCAA tournament

By BRIAN KLOTZ
Staff Writer

In any college sport, the opportunities for greater glory are few and far between. Before most athletes even know it, the four years of eligibility are gone, and the final season is near its end—leaving the athlete to look back and wonder if they did all they could. In the case of the 1996 men's lacrosse team, the season was four years in the making. "I think the primary ingredient for the success of the 1996 team was exceptional internal leadership," said Head Coach Sidney Jamieson. "That group in particular, from the time that they were freshmen, was special, and it of course culminated into the 1996 season."

This season has similar promise for the 2001 team according to Coach Jamieson.

"Every contest is an opportunity to go out and prove that you should be in the NCAA tournament," he said. "If you want to get where you say you want to be, it requires an enormous amount of hard work, focus, coachability and internal leadership from the team itself. That is exactly what we had in the 1996 season, and that is exactly what we have again this year."

The 1996 season was, as many believe, the highest point the Bucknell lacrosse program had ever reached in its 28 years of existence. Plowing through their schedule with such notable wins as Penn, Army, Hobart, and Penn State, the 1996 team showed their stuff. When the regular season ended, they had a perfect 12-0 record, their first ever Patriot League Championship, and the accomplishment of being the only undefeated division one lacrosse team. Obviously a national caliber lacrosse team, the 1996 players expected a bid to the NCAA national tournament.

But in a chain of events that rocked the 1996 Bucknell men's lacrosse team and the entire collegiate lacrosse community in general, the NCAA men's lacrosse championship selection committee did not give Bucknell an at large bid to the tournament because, at the time the Patriot League had no automatic bid to the tournament. The damaging decision rippled through the program.

"Clearly, there was precedent for our inclusion under quote 'special circumstances,' as is the case in other sports when similar situations arise," Coach Jamieson recalls. "The most hurtful thing for me was that these people (selection committee) chose not to honor those players who had accomplished so much as amateur athletes. They were basically told, 'that's nice, but that's not good enough.'"

Michael Cheng '01 remembers the team and its reaction. "I know that the 1996 team was very upset because they felt they had gotten no respect," said Cheng. "I played with men from the 1996 season for two years, but we didn't have that kind of opportunity to go to the tournament again in those two years."

Adding further insult to the already hot issue, the NCAA committee turned around and selected Army, the second place team in the Patriot League at the time, over Bucknell. Jamieson and the lacrosse community had had enough, and rallied for an automatic bid for the Patriot League champions to go to the NCAA tournament.

"Basically what happened was that there was such an uproar that the pressure that came onto the committee was tremendous," Jamieson remembered. "The result was an almost unanimous agreement amongst college coaches that led us to an automatic qualifier for leagues such as the Patriot League, where if a team is determined to be league champions, they can secure an automatic bid."

Presently, the 2001 men's lacrosse team, at 4-0 in the Patriot League and 7-2 overall, holds a 9th place ranking in the STX/USILA Coaches Poll. With only two league games remaining vs

Chris Rivera—The Bucknellian
Jamieson's 2001 squad leads the Patriot League.

Colgate on April 14, and Lehigh on April 28, the outlook of winning the league title looks good.

"We are all extremely confident this season," Captain Mark Juels '01 commented. "We weren't ranked to finish in the top two in the league (Army and Hobart were ranked in the top two), and as it is now Colgate already has two losses, so they are out. Lehigh already has one loss, but has four more games left in the Patriot League. All we have to do is win one of the next two league games we play, and we will go to the tournament."

Possibly being the first Bucknell team to ever go to the NCAA tournament means a lot to Bucknell lacrosse alumni, in particular the members of the 1996 team, many of whom came to the Hobart game last weekend to support the team in its 12-4 win.

"I'm especially appreciative of what the 1996 team and in reality, all of our alumni through the years have given to the history of the sport and where their effort has allowed us to be today," Jamieson said.

But there isn't a day that goes by that Coach Jamieson is not reminded of the 1996 season. "To this week, even this day, people will email me, send me letters, or see me and mention to me about the 1996 season and how poorly it reflected on the sport of lacrosse that we were not included that year," Jamieson said.

Current players do not feel they can make up for the disappointment of the 1996 season, but players from 1996 team passed on some important things.

"One of the things they passed on was that winning the Patriot League was better than anything in their career," said Juels. "They are happy to see now that they laid a good foundation, that we are successful and by paving the way for any automatic bid, they will finally see a team from Bucknell go to the NCAA tournament."

Bison crew rows to strong start

By NICOLE TOMLIN
Contributing Writer

Over spring break, the Bucknell crew team started their spring racing season with a week long training trip on the Savannah River in Augusta, Georgia. Progress was made by all of the boats, evident in the crews' performances in the Augusta-Aiken Invitational Regatta on March 17th.

After multiple gold medal races by Bucknell, the team's combined efforts won them the team points trophy over crews from Duke, Dartmouth, and Columbia, proving Bucknell to be the most successful team at the regatta.

The crew team's single home race of the season—the Bucknell University Spring Invitational—was cancelled on March 24 due to dangerous water conditions. The team next competed in the Knecht Cup Regatta hosted by Villanova University last Saturday, March 31. Led by captain Jessie Smith '01 and Mike Brooks-Williams '03, Bucknell Crew finished with an impressive demonstration of depth, promising success in the spring 2001 season.

The women's varsity pair of stroke, Stephanie Sturm '01, and bow, Jessie Smith, finished first with a time of 8:48.8, beating rival Lehigh and capturing the gold medal. They will face Lehigh again in a match race this Saturday.

The novice women's lightweight eight of Annie Larson '04, Maggie Cook '03, Jill Harrington '04, Katie Barreira '04, Emily Smith '04, Jacquelyn Mitchell '04, Joan Wendler '04, Nicole Tomlin '04, and coxswain Christina Meng '04 finished third in their final with a time of 8:07.04. The race was won by Lehigh University, which should make for an interesting race this coming Saturday when they will meet again.

Showing a strong amount of depth, many of the same girls rowed another race as the novice women's second eight. In their third race of the day, the ladies finished fifth in their final with a time of 8:07.04. The race was won by Lehigh University, which should make for an interesting race this coming Saturday when they will meet again.

The novice women's 1st eight of Lisa Baranki '04, Karen Schuyler '04, Rebecca Newman '04, Maura Kroh '04, Maggie Coates '04, Lynn Hootman '04, Laura McWilliams '04, Kate Boschen '04, and coxswain Christina Meng '04 of the Men's team also performed well, placing second in their heat, but unfortunately missing qualifications for the final by one second.

Bucknell men's crew turned in an equally impressive performance. The Men's varsity lightweight 4 of Aaron Bates '03, Trevor Gibson '03, Jeremy Urban '02, Brian Albert '03 and coxswain Menon finished 2nd place for Fordham in their final, with a time of 7:31.6, defeating Boston College, La Salle, Manhattan, and NY-Maritime, turning in the best performance of the day from Bucknell Men's Crew.

The Men's varsity heavyweight 4 of Jeff Dasch '03, Aaron Casagrande '03, Chuck Dickhart '04, Mike Brooks-Williams '04, and coxswain Menon finished in 5th place in their final with a time of 7:13.31, behind crews from Temple and Dowling.

The novice men's 8 of Ryan Sexton '04, Brian Prins '04, Kyle Goodwin '04, Will Hart '04, Raphael Crowley '04, Rob Tidmore '04, Mark Harris '04, Matt Albrecht '04, and cox Justin Faden '04 performed well in the morning, winning their heat and advancing to the final. In the final, the freshmen men delivered a 4th place finish with a time of 6:45.12. They defeated Lehigh, who they will face again this Saturday.

The Knecht Cup, a traditional first glimpse of the season to come, provided Bucknell Crew with an impressive starting point. Facing northeastern crews for the first time this spring season, Bucknell Crew turned in an impressive performance, sowing the seeds for future victories. The challenge has been presented for all boats to continue their success at their next regatta, a head-to-head race at Lehigh this Sat., April 7.

Men's golf underway

By KEVIN LOGAN
Senior Writer

It's been a long winter, but for the Bucknell men's golf team, spring is finally in the air. The team kicked off its official spring season this week, at the George Washington Invitational in Is-sue, Maryland, on Sunday and Monday.

Although they didn't fare quite as well as they had hoped to, the Bison have a chance to pick up their games at the Navy Invitational this coming weekend, held at Navy's home course in Annapolis, Md.

However, limited by the wintry weather and shortened pre-dawnlight savings days, the spring season is a brief one for the Bison, and the Navy Invitational is the team's last official chance to improve before the Patriot League Championship—also hosted by Navy—swings around later in the month.

At the head of this season's squad is captain Ken Kosteva '01, who had an impressive fall season, firing an average round of 75.3, including a low 69. Behind him are Nick Lebowitz '02 and Jimmy Freeman '03. Lebowitz was absent last semester studying abroad, and his return—accompanied by a 75.7 average and low of 68—will certainly strengthen the starting lineup. Freeman, though only a sophomore, no doubt will also prove to be a major factor to the Bison. He led the team in scoring average last season at 74.4, tallying a pair of 69's in his fall 2000 campaign.

Rounding out the top six are freshmen Charles Markey, Scott Leeder and senior David Horon. Markey averaged 78.9 in his Bucknell debut in the fall, followed closely by Leeder's 79.2, and Horon's average of 80.8 during the fall season. The Bucknell team is filled out by seniors Mike Gale and Brian McIntyre, Mike's brother Dan Gale '02, Nick Perini '03 and Justin Bretting '04.

Despite their slow start, the squad remains optimistic about the rest of its season, having come off a strong fall season in which they recorded two second-place finishes and also earned an overall second spot in the Patriot League Championship. Head Coach Tommy Thompson '60, celebrating his 20th season at Bucknell, is equally confident his team has what it takes.

"If we can pick up where we left off from the fall, I think we will have a real good shot at Patriot Leagues," Thompson said.

But will the slow start, combined with the fact that the next two tournaments, including the championship, are held on foreign Navy turf (unlike the fall season), have a negative impact on the Bison?

According to Kosteva, it shouldn't. The upperclassmen have already played at Navy several times before, and while the freshmen have not, "they will be ready," explains Kosteva, pointing out the fact that by the time the championship comes around, they will have played two full official rounds (from the Navy Invitational) and two practice rounds on Navy's links.

With this in mind, combined with the solid lineup of golfers on the roster and the team's recent achievements in the fall, expectations are high that this will lead to a successful spring season.

"We feel—and coach feels—we should have a really good opportunity to win the championship this year," Kosteva said.

Sports

NBA playoff race heating up

By ROB SCHMICKER
Senior Writer

While this year's NCAA Tournament has cleared up over the past two weeks, the situation in the NBA has become considerably cloudier as of late. In the West, four games separate the top six teams while in the East seventh seeded Toronto trails third seeded Miami by only three and a half games. To say that the final weeks of the season will be wild is definitely an understatement.

Since Michael Jordan's retirement, the East has been the worse of the two conferences and this year is no different. The NBA Champion will come from the West, but which franchise will be lifting the NBA Championship Trophy still remains to be seen.

If the season ended today, the top four seeds would be San Antonio, Sacramento, Utah, and the Lakers. Out of the four, the Spurs look to be the best bet based solely on their recent success. Tim Duncan is once again playing like the MVP he's supposed to be and has helped San Antonio catch Philadelphia for the best overall record. While this year's team is basically the same as the championship squad from two years ago, they do have another weapon in Derek Anderson. He has been spectacular since leaving the Clippers and in the process has helped take the pressure off Duncan and David Robinson.

While the Spurs have gotten hot, the defending champs can't seem to get on a roll. Kobe Bryant and Shaquille O'Neal give Los Angeles two of the best players in the NBA, but they can't get along. Kobe is losing faith in the triangle offense and Shaq just wants the ball more. Airing their dirty laundry this late in the season does nothing but hurt the team. If the Lakers want to repeat, Phil Jackson will have to find a way to keep everyone happy and healthy.

Courtesy of Reuters
Sam Cassell and Allen Iverson may meet up again in the Eastern conference playoffs.

Utah is the other favorite since they've been there before. Love 'em or hate 'em, John Stockton and Karl Malone may be one of the best duos ever. While they both are in their seventies, they are still able to dominate. Teams know the pick and roll is coming, but they can't stop it. Donyell Marshall and Byron Russell are the key components of this team. If they can continue playing at a high level, the Jazz will be playing in May again.

While these three teams may be the favorites because of their playoff experience, don't count out Sacramento or Dallas. Both teams are exciting to watch and ready to show they are for real, but the difference between the two may be desperation. The Kings know they are going to lose Chris Webber in the off-season and will try to convince him to stay by winning a title. Dallas on the other hand, is good for awhile so they're not panicking just yet. They are a very young team led by the exciting play of Steve Nash and Dirk Nowitzki. But the keys to the Mavericks' success are veterans Juwan Howard and Michael Finley, who are perfect complements to "The Bedhead Twins." With the combination of flair and fundamentals, Dallas could be the real sleeper of the bunch.

While the top of the West is crowded, the top two seeds in the East are firmly in tact. Philadelphia and Milwaukee seem to be the class of the conference and should meet in the finals. But like Sacramento and Dallas, neither have much playoff experience. Miami and New York are quietly the next two highest seeds. They could surprise a few teams because of recent history has shown, these two clubs know how to get the job done in the playoffs.

Even still, Philadelphia remains the favorite. Allen Iverson may take a million shots per game, but he has to because no one else can carry the scoring load. The 76ers are a blue-collar team who won't back down to anyone. While they don't have tons of talent, they are a tough team with great chemistry. And the recent acquisition of Dikembe Mutombo gives them a huge inside presence. No one wants to play this team because they know just how good they are. On paper they don't look spectacular, but they play as a team, which is hard to beat.

But while some of the aforementioned teams seem to be the favorites, you can't count anyone out this year. Not since the late 1970's has the NBA seen such parity. While they are looking for the next Jordan to market the league around, competition may be the key to bringing fans back. If the college game has shown us anything, it's that fans like the underdogs. It is great to see something unexpected happen because it gets boring if the same team wins every year. So in a year of parity, I think Milwaukee vs. Dallas would be a more than appropriate matchup.

Dave's major league baseball power picks

By DAVE TOMAINO
Staff Writer

7. Los Angeles Dodgers (1-0) No Kevin Brown. No problem. Chan Ho Park pitches seven scoreless innings to open the season.

16. Arizona Diamondbacks (0-0) The D-backs could surprise me this season, but I also said the XFL would be an instant hit.

17. Kansas City Royals (0-1) Amidst all the power in the AL Central a surprise may emerge in the Royals. Dave has three hits on opening day.

18. Toronto Blue Jays (1-1) They signed Delgado for 17 million, and invested their change in pitchers. Boy does it show!

19. Texas Rangers (1-1) Is this the A-Rod Rangers? Because that's all I hear. This looks like a 252 million dollar distraction.

20. Philadelphia Phillies (2-0) The bullpen saves two close ones, and I think that was the total they saved all of last year. Can the Phillies win the pennant? No.

21. Anaheim Angels (0-1) Mo Vaughn would have provided the thunder. It is only sprinkling in Anaheim.

22. Milwaukee Brewers (0-2) Hey guys, we are not in Florida anymore. Spring training is over.

23. Pittsburgh Pirates (0-1) Pirates looking forward to PNC.

24. Detroit Tigers (0-1) These are tame Tigers. The Twins ruin opening day.

25. Montreal Expos (1-0) Expos glad that they got "Vlad." Michael Barrett shows the "Rodman" in him and gets tossed in season opener.

26. Tampa Bay Devil Rays (1-0) Who said when they grew up they wanted to play for the D-Rays? Sorry we grew up on Alf and E.T.

27. Chicago Cubs (0-1) Will someone root for the Cubbies, and end this streak of non-pennant seasons?

28. Baltimore Orioles (1-0) They defeated the Red Sox hitters, not Pedro Martinez.

29. Minnesota Twins (1-0) If the season ended today the Twins would be in a playoff game to go to the post-season. Don't let the Twins tell you it's October.

30. San Diego (0-1) The Padres are counting on OF Mike Darr—that is like the Yankees counting on their bat boy to win the Pennant.

Any comments? Please email domain@bucknell.edu to get your rants published in next week's Bucknellian.

BASEBALL from page A8

Two more Bison players were hit in the inning as Eric Fishman '02 drove in two runs with a single and Jeff Peck '01 drove in two more with a triple to make it 9-4. Peck scored on a sacrifice fly from Herron and then Joseph connected on his homer of the year to finish the damage. The Bison would go on to win 11-4. Allen relieved starter R.J. Grant '03 in the fourth and pitched 1 and 2/3 scoreless innings, giving up just one hit, for his first win of the season. Farmery '02 came on to pitch the last two innings and kept his ERA at 0.00. Joseph '01 was 2-3, Scheetz was 2-3, and Peck and Herron both had three RBIs. With the sweep the Bison move to 4-0 in the conference and 14-9 overall.

"Coming back from a 4-0 deficit to win the fourth game of the series proved how strong of a team we are and that when we are focused we are awfully tough to beat," Scheetz said.

"This was a great weekend for us. You really can't ask for anything more than going 4-0 in the opening series of the Patriot League. We got solid pitching, hitting and fielding and whenever those three things come together we are going to be a very difficult team to beat and we proved it this past weekend," Lackett said.

"It is very difficult to beat someone four times in a row. We got very good relief from Zach, who came on in a bases-loaded, 1-out situation and got us out of it with just one run," Depew said.

"The relief pitching has been a real positive key for us and when we've needed help, we've got it from them," Depew said.

"We are exactly where we want to be at this point and I thought the sweep was a great accomplishment considering that Lafayette is a good baseball team, it was Houseparty weekend and the less than ideal weather conditions continued," Depew said.

Bucknell will travel to Holy Cross this weekend to face the Crusaders and face a team that went 3-1 against them last year.

"It will be a real good challenge for us," Depew said.

IN THE PAINT

With Staff Writers:

Ali Ahmed and Justin McCarthy
Last week: 5-0
Overall: 22-13
Last week: 3-2
Overall: 21-14

Saturday, April 7 Utah at Dallas

Dallas is now a legitimate contender for the Western Conference title and no, it is not because Shaq is out for the season, but rather because they now have a 7-footer who can play with him (unlike the slinky and ineffective Bradley). His name is Wang Zhizhi and he has been compared with the great contemporary centers of the NBA. However, this will be only his second NBA game and he may take some time to adjust. Dallas should run a lot of its offense through him and try to get him acclimated to their system; he should draw a lot of double teams thus leaving an open shooter. Utah will need to collapse on the block when the ball is dropped down to Zhizhi, and Malone and Marshall better be wary of Zhizhi in the paint.

Justin's pick: Mavericks by seven

Every week I pick Utah to lose against a dominant Western playoff team and, even though I would not call Dallas dominant, Utah should lose again. Replacing John Starks with Bryon Russell really does not change much even though he should give Finley trouble. Still Dallas has too many offensive options for the Jazz to come close to matching.

Ali's pick: Dallas by eight

Sunday, April 8 New York at Miami

This is the fiercest rivalry in the league and always promises to be full of surprises, whether a bench-clearing brawl or a coach trying to tackle a 250+ lbs. center. This game always has playoff implications, and with the Knicks down just half a game from the Heat for the third spot in the East, this game is important—more so since the Heat will be trying to avoid a season sweep at the hands of the Knicks. However, in New York's three wins they have won only by a combined total of eight points. Everyone thought Mourning's return meant the Heat would coast to the NBA finals, however, since he has been back in the line-up they have won just one of their past four games. Meanwhile, the opposing center, Camby, has been unstoppable lately, while averaging a double-double.

Justin's pick: Knicks by four

If Mourning regains half of his form, he is the best center in the Eastern conference. Thus, with him and Jones returning the Heat are the only Eastern team that can compete with the West. As for New York, all Van Gundy wants about is defense—well what about playing some offense for once. He is wasting the offensive talents of Rice, Sprewell and Houston. Also, what is he doing thinking that Larry Johnson is better the Harrington or Thomas.

Ali's pick: Heat by 10

Portland at Sacramento

This is a matchup of two premier Western conference teams, and also a possible preview of a first round playoff series. The Blazers will be trying to even up the season series with a win, however, the only time they beat Sacramento this season was when Webber sat out with an injury. This game will be determined in the post between two of the top all-stars in the league: Webber and Wallace. Webber has outscored and dominated Wallace every time they have faced off this season. To win Portland will need their backcourt to do the work, and Stoudamire, Smith, and Wells will need to provide most of the offense and will need to prevent Sacramento from getting out and scoring points on the fast break.

Justin's pick: Kings by 11

Yeah so Portland has lost lots of games recently and the Kings have MVP Chris Webber. The Kings still can't play defense and still are not as good as the Blazers. Although Wallace and Webber are key matchups, watching Divac and Sabonis play will be one of the most interesting matchups in the NBA. One person who might have a big game is Stojakovic, who could take advantage of Pippen's roaming defense. Still Portland is just better than Sacramento and should win this crucial game.

Ali's pick: Portland by seven

Lakers at Minnesota

The Lakers have lost the air of superiority and dominance that they possessed last season. Is it the result of the Shaq-Kobe conflict? Whatever it is, Jackson cannot wait for Kobe to return; as of April 3, Kobe had sat out six of his last seven games while resting a sore foot. The T-wolves will need to take advantage of Kobe's absence, or if he plays test him to see if he is recovered 100%. Garnett should be neutralized in the paint by the presence of Shaq; Brandon and Szczerbiak will need to provide exceptional performances.

Justin's pick: Lakers by six

GM Kevin McHale has slowly made Minnesota into a very solid ball club with good depth at the smaller positions. All the T-Wolves need to really compete is a solid center and the development of their young players such as Szczerbiak. Until then they will continue to rely on Garnett to carry them. That is asking too much again at a good Lakers squad, who are doing just fine without Kobe Bryant.

Ali's pick: Lakers by 13

Monday, April 9 Boston at Philadelphia

If the playoffs began today this would be the one seed versus the eighth seed matchup. A matchup that pits one of the league's best players, Iverson, against one of the league's hottest, Pierce. Both the Celtics and Sixers depend immensely upon their leaders for points and to win games; however, while the Sixers have just one leader in Iverson, the Celtics possess two in Walker and Pierce. The Celtics will need Pierce to answer "The Answer" bucket for bucket and will need to box out Mutombo and prevent him from dominating the boards.

Justin's pick: Sixers by eight

Although the Celtics have had a nice run at the end of the season, the odds are against them and their lack of experience might cause them to miss the last playoff spot. What they really have to do is lock up Paul Pierce with an extension and then find a quality point guard to run their show. Philly has to be worried about Iverson's health and how much punishment his small body can take. They really need him to have any chance in the playoffs.

Ali's pick: Sixers by 21

Women's tennis drops two matches, falls to 4-3

By CAITY SELLECK
Staff Writer

After a disappointing league loss to Lehigh, 5-2 this past Saturday in Bethlehem, Pa., Bucknell women's tennis lost to a tough Towson team, 4-2, at home this Tuesday, giving the Bison a record of 0-1 in the Patriot League and 4-3 overall mark.

On Saturday, the Bison faced Patriot League competitor Lehigh, who was ranked just above Bucknell in fifth place in the Patriot League preseason poll. As Bucknell's first league game, it gave them an opportunity to see what competition will be like in future league matches.

In the 5-2 loss, senior Beth Wurzburg defeated Lehigh's Meg Bramble (6-3, 1-7, 7-6) in flight six of singles play. In flight five, sophomore Laura Maisel beat Andrea Scott (6-3, 7-6, 1-7). In doubles play, the Bison, continuing their streak of excellent doubles play, took two out of the three matches to secure the point for the match. In flight two, Kristin Inglis '02 and Wurzburg beat Megan Denker and Scott of Lehigh (8-5) and in flight three, the duo of Maisel and freshman Kristin Pugno defeated Lauren DeCarlo and Bramble (8-3).

Men slam St. Joe's but fall to Binghamton and Colgate

By SCOTT KLOSS
Staff Writer

This past week the men's tennis team finished their stretch of matches with a 1-2 record. The team started off strong by defeating St. Joseph's on March 29, but ran into a brick wall, falling to Binghamton and Colgate in the two following matches.

The Bison's 6-1 defeat of St. Joseph's on Thursday improved their overall record to 6-1 for the season. The match was moved indoors due to inclement weather, but even a change of scenery couldn't prolong the inevitable. The Bison took the doubles point, winning two of three matches. Jeff Gould '01 and Todd Jacobs '03 teamed up at the first doubles flight for an 8-0 win while Scott Allen '02 and Lee Scarborough '02 played the second doubles flight, winning 5-4.

The singles match was played using "pro-set scoring" because of the time constraints on the tennis courts. Pro set scoring is playing one set to 8 points with the winner having to be ahead by 2 points. Bucknell pulled ahead in all but the #1 match where Gould fell victim to his highly skilled opponent. The #2 seed—Alex Davydov, #3—Allen, #4—Jacobs, #5—Hayes '01 and #6—Scarborough all proved to be too much for their opponents, each coming away with victories. Unfortunately, the teams' following two matches wouldn't have such a pleasant outcome.

"Tough conditions, 30 degree temperature and a long bus ride," Todd Jacobs said, who summed up the trip to Binghamton N.Y. quite succinctly.

Sports

Lost and found

It's been a rough few days, a rough few years, a rough few decades for Darryl Strawberry. Once upon a time, the kid could really hit. Pitchers would sweat a little more, right fielders would play a little deeper, and fans would cheer a little louder when Strawberry rung the doughnut off his bat and left the on-deck circle. Home runs balls he used to hit would have postmarks on them from neighboring towns when they landed.

But not anymore. A lot has changed for Strawberry in ten years. The pinpricks have turned into jumpsuits, the umpires into judges and juries and although Strawberry never found a curfew that could handcuff him, he met some nice officers that did.

So what happened to Darryl Strawberry? You can still read about him from time to time in the papers, but you better head straight to the police blotter, not the box scores. Or you might find him on the front page, like last Monday, when police located him in Daytona Beach after disappearing from a drug-rehab center March 29. Strawberry, now at St. Joseph's Hospital, told the judge he smoked crack-cocaine in an Orlando hotel after leaving the rehab center. Early reports that indicated Strawberry had been kidnapped and was being held for $50,000 ransom were false, his attorney says. At the time of his disappearance, Strawberry was and still is under house arrest for solicitation of prostitution and drug possession.

It's almost a shame about Strawberry: fighting colon cancer, fighting drug addictions, fighting writers like me. Because I prepared this quiz, (which doesn't portray him in the most favorable light) and after all, I hate to make fun of a guy who's setting a great example trying to beat cancer by smoking crack. Oh well, tell Darryl to smoke to this:

Strawberry's disappearance last week was most disturbing because:

- A. He is fighting colon cancer and needs constant supervision.
- B. He was under the impression that spontaneously disappearing and smoking crack were good for colon cancer and needs constant supervision.
- C. He is no longer affiliated with Yankees, so any embarrassing thing he does has outlived its usefulness.
- D. Experts could not even begin to explain ramifications if cracked-out Strawberry headed south to Disney World instead of north to Daytona.

Nobody would have paid the $50,000 ransom the kidnapper was demanding anyway because:

- A. Strawberry's own lawyer didn't even believe the story and urged Strawberry to turn himself in.
- B. Bank claimed that money put aside in Strawberry's "ball" account does not cover ransoms.
- C. Before fake-ransom announced, relatives spent $100,000 on cocaine as part of welcome back package for Strawberry's return.
- D. Everyone figured Strawberry would be returned after kidnapper realized nobody knew he was gone.

Strawberry has been able to avoid substantial prison-time despite a long list of felonies because:

- A. He is currently in a life-or-death battle with colon cancer and cannot be held responsible for rash actions.
- B. He represents 11% of Columbia's economy and jailing him would deteriorate already shaky U.S. Columbia relations.
- C. Rest of country loves hearing manager Joe Torre constantly trying to make excuses for him.
- D. Newspapers wouldn't have anything to print in the space they usually use to run stories about Strawberry being arrested.

The two championship rings Strawberry earned with the New York Yankees prove that:

- A. Despite past hardships, he has persevered and made good of the opportunities he has been presented with.
- B. Nothing makes sense anymore.
- C. The Yankees were the best team in 1998 and 1999 with basically one fewer player than every other team in baseball.
- D. He can produce evidence that he was indeed on those championship teams, even if he has no recollection of them.

Major League Baseball has committed itself to helping Strawberry fix his drug problem by:

- A. Being supportive and understanding of his condition by issuing lenient penalties for repeated drug offenses.
- B. Switching to orange dust for the foul lines so he stops trying to snort them.
- C. Comparing his problems to those of former teammate Chuck Knoblauch, who can't throw a ball to first base 25 feet away, and telling him things could be worse.
- D. Only staffing male ushers at ballparks where he plays so he isn't tempted to solicit sex from them between innings.

Sitting in his jail cell, the one thing Strawberry misses the most about baseball is:

- A. Trotting the bases to a long home run that brings fans to their feet.
- B. Watching a long home run on TV that brings fans to their feet while serving a drug-related suspension, just like in the good old days.
- C. Joking with teammates after inhaling whole container of creatine.
- D. Sneaking off to bullpen for "medication" with Doc Gooden.

Sports Trivia

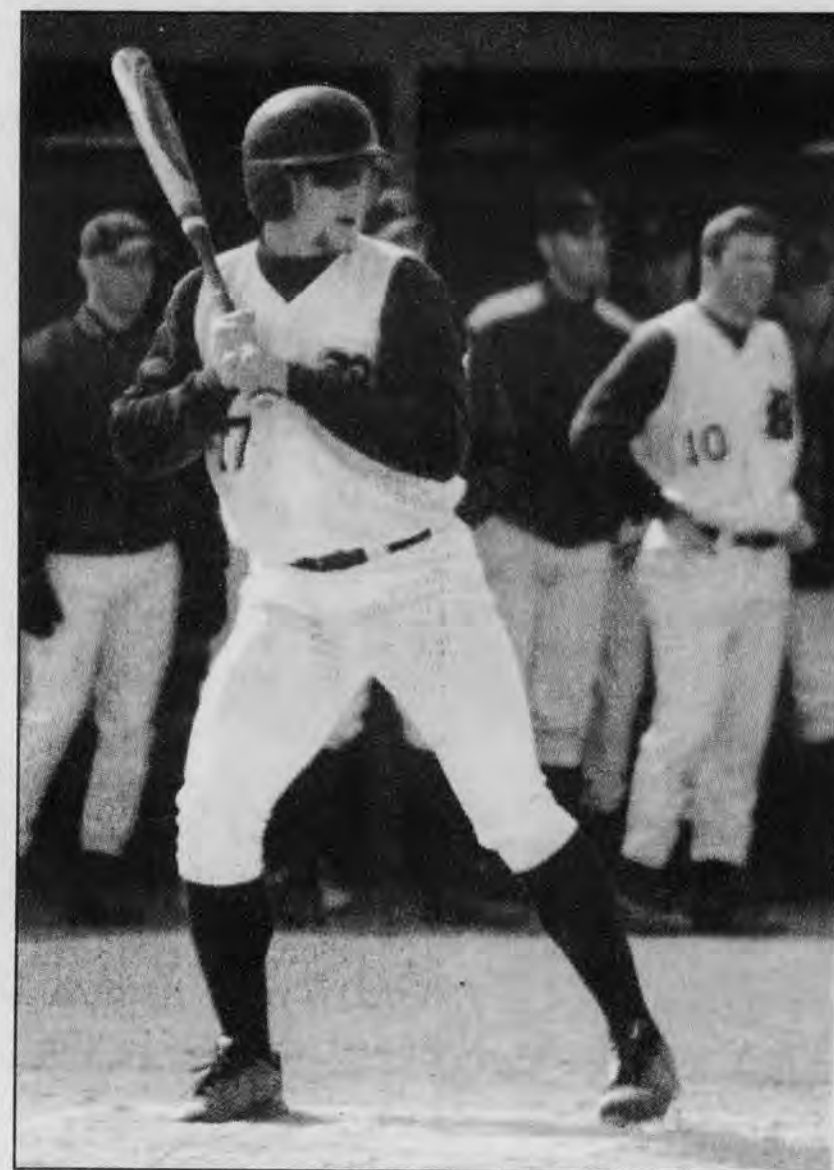

By Justin McCarthy

- Who is the only NBA player or coach to participate in more combined games than Don Nelson?
- Who was the first NHL player to score 50 goals in back to back seasons?
- What NHL player has scored the most goals in the past nine years?

1. Kenny Williams 2. Bobby Thiel 3. Trevor Robinson 27 goals

Bison start league slate 4-0

After falling to Big Ten power Penn State, Bison take four games from Lafayette

Bucknell outfielder Mike Ritz '01 awaits the pitch. Mary Dickinson—The Bucknellian

By ANDREW BEVAN
Senior writer

The Bucknell baseball team began Patriot League play on the right foot with an impressive 4-0 sweep of the visiting Lafayette Leopards in the league opener for both squads. Even after falling behind 4-0 in the nightcap the Bison rallied to their most decisive victory of the weekend with an 11-4 trouncing of their opponent.

Bucknell had a rough start at the beginning of the week in their contest on the road against Big Ten Power Penn State this past Wednesday. The Bison got on the board in the fourth after first baseman Russ Lindberg '01 came home thanks to a groundout by co-captain Chris Heron '01. The Nittany Lions responded in the bottom half of the inning with two runs and followed that with four more in the eighth en route to a 6-2 victory. Zach Allen '03 took the loss on the hill for Bucknell, surrendering 3 runs on eight hits over 7 innings of work. Ian Joseph '00 led the Bison with two hits. "It was a very competitive game for us and Zach pitched extremely well up to the seventh. We left nine runners on base and it was just a matter of not getting the hits when we needed them," Head Coach Gene Depew said. Bucknell returned home to begin League play on Saturday as Lafayette traveled to Lewisburg. The first game featured a masterpiece on the mound by hurler Kevin McDowell '02 as he threw six innings of scoreless baseball, walking three, striking out seven, and giving up one hit, dropping his ERA from 5.14 to 2.77. McDowell was named the Patriot League Pitcher of the Week for his efforts.

"I am really pleased with the progress Kevin has made. His surgery is the most difficult to rehab from and requires a year of rehab and patience. He has worked hard to come back to where he can compete and that is a real tribute to him," Depew said. Joseph and co-captain Brad Gething opened the first inning with singles and advanced to third on sacrifice bunt by Kevin Eiben '01. Joseph scored on a passed ball and Gething came home on groundout by John Dibonaventura '01. These runs were all the Bison would need in securing a 2-0 victory. Gregg Farmer '02 worked the last inning to get Bucknell's second shutout of the year and to gain his fourth save of the year and maintain his 0.00 ERA.

"I was very pleased with Kevin who was pretty much in control," Depew said. The Leopards got on the board first in the second contest, placing two runs in the second inning. Bucknell got one back in the fourth after Dibonaventura scored from third on a sacrifice fly to right from catcher Patrick Cann '01. The Bison jumped ahead in the 5th, scoring three runs while taking advantage of two Lafayette errors. The Orange and Blue added two more in the 6th due to another set of miscues by the Leopards and went on to win the game, 6-2. Lackett continued Bucknell's impressive pitching for the day, retiring the last ten batters he faced to improve to 4-1 on the year and record his second complete game of the season. Joseph went 3-3 while Mike Ritz '02 went 2-3 with an RBI.

"It was a well-pitched game for us; our offense was very good again and we played another game without an error," Depew said. In Sunday's game one, Kevin Miller '04 relieved starter Ross Aron '02 in the third and went on to work four and 2/3 innings of scoreless baseball to gain his first collegiate win in leading the Bison to a 5-3 victory. Bucknell put three runs across the plate in the second inning thanks to four consecutive 2-out hits from Larry Schletz '02, Joseph, Gething, and Lindberg. The Leopards countered this with a rally of their own, scoring three runs in the top of the third to tie the contest. Bucknell added two runs in the fourth for the victory. Joseph scored on a groundout by Dibonaventura and Gething added insurance when he scored on sacrifice fly by Ritz to left. Miller walked one, struck out two, and gave up two hits and retired the last nine batters in a row.

"Kevin had another good performance in relief and it was the first time all year that we had all nine players in the lineup get a hit," Depew said. In the final game Lafayette jumped out to a 4-0 lead in the top of the fourth. The Bison responded promptly with four runs of their own in the bottom half of the inning to tie it up. A unique thing occurred in the bottom of the fourth when Lindberg was hit three times by a pitch but the first two times was not allowed to take first base because the umpire claimed he did not get out of the way of the pitch. Lindberg finally got to first when he was hit for the third time. Bucknell exploded for seven runs in the fifth inning to break the game open.

See BASEBALL, page A6

Softball struggles against Lehigh

By BROOKE REA
Sports Editor

In two doubleheaders against Lehigh this past weekend, the softball team opened Patriot League play with a 1-3 performance. Starting off the weekend with a 2-1 win in the first game Saturday, the Bison struggled defensively and couldn't produce the runs they would need to beat the Mountain Hawks in the next three games.

Saturday's opener saw a tough and enthusiastic Bucknell team. "We came out with a lot of intensity the first game," Tri-Captain Jenna Demetriades '02 said. It was a single from junior first baseman Kelly Dugan, a consistent presence at the plate this season, which got the Bison on the board in the first inning. Her hit up the middle scored shortstop Meredith Gill '03 giving BU the early lead.

In the top of the fourth Lehigh tied it up 1-1 with one run, but the Bison ech- ed that with one of their own in the bottom of the inning. They would not relinquish the 2-1 lead for the rest of the game.

"We stepped up and played well in that first game of the weekend," Head Coach Janelle Brennenman said. "Our defense was strong and we outlit Lehigh 7-3."

In the second game of the day the Bison "lost their drive," as Demetriades

The Bison won their first league game last Saturday against Lehigh. Chris Rivera—The Bucknellian put it, despite coming out strong with an RBI from senior Tri-Captain Steph Morgan in the first inning. After that it was all Lehigh, as they pounded out one run in the second, three in the third, and three more in the sixth to seal the 7-1 win.

"Losing the second game Saturday was hard," Brennenman said. "We struggled on defense and couldn't produce at the plate."

Defensive struggles continued to plague the Bison on Sunday when they faced the Mountain Hawks for the second doubleheader. Lehigh came out big in the first inning, scoring three runs for a 3-0 lead they would hold until the fourth inning. In the top of the fourth the Mountain Hawks scored two more runs, while the Bison answered with one of their own in the bottom. Once again Dugan was integral offensively, this time scoring off of freshman catcher Angela Stackhouse's sacrifice fly to left field.

BU remained scoreless for the rest of the game, while Lehigh tacked on two more runs for the 7-1 victory. The nightcap saw an end to Bucknell's offensive woes, but even with eight runs they couldn't outdo the Hawks. BU built a nice cushion with a 4-0 lead after just two innings, thanks to Demetriades' first-inning homerun with two runners on base. Another run in the second off of Morgan's RBI brought the Bison's lead to four.

In the fifth inning Lehigh got on the board with seven runs off of five hits, taking the lead 7-4. BU responded in their half of the inning with a relentless offensive effort from senior Tri-Captain Charity Ford, Demetriades, and Gill, who brought in four runs to take the lead 8-7.

In the top of the sixth the Hawks reclaimed the lead, scoring four runs and keeping BU scoreless the rest of the game. The 8-11 loss for the Bison brings their overall record to 9-12-2 and 1-3 in the Patriot League.

"Sunday was frustrating after we came out in the second game with a 4-0 lead and eventually ended up losing," Demetriades said. "But what we got out of this weekend was the confidence of knowing that we can play with the top teams in our league."

"We proved that we can dominate and score eight runs in a game when we really play up to our abilities." This weekend the team faces Army, another Patriot League competitor, but they are confident that they will play well. "We have the talent and the ability," Brennenman said, "we just need to play up to our capability and I know we can compete with any opponent."

Bison Calendar

WOMEN'S TENNIS

April 6-8

Fri: 4:00 p.m. vs. Binghamton
Sat: 12:00 p.m. at Villanova
Sun: 1:00 p.m. vs. Colgate

CREW

Sat., April 7 at Lehigh Duels

WOMEN'S WATER POLO

Fri.-Sun., April 6-7 at Southern Division Championships (Grove City)

BASEBALL

Sat.-Sun., April 7-8
Sat: 12:00 p.m. at Holy Cross (2)
Sun: 12:00 p.m. at Holy Cross (2)

SOFTBALL

Sat.-Sun., April 7-8
Sat: 1:00 p.m. at Army (2)
Sun: 1:00 p.m. at Army (2)

OUTDOOR TRACK & FIELD

Fri.-Sat., April 6-7 at Colonial Relays

MEN'S GOLF

Fri.-Sun., April 6-8 at Navy Invitational

MEN'S TENNIS

April 7-8
Sat: 3:00 p.m. at UMBC
Sun: 2:00 p.m. at Navy

WOMEN'S LACROSSE

Sat., April 7 vs. Lafayette 1:00 p.m.

THE Bucknellian

SECTION B

April 6, 2001

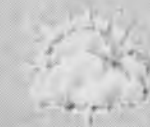

Weekend Weather

Hi: 60
Low: 42
FRIDAY

Hi: 67
Low: 46
SATURDAY

Hi: 73
Low: 49
SUNDAY

Chipfest 2001 amuses Weis Center audience

By MEGHAN PEACE
Staff Writer

University students gathered in the Weis Center on Saturday for the purpose of seeing the appalling and ridiculous Bison Chips perform Chipfest 2001.

The Chips, the University's all-male a cappella group, was formed 25 years ago and is currently directed by Chris Halldorson '01. The 14 Chips had the audience laughing and applauding throughout the show.

An absence of clothing seemed to be the order of the day as two shirtless emcees began the Chipfest. The Bison Chips then took the stage, apologizing for the lack of a yearly video. The audience was instead given the opportunity to enjoy the video from the previous year as the Chips raced pointless down the aisles.

The video was a marvel of ingenuity, one which involved further pointless pranks. It consisted of the Bison Chips in mad pursuit of their escaped pants. The audience was beside itself as the Chips chased the pants through the Bison, through classrooms and dormitories, until finally finding the runaway slacks unconscious after a night of drunken revelries.

After this amusing introduction, the Bison Chips began with the Doobie Brothers' "Listen to the Music." For the next two hours, that was exactly what the audience proceeded to do. With special guests, the JMU Blues Tones and the St. Lawrence Sinners, the groups presented an evening that was full of lively and entertaining musical selections.

The JMU Blues Tones, an all-female a cappella group from James Madison University in Harrisonburg, Virginia, began their portion of the show with "Heaven is a Place on Earth." From the spirited "Can't Hurry Love" to the sweet ballad "Never Saw Blue," the women of the Blues Tones enchanted the audience with their talent. Their concluding number, "Dancing Queen," was greeted with rousing applause.

The St. Lawrence Sinners, a female a cappella group hailing from St. Lawrence University in Canton, New York, proceeded to introduce their group through song. The crowd was charmed with classics, such as Fleetwood Mac's "Everywhere," Bob Marley's "No Woman, No Cry," and the Indigo Girls' "Least Complicated."

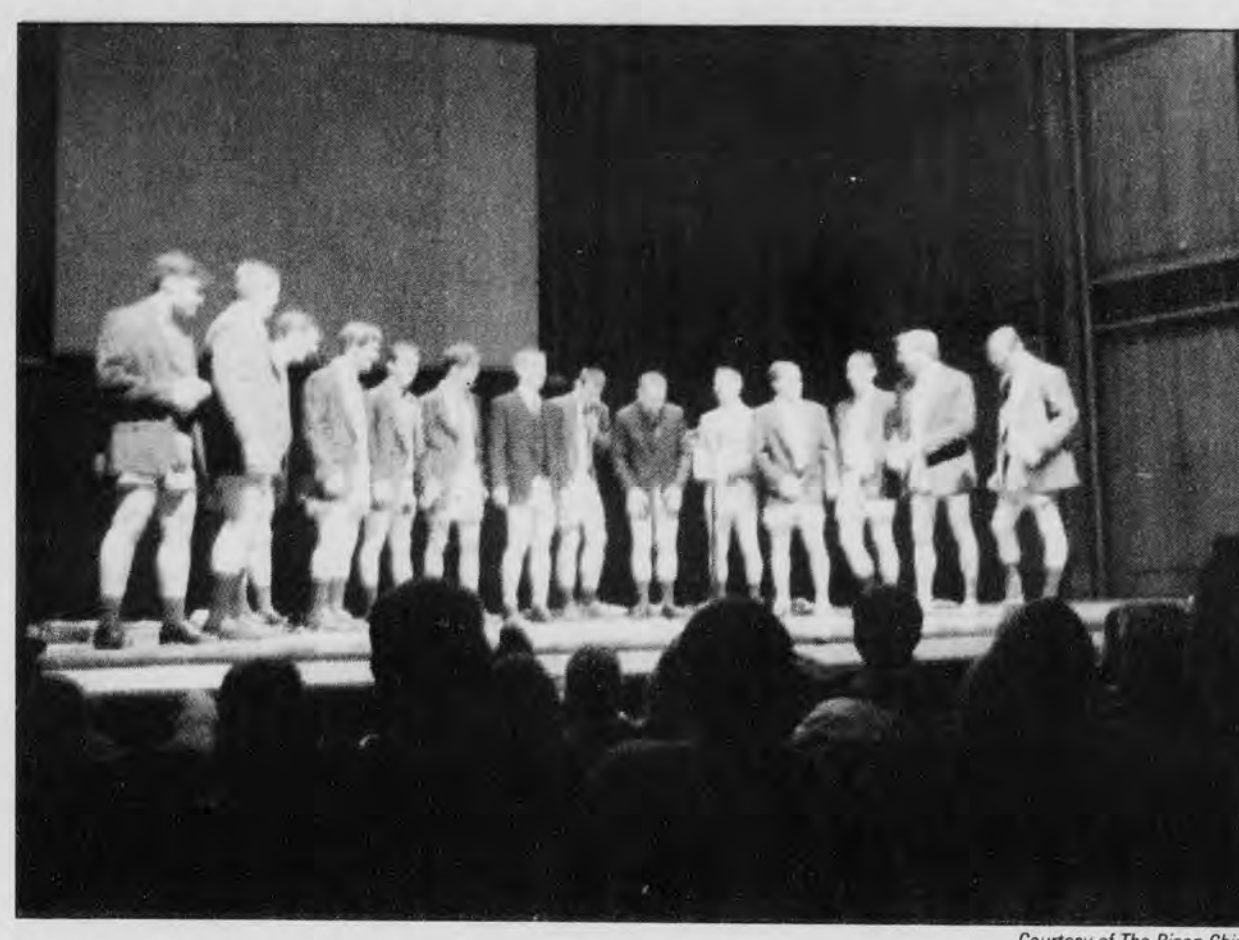

Before the Bison Chips began their portion of the show, the emcees came on stage for a brief interlude. "Random" is possibly the word best suited to describe their antics as they called Katie Palumbo '04 and Jim Ritter '04 up on stage for a mock sobriety test. "I really enjoyed the emcees, and I liked how they interacted with the people," Palumbo said. "It was weird that Jim and I were from the other a cappella groups [Two Past Midnight and the Silhouettes]. And I really was sober that night!"

It was finally time for the Bison Chips to take the stage, and they did it with the style, humor and enthusiasm for which they are known. From their opening number, the Red Hot Chili Peppers' "Aeroplane," they had the audience clapping their hands and tapping their toes to the lively and energetic performance. They presented a list of songs that included the Doors' "Love Her Madly," "Steven's Last Night in Town" by Ben Folds Five and the Beatles' "Yesterday."

The senior members were recognized towards the end of the show, with the song "We All Move On." Seniors Christopher Halldorson, Jeffrey Leeman, Jim Ney, Sean Kirnan and Colin Brokaw were presented with gag gifts from their fellow Chips.

At this point, the Bison Chips alumni, which included the two emcees, were invited to join the current Chips in their rendition of "Coney Island Baby" for the finale. The audience expressed their enjoyment of the show with thunderous applause, and the Chips returned for two encore numbers—"True Companion" and the beautiful "Lady in Red." Chipfest 2001 was a fantastic display of talent, showmanship, and music. The songs of the JMU BluesTones, the St. Lawrence Sinners, and the Bison Chips both amused and delighted the audience. The Weis Center was filled with applause and laughter, and everyone, as the Chips themselves had entreated, returned to that blissful state of childlike fun.

The Bison Chips bare it all for their audience in the Weis Center last Saturday night during Chipfest 2001. Courtesy of The Bison Chips

April brings religious celebration to campus

By SARAH GUDENKAUF
Staff Writer

The month of April is associated with many things: the much-anticipated arrival of spring weather, those last few weeks of classes and religious celebration. This year both the Jewish celebration of Passover and the Christian observances of Good Friday and Easter occur in early to mid-April. Passover begins on April 7 while Good Friday is April 13 and Easter Sunday is the 15 of April.

Passover is the Jewish festival celebrating the Exodus from Egypt. It occurs in remembrance of the story of Moses and his siblings, Aaron and Miriam. Each year in the Hebrew calendar, during the month of Nisan, Jews all over the world celebrate Passover. In the secular calendar this is usually during late March or early April. The University's Hillel community will be sponsoring two Seders, meals which recollect the story of the Exodus.

The first Seder will be the evening of Sat., April 7, beginning at 6 p.m. in the Terrace Room. The second Seder will be on the following evening, Sun., April 8, also at 6 p.m. in the Rectory. The entire campus community is invited to attend either Seder.

Celebrating Passover at the University is very important to many of the members of the Jewish community. Risa Salsburg '02 is one of the many students who feels this way. "Passover on campus is a time to share my customs with my friends, both Jewish and non-Jewish. I live close enough to school to be able to go home for Pesach (Passover in Hebrew), but I choose to stay here because it shows support for the Jewish community and my friends that are not able to go home."

The Christian community is also looking forward to their own celebrations with excitement. Both the University's interdenominational community and Catholic community are planning events for Holy Week.

Holy Week is the most important period of the Christian calendar. It is a retelling of the story of Jesus' trial, death and resurrection. As Christians serve each day of the week, they acknowledge Jesus' arrival in Jerusalem, celebrated on Palm Sunday. Next, they observe Jesus' final meal with his disciples, his arrest, and his trial and crucifixion, observed on Good Friday. Finally Christians have Easter Sunday in celebration of the discovery of Jesus rising from the tomb. The tradition is to meditate on these events, not just because Christians have done so for centuries, but because they believe the story they tell of God's self-giving and ultimate love of life is relevant to their lives today.

The Protestant schedule of observances for Holy Week is full of opportunities for students and faculty to celebrate their beliefs. Starting on Palm Sunday, April 8, at 11 a.m. there will be a service with the Rooke Chapel Choir and Bell Choir. It will begin at the Weis Center for a procession with palms to the Rooke Chapel. On Thursday, April 12, at 7:30 p.m. Holy Communion will be held in the Meditation Chapel. The Good Friday service will be at noon; it will be a joint Ecumenical service with the Catholic community in the Chapel. On April 13, Easter Sunday, at 11 a.m., the final Holy week service will be held at the Rooke Chapel, assisted by the Rooke Chapel Choir.

Catholic Campus Ministry is also planning its own schedule of events in observation of Holy Week. In celebration of Palm Sunday, the Catholic community will follow its normal weekend Mass schedule with a service on Saturday at 5:30 p.m. in the Rooke Chapel, Sunday at 4 p.m. in the Rooke Chapel and Sunday at 10 p.m. in the Larson dining hall. On Holy Thursday there will be an 8 p.m. Mass in Rooke Chapel followed by a Eucharistic Procession to Newman House for the Eucharistic Adoration from 9:30 p.m. to Midnight. The Good Friday service will be celebrated in conjunction with Rooke Chapel Ministries at noon on Friday the 13th followed by a Catholic Liturgy in the Chapel at 1 p.m. An Easter Vigil will be held at 8 p.m. in the Rooke Chapel on Saturday evening. The Easter Sunday celebration will be held at 11 a.m. in Bucknell Hall and at 4 p.m. in the Rooke Chapel.

Hillary DePiano '02, a member of the Catholic community, enjoys having the opportunity to celebrate Holy Week at the University. "Though it is a little sad to not be with my family at this time of year, there is a strong religious community here at Bucknell which serves as a sort of surrogate family and that is very important to me. It actually seems to bring those of us who stay on campus for the holiday closer together, and the holiday is truly about people and their bonds."

Rooke Chapel, the center of many religious celebrations this month. Courtesy of Dan Oppenheimer

Bears rule the Street

By JIM LEAHY
Managing Editor

The bears on Wall Street are running rampant after the fall of our booming, bullish economy. Investors are scrambling for cover as the wealth that they have created over the past ten years has vaporized in front of their eyes. And the general feeling is that, although the economy is showing signs of a slight turnaround, this may be sticking around for a little while.

Recent headlines from financial publications include "Blue Chip Bloodbath," "Stocks Get Crushed," "Stocks Mauls as Bears Turn Vicious" and "Investors Massacre Major Indices." And those are just the ones from the more bullish publications. The others are even worse.

And Wall Street is beginning to show signs of a slowdown in its business too. Layoffs are becoming a necessity among some firms as trading and other equities related businesses are hurting for customer business. NBC News reported on Wednesday morning that Morgan Stanley might cut 1,000 jobs. CBS Marketwatch was also on layoff alert on Wednesday as well, reporting that Citigroup could be next after cuts at Charles Schwab, Ameritrade and Bear Stearns.

But even as all this madness is going on, we should realize what we have done in the past ten years. Market cycles happen and life goes on. Quite possibly, the Dow and NASDAQ are right where they are supposed to be in the long-term scheme of things.

How about some numbers? First, we visit the Dow Jones Industrial Average. Consider this, from 1991 to its peak in January of 2000, the index rose 300% from a level around 3,000 to 12,000. And from the second half of 1998 to that same peak in January of 2000, it rose from a level of 7,300 to 12,000. More than half of the Dow's rise in the last ten years came from those last few months. Then, the Dow turned around and gave back almost 3,000 of its points since that high. Not that bad in a long-term view.

The NASDAQ is much more amazing when you look at its rise and fall over the last decade. In 1991, the NASDAQ was at a level of 400, up from 100 in 1974. On Monday, April 02, the NASDAQ closed at 1,782. Now, if you simply looked at that, you would miss the roller coaster ride. In the period from the second half of 1998 to January of 2000, the NASDAQ rose to its peak of 5,100 and since then has been on a straight line down.

See BEARS, page B6.

The above graphs show the DOW, NASDAQ and S&P 500 averages over a ten year period (TOP) and a ten year period (BOTTOM). The NASDAQ average is the yellow line and it shows just how wildly it changed over the past two years compared to the other averages.

FORUM

Letters to the Editors

Understand and support Jeans Day today

To the Editor,

Last year as a freshman member of FLAG&BT, I was excited for Jeans Day. It was a chance for me to show my support of the gay, lesbian and bisexual community. I come from a very open family with two gay siblings. I hadn't even thought that there would be people who didn't understand why support was needed, or wouldn't want to wear jeans. Well, that all changed when Jeans Day came around. I was not critical of people who were not wearing jeans, (as they could have forgotten or had some other legitimate excuse), but I was stunned by the number of people (some of my close friends) who did not understand the event. They questioned me, "Why jeans?" "Why do we need to show support, it isn't like Bucknell is overflowing with gay or lesbian people", "Don't you think it makes those not wearing jeans stand out as homophobes?" I was amazed. I didn't know what to say. "Why not show support?" I thought to myself. After pondering this issue for a year and discussing it with my fellow members of FLAG&BT, I decided that a letter to the editor would be a valuable Jeans Day contribution.

The first thing I would like to say is that, if you don't wear jeans on April 6 that's acceptable. If you don't support the issue that is fine, you shouldn't be ridiculed for that, but the day isn't for you or me for that matter. The day is for those who are struggling with issues of sexual orientation. For those people questioning their heterosexuality, who have had problems at work or school because of their sexual orientation; it should be a comforting day for them. Wearing jeans is a way to tell those around you who may be struggling with these issues that you care. But then one must ask, why jeans? Everyone owns jeans, they are commonplace, why not pick something more obvious and flashy. On a basic level, jeans were chosen because they are commonplace so it is easy for almost everyone to show support if they want to.

There is also a deeper meaning. Jeans were chosen to symbolize gay people in a community. Jeans don't stand out in a crowd; they blend in and fit in with everyone else. Not all gay, lesbian and bisexual people are flaming; they are your teachers, friends, bosses and co-workers. Jeans show that it doesn't have to be a big issue. We can all work together and no one is asking to stand out above the rest. Gay, lesbian and bisexual people don't want special rights, they want equal rights. That is what we are supporting on Jeans Day. It is a day intended to help you to think about the LGBT issues, on our campus, and in the "real" world. Awareness is essential to creating acceptance and showing support. So, if you are reading this on Friday, throw on your jeans quick! If it is later on in the week, just remember next year's Jeans Day will still be celebrated and there will be a whole new freshman class to show your support!

Gina Conenello '03

Public safety responds

To the Editor,

There were many inaccuracies in your recent article in The Bucknellian about Public Safety ("Forum Solicits Complaints about Public Safety" by Natalie Casp, March 23, 2001). You failed the true litmus test of good journalism: accuracy, objectivity, completeness of information and the exposure of both sides of an issue. It was evident from the beginning that The Bucknellian intended to misrepresent the facts to slant this story. I was very disappointed.

Vincent N. DeCerio, Director
Department of Public Safety

Understanding sought

To the Editor,

John Wesley '03, in a letter published Mar 30, criticizes The Bucknellian for misrepresenting the visit of Stef and Athena Rogers to Nueva Vida, Nicaragua, and apparently criticizes them for the statements quoted and the photos published Mar 23 by The Bucknellian. Since he also criticizes the paper for misquoting him, he might entertain the possibility that the full story of the Rogers' visit and how they felt about it was not conveyed by The Bucknellian's coverage.

John Peeler
Political Science

Do what you want at college? Not really...

By ALLYSON DEMERATH
Senior Writer

When you came to college, you most likely were expecting to find freedom. You thought you would have all kinds of choices. Ultimately, you could choose to go to class or stay at home and watch television. If you desired, you could go out every night of the week or not come home for days at a time. The point is that your parents were not there; you controlled your life. The freedom of college seemed immeasurable.

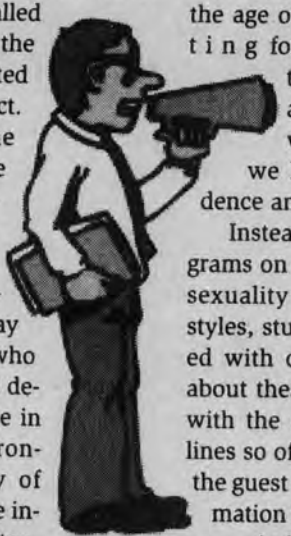

However, once you arrived at the University, you soon discovered the freedom you were looking for was not necessarily evident. Authority figures were perhaps more existent in college than they were in your high school. When chatting with friends who attended larger or simply more lenient schools, you discovered they benefited from a less regimented environment. You were disillusioned by the realization that people were still telling you what you could and could not do.

You are not the only one. At 22, I am still shocked, appalled and even insulted by the way students are treated with such little respect. It is as though some people believe we are still too young or immature to be making reasonable decisions and choices for ourselves. While there may be a few individuals who do not make informed decisions, this is the case in any real world environment. The majority of University students are intelligent, have vast potential and are independent enough to make their own choices and learn from their mistakes.

The problem, not exclusive to our campus, is that students often feel suffocated by authority. While the stringent rules that exist may be very useful and applicable for students of the age of 13, they are not at all fitting for 18 to 22 year-olds. By the time we reach this age, we adamantly resent being told what to do, mainly because we have earned our independence and freedom.

Instead of a few informative programs on alcohol abuse, drug abuse, sexuality and overall healthy lifestyles, students' schedules are flooded with often mandatory meetings about these issues. We are lectured with the same statistics and guidelines so often that we begin to resent the guest speakers because the information is so incredibly redundant. As if this were not enough, students are constantly being warned about the consequences of their actions. Unlike most mature young adults who are given the liberty to make a few mistakes as a learning experience, we do not have this freedom to weigh the different factors and make our own informed decision, authority steps in and dictates what our actions should be. This sends the message that we are simply incapable of understanding our situation. As we continually receive this controlling authority, our resentment and hostility grows.

It is the classic case of rebelling against authority. The more we are told we can't do something, the more we will want to do it. It's quite similar to the attitude that we, as students, take in the classroom. If a person tells us we can't do well in the class, we smile and say, "Watch me," and ace all the exams. The same thing is happening outside of the classroom. The more authority figures tell us we can't make our own decisions as intelligent students, the more we will say, "Watch me!"

THE BUCKNELLIAN

Founded in 1896 as The Blue and Orange

Volume 127, Number 9

C-3952 BUCKNELL UNIVERSITY

LEWISBURG, PENNSYLVANIA, 17837

(570)-577-1520

BUCKNELLIAN@BUCKNELL.EDU

HTTP://WWW.ORG.S-BUCKNELL.EDU/BUCKNELLIAN

EDITORIAL POLICY

The editorials of The Bucknellian reflect the consensus of the Editorial Board as to the topics and general position. If a consensus could not be reached, the opinions expressed are those of the Editors-in-Chief. All other opinion material represents the views of the author and not necessarily those of The Bucknellian.

PUBLISHING POLICY

The Bucknellian is written, edited and published on 12 Fridays during each academic semester entirely by Bucknell students. The Bucknellian's fiscal affairs are overseen by an Advisory Board comprised of faculty, staff and administrators. All published material is chosen by the paper's editorial board without prior review by the Advisory Board, its adviser, the University or Bucknell Student Government.

SUBSCRIPTIONS POLICY

Subscriptions are available $45 per year and $30 per semester. To subscribe, send payment and address information to: The Bucknellian Subscriptions, Box C-3952, Lewisburg, PA 17837. Subscriptions are mailed first-class on the Monday of publication. Please send change-of-address information to the above location as well.

ADVERTISING POLICY

The Editorial Board of The Bucknellian reserves the right to deny any advertisements if offensive, illegal or in bad taste. For advertising rates, please contact the advertising managers at (570) 577-1085.

Copyright © 2001 The Bucknellian

Science and Technology Editors

Josiana Cetta '04

Lauren Wohl '04

Sports Editors

Carmen Mauriello '02

Brooke Rea '02

Andrew Burr '04

Aaron DeRosa '03

Sports Statistician

Matthew Herbert '02

Photo Editors

Paige Cull '01

Chris Rivera '02

Local Advertising Representative

Bryan Prins '04

National Advertising Representative

Amy Peloquin '03

Online Editors

Eric Fair '01

Brendan Putnam '03

Head Copy Editors

Kim Luedee '01

Debbie Ruggieri '01

Production Manager

Nick Olson '02

Circulation Manager

Brian Klotz '03

Adviser

James F. Lee

MTV knows music, not politics

By MICHAEL BOLAND
Staff Writer

Somewhere along the line, MTV stopped being one more rapid cable channel, and morphed into a rapid cable channel that took itself way too seriously. This is evident in "Rock the Vote" and "Campus Invasion." The folks that brought you Ananda, Carson, and even-make that especially-Jesse Camp would now like to be your source for all things political.

I guess it's OK if MTV wants to film stupid people doing stupid things on Spring Break, and present this as entertainment. It's even OK if they want to stuff seven strangers in a house and make them live together, or form a news division only to obsess about Jennifer Lopez's love life; that stuff just doesn't matter. The entire genre of "Music Television," and all of its self-involved trappings, does not even remotely affect the real world. It's all innocuously irrelevant.

Politics, on the other hand, is serious business. We all enjoy complaining about the stuff that government does wrong—we all agree that when it does screw up, it matters. Whether you're liberal or conservative, all of us acknowledge that government action—or inaction—can make a great deal of difference in a great number of people's lives.

Which is exactly why MTV—created and constructed to showcase the inane—has no business playing the part of political activist. Don't even get me started on the fact that it pushes a liberal agenda—that's a whole other gripe session.

The very fact that it presumes to speak for a diverse set of citizen—youth—and then takes specific positions on debatable issues is self-evidently ridiculous.

The "Rock the Vote" website specifically endorses the McCain-Feingold "campaign finance reform" bill, and calls for the abolition of the Electoral College, arguing, "the 2000 presidential election proved that the electoral process is flawed." Actually, it didn't; it proved that the electoral process sometimes takes a little longer than we would otherwise like. Just because the liberal candidate lost doesn't mean the process is flawed.

But I digress. I am not saying that one can't make a case for McCain-Feingold, or the abolition of the Electoral College. I'm saying that any group that chooses to do so claims to speak arrogantly and exceedingly for an entire generation.

Insofar as MTV wants to perform the strictly neutral task of just registering voters, good for them. That is commendable civic service. But claiming unqualified "youth" support—indeed, drawing off of the balance of capital public good—will typically afford politically active "youth"—and transforming that into political clout to agitate for specific causes? That's unethical and presumptuous.

A glance at the "Rock the Vote" website quickly reveals an indisputable liberal agenda. No objection there. I personally find the "campus radical" a bit cliché; however, if MTV wants to come here and encourage people towards that line of thinking, they have every right to do so.

But does anyone else have a problem with a portion of our electorate taking its cues on complex, substantive issues from the people that brought you "House of Style"?

I, for one, will just cross my fingers and hope that Bucknellians are smarter, more thoughtful, and more discerning than MTV, which pushes politically correct causes, assumes they are. I can't help but wonder if maybe MTV is barking up the wrong tree. They want to register more voters on a "conservative" campus? I guess I can live with that.

Free thinkers need to question what they read

By TOM ELLIOT
Staff Writer

One of the most fundamental lessons to be developed and harvested during your college career is that of an independent mind. Unfortunately, this is often neglected for the sake of conformity and an unusual interminable stride towards social equality.

To consider your years in this University a successful and worthwhile endeavor, I must insist that you have garnered enough knowledge to be able to take something in, analyze it and its presentation and then formulate your own personal opinion. In essence, you must have the ability to think for yourself.

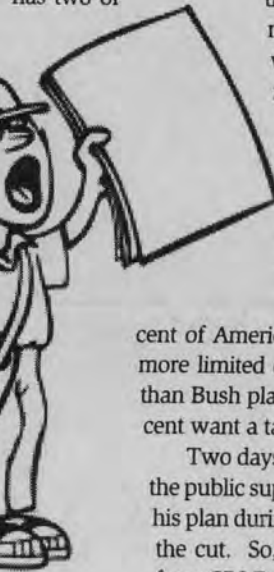

To help, I am going to show how easy it is to unknowingly fall victim to a translucent bias, in this case the culprit is the media.

Jesse Dirksing's name should ring a bell—I bet it doesn't. Jesse was a 13-year-old boy from Brentville, Ark. when his life came to an end on Sept. 26, 1999, cut short by the hands of evil.

Two men, neighbors and new friends of Jesse, had invited him over for the day. The two men the drugged Jesse, tied him to a bed, shoved his underwear into his mouth for a gag, added duct tape to help silence him, then repeatedly sodomized him for the next few hours using a variety of objects, including food. He was then left tied to the bed in a position that inhibited his breathing. When the police arrived he was covered in smeared feces and had only a very slight pulse. One of the two men had finally called an ambulance after he took a break from the "sex play" to eat a sandwich and notice he wasn't breathing anymore.

While this case bears a strikingly similar malevolent theme as to that of Matthew Shepard—a gay man killed at the hands of two straight men—it hasn't become the highly publicized case that Shepard's has come to be. This is because it isn't popular with what the media considers being politically correct.

In the month following Shepard's death, a Lexis-Nexis article search shows 3,007 stories about his death. In the one month after Dirksing's, 46 stories. In the last year, the Dirksing story was covered by only one national mainstream newspaper,

The Boston Globe. During this period The New York Times published 45 stories about Shepard. The Washington Post published 28.

This type of selective reporting comes from the motivation of promoting specific political campaigns, something eerily typical in mainstream media: in this case it is for hate-crime legislation. How can we ever pass hate-crime legislation if there is no need for it? The FBI identified a total of 8 hate-crimes murders in the statistically typical year of 1997. The number that was gay-specific was smaller. A typical year, three at most. The opposing statistic, the Dirksing case, is equally minute. Two equally heinous acts, but why all the attention diverted to one, while completely neglecting the other?

Before this turns into an article about hate-crimes, I would like to bring up one other recent example of media bias. On Mar. 1, on CBS evening news, John Roberts commented on Bush's proposed tax cut. "New polls, however, show voters leaning slightly in favor of the democratic plan." Perhaps he was referring to a Reuters/Zogby poll put out that day which showed 38 percent of Americans favored Bush's plan, while 40 percent favored the more limited democratic plan, yet another 8 percent favored a larger than Bush plan. That means a greater majority of Americans, 46 percent want a tax cut of equal or greater value to Bush's.

Two days before the report, a poll showed a healthy 67 percent of the public supported Bush's tax plan, people who had watch Bush sell his plan during his tax cut address: a mammoth 88 percent supported the cut. So, which group took this poll that received no attention from CBS Evening News? None other than CBS Evening News. In a typified move, they realized they spent money on a poll that was not newsworthy and neglected to present the findings. In its place aired interviews with economists who felt the tax cut plan was a "risky scheme."

The media's careful selection of news stories and their presentation is inauspicious. Their neglect to air, comprehensive, and interesting stories to the mass public necessitates our movement towards non-mainstream media to learn mainstream news. Never allow others to dictate what you know—that's your job.

Staples protests misguided examples of activism

By GREGORY BARCHUCK
Staff Writer

I like trees. Born and bred in New Jersey, I have not had the opportunity to admire these plants of ten. Any time I see a tree I am filled with wonder and veneration. On Wednesday, Mar. 28, I had just returned to my dorm from a biology lecture on—you guessed it—trees.

The difference between gymnosperms and angiosperms still fresh in my mind, I decided to open Eudora for a morning e-mail check. Piled among the usual mass student mailings was a call for protest against Staples for selling paper and desks, organized by the University chapter of the Student Environmental Action Coalition (SEAC). I have no problem with environmental awareness, but I do see the notion of protesting against Staples as slightly ridiculous.

SEAC threw a lot of numbers around in its mailing, hoping the barrage would convince us that Staples is a demon company from Hell. In truth, most of numbers found in the e-mail sent on Wednesday did not convict Staples for crimes against trees, nor did they prove guilt of the logging companies from which Staples gets its paper products. Unlike what certain activist groups would like us to believe, logging companies replace the trees they cut.

I have walked through the forests of the Pacific Northwest, and I have seen the strategies used by these companies. Since May 18, 1980, the day Mount St. Helens erupted and destroyed thousands of square miles of forested lands, the people of the Pacific Northwest have been familiar with reforestation tactics. Trees are not mindlessly cut down there—the resource would quickly regenerate.

Logging companies approach their business much like any poultry company. Chickens and turkeys are raised for the purpose of being eventually sold, and the killed birds are replaced with new ones. Otherwise, these companies would go out of business, and the consumer would no longer be able to eat chickens or turkeys (or buy paper, for that matter).

Granted, not all logging companies are respectable, and clear-cutting is certainly a problem. And certainly, even tree replacement is not perfect—it disrupts ecosystems and is a costly process. Replacement is merely a better alternative than clear-cutting, and it should not be seen as the ultimate solution to the problem. But how can we protest against Staples for selling paper and desks when the posters in our rooms are made of paper and the computers on which we type mass student e-mails sit upon the very desks we are protesting?

I nearly fell off my chair when I read that a "National Day of Action against Staples" existed. However, in today's age of fighting a cause for the sole purpose of being annoying, I should not have been surprised. SEAC presents a convincing argument, but it fails to realize the most critical aspect of this problem: people buy paper. Staples does not sell paper because of some vendetta against the world's forest—it sells paper because people buy it.

We do not have as many office supply stores in Lewisburg as there are in New Jersey, but back at home I can choose between Staples, Office Max, Office Depot, and a number of other stores, all set up to satiate America's undying love of paper. My point is that if we successfully remove Staples, people will still buy their paper elsewhere. Staples would not sell paper if a market did not exist to purchase it—and so the real culprits in this problem of deforestation are the people who buy, use, and often waste paper (nearly all of us), not Staples.

People need to be educated on the merits of recycling and using recycled paper, not organized into silly revolutions against office supply stores. Therefore, in the spirit of SEAC, I say we protest against people!

What is the Free Trade Area of the Americas?

By PETE ZAWADZKAS
Contributing Writer

I'm guessing that most people on campus haven't heard of the Free Trade Area of the Americas (FTAA) yet. If you haven't, don't sweat it, very few people have. Those who speak the Weis Center to see Mr. Nader helped a few weeks ago, and even those who couldn't make it, may be interested in what the FTAA will mean to you.

The FTAA, is the formal name given to the proposed expansion of NAFTA. This is currently being drafted by trade ministers from 34 countries in the Western Hemisphere. Every country in the West, except Cuba, will be incorporated into a NAFTA-style trade agreement by the year 2005 (or 2003 if the United States gets its way).

For those of you who are not familiar with NAFTA and the effects it has had on the three participating nations subjected to it, here are a few highlights. It is estimated that over one million U.S. jobs have been lost since NAFTA as corporations relocate their operations to Mexico.

The U.S. trade surplus with Mexico has become an $18.6 billion deficit.

Numerous health, safety and environmental standards have been overturned as barriers to the free trade standards of NAFTA in Canada, Mexico and the U.S.

The blatant and grotesque prioritization of corporate greed over public good that we have witnessed will only increase and spread if the FTAA is allowed to come into existence. US jobs lost to Mexico may now be lost again to Guatemala as corporations find cheaper and more disposable labor and "less restrictive" (read: environmentally and socially supportive) markets to exploit.

If you had never heard of the FTAA before now, you're actually in good company. Most U.S. elected officials have never heard of this trade deal. In fact, Congress has set no goals to guide our nation's participation in the formation of the FTAA and has not delegated to the Executive branch its Constitutional role of setting the terms of international commerce.

It has only been recently that our elected offi-

Bush sacrifices environment for profits

By GRETCHEN SCHROCK
Opinions Columnist

The current inhabitants of the White House committed yet another ridiculously stupid political act last week in an attempt to show their dedication to the citizens of the United States and instead, displayed their hatred for the European community. President Bush and his indispensable group of advisors abruptly decided to abandon the Kyoto Protocol, a treaty that planned to combat the causes of global warming. Approved in 1997 after years of careful negotiation, 38 industrial countries, including the United States, agreed to reduce their emissions of greenhouse gases by 2012 to 5.2 percent below the levels in 1990.

What could have possibly convinced Bush to scrap such a significant instrument in the degradation of the global environment? Does he not realize that global warming has effects not only on the environment but also on agriculture, industry, and health among other things on a worldwide scale?

Our president is stuck in a one-way thought process because he cites the declining American economy as his reason to abandon the Kyoto Protocol. While it is understandable to be concerned about the slowing American economy after the stock market's recent roller coaster ride, the economy is not in the midst of a depression like that of the 1930s and is not in need of complete environmental regulation to increase domestic economic investment.

Instead, contrary to the opinion of our dear president, there exists greater need for environmental regulation. The United States is the biggest producer of greenhouse gases per capita and in total produces 25 percent of the gases associated with global warming. The average American consumes twice the amount of energy than the average European and the emission of greenhouse gases is twice as high per capita in the United States than in Europe.

However, when Bush met with German Chancellor Gerhard Schröder in Washington, he strongly announced his undivided attention towards the economy, as quoted by The New York Times, "We will not do anything that harms our economy, because first thing's first are the people who live in America."

Bush is probably scratching his chin and contemplating why the Europeans are throwing a tantrum over such a seemingly minor treaty. Could it be because Bush appears completely oblivious to the multitude of environmental problems across Europe, which may have been somewhat ameliorated by the Kyoto Protocol? Are the Europeans angry at the American ignorance of the fact that 100 countries negotiated for years on this treaty? Is the American economic self-interest, which will undermine all of the painstaking effort put into the protocol's acceptance, also responsible for the European despair? The European states are frustrated not only by the actions of the European states, but also by their inability to force the United States into compliance.

Furthermore, if the European countries follow the guidelines enshrined in the Kyoto Protocol and reduce their level of greenhouse gases, while the United States continues polluting without a thought towards posterity, the United States will reap the economic benefits. American industries and companies will not have to implement costly environmental regulations; keeping their expenses down. By following the road of selfishness, the Bush administration, supposedly the bastion of morality and honesty, will win, but only in the economic arena. In the game of public opinion, he will undoubtedly lose.

The Europeans denounced his actions as "irresponsible," "arrogant," "sabotage" and "completely provocative." Le Monde, a French daily newspaper, accused Bush of committing "a brutal form of unilateralism," while in London, The Independent asserted that "history will not judge George Bush kindly." Many European leaders are predicting greater isolation for the United States if it continues on its path of self-interest. Noel Mamer, leader of the French Green Party and a member of Parliament, said, as quoted by The New York Times, "We are back to Ronald Reagan and America First. I think the decision is completely mad, and it is a reason for more isolation for America." One cannot be the most popular and likable kid on the school playground when one does not play by the rules of the game and then bullies others into abiding by those same rules.

Bush, in his concern for commercial interests, is forgetting our promises to our most important allies and in the process, blindly forcing our country into a position of isolation and global hostility. He may be the president of the United States but he lacks any idea on how to become and remain a world leader. Maybe he should heed the words of Romano Prodi, the European Union Commission president and former Italian prime minister, "If one wants to be a world leader, one must know how to look after the entire earth and not only American industry."

Those of you who may be feel that this whole FTAA plan may not be such a good idea, don't despair. Stand up and raise your voice. On April 18-22 in Quebec City, the Summit of the Americas (the ministerial coordinators of the FTAA formation) will be holding their next meeting. Already citizen's rights groups, environmentalists, labor unions and indigenous peoples from around the globe have vowed to appear at the location of the talks to voice their protest. In fact, there are a number of your very own Bucknellians who have already committed to the 12-hour drive for what they see as a worthy cause.

FEATURES

A comparison of chicken nuggets: McDonald's still the king

By ANDRÉS SOLTREIN
Staff Writer

The creation of fast food chains has forever changed the variety of American foods. One of the most important dishes, second only to the burger, is the chicken nugget. Chicken nuggets, chicken tenders, chicken fingers, chicken strips: all of these dishes are common in American restaurants. Students at the University consume chicken tenders at the Bison, or take the long, perilous journey down Route 15 to the fast food chains. Wendy's, Burger King, and McDonald's all serve their own variations of this popular food.

Right away, Wendy's has a huge advantage over the other two fast-food competitors: the price. You can get five chicken nuggets for a mere $0.99. Yes, you can still get something for a dollar! Needless to say, this makes Wendy's the optimal place to go for a snack. Also, the chicken nuggets taste more real than the other two fast food chains.

Although "real" may not be the best adjective, people who have tried fast food nuggets should understand. Add a tasty barbecue sauce and you have a very good and economical meal. In other words, it is just downright cheap.

Another advantage of Wendy's nuggets is that they can stand by themselves without sauce. While barbecue sauce or other condiments add to the flavor, Wendy's nuggets taste quite good just as they are. The small size of the nugget is also more convenient for the eater. This is especially important when going through the drive-thru. The small nuggets and their equally small container make it a perfect snack for people on the road.

Next, we have Burger King's chicken tenders. While opting to stray from the typical nugget appearance, these tenders are really nothing more than stretched out chicken nuggets. A container of eight chicken tenders will cost you $1.95. This is much more expensive than Wendy's. However, Burger King's chicken tenders have their own advantages. Since they have more chicken than the other two competitors, you will inevitably feel fuller after eating them. Their chicken taste is somewhat less delicious than Wendy's but far more "real" than McDonald's.

Once again, barbecue sauce or different honey dips are a must. The barbecue sauce is the spiciest of the three, making for an excellent meal. However, Burger King should take note of their own breakfast menu and change the format of their containers. For example, the morning french toast sticks have a nice little niche for your syrup containers. Why not make one for the barbecue containers?

The result is that their box is very unwieldy, especially in the car.

Overall, the chicken tenders are good, although Wendy's are slightly better and also a better buy.

And now we come to the leviathan of all fast food chains: McDonald's. Their nuggets taste like they're synthetic, the barbecue sauce does not taste like any other substance we know, and yes, they contain an enormous amount of fat.

With that aside, McDonald's is still the undisputed king of chicken nuggets. The one serious drawback is the price. First of all, anyone trying to eat chicken nuggets plain should be checked for various psychological diseases of the mind. These things were made to be eaten with barbecue sauce! After finishing the nuggets, use the remainder of the sauce on the french fries. Believe me, it tastes very good.

McDonald's nuggets just taste the best somehow, despite all of its obvious shortcomings. They also fill you up much more than either of the other two meals.

The other added advantage at McDonald's is the ability to get a full meal with your nuggets. A six-piece chicken nugget meal with a super-sized Coke and fries is just a great idea. Six-piece nuggets go for $2.09. Now, obviously this is much more expensive than Wendy's or even Burger King. The nine-piece nuggets are $2.89. And the lord of all nugget meals, the all-consuming 20-piece nugget container, is $5.09. With barbecue sauce, the 20-piece provides a whopping 1,000 calories for anyone brave enough to try.

Why include a 20-piece then? Very simply, the 20-piece might be the best of all McDonald's nugget meals. The key is to split it with a couple of people. If five people eat, it basically costs them a dollar for four nuggets. This, in fact, is an even better deal than five of Wendy's nuggets, since each McDonald's nugget is far more filling than a Wendy's nugget. Of course, you might sound greedy ordering a 20-piece, but the fact remains that it is a great value for a group.

So what should you do if you have the craving for chicken nuggets? Going to Wendy's would be the best choice from an economic standpoint.

Mark Dickinson—The Bucknellian
The local providers of chicken nuggets include Burger King (TOP), McDonald's (LEFT), and Wendy's (BOTTOM).

People who are not used to fast food are also better off at Wendy's. Burger King is the middle ground. Go there for more filling chicken tenders at a moderate price.

And for all those fast food lovers, McDonald's is still the king. Go elsewhere for a better deal, but if you have the urge for chicken nuggets and are willing to put out an extra dollar or two, McDonald's is the place.

Kudos go out to anyone who can finish a 20-piece container of McNuggets.

Mark Dickinson—The Bucknellian

The local providers of chicken nuggets include Burger King (TOP), McDonald's (LEFT), and Wendy's (BOTTOM).

Historical Lewisburg Cemetery is nothing to be frightened of

Mark Dickinson—The Bucknellian
Lewisburg Cemetery, resting place for past University presidents and the University's most famous alumnus, Christy Mathewson.

By ALYSON WALKER
Staff Writer

Imagine this: After a lengthy visit with a friend who lives in Smith, you begin the walk back uphill at 3:15 a.m. As you walk out of Smith, you see something move in the shadows by the cemetery. No big deal, right? But wait, it is the cemetery ... and you're all alone in the dark. You breathe deeply and your pace quickens as you almost break into a run towards the Langone Center. Phew! You escaped the ghosts of Lewisburg Cemetery!

Did you really need to get that worried though? Although cemeteries at night can be creepy, the Lewisburg Cemetery is a rather quaint memorial, not particularly known to be ghost haunt. More students are frightened by what they imagine could be there. Some are so nervous about it that they do not want to go near it. "I'm not comfortable with cemeteries in general, and the idea that there's such a large one next to campus almost turned me off from coming here," said Sara Bradley '04.

Rumors about about various abnormal sounds or movements having been heard or seen near the cemetery. Some tales even involve a ghost being in Smith! Whether it's odd noises or that suspicious shadow lurking behind you when walking alone, the cemetery is definitely one of the more frightening areas on campus.

"The cemetery lends an ominous tone to the University," said Emily Thede '04. And you have to admit, deep in your mind, the thought lurks—hmm, is that what they do with the students who don't pass?

A student who has lived in Smith the past two years recalls one of the ghost tales he's heard. "Supposedly there was a guy who killed himself during finals awhile ago. During finals, you can hear his ghost screaming from the cemetery," he said. Similar stories exist and are passed down as University folklore, but are they true?

Despite the fear it may strike into the hearts of some, the Lewisburg Cemetery is quite attractive by daylight and historical in nature. When walking through the cemetery, University students can find the burial places of many University greats, such as former presidents Justin Loomis, Emory Hunt, John Harris, and Francis Tustin as well as a marker for the legendary Christy Mathewson.

The chapel and adjacent vault were built in 1899 by a cemetery manager named Foster for a sum of $178,066. It is open the first and third Sundays of every month for meditation, beginning at noon.

The chapel also hosts a Quaker style Christmas Eve service for all faiths, sponsored by Society

Friends, Lewisburg Meeting, and The Meditation Project. For the Christmas Eve service and all other meditations, the chapel welcomes any visitors, saying "We reach out with Peace, Love, and Joy to all sojourners and seekers."

Whether you're interested in Quaker style services, a place for quiet meditation, or a look at where many of the University's finest are buried, the Lewisburg Cemetery has it.

Take a walk through some time and judge for yourself about its ghosts ... just watch your back. (For more information about the Lewisburg Cemetery, you can go online at www.lewisburgcemetery.org.)

Spring Fling Special

During March, April and May—a special offer for 14-24 year olds—$299.00

WHITEN YOUR TEETH!!!

Achieve white teeth for spring socials, job interviews, etc.

David R. Robinson, DMD, P.C.
339 Market St.
Lewisburg, Pa.

523-3207 call today!

FOR RENT

LEWISBURG: Apts & houses near BU campus. 1-6 bdrm units. Parking provided. Heat, washer/dryer, dishwasher included in some. Prof. 24-hour maintenance. Range: $275 -1,200/mo. for 2001/2002. CALL NOW Brynwood Rentals Ph: 570/524-2121 x 2.

Come Party at the ARIZONA CAFE BYOB

Outdoor Patio and Fireside Dining

Quesadillas Chicken Soft Tacos Monster Burritos

Enchiladas Seafood Steaks

Most Meals $9-$13 No Charge Cards (Checks Accepted)

Bring in this Coupon for 1 FREE virgin margarita with soft coffee purchased BYOB

Open Tues-Thurs 11:30-9, Fri & Sat 11:30-10, Sun 11:30-8

UNIVERSITY OF PENNSYLVANIA PENN SUMMER 2001

Philadelphia, PA • Tel: 215.898.7134 • Email: summer@sa.upenn.edu

Undergraduate and Graduate Courses

Programs for International Students

Programs for High School Students

Summer Abroad

Online Courses

- Hundreds of courses
- Beautiful historic campus
- Easily transferable credit
- College house amenities
- Social & cultural activities
- Convenient to New York & D.C.

www.upenn.edu/summer

Summer Session I May 22-June 29
Summer Session II July 2-August 10
12 Week Evening Session May 21-August 10

Rub-a-dub-dub, three girls in a ... Bath?

Three University students' abroad perspective from Bath, England

By ERICA DELSANDRO
Contributing Writer

You heard right. The three University girls in question were tutorial-like classes that motivate students to push their academic limits. However, the program is aware that there is more to study abroad than just study. Therewith nights at the pub, The Dark Horse being a favorite of the girls on Northampton Street. Soon everyone from Northampton Street was making their way to city center to meet the other ASE students at the Huntsman for Karaoke Night.

It was not long before trips were being planned. Lauren and two other flatmates planned a trip to Ireland that they will never forget. Christen and Erica prepared for their journey to "the continent," to Germany and Austria. Others headed to Spain or Italy.

The stress of finals was overshadowed by the imminent separation from friends and from a city they all learned to call their own. As the days diminished they tried to keep busy—a talent show, a weekend in Stratford, a final tea not rub-a-dub-dubbing in a tub, but in Bath, England! Christen Braun, Lauren Hughes and myself, Erica Delsandro left the United States last August for an experience we would not soon forget.

Courtesy of Erica Delsandro
The Roman Baths in Abbey Square Bath, England.

Three juniors who all lived together during their first year at the University had, without each other's knowledge, committed themselves to the Advanced Studies in England (ASE) program located in Bath, England.

Although nervous, anxious and apprehensive at first, when the three arrived at 18 Northampton Street in Bath and realized they were flatmates, all misgivings were forgotten.

From the first day in the quaint, historically rich city of Bath the three girls began a semester unlike anything they had before experienced and likely will not experience again any time soon!

The program, Advanced Studies in England, is geared towards students in the Humanities, particularly English and History. Instruction is provided in affiliation with Oxford University with the focus being intense, rewarding fore, most, if not all the classes provide study trips to places relevant to course study, but more importantly, relevant to gaining a full British experience.

Such an approach afforded the three girls many trips and happy memories—rock climbing at Valley of the Rocks, visiting the Globe Theatre, getting lost in London, as well as relaxing with professors and pins.

Other memories came via non-academic activities. The program itself offered many fun trips thoroughly enjoyed by all involved. A trip to Exmoor and a rainy, daylong hike provided blisters and colds as well as views of the breath-taking English countryside for the girls. One of the first outings to Stonehenge allowed the approximately 50 American students enrolled in ASE a chance to get to know each other while snapping photos of one of the world's most famous wonders.

Once everyone got acquainted and comfortable with each other the fun was constant. It began ly, while still others dedicated time to experiencing all England had to offer.

Yet when break was over it became clear, not only to the three University flatmates, but to everyone else as well, that time was flying. The friendships that began slowly now flourished as students from Hobart and William Smith, Boston College and William and Mary spent all their time together.

Halloween was the night that cemented many of these relations as students joined together in costume. That night the Dark Horse saw the very American holiday in true form. At the party at the Royal Crescent. But unfortunately the bags were packed and the goodbyes were said. The three girls left Bath with bursting suitcases, lots of pictures, many memories and full hearts. Christmas at home was nice, but a Christmas in Bath would have been better!

Courtesy of Erica Delsandro
ASE (Advanced Studies in England) students take a lunch break along the river bank while on a day hike in Exmoor.

So what was next for the three girls upon their return to the University? The answer is easy. Every chance possible, Christen, Lauren and myself, get together and recall the past semester.

We laugh about our male housemates, shutter at the thoughts of the slugs in our kitchen, wonder about the tutors we became so close with, smile about punting during our week at Oxford and wish we could have one more walk down Milsom Street, one more day to shop in Bath, one more Karaoke night, one more joke with the ASE administrators and one more sky filled with hot air balloons, one more afternoon in Abbey Square and most of all, one more evening at 18 Northampton Street with all our friends. So although the three girls from Bath have returned to the University to share their story, they will always remember the rub-a-dub of a semester in Bath!

Write for Features!

You'll only work for the best...
Call
Sandi Jo at 7-6431
OR
Jolene at 7-4681

The blood donation experience: life-saving potential

By RUTH LI
Contributing Writer

"Gentle squeeze—one, two, three, four, five; relax—one, two, three; repeat," you think to yourself as you consciously close and unclose your palm around the stout wooden stick in cyclic fashion. You listen to the buzz of activity around you, broken by encouraging words and warm smiles from the attending nurse at the station where you are lying.

Half-an-hour ago you stood at the entrance to Larison Dining Hall, reading blood donation literature and getting checked in. The next step was filling out some paper work and answering some "yes-and-no" medical history questions. Your temperature and blood iron content were then tested as you snacked on cookies and orange drinks. Working yourself around the outer perimeter of the blood donation stations where the nurses were working, you got your blood pressure taken, your questions answered, your short interview taken, and the confidential decision of whether or not your blood should be used was made. After picking up some blood donation bags, you were escorted to the bed where you now lay as a pint of your blood is being collected.

Since the moment you started the donation process, friendly staff, workers, nurses and volunteers greeted you. A good portion of these people are students, more specifically members of the brotherhood of the Iota Kappa chapter of Alpha Phi Omega, the co-ed, nationally recognized service fraternity on campus. After your donation is complete, an Alpha Phi Omega member escorts you to the refreshments table, where more brothers serve you pizza, soda, orange drink, and various kinds of cookies. When you leave the blood drive with a tummy-full of snacks, do you realize that your recent donation could save up to three lives?

Hosted by the Union County chapter of the American Red Cross, with coordination, publicity, promotion and volunteer work done by Alpha Phi Omega, the biannual blood drive provides the Bucknell community with the wonderful opportunity of giving the gift of life through blood donation. One of the ways the blood drive is publicized is by the red and puffy "Blood Drop"—in reality an Alpha Phi Omega brother dressed in a red satin costume. This semester's "Blood Drop" is Eric Loveland '03, who said, "People laugh at you when you are a blood drop, but it's okay because you're spreading a good message: 'Give blood at Larison!'"

Donated blood can save many lives because whole blood may be separated into many components, such as red blood cells, plasma, and platelets, all of which may be given to different individuals with different needs. Some of the recipients of blood donations include accident victims, people undergoing surgery and patients receiving treatment for leukemia, cancer, or other diseases.

According to the American Association of Blood Banks, only about five percent of the 60 percent of eligible donors in the U.S. donate blood. This is a very small value when compared with the statistics that one out of every ten people entering a hospital needs blood, that every three seconds someone is in need of blood and that approximately 32,000 pints of blood are used each day in the United States.

This semester's blood drive, held on Wednesday, Mar. 28 in Larison Dining Hall, was a great success with 357 registered potential donors, a collection of 288 productive units and 104 first time donors. Aline Baly '02 was among the first time donors, and she remarked as she laid on the donation bed "It's really good to do something important, and I'm glad I did it."

The original goal for the drive was 200 productive units, which was raised to 275 units upon the University football team's participation in a competition of recruiting donors. This event is the fruit of much hard work from Nancy Libbey, a blood drive coordinator for the Red Cross, Alpha Phi Omega volunteers, Red Cross volunteers, community volunteers, and student volunteers.

Jess Kerper '03, Alpha Phi Omega publicity chair and blood drive coordinator, reflects on the blood drive service event. "I was excited to see so many brothers come and give up their time. What really gave me a good feeling was the amount of responses from University students who wanted to help out as well ... We were only able to reach our goal because of the help from so many caring individuals." In particular, Kerper especially recognizes "Nancy Libbey [who] runs the Blood Drive smoothly every year, and deserves so much credit for this event's success. The brothers of Alpha Phi Omega really shined at this event, and I believe they showed the University what great people they really are."

Allison Hysong '03, who worked at the check-in table and greeted all the potential donors, very simply summed up the blood drive with the comment, "It was a success!"

Chris Rivers—The Bucknellian
One of the many students giving blood at last week's blood drive.

SCIENCE & TECHNOLOGY

Dr. Green speaks on the Human Genome Project

By ALEX PIEL
Senior Writer

On Monday night, Dartmouth Professor Donald Green spoke at Bucknell University on the "Ethical Challenges of the Human Genome Project."

The lecture was sponsored by the committee on Science, Society and Technology as well as the Cummings Lectureship in History and Philosophy of Science.

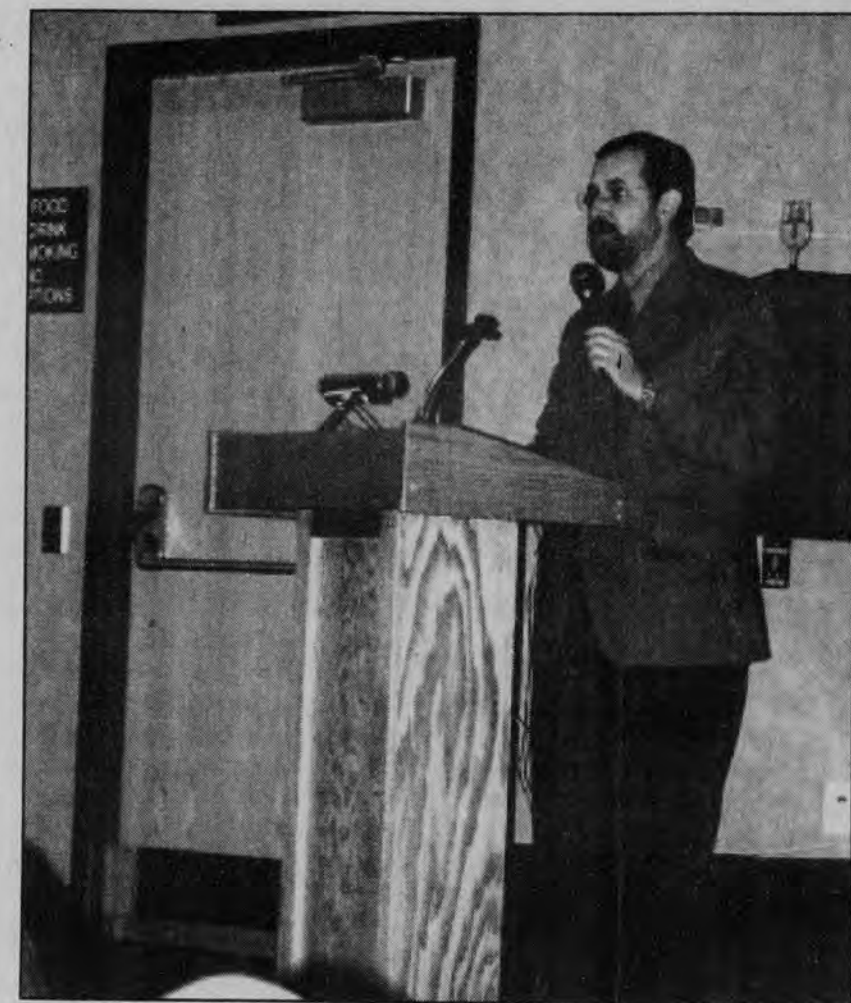

Dr. Green has focused his professional career on the study of ethics and human values and, more recently, the ethical implications of the Human Genome Project.

Green has published extensively in areas of ethical theory as well as in religious and professional ethics and is currently on the National Institute of Health's Embryo Research Panel and Human Genome Research Committee.

He is the recipient of the Dartmouth Distinguished Teaching award and is considered an authority in this field.

Introduced by President Rogers, Green began the talk by emphasizing the impact current genomic research will have on our generation. He summarized the motivations and potential benefits of the Human Genome Project as being under three major categories:

An improvement in diagnosing and preventing diseases, the creation of "pharmacogenomics," (pharmaceuticals developed for "tailored

Chris Rivera—The Bucknellian

Dartmouth Professor Green delivering a speech Monday night on the Human Genome Project and its future impact on our generation.

populations based on genetic information," and Gene Therapy, the manipulation of genetic sequences at a particular stage of fetal development.

Green was quick, however, to follow these points with their relevant challenges.

He named three major problems. The first he titled the "Therapeutic Gap: The gap between diagnosis and cure." According to Green, we must understand the genetic base of any disease before therapies can be developed.

Citing sickle cell anemia as a prime example, Green highlighted the fact that despite our sophistication in identifying crucial genetic components of disorders, we can not always produce the necessary remedies.

He used the term "toxic information" to suggest that it is not always beneficial to know to what genetic disorders we are susceptible to. As potential sufferer Nancy Wexler said (concerning these types of incurable diseases), "We can predict the flood but cannot leave or stop the tide."

The second major problem, Green continued, are the risks to our basic freedoms and privacy. As some agencies are already using genetic information to discriminate, insurance companies and possible employers are sure to follow.

Knowing the most intimate biological components of others, organizations and companies have access to an assortment of confidential information otherwise undisclosed.

The third major problem is the fear that we will all become genetic determinists. The mistake, Green warned, is that we will presume genes to be more determinant than they actually are.

In doing so, our entire understanding of behavioral and even personality origins could be vulnerable to readjustment based on a false sense of predetermined fate.

In other words, we must avoid becoming prisoners to genetics.

Overall, Green covered various issues concerning this very complex subject. He talked often of the difficulty in drawing lines between what is acceptable as a society (trying to prevent diseases before their onset) and what would, he hoped, be considered superficial and exploitative (using genetics to cosmetically create our "ideal" children).

"In short what are we going to permit people to select for? Even if there is a distinction now, with genomics, these lines will soon begin to fade."

—Dr. Donald Green

Even if such distinctions are made and followed, another criterics to eliminate diseases, disorders and impediments while the others struggle with the all-encompassing problems the natural world has created as part of life.

cal question becomes who will have access to the benefits of genetic medicine and on what basis?

Another fear of Green's and a colleague from Princeton, Lee Silver, is that those that inevitably do gain access to genomics will diverge from those who do not: "Humans will diverge into 'Generic' and the 'naturals,'" argues Silver.

That is to say that those qualified to receive such technology will essentially evolve into their own species, their own group, using their technology to create their own technology.

Even if there is a distinction now, with genomics, these lines will soon begin to fade."

Did you know . . .

that you can write for S&T?
Just email JCetta@ or LWohl@.

—Courtesy of your friends at S&T

What causes addictions?

By JESSICA RYAN
Staff Writer

Have you ever wondered why you seem to crave chocolate, why you need a cup of coffee in the morning, or why you started smoking? Well, many researchers are currently attempting to answer these questions. Through many different studies, researchers have discovered that addictions and cravings may be more than physiological. They have actually discovered that addictions and cravings may be linked to things such as genes, past experiences and even culture!

Studies concerning the links between cigarette addiction and genes were recently published in Discover Magazine. Through the study, it was discovered that some individuals lacking the gene SLCA4-9 were more likely to start smoking and were less likely to stop the habit.

The specific gene involved in the study was, according to Discover Magazine, "a so-called dopamine receptor gene, which controls the brain's level of dopamine, one of the key chemicals regulating the brain's pleasure center." Therefore, individuals without the dopamine receptor gene are more likely to smoke, or even become addicted to caffeine to gain pleasure.

Genes, as previously mentioned, also affect addiction to things such as caffeine. Through a study, also published in Discover Magazine, identical and fraternal twins were researched to determine the effect of genes on addiction to caffeine.

It was determined that "identical twin pairs, unlike fraternal twins, showed almost the exact same total caffeine consumption, intoxication, tolerance and withdrawal," according to Discover Magazine. Therefore, it was evident that genes do, in fact, have a significant role in becoming addicted to a substance.

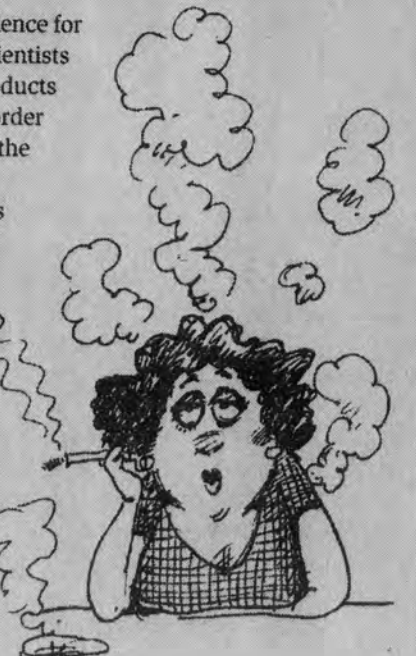

Furthermore, through additional studies, evidence has surfaced suggesting that people may become addicted to substances as a result of past experiences. According to MSNBC, psychiatrists studying the causes of addiction have concluded that many individuals become addicted in order to reduce their levels of stress. Generally, according to MSNBC, regulation of stress is learned between the ages of one and three, but is not always fully developed due to lack of encouragement on the behalf of the parental figure. Therefore, to calm oneself and to reduce the stress of seeking encouragement, individuals often become addicted to substances.

Interestingly enough, an additional study published in Discover Magazine, provided evidence of a link between culture and addiction. Upon testing college students in both the United States and Spain about the yearnings for chocolate, it was discovered that American women desire chocolate more than Spanish women. It is believed by many researchers, that the American culture has led women to believe that they are supposed to crave chocolate in order to fit into the norm.

Although these studies present evidence for the phenomenon of addiction, other scientists believe people are addicted to the products that provide pleasure. Therefore, in order to maintain these euphoric feelings, the substances are continually used.

According to Science.net, "scientists think that addictive substances stimulate what can be thought of as a pleasure pathway in the brain." Furthermore, the emotional effects of withdrawal can be unpleasant. In order to avoid the discomfort, individuals continue to use the substance to which they are addicted.

Addiction is a problem which society is eager to overcome. With continued studies, society may win the battle against addiction, in spite of the factors naturally contributing to the phenomenon.

credit rating.
Car Loans.
Self-Respect.

Things you lose when you default on your student loan.

WHERE SMART STUDENTS GO

You can deal with it.com

PHEAA

Arts & Entertainment

MTV Invasion lands at Bucknell

By KRISTEN JANCUK
Staff Writer

After years of watching rock stars jump around the TV screen smashing guitars and wondering how Carson Daly scored such an amazingly easy job, University students finally have the chance to learn what MTV is all about.

The MTV Campus Invasion is hitting the University today at noon, with an endless supply of music and activities to expose students to life at the country's most popular music television station.

The MTV Village, comprised of six tents, will be set up around the soccer field and students will have the chance to participate in a variety of music-related activities.

The Rock-On tent gives students the opportunity to live the exciting life of a rock star. The less musically-inclined can try their hand at guitar, keyboards or drums at the virtual rock station, while those with some expertise can get their hands on live instruments in the jam area. For those who believe no rock star is complete without a tattoo, the tent will be offering temporary body art.

Students can try their hand at mixing tracks at the MixMaster tent; an MP3 library of underground tracks will be provided for your DJ-ing debut, and MTV's own mixers will be on hand to show you the ropes.

MTV's new hip-hop request show, Direct Effect, will have its own tent, DFX, where students can vote for and watch their favorite hip-hop videos, as well as watch one of New York's best street artists in action. This tent will also display an interactive timeline of the history of hip-hop music.

The Times Square Studio tent will be set up to give students a taste of MTV's real Times Square Studio in New York City. Students can watch their favorite TRL videos, get crystal tattoos and have their photos taken in the TRL photo booth. If you prefer life in front of the camera, you can take a "virtual tour" and get a commemorative videotape of your visit to the famous "studio."

In the MTV2 tent, students can learn about and experience MTV2, which shows only music videos. Students can watch new videos, listen to songs they choose, and even have the chance to program MTV2. Students who submit their video picks will also be entered to win a chance to fly to New York and be a guest veejay on MTV2 for a special Campus Invasion video block.

The Campus Invasion adventure shows a more serious side in the last tent. In the Fight for Your Rights tent, students can join MTV's fight against discrimination by watching some "Take a Stand" programming and signing the Anti-Defamation League Hate Crime Legislation Petition. Students can also learn more about MTV's Rock the Vote campaign and register to vote.

Although the MTV Village will shut down at 5 p.m., the Campus Invasion doesn't end there. At 9 p.m., the concert portion begins at Uptown. Through in past years the Campus Invasion has included such big-name artists as Sugar Ray and Wyclef, this year's focus is on some lesser-known artists with talent that could launch them to superstar status in the very near future.

Three up-and-coming bands, American Hi-Fi, Sum 41 and Saliva, will be performing at Uptown. Doors will open at 8 p.m. and the concert will follow normal Uptown procedures (students need a BU ID to enter and may bring one non-Bucknell guest).

Saliva released its first album, Every Six Seconds, in March and the first single, "Your Disease," can be seen on MTV. They also performed on the soundtrack to Dracula 2000 and were featured on "MTV2 Presents... Artists to Watch," along with American Hi-Fi and Sum 41.

American Hi-Fi, a four-man band from Boston, released their self-titled debut album in February, but a few eagle-eyed students may recognize lead singer and guitarist Stacey Jones from his stunts as a drummer for Veruca Salt and Letters to Cleo. The band's first single, "Flavor of the Weak," can also be seen on MTV. Sum 41 is on the way to releasing its second album, All Killer No Filler in May, though their first single from the album, "Fat Lip," has already been released.

Last week students received e-mails about volunteering to help MTV with the village portion of the Campus Invasion. According to Carolyn Strickland, assistant director of campus activities and programs, the response was overwhelming. She asked for a total of 35 volunteers, 20 for the Village and 15 for the Rock the Vote tent. Within 25 minutes she had over 100 responses. Strickland said she hopes this positive response means participation in the event will be great as well.

Though the University's portion of the Campus Invasion will not be broadcast, advertisements on MTV for the Campus Invasion tour have included the University. Strickland said that while the Campus Invasion activities are not restricted to members of the campus community, the University has not advertised this tour locally.

"We want students to take full advantage of this," she said.

The students involved in preparing for the Campus Invasion have also had a positive response to the event. Strickland said Nick Yaichuk '02, vice president of publicity for ACE, has been very helpful with advertising the event.

"The MTV Campus Invasion tour is a great opportunity for students to experience the thrills of the music industry and see some really impressive technology," Yaichuk said. "The bands performing at Uptown are likely to be at the top of the music industry in the years to come, and now we can see them 'before they were big.'"

Bill Anderson '04, chair of the ACE Uptown committee, shares the enthusiasm.

"The whole MTV Campus Invasion should be amazing," Anderson said. "With the MTV Village during the day and the concert that night at Uptown, Bucknell will get a real taste of not only MTV, but an overall music experience. This is a great opportunity for the entire campus. Students who are too impatient to wait until Friday night to see these bands can download free music and watch video clips at <http://www.mtv.com>.

Jelani presents annual talent showcase

By KELLEN ALEXIS SMITH
Staff Writer

Jelani, the University's only Hip Hop Dance Troup and Step Team, produced its Second Annual Talent Showcase on Saturday, Mar. 31. Cheri Skipworth '00 founded Jelani, which is the Swahili word for "mighty," in 1999.

The dancers showed off their choreographing and dance skills as they danced the afternoon away to the remix of Jagged Edge's "Let's Get Married," which was choreographed by Alison Rachal '04. Mya's "Free," choreographed by Silky, and a compilation song choreographed by Rhonda Heard.

The master of ceremonies, Babatunde Owolabi '03, introduced the dancers after Voices of Praise, the Gospel singing group, performed. The talent showcase also featured the University's break dancing troupe, the Flexible Flyers. Matthew Harlow '02 and company did spin moves that amazed the audience. Fuego Latino, from Susquehanna University, added flavor to the showcase with their original dance.

The Jelani step team brought a piece of black history to the showcase. Stepping is a part of the African tradition that the slaves were able to hold on to in America, and has been passed down from generation to generation.

The dancers from the Choreographer's Showcase performed their finale "9 to Funk," so those that missed their showcase were finally able to see a piece of their fantastic performance.

The finale of the Jelani Showcase was a group of dancers from New York City; organized Chaos performed flips that left the audience in awe. As Silky, Yah-Yah, and Blue glided across the stage and got the audience involved (such as when Yah-Yah flipped over a group of University students and alumni), no one knew that they were watching a group of young men whose resumes were as impressive as their flips. They are dance teachers (Silky is the associate artistic director for a group called BLADE), video extras (Yah-Yah has been in videos ranging from Black Rob's "Whoa" to Jennifer Lopez's "Feeling so Good" to Jay-Z's "Do it Again") and all-around entertainers. They left the showcase audience wanting more, and made people anxious for the showcase next year.

The film is based on a series of pulp fiction novels published in Shanghai in the 1920s and is an exciting show of power, conflict, and tragic resolutions.

Director Ang Lee makes his actors come alive with their fighting skills and agility.

"The masterpiece of the Cannes Film Festival! Ang Lee's Crouching Tiger, Hidden Dragon is a marvel!" said Noah Cowan, a writer for Film-maker Magazine. "A stunning period martial arts film!"

In the film, actor Chow Yun Fat is an honored swordsman who desires peace, but soon realizes that he

Crouching Tiger, Hidden Dragon is a "visually stunning" masterpiece

By STEPHANIE NICKSE
Staff Writer

Who's interested in seeing some amazing acting? If you're up for a great movie, Crouching Tiger, Hidden Dragon is a must see! Viewers and critics alike rave about the movie that won four Oscars.

According to the movie's website, www.crouchingtiger.com, John Anderson, a reporter from Newsday, said the movie was "a mix of The Matrix and martial arts. A tale of love and revenge in ancient China that also contains some of the most audacious action sequences ever committed to film."

In this action/romance movie, viewers are brought back to a time when the Ching Dynasty ruled.

The film is based on a series of pulp fiction novels published in Shanghai in the 1920s and is an exciting show of power, conflict, and tragic resolutions.

Director Ang Lee makes his actors come alive with their fighting skills and agility.

"The masterpiece of the Cannes Film Festival! Ang Lee's Crouching Tiger, Hidden Dragon is a marvel!" said Noah Cowan, a writer for Film-maker Magazine. "A stunning period martial arts film!"

In the film, actor Chow Yun Fat is an honored swordsman who desires peace, but soon realizes that he must be the protector of his instructor's sword. When the sword is stolen, he begins searching for it to prevent it from falling into the hands of the evil Jade Fox.

Michelle Yeoh plays his long time friend and love, and is a skilled swordswoman who helps him in his search. They attempt to seek revenge against Jade Fox, the murderer of Chow's instructor. As if that isn't enough, the couple also works to protect and teach Zhang Zhi Yi, the rebellious daughter of an important political figure. Zhang, who wants only the freedom to make her own decisions, is burdened with privileged life and an arranged marriage. Meanwhile, she is in love with another man, Chang Chen.

Student Abby Weaver '02 found the movie just as enjoyable.

"I liked it because it was different from most of the movies that have been playing recently... my favorite actress was Zhang Zhi Yi because her sword skills were very impressive," she said.

Other commentators, such as Michael Wilmington from the Chicago Tribune, said Crouching Tiger, Hidden Dragon was "one of the most visually stunning of martial arts movies and a tongue-in-cheek historical epic saturated with beauty and wit. A gorgeous action movie. A unique and sumptuous martial arts adventure."

More information on Crouching Tiger, Hidden Dragon can be found at <http://www.crouchingtiger.com>.

Courtesy of www.moviemarket.com
Crouching Tiger, Hidden Dragon, which won four Oscars, is a mixture of romance and martial arts

Emily Hancebeck—The Bucknellian
Jelani dancers strike a pose during their show on Saturday.

Broadway play comes to Powers Theatre

By KACY O'BRIEN
Staff Writer

"The Heidi Chronicles" hits the stage of the Harvey M. Powers Theatre this weekend. "The Heidi Chronicles," written by Wendy Wasserstein, is a Pulitzer Prize- and Tony Award-winning play.

Starting off-Broadway, it moved to a long run on Broadway in 1989. Both funny and touching, the play is a moving examination of the progress of a generation, from the socially and politically activist 60s to the success-oriented 80s, a time during which the status of American women underwent profound and sometimes unsettling change.

The unique aspect of this mainstage production is that it is student-run. Seth Rabinowitz '01 directs the show, with designer Eric Hart '01 producing a set by using the latest theatre technology.

Rabinowitz has learned a lot through this process, and will take his experiences with him as he moves on to graduate school at the Actor's Studio in New York.

"I'm an actor," he said. "I'm used to people giving me direction and telling me what I need to do. Now that people are coming to me for decisions, it's been a totally different experience. It's taught me to give the designers I work with as much freedom as I can, because it makes the environment that much more of a collaborative process."

Hart seconds the collaboration necessary in such a production. "You could study design in the classroom for more than four years and build models, but it's nothing like seeing one of your designs actually develop into a full scale production," Hart said. "You have to be able to talk to everyone and think through solutions to problems that arise, and every solution creates more problems. You can't fake anything. You are forced to concentrate on the details of manufacturing on top of the concept, especially because of the collaborative process, where people are trying to help you realize your design."

As the cast moves into tech week, excitement builds and energy is high. Lisa Britt '04, who plays the title character of Heidi, said that this is probably the most difficult role she's ever played.

"Heidi is a real woman, quite different from the larger-than-life theatrical characters found in other plays," Britt said. "She has real emotions, uncertainties, and the hardest thing is how to find those, to find her. Heidi has a passive role in the play, one that allows people to affect her and change her over the years. It's difficult to find what she wants when she does this. What's great about the whole process is that we are a close cast and that shows on the stage."

"The Heidi Chronicles" is not about that little girl with the pigtailed who lives in the Swiss Alps—this Heidi takes the audience through growth, change, politics, art and many other aspects of life. As she describes herself as "neither the painter nor the casual observer, but a highly informed spectator," Heidi shows how the American woman has evolved over the course of three decades.

Friday, Sunday, and Monday performances of "The Heidi Chronicles" begin at 8 p.m., with the Saturday matinee beginning at 2 p.m. Tickets are on sale in the Langone Center Box Office for $5. For more information, please contact the Department of Theatre and Dance by calling x71235 or e-mail cefy@bucknell.edu.

Rhodes, St. John present works as part of National Poetry Month

Authors read from their latest collections

By MELISSA MCMICKEN
Staff Writer

Many spectators filled the seats of Bucknell Hall on Sunday night to listen to the poetry of distinguished poets Martha Rhodes and David St. John. Rhodes has published two books of poetry and St. John has published seven poetry books as well as a collection of essays. The poetry reading was part of the celebration to honor National Poetry Month.

Cynthia Hogue, Director of the Stadler Center for Poetry, introduced both poets, describing Rhodes as "one that can move spare lyrics lines from the simple daily rituals of pet care or gardening to the gothic, seamed with implicit threat, or the mystic, at the edge of the known."

Hogue characterized St. John as "a high lyric poet with the willingness to go to the edge of being."

Martha Rhodes began the reading, her voice animated and enthusiastic. The range of her topics varied, as well as the lengths and styles of her poems. Reading from her most recent book, Perfect Disappearance, and selections from new work, which she has not yet completed.

Rhodes blended humor, intensity, anger, sexuality and compassion. Her words were a delight to hear, as she mysteriously chose not to read some of her titles for reasons she did not fully explain. Rhodes described her poetry as "short little scary poems."

Rhodes is one of the founding editors and the director of Four Ways Press and also teaches at Emerson College. Perfect Disappearance, won the Green Rose Prize of 2000 from New Issues Press. She has been writing poetry since she was in junior high school.

David St. John concluded the poetry reading with his witty and sensuous style. He read from several different works that he has written, explaining the poems before he read them.

"This one is short, so pay attention!" he said before reading his poem, "Shadow." His poetry explores a variety of styles. Poetry is a translation of a Russian suicide letter to love sonnets. St. John proved his talent and capability in different facets of poetry.

St. John explained the subjects of his poetry as people who are trying to comprehend the loss in their lives.

"[I am trying to explore] the ways that they understand themselves," he said. "[These ways] occur through sexuality and encounters with other people."

Although he has published a collection of essays titled "Where The Angels Come Toward Us," his poetry is the work that he holds closest to his heart.

BUSINESS & POLITICS

Senate passes campaign finance overhaul

McCain-Feingold clears first hurdle but still faces stiff resistance in the House

By AMANDA KAUFMAN
Staff Writer

Last year, soft-money campaign contributions reached $487 million. Democrats raised $243 million and Republicans raised $244 million. Despite this relatively even split, debates over campaign finance reform now rage in Congress.

On Monday, the McCain-Feingold campaign finance reform bill passed the Senate 59-41. Dubbed the most wide-ranging overhaul of the nation's campaign finance law since 1974, the Senate's version of the bill makes a few important alterations to current laws. First, the bill bans "soft money," or unlimited contributions that unions, corporations and individuals may donate to political parties for use other than expressly advocating a candidate's election or defeat. Only state parties would be allowed to accept soft-money donations; they would still be banned from spending the money on federal elections.

However, the bill increases hard-money allowances. The limit for individual contributions to candidates per election, set at $1,000 in 1974, would be doubled. The limit for contributions to national parties would go from $20,000 to $25,000 per calendar year. The limit for an individual gift to a single political action committee (PAC) would remain at $5,000 per year. In all, a person could contribute $75,000 to candidates, PACs, and national party organizations over a two-year election cycle.

The Senate bill also covers issue ads. "Issue ads" refrain from advocating a candidate's election or defeat, yet refer directly to, attack, or defend a candidate. Under the new legislation, unions, corporations and some independent groups would be banned from broadcasting certain types of political advertising within 60 days of an election or 30 days of a primary.

The bill also prohibits foreigners from making contributions to federal, state, or local elections, and bans solicitation of campaign contributions on federal property, including the White House and Congress. The bill also advises the Supreme Court to judge each provision individually, and not view the legislation on an all-or-nothing basis. Also important, the bill raises the allowable campaign donations to candidates running against rich, self-financing individuals who do not need to rely on contributions for funds. However, this regulation only applies to Senate candidates, and some adjustments will be needed in the House bill.

Round one to McCain (right), but Sen. McConnell has vowed to fight the bill in court.

Finally, the bill addresses TV and radio broadcasting issues. The Senate's version of the bill requires television and radio stations to make public information relating to all broadcast political advertising, including ads paid for by independent organizations.

It also requires more frequent disclosure for various party fund-raising committees, and orders the Federal Election Commission to put information on the Internet within 24 hours of receipt. The bill also requires broadcasters to comply with the existing law that requires them to charge candidates the lowest advertising rate available during the year.

Senators John McCain, R-Ariz., and Russel Feingold, D-Wisc., sponsored the bill. Twelve Republicans joined 47 Democrats supporting the bill; three Democrats and 38 Republicans voted against it.

Opponents argue that many of the bill's provisions violate First Amendment free speech rights. In fact, limits on spending were struck down by the United States Supreme Court as unconstitutional in 1976. Other opponents argue that reforms are unnecessary because McCain has never been able to produce any specific evidence to support his claims that corruption is connected to campaign contributions.

In addition, a formidable coalition of groups—ranging from the AFL-CIO and the American Civil Liberties Union to the Christian Coalition and the National Rifle Association—consider the bill a violation of their right to influence the political process. According to the AP, all these groups are determined to defeat the bill either in Congress or in the courts.

Next, the House will vote on its version of the bill, sponsored by Reps. Martin Meehan, D-Mass., and Christopher Shays, R-Conn. If the House passes legislation different from the Senate version, it could require a House-Senate conference—one more potential graveyard—and more House and Senate votes if a compromise is reached. Finally, the bill faces an uncertain fate at the White House, where President Bush will either sign or veto it.

Bush has said that while he is against banning all soft money, he is willing to sign a bill that improves the system.

History proves Republicans' case

Bush, House, and Greenspan can still salvage the economy; a B & P commentary by Michael Gorman

Under the cloud-cover of campaign finance reform, international incidents, and various other pressing issues, the House of Representatives has been gradually passing elements of Bush's tax relief program. The first step—a massive income tax cut through rate restructuring and reductions. Second, the elimination of the "marriage penalty," and the third leg, currently working its way through the processes of the House, a revenue-neutral restructuring of the estate tax.

The largest outcry from Democrats, still steaming over the fact that they lost legitimately, is that the Bush tax cut would drain the government of funds and return us to Reagan-era deficits with no real boost to the economy. There are two things that should be pointed out regarding such thinking.

First, Reagan did not enjoy the benefit of inheriting a government awash with funds. With the economy in a state of stagnancy, Reagan was forced to act, but given no room to do so.

Second, the beginning of this year, over $2 trillion of personal wealth has been lost in the stock market and consumer confidence is evaporating at an alarming rate.

There is also a movement to safeguard the federal budget by placing "safeties" in the tax plan that would immediately freeze the cut if the government began to run a deficit. Second, the belief that the tax cuts of Reagan's era had no beneficial effects on the economy is erroneous. His administration was handed an economy that was stuck in the quicksand of stagflation and managed to turn it into years of economic expansion (in so doing, he also just happened to bankrupt the Soviet Union and end the Cold War).

Our current economy is faltering and it needs a massive injection of confidence. The beginning of this year, over $2 trillion of personal wealth has been lost in the stock market and consumer confidence is evaporating at an alarming rate.

The program will continue and will hopefully develop, as expansions like these help to better serve the community," he said.

Richardson echoed Cole's sentiments: "I would like to continue the program as it is for the next year, at least," she said. "I think that as long as we continue to do an efficient job cleaning the streets and sidewalks, the Borough residents will be more than thankful."

Cole and Richardson both commended the student dedication that has made the initiative a staple in each chapter's community service plans.

"I think that the students who participate do it because they want to and want to improve our relations with the town. I think this goes to show what type of asset the Greek community is to this school," Cole said. "We are a group of people with specific deliverables and quantifiable returns to the community, whereas non-Greek students do not necessarily have these requirements."

"The program is a good first step to making the entire campus aware of our now, there is a danger that the government will use the funds to start even more programs that regulate the lives of the citizens in our 'free' society."

Students in both Tuesday night's forum and the first forum held before spring break questioned the level of professionalism exercised by Public Safety officers when enforcing rules. Students cited specific incidents in which they felt officers acted rudely or unfairly.

DeCerio responded by saying that students, too, act inappropriately at times. Some of the complaints that DeCerio receives from students about officers are valid, while others are either exaggerated or untrue.

"The intelligent way to handle this is to listen to both sides of an issue, examine the facts and then make a decision," DeCerio said.

Sophomore Congress Member Andy Findlay agrees with DeCerio, but recognizes that more information is needed in order to move forward with improving the relationship with Public Safety.

"Tuesday night's forum did not provide us, meaning BSG, Dean Ferraro, and Mr. DeCerio, with enough information to actually make concrete changes," Findlay said. "However, I do see room for improvement. From the students' perspective, a majority of the complaints are focused on the attitude of Public Safety officers. And from the Public Safety side, a majority of the complaints received so far also stem from students' behavior toward the officers."

Most of the complaints, according to DeCerio, stem from extreme situations. Considering all that Public Safety handles, DeCerio is pleased with the overall behavior of his officers.

"I think that the Public Safety staff performs its functions satisfactorily in making this a safe campus," DeCerio said. "I believe that with the really important issues and in serious situations, the staff's responses are timely and efficient."

Regarding the extreme circumstances discussed at each of the two forums, DeCerio looks at each complaint carefully and assesses what, if anything, can be done to remedy the situation.

"Students had valid comments and intelligent and constructive ideas. We are constantly

See FORUM, page A2

U of M affirmative action policy proven unconstitutional

By DOMINIC PUCCIO
Staff Writer

In an important and controversial decision early last week, a federal judge ruled against the University of Michigan Law School's affirmative action policy in a lawsuit filed in June 1997.

According to Reuters reporter Michael Ellis, U.S. District Court Judge Bernard Friedman decided that it is unconstitutional for a school to consider race as a factor in admissions. In his 91-page opinion, Friedman explained that the school's affirmative action policy operates similar to a quota system, in which a certain percentage of each class must be made up of members from minority groups. This enables minorities to compete for all available seats at a school while non-minorities may only compete for a percentage of seats that fall outside of the quota.

Friedman ruled in favor of Barbara Grutter, a white woman who filed the lawsuit in 1997 after being rejected by the law school. In his ruling, he stated that the University, but not the individual officials named in the suit, could be held liable for damages. Ms. Grutter's lawsuit was backed by a conservative legal group called Center for Individual Rights, based in Washington D.C. The group has sought several affirmative action policies in the past at various other universities.

During the trial, law school officials were questioned about the entering class to which Ms. Grutter applied. They admitted the school had sought 10 to 17 percent of the class to be made up of members from minority groups.

Officials argued that minority students are necessary to create a diverse campus climate, while University of Michigan lawyers argued that many other factors besides race were considered in the admissions process.

According to the report, "By September 2002, the University aspires to have at least 15 percent of its student body composed of members of racial minority groups."

The University of Michigan law school has promised to appeal Judge Friedman's ruling.

country are feeling the pinch as endowment returns slow and money isn't flooding in as it once did. Even students here are seeing the investing environment become increasingly difficult.

Taylor Lukof '03, a member of the Patriot Investment Partnership, a student run investment club echoes similar concerns. "While people keep saying we are at a bottom in both the NASDAQ and NYSE, a possible conflict with China and continuing concerns that Greenspan is not doing enough as far as lowering interest rates contribute to fear in the marketplace. When fund managers see a bottom, money could rush into the market, but this is not predicted to happen until the latter half of this year, at the earliest."

"Personally, picking solid companies on the way down has been my strategy but even this hasn't been working. However, investors with the foresight and patience to invest wisely (not just in any 'beat-en-up' company) in this volatile market that emerges every day, will reap huge gains in the upcoming years."

The moral of this story? Wait and see. Bottoms are not specific points in time but rather a period of weeks if not months during which investors and the markets regain their confidence and the economy is able to stop the bleeding so it can move forward once again.

The time will come very soon when we will look back at this and shake our heads. Until then, however, the Bears rule and the Bulls can only sharpen their horns on the sidelines.

BEARS From page B1

And I didn't even mention the S&P500 index that is in the midst of its worst ever decline.

Despite all these numbers that seem to suggest that it isn't as bad as we may think it is, we have been looking at the markets through rose-colored glasses during the run. It is time to get out the sunglasses, or the flaming wreckage might blind you.

The most stunning fact coming out of the markets in the last few days was the assertion made by many that over $1.8 trillion was lost in equities over the first three months of this year. Money has been lost faster than investors could have even imagined but they are still there, sitting on the sidelines waiting for their team to take back the lead.

But as the old saying goes, "It's the economy, stupid!" We are in a time of economic slowdown and people who watch the markets are not to optimistic about the earnings warnings, economic indicators and world news that emerges every day.

Dreyfus portfolio manager Timothy Chriskey said in Tuesday's Wall Street Journal "there doesn't seem to be any faith or conviction that the market can move higher on a sustained basis. We really trace it all to the economy. Once the economy turns, the market will turn."

The economy, while showing sporadic trends towards higher ground, remains shrouded in mystery to most. There is even talk that once revered Alan Greenspan may be losing touch with the economy he helped to run for as long as it did.

And the slowdown just closer to home too. Universities around the country are feeling the pinch as endowment returns slow and money isn't flooding in as it once did. Even students here are seeing the investing environment become increasingly difficult.

Taylor Lukof '03, a member of the Patriot Investment Partnership, a student run investment club echoes similar concerns. "While people keep saying we are at a bottom in both the NASDAQ and NYSE, a possible conflict with China and continuing concerns that Greenspan is not doing enough as far as lowering interest rates contribute to fear in the marketplace. When fund managers see a bottom, money could rush into the market, but this is not predicted to happen until the latter half of this year, at the earliest."

"Personally, picking solid companies on the way down has been my strategy but even this hasn't been working. However, investors with the foresight and patience to invest wisely (not just in any 'beat-en-up' company) in this volatile market that emerges every day, will reap huge gains in the upcoming years."

The moral of this story? Wait and see. Bottoms are not specific points in time but rather a period of weeks if not months during which investors and the markets regain their confidence and the economy is able to stop the bleeding so it can move forward once again.

The time will come very soon when we will look back at this and shake our heads. Until then, however, the Bears rule and the Bulls can only sharpen their horns on the sidelines.

The Bucknellian

The weekly campus newspaper of Bucknell University

http://www.orgs.bucknell.edu/bucknellian

Downtown cleaning efforts applauded

By BRIAN WATSON
Senior Editor

In an attempt to strengthen relations between University students and Lewisburg residents, Matt Cole '01 and Borough Council President Yvonne Morgan came together last fall to develop a new way for students to ease the problems that arise between the two groups.

In a year in which town-gown relations have made substantial strides, Cole's initiative helped to further the process by bringing the Greek system into the fray.

For the past two semesters, members of the University's fraternities and sororities have participated in a new community service initiative to clean up the South Sixth and Seventh Street areas on Thursdays, Saturdays and Sundays, the mornings frequently following downtown parties.

At Tuesday's Borough Council meeting, Morgan awarded Cole with a certificate of recognition for his efforts in spearheading the successful venture. Panhellenic Council (Panhel) President Katie Richardson '02 accepted a certificate on behalf of the Interfraternity Council (IFC) and Panhel for their assistance in administering the initiative.

"I think Matt has been a wonderful representation of a Bucknell student in this community," Morgan said, "and without the support of [IFC and Panhel], this effort would never have happened," Morgan said.

Morgan hopes that this effort may lead other students to create other proactive initiatives between the University and the community. "I would like to encourage any professor or advisor to send these creative students to us, because we could always use such great ideas," she said. "We're always open to hearing these proposals and, if there's a way we can entertain these proposals, we will."

Instead of taking credit for the program's success, Cole has been quick to praise his fraternity, Sigma Alpha Epsilon (SAE), as well as the IFC and Panhel for their leadership.

"It is very refreshing to get recognition for this program, however, it should really be given to SAE and IFC/Panhel for they are the two groups who administer and perform the program," Cole said. "SAE has administered the program from the beginning and will continue to do so. This is one of SAE's better community service efforts and we will continue with it in the future."

After the presentation, a Council member suggested adding Brown Street to the cleanup path. Cole agreed with the idea and thought it would be a fitting way to extend the program's efforts.

"The program will continue and will hopefully develop, as expansions like these help to better serve the community," he said.

Richardson echoed Cole's sentiments: "I would like to continue the program as it is for the next year, at least," she said. "I think that as long as we continue to do an efficient job cleaning the streets and sidewalks, the Borough residents will be more than thankful."

Cole and Richardson both commended the student dedication that has made the initiative a staple in each chapter's community service plans.

"I think that the students who participate do it because they want to and want to improve our relations with the town. I think this goes to show what type of asset the Greek community is to this school," Cole said. "We are a group of people with specific deliverables and quantifiable returns to the community, whereas non-Greek students do not necessarily have these requirements."

"The program is a good first step to making the entire campus aware of our now, there is a danger that the government will use the funds to start even more programs that regulate the lives of the citizens in our 'free' society."

Students in both Tuesday night's forum and

'Ray Bucknell: Spotlight on pride

Staff Profile: Victor Arcelus

By NATALIE CASP
News Editor

When Victor Arcelus arrived on campus in August of 1992, he was fairly certain he would come to love his alma mater. More than eight years later, he's still living on campus and two University degrees hang on the wall of his office in Swartz Hall.

As uphill Residential Life Coordinator (RLC), Arcelus '96 M'98 zips around campus on his scooter, going from meeting to meeting, enthusiastically working with his team in the Office of Housing and Residential Life (OHR). In his position as RLC, Arcelus supervises 38 Resident Assistants (RA), oversees the Choosing Healthy Options in Community Environments (CHOICE) program, helped to plan First Night, organized the Class Chronicle Society, implemented a campus-wide recycling program in the residential halls, helped create the RA BRICKS program and works on several committees as a member of OHR.

The most rewarding part of his job—and his presence on campus—emanates from interacting with the students and the campus community.

"I had never met anyone with such Bucknell pride until I met Victor Arcelus," Freshman Class President Jessica Briski said. "To me, he is Bucknell because he is involved in that people feel they have a place to go and a person to contact, any time of day or night."

Students who work with Arcelus credit his pride in the University as the backbone of his enthusiasm in all that he does on campus.

"I had never met anyone with such Bucknell pride until I met Victor Arcelus," Freshman Class President Jessica Briski said. "To me, he is Bucknell because he is involved in

that people feel they have a place to go and a person to contact, any time of day or night."

Students who work with Arcelus credit his pride in the University as the backbone of his enthusiasm in all that he does on campus.

"I had never met anyone with such Bucknell pride until I met Victor Arcelus," Freshman Class President Jessica Briski said. "To me, he is Bucknell because he is involved in

that people feel they have a place to go and a person to contact, any time of day or night."

Students who work with Arcelus credit his pride in the University as the backbone of his enthusiasm in all that he does on campus.

"I had never met anyone with such Bucknell pride until I met Victor Arcelus," Freshman Class President Jessica Briski said. "To me, he is Bucknell because he is involved in

Chris Rivera—The Bucknellian
U'98 focuses on spreading University pride and tradition.

that people feel they have a place to go and a person to contact, any time of day or night."

Students who work with Arcelus credit his pride in the University as the backbone of his enthusiasm in all that he does on campus.

"I had never met anyone with such Bucknell pride until I met Victor Arcelus," Freshman Class President Jessica Briski said. "To me, he is Bucknell because he is involved in

that people feel they have a place to go and a person to contact, any time of day or night."

Students who work with Arcelus credit his pride in the University as the backbone of his enthusiasm in all that he does on campus.

"I had never met anyone with such Bucknell pride until I met Victor Arcelus," Freshman Class President Jessica Briski said. "To me, he is Bucknell because he is involved in

that people feel they have a place to go and a person to contact, any time of day or night."

Students who work with Arcelus credit his pride in the University as the backbone of his enthusiasm in all that he does on campus.

"I had never met anyone with such Bucknell pride until I met Victor Arcelus," Freshman Class President Jessica Briski said. "To me, he is Bucknell because he is involved in

Senior Profile: Keiko Kurokawa

Peter Van Emburgh—The Bucknellian
International student Keiko Kurokawa '01 is involved in many aspects of University life.

that people feel they have a place to go and a person to contact, any time of day or night."

Students who work with Arcelus credit his pride in the University as the backbone of his enthusiasm in all that he does on campus.

"I had never met anyone with such Bucknell pride until I met Victor Arcelus," Freshman Class President Jessica Briski said. "To me, he is Bucknell because he is involved in

that people feel they have a place to go and a person to contact, any time of day or night."

Students who work with Arcelus credit his pride in the University as the backbone of his enthusiasm in all that he does on campus.

"I had never met anyone with such Bucknell pride until I met Victor Arcelus," Freshman Class President Jessica Briski said. "To me, he is Bucknell because he is involved in

that people feel they have a place to go and a person to contact, any time of day or night."

Students who work with Arcelus credit his pride in the University as the backbone of his enthusiasm in all that he does on campus.

"I had never met anyone with such Bucknell pride until I met Victor Arcelus," Freshman Class President Jessica Briski said. "To me, he is Bucknell because he is involved in

that people feel they have a place to go and a person to contact, any time of day or night."

Students who work with Arcelus credit his pride in the University as the backbone of his enthusiasm in all that he does on campus.

"I had never met anyone with such Bucknell pride until I met Victor Arcelus," Freshman Class President Jessica Briski said. "To me, he is Bucknell because he is involved in been involved with many organizations, clubs, offices, departments and committees in just four years.

"By over-committing, I feel that I have touched everything that I could have possibly touched on this campus," Kurokawa said. "I think I'm going to leave Bucknell feeling I'm happy with what I have involved myself with."

While attending the Roman-Catholic, all-girls high school in Japan, Kurokawa applied and got accepted into Penn State's summer school program for international students. Besides completing a seven-week college-credit course, she also had the opportunity of traveling with other students to various colleges and universities in Pennsylvania, New York and Maryland.

"I saw big schools, little schools, liberal arts and specialized institutions," Kurokawa said. "Bucknell was one of the schools I visited and I liked it."

Kurokawa had firm criteria for her ideal school in order "to be a name and not a number" with a strong international relations department (in which she planned to major), an opportunity to closely interact with professors and an institution that wasn't too diverse.

Ironically, Kurokawa is half-Japanese and half-Italian.

"If I was spending four years at an American university, I didn't want to Approaching the culmination of her tenure at Bucknell, Kurokawa has

See ARCELUS, page A3

that people feel they have a place to go and a person to contact, any time of day or night."

Students who work with Arcelus credit his pride in the University as the backbone of his enthusiasm in all that he does on campus.

"I had never met anyone with such Bucknell pride until I met Victor Arcelus," Freshman Class President Jessica Briski said. "To me, he is Bucknell because he is involved in

that people feel they have a place to go and a person to contact, any time of day or night."

Students who work with Arcelus credit his pride in the University as the backbone of his enthusiasm in all that he does on campus.

"I had never met anyone with such Bucknell pride until I met Victor Arcelus," Freshman Class President Jessica Briski said. "To me, he is Bucknell because he is involved in

that people feel they have a place to go and a person to contact, any time of day or night."

Students who work with Arcelus credit his pride in the University as the backbone of his enthusiasm in all that he does on campus.

"I had never met anyone with such Bucknell pride until I met Victor Arcelus," Freshman Class President Jessica Briski said. "To me, he is Bucknell because he is involved in

that people feel they have a place to go and a person to contact, any time of day or night."

Students who work with Arcelus credit his pride in the University as the backbone of his enthusiasm in all that he does on campus.

"I had never met anyone with such Bucknell pride until I met Victor Arcelus," Freshman Class President Jessica Briski said. "To me, he is Bucknell because he is involved in

that people feel they have a place to go and a person to contact, any time of day or night."

Students who work with Arcelus credit his pride in the University as the backbone of his enthusiasm in all that he does on campus.

"I had never met anyone with such Bucknell pride until I met Victor Arcelus," Freshman Class President Jessica Briski said. "To me, he is Bucknell because he is involved in

that people feel they have a place to go and a person to contact, any time of day or night."

Students who work with Arcelus credit his pride in the University as the backbone of his enthusiasm in all that he does on campus.

"I had never met anyone with such Bucknell pride until I met Victor Arcelus," Freshman Class President Jessica Briski said. "To me, he is Bucknell because he is involved in

that people feel they have a place to go and a person to contact, any time of day or night."

Students who work with Arcelus credit his pride in the University as the backbone of his enthusiasm in all that he does on campus.

"I had never met anyone with such Bucknell pride until I met Victor Arcelus," Freshman Class President Jessica Briski said. "To me, he is Bucknell because he is involved in

that people feel they have a place to go and a person to contact, any time of day or night."

Students who work with Arcelus credit his pride in the University as the backbone of his enthusiasm in all that he does on campus.

"I had never met anyone with such Bucknell pride until I met Victor Arcelus," Freshman Class President Jessica Briski said. "To me, he is Bucknell because he is involved in

that people feel they have a place to go and a person to contact, any time of day or night."

Students who work with Arcelus credit his pride

Public Safety Log

April 4, 2001

INFORMATION—An employee reported to Public Safety that he observed a student fire a paint ball gun into an open window at Gateway Rorer. University charges were filed against the student involved.

MEDICAL ASSIST—Public Safety responded to the Fieldhouse for the report of a student with a possible broken ankle. Student Health Services transported the student to Evangelical Community Hospital for treatment.

April 5, 2001

UNDERAGE CONSUMPTION/FAKE ID—Lewisburg Police Department cited a University student for underage consumption, and possession of a fake ID at the corner of South Seventh and Saint Catherine Streets. Public Safety issued citations.

UNDERAGE CONSUMPTION/PUBLIC DRUNKENNESS—Lewisburg Police Department cited a University student for underage consumption and public drunkenness at the corner of South Seventh and Saint Catherine Streets. Public Safety issued citations.

UNDERAGE CONSUMPTION/ACT 64—Lewisburg Police Department cited a University student for underage consumption at the corner of South Seventh and Saint Catherine Streets. While Lewisburg Police Department was waiting outside the student's room, to check her ID card, the officer noticed in plain view, a glass marijuana pipe lying on her desk. Lewisburg Police Department will be citing her for underage consumption and possession of drug paraphernalia. Public Safety issued citations.

INFORMATION—Public Safety responded to Hunt Hall for the report of a dispute between two students over personal property. The dress was returned to the owner.

INFORMATION/POSSIBLE HARASSMENT PHONE CALL—A student reported to Public Safety that she had received a call from an unknown male caller asking her to participate in a survey for $50. The incident is under investigation.

April 6, 2001

RECOVERED PROPERTY/BICYCLE—Public Safety found a bicycle lying along the side of Loomis Street. The bicycle was returned to Public Safety for storage.

INFORMATION—Public Safety responded to Hunt Hall for the report of persons drinking alcohol on the fourth floor. No alcohol was found on the floor.

HARASSMENT BY COMMUNICATION—A student reported to a Public Safety that he had received a harassing e-mail in his room in Larson Hall. Lewisburg Police Department was notified. The incident is under investigation.

April 8, 2001

UNDERAGE POSSESSION—While Public Safety was monitoring a social event at Phi Kappa Psi Fraternity, he observed a University student carrying two beers without a wristband. The student was found to be under the age of 21. University citations were issued.

INFORMATION—Public Safety responded to Smith Hall for a report of a vending machine tipped over. Officers found no damage and returned the machine to its proper position.

THEFT/STOLEN PROPERTY—While on routine patrol, Public Safety observed a stop sign missing from the corner of Fraternity Road and Stadium Drive. Physical Plant was contacted to replace the sign.

MEDICAL ASSIST—Public Safety responded to Swartz Hall for the report of a student having chest pains and difficulty breathing. Public Safety transported the student to Evangelical Community Hospital for treatment.

April 9, 2001

INFORMATION/MISSING PROPERTY—A student reported to Public Safety that unknown person(s) had removed his coat from a room he had visited in Vedder Hall. The incident is under investigation.

MISSING PROPERTY/BICYCLE—A student reported to a Public Safety that unknown person(s) removed his unlocked bicycle from the bike rack behind Taylor House. The incident is under investigation.

PROJECTILE DEVICE/CONFISCATED PROPERTY—Public Safety responded to Smith Hall for the report of a projectile device being discharged out the window. A student admitted to shooting the paintball gun out the window. The paintball gun was confiscated and placed in Public Safety. University citations were issued.

MISSING PROPERTY—Public Safety responded to Vedder Hall for the report of a student missing money from his wallet, while it was in his unlocked room. The incident is under investigation.

April 10, 2001

INFORMATION/MISSING UNIVERSITY PROPERTY—An employee reported to Public Safety that unknown person(s) had removed the ISR Vehicle Parking Only sign from Fraternity Road in front of Phi Psi Fraternity. The incident is under investigation.

INFORMATION/SMOKE/HEAT INVESTIGATION—Public Safety responded to Dana Engineering for the report from an employee that there could be a possible fire in the elevator shaft. Physical Plant had already shut down the machinery for repairs prior to the officers' arrival.

INFORMATION/MEDICAL AIDED—Public Safety responded to the Langone Center for the report on an ill student. Public Safety transported the student to Student Health Services.

March and Vigil unite campus

By RACHEL LASKOW
News Layout EditorChris Rivera—The Bucknellian
University community members congregated for the Take Back the Night March and Open Forum, which was held on April 10 to show support for survivors of sexual assault and their advocates.

The University community gathered to support nation-wide human rights issues. As a response to the recent beating of Middleburg, Pa., resident Michael Auker, a Hate Crimes Vigil and Speak Out was held on April 5. Less than a week later, the campus community joined together for the Take Back the Night March and Open Forum, which supported survivors of sexual assault and their advocates.

The Lesbian, Gay, Bisexual and Transgendered Community Forum sponsored the Vigil and Speak Out, which drew a crowd of over a hundred people. The event consisted of speakers, including Reverend Ian Oliver and Professor of English Sandra Morris, a time for audience members to voice their feelings, a candle-light vigil and songs.

"As a gay man and a member of the Bucknell community, I felt it was important that people were made aware that hate crimes are happening and are happening here," Manager of Staff Development in Personnel Services Richard Wise, who also facilitated the event, said.

Two young men tried to kill Auker because they perceived him to be gay. The beating took place on March 6. Auker is still in a coma and on life support.

"A horrendous hate crime is committed 12 miles from campus. The severe beating and bludgeoning of Michael Auker was such a horrific crime, and the community and the newspapers aren't screaming about how awful it is. This incident is being treated as just another news story, someone got hurt in an altercation," Wise added.

Operations Manager of the Bucknell Art Gallery Cindy Peltier, who was also a facilitator of the event, agreed that it is important for people to come together to show support.

"When these things happen we often feel a sense of isolated powerlessness. By getting together to express our horror, sadness and, yes even rage, we are also seeing that we are not alone," Peltier said.

According to Peltier, Auker's brother-in-law was at the event.

"Not surprisingly, he was very moved to know that perfect strangers were taking time out of their busy lives to care," Peltier said.

Earlier this week, the campus community united once again. This time it was for the Take Back the Night March and Open Forum, which was sponsored by the Women's Resource Center (WRC) and Sirens.

According to Courtney Spohn '03, who is a peer educator at the WRC and a founding member of Sirens, the purpose of the event was for survivors of sexual assault and their supporters to talk about their stories, to increase awareness of sexual assault in our community and to form a supportive alliance among those who have been affected by this issue.

"I feel this event is necessary because Bucknell is such a small community and all too often women, or survivors of sexual assault, feel scared to speak about their experiences. Survivors often feel that they are alone, that no one else has gone through this, or survivors try to minimize their experience to themselves to allow 'out' survivors to continue with the healing process," Spohn said.

"It's important that women at Bucknell be able to do this because rape and sexual assault do, unfortunately, occur here. Bucknell women need to know that they have somewhere to go, someone to talk to, if something happens to them," Megan Rancier '01 said.

Census shows demographic changes

By AMY PELOQUIN
Staff Writer

Paralleling the changes of the new millennium, the 2000 census initiated new methods of tallying the country's population. Citizens are now able to identify themselves as belonging to more than one race. Consequently, in addition to typical population increases, minority populations seem to be rising.

Pennsylvania was tallied as the sixth largest state in the United States by dint of population, with 12,281,054 people living in it. This is an increase of 3.4 percent since 1990. Although there was an increase, Pennsylvania lost two congressional representatives during reapportionment. 19 congress members, compared with 21 in 1990, will now represent Pennsylvania.

The counties with the largest population percentage increases were Pike (65.6 percent) and Monroe counties (44.9 percent), while the largest nominal population increase was in Montgomery county, with 71,986 people. The largest percentage decreases were seen in Cambria (-6.4 percent) and Philadelphia (-4.3 percent) counties. Philadelphia County also saw the largest population decline, losing 68,027 people.

For the first time in the history of the census, respondents were given the opportunity to specify more clearly their background by being able to mark the "one or more" race category. Surprisingly, only 1.2 percent of the population (142,224 people) chose to mark themselves as being of two or more races.

The minority population in the state increased 14 percent from 1990. The largest increase of a minority group was in the Hispanic population, which increased 69.7 percent, followed by a smaller increase of 12.4 percent in the African-American population.

These numbers may be slightly misleading though, since individuals could report only one race in 1990 and more than one race in 2000.

Beyond the local level, the census continues to evolve in the 21st century on a national level.

Article 1, Section 2 of the Constitution places the census at the center of our democratic system of government. It demands a count of the nation's population every 10 years in order to provide information the country needs. It is intended to foster an accurate representation of the public's views by apportioning congressional seats by population. It is also the backbone of policy-making forms available in public places. In addition, a scientific "sampling" procedure was instituted in certain regions to check up on the results garnered by the actual census on the projected results. These sampling methods would by no means serve to substitute for an effort to count everyone; instead, it would serve as a complement to an aggressive tabulation effort.

Every individual in the community is affected by census results because they provide the funding basis for multiple governmental programs, including education, health care, the environment, transportation, child, senior, women welfare programs and aid for the disabled. It is imperative that concrete data is available in order for our country to function.

made, I believe the money can be found to implement it. Certainly, the University's consistent budget surpluses over the last decade show the money could be available to start the process," Susman added.

It remains to be seen whether Swank, Sweeney and the UCBP are as optimistic as BCEJ.

"This is not a one-time cost," Swank said. "The increase needs to be kept up every year; this needs an ongoing solution which adds to the complexity of the issue. The cost for this initiative may be three to four times more expensive than the numbers the BCEJ has put forth."

The BCEJ, however, is committed to keeping fighting. "I am hopeful that the present will eventually endorse a living wage at Bucknell. If, for some reason, the president decides not to support it, we will keep on fighting," Susman said. "Bucknell can do better than pay poverty-level wages."

World Briefs

Jet arrives in China to bring back U.S. crew

HAIKOU, China (CNN)—A chartered jet arrived in China to bring home 24 U.S. fliers early Thursday as a 12-day Washington-Beijing standoff neared its end.

U.S. diplomats secured the release of the Navy surveillance plane crew in talks with the Chinese that ended Wednesday with the right combination of words to satisfy leaders in both capitals.

The United States said it was "very sorry" for the loss of a Chinese pilot in the collision and for the American plane's landing on Hainan without verbal clearance from China, but did not accept responsibility for the incident or agree to cancel its intelligence flights off China's coast — both of which had been demanded by China.

Forty-three die in soccer stampede

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa—At least 43 people have been killed at a football match between South Africa's two biggest teams. The stampede began as a crowd tried to get into Ellis Park stadium in Johannesburg to watch the match between Kaizer Chiefs and Orlando Pirates.

President Thabo Mbeki's office promised an urgent inquiry into the tragedy to ensure it was not repeated. "The president expresses his sincere condolences to the bereaved on behalf of South Africa," his spokeswoman Tasneem Carrim said.

Peacekeeper killed in Kosovo

PRISTINA, Kosovo (CNN)—A Russian soldier on peacekeeping duty in Kosovo has been killed while on patrol, a KFOR spokesman said.

Russian peacekeepers came under fire on Wednesday in Yugoslavia's troubled Kosovo province near the Serbian border, Russia's RIA news agency reported.

Lieutenant General Yevgeny Barmintsev, Moscow's military attaché in the Serbian capital Belgrade, told RIA the serviceman was shot in the head and died on the way to a hospital at Camp Bondsteel, the U.S. KFOR base in southeastern Kosovo.

Two dead in Gaza battles

GAZA CITY—Two Palestinians have died amid fierce fighting between hundreds of Palestinian gunmen and Israeli soldiers in Gaza.

The clashes came as Israeli army tanks and bulldozers attempted to clear sandbanks at a refugee camp.

Heavy shooting continued throughout the night, with 30 Palestinians injured, four of whom are in a critical condition, officials said at Nasr hospital in Khan Younis. A policeman and a civilian later died from their injuries, doctors at the hospital added.

Euthanasia debate after Dutch decision

THE HAGUE, The Netherlands—Belgium could be the next country to change its laws on mercy killing following the Dutch decision to legalize euthanasia.

Belgium, which has a bill before parliament that would partly decriminalize euthanasia, has been closely following events in The Netherlands.

The Dutch decision on Tuesday to allow doctors to kill patients with terminal diseases who are suffering "unbearably" and if they request it has prompted angry protests.

But campaigners and political leaders in The Netherlands have welcomed the move, which is the first country in the world to allow mercy killings.

Ashcroft OKs closed TV feed of McVeigh execution

WASHINGTON (CNN)—Attorney General John Ashcroft announced Thursday that he will allow survivors and families of victims of the Oklahoma City bombing to view in their hometown a televised closed-circuit feed of the execution of Timothy McVeigh, according to Justice Department sources.

Ashcroft set a press conference for 9 a.m. Thursday to announce the decision and address other issues relating to McVeigh's scheduled May 16 execution.

Ashcroft's decision follows a meeting with more than 100 survivors and family members Tuesday in Oklahoma City. Many of the survivors made clear to the Ashcroft that they wish to witness the McVeigh execution — if not in person, at least in a closed circuit feed.

FBI searches for Nebraska girl taken from mall

KEARNEY, Nebraska (CNN)—A federal fugitive who is believed to have kidnapped a 17-year-old girl from a mall in Nebraska apparently has taken her to Montana, the FBI said Wednesday.

Anthony Steven Zappa, 29, was considered "armed and dangerous," according to local authorities. He is believed to have taken Anne Sluti as she was returning to her car Friday in the parking lot of Hill-top Mall in Kearney, where she lives with her parents.

There was a struggle in the parking lot during which Sluti was forced into a stolen Chevrolet Suburban, said FBI spokesman Larry Holmquist.

Although Zappa was not charged in the case, the FBI and local police want him on seven felony warrants in the Midwest and one federal warrant. Witnesses placed the two together in several locations, Holmquist said.

Vatican Radio given ultimatum

ROME, Italy—Vatican Radio has been threatened with closure by the Italian Government unless it reduces electromagnetic emissions.

The Italian Government said Vatican Radio's offer to reduce emissions was "absolutely insufficient," and warned it must comply with Italian laws regarding emissions.

Italian Environment Minister Willer Bordon demanded on Tuesday that Vatican Radio present a timetable, preferably within six days, for its compliance with the regulations, adopted in 1998.

ARCELUS From page A1

so many projects and groups on campus, where he consistently puts in 110 percent."

Last year, Arcelus spent a large amount of time working with Director of Community Health Promotions Tracy Shaynak to create the CHOICE residential program. CHOICE evolved out of the 10-point alcohol plan outlined by the University's BARC-II program.

"When I took this position, one of my responsibilities was to go forward with one of the recommendations by BARC-II—enhance the substance-free living option on campus," Arcelus said. "Creating CHOICE was a joint venture by our office and [Shaynak's]."

In the fall of 1999, Arcelus and Shaynak met with RAs and substance-free residents on a weekly basis to brainstorm how to incorporate wellness-living into the substance-free living environment.

"Tracy and I translated what students were looking for into a viable program, that's how CHOICE was developed. It wasn't just one person's work, but everyone working together," Arcelus said. "As with everything at the University, it came out of teamwork."

This past fall, Arcelus undertook another endeavor—First Night. First Night was a student-led event sponsored by the class of 2004, the Dean of Students' Office and University Relations and commemorates the successful completion of first year students' first semester as Bucknellians and welcomes them as members of the alumni community.

The focus of the event, according to Arcelus, is to provide an uplifting opportunity for the development of class unity and institutional pride—both of which Arcelus is clearly interested in.

"My goal in working on First Night and other tradition-based projects is to help students feel that sense of pride in their institution the way that I feel for my alma mater," Arcelus said. "That feeling can come from a range of experiences on campus: athletics, organizations, Greek life—but the angle I'm looking at comes from the sense of identifying and belonging to their class. After graduation, students will be identified as a 'class,' with two numbers after their name. I want to help them gain a sense of identification with those numbers and their classmates who share them."

As the President of the class of 2004, Briski worked with Arcelus in planning First Night and establishing a sense of community throughout the first-year class.

"Victor always tried to keep my enthusiasm level up during the planning process which then allowed me to pep up the class reps and show them just how exciting and important First Night was going to be," Briski said. "He was there through all of the brainstorming sessions, the planning process, the final rehearsal and, of course, the entire evening of the First Night event."

Arcelus was thrilled with the overwhelming success of First Night and said that the first-year student RAs and class representatives deserve recognition for establishing class unity.

"A significant part of the success was the energy and enthusiasm of the RAs in getting residents interested and excited to attend," Arcelus said. "I have always felt very strongly about increasing the sense of school spirit and class unity and connectedness with being a Bucknellian. First Night is one opportunity to help formulate that sense of being a Bucknellian. I was thrilled to see that many students showed up for the event."

Arcelus' extensive history with the University has impacted many of the students with whom he has worked.

"I think what has impressed me the most is not only how long he has been around campus and how his involvement has progressed over the years, but how he balances everything," Swartz RA Janelle Weaver '03 said. "Between work—which is definitely more than just meetings and office hours—organizations and still making time to spend with his wife Julie, there are definite evident skills there."

Erica Delandro '02 values Arcelus' dedication to improving traditions on campus.

"Victor and I met last year when we worked together on the Chrysalis Ball. I was chairing the committee and Victor pledged his support to the event and the tradition it was striving to create. He was always offering not only his assistance—he and his wife were at the fieldhouse the morning of the ball early in the morning—but he was also constantly giving suggestions and ideas," Delandro said.

As part of his job as RLC, Arcelus oversees the uphill Residents Managers (RM) and works with them in RA training and all aspects of residential life.

"I remember when he and I stayed up until four in the morning on the last day of fall training just to get everything in the buildings ready for move in day so that the first-year students could have the best experience possible," RM John Belding '99 said. "He is always taking time to help the RAs and residents and, because of that, is probably one of the better known faces on campus."

Arcelus' supervisor, Assistant Director of Housing and Residential Life Nicole Loyd '95 M'99, sees many of the same characteristics.

"Some of the many wonderful things about Vic are his passion for Bucknell and the time and energy that he devotes to making this a better place for students. He is an amazing listener, an incredible role model and a wonderful colleague," Loyd said. "The Office of Housing and Residential Life has been lucky to have him as a member of the team, and we will miss him in his RLC role next year."

The RLC position was created as a two-year appointment; next year, Arcelus will attend Penn State full-time as a PhD candidate in Higher Education.

Outside of his role as RLC, Arcelus remains heavily involved in campus life. He plays squash with other faculty members on a regular basis and attends as many University events as possible.

Arcelus and his wife, Julie Arcelus '93 M'95 were married in Rooke Chapel in the summer of 1999 and then moved into Kress Hall, just before he began working with OHRL on a full-time basis.

"I love living on campus," he said. "I love living on a hall with students, eating in the cafeteria and having the informal contact with students. I can't tell you the number of times in the Caf, students come up to me, ask questions, catch up on things or start interesting conversations while we're waiting for food. It's fantastic."

Professor of Psychology Douglas Candland, who taught Arcelus as an undergraduate, summed up Arcelus' holistic contribution to the University:

"To me, Victor represents what is best about education: a consolidation of learning and refined feelings. In the best of collegiate life, opportunities for such appreciations and relationships should be encouraged and enhanced."

Chris Rivera—The Bucknellian
University students and community members gathered Sunday afternoon for an Easter party sponsored by BSG. Students helped children decorate and hunt for eggs in Bucknell Grove.

KUROKAWA From page A1

be with my own race. If that were the case, I could have stayed in Japan or chosen to study in Italy and gone to an international university," Kurokawa explained. "The whole point in me coming [to America] was so I could experience it—so that's why I came to Bucknell, where 95 percent of the campus is Caucasian."

While Kurokawa was choosing Bucknell for its weak diversity, she was, in fact, contributing to the growth of international diversity on the campus.

Professor of Management William Gruver said, "Despite Bucknell's efforts to broaden racial and geographic diversity, when you have students who were born and raised outside the U.S. (like Kurokawa), you can look at our conventions and beliefs more objectively and critically—it provides a pure education process for the more traditional students from within the Bucknell bubble that they would be unable to get elsewhere."

Kurokawa accepted Bucknell's offer for admission and enrolled in the fall of 1997.

Adjusting to a new and unfamiliar culture was nothing new to Kurokawa. She has spent most of her life moving with her family to several different countries and living in big cities such as Tokyo and London.

"My family has moved around a lot in my life so I had experiences where I was exposed to many different cultures," Kurokawa said.

Arriving a week earlier than most first-year students, Kurokawa attended the International Student Orientation, where she met her close friend Guy Wickramanayake '01.

"Keiko was one of the first people that I met at Bucknell," Wickramanayake said. "She is a person that takes every opportunity in front of her and works hard at it to the point that she could be termed an alchemist."

In her first year, she wanted to get involved in as many organizations as possible and do as much as possible. She wasted no time.

Kurokawa's interests brought her to the International Spectrum organization, where she served as President her sophomore year.

"My goal was to familiarize other Bucknell students about my culture and other cultures through [my participation in multicultural] organizations," Kurokawa said.

Her activism and multicultural presence rapidly increased on campus. She served on the Multicultural President's Council, as an international orientation assistant for International Student Services, as an office intern for the Race/Gender Resource Center and on the International Student Advisory Board throughout her collegiate career. These activities and experiences lead her to be awarded the Multicultural Leadership Award each year.

"She has been able to share her culture, both Japanese and Italian, by being active with the international activities and also get involved with more mainstream groups like her sorority and working as a Career Development Center (CDC) consultant," International Student Advisor Susan Zingale-Baird said. "She is beautiful and has an inner source of strength and warmth."

Sophomore year, Kurokawa originally believed that she did not want to participate in the rushing process for the Greek system.

"My goal was to experience American university life—I did everything and anything that a regular American university student would do... hence, rushing," Kurokawa said. "I didn't want to rush at first. But I reminded myself, 'this is what every college student goes through so why not give it a shot?'"

She went through rush and received a bid from Alpha Chi Omega sorority. She contemplated whether or not to accept the bid, but told herself that she would have time to rescind her membership before initiation. However, Kurokawa stuck with it.

"I think it was the best decision I've ever made—the true friendships, alumni connections, aiding others and philanthropy efforts... I just love it," Kurokawa said.

Clearly over-committed, Kurokawa continued to branch out and engage in more organizations and offices. In 1999, she was accepted to become a teaching assistant for Management 101 and a marketing specialist and peer consultant for the CDC.

"What I like most about Keiko is the fact that she must be under a lot of stress from all her commitments but she doesn't show it," Assistant Professor of Management Tammy Hiller said. "She possesses a positive disposition that makes working with her pleasurable because of the person she is and the quality of her work as a teaching assistant for Management 101."

Associate Director of the CDC Pam Keiser said, "Keiko is extremely friendly and approachable—always willing to go the extra mile when called upon to help. She also offers a unique perspective in how we may successfully target pockets of campus in that she is an involved member in so many parts of the Bucknell community."

Kurokawa also became a Resident Assistant (RA) for the Office of Housing and Residential Life (OHRL)—she was soon recognized for her efforts, receiving the Best RA of the Year award last year.

"Keiko has been an amazing RA, she has been an incredible role model for other Bucknellians, and she has been a supportive member of the staff," Assistant Director of OHRL Nicole Loyd '95 M'99 said. "Keiko has taken the time to really get to know each of her residents, and has worked diligently to build cohesive communities."

"Keiko has been an excellent staff member within the OHRL," said Dan Remley, director of OHRL. "She has been an advocate for students, an active member in a variety of students' groups and has represented herself in a polished, competent, and pleasant manner."

He plays squash with other faculty members on a regular basis and attends as many University events as possible.

Arcelus and his wife, Julie Arcelus '93 M'95 were married in Rooke Chapel in the summer of 1999 and then moved into Kress Hall, just before he began working with OHRL on a full-time basis.

"I love living on campus," he said. "I love living on a hall with students, eating in the cafeteria and having the informal contact with students. I can't tell you the number of times in the Caf, students come up to me, ask questions, catch up on things or start interesting conversations while we're waiting for food. It's fantastic."

Professor of Psychology Douglas Candland, who taught Arcelus as an undergraduate, summed up Arcelus' holistic contribution to the University:

"To me, Victor represents what is best about education: a consolidation of learning and refined feelings. In the best of collegiate life, opportunities for such appreciations and relationships should be encouraged and enhanced."

Assistant Director of Campus Events Kristin Stetler said, "I have found Keiko to be a very driven person, but also someone who is not afraid to show emotion. She is truly passionate about what she believes in and there is no doubt she will go far in whatever path she takes."

"Keiko never puts anything on the back burner—neither her work nor her friends," said Kim Sedgwick '01, a close friend to Kurokawa. "Everything she does she gives 100 percent of her energy. She enjoys every minute of her life and does everything well."

Looking toward the future, Kurokawa has not made any employment plans quite yet. After declining an offer in December because "it wasn't exactly what I was looking for," Kurokawa hopes to work in advertising in New York City.

Bison Scoreboard

SOFTBALL
Bucknell	400	211	4	R	H	E
Army	000	000	0	1	3	4
Dugan	AB	R	H	RBI	BB	K
Demetriades	5	2	3	2	0	0
Doyle	2	0	0	0	0	2
Gill	2	1	3	1	0	0
Ford	4	2	3	2	1	0
Morgan	5	2	0	1	0	1
Dohoney	2	1	0	0	2	1
Fitch	2	1	1	1	0	0
Trapp	3	2	1	0	0	0
Wood	4	0	1	1	0	0
Pitching	IP	H	R	ER	BB	K
Porter	7.0	3	1	1	1	3

WOMAN'S LAX
Bucknell	8
Lafayette	9
Individual Scoring
Goals:	Evans 3, Raffaele 2, Brewster, Hasler, Montefusco
Assists:	K. Evans, Hafets, Montefusco, Raffaele, Holiday,
Saves:	Kallis 16

WOMEN'S TENNIS
Bucknell	1
Colgate	6
Singles Winners
4. Berthod (B) def. Bishop (L)

Baseball
St. Bonaventure	000	040	0	R	H	E
Bucknell	020	200	0	6	9	0
Individual Scoring
Goals:	Cull 3, McLaughlin 2, Rea 2, Hofstetter, Adrienne
Assists:	Schober 4, Rea 2, Hofstetter, Stahler
Ejections Drawn:	Rea 2, Stahler
Saves:	Chesterfield 9

WATER POLO
Bucknell	9
Slippery Rock	7

MEN'S LAX
Bucknell (9)	6
Georgetown (8)	13
Scoring Quarter	1st	2nd	3rd	4th
BU	0	4	0	2
Georgetown	5	3	0	5
Individual Scoring
Goals:	Geraghty 3, Hogue 2, Juelis
Assists:	Cheng, Hogue, Lane, Loesch
Saves:	Sussman 7

TRACK & FIELD

At Colonial Relays

Women's notables

Pole Vault
1. Nyce	11'1"
Benson	9'6.25"
Bouzan-Kaloustia	9'25"
Triple Jump
4. Zimbal	36'4"
5000
2. Marshall	17:38.52
400H
2. Shariff	1:01.61

Men's Notables

Hammer
1. Stairs	194'7"
100M
Gabriel	10.92
10000
1. Weatheral	31:33.15
Javelin
2. McKnight	199'

MEN'S TENNIS

Bucknell

Rider 7 0

Singles Winners

1. Davydov (B) def. Phillips (R)
2. Allen (B) def. Ruggiero (R)
3. Gould (B) def. McConnell (R)
4. Jacobs (B) def. Sonnabend (R)
5. Hoppie (B) def. Ducz (R)
6. Brownstein def. Ratcliffe-Lee

Doubles Winners

1. Davydov/Jacobs
2. Gould/Hoppie
3. Allen/Brownstein

STATISTICS
COMPILED BY
MATTHEW
HERBERT '02
COURTESY OF
ATHLETICS
COMMUNICATION

Next Issue:

Baseball vs. Navy
Softball vs. Holy Cross
Men's lacrosse vs. Colgate
Women's lacrosse vs. Villanova
Track and Field—BU Invitational
Women's tennis vs. Pittsburgh

THE BUCKNELLIAN Sports

Team of the Week:

The baseball team, who stayed perfect in the Patriot League with a 4-0 series sweep over Holy Cross last weekend.

Men's lax falls to #8 Hoyas, 13-6

Patriot League-leading Bison now shift focus to league match against Colgate

By PAT EVANS
Staff Writer

The men's lacrosse team ended its toughest stretch of the season last week with a loss to eighth-ranked Georgetown, 13-6. Bucknell had fallen to number-one Maryland two games before and was coming off a huge win against the Patriot League powerhouse Hobart. The Hoyas proved to be too strong for the Bison, but Bucknell hopes to take the loss and use it as a learning experience for its critical league games next week.

"(Georgetown) was clearly the best team we've played all year," Head Coach Sid Jamieson said. "They were very aggressive and fast." Georgetown came out fighting from the beginning. Scott Doyle '01 scored two goals in a 34-second span to take a 2-0 lead. The rest of the first quarter was no different as the Hoyas took advantage of the first Bison and left the first quarter with a 5-0 lead.

The second quarter failed better for the Orange and Blue as Dennis Geraghty '03 scored two quick goals. And after Michael Cheng '01 assisted Kelly Hogue '03, the lead was cut to two, 5-3.

"I give my players a lot of credit for getting back into it," Jamieson said. "They played well for 45 minutes and

J.C. Metivier and the Bison challenge Colgate this Saturday at 1:00 p.m.

kept fighting and working."

Geraghty now has 32 goals on the season. His 3.2 goals per game average ranks him seventh in the nation in the category.

But despite the Bison's efforts after the first quarter, the Hoyas could not be stopped and went on to take the win.

Bucknell hopes that this loss will help them get focused for the important upcoming league games. Two more league wins would clinch the Patriot League championship for the squad, which would earn them Bucknell's first ever entrance into the NCAA tournament.

"The lessons that we get from playing teams like this are very valuable," Jamieson said. "And that's why we play teams in the top ten every year."

Geraghty thinks that the loss has the potential to turn into a very good thing for the Bison as well. "It kept us from getting too high of spirits and thinking that we're unbeatable," he said. "We just need to keep the same level of play that we had before the loss in order to be successful."

However, at the same time, the Herd doesn't plan on dwelling on the game. "We're going to put the Georgetown loss out of our heads," Cheng said. "We have enough motivation knowing that a couple of wins puts us in the NCAA tournament."

Bucknell remains undefeated in League play, and looks to finish the season that way. But they aren't going to make any changes at this point in the season to prepare for Colgate on Saturday.

"We're just going to go out and do what we do," Jamieson said. "The guys are very focused, and they know that they have to win these two to get to the NCAA tournament."

Golf finishes 10th at Navy Invitational

By KEVIN LOGAN
Senior Writer

The Bucknell men's golf team traveled south to a partly sunny Annapolis, Md. this past weekend to compete against thirteen other schools in the Navy Spring Invitational. The squad was looking to get back on track after a disappointing performance at last weekend's George Washington Invitational, where it finished 22nd of the 29 teams that participated.

Unfortunately, the weekend started off slow for the Bison, combining for a team total 323 strokes (+39) after Saturday's opening round on the USNA Golf Course. It left them in last place, a distant 29 strokes back from the leading Georgetown Hoyas, who fired a 10-over 294. Charles Markey '04 was the top golfer for the Bison, shooting a six-over 77, which put him in a tie for 28th on the individual leader board. Behind him were captain Ken Kosteva '01, who posted an 80, and Jimmy Freeman '03, who finished with an 81. Nick Leibowitz '02 and David Horton '01 shot 85 and 87, respectively.

But what a difference a day makes. Round 2 on Sunday turned out to be far from reminiscent of the previous 18 holes. All five Bucknell golfers cast away the shadows of the day before and stepped up their games to lead the Bison to a second-place Round 2 finish. Their individual accomplishments added up to help the Bison fire a 302, an impressive 21 strokes lower than their previous day's score. They were one of just five teams to improve upon their first-round totals.

This time it was Freeman who led the team, as he shaved 10 strokes off his first round score, the biggest improvement for the Bison between the two days. As a result, Freeman notched an even-par 71 for a tournament total of 152, and earned himself a tie for 17th place overall in the individual category.

Markey followed up with a 76, one better than the previous day, giving him a two-day total of 153 to tie for 20th overall and Kosteva placed 26th overall after improving by a solid six strokes for a second-round 74 (154 total). Horton also lowered his previous day's tally by six strokes, posting an 81 for an all-around total of 168 and Leibowitz shot an 82 for a two-day 167 total.

As a result of the team's much improved performance over the second 18 holes, the Bison moved up four spots to finish 10th overall in the tourney (Georgetown held onto the first-place spot).

Bucknell's improved play on Sunday gives the team confidence heading into the Patriot League Championship next weekend, beginning April 20.

"We knew we could play well; it was just nice to see it reflected on the scoreboards—it's good for our mental game. Now we have the state of mind, we know we can score," Kosteva said.

While the Bison will face stiff competition from such teams as rival Lehigh and host Navy (who has done well recently with their numerous holdovers from last season), they know they are strong contenders to win, considering their strong performance on the turf where the championship tournament will be played.

Bison struggle with consistency

By SCOTT KLOSS
Staff Writer

The Bucknell men's tennis team completed another week of grueling action, coming away with a victory over Rider and two defeats at the hands of Towson and Navy.

When things go right for the Bison, they go really right. On Apr. 4, the Bison exemplified that theory perfectly against Rider. Bucknell won all six singles matches, along with the three doubles matches, on its way to a 7-0 victory over visiting Rider.

"We knew going in that if we gave it our best we'd be in good shape," Alex Davydov said. The Bison did just that.

Top seed Alex Davydov '02 handled his opponent (6-1, 6-1), Scott Allen '02 won (6-1, 6-4) and Jeff Gould '01 bagged his opponent (6-0, 6-0). Todd Jacobs '03 won (6-0, 6-0), Hayes Hoppie '01 and Ira Brownstein '02 continued the winning ways (6-0, 6-0), (6-0, 6-0), respectively.

In doubles play, the team kept it up, sweeping all three matches to earn the doubles point. Davydov and Jacobs won 8-3, Gould and Hoppie cruised 8-1, while Allen and Brownstein swept their Rider opponents 8-0.

On Sunday, Navy provided a different outcome, handing Bucknell losses in all but two matches.

"Navy is perennially a very strong team, contending for the conference every year," Davydov said. "Even so, Todd Jacobs played a solid match and didn't give his opponent any way to hold him back from winning."

Jacobs was Bucknell's lone singles winner on the day, picking up a 6-4, 6-0 victory at the fourth singles flight. In doubles action, the duo of Allen/Lee Scarborough '02 battled through to a tough victory (8-5). This defeat dropped Bucknell to 7-4 overall and 0-2 in

Chris Rivers—The Bucknellian
Lee Scarborough hits an overhead smash.

Patriot League action.

Bucknell's next game was played on Tuesday against visiting Towson, and again it ended in disfavor as the Orange lost 5-2.

In singles action, Hoppie was the lone winner, posting a 6-3, 6-0 victory at the fifth flight. In doubles action, the winners included Gould and Aaron Webster '01 (9-7) and Allen and Scarborough (8-5).

"Our guys played hard, but we need to dig down deep and play better tennis," Head Coach Bob Hammerle said.

The Bison look to regain their winning ways at Lafayette on Thursday.

Strong hitting not enough for softball

By BROOKE REA
Sports Editor

In doubleheaders against Towson, Army and Seton Hall this past week, the Bison softball team brought its overall record to 11-18-2. After dropping two games to Towson, splitting both double-headers over the weekend with Army and dropping two Tuesday to Seton Hall, the Orange and Blue's Patriot League record stands at 3-5.

Last week the Bison traveled to Towson, where they were shut out in the first game, falling 4-0 despite four hits in the first five innings.

In the second game the Bison rallied back, aided by an RBI from Erin Doyle '04 in the fourth and one from Jacqueline Trapp '03 in the sixth. But in the top of the seventh a Towson batter was hit by a pitch, driving in the winning run and sealing its 3-2 victory.

Over the weekend Army hosted Bucknell in a pair of doubleheaders. On Saturday, Army came out big in the opener, tallying a four-run third inning and a three-run fourth inning en route to an 8-2 victory. A homerun from senior co-captain Steph Morgan helped Bucknell's score, but it wasn't enough to give the Bison the edge they needed.

"I was pleased with how we were hitting," Head Coach Janelle Breneman said. "We had ten hits but we just couldn't string them together—we even had a couple of one-hit innings which ended up costing us."

In the second game the Bison came out ready to avenge their earlier loss, relentless on offense thanks to the strong hitting of Co-Captains Charity Ford '01 and Jenna Demetriades '02. Their runs in the tenth inning sealed the 4-3 victory for the Bison.

On Sunday, the opener was cut short by Army's home run in the bottom of the fifth which brought the score to 9-1. An eight-point mercy rule ended the game, leaving Bucknell defeated.

But the Bison were not fazed and came back in the nightcap to jump to an early 4-0 lead in the first inning. Sharp hitting from Meredith Gill '03, Jenna Demetriades '02, Angie Stackhouse '04 and Steph Morgan '01 combined to give BU this early cushion.

Gill was strong once again in the fourth, hitting an RBI single echoed by one from Kelly Dugan '02. Freshman Jenna Fitch had her first career homer, bringing the Bison's lead to 7-1 in the fifth. Five more runs brought the final score to 12-1, giving the Bison a much-deserved victory.

"This weekend we proved that we can produce the runs," Breneman said. "I am confident that we can beat anyone

See SOFTBALL, page A6

It's a simple calculation:

TIAA-CREF's low expenses mean more money working for you.

The equation is easy. Lower expenses in managing a fund can equal better performance.

How much? Just take a look at the chart. Then call us. We'll send you a free, easy-to-use expense calculator so you can see for yourself that no matter what your investment, you'll benefit from low expenses. And CREF variable annuity expenses range from just 0.28% to 0.34%.

For decades, we've been committed to low expenses, superior customer service and strong performance.

Add it all up and you'll find that selecting your retirement provider is an easy decision. TIAA-CREF.

THE IMPACT OF EXPENSES ON PERFORMANCE

Total accumulations after 30 years based on annual investment of $50,000 and hypothetical annual return of 8%. Total return and principal value of investments will fluctuate, and yield may vary. The chart above is presented for illustrative purposes only and does not reflect actual performance, or product future results, of any TIAA-CREF account, or reflect taxes.

Ensuring the future for those who shape it.™

1.800.842.2776

www.tiaa-cref.org

For more complete information on our securities products, call 1.800.842.2776, ext. 5509, for prospectuses. Read them carefully before you invest. 1. Estimated annual expenses are adjusted quarterly. 2. 1.40% is a very reasonable fee level for a typical fund. 0.40% is near, but not actually at the bottom of the mutual fund expense ratio spectrum. • TIAA-CREF Individual and Institutional Services, Inc. and Teachers Personal Investors Services, Inc. distribute securities products. • Teachers Insurance and Annuity Association (TIAA), New York, NY and TIAA-CREF Life Insurance Co., New York, NY issue insurance and annuities. • TIAA-CREF Trust Company, FSC provides trust services. • Investment products are not FDIC insured, may lose value and are not bank guaranteed. © 2001 Teachers Insurance and Annuity Association—College Retirement Equities Fund, New York, NY 01104.

Because everyday is the perfect occasion for casual fine dining at...

The Victorian Lady
115 Old Turnpike Road
Lewisburg, PA 17837
Lunch: Mon.-Fri. 11:00-2:00
Dinner: Thurs.-Sat. 5:00-9:00
Phone: (570) 523-8090
www.victorianladyrestaurant.com

5 minutes from campus

IPL Hair Removal

Advanced Skin Care Associates
laser and wellness med-spa

Sports

Sophomore lax goalie playing beyond his years

Justin Sussman is completing one of the most impressive seasons for a Bucknell goalie on the League-leading 2001 squad

By BRIAN KLOTZ
Staff Writer

Watching a typical Bucknell lacrosse game, one might see that the goalie blends in with the rest of the defense. Aside from a stick with a bigger head on the end and a thick chest pad, sophomore goalie Justin Sussman, appearance wise, doesn't stand out. It's his performance that is raising eyebrows all over the college lacrosse scene.

With a combined total of 40 saves in the games versus Maryland and Hobart during the week ending April 1st, Sussman earned the impressive recognition as Warrior/Inside Lacrosse Division I Co-Player of the week. Now, with only three more games left in the season, two of which are important league match-ups, Sussman is poised to surpass 125 saves for the season and hold the league's best save percentage at 67%.

"He comes from a high school program and a geographic area where lacrosse is big," Head Coach Sid Jamieson said about Sussman's roots. "Being a Baltimore area kid, he comes from that kind of environment and that kind of background."

Sussman's recent success and development stem largely from his strong background in heavily competitive lacrosse play. As the goalie for Friend's Academy of Towson, Md., Sussman earned much recognition for his performance. He was a two-time all state player, three-time all-Baltimore player and in his senior year was a finalist for Maryland Player of the Year award.

"I was brought up to live, eat and breathe lacrosse," Sussman said. "That's what gets on the front page of the newspapers in Maryland, not any other sport."

In his senior year of high school, Sussman looked at colleges such as Delaware, Maryland, Lehigh and PSU, but Bucknell rang true for him.

"When I came here for a visit, I had the greatest time," Sussman said. "I wanted to go to a school where your teammates are your best friends and they out together a lot. Bucknell had Justin Sussman earned Warrior/Inside Division I Co-Player of the Week honors for the week of April 1.

he tore his knee and I ended up starting the last eight games."

J a m i e s o n watched Sussman's progression last year and thought his transition into the starting role was very comfortable.

"He had the opportunity to play in big games as a freshman, he basically won the Army game for us," Jamieson said. "It's great for him to have that type of experience as a freshman because it has carried over and he has gotten better."

"It would have been hard to be a bench player last year and be a starter this year," Sussman said.

"The meet went really well, and beating Seton Hall was pretty unexpected. It definitely raised our team's morale. We're looking forward to Leagues," Nyce said.

that; it was also the best school I got into (academically)."

As a freshman, Sussman came into Bucknell's lacrosse program with aspirations for playing time, but didn't expect to start.

"My goal was to start, but there was a senior goalie (Andrew Smith) above me," Sussman said. "I wanted to push him to improve by playing the best that I could. Unfortunately, a quarter of the way through the season, tremely tough to come into the season in the first game versus a perennial powerhouse like UNC with no experience. I was facing shots in high school that were fast, but not as fast as college. I had to improve every facet of my game."

As far as this season goes, Sussman has a great deal of support from his front three to ease the transition even more. Defended by senior captains J. C. Metivier, Mark Juels and Brian Treacher, Sussman feels he doesn't have much need to take a leadership role this year.

"I'm lucky to have a defense in front of me who I think are the most underrated defensemen in the country," Sussman said. "They know what is going on and exactly what to do. I hear them talking to each other all the time on the field; they are so aware."

After a difficult game in the goal in a 13-6 loss to Georgetown on April 4, Sussman hopes to have a solid performance versus Colgate on Saturday. A win in that game will cement a bid for the Bison Lacrosse program's first ever trip to the NCAA tournament.

WOMEN'S ULTIMATE FRISBEE

Peace Frogs undefeated in tournament

By KATHY KENNEDY AND KATY CAGLE
Contributing writers

This past weekend the Peacefrogs, the BU women's ultimate frisbee team, headed off to a tournament in Maryland with eleven Frogs, tons of spirit, some pump-up music and loads of determination. They came home with all of that and a snazzy trophy, signifying their growing dominance of the women's college ultimate scene.

The Frogs went undefeated over the weekend, winning seven games total. The definitive victory for the Bucknell women came in the finals as the Frogs defeated Tufts—at the time ranked fifth in the country—15-7. The Bucknell women had gone into the tournament with high hopes, but they were also aware that Tufts would offer a serious competition. The Frogs were incredibly excited to find that they had more than enough skill, spirit and determination to overcome all the obstacles Tufts would put before them.

The Frogs started their season on the weekend of March 3-4 with a first place victory at the Rocky VI tournament in Philadelphia. Although due to the hall and sleeting conditions (which they had braved until the finals) the Frogs were forced to share the first place title with their long time rivals, Swarthmore. That tournament set the stage for competitions to come.

The Frogs continued their winning streak over spring break, traveling to Savannah, Ga. from March 10-17 for a weeklong tournament. This was a perfect opportunity for the Frogs to work together on their flow and perfect their widely known and feared zone defense. Their work paid off as they went undefeated all week, racking up four shutouts and winning the finals 13-1.

The Frogs biggest challenge so far has been the Easterns tournament in North Carolina on the weekend of March 24-25. In the past this tournament has foreshadowed the team's destiny of nationals. The Bucknell women were seeded ninth going into the tournament but emerged in sixth place through many an upset.

The Frogs' main goal was to finish pool play in the top eight and make it into the winners' bracket. After winning two games they were fairly certain a spot in the top eight was secured, but the Frogs' determination wouldn't allow them to settle for these two victories. Their next game was against last year's national champions, Carleton College. After a close first half the Frogs pulled away to an exhilarating five-point victory.

The second day brought a face off between the Frogs and the first seeded team, Georgia. The Frogs came out strong and scored the first four points. Georgia rallied with their intense zone defense, keeping the rest of the game close. Georgia and Bucknell were trading points when time ran out and they were forced to put on a cap. This means they would add two points to the highest score and the winning team would no longer have to win by two. The score, 12-12 when the cap went on, increased to a 13-13 tie. Unfortunately, Georgia scored the last tie on the clock. Georgia's zone defense kept the Frogs from scoring, but the Frogs were determined to win. The game ended in a 14-14 tie. The Frogs were forced to share the first place title with their long time rivals, Swarthmore. That tournament set the stage for competitions to come.

The Frogs continued their winning streak over spring break, traveling to Savannah, Ga. from March 10-17 for a weeklong tournament. This was a perfect opportunity for the Frogs to work together on their flow and perfect their widely known and feared zone defense. Their work paid off as they went undefeated all week, racking up four shutouts and winning the finals 13-1.

The Frogs biggest challenge so far

Track races to top finishes at Colonial Relays

By ROSSE SEDO
Senior Writer

The Bucknell men's and women's outdoor track & field teams had several strong individual and relay performances last weekend at the Colonial Relays, hosted by the College of William & Mary.

On the women's side, Becki Marshall '02 and Khadija Shariff '03 finished second in the 5000-meter run and the 400-meter intermediate hurdles, respectively. Already with ownership of the fastest time in Bucknell history in the 400-meter hurdle event, Shariff solidified her record by running the event in 1:01.61.

Marshall, who was recently named the Patriot League Women's Indoor Track & Field Scholar-Athlete, moved on to the BU all-time charts in the 5000 with a time of 17:38.52, putting her in the eighth spot on the all-time performance list.

The women's relay teams fared extremely well during Saturday's competition, putting four times into Bucknell's top ten lists. The 4X200-meter relay team moved into fifth all-time with their fifth place finish time of 1:45.33. The eighth fastest time was set in the 4X400-meter relay when the Bison finished fifth with a 3:52.55 clocking. The distance medley relay team barely slid into the top-ten with the tenth fastest time of 12:43.57. The 4X800-meter relay broke a Bucknell record, knocking the previous Bucknell record out of first place by over two seconds.

The women's pole-vaulters continue to improve as freshmen Shannon Benson and Abigail Bouzan-Kaloustia moved into second and fourth all time, respectively. Benson cleared a height of 9' 6" while Bouzan-Kaloustia notched a height of 9'. Co-captain Andrea Nyce '02 won the pole vault and earned ten team points by vaulting 11' 1".

Nyce cited the weekend as a confidence booster for the team. "The meet went really well, and beating Seton Hall was pretty unexpected. It definitely raised our team's morale. We're looking forward to Leagues," Nyce said.

Rounding out the top-ten performances for the Bison women was junior Kim Zimbal in the triple jump. Zimbal jumped a final distance of 36' 4" to finish fourth in the event and move into seventh all-time at Bucknell.

On the men's side, Ryan Stairs '01 moved into second all-time at Bucknell in the hammer throw when he tossed the weight a distance of 194' 7". His record setting toss was also strong enough to earn him first place honors in the event.

Also breaking into the record books for the men was David Gabriel '02 in the 200-meter dash with a time of 10:52, putting him seventh all-time at Bucknell in the event.

Kevin Weatherill '01 took first place in the 10,000-meter run. In a time of 31:33.15, Weatherill garnered 10 crucial points for the Bison. This grueling race is the longest event on the outdoor circuit.

Earning eight points for the Bison was freshman Justin McKnight with a second place finish in the javelin throw. McKnight garnered the silver medal by tossing the javelin a distance of 199'.

The men's and women's track & field teams will return to Lewisburg this weekend to host the Bucknell Spring Invitational on Saturday.

Crew improves at Lehigh regatta

By Stephanie Sturm
Contributing writer

This past Saturday the Bucknell men's and women's crew teams traveled to Bethlehem, Pa. to compete in a dual regatta with Lehigh University. Bucknell raced six boats, all finishing the day with a good showing and making improvements to build upon for the rest of the racing season.

Bucknell's novice men's eight was challenged by two Lehigh boats of freshmen men. Bucknell's crew consisting of Ryan Sexton '04, John Luthi '04, Kyle Goodwin '04, Will Hart '04, Raphael Crowley '04, Rob Tidmore '04, Mark Harris '04, Matt Albrecht '04 and coxswain Justin Faden '04 finished ahead of Lehigh's B boat, but took second place after a close battle with Lehigh's A boat. The novice men finished the race in 4:54.

Bucknell's novice women's first eight took second place to Lehigh, finishing the course in 5:16. The crew, coxed by Nikhil Menon '03, consisted of Lisa Baranik '03, Karen Schuyler '04, Rebecca Newman '04, Maura Kroh '04, Meggie Coates '04, Lynn Hootman '04, Laura McWilliams '04 and Kate Boschen '04. The novice women's second lightweight eight also took second place to Lehigh's boat, finishing the course in 5:31. Christina Meng '04 coxed the lightweight women consisting of Annie Larson '04, Maggie Cook '03, Jill Harrington '04, Katie Barreira '04, Emily Smith '04, Joan Wendler '04 and Nicole Tomlin '04.

Bucknell's two varsity men's boats were both successful in their tight competition with Lehigh. The varsity heavyweight men's four took first place with a time of 5:05 to beat Lehigh's varsity men by 3 seconds. The heavyweight men's boat consisted of Mike Brooks-Williams '03, Jeff Dasch '03, Aaron Casagrande '03, Chuck Dickhart '04 and coxswain Nikhil Menon '03. The varsity second lightweight men's four finished in first place with a time of 5:11, beating Lehigh's A and B boats of JV men, also coxed by Nikhil Menon, the lightweight men included Jeremy Urban '02, Trevor Gibson '03, Aaron Bates '03 and Brian Albert '03.

The varsity women competed against the same Lehigh women which took first place against during the last weekend in March at the Knecht Cup Regatta. This time the varsity women's pair of Stephanie Sturm '01 and Jessie Smith '01 took second place, finishing a close 3 seconds behind Lehigh's pair.

The men and women have been training hard on land this week due to unsafe rowing conditions and hope to return to practicing on the water as soon as possible. The team is looking forward to a weekend off from racing over the Easter holiday and then to get ready to face their competition at the Murphy Cup in Philadelphia on April 21.

Women's tennis stuck in mid-season slump

By CATY SELLECK
Staff Writer

The Bucknell women's tennis team had a rough week, losing to three very tough teams, Loyola, Villanova and Patriot League competitor, Colgate.

The Bison now have a 4-5 record as they look towards this weekend's competition and then league championships.

Last Wednesday, the Bison faced Loyola at home, losing a difficult match 8-1. Scoring for the Bison were Laura Maisel '03 and Kristen Pugno '04 in the third doubles flight against Loyola's Camille Khan and Colleen Ruane.

Last Saturday, the Bison faced Villanova on their home courts and lost a tough match, 7-0. Winning again for Bucknell were the doubles duo of Maisel and Pugno, defeating the flight three doubles team of Villanova with a decisive score of 8-0.

"I think we went out there with good morale, but Villanova came out strong and ready to play," Pugno said. "Plus, the weather really has not been in our favor lately. It was great to see our intensity level so high though and I think we really showed mental toughness when it mattered."

Against Colgate last Sunday, the lone scorer for Bucknell was Sam Berthod '04 in the fourth flight with a score of 6-4, 6-4 against Kelli Proven-zano. Unfortunately, Bucknell lost the rest of their matches with a score of 6-1. This gives Bucknell a record of 0-2 in Patriot League play, and puts Colgate at 3-1 in the league, and 7-0 overall.

"The way we played was definitely not reflected in the score in our match against Colgate," Berthod said. "We all played really tough games and showed that we can play up to the level of any Patriot League competitor. We're all really looking forward to playing Lafayette next Wednesday, and maybe get back some ground after losing to Colgate."

This week the Bison fought the weather but have tried to fit in some practice time despite the showers.

Sports

Stanley Cup winner anyone's guess

By ROB SCHMICKER
Senior Writer

The end of the NHL's regular season is finally upon us and while fourteen teams will be hitting the showers, the remaining sixteen realize their season is just starting. After six months of jockeying for position, all records have been thrown out the window. In order to win Lord Stanley's Cup, one team must prove itself over and over again. The regular season doesn't mean squat anymore.

A team that knows this all too well is the New Jersey Devils. New Jersey has now won the Eastern Conference crown four out of the last five years. But, during the past three seasons Devils couldn't even make it out of the second round. Surprisingly, the Devils two championships have come as fourth and fifth seeds. In fact, no eastern team has made it to the Stanley Cup Finals as the top seed since the New York Rangers in 1994. Barring a major collapse, that trend should come to an end this year.

The difference with New Jersey between then and now is their balanced offense. While much is made of Colorado and Pittsburgh, the Devils actually led the NHL in scoring this year. They don't have a bonafied star, but they have depth. Seven players tallied more than twenty goals this year, meaning no single person has carried or is expected to carry the scoring load. The Elias-Armott-Sykora line may be the best in the league, but if they are shut down, the Devils still have 43-goal scorer Alexander Mogilny to keep the offense rolling. But don't be fooled by their sudden offensive play because New Jersey still has one of the best defenses in the league. 2000 Conn Smythe winner Scott Stevens leads a superb group of defenders who often make Martin Brodeur's workload minimal. It will take a total team effort to beat New Jersey in a seven game series.

Whether they can handle the pressure of repeating remains to be seen. If not, the race in the East will be wide open with Philadelphia, Washington, Buffalo and Pittsburgh the other logical favorites. No offense to Ottawa, but the Senators may have a rough time getting past Toronto in the first round. It is still a young and relatively inexperienced team that is still a year or two from serious contention. The others will be trouble because of their playoff experience. The Flyers are in the same spot as NJ was last year and are looking to erase their disappointment from 2000's postseason. While their series with Buffalo will be low scoring, the meeting between the Penguins and Capitals will be a high-octane affair. If Pittsburgh can get solid play from its goalies, Mario Lemieux will lead his team to the finals. But the wild card could be Buffalo since Dominik Hasek is the perfect playoff goalie. Two goals against the Sabres won't be enough.

Out West, the picture is a little cloudier. Colorado finished with a league high 118 points and is stacked from top to bottom. The Avalanche have five All-Star game starters (six if you consider newly acquired Rob Blake), Joe Sakic, Peter Forsberg and Patrick Roy look for their second cup in Colorado, while Ray Bourque looks for his first. All Bourque lacks is a Stanley Cup title and a win would cap off his Hall-of-Fame career. On paper, Colorado looks unstoppable, but we all know that games are played on the ice and not on paper. Their quest for the cup will not be easy, especially if they cross Detroit's path.

The Red Wings are only three years removed from back to back titles and would like to get back to that golden plateau. Captain Steve Yzerman is having an amazing year and has kept the Wings going strong. While Colorado and Detroit have gotten much of the press, Dallas has quietly had a great year. Brett Hull has regained his old form and teamed with Mike Modano will always give opponents nightmares. Backed by Sergei Zubov and Ed Belfour in goal, the Stars gave up the second fewest goals in the league this year. Coach Ken Hitchcock always has them thinking they're the best and this swagger could lead them back to the finals.

The wildcard out west could be the Sharks, who are young and come at you on every shift. Newly acquired Teemu Selanne gives them another big scorer alongside of Owen Nolan, but goaltending is the key. Evgeni Nabokov has been spectacular all year long and is out to become the third rookie goaltender to win the cup. But San Jose will first have to get by Keith Tkachuk and the St. Louis Blues, which will be no easy feat.

Even in this shootout out west, Colorado is still the favorite. A match-up against New Jersey seems likely, but as it stands, each team has a legitimate shot. Lord Stanley's Cup will go to the best team, the team who fights for that coveted trophy no matter how hard the challenge, the team who is able to win the overtime thriller and the team who is able to play through the pain. That is what makes the NHL playoffs special—nothing comes easily, so sit back and enjoy.

Dave's Major League Baseball power picks

By DAVE TOMAINO
Staff Writer

1. New York Yankees (4-2): Bluejays gave them the fits. Jeter cracks eight hits in three games since his return. The Moose looks like the best pick-up so far this season.

2. San Francisco Giants (4-2): A lot of pretenses behind the Yankees this season, but the Giants may be the exception. Just a matter of time before Barry busts out the bats.

3. St. Louis Cardinals (4-3): Welcome to the 2001 baseball season. The Cards finally get rolling, and Andrei Kholodov has his shine.

4. Oakland A's (2-4): Will Johnny come marching home again? The A's lead-off man (Johnny Damon) has only two wins this season.

5. Cleveland Indians (3-3): The next double threat 69" rookie pitcher.

6. Atlanta Braves (3-5): Ouch... The Braves have fallen and skinned their knees this season. The pitchers are struggling. No, I did not stutter.

7. Boston Red Sox (4-2): Boston taking advantage of a scheduling break. Manny and the crew are feasting on D-Ray and Oriole pitching.

8. Chicago White Sox (2-4): Cadillac Dave and his Chicago "Red-hot" could have taken one game in the weekend series with the Tigers.

9. Houston Astros (4-2): The Astros forgot about last year. Biggio is a new man this season.

10. Los Angeles (4-3): Chill out Dodger fans! I'm sure you never misplayed a foul ball. Sheffield needs a new home.

11. New York Mets (3-4): Forget about Giuliani, vote Piazza! Ordonez is still flashing the leath-

12. Toronto Bluejays (6-2): Played the role of bully and knocked around the World champs. New Manager Buck Martinez may have found a better job in the Blue Jay dugout.

13. Seattle Mariners (4-2): The M's are playing "Lou Ball"—every one is hitting and pitching is in October form. Lou can relax now, right?

14. Colorado Rockies (3-4): Larry Walker ate his "wheaties" this winter. Opposing pitchers cannot breathe and it is not the Denver air.

Strong hitting, consistent pitching lifts BU baseball

BASEBALL
From page A8

he began to tire and gave up a pair of runs. In earning his third straight win, Allen surrendered seven hits while striking out four and walking none.

Bucknell scored four runs in the third inning and three in the fourth, and added one run in the fourth, fifth and sixth innings to go with three more in the seventh to achieve the decisive win. Leading the Bison were Ritz, who went 4-4 with a home run and two RBIs, and Eiben, who was 4-5 with a double and two RBIs.

Deppew stated that his players displayed "great mental toughness" in the final context of the four-game set, as the Bison played eight runs in the tenth inning to win, 12-5. Bucknell had five hits in the top of the tenth and benefited from two Holy Cross errors to score eight runs. The inning was highlighted by Lindberg's two-run homer to close out the scoring, his second of the series and seventh on the year. Miller came to relieve starter R.J. Grant '03 in the fifth and worked the final six innings to move to 2-0 on the year. Miller struck one run on three hits and struck out six.

Bucknell fell behind early 3-1 in the first inning but bounced back to tie the game at four in the fourth thanks to one of Holy Cross's seven errors in the game. Eric Fishman '02 and Gething each had two hits for the Bison and Lindberg was 1-3 with four RBIs.

The Orange and Blue had no time to rest after they got back to campus as they turned around the following day to travel to St. Bonaventure to face the Bonnies in a doubleheader. Bucknell won the first game in dramatic fashion by scoring two runs in the top of the seventh en route to a 6-4 victory. After coming from behind to tie the game at 4-4, Lindberg singled with two outs and then Ritz followed with a two-run home run to left field. Sophomore B.J. Batterson came on in the seventh with one out and retired the next two batters to get his first save of the season.

(The St. Bonaventure game) was part of a tough road schedule after late Monday return at 2:00 a.m.," Deppew said. "Our young pitchers came through against a very good hitting Atlantic 10 team."

The Bonnies struck first, plating two runs in the second, but the Bison answered in the third with three runs of their own, thanks to RBI singles from Peck and senior catcher Pat Cann and an RBI double from Scheetz. The home scoring regained the lead in their half of the inning, plating two runs. The Bison came back to tie the game, again, thanks to another RBI from Cann.

Freshman Cory Nadler picked up his first win of the year after throwing two innings of relief. Peck went 2-4 with an RBI and Ritz was 3-3 with two RBIs to lead the Orange and Blue.

In the second contest, the Bonnies bombarded the Bison from the start, scoring four runs in the first, six in the second and seven in the third. An RBI double by Stoll along with an RBI single by Joseph plated the only runs the Bison would score in the game as they fell 17-2.

Bucknell now returns its focus to league play when it travels to the Naval Academy this weekend in a key four-game set with the Midshipmen, who currently are in second place in the Patriot League. First pitch is set for 12:00 p.m. on Saturday.

IN THE PAINT

With Staff Writers:

Ali Ahmed and Justin McCarthy
Last week: 3-2 Overall: 25-15

Friday, April 13 Boston at Indiana

The Celtics are currently 2 1/2 games back from the Pacers for the eighth and final spot in the playoffs; therefore this is a crucial game for their playoff hopes. What makes it more important is that Indiana leads the season series 2-1 and a win would secure them the first tiebreaker with the Celtics. Boston will need huge games from their two stars and leaders, Antoine Walker and Paul Pierce. The last time they met the Celtics, they did a great job of shutting down Miller, holding him to just 4 points; however, they let Rose and Crossover combine for 56 points (which equaled the total of Boston's three top scorers combined).

Justin's pick: Pacers by seven

Boston did well after changing its philosophy after Coach Pitino's departure but it had to end eventually. Still they have two solid players to build around and should make a run next year to play in the post season. Indiana seems to be playing better and better and I keep getting this sneaky feeling that they might take out the Sixers in the first round.

Ali's pick: Pacers by 23

Sacramento at Dallas

Each of these teams is bidding for playoff positioning. The Kings are trying to hold off the Lakers for the second seed while attempting to overcome the Spurs for first. Meanwhile, the Mavs are attempting to catch Utah for the fourth seed and the home-court advantage in the first round of the playoffs. The key matchup to watch will be their forwards; Webber vs. Howard and Stojakovic vs. Nowitzki. Although, Dallas gains an edge in having the better scoring guards, in Finley and Nash; you cannot count out the impact of Diaw or the Kings' guards.

Justin's pick: Mavs by eight

Dallas beat them last time and Sacramento should be trying to get revenge, but I'll stick with the Michael Finley-led Mavericks. I think they just have a more diverse talented team. As a side note, it's great to finally see an Asian make it into the NBA. It is too early to say but any seven footer with a soft touch like Wang will find some role in the NBA.

Ali's pick: Mavs by three

Sunday, April 15 New York at Philadelphia

In their three previous meetings this season, of which, Philly has won two of three, the average margin of victory has been over 18 points. Both teams are currently riding a hot streak. The Knicks have won four of their last five; while Philly has won five of their last six games since the return of Allen Iverson. This is a possible, and probable, Eastern Conference Final matchup, which pits a team with great depth against a team that is six feet tall. The Knicks have a core of players in which only one knows who will step up and take the reins in a game; while the Sixers know all too well that their hopes of success rely solely upon "The Answer."

Justin's pick: Knicks by four

I think both these teams are overrated, but both have legions of fans who would disagree with me. I think New York is more talented but their coach is screwing things up. So which team do I pick for this one? Well New York's slow-paced offense just allows Philly to get its defense set and Mutombo to be effective. But wait... you never know, New York might open up its offense, allowing Houston and Rice to flourish... or maybe not.

Ali's pick: Sixers by seven

Utah at Minnesota

Utah is trying to maintain homecourt advantage in the first round of the playoffs, while the T-Wolves are fighting to just merely make the playoffs. They hold the eighth seed, protected by their victories in three of their last four games. Both teams lack a center; therefore the matchup of the forwards, Malone and Marshall vs. Garnett and Szczerbiak, should determine the game. Ultimately, this game may depend on how well Terrell Brandon plays, because Minnesota has only lost twice all season when he shoots over 50%.

Justin's pick: Jazz by five

Sports

Loyalty, what have you done for me lately?

Former Kansas City Chiefs' head coach Gunther Cunningham was surfing the web on January 4 just like any other ordinary person. He was probably trying to relax after finishing another year as a head football coach in the NFL, one of the most demanding and exhausting jobs in all of sports. Imagine Cunningham's surprise when he saw on ESPN.com that the Chiefs were talking to former Rams' coach Dick Vermeil about the head coaching job. Cunningham had no idea that his job was in jeopardy. The startling question that comes to my mind is why he was informed in this manner.

Sports are an essential part of American culture. Professional and college athletes, coaches, administrators and executives are in the news every day. Like it or not, these individuals are seen as role models in our society and their behavior is constantly analyzed by the press and the general public. The majority of complaints cited by the general public are their outrage at the behavior of professional athletes, with past examples including Dennis Rodman, Latrell Sprewell and John Rocker. What about the executives in professional sports and the university administrators at college universities? Do Americans pay attention to their actions?

I think they should after an array of incidents on both the professional and collegiate level. My main complaint is whatever happened to the idea of loyalty in sports? Webster's dictionary defines being loyal as having unwavering allegiance and being faithful to a cause, ideal, custom, institution or product. Where has this value gone? Has it been swept away along with other values by the powerful storm of influence that is money and winning in sports? It appears so after recent incidents at Texas Tech and the University of Louisville.

After a 9-19 record in his tenth year at Texas Tech, James Dickey was not expecting the most positive of meetings when he met with Athletic Director Gerald Myers for his annual review on March 4. Dickey was right in his assessment of the meeting, but he had the understanding afterwards that he was still employed. Dickey was not informed by his boss that later that day Myers would recommend to Texas Tech president David Schmidt that Dickey be fired.

Myers and Schmidt traveled to Florida the following day to secretly meet with Bob Knight about the head coaching position. When word of the visit surfaced in the press, Dickey contacted Myers for the third time in four days, demanding to know if he was going to be fired. Myers gave Dickey the same answer he had provided before and expressed that they would discuss those matters at the appropriate time. Myers confirmed the speculation on March 9 at a press conference when he announced the termination of Dickey as head basketball coach of the Red Raiders. Not surprisingly, Dickey was not in attendance.

The way in which this situation was handled only served to hurt Dickey, both professionally and emotionally. Imagine going into your first game in the Big 12 tournament with runners, knowing that you would be fired if your team lost and be replaced by one of the legends of the college basketball coaching fraternity. Dickey was left to twist as one Lubbock sportswriter put it, "Like a battered Lone Star flag in a West Texas windstorm."

While a 9-19 season is a reason to be dismissed as head coach, it gives no validity to the way in which Dickey's firing was handled. Dickey served as head coach for ten years of the Red Raiders. Is ten years not enough for a man to at least be treated with some dignity when he is informed that it is his time to go? I think so. Apparently, Myers and Schmidt tore the page out of their dictionaries with the definition of loyalty on it.

At the University of Louisville, legendary basketball coach Denny Crum resigned after 30 years as head coach. Crum held a press conference announcing his retirement in which he reiterated that the decision to retire was his, and his alone. Anyone who believes this one needs to take a step back and look at all of the facts first and you would want to be speaking to Louisville athletic director Tom Jurich. There is no doubt that Jurich was pushing Crum as the end of the season came near to retire. Jurich aggressively stepped up the pressure on the 63-year-old coach in order to insure a proper sendoff would be possible for Crum in the Conference USA tournament, which was being held at Louisville. While this was a nice and deserving gesture towards Crum, his situation was not handled properly as well. My only feeling is that Jurich was trying to cover himself by getting Crum to announce his retirement before the Conference USA tournament in order to insure a great sendoff for the coach.

It perplexes me to no end as to why Crum was treated in this manner, especially with his coaching resume and all the success that he had at Louisville, including taking the Cardinals to six Final Fours and winning two national championships, not to mention all the prestige and money he brought to the university. Did Jurich just brush all of this aside when he decided he wanted a new basketball coach in town? How much more loyal can you get than Crum? He stayed at one program for 30 years and built it into a national powerhouse. I doubt that we will see that feat again anytime soon. The majority of coaches and players (professional) these days seem to be pretty mobile as they chase one thing—money.

Greg Garber, a writer for ESPN.com and author of "Coach, meet your replacement," has referred to this most recent phenomenon in college and professional sports as a trickle-down theory. He states, "It is the calculus of greed: With more money at stake than ever before, there is more pressure on the head coach. And the people who are hiring and firing the coaches are feeling the heat."

Garber makes a valid point. The name of the game in professional sports and more and more in college sports is winning. If you are not racking up the W's, you can be expected to be cleaning out your office in the near future. I certainly understand this idea and realize it is a dominant issue in the coaching profession. But yet I am more and more disturbed at the way that coaches and players are being treated today after being so loyal to an organization or university. While these individuals may not have been successful in most recent years, they certainly do not deserve to be treated in such a disrespectful way, especially in a time when loyalty has practically disappeared from competitive sports.

Evidence to this increasing phenomenon are the cases of NFL superstars Troy Aikman and Jerry Rice, who were released by their former teams this off-season and unfortunately for Rice, he will have to finish his career in a lesser other than that of the red and gold of the 49ers. It is disheartening for me to see more things going wrong with sports but despite it all, sports are still a large part of our culture and our society sees many in sports as role models. Are the behaviors of Gerald Myers at Texas Tech and Tom Jurich at Louisville the type of behaviors we want to be advocating to today's youth? I do not think so.

Why are more professional athletes not following the examples of Tony Gwynn, who waited over ten years to make his next appearance in the World Series. Why are they not imitating Dan Marino, who let the Dolphins to the Super Bowl in his rookie year but would never make it back, yet he never jumped ship in order to obtain that elusive ring. He retired a Dolphin.

Poor Gunther Cunningham did not even know that Vermeil had actually accepted the head coaching job a day before Cunningham discovered his job was in danger on ESPN.com. Vermeil even admitted to feeling very uncomfortable about the situation.

Despite all this, there are still those who take into consideration loyalty in sports, like Roy Williams, who decided to stay at Kansas as basketball coach despite being pursued so aggressively by North Carolina. Williams' basis for his decision: he wanted to remain loyal to his players who had been loyal to him. Well done, Mr. Williams, I hope more in professional and college sports start to follow your lead.

*The majority of information used in this commentary was taken from an article by Greg Garber in the Merit's College Basketball section of ESPN.com on March 22, 2001.

COMMENTARY

ANDREW BEVAN
Senior Writer

Bison take four from Holy Cross

Sweep of League foe sandwiched between splits vs. Binghamton and Bonnies

Courtesy of Athletic Communications
Gregg Farmery '02 recorded his fifth save against Holy Cross.

By ANDREW BEVAN
Senior writer

The Bucknell baseball team scored 25 runs on 26 hits this past Monday against Holy Cross en route to its second consecutive four-game sweep of a Patriot League opponent. With the sweep, the Bison move to 15-10 on the year and 8-0 in conference play.

Before traveling to Worcester, Mass. for the weekend, the Bison went up against non-conference foe Binghamton in a double-header at home on Tuesday, April 3. The Orange and Blue brought out the bats in the first game, slammimg 12 hits and the third when Lindberg walked and then moved to third on a double by senior right fielder Mike Ritz. Lindberg came home on an error and Ritz and Kevin Eiben '01 executed a double steal and then both came home on a double by Jeff Peck '01. Senior co-captain Chris Herron finished the damage when he followed with a double to score Peck.

Bucknell scored two more runs in the fourth and added another pair in the fifth. The Bison finished up their scoring thanks to a RBI-double by Ian Joseph '01 in the sixth. Every player in the Bucknell lineup had a hit and Ritz went 2-2 with two runs scored while Joseph went 2-4 with an RBI and Eiben and Peck had three RBIs apiece.

In the second contest, the visitors came from behind in the top of the sixth inning, scoring three runs off closer Gregg Farmery '02 to go on to win 5-3.

The Bison came back from a 2-0 deficit in the second by scoring two runs of their own. Sophomore Ben Krentzman drove in a run and then helped the cause for the second run by intentionally getting caught in a run down between first and second base, allowing Matt Draper '03 to score on a steal home. Krentzman got things going again for the Bison in the fifth inning when he led off with a single and then scored thanks to a single from David Brooten '03. The Bison took the lead by one, 3-2, but would not be able to hold on.

"We had a freshmen and sophomore lineup in this game," Head Coach Gene Depew said. "We had a chance to win but gave up runs in the bottom of the sixth."

Bucknell headed north last weekend to resume league play against Holy Cross. The first game was a nailbiter as the Bison played two runs in the top of the seventh to squeak out a 6-4 win. Herron singled in Lindberg and Eiben with two outs to gain the advantage.

The home squad got four more in

See BASEBALL, page A7

Bison drop 9-8 OT thriller to Lafayette

By CHUCK VICENTE
Staff Writer

Tri-captain Ashley Evans '01 had a strong offensive week, registering three goals and an assist, but it wasn't enough as the Bucknell women's lacrosse team dropped two more games. The Bison suffered a heartbreaking 9-8 overtime loss to Lafayette after losing handily to Monmouth, 8-2, earlier in the week.

On Saturday Bucknell took on Lafayette and tried to pick up its first Patriot League win. Unable to hold the lead they had for most of the game, the Bison lost a nail biter.

Despite the fact, the team was happy with the day's competition. "I thought we played great. We couldn't have done anything more out there. We left everything on the field," Nicole Kallis '03 said.

Bucknell struck first with goals from Ashley Evans '01 and Suzanne Raffaele '03. The duo helped give the Orange and Blue a 5-3 lead going into the second half. Paige Brewster '01 tallied her first goal of the season to be-send the game into overtime. In overtime, Lafayette scored two quick goals, making the score 9-7. Bucknell was able to come within one by a goal from Evans with one minute remaining but the Leopards' defense held, giving the Bison their eighth loss of the season.

"We played a great game versus Lafayette but just couldn't hold onto our lead. I was very proud of our effort and felt we really outplayed Lafayette for the most part, especially during the middlefield," Head Coach Barb Jordan said.

Unfortunately the Bison suffered more than a League defeat over the weekend, as Raffaele was injured in the final moments of overtime play. She was reported as tearing her ACL. Her recovery time is unknown.

Chris Rivera—The Bucknellian
Melissa Montefusco '02 looks for a teammate.

Sports Trivia

By Justin McCarthy

- 1) Who led the NBA in scoring for the most seasons?
- 2) Who was the first Harlem Globetrotter to be inducted into the NBA Hall of Fame?
- 3) What MLB team was the first club since the 1932 NY Yankees to not be shut out in a single game for the entire season? (Hint: It occurred last season)

1) Michael Jordan 2) Marquis Hayes 3) The 2000 Cincinnati Reds

Bison Calendar

OUTDOOR TRACK & FIELD

Sat., April 14
Bucknell Invitational
11 a.m.

WOMEN'S LACROSSE

Sat., April 14 vs. Villanova
1:00 p.m.

BASEBALL

Sat.-Sun., April 14-15
Sat: 12:00 p.m. at Navy (2)
Sun: 12:00 p.m. at Navy (2)

WOMEN'S TENNIS

Sat., April 14 at Pittsburgh
10:00 a.m.

MEN'S LACROSSE

Sat., April 14 at Colgate
4:00 p.m.

SOFTBALL

Sat.-Sun., April 14-15
Sat: 1:00 p.m. at Holy Cross (2)
Sun: 1:00 p.m. at Holy Cross (2)

THE Bucknellian

SECTION B

April 13, 2001

Weekend Weather

Weather courtesy of weather.com

Hi: 66
Low: 37
FRIDAY

Hi: 63
Low: 39
SATURDAY

Hi: 65
Low: 39
SUNDAY

Bucknell Opera Company delights

Chris Rivera—The Bucknellian

The Bucknell Opera Company presented "Tales from the Enchanted Forest" last Saturday night. Music from the show included pieces from "Cinderella," "Hansel and Gretel" and "Paul Bunyan." The concert was a collaboration between the Wilkes University Opera Workshop and the University Concert Choral.

Predicting tornadoes is risky business

By JESSICA RYAN
Staff Writer

As we begin the month of April, many breathe a sigh of relief; summer weather is quickly approaching and signs of spring are noticeable. But with this approaching weather we unfortunately enter into tornado season.

Although tornadoes may occur throughout the year, most occur between April and June due to the frequent thunderstorms and unstable air masses apparent during these months.

According to USA Today, tornadoes are a result of moisture in the lower atmosphere, as well as the lifting force that formulates due to cool air pushing the warmer air upward. The rising air, known as an updraft, is the location in which tornadoes form.

As the updraft climbs it rotates and, according to Scientific American, may become a funnel cloud or tornado if the rotation is significantly intense.

The funnel cloud may at any instant become a tornado, or could in fact, already be a tornado by having the bottom invisible due to the dirt and debris collected. Therefore, funnel clouds are just as dangerous and unpredictable as tornadoes.

One of the dangers of tornadoes is their inherent unpredictability. Sometimes the updrafts generate tornadoes, while other times they do not. Tornadoes, due to their rapid formation, contact and completion, are impossible to predict.

In order to gain information, thrill seekers—known as storm chasers—enter the paths of tornadoes in an attempt to determine factors such as formation, intensity and dispersal.

In the United States, storm chasers generally chase tornadoes in Tornado Alley, an area found in central United States which is prone to the generation of tornadoes. According to Window's to the Universe, this land "is the best breeding ground for the storms which produce tornadoes."

With the help of storm chasers, tornadoes and the factors contributing to their formation are finally being understood. However, they are still extremely difficult to predict due to their random nature.

Therefore, NASA, according to Scientific American, has created the Optical Transient Detector, an experimental detector in the Earth's orbit. With the use of this detector, NASA is hoping to provide further advanced warnings of tornadoes.

Although tornadoes are unpredictable in nature, the technology of NASA attempts to make the unpredictable predictable.

European Union deals with weighty issue

Courtesy of flags.com
The European Union has become an influential economic power.

By MIKE GORMAN
Staff Writer

A British market trader named Steven Thoburn was convicted on Monday by a district judge after charges of the British government raided his market. He was found guilty of selling products measured in "pounds and ounces"—or the "imperial"—system rather than the European Union-mandated metric system of measurement.

Thoburn is not sure whether or not he will appeal the ruling. If he does not appeal or is unsuccessful, he faces a maximum 5000 pound (app. $7,200) fine for each count and a criminal record, according to the AP. He may also be held liable for court costs as well.

Thoburn was warned several weeks in advance that his scales violated trade laws and that he was required to purchase inspected and endorsed scales.

This seemingly harmless case involving a little known statute from 1985 has sparked a firestorm in Britain. The reason for such a

Fire and Ice presents environmental issue

By KRISTA REISDORF
Arts & Entertainment Editor

The student literary/art magazine Fire and Ice will be presenting its fourth issue to the University around April 20. Each year, the magazine puts forth an issue that addresses a world problem and then donates the money to charities that are striving to resolve that problem. The theme of this issue is the environment and Fire and Ice has received submissions from people all over the country.

A group of enthusiastic first-year students started Fire and Ice in 1998 and the magazine's popularity seems to grow each year. "We wanted to come up with something completely different," said Sarah EnDyke '02, editor-in-chief of the magazine. "So we started Fire and Ice."

Now in the third year of publication, Fire and Ice is still a unique and successful magazine. It has acquired an awareness of issues and politics.

"We decided to get a lot more political," EnDyke said. "We're dealing with trying to combat the problems of the world and working to resolve them."

Fire and Ice has had the privilege of receiving original work from some nationally recognized popular artists and poets.

"These are all original pieces, which is really amazing," EnDyke said. "Most of the artists are big names in the comic industry."

William Stout, who recently lectured at the University, has donated some of his work, including an artistic translation of Pablo Neruda's poetry. The magazine has received poetry from Jane Goodall and work from Star Wars artist Matt Bush. Artist Drew Struzan donated a painting that will be used as a pull-out centerfold in the upcoming issue. Struzan has worked on such films as E.T., The Goonies, and Star Wars and has sent eight pieces to Fire and Ice.

"He was ecstatic about Fire and Ice from the beginning," EnDyke said. "He is the last true painter in Hollywood."

The selection process for the magazine is different from the operations of other magazines. Seven or eight people sit around a table and go through the poems—even if only one person likes a certain poem, it is put in the magazine.

"Many other magazines operate in a system where the majority rules," EnDyke said. "But if your poem touches one person, it could touch someone else out there."

"If a person likes a specific poem, it is often his or her responsibility to create the layout for that piece. It is a challenge for the staff to create art or poetry that will fit well with other pieces."

"Sometimes I'll work on a layout for 12 straight hours," EnDyke said. "Layouts are very personal to the staff."

Fire and Ice has received a lot of support from the professors at the University. Glynis Carr, an English professor, believes that the magazine is fighting for a worthy cause.

"I'm glad that students undertook this project," Carr said. "Environmental issues are extremely important and we need the perspective of artists if we're going to address the cultural issues of the environmental crises."

Carr sent out a call to people who would be interested in contributing to the magazine.

"Professor Carr was very excited," EnDyke said. "She sent a mass e-mail to people all over the United States and those people sent their work to us."

For those of you who find it hypocritical for an 80-page magazine to support the environment, have no fear. EnDyke assures that the staff is using the most environmentally-conscious printer and is also using recycled or recyclable paper.

"If you pick up the magazine and read it, it might inspire you to recycle," EnDyke said. "It might inspire you to help endangered species... it might inspire you to save the rainforests. It gives you hope that you can help the environment, which is the purpose of the magazine."

The magazine is free to University students, but Fire and Ice would appreciate donations. The proceeds will go to The Antarctica Project and the Chico Menendez Foundation (which works towards saving the rainforests).

"We did research on hundreds of organizations in order to choose the smaller ones that need the money," EnDyke said.

Students will be able to get an issue of Fire and Ice in the Langone Center, but the number of copies available is limited. The staff is proud of the issue and believes it will be as successful as the previous issues.

"It is a conglomeration of student work, professional work and faculty work," EnDyke said. "It's amazing to see all of the different ideas put together. There was a lot of talent and care put into it."

controversy revolves around the legislation's origins in the European Union, a hotly contested topic in Britain. While the original law was passed in 1985, British law was recently updated to resemble a similar ordinance in the EU.

The law states that while customers are allowed to ask for products in any system they wish, vendors must sell and record their products using the metric system. The charges brought against Mr. Thoburn have reignited a debate over Britain's entrance into the recently formed economic group.

According to CNN.com, 28% of the people feel that joining the EU would be a good thing for the country, while 23%—a very vocal controversy revolves around the legislation's origins in the European Union, a hotly contested topic in Britain. While the original law was passed in 1985, British law was recently updated to resemble a similar ordinance in the EU.

controversy revolves around the legislation's origins in the European Union, a hotly contested topic in Britain. While the original law was passed in 1985, British law was recently updated to resemble a similar ordinance in the EU.

See EU, page B5.

Arts & Entertainment

Japan Society hosts traditional dinner

By RUTH LI
Staff Writer

The Japan Society hosted the annual Japanese Festival Dinner in Larison Dining Hall on Saturday night. The dining hall was decorated with Japanese artwork, calligraphy, lanterns and lights. Japanese music played through the speakers. The entire perimeter of the room was decorated with rows of paper cranes to complete the Japanese cultural atmosphere.

Greeter and master of ceremonies, Wynne Wong '04, was dressed in a traditional kimono as she collected tickets and welcomed the 120 guests. Wong commented on how much support the event received.

"We had a great turn out," she said. "It's tough cooking and decorating for so many people, but it's wonderful that we were sold out."

The dinner began with a short poem read by Muroya Sensei ("Sensei" meaning teacher in Japanese). The poem was about the cherry blossom flower, which the festival celebrates.

The first dance performance was Hanagasa-ondo, a Japanese flower dance performed by Sarah Endyke '02, Cheryl Lee '03, Genny Silbert '02, Lana Tran '01 and Wynne Wong '04 and choreographed by Doi Sensei, a visiting Japanese teaching assistant.

Chris Purcell '03 gave an introduction on the art of Sumo, as Peter Van '02 and Will Anton '02 reenacted a sumo-wrestling match with Pavin Sriusvagool '03 as the referee.

Nobu Tamura '01 dazzled the audience with her vocal talents as she performed several Japanese songs with themes of spring, sunsets and first love. She also sang a traditional Japanese song in the Enka style, a bittersweet song from the depths of the Japanese heart.

Dancers perform "The Dance of the Flower Hat" at Saturday's event.

The last and perhaps most extraordinary performance was by Peter Van, president of the Japan Society. Van, dressed in a Gi and Hakama (typical dojo dress), demonstrated the 10 basic formal Kata (exercises) called the Seitei-Gata. The Seitei-Gata is one of many groups of katas that make up Iaido, a martial art involving the Japanese sword. Iaido, which means "the way of harmonizing oneself in action," is the art of reacting to a surprise attack by counter-attacking with a sword. The Iaidoka, one who practices Iaido, wields a sword not to control the opponent, but to control himself.

Of course, what is a dinner without food? The main course consisted of ginger-soy sauce pork (Buta-no Shoga Yaki), Yakitori chicken with made all of the dishes.

Brenda Choy '04, a member of the Japan Society, was pleased with the dinner.

"We all did a great job cooking, the performers spent a lot of time practicing, and everything was awesome! I had a great time and a lot of fun," she said.

The last event of the evening was showing appreciation for professors who will be leaving the University. Peter Van represented the Japan Society in thanking Muroya Sensei, Doi Sensei and Professor James Orr for all their work, inspiration and dedication.

Van stressed the importance of such events on campus.

"This is not just a dinner for promoting Japanese culture in general, but instead a celebration of the whole multicultural family," he said.

Maya Hagiwara '03 agreed that the community benefits from multicultural awareness.

"This is an opportunity to spread culture to Bucknell and also to Lewisburg," she said. "There are people who attended past dinners and return again. It is great to see a diverse audience with international, African-American and Caucasian backgrounds. The Japan Society is proud that this event was a success."

Write for A&E.
Email Krista at reisdorf@bucknell.edu

BU gets "slammed"

By KELLEN ALEXIS SMITH
Staff Writer

The Second Annual Bucknell Poetry Slam took place last Wednesday in The Bison. The Slam consisted of four poetry teams, each representing a campus organization—FLAG&BT, Mirth Grinder, Heaven's Hotbox and a fourth team composed of students and professors.

The objective of the Slam is for the teams to compete in four rounds while being evaluated by the judges who were chosen from the audience. The team with the most points wins the Slam.

However, it isn't as easy as it sounds. In traditional Slams, the poets must memorize the poem and only have three minutes to read it (a rule that the Bucknell Slam has also adopted). The poets are prohibited from using props and must rely on their words to get the point across. The judges can give a poem anywhere from zero (a poem that should have never been written) to 10 points.

Prior to the main event of the evening, there was an open mic session. Members of the University community displayed their poetic skills before a large crowd.

Students remained after the open mic to hear National Slam Champions Reggie Cabico (the night's enthusiastic emcee) and Beat Sia perform their own poems. Sia is featured in the Slam documentary Slam Nation and also in the film Slam.

The United States Ambassador to Hip Hop Toni Blackman performed with the help of University student Matthew Harlow '02 on beat box. After the entertainment from the special guests, the teams were ready for battle.

The audience in the Bison listened to countless poems, ranging in topics from "When I was Your Age," a poem performed by Professor Michael Carlin and Gene Smith, to "Six Pack" performed by Mary Agnes, to a political poem by Damon McNeil. Agnes got a 28 for her poem, the highest score of the evening.

All in all, the poets had a good time participating in the Second Annual Slam. With the success of this year's Slam and the close scores of the teams, everyone is already looking forward to some steep competition next year.

Theatre Department presents "The Heidi Chronicles"

By SARAH RIVES
Staff Writer

The Bucknell Theatre Department presented "The Heidi Chronicles" last weekend. The department always brings scenery, music, costumes, acting, lighting and stage movements together to create performances that work on different levels and stimulate many of our senses. "The Heidi Chronicles" was no exception.

I found myself so challenged by very thought-provoking scenes that I had to pay close attention to what the playwright, Wendy Wasserstein, was trying to say about American culture, expectations, women and relationships. Even if I had seen the play each of the four days it was running, I don't think I could have picked up on every important moment.

Heidi (played by Lisa Britt '04) is first seen in the front of a lecture room at Columbia University in 1989. She is speaking about female artists from the past and the standard art history texts that have apparently overlooked these women. Heidi's monologue establishes her as a strong feminist and an intelligent, perceptive woman who sees herself as an "informed spectator" of everything surrounding her. Throughout the play, Heidi is caught between not wanting to be in her present situation and not wanting to leave. This is something to which many people can relate.

The audience is taken back to Heidi's high school years (1965) and gradually moved forward to 1989. The audience follows Heidi's changing relationships with good friends (played by Matthew Griffin '02 and Abby Cizmar '03), acquaintances (played by Adam Hargis '03, Jennifer Huber '01, Misty Trezona '02 and Ashi Day '04) and an ex-lover (played by Timothy Wojton '03).

Somewhere between dances, a woman's support group meeting, a protest march, a wedding reception, a baby shower, a talk show, a business lunch, a provocative reunion speech, Christmas eve at a children's hospital and the last scene in Heidi's New York apartment, much is said about what drives human interaction.

Director Seth Rabinowitz believes the play has the ability to speak to everyone in some way.

"There are many different themes in this play and if you look hard enough and listen carefully, I bet you'll find one that speaks directly to you," Rabinowitz said in his director's note.

When do we alter what we are really feeling and who we really are in order to adapt to the situations we are in? Is it all right to go against popular cultural belief, or your own belief? How can you be surrounded by friends and still feel alone? Heidi is waking us up to the fact that this confusion happens all of the time, but the key is to not forget how you became who you are, and who helped you along the way.

Ben Harper releases live album

By CHAD FLOOD
Staff Writer

Most people wouldn't recognize Ben Harper if they ran into him on the street. His band, The Innocent Criminals, would be even more unrecognizable. They're actually four normal guys—sports fans, beach lovers, partiers. What sets them apart is that they happen to play some of the most heartfelt music of the past decade and Harper continues to shine as an African-American in a white-dominated music genre, rock 'n' roll.

Having already recorded four studio albums, the band decided to take a new route for their fifth. They released Live From Mars, a collection of live music that they had recorded over the years. For many acts, a live album is simply a boring rehash of old material in order to make a quick buck. This one, a solid blend of covers and original material, stands out among the best performance-based releases from the last few years.

Disc one is comprised of material recorded with the whole band, as well as a few special guests. The live versions of fan favorites like "Glory & Consequence" and "Ground on Down" add depth that no studio can provide. A cover of Marvin Gaye's "Sexual Healing" adds a bit of humor, but without disrespecting the original in any way. Rabinowitz, the Roots, lends his human beat box skills for an amazing rendition of last year's hit, "Steal My Kisses."

The second disc of the set chronicles Harper's solo career, as he performs many of the band's songs on his own. An acoustic "Please Bleed" is the highlight of the disc, along with the Verve's own "Like a King / I'll Rise."

Any huge Ben Harper fan will tell you this is a great album and also a new way to enjoy many of his best songs. However, these people are clearly biased. For any true fan of rock music, hearing this record will surely spark interest for Harper and The Innocent Criminals. While not his best work to date, it would be difficult to listen to this album and not want to witness the songs as they were recorded live.

BUSINESS & POLITICS

Diplomacy prevails; downed pilots released

Stopping short of a full apology, White House secures the return of 24 crew members

By MICHAEL DUDZINSKI
Staff Writer

24 United States Navy crew members remained on Hainan Island in the midst of an international political battle waiting to return home.

On April 1st, a U.S. Navy EP-3E surveillance plane collided with a Chinese fighter jet over the South China Sea. Though the U.S. crew did not suffer any fatalities, China lost the sole pilot of the fighter jet, Wang Wei, as it plunged over open waters. On Monday, Bush expressed resentment at the prolonged negotiation concerning the international squabble but insisted that diplomacy takes time. Polls show that Americans were supportive of U.S. actions and many citizens disputed the idea that an apology be given to China.

Admiral Dennis Blair, command-in-chief of the U.S. Pacific Command, blamed the crash on a series of continued reckless flying by Chinese air forces, according to the Associated Press. However, China ultimately held the American crew members at fault and demanded an apology from the United States. The White House would not offer a full-blown apology, agreeing that the crash was a result of accidental circumstances.

Chinese soldiers monitor reporters during the week-long standoff.

President Bush was angered by the lack of timely reaction to a request to rally crew members. Once the crew was convened, they stated that the late Chinese pilot was known to fly unreasonably close to U.S. spy planes in the past. It was also added that he was among the most notorious Chinese pilots for his reckless flying and operational procedures.

MSNBC reports that Rep. Henry Hyde (R-Ill.) argued that the U.S. should have demanded "that they apologize for surveilling our planes and flying so close to them." It cannot be proven that the crash was caused intentionally by the American crew. U.S. officials questioned the actions taken by China. They deemed it unreasonable for the Chinese to have boarded the plane and to have held the American crew.

President Bush wrote a letter to the wife of the downed pilot, Ruan Guqin, in response to her harshly written attack condemning the U.S. for allegedly defaming her husband. In the letter Bush expressed his condolences for the loss of her husband.

Senate moderates trim Bush tax plan

By MICHAEL BOLAND
Business & Politics Editor

President Bush suffered a minor setback in the Senate last Friday when the Senate narrowly voted to trim the size of the Bush tax cut and appropriate more money for domestic spending.

The measure in question was the Senate budget resolution, a rough outline of that body's spending plans for the following fiscal year. The Senate approved approximately $1.25 trillion in tax cuts over 10 years, $400 billion less than Bush requested. The difference, according to the Senate plan, would be devoted to discretionary domestic spending and new programs.

According to CNN.com, the vote marked the end of a hectic week; the White House had furiously courted the votes of wavering Senators, both liberal Republicans and conservative Democrats. As only one Democrat (Zell Miller of Georgia) had endorsed the Bush tax cut, the Bush team could not afford more than one defection from Republican party ranks in order for the tax plan to pass the evenly divided body. The administration knew going in that several Republican Senators—particularly those from left-leaning New England states—were skittish about the size of the tax cut.

Still, the administration had hoped to bring them back into the fold, focusing on two Senators in particular, Lincoln Chafee of Rhode Island and Jim Jeffords of Vermont. Chafee's vote was given up for lost early in the process; he publicly announced that he would be supporting a Democratic alternative, a tax cut in the neighborhood of $1.2 trillion.

Vice President Dick Cheney and powerful Republican Senators turned their attention to Sen. Jeffords, who had indicated that he might be willing to exchange his vote on the tax cut for greater federal spending on a particular special education program, at a cost of approximately $180 billion over 10 years.

Trying to cut a deal, the White House offered the Senator some funding but not as much as Jeffords wanted; he ultimately joined 49 Democrats and Republican Sens. Chafee and Specter (Penn.) in voting to reduce the size of the tax cut by $400 billion.

Sen. Trent Lott cast a strategic vote with the liberal block as well; he can now use an arcane Senate procedural maneuver to request a revote of the resolution at a later date. In the meantime, he told the AP, he will continue to court centrist Democratic Senators in an effort to get the necessary support for the President's plan.

The House had already approved a budget resolution that included the full $1.6 trillion in tax cuts; the next step is conference committee, wherein delegates from the House and the Senate will come together and try to reconcile the differences between their two budget resolutions.

The final value of the tax cut to be submitted to both bodies for approval, will likely be negotiated up from the $1.2 trillion the Senate approved but down from the $1.6 trillion that the House approved. The White House is optimistic that most of its tax cut will be restored in conference, and it will be able to claim political victory.

According to Reuters, the full Bush budget proposal for fiscal year 2002 was $1.96 trillion, including a four percent increase in discretionary spending.

EU From page B1

you know that little voice
inside that says "I can't?"
this summer,
[crush it].

Bring your "can-do" attitude to Camp Challenge. Where you'll get paid to learn how to become a leader and acquire skills that'll help you meet the challenges you'll face in your career. Apply today at the Army ROTC department, with no obligation. Before that voice tells you to take a vacation.

ARMY ROTC Unlike any other college course you can take.

Time to stop and think—zero tolerance has gone too far

By TOM ELLIOTT
Staff Writer

It's time for people in this world to start thinking again; this whole reacting thing isn't working out. Principle needs to outweigh emotion and reason should be incorporated within every function. This brings me to my next point—guns are good.

We should all thank University administrators for taking bold and courageous action in the face of a dire and prolific problem. Alas, this campus will no longer be ravaged with frequent shootings and inexhaustible gun warfare. Why? Simple, guns are no longer legal in any form on this campus, even within the sales at Public Safety. I have always been against arming those zealous, violence-starved fiends, anyway.

Presumably in response to the unregistered weapon found on campus, the administration has acted, most decisively, delivering a blow for civility! No longer will hunting rifles be legally stored safely in the confines of Public Safety—an awkward attempt to stop gun-related insanity. No longer will loonies possessing guns capable of umm, gunfire, that could and may be used for senseless evil be allowed to wreak their havoc and cause destruction. This is obvious because they will no longer be able to store their guns with Public Safety when they aren't creating mayhem.

What I am trying to stress is that people overreact these days, in this case spawning from the lack of an actual incident. The only people this rule change will hurt are the law-abiding. Where will hunters store their weapons now? Maybe illegally, in their dorm rooms? This is a minor example, yet it should be propounded loudly, for it is typical of a trend of "zero tolerance" seen nationwide. Examples pour in from around the country.

Three weeks ago, an eight-year-old third-grader at Lenwil Elementary School in West Monroe, Louisiana was suspended for... not shooting a weapon, not possessing a weapon, but drawing a weapon. The drawing was of a soldier who held a cane in one hand and a knife in the other. According to a report in the Monroe News-Star: "Edward Davis, principal of Lenwil, described the drawing that landed the pupil in-school suspension on Thursday as upsetting."

Raleigh Walker, the boy's father, told the paper that "his son drew the picture as a tribute to a relative who was in the Army."

The principal said, "We have zero tolerance for drawings with guns. We can't tolerate anything that has to do with guns or knives."

Mr. Walker went on to say how he had to have a discussion with his son, reminding him that it was all right to possess guns and they weren't necessarily "bad."

This boy's punishment was comparatively mild; he was placed on "in-school suspension."

Christopher Kissinger, an 8-year-old first-grader at South Elementary School in Jonesboro, Arkansas, was suspended last Wednesday after an incident in the school cafeteria where school officials said he aimed a breaded chicken strip toward a teacher and said "Pow, pow, pow." Kelli Kissinger is outraged that her son could serve a three-day suspension for an incident she saw as harmless. According to the Jonesboro Sun, "The teacher thought I was pointing it at her, but I was pointing it at my friend," he said.

Two eight-year-old boys in the Augusta Street School in Irvington, New Jersey were arrested on March 15th for making "terroristic" threats. The children had made guns out of paper and then jokingly threatened to kill fellow students. In accordance with the school's zero tolerance policy, the principal called the police, who interrogated the children for five hours, concluding the paper guns posed enough threat to charge them with making terroristic threats.

A totally intolerant attitude, totally dismissive of anything dealing with guns—doesn't work, just like a totally abstinence-based sex education does not work. If people are left in the complete dark, they will learn for themselves.

Analogies can be drawn with almost any vice. But teaching has historically produced more success than muzzling and censoring.

rooe News-Star: "Edward Davis, principal of Lenwil, described the drawing that landed the pupil in-school suspension on Thursday as upsetting."

Raleigh Walker, the boy's father, told the paper that "his son drew the picture as a tribute to a relative who was in the Army."

The principal said, "We have zero tolerance for drawings with guns. We can't tolerate anything that has to do with guns or knives."

Mr. Walker went on to say how he had to have a discussion with his son, reminding him that it was all right to possess guns and they weren't necessarily "bad."

This boy's punishment was comparatively mild; he was placed on "in-school suspension."

Christopher Kissinger, an 8-year-old first-grader at South Elementary School in Jonesboro, Arkansas, was suspended last Wednesday after an incident in the school cafeteria where school officials said he aimed a breaded chicken strip toward a teacher and said "Pow, pow, pow." Kelli Kissinger is outraged that her son could serve a three-day suspension for an incident she saw as harmless. According to the Jonesboro Sun, "The teacher thought I was pointing it at her, but I was pointing it at my friend," he said.

Two eight-year-old boys in the Augusta Street School in Irvington, New Jersey were arrested on March 15th for making "terroristic" threats. The children had made guns out of paper and then jokingly threatened to kill fellow students. In accordance with the school's zero tolerance policy, the principal called the police, who interrogated the children for five hours, concluding the paper guns posed enough threat to charge them with making terroristic threats.

A totally intolerant attitude, totally dismissive of anything dealing with guns—doesn't work, just like a totally abstinence-based sex education does not work. If people are left in the complete dark, they will learn for themselves.

Analogies can be drawn with almost any vice. But teaching has historically produced more success than muzzling and censoring.

rooe News-Star: "Edward Davis, principal of Lenwil, described the drawing that landed the pupil in-school suspension on Thursday as upsetting."

Raleigh Walker, the boy's father, told the paper that "his son drew the picture as a tribute to a relative who was in the Army."

The principal said, "We have zero tolerance for drawings with guns. We can't tolerate anything that has to do with guns or knives."

Mr. Walker went on to say how he had to have a discussion with his son, reminding him that it was all right to possess guns and they weren't necessarily "bad."

This boy's punishment was comparatively mild; he was placed on "in-school suspension."

Christopher Kissinger, an 8-year-old first-grader at South Elementary School in Jonesboro, Arkansas, was suspended last Wednesday after an incident in the school cafeteria where school officials said he aimed a breaded chicken strip toward a teacher and said "Pow, pow, pow." Kelli Kissinger is outraged that her son could serve a three-day suspension for an incident she saw as harmless. According to the Jonesboro Sun, "The teacher thought I was pointing it at her, but I was pointing it at my friend," he said.

Two eight-year-old boys in the Augusta Street School in Irvington, New Jersey were arrested on March 15th for making "terroristic" threats. The children had made guns out of paper and then jokingly threatened to kill fellow students. In accordance with the school's zero tolerance policy, the principal called the police, who interrogated the children for five hours, concluding the paper guns posed enough threat to charge them with making terroristic threats.

A totally intolerant attitude, totally dismissive of anything dealing with guns—doesn't work, just like a totally abstinence-based sex education does not work. If people are left in the complete dark, they will learn for themselves.

Analogies can be drawn with almost any vice. But teaching has historically produced more success than muzzling and censoring.

IF CREDIT CARDS GIVE YOU SO MUCH FREEDOM, WHY DO I FEEL IMPRISONED BY DEBT?

Where smart students go

you can deal with it.com

PHEAA

Cardio Kicks!
HIT LIKE A GIRL

With: Laura Kamienski & Danielle Snyder

Drop-in and monthly discounts with student ID. Cut out this ad and bring it out with you for a free class!

(One coupon per person)

You'll love this.
It's the workout with pulse-pounding music and martial arts moves in an atmosphere that crackles with excitement.

only at
KICKS
MARTIAL ARTS FOR WOMEN

106 Market St., Lewisburg
850-4685
www.kickswomen.com
Martial Arts Women's Martial Arts Federation

Vennari's Pizza
 524-4441
 10 E. Main St., Lewisburg, PA 17837
 Mon. - Thurs. 11:00 a.m. - 10:00 p.m.
 Fri. - Sat. 11:00 a.m. - 11:00 p.m.
 Free Delivery Available
 10 E. Main St., Lewisburg • 524-4441

BIRKBECK'S comfort footwear
 April 14 - 22 receive a slightly worn pair of shoes for 10% off a pair of Birkbeck's shoes, sandals, or boots to be worn by the Columbia Mountain Women's Center. In honor of Earth Day 2001.
 PHILIPS SUPERSTORE & COTTAGE
 10 E. Main St., Lewisburg • 524-4441

SUPER HEROES!
 ALL MAN & CHICKEN MAN!
 Love BJ's
Super Buffalo Wing SPECIAL!
 12 for $4.95
 24 for $7.95
 17 North Market Street
 SEELINGROVE
 374-9841
 291 Hill Street
 DANVILLE
 275-5110
 Sunday - Thursday
 9PM - Closing
 EAT-IN ONLY!

ON CAMPUS Physical Therapy Clinic
 Monday - Friday
 8 a.m. - 5 p.m.
 Field House Athletic
 Training Suite
 577.1060
EVANGELICAL COMMUNITY HOSPITAL
 SPORTS MEDICINE CENTER
 Physician prescription required.
 Please check insurance policy for restrictions.

U-SAVE AUTO RENTAL
Low, Low Rates!
 *We bill insurance companies direct.
 *Major credit cards accepted.
 *Must be 21 or older.
Earning the right to serve you each and every time.
524-0000
 Rt. 15 & Nth 7th St.
 Lewisburg, Pa. 17837
 Mon-Fri 8:00-5:00
 Sat. 8:00-12:00

TANNING
 First Impressions Salon
 April Special: FREE
 Paraffin Wax Dip with Manicure
 Service. $5.00 Savings!
 Located between
 A-1 Lock & Key
 And Dominoes
 Plaza
 275-822-9636

BIRTHRIGHT of Sunbury
 Free Pregnancy Test
 Confidential Counseling
AN ABORTION ALTERNATIVE
 Hours: Mon - Wed - Fri 12:30 to 4 pm
 351 Woodlawn Ave.
 Sunbury, Pa. 17837
 570-286-8560
 1-800-550-4900

FOR RENT
LEWISBURG: Apts & houses
 near BU campus. 1-6 bdrm
 units. Parking provided.
 Heat, washer/dryer, dishwasher included in some.
 Prof. 24-hour maintenance.
 Range: $275 - 1,200/mo.
 for 2001/2002. CALL NOW
 Brynwood Rentals
 Ph: 570/524-2121 x 2.

Tuesday is Bucknell Night at Imperial Lanes
 Tuesday Nights
 2 hour Special for $20
 9:30 - 11:30 only
 Rent-a-lane for up to 6 people
 Call 742-9211 to Schedule
 Private Parties
 Sorority/Fraternity/Date Parties
 Enjoy Rock-n-Bowl with Lane Quake Sound!
 Leagues and Open Bowling Available

Summer I
 May 21-June 27, 2001
Summer II
 July 2-August 8, 2001
WILLIAM PATERSON UNIVERSITY
 More Choices • More Courses
 Outstanding Faculty
 Wooded Hilltop Campus
 1.877.WPU.EXCEL
 www.wpunj.edu

Arizona Cafe
 Outdoor Patio and Fireside Dining
 Quesadillas
 Chicken Soft Tacos
 Monster Burritos
 Enchiladas
 Seafood
 Steaks
 Most Meals $9 - $13 No Charge Cards (Checks Accepted)
 Bring in this coupon for
 1 FREE
 virgin margarita
 with each entree
 purchased
 Open Tues-Thurs 11:30-9, Fri & Sat 11:30-10, Sun 11:30-8
 Reservations Recommended

Susquehanna Valley Limousine Inc.
 With a long tradition of quality service to the Bucknell Community, SVL offers:
 Service to and from destination door to door
 Schedule your own shuttle to and from Airports for Trips
 Rate sharing network for all of our clients
 More parties, couples, company events and and limousine fun
 Service 24 hours a day, 7 days a week
 For more information or to make reservations
 call 1.800.685.5567
 973.720.2436

SCIENCE & TECHNOLOGY

Sega still has a slim chance at survival

By ANDRES SOLTREN
 Staff Writer

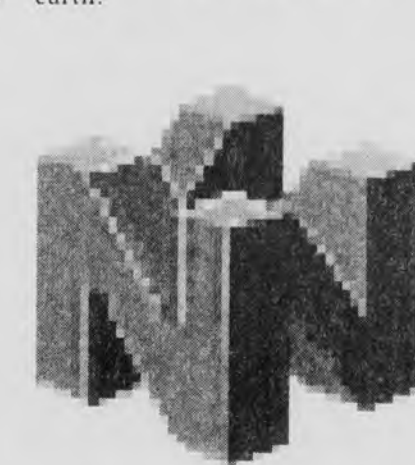

Over a month ago, Sega, one of the premiere video game producers in the world, decided to drop out of the hardware business entirely. The company stopped making the Dreamcast, Sega's 128-bit console. Sega has been losing money steadily because it has not been able to make a profit with its hardware.

Although this may seem like a terrible blow for the Dreamcast and Sega, this is a great decision for the company and the video game industry.

The Dreamcast may be dead, but Sega's dream will continue in spectacular fashion.

First of all, Sega has not actually abandoned the Dreamcast at all. The system has already produced so many great franchises that the Dreamcast will not just disappear off the face of the earth.

Courtesy of www.nintendo.com

The Dreamcast is also the first video game platform to offer online gameplay. Their Seganet is one of the most important advances in video game history.

With quality releases like NFL 2K1 and the technological wonder Phantasy Star Online, Sega will ensure that long after the Dreamcast is removed from the production line.

Nearly 30 games are slated to hit the market before the end of next year. This number may not necessarily be achieved, but it still puts an emphasis on the future of Sega: software.

According to zdnnet.com, in a bold move last month Sega announced that it would be developing software for other video game consoles, such as Sony's PlayStation 2, Nintendo's Gamecube and Microsoft's mysterious X-Box. What does this mean for video gamers?

Not only will other game systems feature older Sega franchises, such as Sonic the Hedgehog and Tomb Raider, but Sega will also continue to develop new games for those systems.

Games, scheduled to be released on the Dreamcast, will now be switched over and updated for other game systems, according to zdnnet.com.

Already known for stellar games, Sega will now have the benefit of choosing the systems it feels can best support its software.

One of the most thrilling surprises is that Sega will collaborate with Nintendo to make games.

Nintendo's Game Boy Advance is coming out in a couple of months. Believe it or not, Sonic the Hedgehog Advance will be one of the launch titles. This is an unprecedented move by Sega.

The idea of Sega and Nintendo collaborating would have seemed ridiculous only a few months ago. Now, the announcement is enough to make gamers giddy.

The potential ramifications this move may have on the entire gaming industry are enormous.

Will Sonic become the first mascot to be featured on every system?

Will Sega, always known for outstanding software, become the premiere developer in the

The vaunted Playstation 2 has been hobbling because of a botched launch, shipping problems and a plethora of mediocre games (remember the Christmas shortage?).

With the launch of both Nintendo's Gamecube and Microsoft's X-Box later this fall, it is certain that a financial war is brewing between the video game powerhouses.

The industry might not be able to handle all three of these next-generation systems at the same time.

While Sega's hardware would have certainly been crushed by the other three systems, it actually benefits them now as Sega can now develop for all three systems.

The company could also bring games to the system of its choice, giving that system a tremendous advantage. By concentrating on software, Sega actually has a chance to come out on top. Meanwhile, this move by Sega ensures that video gamers themselves will benefit the most.

In effect, Sega has turned what seemed to be their darkest hour into what may become its defining moment.

This is a brilliant move. At least it seems that way now. We'll just have to wait and see this fall.

Courtesy of www.fregame.com

Ancient silk web recipe revealed

By JOSIE CETTA
 Science and Technology Editor

Since the time of the dinosaur, spiders have been around to spin their silk webs. Just recently scientists are discovering how this process could be replicated in other, more accessible species, such as goats, in order to use this silk commercially.

According to The New York Times, researchers at the University of California - Riverside and the University of Wyoming have discovered a spider species, known as orb weavers, that have similarly composed silk threads.

This presents the possibility of there being a basic recipe for silk production. If this is the case, researchers have the ability to find it. However, this is not to say that other varieties of silk do not exist.

Spiders can extract a stream of silk without the necessity of temperature or pressure extremes.

Silk is a tough fiber, yet also light and elastic. Manufacturers have considered the use of spider silk for commercial use, but with little success.

Spiders contain silk glands used to spin webs and lower and raise themselves. Within these glands, silk proteins are dissolved in a solution of water and proteins.

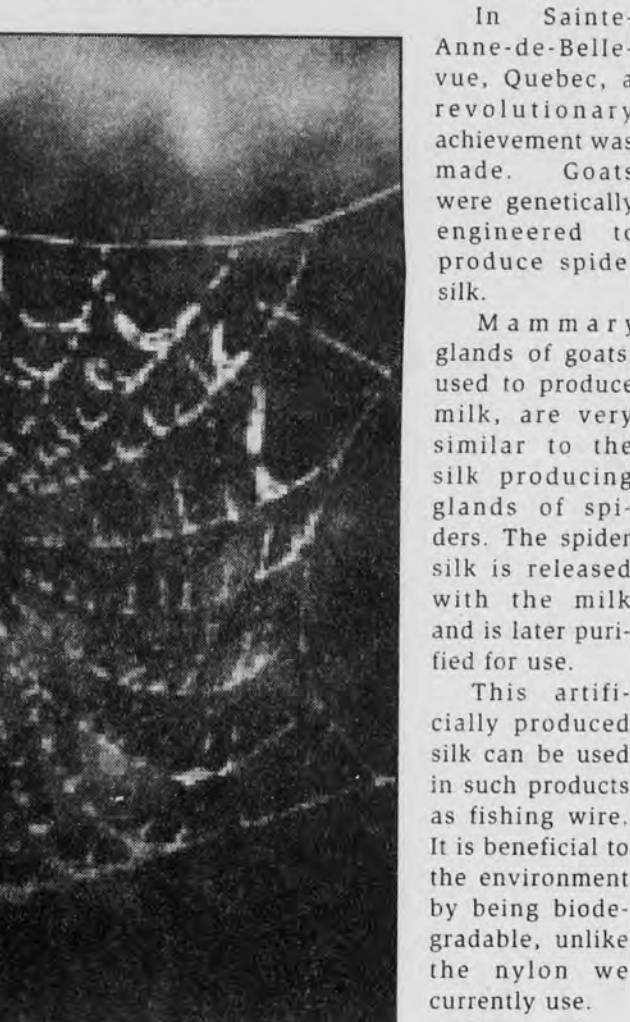

This solution is squeezed out of a duct by the spider's appendages, or spinnerets. Proteins are folded and come out as solidified silk fibers, thousands of amino acids long.

Genetic scientists have been working on decoding these silk proteins. They have found repeating amino acid sequences that interlock silk filaments. Recently, researchers have decoded 14 spider species' silk proteins.

The New York Times reported Dr. Gates, M.D. of the University of California, to have said, "The basic units are the same. That was kind of amazing to us."

This was true of all spider species except for primitive spiders.

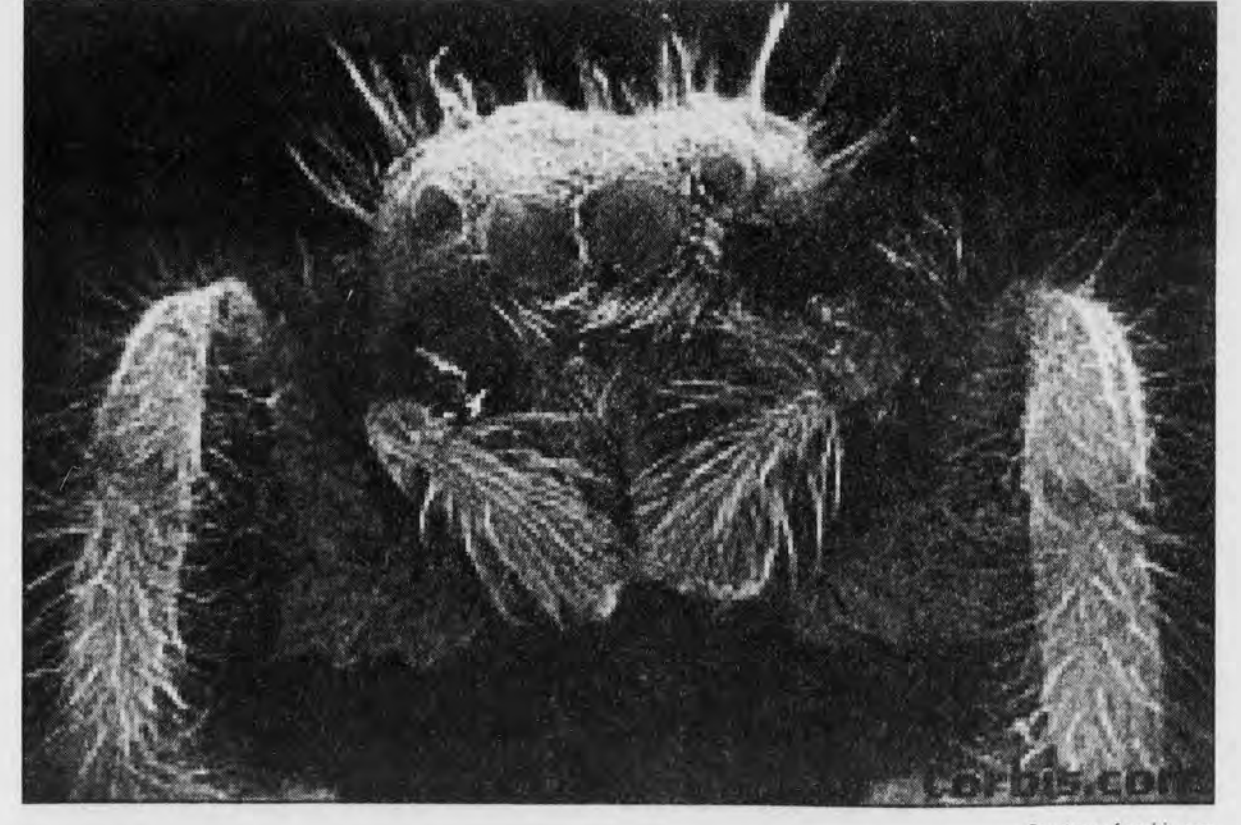

Courtesy of www.Corbis.com

A spider's long day's work is capitalized on by humans.

Administration with the idea of putting this artificial silk on the market.

Who would have ever thought a goat would replace a spider in silk production? One can only wonder what genetic engineering will come up with next.

Courtesy of Corbis.com

Getting up close and personal with an original silk web weaver. This spider produces webs of silk.

summer

NORTHWESTERN UNIVERSITY

www.northwestern.edu/summernu

earn progress fulfill live
 EARN FULL-YEAR CREDIT IN BIOLOGY, CHEMISTRY, PHYSICS AND FOREIGN LANGUAGES ACCELERATE PROGRESS TOWARDS YOUR DEGREE
 FULFILL A DISTRIBUTION OR GENERAL EDUCATION REQUIREMENT
 LIVE ON NORTHWESTERN'S LAKESIDE CAMPUS, JUST NORTH OF CHICAGO!
 Call 800-FINDS-NU for a catalog.

FEATURES

An abroad perspective: field research in Madagascar

Courtesy of Alexander Piel

DWCT teams are normally made up of villagers, as they have a better respect for lifestyles and conservation.

By ALEXANDER PIEL
Senior Writer

People are usually surprised to hear me describe my abroad experience as being challenging and difficult more than anything else. That is not say that I regret the time; to my surprise, those months would not have predicted before my departure.

I left for Madagascar at the end of May 2000 to spend five months with the Durrell Wildlife Conservation Trust, a European-based non-governmental organization with conservation teams dispersed throughout the so-called developing world.

Working to protect rare and poorly known endangered species, the DWCT has the unique philosophy of employing local students and conservationists instead of bringing over European ones. This approach relies on the assumption that villagers are more likely to listen to their own countrymen than to foreigners, especially in respect to lifestyle decisions and conservation issues.

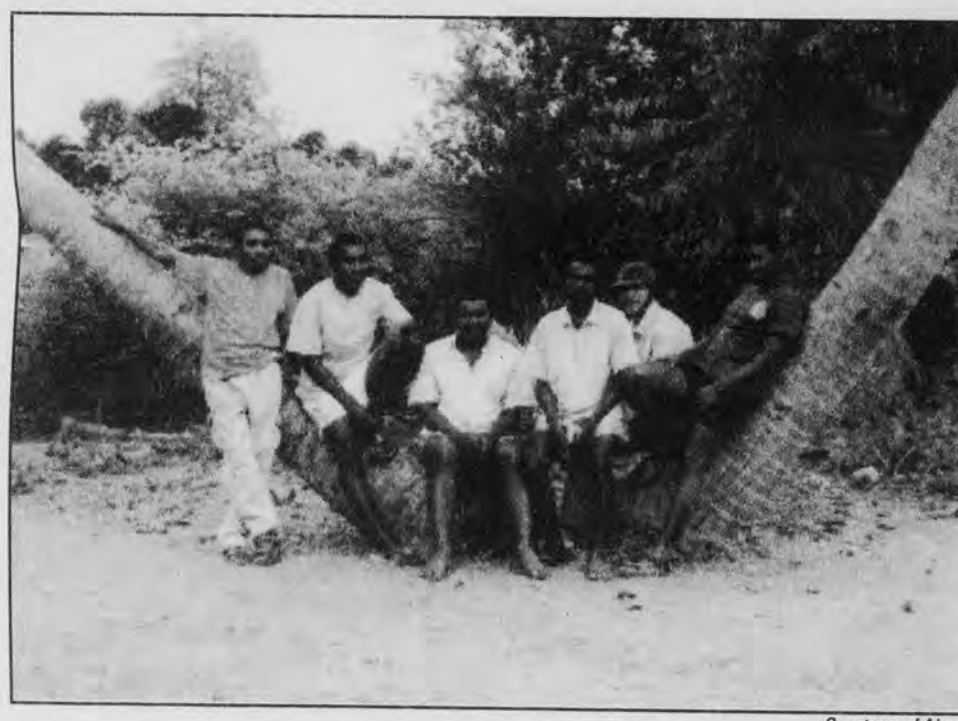

I joined a team of four Malagasy researchers studying an uncommon and native species of teal (Anas bernieri). Though I knew little of waterfowl behavior or ecology upon my arrival, I quickly learned that conservation work in this country includes more than scientific expertise; it first demands an understanding of cultural differences and basic human needs.

Little is known about this species of teal and, as a result, our our knowledge of the teal's ranging patterns. Such findings, though normally expected, are uniquely significant considering the unfamiliarity we have with this species.

The work required just in finding this site, however, paled

Courtesy of Alexander Piel

Alex and his conservation team spent five months in Madagascar studying the native teal.

missions throughout my months in Madagascar were devoted to locating seasonal molting sites, wet and dry season habitats and researching local patterns with regard to sightings/hunting of the teal.

Though my time there was limited to five months, our August discovery of a heavily teal-populated dry season habitat buried in a secluded village prompted immediate advancement in in comparison to what daily living demanded. Our time was spent almost entirely in small isolated villages along the West Coast where the teal are found. In the field, days were typically spent catching and ringing teal, on habitat surveys, or hosting conservation "fetes" (parties) with relevant conservation themes.

Monthly visits were made to the capital Antananarivo to exchange plot luxuries such as running water and food variety, as life in these villages can be psychologically, physically and emotionally rigorous in every way. Few areas in the country have electricity and these villages were no different—many were so remote that the inhabitants had never left them.

French is the second national language behind Malagasy, but only a few merchants, scholars and tour guides speak it; and those who do speak with heavy Malagasy accents. Rarely do villagers know

U.S. involving third world development and destitution are really just an imposition of our values and expectations upon unfamiliar cultures.

Though I was there initially in hopes of protecting an endangered species of teal, I found myself engrossed in cultural differences, overall lifestyle choices and personal self-reflection. I had much time to think out there.

I departed Madagascar in December with more questions than answers concerning the problems of species-loss and the disparity between first and third world development. My personal conflict lay in coming to grips with that I understood myself better, as well as what doing conservation successfully demands in Madagascar. Though our work on the teal hopefully contributed to its conservation and population increase, I learned more about the relevant components involved in conservation and about the role Europeans play, especially, how they are received. Questions of obligation, imposition and culture are never far from issues in this field.

Lifestyle demands and loneliness forced me to learn more about myself than I ever thought possible, as well as about human nature, personal adaptation and cultural influences. This experience in Madagascar has profoundly altered my approach to life and will remain a crucial part of my development as an individual and scientist.

Courtesy of Alexander Piel

An isolated home with no electricity in Masoarivo. This is typical for a Malagasy.

SAMS Dance: 24 hours of support

By GREG KASI
Contributing Writer

Last Friday, April 6, I accepted the challenge to participate as a 24-hour dancer at the annual Students Against Multiple Sclerosis (SAMS) dance marathon.

The Bison, the site of the dance, was decorated and adorned with balloons, streamers, colorful posters and games to advertise help for SAMS and their charity. Great prizes were up for grabs for the lucky one who could win at "Fish Pong." The SAMS Dance was ready to switch into high gear for the full 24 hours.

At 5 p.m., the event began with superb tones from the Bison Chips. The Silhouettes and Two Past Midnight. Their music put everyone in the mood to dance the night away. At 7 p.m., the University's radio station, WVB, took over, broadcasting live from The Bison with tunes of a different theme during every hour. Campus groups also volunteered to sponsor each hour throughout the night.

Kappa Sigma, Delta Delta Delta, Kappa Alpha Theta, Chi Omega, Sigma Phi Epsilon, Kappa Kappa Gamma, Alpha Phi Omega, Catholic Campus Ministries, The Environmental Club, The Psychology Club, Calvin & Hobbes, SAMS, Activities & Campus Events, Big Brothers / Big Sisters, Taylor Street House, The French Club, The Animal Defense League and Bison Abroad all sponsored an hour with a varied musical theme to raise money for the cause.

As the hours ticked away, however, it fell into the hands of the 24-hour dancers to make this event a real success. These dancers went across campus obtaining pledges or donations of money for their efforts to dance for a particular length of time. Once these pledges or donations were received, the real challenge came in actually dancing the full 24 hours. We danced, danced and then danced some more, trying to keep our bodies moving, our stomachs fed and most importantly, our eyes open. Somehow we made it. Maybe it was the great tunes, great friends or the knowledge that we were dancing for a great cause and that the entire campus was behind us.

In the end the SAMS dance, in conjunction with the sponsoring groups and the 24-hour dancers, raised over $2000 to fight multiple sclerosis. "The dance went better than expected this year. Thanks go to all the 24-hour dancers and the sponsors from the Lewisburg community and the campus at large. It was truly a success," the President of SAMS Jen DiFazio '03 said.

DiFazio also commented on plans for the future: "Next year we are hoping for a stronger turn-out of 24-hour dancers. More prizes and more free food will be offered to those who take on the challenge of dancing for 24 hours. Hopefully, the majority of our proceeds will come from the money raised by the 24-hour dancers."

Liz Nelson '03, a fellow 24-hour dancer, commented on her feelings about the experience. "The dance was a lot of fun, and it was certainly for a great cause. The best part was being on WVB and singing 'Grease' over the air at 5 a.m.," she said.

All in all, the SAMS dance was a tremendous success. It was certainly a great experience from this dancer's perspective. I have high hopes for next year's dance and I will certainly take on the challenge of once again trying to dance a full 24 hours. I hope other members of the University community will do the same so we can make our fight against multiple sclerosis even more successful in the future.

Courtesy of Alexander Piel

Adjusting to lifestyle changes was difficult, but not impossible. Holes were dug for use as toilets and showers were either out of buckets or from nearby rivers.

THE Bucknellian

The weekly campus newspaper of Bucknell University

http://www.orgs.bucknell.edu/bucknellian

April 20, 2001

Volume 127, Number 11

Features

Abroad Perspective: Brisbane, Australia
See page B4

Sports

Men's lacrosse advances to the NCAA Tournament for the first time
See page A5

Students awarded Fulbrights

By JENNIFER JENCHURA

Staff Writer

The University announced this week that Melinda Lemke '01 and Stephanie Sturm '01 are winners of 2000-2001 Fulbright Scholarships. Lemke and Sturm were both granted Fulbright English Teaching Assistantship Awards. Lemke, a secondary education major, will represent the United States in Korea by teaching English in a middle school, while gaining insights to Korean language and culture. Sturm, an international relations and German major, will teach English in Germany and study the Sorb minority.

Chris Rivera—The Bucknellian

Peter Van Emmergh—The Bucknellian

Melinda Lemke '01 (top) and Stephanie Sturm '01 are winners of 2000-2001 Fulbright Scholarships.

and taking classes such as Tae Kwon Do.

"By traveling and working in Korea for a year, my overall knowledge and experience with Asian culture will be significantly heightened," Lemke said. "I am a firm believer in experience learning. By taking part in this program my furthered knowledge of different cultures and people."

See FULBRIGHT, page A2

Wrestling remains in jeopardy

By ANDREW BURR
Sports Editor

Controversy surrounding the anticipated termination of the University's wrestling program was escalated this week after The Daily Item erroneously reported that the end of Bucknell wrestling would officially be announced last Tuesday.

The Lewisburg-area paper indicated that the University had already made the decision to cancel its 57-year-old wrestling program and that an official announcement was soon to follow.

The announcement never came, though, as University officials have remained silent this week regarding the issue. Despite the mix-up, there are still indications that a decision regarding the fate of wrestling is very near.

In an official statement concerning gender equity in collegiate sports, the University reported that, "Bucknell is moving toward proportionality in participation opportunities for varsity student-athletes. How the University will accomplish proportionality is still being determined. Details will be announced before the end of the current school year."

The Standard-Journal reported Tuesday that Interim Vice President for Student Affairs Charles Pollock '70 met privately on Monday with first-year Interim Head Wrestling Coach Tim Wittman and Athletic Director John Hardt.

Wittman declined to comment on the meeting. However, according to Pollock, "the University has not made a final determination for wrestling and the program is not imminently in danger."

Pollock's words offer little comfort, especially to those with intimate relations to Bucknell wrestling. Coaches, alumni, community members and current wrestlers fear that it is already too late to save the program from Title IX of the Education Amendments of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, which is said to have been responsible for the cancellation of over 400 high school and college level wrestling programs around the nation since its enactment in 1972.

Title IX was designed to guarantee equal opportunities for female participation in sports by mandating a level of female participation roughly equivalent to the male/female student population at institutions. Despite sponsoring 14 sports for

Chris Rivera—The Bucknellian

Due to the implementation of Title IX, the future of the University's wrestling program remains questionable.

both males and females, the University's athletic department contains 157 more male athletes than female athletes. The University is currently in the fourth year of a five-year plan to comply with Title IX provisions.

Efforts by institutions to equalize the ratio-of

See WRESTLING, page A2

Council votes on party restrictions

By REBECCA ROWLAND
Editor-in-Chief

The Lewisburg Borough Council voted unanimously this past Tuesday to advertise a disorderly gathering ordinance, authored by Borough Solicitor Andrew D. Lyons with input from the Borough Police Committee. The ordinance will vote on at a later date for enactment.

The ordinance is the first of its kind in that it not only punishes hosts and attendees of disorderly gatherings, but also makes landlords responsible. Under the ordinance, landlords will be fined each time police respond to their rental unit. The fees will then rise exponentially based on the frequency of police visits within a certain time frame.

In a case where police respond to a home where there is no landlord, but is owned by the occupant, the homeowner will be fined under the same guidelines.

"The police have to enforce the ordinance evenly across the board," Lyons said at Tuesday's meeting.

If passed, this ordinance will have a strong impact on the student-renter community. While "disorderly gathering" is a civil charge, criminal charges may be issued to party hosts and attendees if deemed necessary by police.

"We look at this as another tool to use to get rid of parties as soon as we get the call," Borough Police Chief William R. Nietz, Jr. said.

Several council members expressed concern over the fact that the proposed ordinance seems to single out certain locations and populations.

"It seems as though we are picking on certain properties," said Stacy Hineck, Council member.

Lyons and Nietz did not deny this; however, Lyons explained that the fact that police respond disproportionately to certain areas of the Borough is the basis for the law.

"We are trying to control certain kinds of gatherings and, unfortunately, this results in controlling certain kinds of people," Lyons said. "This is not what the ordinance says, but it is the reason for it."

Dean of Students Richard Ferraro was contacted for comment but, lacking full knowledge of the proposed ordinance, declined comment.

"This is not a bad idea," Matt Cole '01 said. "Uninvited people tend to crowd the streets even after the party's host have asked them to leave."

Cole has been instrumental throughout the year in working to strengthen town-gown relations. He has criticized some of the current attitudes of Borough residents in terms of their feelings toward student neighbors.

"What I hope this doesn't do is allow the police to think that they have power that they don't or shouldn't," Cole said.

Lyons was quick to point out that not only would the ordinance be applicable across the board, but that it has not been passed into law yet.

"The current draft of the ordinance is a starting point, not necessarily an end point," Lyons said.

Grossman addresses violence in society

By JIM LEAHY
Managing Editor

Certain branches of the media, according to retired Lt. Col. Dave Grossman, insist on keeping the public in the dark about a 1972 Surgeon General's report that named violence in TV and video games as a public health emergency. In his Tuesday night speech "Violence in Society," Grossman addressed violence in the media and how it affects children.

Grossman explained that the medical community reports that until age seven, children do not know the difference between fantasy and reality and that violent images on television screens are a public health issue.

"This is a good message for students not only because this violence directly affects them, but also because they will be young parents soon, dealing with these same issues," Director of Student Health Services Donald Stechschulte said.

See GROSSMAN, page A2

'Ray Bucknell: Spotlight on achievement

Continuing from last week, the features below highlight individuals on campus who, the editorial board feels, have considerably enhanced the campus community. In many cases, their accomplishments stem from teamwork and group cooperation. We regret that we cannot recognize all of the hardworking individuals and groups on campus.

Next week, we will honor the editorial staff's choices for People of the Year.

Staff Profile: Mark Davies

By LAURA DAY
News Editor

Almost 30 years ago, Mark Davies '74 was a University student without any intention to return to Lewisburg after graduation. Today, he is Dean of Admissions, excelling in a competitive field and leading a team that continues to bring better classes of students to campus each year.

The incoming class of 2005 will culminate the adoption of "Excellence and Access," a five-year strategic plan to recruit stronger classes and further enhance the University's national reputation. However, the Admissions Office has already surpassed its goals one year early.

The class of 2004 was one of the most qualified classes in the history of the University. Without the ingenuity, unending effort and strategic planning of Davies and the Admissions Office, there would not be the conspicuous advancement in student recruitment and acceptance.

"I am continually impressed with the energy, commitment and talent of those who work in Admissions," Senior Associate Director of Admissions Judith Compton Ellis said.

The University's strategic plan originally aimed for a 45 percent ac-

Chris Rivera—The Bucknellian

Dean of Admissions Mark Davies leads a successful recruiting process for the University.

ceptance rate, a class average SAT score of 1268, a 26 percent return yield of students offered admission and an increase in the students from the top one-tenth of their high school classes to 60 percent.

Only the last goal is yet to be reached.

The number of students in the top-tenth of their class is more complicated each year, as more public high schools are not providing class ranks. The class of 2004's

See DAVIES, page A3

Senior Profile: Cheryl Brooks-Williams

By RACHEL LASKOW
News Layout Editor

and never looked back," Brooks-Williams said.

Being highly involved at a school is normal for Brooks-Williams. She took part in just as many activities in high school.

"I knew I'd be involved [at Bucknell], but I didn't expect I'd be leading so many organizations," Brooks-Williams said.

Since her freshman year, Brooks-Williams has served numerous roles within Activities and Campus Events (ACE), formerly known as Bucknell Activities Council (BAC). Through her college career, she has been on the Programming Board. From fall 2000 to spring 2001 she was Theme Weekends chair, from spring 1999 to spring 2000 she was president and from spring 1998 to fall 1999 she was vice-president of finance.

At the beginning of this year, BAC transformed into ACE. Brooks-Williams remained dedicated to helping the program through the transition.

"Even though the transition from BAC to ACE was somewhat difficult for her, she remained involved as the Theme Weekends chair and fulfilled all her commitments while adapting her own leadership style to see the

"I never really found it that tough to come so far from home for college. I got involved the first second I could to meet tons of people

See BROOKS-WILLIAMS, page A3

Chris Rivera—The Bucknellian

Cheryl Brooks-Williams '01 shares her experiences with prospects at Admissions.

Public Safety Log

April 11, 2001

STUDENT HEALTH SERVICES
TRANSPORT—Public Safety responded to Smith Hall for the report of an ill student. Student Health Services transported the individual to Evangelical Community Hospital Emergency room for treatment and the student was later returned to campus.

April 12, 2001

INFORMATION—Public Safety responded to Bucknell Hall for the report of a staff member's concerns regarding a non-University applicant for a seminar program who exhibited signs of depression. Contacts were made with the university officials where the male is currently attending school to advise them of this person's condition.

MISSING PROPERTY—A student reported to Public Safety that property was taken from her unlocked vehicle, and the rear view mirror was detached, while the car was parked in the lot behind Hulley House. The individual did not want to contact the local police.

April 13, 2001

THEFT—A student reported to Public Safety that unknown person(s) had removed her front and rear license plates from her vehicle while it was parked at Bucknell West. East Buffalo Township Police Department was notified. The incident is under investigation.

TAMPERING WITH FIRE EQUIPMENT / PULL STATION—Public Safety responded to a fire alarm activation at Vaughan Literature Building and found that unknown person(s) had activated a pull station in the front lobby of the auditorium. No suspects or witnesses were found in a search of the area. The incident is under investigation.

April 14, 2001

INFORMATION / POSSIBLE ACT 64 VIOLATION—Public Safety responded to Swartz Hall on two occasions for the report of the odor of marijuana. No evidence of drugs could be found and the investigation was terminated.

April 15, 2001

INFORMATION / ASSIST LOCAL POLICE—While on routine patrol on South Sixth Street, Lewisburg Police Department and Public Safety observed an intoxicated male walking on the sidewalk. Public Safety returned the student to his Swartz Hall RA. University and police citations issued for public drunkenness and underage consumption.

INFORMATION / ASSIST LOCAL POLICE—While on routine patrol on South Sixth Street, Lewisburg Police Department and Public Safety observed a male carrying a cup of what appeared to be beer. A PBT test indicated the student was intoxicated. Citations were issued for underage consumption and an open container violation.

DISORDERLY CONDUCT / UNDERAGE CONSUMPTION—Public Safety responded to Swartz Hall for the report of a male, non-University student urinating on the floor of a female student's room. The intoxicated male was located and determined to be under the age of 21 years. East Buffalo Township Police Department responded and issued citations for underage consumption and disorderly conduct.

INFORMATION—Public Safety

responded to Delta Upsilon Fraternity for the report of water balloons being thrown outside the building. Public Safety contacted a house officer who stopped the activity.

April 16, 2001

INFORMATION / BROKEN WINDOW—Public Safety responded to Personnel for the report of broken glass in the front door. No signs of entry were visible. No witnesses or suspects could be found.

INFORMATION / MEDICAL TRANSPORT—Public Safety responded to Roberts Hall for the report of an ill student. The individual was transported by ambulance to Evangelical Community Hospital Emergency Room for treatment and later returned to campus.

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF—Public Safety responded to Swartz Hall bike rack for the report of damage to several bicycles parked there. East Buffalo Township Police Department was notified. The incident is under investigation.

THEFT BY UNLAWFUL TAKING—A student reported to Public Safety that while he was in class unknown person(s) entered his unlocked room in Swartz Hall and removed several items. The incident is under investigation.

INFORMATION / MISSING VEHICLE—A student reported to Public Safety that her locked vehicle was moved from Walker Street where she had parked it. In a search of the area, the vehicle was located nearby on Loomis Street. It could not be determined how the vehicle was moved since the student had the only key in her possession.

INFORMATION—Public Safety

TITLE IX THREATENS WRESTLING

WRESTLING From page A1

male/female athletes usually consist of either funding new female varsity programs or terminating male varsity programs. Ironically, it was the Grappler's Club (the wrestling fundraising organization) that pulled together enough money to fund the birth of women's golf and water polo in 1998. But the problem has only worsened, as female athletic participation has declined since then.

Other independent factors of Title IX may also contribute to the University's decision to consider the termination of wrestling. Among those issues are pecuniary concerns and recent NCAA sanctions against wrestling, although the University has not directly commented on either of these matters. The cancellation of wrestling would be presumably easier than other male sports, because wrestling is not part of the Patriot League.

In an email to former wrestler Steve Caruso '95, Hardt stated that, "in the final two years of the University's Gender Equity Plan, Bucknell's leadership must decide how the University's resources will be allocated and whether we can still afford to sponsor 28 varsity sports programs."

It isn't especially clear whether Hardt was referring to Title IX expectations or finances when he chose the word "afford" in his statement. If the larger issue at hand is money, however, the situation would nearly parallel the dismantling of the Syracuse wrestling program earlier this year, which failed to raise enough money to fund a new female sport to save its own.

The other factor the University has potentially considered during this time is the NCAA imposed sanctions on the wrestling program in 1999 for violations that occurred between 1994 and 1996.

The Bucknellian reported in September 1999 that the wrestling program had committed; "violations of NCAA rules governing recruiting, summer athletic camps, employment of student-athletes and prospective student athletes, extra benefits, ethical conduct and institutional control." Two of the main violations stemmed from Christmas gifts which then-Head Coach Bob Ferraro gave to a prospective Bucknell wrestling recruit, and the fact that the same possible recruit temporarily resided in Ferraro's apartment.

Caruso told The Standard-Journal that he "believes the university was willing to bring the situation on itself—despite the negative repercussions—because it would aid the overall goal of getting rid of wrestling. With the mat coach struggling as far as recruiting and then the appointment of an inexperienced coach last year... the university probably hoped the team would be cut this year without much notice."

Despite feelings among the wrestling community that the fate of wrestling has already been decided, supporters of the program have not lost hope and Hardt has pledged that, "... the best interests of Bucknell's students and student-athletes will guide the University's leadership through this challenging process and that no decision which impacts any of Bucknell's existing varsity programs will be made without careful and thorough consideration of all viable alternatives."

Caruso has arguably been the most actively involved alumnus, as he continues to correspond with Hardt, the local press and the Board of Trustees. But other alumni are finding ways to help as well. Tim Panganos '84 wrote a letter to University President Steffen Rogers urging him to continue wrestling. The Daily Item reported alumnus William Graham '62 offered to donate $500,000 over a five-year period to fund a new female varsity program in the interests of saving wrestling. The University has not publicly stated whether it intends to accept or decline the offer.

Current university wrestlers are also doing what they can to help save the sport.

"The team has been a little depressed, because we aren't confident in terms of the team being there next season," Brian Faliciglia '02 said. "We're trying to bring attention to the issue by contacting a lot of alumni, writing letters and getting people to write back. We work extremely hard and for this to be taken away, part of our lives will be taken away."

GROSSMAN From page A1

Grossman gave basic statistics that show how American culture is at the center of some criminal acts in other countries. In roughly a dozen countries, crime rates have increased almost sixfold in the last 15 years as American television programs have been broadcast around the globe. These countries include Canada, Britain, Norway and Greece. In the United States, aggravated assaults are up seven-fold in the last 70 years, while our per capita incarceration rate has soared to an all-time high of 500 inmates per 100,000 people.

Grossman maintains that we are not prepared to deal with violence.

"Every school in America has smoke alarms, fire alarms, fire drills and kids are well prepared," Grossman said. "Do you know how many children were killed in school fires in the last five years? Zero. But how many children were killed or injured in school shootings in the last five years? Hundreds."

Grossman said that schools need to focus on educating children about violence.

"So the probability of a school shooting is remote, but it is hundreds of times more likely than a school fire. And we spend all that time preparing for a fire and virtually none preparing for violence." However, Grossman added, "the only thing that will completely change the environment for violence is a cultural change."

According to Grossman, brutalization has been used for centuries to turn people into machines capable of violence under extreme discipline. While it may be useful to soldiers on the battlefield, children are affected differently.

"In the hands of children," Grossman said, "video games foster bullying and revenge desires."

Television media has become a business similar to the tobacco one, in order to sell more, TV needs an addictive substance-violence.

Grossman also suggested that television has allowed children to become conditioned to violence. Violence in the movies is associated with fun. Citing The Exorcist, he said that when that movie first came out people were horrified. But when it was released more recently, the same movie made audiences laugh.

American culture looks to TV and the media for its role models. Grossman

Jim Leahy—The Bucknellian

Dave Grossman discusses his views on violence in society with a University student during a press conference on Wednesday.

pointed out that as we make heroes out of soldiers who did the best job killing people in war, we also flash the faces of juvenile killers over the television and inspire others to be just like them. In many nations around the world, it is a criminal act to put the names and faces of juvenile mass murderers on TV news reports or on the covers of magazines and newspapers.

Although American newspapers and magazines often give these juvenile criminals front-page coverage, Grossman's speech centered on the media's lack of attention to what has been going on behind the scenes of the issue.

"The media is holding back information that can help people make better and healthier decisions while profiting from the selling of the violence. This is insidiously evil," Stechschulte said.

Grossman has dedicated much time to public awareness of the consequences of media violence.

"Last fall we had a unilateral joint statement to Congress by the AMA, APA, American Academy of Pediatrics and other child medical groups that said media violence causes violence in kids and violent video games appear to be particularly dangerous," he said. "I asked the students here last night if they heard of it and three hands went up. Then when I asked who heard about Firestone tires, the whole place had their hands up."

Grossman is frustrated that the general public is shielded from the information.

"All of our doctors and all of our child psychologists tell Congress that a product in their homes is potentially dangerous and the public doesn't know a stinking thing about it. But Firestone tires may have caused about 100 deaths and the whole country is hearing about it," he said. "The American people have to know that this is hypocrisy, this is censorship."

Grossman is a nationally recognized scholar, writer and lecturer on the topic of "killyology"—the study of killing and the reactions of healthy people in situations where there is killing. He trains the FBI, Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms (ATF) and Green Berets and has instructed courses for law enforcement personnel.

"This is the tool everybody's waiting for to go back to Ellis Island and find their ancestors," said Wayne Metcalfe, who helped direct the project for The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

World Briefs

Burundi coup foiled, government says

BUJUMBURA, Burundi (CNN)—Burundi's army put down a coup attempt Wednesday by a group of junior army officers opposed to President Pierre Buyoya's negotiations with Hutu rebels, The Associated Press reported.

In a statement read on the independent Bonasha radio station, the army said 30 junior officers in the Tutsi dominated army were surrounded inside the studios of state-run Radio Burundi.

The announcement was attributed to Minister of Defense Cyrille Ndayirukiye. Soldiers were stationed around the radio station in downtown Bujumbura, Burundi's capital. Streets were sealed off near the building, but residents walked calmly through downtown, discussing the coup attempt. No violence was reported.

Israelis smash Palestinian police post in Gaza

JERUSALEM (CNN)—Israeli forces carried out a "pinpoint operation" that destroyed a Palestinian police post in southern Gaza on Wednesday, saying the target was a source of gunfire on Israelis.

The sudden move prompted fears that the Israelis were repeating a temporary occupation of Palestinian-controlled territory in northern Gaza a day earlier.

But the Israel Defense Forces said the troops returned to Israel promptly after completing their mission, near Rafah just inside the border.

Srebrenica suspect denies charges

THE HAGUE, Netherlands—A Bosnian Serb commander has denied playing a key role in the massacre of Muslims in the Srebrenica massacre.

Dragan Obrenovic, who was detained over the weekend, pleaded not guilty when he appeared before The Hague's war crimes tribunal on Wednesday.

Obrenovic faces five charges in connection with the massacre of more than 5,000 Muslim men and boys in what was then a United Nation's so-called safe haven.

He led the Zvornik Brigade at the time of the killing in July 1995, widely regarded as the worst atrocity to have taken place in Europe since the end of World War II.

Mississippi River spills over; hundreds to abandon homes

ST. PAUL, Minnesota (AP)—The surging Mississippi River forced hundreds of shoreline residents to abandon homes, halted barge and rail traffic and left weary sandbaggers in four states hoping for one thing Wednesday—no more rain.

"Something like this, it might take two weeks just to get down below the flood stage," said Randy Eddy Jr., 34, from his father's home on French Island, Wisconsin, surrounded by water, thousands of sandbags and a half a dozen pumps.

Hundreds of Wisconsin and Iowa residents were chased away from low-lying riverside areas Tuesday, unsure when they would return home.

Ancestor search easier with Ellis Island database

SALT LAKE CITY, Utah (AP)—Tracking ancestors who entered the United States through New York City's Ellis Island used to mean poring through endless reels of microfilm. Now, it can be as simple as a few clicks of a computer mouse.

On Tuesday, Ellis Island officials and the Mormon Church introduced a new database containing arrival records for the 22 million immigrants who entered the port of New York from 1892 to 1924.

The database, which includes 70 percent of all U.S. arrivals recorded during that period, is available to Ellis Island visitors and on the Internet.

"This is the tool everybody's waiting for to go back to Ellis Island and find their ancestors," said Wayne Metcalfe, who helped direct the project for The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

Fed cuts rates again

NEW YORK (CNN)—The Federal Reserve cut short-term interest rates by an aggressive half-percentage point Wednesday in a surprise move between its regular meetings meant to avert a recession.

The central bank's policy makers cut the target for the federal funds rate, an overnight bank-lending rate, by a half-percentage point to 4.5 percent. They also lowered the rarely used discount rate, for loans by the Fed to banks, a half-percentage point to 4 percent.

The move comes just weeks before the next regularly scheduled meeting of the Federal Open Market Committee, the policy-making arm, on May 15.

India, Bangladesh clash along border

DHAKA, Bangladesh (CNN)—Bangladesh officials have said that 16 Indian soldiers have been killed along with two Bangladeshi soldiers in a clash over a narrow strip of border territory.

The Indian government immediately denied any of its troops had been killed.

Bangladesh took over the 250-acre (one square kilometer) site on Tuesday. The government of Bangladesh claims the India government has illegally occupied the strip since 1971 when Bangladesh was declared independent of India.

Bangladesh officials said two Indian soldiers had been captured.

French cult killing trial begins

GRENOBLE, France — A Swiss orchestra conductor has gone on trial for his role in doomsday cult killings.

Michel Tabetchuk, 58, has denied any involvement with the Order of Solar Temple cult, which lost 74 members in ritual killings in France, Switzerland and Canada in the 1990s.

He appeared in court in Grenoble, in the French Alps, on Tuesday charged with "association with criminals with the intent of preparing crimes and assassinations."

The spirit of cooperation at Bucknell is what makes this place work in a very special way and what makes me continue to enjoy representing Bucknell to prospective students and families," Ellis said.

Davies seconds Ellis' thoughts. "This isn't about me, I'm part of a team—it is about the Admissions Office, administration, faculty, the financial aid office, etc. I've been a really blessed person having great people to work with through the years."

Compiled by Laura Day,
courtesy of cnn.com

CAMPUS MEMBERS SHOW TEAM LEADERSHIP

DAVIES From page A1

average SAT was 1275, which is 40 points higher than when the strategic plan took root. Forty-two percent of all applicants from the class of 2004 were offered admission; the University received a record-setting 7,511 applications.

"The class of 2004 was definitely an accomplishment," Davies said. "It was thrilling for us."

However, the records set by the class of 2004 were short-lived. "We are never satisfied," Davies said.

Clearly, the Admissions Office did not relax its expectations for further improvement. The class of 2005 submitted almost more than 500 additional applications and the University accepted only 38 percent. The Admissions Office projects 29 to 30 percent yield on admission offers, outstripping the original goal.

Although it is easy to measure success in terms of numbers, the Admissions Office is quick to identify aspects of student life that are more difficult to quantify improvement.

"Easy measures, like SAT scores and class ranks, have definitely risen," Davies said. "What is harder to measure are improvements in areas like diversity."

However, the Admissions Office has not fallen short in this area either.

Prior to the "Excellence and Access" plan, students of color made up only eight percent of the student body. As a result of the strong efforts of Admissions Officer Gil Villanueva and the entire office, students of color consisted of 13 percent in the class of 2003 and the class of 2004 was 12.7 percent.

"In order to improve the quality of student life here, we needed to bring a better mix of students," Davies said. "We have made progress... are we where we want to be? No."

Paralleling its recent accomplishments, the Admissions Office's long-term goal is to have a students of color population of 15 percent or more.

In addition to ethnic diversity, the Admissions Office has also seen strides in socio-economic and geographical diversity. "These are three areas that we really feel committed to," Davies said.

Davies must continually respond to the changing environment outside the University, as well as within.

"Every year is different and exciting," he said.

To adjust to new demands, Davies and the Admissions officers must be flexible. According to Associate Director of Admissions Shena Molyneux ("Davies" is very open to new ideas and new ways of doing things. He is always there for the staff when they need guidance or direction but he also gives us the freedom to do our projects the best way we are able."

In its daunting task to not only make institutional decisions that consistently improve student life, but to simultaneously recruit students who will improve it, the Admissions Office stresses its unique "A + B" plan. "Bucknell is an institution where you can do many, many things," Davies said. "To understand the breadth of opportunity is most important."

After a major marketing study in the mid 1990s, the University began its "college-like university" campaign. Emphasizing the numerous opportunities on campus, comparable to a large university, but also accentuating the personal attention of a small liberal arts school, the "A + B" plan has been "successful beyond expectation," according to Davies. "We will keep the theme going... it's a unique theme and people are drawn to it."

Although marketing sells the product, the University's reputation is based on its quality. The innumerable constituencies that make up the University have all contributed to the success of the Admissions Office.

"Our faculty has been there for us. They play a key role in the process, participating in the calling program and open houses. Our alumni have also been very helpful and supportive," Davies said. "We are very fortunate to have students, interns and tour guides who just love this place. They believe in it."

While promoting a very attractive university, the Admissions Office must face the issue of a price tag. Part of the Office's strategic plan has been price control. In the last few years, the University has cost a little less than many of its reference schools. For example, Colgate was $2,600 more expensive for the 2000-2001 school year.

"The gap between competitors and what we charge is noticeable for some families," Davies said.

With the University's recent tuition increase, the Admissions Office may face another obstacle.

"I am always worried about price increases because I want this place to be affordable for all students. The best way to make it affordable is to make sure we have sufficient financial aid," Davies said.

Balancing cost with value is both a goal and challenge for the University. It has undertaken various capital projects, such as the new Recreation and Athletic Center and Coleman Hall renovation.

Additionally, the University's financial aid budget, endowment and scholarship funds continue to rise.

"The plan for the expansion of the campus and improving technology are key elements to help justify the cost of the institution," Davies added.

Other aspects of the University are also growing quickly and demanding more attention from the Admissions Office. The use of electronic communication between the Admissions Office and prospective students has become much more common. Consequently, the admissions team has had to devote more personnel and time to the University's website, email correspondence and online applications.

The Admissions Office may also find itself thrown into another world, with the possibility of merit aid looming in the University's future.

"It is a whole new initiative to think about fundraising for merit aid," Davies said. "There are pressures everywhere about merit aid... it will be a challenge for [the Admissions Office]."

Despite the upcoming challenges the office might face, it has built a strong foundation and precedence for success. The University's retention rate far surpasses the country's average. Nationally, 39 percent of students graduate from the same school they entered as a freshman. The University's retention rate is roughly 87 percent.

"It says a lot about the students that are looking at Bucknell... it says a lot about our faculty reaching out to our students," Davies added. "I want to help Bucknell become a better place, to have that richness of students, to have students that will challenge the faculty in new ways."

The admissions staff is undoubtedly a team that genuinely cares for the University and success of its students.

"The spirit of cooperation at Bucknell is what makes this place work in a very special way and what makes me continue to enjoy representing Bucknell to prospective students and families," Ellis said.

Davies seconds Ellis' thoughts. "This isn't about me, I'm part of a team—it is about the Admissions Office, administration, faculty, the financial aid office, etc. I've been a really blessed person having great people to work with through the years."

BROOKS-WILLIAMS From page A1

new group," Assistant Director of Campus Activities and Programs Kathy Arnett said. "Change is already when it happens to an organization in which so much of your time is already invested, however, Cheryl is very dedicated and committed to organization in which she is involved."

Nick Yaichuk '02, who has worked with Brooks-Williams on BAC and ACE since the first semester of his freshman year, agrees that Brooks-Williams helped the transition of the organization.

"As president, Cheryl started a major transformation of the organization and its approach to programming. The quality and quantity of our programs dramatically increased under her leadership," Yaichuk said.

Assistant Director of Campus Activities and Programs Carolyn Strickland has worked with Brooks-Williams in both ACE and Leadership Education and Development (LEAD) Team. Strickland began working as an Assistant Director of Campus Activities and Programs in July 2000. Brooks-Williams was one of the first students she met in the fall.

"Since Cheryl has been involved in both organizations for several years, she has been a great resource for me," Strickland said. "She has been able to give me the perspective of how the groups have functioned in the past, what has worked well, what needs to be improved. This has truly been helpful and allowed me to easily become acclimated to Bucknell."

Aside from ACE, Brooks-Williams has held numerous other leadership positions. She has been team leader for the LEAD Team, vice president of class of 2001, president of the Student Alumni Association and vice president of Mortar Board.

"Cheryl has indeed been very involved in many different facets of university life," Assistant of Students and Director of Campus Activities and Programs Dean Karl Conrad said. "Part of her success is her unique understanding of the institution given her intimate involvement in all of her positions; Cheryl could be one of the best spokespersons for the overall Bucknell experience."

Brooks-Williams has also been part of many other University activities throughout her four years here. She was a section editor for L'Agenda, music librarian for the band/pep band, lector and eucharist minister and lector for Catholic Campus Ministry, member of Alpha Lambda Delta and Delta Mu Delta honors societies and has held various chair positions in Kappa Alpha Theta sorority.

Kim Luedee '01, one of Brooks-Williams' friends and sorority sister, remembers sharing Theta experiences with Brooks-Williams.

"I first met Cheryl Brooks-Williams through our sorority, Kappa Alpha Theta, mostly during our junior year rush. From the beginning, she struck me as a person who was an enthusiastic Bucknellian and participated in more clubs and activities than anyone else I had encountered here. During that recruitment period, I can recall Cheryl yelling out more times than I could fathom, 'Oh, wow, I know that girl through 'blank' activity.'" Luedee said.

When Brooks-Williams isn't busy leading an organization, she can be found in Admissions Office, where she has worked since spring 1998. She began working in the Admissions as a tour guide and progressed to being a student coordinator for the overnight visit program for prospective students. She later worked as a student receptionist and then became a student intern from spring 2000 to spring 2001.

"During the second semester of her junior year, Cheryl became an intern in our office, which is the top student position available in Admissions," Admissions Services Coordinator Pam Glass said. "All of her positions involved a great degree of responsibility, as well as enthusiasm for Bucknell. Cheryl is always willing to share her Bucknell experiences with prospective students and their families."

"I love Bucknell and I wanted to share that experience with others. They love the fact that I'm from Minnesota while talking with prospective students in Admissions," Brooks-Williams said.

Aside from being involved with countless organizations and interning at Admissions, Brooks-Williams still finds time to study and have a social life. "[My biggest accomplishment] is being able to be involved on campus, maintaining Dean's List and also having a social life," Brooks-Williams said. Kerri Reiter '01 also sees that quality in Brooks-Williams.

"The thing that impresses me most about her is her willingness to take on any project and put all her energy into it. And she is able to do this with multiple projects, while still keeping up with her schoolwork and social life," Reiter said.

Brooks-Williams is pre-law, with a BSBA in management and a BA in economics. She is minoring in legal studies. Brooks-Williams' leadership skills also shine through in classes.

"She is a conscientious and engaging student who thrives when given control over her own learning. She works well in teams, taking on leadership when needed and appropriate, without dominating others," Assistant Professor of Management Tammy Hiller said.

Management Department Chair Nancy Weida also sees the connection between Brooks-Williams' academics and co-curricular activities.

"Cheryl is one of those special students who do so many things very well and always with a smile on her face. She can always be counted on to do what she says, and much beyond. It's always terrific to have someone excel in both academics and co-curricular activities," Weida said.

One of Brooks-Williams' most memorable classes is Management 101. "[In Management 101] I learned how to deal with people in a work environment and it was interesting to see the company's progress over the semester. It was good to see people who didn't know each other come together and work so well together," Brooks-Williams said.

Although Brooks-Williams manages to find time for activities, academics and a social life, she sometimes finds it challenging.

"The biggest challenge here is learning when to say no. I've had to learn my limits

Sports

Leibowitz eyes redemption at League Championships

A scorecard error cost Nick Leibowitz '02 last year's Patriot League individual championship and Bucknell the team title

By BRIAN KLOTZ
Staff Writer

If you were to ask what the nightmare of any athlete was, it would undoubtedly be a time when victory is firmly in hand, but in an uncontrollable turn of events, the crown dissolves in front of his/her very eyes. For junior golfer Nick Leibowitz, that very situation is one that sits in the back of his mind and never seems to go away. "I have not, and don't think I ever will put last year behind me," Leibowitz vowed.

The Bucknell men's golf team ended up in second place in the Patriot League last year—its best finish in school history—ironically because of the small number two.

While on his third and final round, enroute to a nine-stroke individual victory in 2000 Patriot League Golf Championships, Leibowitz learned of a grave error on his score card from the previous round where he had received a score of two on the 14th hole rather than his actual score of a three. "We tried to keep it quiet for a while," Head Men's Golf Coach Tommy Thompson remembers. "Eventually word got around and I finally went out to him on the course."

Leibowitz's second round score

Courtesy of Athletics Communication

A scorecard error cost Nick Leibowitz '01 the league's individual title.

was disqualified for this mistake, causing the team to fall back on its next best score, which was eleven strokes more than Leibowitz's.

"After that, the rest of the team just hung in there and played the best that we could," Thompson said.

When it was all over, Leibowitz's sure-win was gone and the team fell to second behind Navy.

"Without question, my biggest concern was for Nick," senior captain Ken Kosteva said. "I felt terrible for him, since the scoring error cost him the individual title and then the team title. It should have been caught long before it happened."

Leibowitz and the rest of the men's golf team head out this weekend to "relive" the Patriot League Championships in Annapolis, Navy's home course. According to Leibowitz, the scenario will be similar.

"It's going to be a lot of the same," Leibowitz said. "The level of ability in the conference is nearly the same, but our team is so much better."

A lot has happened in the past year as far as Leibowitz is concerned. Intending to go abroad in the fall, Leibowitz met a second great disappointment.

"I was supposed to take a course with the National Outdoor Leadership School which traveled for 75 days in Chile," Leibowitz said. "Five days before I was supposed to leave, I started to have eye trouble, and I discovered I had a secondary form of Glaucoma. I ended up staying home and working for the semester."

Leibowitz said that extra time off from school to continue to play golf, not letting the unfortunate turns of events get him down. "If it was a sunny day after work, I would go out and play golf," Leibowitz said. "It helped me relax and not worry about my health issues. There's nothing like a good day outside."

Coming into this season, Leibowitz's primary goal was to improve his game and he feels that so far he has. "I think without a doubt I have improved so far this season," Leibowitz said. "My scores may not show improvement, but I have gotten to another mental level."

With last year's situation sitting in the back of his mind, Leibowitz feels he is ready going into this year's Patriot League Championships.

"I proved that I can do it and am capable of it," Leibowitz said of his confidence in his ability. "Ideally this year I want to be around par, but I know that a score of 5 over par for three rounds can win. I have that in me."

Thompson sees much in Nick that makes him stand out. "I personally really like his attitude and demeanor on the course," Thompson said. "He doesn't get rattled by a bad shot or score."

So has the rest of the team put last season's hard loss behind them? "I would definitely not say so," Kosteva said. "We think about it and it comes up in conversation often, but I think we will use it more as a motivating factor that will help us all to play a little better this year than last year."

For Leibowitz, this year's Patriot League Championships have been in the making for a long time. "I try not to think about last year's disappointment because that can't be changed anymore," Leibowitz said, "but it's a certainly a motivation to me. It's things like these that really put life into perspective in a much greater form."

—Nick Leibowitz '01

BISON CLING TO FIRST IN PATRIOT LEAGUE

BASEBALL
From page A5

batters in the bottom of the eighth, gave up two singles and was replaced by Gregg Farmery '02. Farmery struck out the first batter he faced to get his sixth save of the season and Miller gave up one run on five hits to get his fourth win of the year. R.J. Grant '03 started on the mound for the Bison and in four innings of work, gave up two runs on four hits and walked one.

"It was a must-win for us and our players competed well to their credit and we finally got started early and got the confidence and positive momentum that we needed," Depew said. "R.J. pitched well enough to keep us in the game and Kevin had another outstanding relief effort."

"We did not bring our 'A' game this weekend and we played like it. Even though our pitching was pretty good as a whole, we just weren't getting the hits we needed. The good contact that we were making just seemed to find their gloves. Baseball is a funny sport and you have days like that," Lackett said.

"It was a rough weekend. We just didn't play to the best of our ability and had some mental breakdowns. There is no doubt in our minds that we are a better team," Scheetz said.

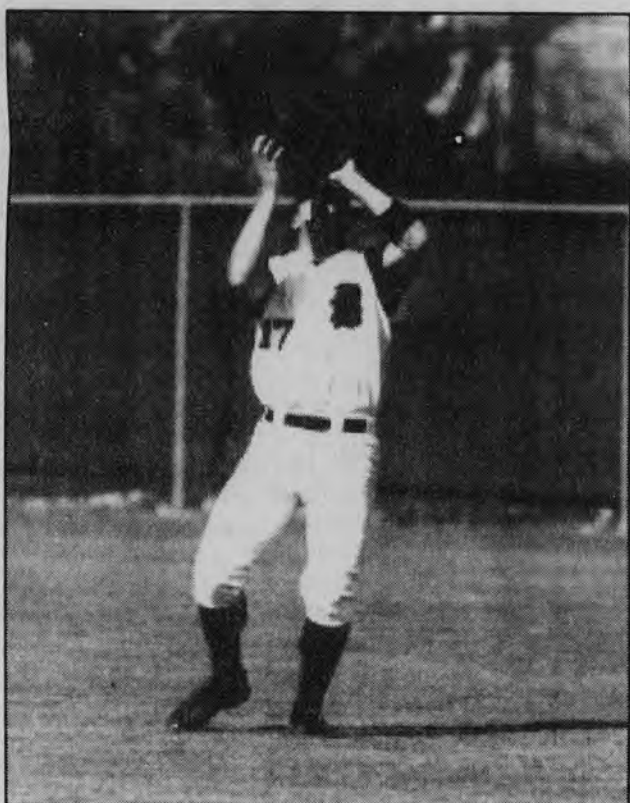

The Bison head back to the road with four games this weekend against Navy, Depew is not worried about his team.

"I still thought defensively we were solid and there are times in a season when you go through a down cycle offensively. We are not going to go over to overreact. We are just going to put a little more focus on offense this week in practice. We are still in first place," Depew said.

The Bison head back to the road with four games this weekend against Navy, Depew is not worried about his team.

"I still thought defensively we were solid and there are times in

Courtesy of Athletics Communication

Outfielder Mike Ritz '01 tracks down a fly ball.

but we fought hard and are still in first place in the league. The way we practice this week will be a good indication of how we will do," Joseph said. "The league is ours to win and we know that and are focused on getting it done."

IM Corner

Women's Softball
1. The Visionaries 2-0
2. Sassy Seniors 0-2

Men's A Softball

Division 1

1. Sig Ep 2-0

2. Fighting Amish 1-0

3. FIU 2-1

4. Chi Phi 1-2

5. Team Che 0-3

Division 2

1. 40 Watta 1-0

2. KDR 1-0

3. Vedder Vertigo 0-2

4. SAE 0-0

5. Lambda Chi 0-0

Men's B Softball

1. SAE 2-0

2. Lambda Chi 1-0

3. Team Hella 1-1

4. Phi Psi 1-1

5. Rug Munchers 2-2

6. PC Load Letter 1-2

7. Kappa Sig 0-1

8. Lehigh Bandits 0-2

9. Phi Psi 0-0

10. Bulldogs 0-0

Division 3

1. The Masons 1-0

2. Y.E.P. 1-0

3. SAE 0-1

4. Tripping Billies 0-1

5. Phi Psi 0-0

1. Team Orenthal 4-0

2. Rug Munchers 4-1

3. SAE 3-1

4. Lambda Chi 2-1

5. Manny J's All Stars 2-2

6. FIGI 1-2

7. Phi Psi 1-3

8. Fighting Amish 0-2

9. Sig Ep A 0-5

10. Basketball B

Division 1

1. Team Potent 2-0

2. Supreme Court 1-0

3. PC Load Letter 1-1

4. We Got Rice 0-1

5. Hired Goons 0-2

6. Vedder Vertigo 2-0

7. Sig Ep B 1-0

8. Kappa Sig 0-1

9. Six Shooters 0-2

10. Bulldogs 0-0

Division 2

1. Vedder Vertigo 2-0

2. Sig Ep B 1-0

3. Kappa Sig 0-1

4. Six Shooters 0-2

5. Bulldogs 0-0

Division 3

1. The Masons 1-0

2. Y.E.P. 1-0

3. SAE 0-1

4. Tripping Billies 0-1

5. Phi Psi 0-0

NFL draft lacking the flashy names

Vick is expected to be the top pick.
By ROB SCHMICKER
Senior Writer

In less than 48 hours, NFL Commissioner Paul Tagliabue will step up the podium and say the following words, "With the first pick in the 2001 NFL Draft, the San Diego Chargers select Michael Vick, Quarterback, Virginia Tech University."

We know for sure. But the rest of the draft is anyone's guess. At first glance, this year's draft doesn't appear to be very deep, aside from a few wide receivers and defensive linemen. The recent success of the Baltimore Ravens and Tampa Bay Buccaneers has put a premium on defensive tackles, and this year there could be as many as seven drafted in the first round. With that in mind, here is my mock draft:

1. San Diego - Michael Vick, QB, Virginia Tech. Coming off a one win season, the Chargers signed Doug Flutie in the offseason as a short-term fix to their quarterback problem. The plan is for Vick to sit out a year or two to mature and learn the system, just like Steve McNair did in Houston. A few years of coaching at the NFL level will improve his arm and will develop him into a franchise quarterback.

2. Arizona - Gerard Warren, DT, Florida. The Cards still have faith in the offense and will look to upgrade their defense with the second pick. The defensive line is the major area of need since Arizona lost three starters (Simone Rice, Karl Smith and Tony McCoy) in the offseason. Warren will help improve the defense by giving the Cards an inside presence to complement Wadsworth on the outside.

3. Chicago - Andre Carter, DE, California. The Bears are in need of a new running back and would have loved to see Tomlinson slip down to the eighth spot. But with him off the board, they will pass on Deuce McAllister and select Andre Carter, who should make their improving defense one of the better units in the league. He and Brian Urlacher will be a force for a long time in Chicago.

4. Green Bay - Richard Seymour, DT, Georgia. The Packers line was banged up last year and will need some new blood to keep it running. Seymour will join Santana Dotson in damming up the middle of the line, with John Thierry and Ronnie Holliday on the outside. He has the potential to be better than Gilbert Brown.

The rest of the first round:
11. Carolina - Dan Morgan, LB, Miami. Could be the next Sam Mills.
12. Kansas City - Michael Bennett, RB, Wisconsin. Will provide KC with a break-away threat.
13. Jacksonville - Kenyatta Walker, OT, Florida. Will fill in nicely alongside of Tony Boselli.
14. Buffalo - Marcus Stoudt, DT, Georgia. Perfect fit to replace Ted Washington.
15. Washington - Rod Gardner, WR, Clemson. Tall and fast—perfect for George's long balls.
16. Pittsburgh - Kendrick Bell, LB, Georgia. Great instincts make him a scary prospect.
17. Seattle - Shaun Rogers, DT, Texas. Seattle takes a chance that he can come back from injury.
18. Detroit - Steve Hutchinson, OT, Michigan. Stays in place to upgrade Detroit's interior line.
19. NY Jets - Santana Moss, WR, Miami. Not as big as Keyshawn, but should help fans forget him.
20. St. Louis - Jamal Reynolds, DE, Florida State. Former Seminole will help stabilize this dreadful unit.
21. Tampa Bay - Jeff Backus, OT, Michigan. Immediate starter to help protect Brad Johnson.
22. Indianapolis - Nate Clements, CB, Ohio State. First defensive back chosen.
23. New Orleans - Will Allen, CB, Syracuse. May be instant upgrade at free safety spot.
24. Denver - Fred Smoot, CB, Miss State. Trash talking back has to shut up first.
25. Philadelphia - Freddie Mitchell, WR, UCLA. Out to silence his critics.
26. Miami - Torrance Marshall, LB. Should fit in nicely with alongside Zach Thomas.
27. Minnesota - LaMont Jordan, RB, Maryland. Will settle for fourth best running back.
28. Oakland - Todd Heap, TE, Arizona State. Good replacement for Rickey Dudley.
29. St. Louis - Jamar Fletcher, CB, Wisconsin. Will battle with Dre Bly for starting spot.
30. NY Giants - Alge Crumpler, TE, UNC. Better offensively than Howard Cross.
31. Baltimore - Damione Lewis, DT, Miami. Champs select best remaining player on the board.

5. Atlanta - Justin Smith, DE, Missouri. Atlanta needs a wide receiver, but should be able to select a quality one later in the draft. With that in mind, the Falcons will select Smith in hope that he will become a star player on defense.

6. New England - LaDainian Tomlinson, RB, TCU. Tomlinson will be given the opportunity to silence all of his critics who said he played against weak competition. Ever since Curtis Martin bolted for the Jets, the Patriots have looked for a replacement. First it was Robert Edwards, then Kevin Faulk and then JR Redmond. The fourth time should be a charm.

7. Seattle - Koren Robinson, WR, NC State. Seattle's recent free agent signings have enabled Mike Holmgren to focus on offense in the draft. Robinson's stock dropped because of his recent workouts, but his talent cannot be overlooked. He should have an instant impact like former Wolfpack teammate Tony Holt.

8. Chicago - Andre Carter, DE, California. The Bears are in need of a new running back and would have loved to see Tomlinson slip down to the eighth spot. But with him off the board, they will pass on Deuce McAllister and select Andre Carter, who should make their improving defense one of the better units in the league. He and Brian Urlacher will be a force for a long time in Chicago.

9. San Francisco - Deuce McAllister, RB, Ole Miss. With the recent departure of Charlie Garner and the uncertainty of Garrison Hearst, the Niners are in the market for a running back. While McAllister has been labeled injury prone, he has the potential to be a top two-way back.

10. Green Bay - Richard Seymour, DT, Georgia. The Packers line was banged up last year and will need some new blood to keep it running. Seymour will join Santana Dotson in damming up the middle of the line, with John Thierry and Ronnie Holliday on the outside. He has the potential to be better than Gilbert Brown.

11. Minnesota Twins (9-2): Don't expect to bring your 'B' game to the Metrodome. The Twins have an American League best 6-0 record. I would have bet John Rocker would become mayor of New York before the Twins would have the best record in baseball.

12. Colorado Rockies (6-6): I think Reggie Jackson inhabited the body of Todd Lundsford this past Sunday (three HRs, seven RBI's). MLB hitters around the league are looking to breathe the Coors field air.

13. Chicago White Sox (4-7): The White Sox are a combined 0-6 versus former winners Minnesota and Detroit.

14. Texas Rangers (7-6): According to A-Rod, boos mean respect. I'll remember not to cheer for my favorite players because cheering might mean I'm being disrespectful to them.

15. Montreal Expos (7-5): The bullpen is stinger than a three-year old with Easter candy. Don't cover your ears for this one: Tim Lincecum is the only player in MLB without earplugs on his helmet. Raines started before earplugs were required.

16. Chicago Cubs (8-4): What, first place in the NL central is not good enough for a higher ranking? The Cubs lack the hitters to be contenders.

17. Philadelphia Phillies (7-4): The Phillies are trying to follow the Eagles at this past football season, but unless Donovan McNabb joins the rotation it may be another dismal season.

18. Oakland A's (2-10): Is this all a scripted act to add to a brilliant end of the season title run? Well is it?

19. Florida Marlins (4-7): I bet the Marlins will have been happy to be right behind the A's if they saw Dave Tomlinson's MLB power poll before the season started. Marlins still outscoring opponents 57 to 51, but have failed to record the necessary wins.

Sports

NFL draft lacking the flashy names

NBA Playoff Picks

With Staff Writers:

Ali Ahmed and

Justin McCarthy

Last week: 3-2
Overall: 28-17

Last week: 3-2
Overall: 27-18

San Antonio Spurs

The Spurs are easily the favorites to win the Western Conference finals and thus be, by default, the NBA champions. They have a great balance of outside shooting, defense, rebounding and leadership. Duncan is their obvious star and go-to guy but it is players like Terry Porter and Derek Anderson who put this team over the edge. Anderson is the player who really completes the team; he replaces Sean Elliott's athleticism and defense while providing a reliable third option. The Spurs have everything in place to win it all.

Los Angeles Lakers

The Lakers are considered among the favorites, but they, unlike the Spurs, have the potential to implode. For them to advance, they need to continue playing the way they have been recently but also step up their defense and find someone, preferably Rick Fox, to become a stable third option. Their biggest obstacle might come in the first round against the Blazers. If the Lakers make it through the first round they might gain enough momentum to get over the top. Just don't pay any attention to the rumors about the infighting between Shaq and Kobe—they will both play well.

Sacramento Kings

Rarely has a team won so many games, had a balanced high scoring roster, had an MVP candidate and not even been given a chance. I think there are only three teams in the West who can win it all, and the Kings are definitely not one of them. They definitely will provide any team with a tough series and provide some very entertaining basketball but, if they get past Phoenix in the first round, they will fall to the winners of the Lakers/Blazers series. They just don't have the point guard, defense or toughness to allow them to stay competitive.

Utah Jazz

Every year the Jazz end up around the same position heading into the playoffs—except this year they really seem on the decline. They have a poor record against the Western Conference playoff teams and Stockton and Malone seem on the decline, too. They potentially have some players who, if they played extremely well, could lift the Jazz but it's a very big "if," especially considering they need "Mt. Underachiever" himself, Greg Ostertag, to play well. They need huge performances out of Danny Manning, Bryon Russell, Ostertag and John Starks. I'm not saying they need these players to score 15 points a game—they just need them to play to their potential.

Dallas Mavericks

The Mavs are, in my opinion, the most exciting team in the West. Juwan Howard has resurrected his career ever since he's had the luxury of playing off stars Dirk Nowitzki and Michael Finley. The Mavs' scoring options don't end there as they also have Steve Nash and Howard Eisley, who could also easily give the Mavs a scoring punch at the point. What also makes the Mavs extremely dangerous is that all the aforementioned players are extremely good shooters for their positions. They have a great chance of upsetting the Jazz in the first round and only their lack of experience and defense might keep them from going further.

Phoenix Suns

In my opinion, Jason Kidd is the MVP simply because he is the Suns' team and, despite the injuries to Penny Hardaway, Clifford Robinson, Tom Gugliotta and Shaum Marion along with the decline in play of Rodney Rogers, the Suns are in the playoffs. Furthermore, I think they are in position to upset the Kings in round one. A lot of credit has to be given to the Suns' management for continually doing a great job of hiring quality coaches and acquiring players. Unless some of their big guys play better, Kidd's superb season will come to an end very quickly.

Portland Trailblazers

Despite their injuries and numerous problems, I am still very high on the Blazers. Despite their seventh seeding the Blazers have the firepower to beat any team in the league. However, they will go nowhere if Rashed Wallace doesn't end become and remain the dominant force he can be. At his best Wallace easily plays just as well as Tim Duncan, Chris Webber and Kevin Garnett. Along with Wallace the Blazers still have a great supporting cast with Steve Smith, Scottie Pippen, Damon Stoudamire and Dale Davis. Despite his age, Pippen is their cornerstone because he allows Stoudamire to flourish by taking over point guard duties, but he needs to be more aggressive offensively.

Minnesota Timberwolves

Kevin Garnett has done so much for this team that he deserves something to go right for him this year. But unless his supporting cast plays up to their minds, the Wolves will get knocked out by the Spurs. Garnett might neutralize Duncan but unless Brandon, Szebiak and especially Peeler and Ellis play extremely well, the Wolves won't go anywhere. It's a shame the West is so good because the Wolves are only one quality big guy from becoming a dominant team. Still the Wolves might give the Spurs a lot of trouble for a one-eight game.

Philadelphia 76ers

The Sixers' acquisition of Mutombo gave them the dominant center in the East, and thus established them as the team to beat this year in the playoffs. The only question left to "The Answer" is can he stay healthy long enough to lead the Sixers to the championship. The Sixers' one weakness is their lack of scoring options and depth—eventually Jordan had Pippen there to ease the load. The Sixers will breeze by the first round, however they may be in trouble when they run into a team with depth and options like New York or Milwaukee.

Milwaukee Bucks

Milwaukee has been a surprise this season and possesses a core of three athletes that have the potential to take a team deep into the playoffs. Milwaukee, however, needs to be wary of its first round matchup with Orlando. Robinson, Allen and Cassel need to play like the superstars that they are. The Bucks will need to contain McGrady during their first round matchup and hope that he is all Orlando is able to muster.

Miami Heat

The Heat have the players to reach the championship if Hardaway can play like he has the past few weeks and if Mourning can play like last year. The Heat's starting five are essentially all stars, past or present: Hardaway, Jones, Mason, Grant and Mourning. And if they play like all-stars look for Miami to make a deep playoff run. Ultimately, Miami will go as deep as the ailing Mourning is able to take them, for I do not see them coming out victorious in a seven game series without him. Miami is also ailing because of the injury to Hardaway who was forced to sit out the Heat's final three regular season games; it is unknown how soon he'll return.

New York Knicks

The Knicks are one of the most well balanced teams in the East, maybe only second to Miami when they have a recovered Mourning. The Knicks should make it past the first round with ease; however, they will need a healthy Camby to be effective against Mutombo or Mourning, and LJ's return couldn't hurt either. With the Knicks' depth and options any opposition should be wary. New York will need Sprewell to take control of the team, and the Knicks cannot afford too many bad shooting nights from Houston.

Toronto Raptors

The Raptors shouldn't make it past the first round. They have a great leader in Carter, and exceptional role players in Oakley and Davis; however, that will just not be enough firepower to get by either New York or Miami. New York is the same team that swept the Raptors out of the playoffs last season. If the Raptors hope to make any noise this playoff season they will need Carter to do all the work.

Charlotte Hornets

The Hornets have a few playoff experienced and hungry veterans in Mashburn, Campbell and Brown. The Hornets will need to rely on Mashburn to carry them; but it is unlikely he could do much against the two most balanced attacks in the East: New York and Miami, one of which will be their first round match-up. Charlotte will need another player to step up and assist their big three; either Wesley or Davis needs to fill that void.

Orlando Magic

Everyone expected a dramatic jump in playoff contention for the Magic when they acquired McGrady; however, to go from finishing eighth with no hope to seventh with relatively the same personnel and one of the game's newest stars is disappointing. Orlando will go as far as McGrady can take

Sports

Lakers might have to pass against zone defense

Picture this. You're a six foot nothing, lanky and speedy Joe Blow NBA Star. You do well in the shooting guard position, cutting to the basket, blowing past slower defenders, making nice moves that you practiced in your garage that entire summer back in 8th grade.

But you're no longer in your garage anymore and tonight you make your move into the lane, smirking at your defender, Bob Ihavenospeed, illegally palming the ball in your right hand as you take three more steps than the rules allow, plowing the lane faster than an amphetamine-ridden child with A.D.D. on a snow day for the easy lay-up and WHAM!

You hit a 7'3" brick wall of a center whose standing under the rim, mocking your spectacular maneuvering and offensive brilliance.

But as you peel your sweat-drenched face from the hardwood court like the layers of President Bush's integrity after a vegan dinner with Greenpeace, you realize that your collision makes little difference since the ball was stripped from your hand two steps back and you've already cost your team the game. Meanwhile, Andre the Giant, whose gut you just met is standing four strides away because he's too slow to be a factor on the fast break.

So what about this scenario will change with a zone defense (a defensive scheme rarely used now in the NBA that will likely be on the increase with the new policy that the league passed to eliminate the illegal defense rule)? Absolutely nothing, so stop whining. What could one possibly have against the zone defense? Jason Kidd commented on how zone defenses would allow a team to guard players like Shaquille O'Neal better, saying, "Why would he want to play if three guys can surround him? It won't be any fun for him."

Well there are a few problems with your logic, Jason. First and foremost, why would a defense put three men on Shaquille O'Neal, leaving only two defenders to cover four other players? That's not a sound defense and one will do that, especially not with Kobe waiting out there, too. The same applies to the San Antonio Spurs or the Miami Heat.

Second, who cares if Shaq is having fun or not. Everyone has fun when they dominate, and that's why Shaq hasn't had fun this year, because Kobe has stolen the limelight. The zone defense will only force players to step up their game or be left at the wayside.

Third, and of even greater importance than the "first and foremost" point, is that basketball is a team game. There are ten guys out on a court, not nine guys and Tim Duncan. The ability to play, or at least use elements of the zone defense, will force more ball movement, more passing and better "team" play. This change does not rid the league of its marquis players. What it does do is rid the league of uni-dimensional players who aspire to lead the league in points like a certain player who, for anybody's sake we'll just call K. Bryant ... no no no ... that's too obvious. How about Kobe B. Byter?

In an article from ESPN.com, sports writer Peter May spoke out against the allowance of zone defenses and offered a suggestion saying that one way to improve the game was to "stop allowing callow, clueless kids to come into a league they think is all about dunking, chest-bumping, entourage and hi-tech cell phones." Unfortunately, Peter fails to realize that "dunking" and "chest bumping" are exactly what embody the league today, so why would these kids think otherwise? The only way to prevent such a notion, would be to eliminate it and the zone defense can fill that role.

Now just because the zone defense is no longer illegal, does not mean that every team will institute one! Most teams will eventually incorporate certain aspects of the zone defense into their system, but the chances of a team instituting a strictly zone defense are as likely as finding two New York Yankees fans with one brain cell between them.

As for the claim that the zone defense will help scoring—a prime consideration behind the rule change—well there are considerable arguments to suggest otherwise. The increased ball movement and the shift away from "slashing" guards may cut down on scoring until players can adjust their game. However, the use of the zone defense does anticipate more exciting games. With the emphasis now resting on a team's performance rather than a single player, the "team" will be noted for, rather than individuals. The reason that NCAA basketball is so popular is because people attach themselves to a "team." Duke won, not Bartz, Arizona lost, not Woods.

I believe that with the new defensive opportunities, the pressure will once again be on a team. And ultimately, that is what will drive the ratings. As much as people glorify Michael Jordan and Shaquille O'Neal, myself included, athletes come and go ... teams less so. People may remember Babe Ruth but they root for the Yankees now. People may remember Joe Montana, but they root for the 49ers. All those stars have faded while the teams remain. Why is there so much enmity between Brooklyn Dodgers fans and LA's or Cleveland Browns fans and Baltimore? Because the teams are important. Players form intrigue, but their teams form legacies and players will always rise to the occasion.

This was a tremendous forward step for the NBA and no whining, sniveling player is going to detract from that. If you can't step up your game, then step off the court, because the zone is here to stay.

Sports Trivia

By Justin McCarthy

- 1) When Babe Ruth hit 60 homeruns in 1920, how many American League teams did he hit more homeruns than?
- 2) Since 1989, how many NHL regular-season champions have won the Stanley Cup?
- 3) Which NBA team swept the Central division this season, which is only the second time in league history that a team has swept as entire division?

Softball splits Holy Cross series

Bison disappointed with 2-2 series split after squandering leads in both losses

Jenna Demetriades '02 has been one of the key hitters for the Bison.

By BROOKE REA
Sports Editor

Bad weather continues to plague spring sports schedules and the softball team is no exception as its Tuesday game against George Mason Tuesday was cancelled due to rain. Over the weekend BU split two doubleheaders against Patriot League competitor Holy Cross, winning 4-3 on Saturday and 5-2 Sunday.

Starting out strong in the opener on Saturday, the Bison got up 1-0 in the first inning when Charity Ford '01 singled to drive in classmate and fellow co-captain Steph Morgan. Holy Cross answered back with a run of its own, but Bucknell notched three runs in the third to bring its lead to 4-1.

Sophomore Meredith Gill walked to start the scoring series and then made it to the plate off a hit from Kelly Dugan '02. Ford came up big again, hitting a triple to score Dugan before co-captain Jenna Demetriades '02 drove in Ford for the third run of the inning.

Holy Cross rallied in the seventh to score two, but a key strikeout by sophomore pitcher Brandi Porter stopped their momentum and ended the game with a 4-3 victory for the Bison.

The nightcap was a different story, as the Crusaders got on the board first in the second inning. BU tallied three runs in the top of the fourth with hits from Ford and freshman Courtney Bohoney, giving the Orange and Blue a 3-2 lead. Holy Cross decided the game in the final at bat, when two runners scored to seal the 4-3 victory for the Crusaders.

"Each win and loss this weekend was a total team effort," Ford said. "Our pitchers were doing a great job, but our offense didn't provide any run support. Too often we get comfortable with a one-run lead and then just go through the motions."

This may have been the problem Sunday, as the Bison once again took the lead first. It wasn't until the sixth inning when freshman Angela Stackhouse singled to score senior Karen Langhauser, putting Bucknell on the board.

Holy Cross notched two in the bottom of the inning and the Bison couldn't rally in the seventh to take the win.

See SOFTBALL, page A6

Men, women right on track, take first place

By ROSE SEDO
Senior Writer

The Bucknell men and women's track teams beat out second place competitor Lock Haven on both sides last weekend claiming first place in a scoring meet held at Christy Mathewson Stadium on Saturday. The Bison men posted seven first-place finishes and scored a team total of 209 points, outdistancing runner-up Lock Haven by a 140 point margin. The Bucknell women also had seven first-place showings and finished with 215 points, besting runner-up Lock Haven by more than 80 points.

In addition to the seven event titles by the Bison men, two individuals and one relay placed on the school's all-time Top-10 performers chart. Noel Powell '04 won the long jump with a final mark of 23' 2 1/2", putting Powell in a tie for fourth on the Bucknell Top-10 performers chart. Powell rounded off his spectacular afternoon by sliding into the tenth slot with his second place finish time of 10.99 in the 100-meter dash.

Throwing the discus for the first time this season, Ryan Stairs '01 moved into tenth on Bucknell's all-time list with a throw of 153' 10" and a fifth place finish. The 4x100-meter relay team broke the all-time school record with a blistering time of 41.78.

The women had six individuals

Chris Rivera—The Bucknellian
The Bucknell 400-meter hurdles race ahead in the Income Tax Classic.

place on the all-time performance chart. Andrea Nyce '02 and Maria Garcia '04 each set school records in their respective events. Nyce solidified her pole vault mark by clearing a height of 11' 8". On the west fields, Garcia broke the school record in the hammer throw with a toss of 175' 4".

On defense Kallis had a great day in the cage, stopping 17 shots and only allowing five.

Overall the entire team played with consistency and strength. Their strong midfield transition and control of ground balls was the key to their win.

"Since the Lafayette game the team has been very upbeat and confident. It was a good game for us and I thought we played well all over the field," Jordan said.

Bucknell was the first to strike when tri-captain Kari Evans '01 scored a goal. Paige Brewster '01 quickly followed with another goal to give the Bison a two goal lead. The Wildcats scored a goal, but Brewster responded with her second goal just one minute later. Montefusco and tri-captain Ashley Evans '01 scored one each to give Bucknell a comfortable 6-3 lead at the end of the half.

Bucknell commanded the first 15 minutes of the second half with five unanswered goals before Villanova scored twice more. Laura Seiboth '04 notched two more scores for the Bison to seal their win, 13-5.

On defense Kallis had a great day in the cage, stopping 17 shots and only allowing five.

Overall the entire team played with consistency and strength. Their strong midfield transition and control of ground balls was the key to their win.

"Since the Lafayette game the team has been very upbeat and confident. It was a good game for us and I thought we played well all over the field," Jordan said.

Bucknell was the first to strike when tri-captain Kari Evans '01 scored a goal. Paige Brewster '01 quickly followed with

another goal to give the Bison a two goal lead. The Wildcats scored a goal, but Brewster responded with her second goal just one minute later. Montefusco and tri-captain Ashley Evans '01 scored one each to give Bucknell a comfortable 6-3 lead at the end of the half.

Bucknell commanded the first 15 minutes of the second half with five unanswered goals before Villanova scored twice more. Laura Seiboth '04 notched two more scores for the Bison to seal their win, 13-5.

On defense Kallis had a great day in the cage, stopping 17 shots and only allowing five.

Overall the entire team played with consistency and strength. Their strong midfield transition and control of ground balls was the key to their win.

"Since the Lafayette game the team has been very upbeat and confident. It was a good game for us and I thought we played well all over the field," Jordan said.

Bucknell was the first to strike when tri-captain Kari Evans '01 scored a goal. Paige Brewster '01 quickly followed with

another goal to give the Bison a two goal lead. The Wildcats scored a goal, but Brewster responded with her second goal just one minute later. Montefusco and tri-captain Ashley Evans '01 scored one each to give Bucknell a comfortable 6-3 lead at the end of the half.

Bucknell commanded the first 15 minutes of the second half with five unanswered goals before Villanova scored twice more. Laura Seiboth '04 notched two more scores for the Bison to seal their win, 13-5.

On defense Kallis had a great day in the cage, stopping 17 shots and only allowing five.

Overall the entire team played with consistency and strength. Their strong midfield transition and control of ground balls was the key to their win.

"Since the Lafayette game the team has been very upbeat and confident. It was a good game for us and I thought we played well all over the field," Jordan said.

Bucknell was the first to strike when tri-captain Kari Evans '01 scored a goal. Paige Brewster '01 quickly followed with

another goal to give the Bison a two goal lead. The Wildcats scored a goal, but Brewster responded with her second goal just one minute later. Montefusco and tri-captain Ashley Evans '01 scored one each to give Bucknell a comfortable 6-3 lead at the end of the half.

Bucknell commanded the first 15 minutes of the second half with five unanswered goals before Villanova scored twice more. Laura Seiboth '04 notched two more scores for the Bison to seal their win, 13-5.

On defense Kallis had a great day in the cage, stopping 17 shots and only allowing five.

Overall the entire team played with consistency and strength. Their strong midfield transition and control of ground balls was the key to their win.

"Since the Lafayette game the team has been very upbeat and confident. It was a good game for us and I thought we played well all over the field," Jordan said.

Bucknell was the first to strike when tri-captain Kari Evans '01 scored a goal. Paige Brewster '01 quickly followed with

another goal to give the Bison a two goal lead. The Wildcats scored a goal, but Brewster responded with her second goal just one minute later. Montefusco and tri-captain Ashley Evans '01 scored one each to give Bucknell a comfortable 6-3 lead at the end of the half.

Bucknell commanded the first 15 minutes of the second half with five unanswered goals before Villanova scored twice more. Laura Seiboth '04 notched two more scores for the Bison to seal their win, 13-5.

On defense Kallis had a great day in the cage, stopping 17 shots and only allowing five.

Overall the entire team played with consistency and strength. Their strong midfield transition and control of ground balls was the key to their win.

"Since the Lafayette game the team has been very upbeat and confident. It was a good game for us and I thought we played well all over the field," Jordan said.

Bucknell was the first to strike when tri-captain Kari Evans '01 scored a goal. Paige Brewster '01 quickly followed with

another goal to give the Bison a two goal lead. The Wildcats scored a goal, but Brewster responded with her second goal just one minute later. Montefusco and tri-captain Ashley Evans '01 scored one each to give Bucknell a comfortable 6-3 lead at the end of the half.

Bucknell commanded the first 15 minutes of the second half with five unanswered goals before Villanova scored twice more. Laura Seiboth '04 notched two more scores for the Bison to seal their win, 13-5.

On defense Kallis had a great day in the cage, stopping 17 shots and only allowing five.

Overall the entire team played with consistency and strength. Their strong midfield transition and control of ground balls was the key to their win.

"Since the Lafayette game the team has been very upbeat and confident. It was a good game for us and I thought we played well all over the field," Jordan said.

Bucknell was the first to strike when tri-captain Kari Evans '01 scored a goal. Paige Brewster '01 quickly followed with

another goal to give the Bison a two goal lead. The Wildcats scored a goal, but Brewster responded with her second goal just one minute later. Montefusco and tri-captain Ashley Evans '01 scored one each to give Bucknell a comfortable 6-3 lead at the end of the half.

Bucknell commanded the first 15 minutes of the second half with five unanswered goals before Villanova scored twice more. Laura Seiboth '04 notched two more scores for the Bison to seal their win, 13-5.

On defense Kallis had a great day in the cage, stopping 17 shots and only allowing five.

Overall the entire team played with consistency and strength. Their strong midfield transition and control of ground balls was the key to their win.

"Since the Lafayette game the team has been very upbeat and confident. It was a good game for us and I thought we played well all over the field," Jordan said.

Bucknell was the first to strike when tri-captain Kari Evans '01 scored a goal. Paige Brewster '01 quickly followed with

another goal to give the Bison a two goal lead. The Wildcats scored a goal, but Brewster responded with her second goal just one minute later. Montefusco and tri-captain Ashley Evans '01 scored one each to give Bucknell a comfortable 6-3 lead at the end of the half.

Bucknell commanded the first 15 minutes of the second half with five unanswered goals before Villanova scored twice more. Laura Seiboth '04 notched two more scores for the Bison to seal their win, 13-5.

On defense Kallis had a great day in the cage, stopping 17 shots and only allowing five.

Overall the entire team played with consistency and strength. Their strong midfield transition and control of ground balls was the key to their win.

"Since the Lafayette game the team has been very upbeat and confident. It was a good game for us and I thought we played well all over the field," Jordan said.

Bucknell was the first to strike when tri-captain Kari Evans '01 scored a goal. Paige Brewster '01 quickly followed with

another goal to give the Bison a two goal lead. The Wildcats scored a goal, but Brewster responded with her second goal just one minute later. Montefusco and tri-captain Ashley Evans '01 scored one each to give Bucknell a comfortable 6-3 lead at the end of the half.

Bucknell commanded the first 15 minutes of the second half with five unanswered goals before Villanova scored twice more. Laura Seiboth '04 notched two more scores for the Bison to seal their win, 13-5.

On defense Kallis had a great day in the cage, stopping 17 shots and only allowing five.

Overall the entire team played with consistency and strength. Their strong midfield transition and control of ground balls was the key to their win.

"Since the Lafayette game the team has been very upbeat and confident. It was a good game for us and I thought we played well all over the field," Jordan said.

Bucknell was the first to strike when tri-captain Kari Evans '01 scored a goal. Paige Brewster '01 quickly followed with

another goal to give the Bison a two goal lead. The Wildcats scored a goal, but Brewster responded with her second goal just one minute later. Montefusco and tri-captain Ashley Evans '01 scored one each to give Bucknell a comfortable 6-3 lead at the end of the half.

Bucknell commanded the first 15 minutes of the second half with five unanswered goals before Villanova scored twice more. Laura Seiboth '04 notched two more scores for the Bison to seal their win, 13-5.

On defense Kallis had a great day in the cage, stopping 17 shots and only allowing five.

Overall the entire team played with consistency and strength. Their strong midfield transition and control of ground balls was the key to their win.

"Since the Lafayette game the team has been very upbeat and confident. It was a good game for us and I thought we played well all over the field," Jordan said.

Bucknell was the first to strike when tri-captain Kari Evans '01 scored a goal. Paige Brewster '01 quickly followed with

another goal to give the Bison a two goal lead. The Wildcats scored a goal, but Brewster responded with her second goal just one minute later. Montefusco and tri-captain Ashley Evans '01 scored one each to give Bucknell a comfortable 6-3 lead at the end of the half.

Bucknell commanded the first 15 minutes of the second half with five unanswered goals before Villanova scored twice more. Laura Seiboth '04 notched two more scores for the Bison to seal their win, 13-5.

On defense Kallis had a great day in the cage, stopping 17 shots and only allowing five.

Overall the entire team played with consistency and strength. Their strong midfield transition and control of ground balls was the key to their win.

"Since the Lafayette game the team has been very upbeat and confident. It was a good game for us and I thought we played well all over the field," Jordan said.

Bucknell was the first to strike when tri-captain Kari Evans '01 scored a goal. Paige Brewster '01 quickly followed with

another goal to give the Bison a two goal lead. The Wildcats scored a goal, but Brewster responded with her second goal just one minute later. Montefusco and tri-captain Ashley Evans '01 scored one each to give Bucknell a comfortable 6-3 lead at the end of the half.

Bucknell commanded the first 15 minutes of the second half with five unanswered goals before Villanova scored twice more. Laura Seiboth '04 notched two more scores for the Bison to seal their win, 13-5.

On defense Kallis had a great day in the cage, stopping 17 shots and only allowing five.

Overall the entire team played with consistency and strength. Their strong midfield transition and control of ground balls was the key to their win.

"Since the Lafayette game the team has been very upbeat and confident. It was a good game for us and I thought we played well all over the field," Jordan said.

Bucknell was the first to strike when tri-captain Kari Evans '01 scored a goal. Paige Brewster '01 quickly followed with

another goal to give the Bison a two goal lead. The Wildcats scored a goal, but Brewster responded with her second goal just one minute later. Montefusco and tri-captain Ashley Evans '01 scored one each to give Bucknell a comfortable 6-3 lead at the end of the half.

Bucknell commanded the first 15 minutes of the second half with five unanswered goals before Villanova scored twice more. Laura Seiboth '04 notched two more scores for the Bison to seal their win, 13-5.

On defense Kallis had a great day in the cage, stopping 17 shots and only allowing five.

Overall the entire team played with consistency and strength. Their strong midfield transition and control of ground balls was the key to their win.

"Since the Lafayette game the team has been very upbeat and confident. It was a good game for us and I thought we played well all over the field," Jordan said.

Bucknell was the first to strike when tri-captain Kari Evans '01 scored a goal. Paige Brewster '01 quickly followed with

another goal to give the Bison a two goal lead. The Wildcats scored a goal, but Brewster responded with her second goal just one minute later. Montefusco and tri-captain Ashley Evans '01 scored one each to give Bucknell a comfortable 6-3 lead at the end of the half.

Bucknell commanded the first 15 minutes of the second half with five unanswered goals before Villanova scored twice more. Laura Seiboth '04 notched two more scores for the Bison to seal their win, 13-5.

On defense Kallis had a great day in the cage, stopping 17 shots and only allowing five.

Overall the entire team played with consistency and strength. Their strong midfield transition and control of ground balls was the key to their win.

"Since the Lafayette game the team has been very upbeat and confident. It was a good game for us and I thought we played well all over the field," Jordan said.

Bucknell was the first to strike when tri-captain Kari Evans '01 scored a goal. Paige Brewster '01 quickly followed with

another goal to give the Bison a two goal lead. The Wildcats scored a goal, but Brewster responded with her second goal just one minute later. Montefusco and tri-captain Ashley Evans '01 scored one each to give Bucknell a comfortable 6-3 lead at the end of the half.

Bucknell commanded the first 15 minutes of the second half with five unanswered goals before Villanova scored twice more. Laura Seiboth '04 notched two more scores for the Bison to seal their win, 13-5.

On defense Kallis had a great day in the cage, stopping 17 shots and only allowing five.

Overall the entire team played with consistency and strength. Their strong midfield transition and control of ground balls was the key to their win.

"Since the Lafayette game the team has been very upbeat and confident. It was a good game for us and I thought we played well all over the field," Jordan said.

Bucknell was the first to strike when tri-captain Kari Evans '01 scored a goal. Paige Brewster '01 quickly followed with

another goal to give the Bison a two goal lead. The Wildcats scored a goal, but Brewster responded with her second goal just one minute later. Montefusco and tri-captain Ashley Evans '01 scored one each to give Bucknell a comfortable 6-3 lead at the end of the half.

Bucknell commanded the first 15 minutes of the second half with five unanswered goals before Villanova scored twice more. Laura Seiboth '04 notched two more scores for the Bison to seal their win, 13-5.

On defense Kallis had a great day in the cage, stopping 17 shots and only allowing five.

Overall the entire team played with consistency and strength. Their strong midfield transition and control of ground balls was the key to their win.

"Since the Lafayette game the team has been very upbeat and confident. It was a good game for us and I thought we played well all over the field," Jordan said.

Bucknell was the first to strike when tri-captain Kari Evans '01 scored a goal. Paige Brewster '01 quickly followed with

another goal to give the Bison a two goal lead. The Wildcats scored a goal, but Brewster responded with her second goal just one minute later. Montefusco and tri-captain Ashley Evans '01 scored one each to give Bucknell a comfortable 6-3 lead at the end of the half.

Bucknell commanded the first 15 minutes of the second half with five unanswered goals before Villanova scored twice more. Laura Seiboth '04 notched two more scores for the Bison to seal their win, 13-5.

On defense Kallis had a great day in the cage, stopping 17 shots and only allowing five.

Overall the entire team played with consistency and strength. Their strong midfield transition and control of ground balls was the key to their win.

"Since the Lafayette game the team has been very upbeat and confident. It was a good game for us and I thought we played well all over the field," Jordan said.

Bucknell was the first to strike when tri-captain Kari Evans '01 scored a goal. Paige Brewster '01 quickly followed with

another goal to give the Bison a two goal lead. The Wildcats scored a goal, but Brewster responded with her second goal just one minute later. Montefusco and tri-captain Ashley Evans '01 scored one each to give Bucknell a comfortable 6-3 lead at the end of the half.

Bucknell commanded the first 15 minutes of the second half with five unanswered goals before Villanova scored twice more. Laura Seiboth '04 notched two more scores for the Bison to seal their win, 13-5.

On defense Kallis had a great day in the cage, stopping 17 shots and only allowing five.

Overall the entire team played with consistency and strength. Their strong midfield transition and control of ground balls was the key to their win.

"Since the Lafayette game the team has been very upbeat and confident. It was a good game for us and I thought we played well all over the field," Jordan said.

Bucknell was the first to strike when tri-captain Kari Evans '01 scored a goal. Paige Brewster '01 quickly followed with

another goal to give the Bison a two goal lead. The Wildcats scored a goal, but Brewster responded with her second goal just one minute later. Montefusco and tri-captain Ashley Evans '01 scored one each to give Bucknell a comfortable 6-3 lead at the end of the half.

Bucknell commanded the first 15 minutes of the second half with five unanswered goals before Villanova scored twice more. Laura Seiboth '04 notched two more scores for the Bison to seal their win, 13-5.

On defense Kallis had a great day in the cage, stopping 17 shots and only allowing five.

FORUM

Letters to the Editors

Don't listen to Shaggy's message

To the Editor:

The recent approval of the entertainer Shaggy to play at Bucknell is disturbing to me. The approval brings up immediate questions to the obviously short-sighted values of the concert committee. Shaggy has made a name for himself by rapping about questionable ethics.

Take his recent "pop-chart" hit, "It Wasn't Me." To break down the lyrics of this song, one finds that Shaggy is standing on shaky ethical grounds.

His song portrays him—when caught by his girlfriend while having sex with another woman—blatantly denying any involvement whatsoever.

You might chuckle and find this funny, but you must acknowledge that there is a certain image that some pop artists try to obtain where they believe that they deserve to act in such ways.

Some ignore these songs and understand that these acts are only by-products of modern media, but the majority of the population—and this includes students on this campus—see people like Shaggy as someone who has done well in his life and therefore look to mimic some of the ways he acts.

This is a real situation and should not be taken lightly. At the least, such a questionable

Just because Shaggy does not break the law in promoting such absurd values, does not mean we should not seriously question his performance on campus before we accept him into our community.

To those that might argue that he is just expressing his opinions in a country where free speech dominates, I ask you—is Shaggy making a statement of his own beliefs?

More likely he is capitalizing on the popular view of oppressing women that some males find worth listening to and are arrogant enough to let play at student gatherings.

I am disappointed at the environment that is given to the women of Bucknell and I am shocked that the Concert Committee does not acknowledge the intensity of the words spoken by the Spring concert choice.

Michael Urso '04

able media icon should not be brought to campus.

At a University with such an intelligent and motivated student body, I have wondered why we sometimes suffer from the same faults that restrain the rest of our American society from achieving a greater level of progressive policy.

Title IX quotas hurt both genders

To the Editor:

As a member of the University wrestling team, I feel compelled to write about the current situation of the athletic department. Title IX is an educational amendment implemented to give women equal opportunities in education and admissions.

These laws of equal opportunity also stretch across the board to athletic programs and scholarships. Title IX can be implemented with in three different ways and the University chose the easy way of simply cutting men's programs.

Sports that may be dropped include wrestling, men's crew and men's water polo.

Although the University is mostly fixated on the numbers and quotas being met, I would like to mention the human side of this dilemma. For example, I am a junior wrestler who was 24-9 this past year and at one point ranked 19th in the nation.

I, along with many of my talented teammates must face a major dilemma. If the program is dropped, do we stay at the school that we love, or do we leave to participate in the sport that we love which was also a major reason we came to the University?

There are several members of our team who definitely have the talent to compete at the top level and gain national recognition. What are we supposed to do?

Title IX, specifically its call for proportionality, is hindering many student-athletes' college experience. Proportionality requires that an educational institution have approximately the same percentage of female athletes as its ratio of female students.

For example, if 55% of the school's population is female, then 55% of that school's athletes must be female.

Proportionality is wrong for a number of reasons. One reason is that while it eliminates men's programs, it actually freezes opportunities for women.

If a school has 400 male athletes and 200 female athletes and it cuts 200 opportunities for men, then women who might want to participate in the future might never have the opportunity.

Their opportunity will be erased because the school will be proportional with 200 athletes of each gender. In this respect, proportionality has a double-negative effect.

Proportionality also presumes that women show the same amount of interest as men do in sports. But much evidence, such as student surveys, proves otherwise. Surveys show that there are nearly four times as many males as females who take part in intramural sports.

Also, there are roughly four times as many walk-on male athletes as there are women. Thus, the proportionality requirements of Title IX result in many young men losing their opportunity to play a sport in which they are interested.

A final and very important point is that Title IX is an educational amendment for equal opportunity. Athletics is only one aspect of an educational program. There is not a proportional number of professors or a proportional number of deans.

If the quotas were placed on other departments at universities (as the amendment implies), the entire system would be in trouble. Less qualified professors and deans would be forced to be hired, similar to sports with less interest being implemented.

Imagine if the college of engineering instilled proportionality requirements! No one would ever allow an academic institution to stop men from becoming engineers just because they couldn't find enough women to study engineering.

Title IX is a law with great intentions that is being used in a counterproductive way. The addition of female sports is a very positive aspect of Title IX, but the elimination of male sports was not an intended purpose and should not occur as a result of this law.

Proportionality in sports is illogical. The working world does not hold to gender quotas and it is senseless for college sports to make that attempt. Furthermore, men's programs have evolved over time, and have had to work hard to establish themselves. Title IX should not just throw away the many years of sports tradition that have been built in colleges across America.

Ben Chunko '02

Got something on your mind?

Write a Letter to the Editors!

Box C-3952 Bucknell University
Lewisburg, PA 17837

Science and Technology Editors

Josiana Cetta '04
Lauren Wohl '04

Sports Editors

Carmen Mauriello '02
Brooke Rea '02
Andrew Burr '04
Aaron DeRosa '03

Sports Statistician

Matthew Herbert '02

Photo Editors

Paige Cull '01
Chris Rivera '02

Local Advertising Representative

Bryan Prins '04

National Advertising Representative

Amy Peloquin '03

Online Editors

Eric Fair '01
Brendan Putnam '03

Head Copy Editors

Kim Luedee '01
Debbie Ruggieri '01

Production Manager

Nick Olson '02

Circulation Manager

Brian Klotz '03

Advertiser

James F. Lee

THE BUCKNELLIAN

Founded in 1896 as The Blue and Orange

Volume 127, Number 11

C-3952 BUCKNELL UNIVERSITY

LEWISBURG, PENNSYLVANIA, 17837

(570) 577-1520

BUCKNELLIAN@BUCKNELL.EDU

HTTP://WWW.ORG.BUCKNELL.EDU/BUCKNELLIAN

EDITORIAL POLICY

The Editors of The Bucknellian reflect the consensus of the Editorial Board as to the topics and general position. If a consensus could not be reached, the opinions expressed are those of the Editors-in-Chief.

All other opinion material represents the views of the author and not necessarily those of The Bucknellian.

PUBLISHING POLICY

The Bucknellian is written, edited and published on 12 Fridays during each academic semester entirely by Bucknell students. The Bucknellian's fiscal affairs are overseen by an Advisory Board comprised of faculty, staff and administrators. All published material is chosen by the paper's editorial board without prior review by the Advisory Board, its adviser, the University or Bucknell Student Government.

SUBSCRIPTIONS POLICY

Subscriptions are available $45 per year and $30 per semester. To subscribe, send payment and address information to: The Bucknellian Subscriptions, Box C-3952, Lewisburg, PA 17837. Subscriptions are mailed first-class on the Monday of publication. Please send change-of-address information to the above location as well.

ADVERTISING POLICY

The Editorial Board of The Bucknellian reserves the right to deny any advertisements if offensive, illegal or in bad taste. Advertisements reflect the opinion of the advertiser and not necessarily that of The Bucknellian. For advertising rates, please contact the advertising managers at (570) 577-1085. The views expressed in our advertisements are the views of the advertiser, not necessarily those of The Bucknellian.

Copyright©2001 The Bucknellian

EDITORIAL

Title IX calls for equality between all students

As an institution of higher learning, the University prides itself on offering a wide range of experiences to a wide range of people—we care about diversity in the student body and pride ourselves on the fact that many of the University's engineering students are women. Why, then, would the University put itself in the position where it is becoming necessary to cut a men's sport from the athletic system?

Title IX of the Education Amendments of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 mandates that there must be equal opportunities for men and women in all aspects of university life. This title has had the most impact on the athletic community, necessitating equal populations of men and women athletes proportional to the male and female population of the school. While intended to increase the opportunities for women in sports, it is possible to understand and implement Title IX in a dangerous way.

The male/female ratio at the University is, for all intents and purposes, 50/50; Title IX would then mandate that the male/female athlete ratio be the same. Presently, there are more male athletes than female and, in order to comply with federal law, the University must change this statistic, despite an equal number of male/female athletic teams. A five-year plan for compliance with Title IX was implemented in 1998; we are now in year four and still not compliant.

The University added women's water polo to the list of female teams, but there is still a disparity between the male/female athlete ratio. The University is now forced to make a decision—either form another women's sports team or cut a men's. Suggestions have been made as to what teams can be implemented—an equestrian team being the popular choice—but unfortunately, it appears as though creating a team is not going to be the solution.

Word has leaked that the Athletic Department could be steps away from cutting the men's wrestling program in order to fully comply with Title IX. The editors of The Bucknellian want to stress that this decision is nowhere near definite, we have tried to convey this through our coverage of the issue this week. What is fairly definite, however, is that the University will most likely cut a men's sport rather than add a women's.

This course of action seems completely contrary to the actual goal of Title IX; what we want to achieve is equality in opportunity—where is the equality in telling certain male athletes that they can no longer compete? Other sports possibly destined to get the axe include men's golf and men's water polo—what will these players do when they are told they will not have a "next season"?

In addition to the obviously contentious nature of this decision, has the University stopped to think of the ramifications this could have on other aspects of involvement? Many athletic alumni are large donors, would it really be worth alienating these potential supporters? And what about the increased emphasis the campus community is putting in tradition? Where is the tradition in dropping a sport that has produced alumni?

The editorial board of The Bucknellian feels that it is in no way feasible or wise to drop a men's sport; the focus of Title IX compliance issue should be shifted to what women's sport can be added.

The women's equestrian team, for example, is already operational in a "club" capacity; many of the problems of creating a team (league status, facilities, competitors) have already been taken care of in this case. The only real issue that remains is funding. Petitioning athletes—of teams that are in danger and those that are not—and alumni to donate money to the creation of a women's team may be more successful than the University has realized. No one, especially another athlete, wants to see a major part of any student-athlete's college experience ripped away. The administration should give the campus community the opportunity to save men's sports while creating more opportunities for women—on a highly evolved campus such as this, we know the two are not mutually exclusive.

Editors-in-Chief
Rebecca Rowland '02
Peter Van Emburgh '02

Managing Editor
Jim Leahy '03

Senior Editors
Matt Albert '01
Brian Watson '01

Business Manager
Mark Langer '02

News Editors
Laura Day '03
Natalie Casp '02
Rachel Laskow '03

Business and Politics Editors
Michael Boland '03
Maureen Oscadal '03

Forum Editors
April John '03
Peter Hackman '04

Features Editors
Sandi-Jo Galati '04
Jolene Hart '03
Jason Rubinstein '04

Arts and Entertainment Editors
Krista Reisdorf '02
Kristi Johnston '03

FORUM

Cars are source of major headaches

By ALLYSON DEMERATH
Senior Writer

As much as I missed it during my freshman year and refuse to ever give it up again, having a car on campus has caused a multitude of headaches throughout my time here. Though some of my experiences were simply due to bad luck, I am still quite bitter about the whole situation.

I would like to share my story with you in hopes that it will help you to avoid some of my misfortunes.

It all started during my sophomore year when I made the LONG trip from Colorado to wonderful Pennsylvania. I admire people who drive from California! Like all students, I registered my car and paid for a parking permit. As burdensome as this task was, I could understand the reasoning behind it. Yet I often wondered, why did I even bother to purchase one of those things?

Our small campus is not conducive to everyone owning a car. Consequently, you are lucky to find a parking place 10 miles from where you actually want to be.

I cannot tell you how many times I drove uphill in the hopes of avoiding having to walk in the rain or snow, only to spend more time looking for a parking place than it would have taken me to walk. To add to my annoyance, I normally ended up parking farther away from where I started.

Thankfully, our campus is equipped with flasher zones. I love to blinker my car! Yet, if I run to the Langone Center just to check my mail, I feel as though I have to time myself. I swear that public safety has spies out there that just waiting for you to leave. They count down the seconds until you have exceeded the time and write you a nice big fat ticket.

Mind you, these are not the $10 tickets the town of Lewisburg issues. Plus, if you have more than one, they start to increase exponentially!

At this point, you can understand why one would be so very excited about finding a parking place in the tiny lot meant to accommodate students living in Hunt, Vedder and Harris.

After a long day during my junior year, I was absolutely ecstatic to discover an empty spot. Too bad that the parking lot is located right in the middle of a floodplain that the University casually neglected to mention to the students who were parked there when a flash flood warning is in effect.

You can imagine my sheer joy to wake up on Monday morning only to discover that I should bring a camera with me down to my car. Why? Oh, for insurance purposes. Needless to say, that was the end of a t h a t car.

I immediately drove back to the place where I had it serviced. I went directly to the front desk and explained that the turn signal had been damaged. The person just blankly stared at me and said, "Oh, it wasn't like that before ... we were sure." No, Einstein, it wasn't like that before.

Unbelievable!

I can understand that the University did not want students to risk their safety in a mad dash at 3:30 in the morning to rescue cars. Yet, don't you think it would have been appreciated if someone had informed us at the beginning of the year that this was a floodplain and to take caution during extreme weather conditions? After all, I soon discovered that this was not the first time students had lost their cars in this area due to a flood.

So what happens if your car has any type of problem? Your selection of repair places is indeed quite limited. I personally would like to recommend Kost Tire for the simple reason that the mechanics are honest and friendly.

Because I drive an old car, I often frequent this company. They even know me by name. I have a foreign car, so you can imagine that finding the right parts can be a bit complicated sometimes.

Kost Tires is always very candid about what it can and cannot fix. Unfortunately, I just had a recent problem that Kost was unable to service. I had to search out another local place to have it serviced. When I went to pick up the car, I paid my bill and left. No one mentioned anything to me about complications.

You can imagine my surprise when I went to turn on my blinker and discovered that the entire level had been broken off the steering wheel column. It was dangling down by only wires.

I immediately drove back to the place where I had it serviced. I went directly to the front desk and explained that the turn signal had been damaged. The person just blankly stared at me and said, "Oh, it wasn't like that before ... we were sure." No, Einstein, it wasn't like that before.

Unbelievable!

Fair wage campaign misses the point

Flaws abound in BCEJ's quest for increase in University workers' wages

By TOM ELLIOT
Staff Writer

It's now the end of Earth Week and can anyone honestly claim to have escaped the sting of the excitement bug? But enough about Earth Week, let's get down to business.

The fraught cries bellowing from the lifeless and dreary confines in which we engage our Dining Services indentured servants (a.k.a. employees) are in the process of uniting behind one singular ray of hope.

Like a knight bearing a lustrous, shiny, metallic armor, riding enormous twin horses, sent on a divine mission to the call of duty in the war of good versus evil, the Bucknell Caucus For Economic Justice (BCEJ) has valiantly arisen and boasted proudly, "The Dining Service shall suffer no more!"

I would feel compelled to join in on all the excitement if I were either a dining service employee who has entered the dining service workforce with the intentions of climbing the corporate ladder so that I earn enough to support an entire family while still doing a fairly simple job, or a young progressive student in dire need to ally with some sort of rebel-leftist campaign "in the name of humanity and all that is good."

Fortunately for us all, I am none of these. The latter is something I have considered, but later decided against.

The former, from what I have seen, does not exist.

Furthermore, the need for such a movement is self-defeating in that the roots that necessitate its existence are non-existent.

These determined, revolution-focused young progressives would be more effective in their efforts by uniting behind a different and more impressive and important calling.

The proposal seems reasonable on the surface. Dining service workers are making a dismal $6 an hour (I don't know the exact amount); the rest of the staff is doing better than that, so why not bump it up?

I haven't been able to get my hands on the latest edition of The Catalyst; perhaps it's time to renew my subscription.

According to the last one I did read, the money for this pay-hike would come from the pay-reduction of the president, vice president and probably a few more of the elite plutocrats running this bourgeois—run dissonance we know-nothings call Bucknell.

At first it seems unusual how only the dining service workers are singled out in this campaign.

Why not others? Maybe others that could possibly be even closer to the hearts of the BCEJers, like, fellow students working in similar scenarios for equal or less money.

Their immediate response would undoubtedly be, "The students don't need the extra money; they are just part-time jobs—kids looking for some funds—but the Cafeteria workers really need this, I mean. They are victims!"

This comes back to my last point; these "victims" don't exist.

The employees of Dining Services are good people looking to make some loot without doing back-breaking or brain-wrenching labor.

They are people who voluntarily signed on to do a job that pays $6 an hour.

These people were under no false pretext or intentional illusion that they would be making what the BCEJ considers a "living wage" when they signed on as staff workers. They were never promised that such a change would occur.

Neglecting a total lack of actual empirical evidence, a general observation from a frequent and abundantly satisfied Bison and Cafeteria consumer (myself), reveals provocatively that the vast majority of the said workers are teenagers or young-adults.

If I were a success-oriented budding journalist, I would have performed hard-hitting and detailed interviews with the subjects, while complementing my claims with statistical information indisputably backing these up, making for a solid piece of writing.

You will have to make do with this mediocrity.

The jobs these victims fill are relatively low-skilled, made evident through the wage rate of $6 per hour.

If the BCEJ were to really take an intelligent approach at improving these victims' lives, it would be one of a more constructive nature, not just making low-skilled jobs high paying.

First of all, I don't consider it the University's job to fill such a requirement, but if it were to assume this charitable role, I would recommend doing so in a practical manner.

How about, a program that starts them off as Cafeteria or Bison workers or whatever. Then, since we reside in this densely populated sea of knowledge, afford classes to these people on the side as part of their payment, consequently enabling them to become more skilled and able to climb the social ladder, if so desired.

Perhaps TAs and the like could teach the classes for extra credit.

Those who want to just do the norm and work their jobs in Dining Services would have that option.

But what do I know? I am just a non-paid mediocre staff writer searching my progressive soul.

Europe's language battle

By GRETCHEN SCHROCK
Opinions Columnist

Blame it on America and its amazing ability to export its values, its culture, its everything. Blame it on American cultural imperialism, in which American advertisements for Coca-Cola and The Gap infiltrate every corner of the globe in a conscious effort to find the next explosive market. Blame it on the American technological revolution that only communicates in one language: English.

Despite the various cited causes, Europeans are in the midst of a turbulent debate over the status of English in their countries, which threatens the usage of native tongues. The language debate is especially contentious in Switzerland, which has a diverse population and four national languages—French, German, Italian and Roman. Without a common national language to bind the country firmly together, the Swiss must rely on their common values, beliefs and history to provide national cohesion, and the use of education to bridge the language barrier.

However, the recent introduction of a new English program in the canton of Zurich has threatened to further divide the country. Now children are learning English as their first foreign language, instead of learning one of the languages spoken by their fellow citizens. Students as young as seven years old are practicing multiplication and discussing the weather in English and are singing "Old MacDonald" and "How Are You This Morning?" in addition to local German tunes. It must be more important for these students to be able to converse with an ignorant American than with their neighbors. English is the language of the successful, rich businessperson and to be successful, Swiss parents want their children to be fluent in it, possibly to the detriment of the country.

Yet, the language controversy is flaring up not only in Switzerland, but also in France, Germany, Romania and Poland. Protection of native languages from the "bastardized tongue" is evident in numerous legislative acts in several countries and it is understandable why such acts have been passed. European universities, particularly in northern Europe, are providing courses in science, philosophy and business in English. Some companies like Alcatel, a French telecommunications company owned by the state, use English as their internal language. In response to the English threat, the French government has made it mandatory for all advertising, labeling and instruction manuals to be in French and 40 percent of all songs on the radio and all television programming also must be in French.

Bertrand Mercier of the European Bureau for Lesser Used Languages in Europe said, as quoted by The New York Times, "This [the widespread use of English] could be very dangerous. If you start to eliminate the intellectual community and the economic community, you can eventually kill off its language." This statement is undeniably correct. A language thrives on its usage in all areas of daily life, from business to literature to everyday conversation.

If English slowly begins to replace French or German or any other European language in any aspect of life, those words normally used in that situation will slowly die. With that linguistic death comes the death of diversity and culture. Language is a remnant of history with each word expressing a unique facet of that nation's heritage. Replacing native words with English causes the gradual ignorance of a precious history. For example, German has experienced a variety of English words entering into its everyday vocabulary, like "flirt," "baby," "power," "clever," "administration," "underwear," "sex-appeal," and "happy ending," causing 53 percent of respondents in a recent poll to oppose the usage of English words.

How important is the preservation of European languages from the influx of English words and phrases? You can argue that having a common language might unite the various peoples of Europe or at least that language should adapt to the changing world climate and incorporate the newest phrases. If English is the current trend, shouldn't you adopt it? The response to these assertions: at what cost?

Language is the glue that strongly binds culture together. Without that constant reminder of language, you lose track of your cultural identity. The imposition of imperialism upon African nations during the 19th century forced the elite Africans to learn the tongue of their colonizing country and in turn, alienated these people from the majority of their fellow citizens, who retained their tribal languages. The African elite perceived themselves as European and not members of their former culture.

Unfortunately, English is the language of the new cultural imperial power of the United States and is imposing itself on Europe, sweeping other languages to the sidelines. The horrible result is a permanent loss for future generations in the realm of diversity and cultural appreciation.

Students need to stand up for a cause

Today's college students far more ignorant and passive than previous generations

By KELLEN ALEXIS SMITH

Staff Writer

Historically speaking, many things in this country were changed by college students. Students rallied together to get things done that they felt that the government overlooked or ignored. College students pushed for changes and even if they didn't get them, they at least had their voices heard.

What are the causes for today's college students? Do we not sense the need to do something? Or are we just happy as can be with achieving nothing significant as a generation?

Our generation does not have a great cause that can or will rally together a vast majority of us; instead we have come together with a sense of

FEATURES

Kathy Arnett: enthusiasm and expertise to OCAP

By KATY ZACHRY
Staff Writer

Kathy Arnett is not a woman unfamiliar to University students. Whether she is known as the co-advisor of Activities and Campus Events, the advisor to Building on Foundations, the member of numerous search committees and task forces, Delta Gamma's sorority advisor, or just by her ebullient personality, this involved and talented woman is hard to miss.

Currently serving as one of two assistant directors of activities and programs, Arnett came to the University less than two years ago after serving for seven years as the director of student activities at Bluefield College in Virginia. A considerably smaller institution, Arnett explains that the transition from Bluefield to the University wasn't difficult, but the different type of student was an adjustment.

"Lewisburg is similar to Bluefield in that it is also a small college town, but the main difference between the two schools is the students," Arnett said. "It's been a great experience for me coming to a different culture and a different type of institution. The students here are completely different. Everyone here is so self-motivated."

If motivated students are the reason for the activity Arnett sees in her office everyday, then the University boasts an active and driven student body. Visited by hundreds of people every week, the Office of Campus Activities and Programs, where Kathy works as part of Assistant Dean of Students Kari Conrad's activities staff, is the nucleus for all student-run organizations and activities on campus.

"I just think that there are so many needs from our students. We have a diverse student body, and although many like to become involved in the Greek organizations and their activities, they don't necessarily want to do those things every weekend. Our first year students aren't allowed to be involved in Greek activities, so I think we have to have alternate activities for all of our students," Arnett said.

Because of the students' dependency on this office, Arnett works with Conrad, and Carolyn Strickland, Arnett's fellow assistant director, on a daily basis to ensure that the activities and programs generated from this office are well-received and enjoyed by the majority of students on campus.

According to Conrad, "Kathy contributes immensely to the office, to moral, and has indeed significantly and positively affected the lives of many students and staff."

The newer of the two assistant directors, Strickland, agrees with this sentiment and is grateful to Arnett for helping her to make the transition to the University. "Kathy has such a warm and friendly personality; she made me feel welcome to Bucknell immediately. She has been a great colleague to work with and learn from," Strickland said.

The two assistant directors work most closely with ACE, Activities and Campus Events, Bucknell's newest activities organization, which was formed at the start of the year. ACE is the combination of BAC (Bucknell Activities Council) and TOKENS (Themes Offered to Create and Enhance New Spirit), two former programming organizations. Reconfigured to accommodate seven different committees as well as an executive board, ACE is viewed as a positive change in Arnett's eyes.

"I think the whole effort has been great for the University overall because we have been able to bring more programs to campus, and each of the committees can brainstorm and bring back their specific ideas to the whole group. I think it started out in its first year very, very well, and it's just going to continue getting better," Arnett said.

While she insists there are more rewarding aspects of her job than she can name, Arnett considers her interaction with students to be at the top of the list.

"I think working with the students one-on-one and seeing them really feel excited about the things they have presented and the fact that people came to the events is a plus. It's rewarding just seeing the end result of everyone's hard work put toward successful events," Arnett said.

Students realize that they are not the only ones who generate the hard work that goes into events. Vice President for Human Relations of ACE Erica Delandano said, "I knew that Bucknell would benefit immensely by her presence. The fresh enthusiasm and ambition apparent in ACE is, in a large part, a product of the positive attitude and endless effort of Kathy Arnett. She has touched the lives of many and continues to be a motivator and mentor to countless students."

As assistant director of activities and programs, Arnett is known for so much more—everything from sorority advisor to search committees.

Not only is Kathy's dedication apparent to students but to her colleagues as well.

"Whether it be the Chrysalis Ball or an ACE event, Kathy always approaches her responsibilities with a smile and a great attitude, perhaps one of the reasons her office is always filled with students," Conrad said.

While the University graduates close to a thousand seniors every year, there is always a new freshman class ready to fill their spots. However, should Arnett ever graduate from the Office of Campus Activities and Programs, there would be few, if any, who could take the place of this well-liked and dedicated woman.

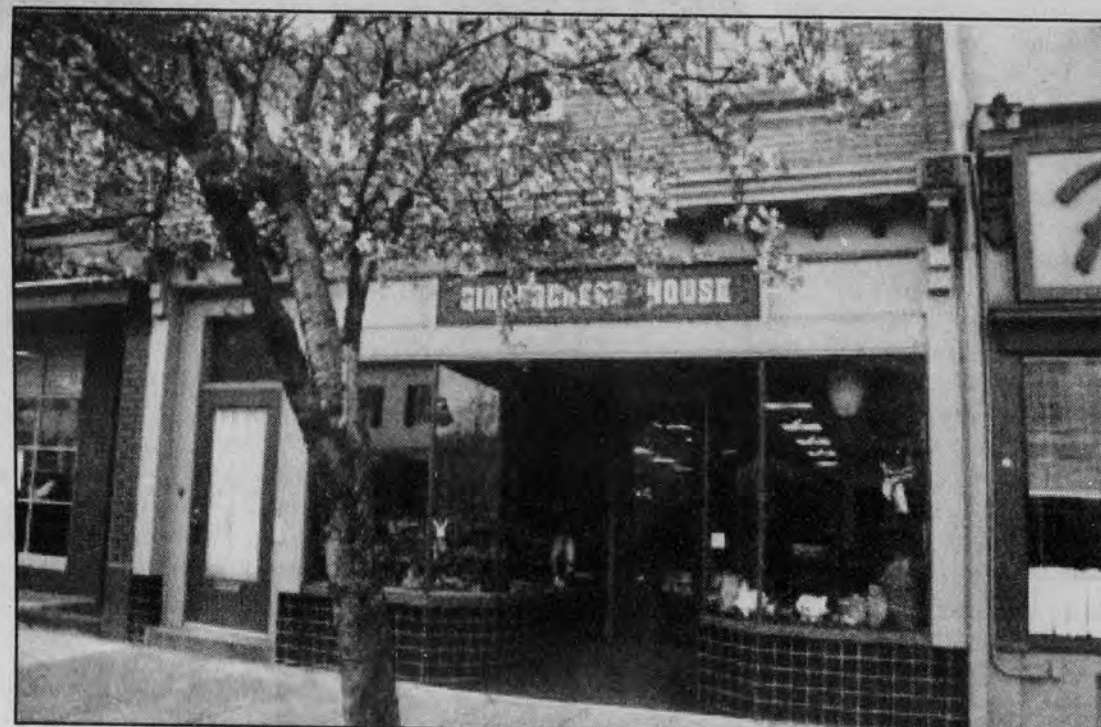

Gingerbread House: Lewisburg's very own fairy tale

By KATIE HEISE
Senior Writer

After a visit to one of the charming and cozy shops downtown, it's easy to understand why Hansel and Gretel were so fascinated by their gingerbread house. Although it lacks the candy-coated exterior of the infamous witch's cottage, Lewisburg's own Gingerbread House is just as remarkable.

Who could resist the invitation of the shop windows of 322 Market Street? A plethora of home and gift items and a scattering of fine foods meet the eye and capture the attention, encouraging a closer look.

From the moment of entry, the senses combine to create an atmosphere of warmth and contentment. The delicate notes of the door chimes, the subtle aromas of coffee beans and potpourri, the carefully arranged spectrum of merchandise. Each item has its place in the spotlight, yet the overall picture is seamless and enchanting. Mu-

From ceramics to teddy bears, Gingerbread House has it all. 322 Market Street is a true shopper's paradise a place where the customer is sure to find a unique treasure.

bers of the Lewisburg family. Gingerbread House is a treasure chest of collectibles, kitchenware, bath and body products, fragrances and gourmet food. As one slowly treks their way through the spacious aisles, one modern society, design and functionality. street scenes of local artist Jeanette Campbell, celebrations

Among the store's most popular collections is the exclusive "Byer's Choice" line of rosy-cheeked carolers, dolls which represent all walks of life, from the Victorian era to the present. Each of these dolls is hand-made in Pennsylvania and communicates a unique spark of life and personality; children in Halloween attire and even an organ grinder and his monkey have stepped out of the past to grace the shelves of the Gingerbread House.

The shop also boasts a variety of Lewisburg-themed items, including a series of pewter Christmas ornaments, pottery, cups and mugs featuring the official lampost logo, and the watercolors and of the town's growth and development over the years.

Just a few feet away, a group of soft Winnie the Pooh plush animals congregates around place settings and gifts, also featuring the residents of the Hundred Acre Wood. Nutcrackers and traditional German incense burners in the shape of men smoking hookahs share space with picnic sets, "Boyd's" bears and baby gifts, while hard-to-find menorahs and dreidels overlook a rabbit statue that seems to quiver with life.

Among punch bowls and serving trays, Dr. Seuss' Cat in the Hat grins at the passersby, paving the way for an endearing collection of pig and frog crockery. Shockingly, a stuffed pig clad in leather motorcycle gear appears beside a wall filled with greeting cards.

And then there is the food! Gingerbread House offers a combination of rich and light dishes guaranteed to satisfy any palate. Ranging from vintage biscuits and cookies to specialty sauces and jellies to wine-filled chocolates, the selection seems endless. A frog sits casually atop a shelf, imploring customers to examine colorful rows of tea, coffee, and sparkling cider, and taste free samples of cookies and drinks.

For those in the mood for something truly exotic, there is a considerable stock of Niagara, a Swedish herbal drink that, while meeting FDA requirements as a dietary supplement for women, is reportedly an aphrodisiac.

From ceramics to teddy bears, Gingerbread House has it all. It is a true shopper's paradise, a place where the customer is sure to find a unique treasure. Free gift-wrapping services are provided, and patrons are encouraged to assemble their own gourmet food baskets, which are packaged and shipped without extra hassle.

The Arts Festival on April 28 offers a perfect opportunity to visit Gingerbread House if you haven't yet had the chance; a representative from Byer's will be on hand to sign the famous carolers, and the community will be out in force.

So, why not take a walk through the "woods" of Lewisburg and experience a taste of the Gingerbread House?

U-SAVE
AUTO RENTAL

Low, Low Rates !

*We bill insurance companies direct.

*Major credit cards accepted.

*Must be 21 or older.

Earning the right
to serve you each and every time.

524-0000

Rt.15 & Nth 7th St.

Lewisburg, Pa. 17837

Mon-Fri 8:00-5:00

Sat. 8:00-12:00

FOR RENT

LEWISBURG: Apts & houses
near BU campus. 1-6 bdrm
units. Parking provided.
Heat, washer/dryer, dishwasher included in some.
Prof. 24-hour maintenance.
Range: $275 -1,200/mo.
for 2001/2002. CALL NOW
Brynwood Rentals
Ph: 570/524-2121 x 2.

Come Party at the:

ARIZONA
CAFE

Outdoor Patio and Fireside Dining

Quesadillas Enchiladas
Chicken Soft Tacos Seafood
Monster Burritos Steaks

Most Meals $9 - $13 No Charge Cards (Checks Accepted)

Bring in this Coupon for
1 FREE
virgin margarita
with each entree
purchased

From Bucknell:
Take Market St (Rt 45)
Cross bridge and stay
straight until ends.
Turn Right.
Exactly 4.0 mi on Left.

Open Tues-Thurs 11:30-9, Fri & Sat 11:30-10, Sun 11:30-8

Reservations Recommended

FEATURES

An abroad perspective down under: Brisbane, Australia

Melissa McMicken '01 chose to go abroad in Brisbane, Australia—land of kangaroos, Aborigines, and Vegemite.

By MELISSA McMICKEN
Contributing Writer

When I was presented with the choice to study abroad, I signed up based merely on my older classmates' advice. I was sure that I wanted to travel and experience a new culture, but I was apprehensive about leaving the "Bucknell Bubble" for such a long period of time. Now, I want to convey to all prospective abroad students, that the decision to study abroad was the best decision I have ever made.

Once I had decided that I wanted to go abroad, the location was not difficult to choose; I knew that the land of kangaroos, Aborigines and Vegemite was the place for me. I chose to study with the Beaver College program in Brisbane, Australia for the spring semester of my junior year. I wanted to make the most of this opportunity and travel to a country I had never seen before. I also wanted to go alone and test my independence. The experience proved to do just this, and consequently, taught me much about myself.

Beaver's program consisted of trips for our program. The first was our week-long orientation in Melbourne, Australia. This was an excellent way to quickly become acquainted with the group. We stayed at our program director's house in the country, exploring beautiful beaches, eating at wonderful restaurants, and participating in activities to bond with our new "mates."

When we flew north to Brisbane I was very pleased to see where I would live for the next five months. The accommodations were amazing. I lived with nine other male and female Americans in a beautiful home, and six of us had single bedrooms.

Classes at our large Australian university began two weeks after we arrived. A full-time student takes four classes. I chose to take Australian Cultural Studies, Language in the Media, Philosophy and Sexuality and my favorite, a music class, from Elvis to Madonna. The classes consisted of lectures and tutorials, totaling three hours for each class per week. While the classes were not especially difficult, Australian professors grade differently, which posed a challenge at times. It was also great to attend class and interact with Australian students, because it gave me a true taste of their college culture.

The second trip that Beaver College sponsored was to Byron Bay, a beach town located four hours south of Brisbane. We stayed in hotels and were given surfing lessons, although none of us were able to "hang ten" on our first attempt! Australia is known for its surfing, and so many of us tried again.

For those of us who gave up after our millionth fall and decided to enjoy surfing as a spectator sport, the 2000 Billabong tournament was very entertaining. We watched some of the most competitive male and female surfers battle for the win as dolphins jumped in their wake. It was a sight that will never be erased from my memory.

The laid-back, barefooted atmosphere of Australia was a wonderful change. Australians are extremely friendly and proud of their country. Rugby matches, the country's prized sport, can become very intense, helped by the amount of XXXX and VB beer (Australian brew) that is a large part of the culture. The crowd tends to become a little loud and rowdy to say the least! Goat was one of the true Australian culture.

Traveling is another great way to experience Australia and its surrounding countries. I did not travel every weekend, but I did travel frequently. It was easy to get around using public transportation, and some of my friends grouped together and even bought used cars because they were so cheap and useful.

I was also able to travel beyond Australia to New Zealand and Bali. New Zealand is the most beautiful country I have ever seen. Each turn of the road offered more breathtaking scenery than the last. Bali was also a very interesting country and offered a perspective of a developing nation; my visit was an eye-opening experience.

I had a chance to travel domestically and see the Olympic preparations in Sydney. The whole city was brimming with excitement.

Traveling north of Brisbane, I spent my spring break sailing around the Whit Sunday Islands, close to the famous Great Barrier Reef. The excitement from actually being in places that I had only seen on postcards never left me.

One of my favorite memories in Australia was seeing Steve Irwin, the one and only Crocodile Hunter. We saw him at the Australian zoo, along with many koalas and kangaroos, performing a show for his audience. I couldn't believe that he was actually in front of me taunting crocodiles and narrating the entire process with his native expressions.

A nother memory is sky-diving on my trip to Noosa. It is a feeling that I can not put into words and a feeling that is impossible to experience with your feet on solid ground. The reality of the jump did not set in until I was in a tiny plane climbing to a height I felt we would never reach. As it came time to jump, my tandem sky-diving partner moved me into our launch position and profanities escaped my mouth at a rapid pace. I could not believe I was really going to do this. I did not have time to protest, however, and before I knew it I was flying through the air, never wanting to touch ground again. I have never experienced similar feelings running through my body during those 30 seconds. It seemed utterly surreal.

I had opportunities that I may never have again, but can smile knowing that I made the best of my experience. My time in Australia was the best five months of my life and something that I will treasure forever. I was able to explore places I had never seen and meet people that made tremendous impacts on my life. Going abroad is so special because it isn't normal and it isn't regular; it is the incredible feeling that you have when you realize you are doing something that you have always dreamed of doing—the dream has become reality.

The author and her three friends pose in front of the Sydney Opera House.

The "Crocodile Hunter" Steve Irwin taunts a crocodile at the Australian Zoo.

Fremont Scholars travel to Harrisburg

By SARAH GUDENKAUF
Staff Writer

The University's Small Business Development Center took the University's Fremont scholars to Harrisburg on March 27 to further expose the students to the intricacies of international and small business. While in Harrisburg, the Fremont scholars received an overview of the Department of Community and Economic Development (CED), met with State Representative Merle Phillips and toured the state capitol facility.

The Fremont Scholars program sponsors international students to attend the University and participate in an internship. The program is designed to promote international understanding and foster cooperative relationships between the United States and foreign countries.

While at the CED, students learned about a variety of business related topics, such as the programs run by the Center of Entrepreneurial Assistance of Pennsylvania. They also learned of Pennsylvania's international business development initiative and the state's business finance program. The Fremont scholars also met with Samuel McCullough, secretary of the CED, for an interactive discussion on the importance of global economics to Pennsylvania businesses.

Following the visit to the CED, the students met with Phillips to further their understanding of Pennsylvania business issues. He emphasized the importance of enticing graduating students from Pennsylvania colleges to remain in the state. He also spoke about the contributions of the small business community to Pennsylvania's economy. Before leaving Harrisburg the students received a tour of Pennsylvania's state capitol.

Judith Harris, SBDC coordinator, organized and supervised the trip to Harrisburg. She felt that the trip was both enjoyable and educational.

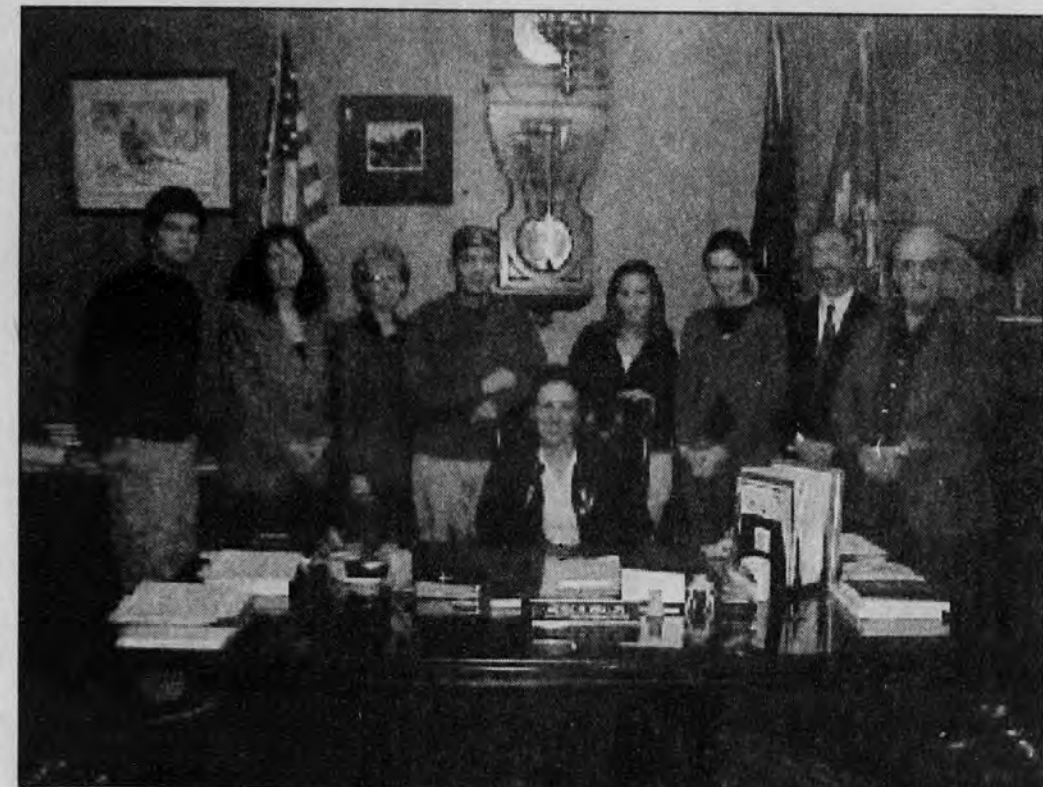

"We had a lot of fun and the students got a good idea of what goes on in the field of international business," Harris said.

The trip to Harrisburg was only one of many activities sponsored by the SBDC for Fremont scholars. Fremont scholars are provided with opportunities to expand their international experiences by working on projects that include international patents, export market analysis, and interacting with international business agencies.

Director John Politis of the SBDC said, "I cannot emphasize enough the importance of international student contribution to my department's commitment to small business."

The Fremont scholars program also provides great hands-on experience for its participants. "Students benefit because through their internships they work with presidents and CEOs of companies on real issues and problems."

Bucknell SBDC and Fremont Scholar students met with Pennsylvania Representative Merle Phillips in his Harrisburg State Capitol office.

Courtesy of SBDC

TANNING

Full New Nail Services Manicure
Weekly Tanning Specials
Credit Cards Now Accepted
Call for Appointments

5756 West Market Street, Lewisburg, Pa.
Tel: 570-522-9636

Susquehanna Valley
Limousine Inc.

With a long tradition of quality service to the Bucknell Community, SVL offers:

Seventy five and more destinations, door to door
Seamless car transfers to and from Airports
For groups
Ride sharing between local destinations
Many available vehicles, vans, to 18 seat and limousines
Service 24 hours a day, 7 days a week

For more information or to make reservations
call

1.800.685.5567

SCIENCE & TECHNOLOGY

Yesterday's medicine lags way behind today's

By NATE IVANICK
Staff Writer

I am sure all of us have had enough of today's health care system—from the constant arguing about Medicare and HMOs to the long lines in emergency rooms. Could it get any worse? Well, in fact, it could. The proof is in our history.

The views of the medical community of the 16th century were very different from our views today. Philosophers in early modern Europe subscribed to the Galenic, or humoral theory of medicine.

Galen (A.D. 129-200) was a Greek physician who drew on Aristotelian theory to create a theory based on four "elements." These elements, earth, wind, fire and water, made up everything on earth and in the heavens.

With this theory, philosophers could explain not only the day-to-day ailments of people but also the seasons, the heavenly hierarchy and the shape of man's body.

The four elements represented different fluids inside the human body. Water was considered phlegmatic because it was cold and wet. Fire was like blood, hot and dry. This was why red-haired people were considered choleric, or hotheaded; because all the heat of their blood was in their head.

Sickness was based on an imbalance of the four humors, and so, to cure such afflictions, one humor had to be brought back into balance, usually through purging; afflicted people would be bled, forced to vomit or forced to run until they perspired. Perhaps the best, or worst, example of the problems of early modern health care came with the onset of syphilis. Syphilis is an STD caused by the bacterium Terpenema Pallidum.

Known as the "French disease," it was spread through Europe by soldiers and prostitutes in the late 15th century. According to Medicine and Society in Early Modern Europe, doctors had no idea what to make of the disease, but assumed it to be an imbalance of the humors.

Symptoms of syphilis include pustules covering the face and body, paralysis and even death, in some cases. The doctors tried hundreds of remedies ranging from bloodletting to the application of guaiac, a bark from a Haitian tree on the skin.

The most commonly accepted method however, was mercury. Mercury is an extremely toxic substance and a known carcinogen, but in early modern times, it was a perfect remedy. The saying went, "A night with Venus, a lifetime with Mercury." Syphilis patients would be given mercury in tablets or in the form of a salve to be rubbed on the pustules. Often the treatment of syphilis with mercury was as bad as the disease. Mercury poisoning causes one's teeth and hair to fall out, it forms ulcers, and corrodes membranes in the mouth. To doctors this seemed not only a sign that the mercury was working, but also a just punishment for contracting the disease.

But why would the treatment of mercury have continued for so long if it didn't work at all? The answer is quite interesting.

According to Medicine and Society in Early Modern Europe, syphilis has three stages. Between the stages it goes into a latent stage, in which the patient appears to have been cured.

Doctors, seeing these latent periods, would claim that the mercury had done the job. And when the disease came back? The doctor would simply claim that the person had slept with another prostitute. However, it was more likely that person would die from a host of other afflictions before the disease would ever come back.

Next time you have to wait in line for stitches, or have to pay an arm and a leg for prescriptions, just remember what your ancestors had to go through.

Getting strength in a pill?

By LAUREN WOHL
Science & Technology Editor

Imagine you're a wrestler. It is summer time and you have six months until the season begins. It is also your senior year of college, your final season and you are hoping it will be the most successful. The coach has assigned a workout to get the team in shape, but this is not enough for you.

You want more; you want to be the best, unbeatable. Maybe through a friend or from an informal you have heard about a supplement called creatine. Creatine makes muscles out of molehills, just as spinach transforms Popeye the Sailor Man. More muscles mean better performance in those sports which rely on bursts of power, which is why many athletes use creatine as an extra energy source.

C4 H9 N3 O2, or creatine, is an amino acid produced daily by the kidney and liver. Because creatine is found in small amounts in animal proteins, a natural source of creatine is available from beef, fish and other meats. Some athletes and body builders, however, take creatine supplements, thus getting more than the normal intake.

When taken, creatine is stored in the muscles. Adenosine triphosphate, ATP, is the main source of energy for cells. Thus, when ATP supplies run low in muscles, creatine replaces it and acts as the new energy source, giving athletes an extra boost. Another function of creatine is to neutralize acids which are accumulated during exercise and causes fatigue.

Thus, when taken as a supplement, creatine allows athletes to perform abnormally well. But just how much does creatine add to an athlete's performance. Is it worth the risks and is it fair?

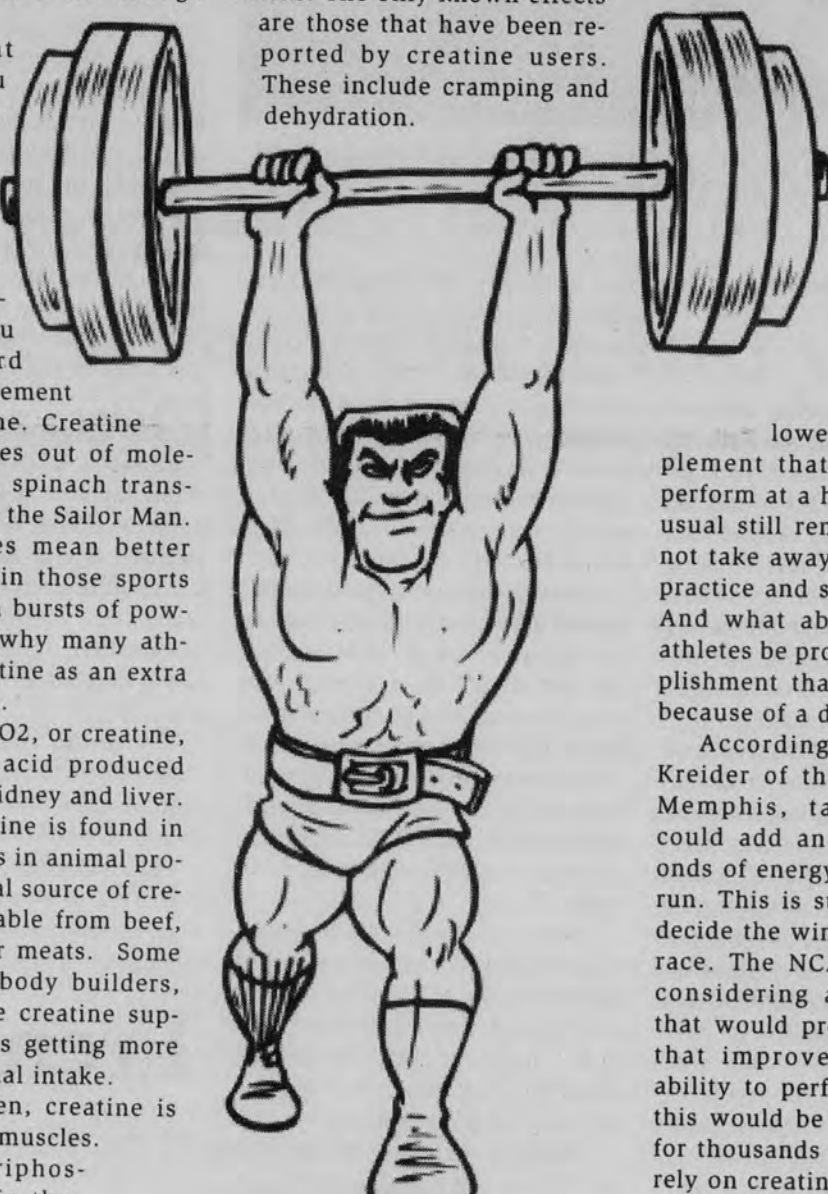

Because creatine supplements are fairly new, there are few studies on its long-term effects. The only known effects are those that have been reported by creatine users. These include cramping and dehydration.

In fact, in 1997 three athletes died after suffering from the extreme loss of bodily fluids. According to Yale Daily News, there was a high level of creatine in one of the three cases investigated. When used improperly or excessively, creatine has been shown to cause severe dehydration.

Investigators do not know if creatine was directly responsible, but the news did force athletes and coaches to carefully reconsider the amount of creatine consumed.

Aside from safety issues, the ethical question of whether athletes should be allowed to take a supplement that helps them to perform at a higher level than usual still remains. Does this not take away the meaning of practice and skill in athletics? And what about pride? Can athletes be proud of an accomplishment that they achieved because of a drug?

According to Richard B. Kreider of the University of Memphis, taking creatine could add an extra two seconds of energy to a 100-meter run. This is surely enough to decide the winner of a crucial race. The NCAA is currently considering an amendment that would prohibit any drug that improves an athlete's ability to perform. If passed, this would be a huge setback for thousands of athletes who rely on creatine.

Courtesy of www.Athvista.com

Did you know... Jellyfish have eyes, a brain and a heart but, shockingly, do not have nerves?

Courtesy of www.funtrivia.com

Bridget Jones's Diary reaches out to women

By KRISTEN JANCUR
Staff Writer

Fans of Helen Fielding's Bridget Jones's Diary can breathe a sigh of relief. The movie based on the bestselling novel puts Bridget on the big screen, but she's still the same neurotic character her devoted readers know and love. Those who haven't read the book can also enjoy this romantic comedy, starring Renée Zellweger, Hugh Grant and Colin Firth.

Bridget Jones's Diary chronicles a year in the life of a thirty-something singleton in England. Women of all ages can relate to Bridget's constant search for a decent man, promising career and perfect weight. Despite the outcry from Britain over the selection of waitress Renée Zellweger, most famous for her role as Dorothy Boyd in Jerry Maguire, to play chubby Brit Bridget, she fills the role perfectly.

While Zellweger put on 20 pounds for the role, her most impressive feat is the perfect portrayal of Bridget's simultaneously insecure and strong character. Zellweger conveys both sides of Bridget—the confident singleton with ambition and the lonely girl who fears "dying alone and being found three weeks later half-eaten by an Alsatian."

Grant plays Bridget's boss, Daniel Cleaver, with whom Bridget has a brief relationship. Grant's version of the drunk, inconsiderate yet charming Daniel is hilarious but somewhat underdeveloped in comparison with the other characters.

While viewers will feel they've gotten to know Bridget, Daniel remains a mystery for the most part. Fifth, a famous British actor relatively unknown in the United States, plays the wealthy barrister Mark Darcy—just the kind of man Bridget's family would love for her to marry.

Fans of the book will remember that Bridget and her friends obsessed over the actor, known in Britain for his role as Mr. Darcy in Pride and Prejudice. Firth's Mark is one of the strongest characters in the movie. While fans will dislike his arrogant and rude behavior in the beginning, his growing concern for Bridget and her relationship with her boss will win everyone over in the end. I was impressed with the way Firth portrayed the change in Mark's character very gradually. It was hard to pinpoint the moment where Mark became "the good guy." Though not an up-and-coming young actor, Firth's success in this role may bring him into the Hollywood spotlight.

Despite the stellar cast, the movie has a few weaknesses, especially in comparison to the book. The obsessive, crazy nature of Bridget's mother is not emphasized enough and the roles of Bridget's three friends, Jude, Tom and Shazzer, are unfortunately downplayed. Some important aspects of Bridget's character are also absent, such as her constant lateness, her obsession with self-help books and her incessant calorie counting.

However, unlike some movie adaptations, the film stays true to the book's plot. In the interest of time, of course, some events could not be included, but the facts and the events of Bridget's life remain relatively the same. Also, while British humor is often quite different from American humor, the film succeeded in drawing consistent chuckles from the audience. The book is geared toward women, but the movie appeals to both men and women. There were plenty of each in the theater and both seemed to enjoy the film.

If you're interested in more toward action or mystery, this is not the film for you. But if you love a romantic comedy, you should see this film. However, to get a true sense of Bridget and all the events in this particular year of her life, I recommend reading the book.

Courtesy of www.bridgetjonesdiary.msn.com
Renée Zellweger leads the cast of Bridget Jones's Diary, the recently opened film based on the best-selling novel by Helen Fielding.

Because everyday is the perfect occasion for casual fine dining at...
The Victorian Lady
115 Old Turnpike Road
Lewisburg, PA 17837
Lunch: Mon.-Fri. 11:00-2:00
Dinner: Thurs.-Sat. 5:00-9:00
Phone: (570) 523-8090
www.victorianladyrestaurant.com
5 minutes from campus

New DMB tracks released on Net

By CHAD FLOOD
Staff Writer

Most bands take several years to release their next album. When they do settle down to record, no more than two or three written tracks will be omitted from the album. Many times, these scrapped songs will appear later as B-sides of singles or on a rarities compilation.

Dave Matthews Band doesn't seem to have that problem too often. Writing constantly, including some songs that actually develop on the road rather than in a studio, it is common for the band to have a complete album's worth of material without even settling down to record anything.

Prior to the release of Everyday, the band's latest studio effort, DMB had road-tested and recorded 12 new tracks with long-time producer Steve Lillywhite. However, the band decided not to release these songs on their new record, tentatively titled Three Days Down. The sessions were not going well—a recent story in Rolling Stone reported that there was turmoil within the band. Dave was drinking heavily and a single song took days to record. In addition, most fans already had access to the live versions of eight of the 12 new tracks based on summer concerts and DMB's taping policy, which allows concert goers to record and trade its shows as long as there is no money exchange.

With the album shelved and Lillywhite dropped as producer for the time-being, the five members flew to California to create what would become their most pop-influenced album yet with producer Glen Ballard. The response among the DMB community was mixed, and cries of "sell-out" and "this isn't DMB" were heard loud and clear. Fans begged for the band to release what is now known as the Lillywhite Sessions.

Before the elusive recordings were finally released, many people posted to DMB message boards online, claiming to have the sessions or to know people who do. The fan community was losing hope, many starting to deal with the fact that these songs would never be released.

Towards the end of March, a single individual came upon what thousands had been seeking. Craig, a well-known fan with Dave Matthews Band regulars, posted to the DMB Mailing List message board (dmbml.com) that he did, in fact, have the Lillywhite Sessions. A person with whom he regularly traded sent him the disc, with no knowledge as to what it was he or she possessed.

At this point, many people claimed to have had the album before, but only to later reveal that they did not. When Craig initially posted, people were understandably skeptical. However, he gave out his cell phone number and as people called, he played the full songs, including never-before played numbers such as "Big Eyed Fish" and "Monkey Man."

Craig had a moral dilemma with releasing the songs, as he believed that doing so would be an injustice to the band. After some negotiation, he eventually vowed to release two of the new tracks—"Big Eyed Fish" and "Captain"—and then destroy his own copy. Before this occurred, some other fans put Craig in touch with Steve Lillywhite himself, who supposedly gave the go-ahead to leak the album. Over the next few days, the full sessions were released song-by-song in MP3 format through Napster and other music search engines.

Once the release hit the mass media, things became hectic. Several servers were shut down at the request of RCA records (Dave Matthews Band's label) and the songs were removed from Napster. Lillywhite recently commented on the situation to MTV.

"I cannot condone the release of these unfinished recordings, although I feel these are some of the most moving pieces of music that I've ever recorded with Dave Matthews Band," he said.

Band members have yet to make any public statement regarding the album's release.

The fact remains that whether or not legal action is taken against Craig and no matter who the source of the album is, the songs are still available to anyone with a computer. The biggest concern by members of DMB's agency, Red Light Management, was that copies of the CD would be sold at high prices. However, fans have made every effort to stop the illegal selling of this piece of music.

Being an avid Dave Matthews Band fan, I was among the first to download these songs. In my opinion, I feel that it is a shame the band decided not to release the Lillywhite Sessions. While I truly like Everyday, the songs on this album have much more passion and meaning. It would be hard to argue that the music is not "the real DMB." I had already been treated to many of the songs during this past summer, but they really stand out in the studio recordings.

The newer tracks are quite incredible as well. "Big Eyed Fish," a commentary on security and suicide, is one of the best tracks that Matthews has ever written. In addition, devoted fans who know of the Dave and Tim track "Crazy" will find "Captain," the full band version, to be an outstanding accomplishment.

Those who dislike Everyday will find comfort in the fact that "the real Dave Matthews Band" is still around. While it is too bad that these songs were not released prior to or in conjunction with Everyday, one thing is certain—fans now have 24 new songs to listen to between the two albums, and anyone who has a love for the band's music will surely find something that he or she can enjoy.

ON CAMPUS Physical Therapy Clinic
Monday - Friday
8 a.m. - 5 p.m.
Field House, Athletic Training Suite
577.1060

Cardio Kicks!
HIT LIKE A GIRL!
With: Laura Kamienski & Danielle Snyder
Drop-in and monthly discounts with student ID. Cut out this ad and bring it with you for a free class!
(One coupon per person)

You'll love this.
It's the workout with pulse-pounding music and martial arts moves in an atmosphere that crackles with excitement.
only at KICKS!
MARTIAL ARTS FOR WOMEN
106 Market St., Lewisburg
850-4685
www.kicks4women.com
Martial Arts Center, 106 Market St., Lewisburg

Ya Can't BEAT the BONGO!
Bongo Bongo Dip!
A Bubbly Hot Chicken Salad of Spanish Sausage, Cream, Water Chestnuts, Nuts & Cheddar Cheese. Served with Tasted Garlic Bread for Cropping ENOUGH TO SHARE.
$5.95
Only at BV
17 North Main Street
SEALINGROVE 374-8841
201 Main Street
DANVILLE 275-5110

SAKUNTALA
Fine Indian Cuisine
Try us, it's wonderful
Vegetarian Buffet Dinner: $6.95
Non-Vegetarian Buffet Dinner: $8.95
Open House: Fri. 12:00 noon to 9:00 pm
Sundays: 4:00 pm to 9:00 pm
236 Iron Street, Lewisburg, PA 17837-0281
www.sakuntala.com

Buck's SERVICE
24 HOUR TOWING
PA INJECTION
FOREIGN & DOMESTIC REPAIRS
ROLLBACK TOWING
Rts. 15 & N. 7th St.
Lewisburg, PA 17837
(570) 523-1132
SUNOCO GAS
24 Hours
Rts. 15 & 192

Vennari's Pizza
524-6444
Large Cheese Pizza - $10.95
Medium Cheese Pizza - $8.95
Mon.-Thurs. 11:00-11:00
Fri.-Sat. 11:00-1:00
1111 E. 11th St. Lewisburg, PA 17837

TOYOTA
CALL IT START UP MONEY.
New TOYOTA COLLEGE GRADUATE FINANCE PLAN INCLUDES $500 TO GET YOU GOING!
There's sure to be a Toyota that's just right for you...
And now there's a Toyota College Graduate Finance Program that's just right, too. Here are some of the advantages:
• No Down Payment
• No Payment for 90 days
• Finance up to 72 months
• Get $500 Cash Back From Toyota... in addition to any other current Toyota customer incentives!
So if you're within 4 months of graduation — or if you graduated within the past 2 years — Ask your Toyota dealer for all the details.
www.gettoyota.com
Toyota College Graduate Finance Program available to qualified applicants thru Toyota Financial Services. Not all applicants will qualify. Some restrictions and limitations apply. Cash back offer subject to geographic limitations and offer expires 6/30/01. See dealer for details.

BUSINESS & POLITICS

Pro-logging, pro-environment Presentation reverses misconceptions about the forest-products industry

By ANDREA BEISSER
Staff Writer

Sustainable forest management is an issue being hotly debated by environmentalists and representatives within the logging industry. To address this issue, two local loggers, Martin Melville and Bill Dittmar gave a presentation in Olin Auditorium on Thursday April 12, outlining the pro-logging side of the debate.

I thought the number in attendance was surprisingly small considering the amount of conflict surrounding the issue of logging and environmental degradation but those in attendance, myself included, would agree that it was informative and well-organized.

The message I came away from the lecture with was "everything in moderation". Melville and Dittmar discussed the ideology and ethics of sustainable foresting methods such as silviculture ("tree farming"), clearcutting and selective logging that serve to regenerate forest areas while satisfying both private land owners and environmental activists. The loggers emphasized how important it is to educate property-owners and the general community of environmentalists on sustainable forest logging.

It is more than just cutting down trees and shipping them off to saw mills for money. Sustainable logging involves science as much as it incorporates services to the timber industry.

There is extensive scientific background needed to understand how to manipulate the environment and manage tree diversity to support some species and exclude others. Melville described how it is important to understand the biology behind tree communities and what conditions are the most advantageous to some species while being detrimental to others.

For example, certain species of shade intolerant trees like Aspen and Black Hickory need larger amounts of sun exposure to grow while certain shade mid-tolerant species like White Pine grow better with less light exposure. If patches of Aspen were carelessly eradicated, it would endanger the shade mid-tolerant tree species that rest pleasantly beneath the Aspen canopy.

Loggers make the effort to understand and abide by these biological principles when they evaluate property and advise owners who employ their services. They must make a living in an industry that has seen profit margins decrease in the past several years. Loggers must conform to the ordinances that municipalities adopt and are concerned with the image that they portray to the public.

Maintaining the aesthetics, biodiversity and ecological integrity of the environment are several main concerns of loggers—contrary to what the public might envision. Both presenters addressed the fact that America depends heavily on wood and, without it, the expense of building would increase. It would be difficult to find other materials to replace lumber.

Overall, the pro-logging presentation was effective in correcting the myths that surround tree-extraction and emphasized that sustainable practices are pertinent and require sufficient biological education and understanding. Moderation in the elimination of tree species and critical ecological analysis accompanies each logging site.

The future and beauty of the trees in the local Pennsylvania area as well as the rest of the US rests on sustainable forest management and educating both home-owners and environmentalists.

Forestry is not just cutting down trees for monetary profit and material goods, it is an industry that incorporates environmental ethics and evaluates its impacts on the environment.

Public Safety chief seeks supervisor post

Vincent DeCercio hopes to translate University experience into political victory

By MELISSA FINKELSTEIN
Staff Writer

Although Vincent DeCercio, Director of Bucknell University Public Safety, laughed when I called to inform him that I was covering his campaign for East Buffalo Township Supervisor, it seems he would take this position quite seriously should he be elected.

"This is an exciting place in which to live because it is small enough to perpetuate the experiment of democracy started two hundred years ago and large enough to make a difference at the state and national levels. Grassroots politics and small town governments are the foundations upon which this country was built. State government must listen to local government to succeed as a representative of the people."

DeCercio is running for one of three supervisory positions, which together will manage 5,300 residents within forty square miles. Open up his campaign brochure, and you will see three words in bold capital letters: "Knowledge, Integrity, Experience"—which form the centerpiece of his campaign.

There is no doubt that DeCercio has experience. He has been the Director of Public Safety at the University for eleven years and has served his community in capacities such as Chair of the Union County Environmental Advisory Council, and member of the United States Penitentiary Community Relations Board.

His commitments to public service take up an entire page of his brochure: Chair, Lewisburg Area Recreation Authority, Board of Directors, Donald L. Heiter Community Center, and so on. He is also a veteran of the United States Army.

The director also has no shortage of knowledge. DeCercio has a Bachelor of Arts in English from Westchester University, and an MS in Criminal Justice Administration from the same institution. DeCercio further gained knowledge through twenty-five years of administrative experience.

As for integrity, DeCercio believes, "I must represent my constituents and they wish to maintain a rural environment, a strong, honest work ethic in the community, a viable economic base and a community where families can be raised without fear of crime or prejudice."

DeCercio will be keeping his Bucknell position should he be elected on May 15th. The Township Supervisor is a part-time position requiring attendance at three to four meetings per month, plus a commitment to at-home work. Mr. DeCercio spoke about how his job as Director of Public Safety has prepared him for the elected position: "I have learned how to properly and objectively study and evaluate conflicts, issues and projects, and how to be a problem solver."

Not only does Mr. DeCercio have the practical qualifications for the position, but anyone who reads his campaign brochure will become convinced of his devotion to upholding the value of this community.

"I believe in a strong work ethic and a strong commitment to the independence and integrity of public service," DeCercio says in his brochure. Indeed, DeCercio has been involved as a volunteer in the community for the past ten years.

His brochure also states: "I believe that the quality of life in our community is connected directly to the conduct of our government leaders, our economic viability, the quality of our schools and recreational programs and our regard for all people and all ages within our community."

Regardless of the results of the election, it became clear to me that Vincent DeCercio is actually very serious in his dedication to the community.

Abortion pill scarce on college campuses

FDA approval sparks debate on whether to make RU-486 available to students

By AMANDA KAUFMAN
Staff Writer

Although the Food and Drug Administration approved the abortion pill RU-486 (mifepristone) for use in the United States seven months ago, many universities have decided not to offer it.

Bucknell numbers among the majority of schools whose on-campus health centers do not provide the drug. When questioned as to the policy, the Zeigler Health Center's receptionist answered, "We don't do that here. I think it's because of the restrictions on foul-up and things like that. I don't think we are prepared to deal with emergency surgery interventions."

Other universities have issued similar statements, saying conditions for dispensing the series of drugs necessary for a non-surgical abortion are too onerous.

While a drug-induced abortion sounds like a relatively simple procedure, the implications are more complex. According to The Weekly Standard, the treatment actually consists of a number of pills administered over the course of seventy-two hours.

First, the doctor provides RU-486, a man-made steroid designed to break down progesterone. Without progesterone, the fetus cannot survive. RU-486 starves the fetus while destroying the surroundings within the womb. Once the fetus is no longer er viable, the woman returns to her doctor for a dose of misoprostol, which causes cramping and contractions. This chemical causes the mother's uterus to expel its contents—a process which can occur any time after she takes the drug.

During her final doctor's office or clinic visit, a doctor will examine the woman to see if her abortion is complete. If the RU-486 abortion has failed, the woman will then be scheduled for surgical abortion.

As with any procedure, complications requiring emergency surgery can occur. Sold as Mifeprex, the drug must be taken within 49 days after the start of the last menstrual period and is only distributed to doctors who can accurately date a pregnancy. Doctors must also be able to operate in cases of severe bleeding or when the medical option fails.

Because Zeigler is not equipped to deal with such serious adverse effects, RU-486 is not available here.

Any discussion of abortion and its methods invariably entails political debates. According Michelman (R) and the National Abortion Rights Action League advocate easier RU-486 access.

to the AP, many students across the country feel the popular hands-off policy violates their rights. "If this is a legal, medical procedure then it should be just as available to the students as to the general public," said Mike Ehlers, a Michigan State student representative.

A pro-life group surveyed about 30 schools and found that only one, Yale, offers RU-486. "There's absolutely no reason women shouldn't have access," said Caroline Barber, a junior and president of the Reproductive Rights Action League of Yale College.

In fact, Michigan State University's student assembly passed a resolution in February criticizing the school's decision not to offer RU-486 as "an abridgement of students' civil rights."

Janice Butler, who runs the University's Women's Resource Center, expressed curiosity upon learning that Bucknell does not offer RU-486 as a treatment option. Ms. Butler questioned the reasoning behind the decision and wondered why an FDA-approved drug would not be available.

Ms. Butler emphasized that we all need more information before forming an opinion about the policy and suggested that finding more details about the possible complications from the drugs might lead to a better understanding of University policy.

On the other side of the debate, some students do not want their school fees used to fund abortions. Harvard University helps students pay for abortions under its health plan, but will refund a portion of the health fee to student objectors upon request.

Whether University policy is subject to change is unclear. What is clear, however, is that this is a complicated issue. Should student fees pay for abortions? Should students have access to an FDA approved drug, despite possible risks? How do student groups on campus feel about this issue? As with all forum discussions, this one is far from over.

Quote of the Week On the vegetarian movement:

"If God hadn't wanted us to eat cows, he wouldn't have made them out of steak."

—National Review columnist Jonah Goldberg

100 U.S. Senators agree—they will never, ever read B&P. Write anyway! Email Mike, mboland@, or Maureen, moscadal@.

In a 16-8 vote, with one member abstaining, the Bucknell Student Government (BSG) voted Sunday not to endorse the implementation of the proposed living wage portion of the Fair Labor Campaign. In the same meeting, BSG voted unanimously, however, to support the creation of a University Fair Labor Committee.

On Tuesday, April 17, BSG also voted to support the immediate addition of three support staff persons, elected by their own members, to serve

THE Bucknellian

The weekly campus newspaper of Bucknell University

http://www.orgs.bucknell.edu/bucknellian

April 27, 2001

inside

News

Long-awaited Celtic pub will open soon. See page A4

Sports

Baseball took three out of four games against Lehigh last weekend. See page B1

PEOPLE OF THE YEAR

Matt Cole '01

Charlie Pollock '70

Ambitious go-getter earns respect of campus community

By NATALIE CASP
News Editor

As a person who cites living downtown as one of his greatest learning experiences at the University, Matt Cole '01 has put substantial energy and effort into improving town-gown relations in the interest of both students and Lewisburg residents. The Bucknellian's student of the year demonstrates an uncommon interest in helping improve all with which he's involved.

Those who work with Cole, both on and off-campus, consider him a natural leader with an ongoing desire to improve situations and learn from those experiences.

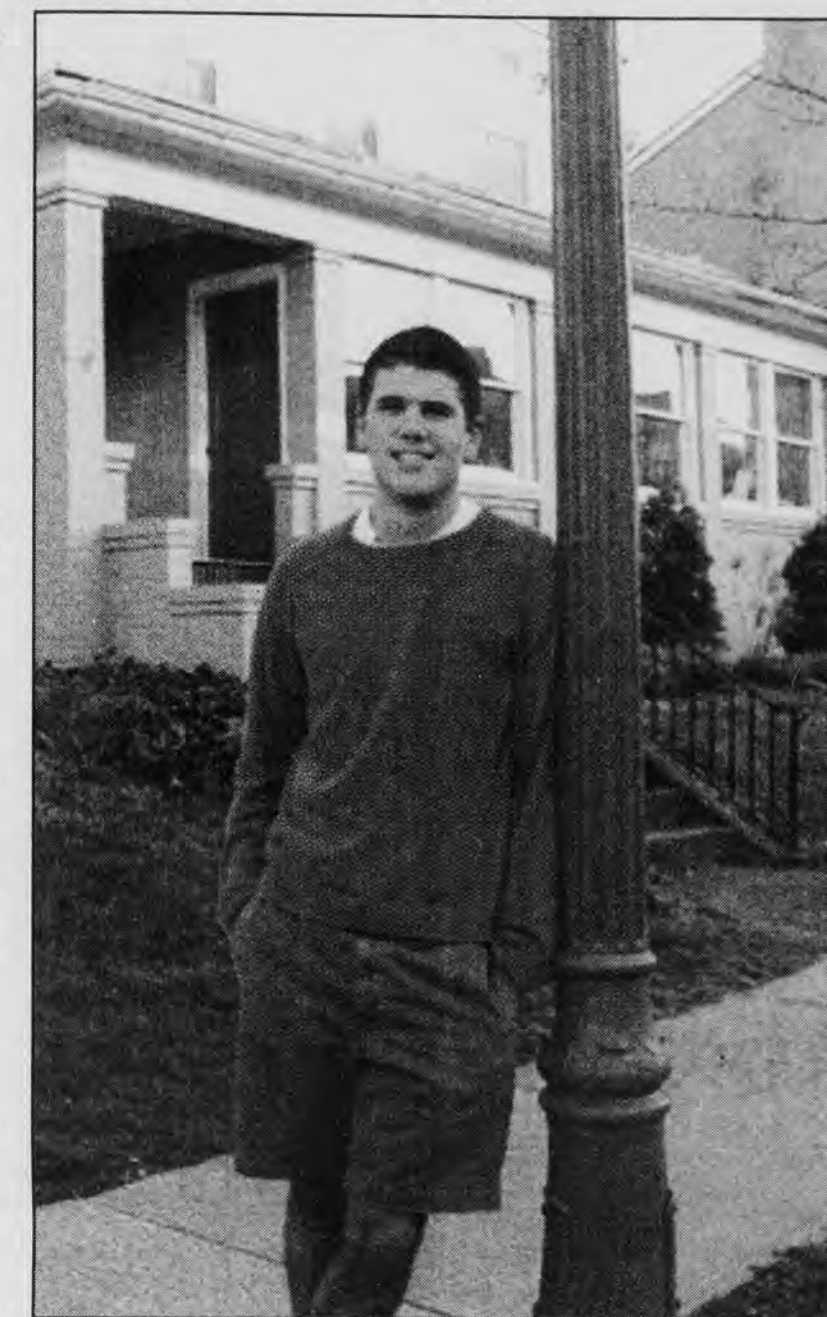

His efforts in several town-gown initiatives this year alone account for a significant portion of what he's learned during his career at the University.

"I think there is so much to gain from Bucknell and Lewisburg that you learn outside of the classroom," Cole said. "Living downtown has definitely been a great experience for me, and I hope that opportunity is there for students to come."

Cole feels that the inherent responsibilities involved with living off-campus contribute to the personal development of college students. "We are all adults, but I don't think we are always treated as adults here. But the bottom line is that we are," Cole said. "Come next year, when we graduate, we're on our own 100 percent."

Part of the downtown learning experience for Cole was the decision to run for the third ward seat on the Borough Council, an appointed position that became available earlier this semester when a member resigned.

"The night of running for that Borough Council seat, the same people who checked into my eligibility were in a stink about the presentations being open to the public," Cole said. "I had to go back and give my speech in front of the board and in front of the public. For someone who does not like public speaking, it kind of took a lot to stand up there and say things in front of people I knew didn't like me."

Chris Rivera—The Bucknellian

But dealing with people who don't welcome University students in the downtown neighborhoods is what sparked Cole's interest in running for the position.

"I went in with no expectations and I didn't think I had a chance of winning, so I was not very surprised," Cole said. "There was a townspeople who is also a professor here at Bucknell that checked into my eligibility and tried to make sure

See COLE, page A5

Chris Rivera—The Bucknellian

Uniting force during transition

By LAURA DAY
News Editor

Often proudly sporting an orange and blue tie as his busy day unravels into one meeting after the next, Vice President of Student Affairs Elect (VPSA) Charles Pollock '70 has been a uniting force at the University this past year. While most students, faculty, staff and community members have experienced the effects of Pollock's leadership firsthand, not all realize the vast capacities in which he serves and his unrelenting efforts to improve the campus community.

Although Pollock's administrative rapport with the University is only three years old, his ties extend back to the late 1960's when fellow classmates admired his theatrical debut in Cap and Dagger. Aspiring to be a playwright, Pollock graduated from the University with a Bachelor of Arts in English in 1970 and pursued his graduate studies at the University until 1974. Twenty-four years later, Pollock's unique background and new career plans returned him to his alma mater.

"I just feel so fortunate to be able to have these years back at Bucknell—adding in some small way to the continual rise in the level of service to students," Pollock said. "It is an incredible way of giving back."

Through his understanding of both the student and administrative perspectives of the University, Pollock has been a vital asset to campus life. Spending most of his time focusing on student life, athletics, public safety, religious life and admissions, his presence is felt throughout campus.

"Charlie has a special perspective on Bucknell because he was a Bucknell student, because he has worked at other colleges, because he has worked closely with the Board of Trustees ... and two Presidents and because he has been getting the calls from angry parents, 'Lewisburgers,' students, alumni, staff and faculty for all his time here," University Chaplain Ian Oliver said.

While overseeing student life, Pollock spent this past year as Interim VPSA learning the details of the job. In addition to those responsibilities, he has also continued some of his previous duties as Secretary of the University and recently took on oversight of Public Safety after former Vice President of Finance and Administration Peggy Pymton resigned.

Acting like a jack-of-all-trades, Pollock has filled the voids due to transition at the University in an exemplary fashion, while also setting a high standard of precedence for successors.

"It's been frenetic at times ... so much activity and so many issues calling for attention," Pollock said.

See POLLOCK, page A5

Rogers announces two VP positions

By NATALIE CASP
News Editor

University President Steffen Rogers announced his selections for the Provost/Vice President for Academic Affairs (VPAA) and the Vice President for Student Affairs (VPSA) positions late Wednesday afternoon.

Stephen Bowen, currently the vice-provost for instruction and dean of distance learning at Michigan Technological University, will join the University on Aug. 1 as the Provost/VPAA. Interim Vice President for Student Affairs Charles Pollock '70 accepted the VPSA position; he will make the transition from interim to full-time on May 1.

Rogers is excited to welcome Bowen to the University community and anticipates great things from him.

"Steve is a very experienced administrator, as well as a strong academic. The combination of those two skill sets are going to dramatically enhance the administration," Rogers said. "In fact, I can't wait for him to get here."

Bowen will be on campus sporadically in June and July to acquaint himself with members of the administration, faculty and local community.

Bowen, a graduate of DePaul University, boasts a liberal arts background with degrees in philosophy and zoology.

"I attended a school that's not too different than Bucknell, so I'm somewhat predisposed to a university like Bucknell," Bowen said. "Bucknell's reputation as a preeminent University is well established, and this is a great opportunity for me to join a community of effective administrators, dedicated faculty and well prepared, focused students."

The Lewisburg area also looks like a great place to live.

According to a Michigan Tech press release, Bowen's career at Michigan Tech spans 21 years. He joined the faculty in 1978 as an assistant professor of biology, then

See VP, page 3A

Courtesy of Public Relations
Stephen Bowen, provost/VPAA elect of the University.

BSG dismisses Fair Wage with controversy

By NATALIE CASP
News Editor

In a 16-8 vote, with one member abstaining, the Bucknell Student Government (BSG) voted Sunday not to endorse the implementation of the proposed living wage portion of the Fair Labor Campaign. In the same meeting, BSG voted unanimously, however, to support the creation of a University Fair Labor Committee.

On Tuesday, April 17, BSG also voted to support the immediate addition of three support staff persons, elected by their own members, to serve on the University Committee on Planning and Budget (UCPB). Furthermore, controversy surrounding the vote on the living wage has created dissent among BSG members.

After a semester of research and discussion, BSG voted on the motions in its final meeting of the semester.

The Fair Labor Campaign was first presented to BSG in February by members of the Bucknell Caucus for Economic Justice (BCEJ). BSG then tabled the issue until members of the Administration presented financial information during the March 25 meeting. BSG has since debated both the moral and economic ramifications of endorsing a living wage. Sunday's vote indicated moral support for the issue, but BSG's concern for the financial implications caused much doubt.

According to the resolution motion that passed April 22, "The BSG is unable to express with confidence that this expenditure within the range of $500,000 to $1,500,000 is the predominant item on the student's budgetary agenda. While the BSG recognizes and sympathizes with the moral arguments made by the BCEJ, we are unable to separate from those imperatives the

See BCEJ, page A3

Mississippi voters reject updated flag

By MICHAEL BOLAND
Business & Politics Editor

On Tuesday night voters in Mississippi went to the polls and overwhelmingly rejected a proposed new state flag most notable for its omission of the Confederate "Stars and Bars."

According to the New York Times, the vote was 66 percent opposed to the new flag and 34 percent in favor of it. Strongest support for the new banner, which does not contain the Confederate symbol, predictably came from the Mississippi delta region, which has a predominantly black population. This support, however, was countered by heavy rural and suburban support for the old banner, which has been used for 107 years. Mississippi is the last state to prominently display a Confederate emblem on its banner.

The failed effort to replace the existing flag was led by an unusual alliance of civil rights activists and business interests who, according to CNN, spent more than $600,000 in a campaign on behalf of the new flag. The civil rights camp protested that the current flag is a divisive and racist symbol representative of Mississippi's segregationist days. Meanwhile, business leaders led by the Mississippi Economic Council (MEC) made their efforts part of a "strategic business decision."

In a memo to its members, the MEC argued that the "greatness of our state and its people is often overshadowed by misperceptions" and that the stereotype of Mississippi as a backward state clinging to the past was hampering its economic growth. Showing the outside world—including potential investors—that the state has moved on would do a great deal to remove that stereotype, the MEC believed.

"We've made so much progress, and the rest of the country isn't seeing that," flag activist George Shelton told CNN. "We need a symbol that represents the entire state, that shows that we're moving forward."

Still, the new flag—with a circle of 20 stars instead of the Confederate symbol in the upper-left hand corner—went down nearly 2-1 in the state which, according to United Press International, has the highest proportion of the old flag campaign—namely, that Mississippians should not acquiesce to the substantial political pressure applied from out-of-state.

Courtesy of Reuters
Voters rejected the new flag, below, by nearly 2-1.

Not every Mississippian agreed, however, that the old flag is a racially offensive image. Some see it as a proud symbol of Southern heritage, while others see it merely as an eye-pleasing state icon that has done its job well. "I just think the flag we've got now served its purpose well for the last 100 years," Jackson resident Shelby Patterson told the Times. "I don't see any reason to change it. The flag they want, it's got no sentimental value to nobody."

"This is a great victory for the citizens of Mississippi," Sons of Confederate Veterans member William Fagert told the Northwest Mississippi Daily Journal, echoing a popular refrain

Business and NAACP officials have vowed to continue their campaign; rumors persist that there may be an organized boycott of Mississippi businesses until the Confederate emblem is removed.

Public Safety Log

April 18, 2001
REPORTED ACT 64 VIOLATION—Public Safety responded to Smith Hall for the report of the odor of marijuana. Upon investigation, the source could not be located. The RA was requested to monitor the area and contact Public Safety if the source could be located later.

VANDALISM—Public Safety and East Buffalo Township Police Department responded to the parking lot of Public Safety for the report of vandalism to a vehicle which was scratched while parked on Moore Ave. There were no witnesses or suspects located.

UNFOUNDED ACT 64 REPORT—Public Safety responded to Roberts Hall for the report of the odor of marijuana. No odor could be located in a search of the area and the report was determined to be unfounded.

April 19, 2001
UNDERAGE CONSUMPTION / OPEN CONTAINER ALCOHOL—Public Safety responded to Vedder Hall to meet with officers of the Lewisburg Police Department who were returning an underage intoxicated visitor to his student host. The visitor was cited for underage consumption and possession of an open container of alcohol.

DRIVING UNDER THE INFLUENCE / UNIVERSITY PROPERTY DAMAGE—Public Safety responded to assist Lewisburg Police Department at Moore Ave. with a traffic stop and found that a University student had driven his vehicle into a campus light pole located near the entrance to Bucknell West Mods. The student was placed under arrest for DUI and taken for blood alcohol testing. University and criminal charges will be filed pending the blood test results.

UNDERAGE CONSUMPTION / OPEN CONTAINER—Public Safety was informed that the Lewisburg Police Department returned an intoxicated student to his residence at Sigma Chi after he was cited for possession of an open container of alcohol and underage consumption.

MEDICAL ASSIST—Public Safety responded to the Langone Center for the report of an ill student. The individual was transported by ambulance to Evangelical Community Hospital Emergency Room and later returned to campus.

INFORMATION / ASSIST CONSTABLE—Public Safety responded to Bertrand Library with a Pennsylvania Constable to serve an arrest warrant on a non-University student (visitor).

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF TO A VEHICLE—A student reported to Public Safety that his vehicle was damaged while parked on Moore Ave. East Buffalo Township Police Department responded and the incident is under investigation.

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF—A University student reported to Public Safety that unknown person(s) damaged her car while it was parked at Theta Chi Fraternity. The incident is under investigation.

April 20, 2001
INFORMATION / POSSIBLE ACT 64 VIOLATION—Public Safety responded to Larison Cottage for the report of the odor of marijuana. No odor could be found and the report was determined unfounded.

INFORMATION—Public Safety responded to Trax Hall for the report of a male sleeping on the hallway floor. The male student was returned to his residence.

PROPERTY DAMAGE—While on routine patrol, Public Safety observed that unknown person(s) had removed seven signs from the monitored lot at Bucknell West. All the signs were recovered.

PUBLIC DRUNKENNESS / MEDICAL TRANSPORT—Public Safety responded to the Fieldhouse for the report of an unresponsive female at a concert. The individual was identified as a non-University student that had consumed alcohol. She was transported to Evangelical Community Hospital Emergency Room by ambulance. Citations are pending.

UNDERAGE CONSUMPTION / MEDICAL ASSIST—Public Safety responded to the Fieldhouse for the report of an ill person at a concert. Upon further investigation, the individual was identified as a prospective female student, under the age of 21, who admitted to consuming alcohol. She was cited her for underage consumption.

April 21, 2001
MEDICAL ASSIST—Public Safety responded to Malesardi for the report of an ambulance dispatched to an alcohol overdose. The student was transported to Evangelical Community Hospital Emergency Room for treatment and later returned to campus. Citations are pending.

UNDERAGE CONSUMPTION / NON-UNIVERSITY RELATED—While on routine patrol, Public Safety observed a male walking in front of Larison Cottage carrying a bottle of beer. Upon investigation, the male was identified as a non-University student, under the age of 21, who admitted to consuming alcohol. He was cited for underage consumption.

UNIVERSITY PROPERTY DAMAGE—Public Safety responded to Kap-pa Sigma for the report of a broken window caused by three unidentified males throwing rocks at it. The incident is under investigation.

April 22, 2001
INFORMATION—Public Safety responded to Trax Hall to assist the Lewisburg Police Department who returned an intoxicated student to his residence. Citations are pending.

UNDERAGE CONSUMPTION / POSSESSION—While on routine patrol, Public Safety observed a male holding a can of beer on Fraternity Road. Upon further investigation, the male was identified as a student, under the age of 21, who admitted to consuming alcohol. Citations were issued for underage consumption and possession.

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF / POSSESSION OF AN AIR RIFLE ON CAMPUS—A student reported to Public Safety that unknown person(s) damaged her vehicle with an air rifle while it was parked in front of Kap-pa Delta Rho Fraternity. East Buffalo Township Police Department was notified of the criminal mischief incident, which is under investigation.

April 23, 2001
HARASSMENT—A student reported to Public Safety that unknown person(s) have been harassing him by telephone in his Vedder Hall room. Someone also entered his unlocked room and damaged some of his personal property. The incident is under investigation.

PROPERTY DAMAGE—An employee reported to Public Safety that the lampshade on the light behind Chi Phi Fraternity was damaged. No witnesses or suspects were located.

VEHICLE DAMAGE—Public Safety responded to Lit Road for the report of a vehicle accident. Two employee vehicles collided when the individuals were attempting to back out of their parking spaces. There were no injuries and only minor damage to the vehicles.

LARCENY / UNIVERSITY CELLULAR TELEPHONE—An employee reported to Public Safety that unknown person(s) had removed his cellular telephone from his unlocked vehicle while it was parked at the rear of the Fieldhouse. East Buffalo Township Police Department was notified of the incident, which is under investigation.

April 24, 2001
ASSIST RESIDENTIAL LIFE / UNDERAGE CONSUMPTION—Public Safety responded to Larison Hall for the report of an RA needing assistance with a disorderly student. Upon further investigation, the male was found to be under the age of 21 and admitted to consuming alcohol. Citations were issued for underage consumption and disorderly conduct.

TRESPASS / INFORMATION—Public Safety responded to the New Residence Hall for a report of two males entering an unlocked room. The female caller stated that she was awakened by one of the males drinking on her leg. Upon further investigation, Public Safety received reports that the two males had entered two other unlocked rooms for the same purpose. East Buffalo Township Police Department was notified of the incident, which is under investigation.

FORGERY / UNAUTHORIZED PARKING DECAL—A Public Safety dispatcher, assisting in the removal of vehicles from the Seventh Street parking lot, discovered the decal on a vehicle did not match the vehicle to which it had been issued. Upon further investigation, it was discovered that a student had forged an unauthorized decal. Citations were issued for Traffic and Code of Conduct violations.

VEHICLE ACCIDENT—An employee reported to Public Safety that her vehicle was struck by a student vehicle as the student backed out of a parking space on Coleman Road. There were no injuries and only minor damage to the vehicles.

Smoking banned in dorm rooms

By KRISTI JOHNSTON
A&E Layout Editor

The Office of the Dean of Students released a statement Tuesday saying that smoking will be prohibited in residence halls beginning next semester. Smoking will be allowed outside of the residence halls, excluding specifically designated non-smoking areas.

The new policy was finalized by the Committee on Complimentary Activities (CCA), which consists of Vice President of Student Affairs Elect Charles Pollock '70, Dean of Students Richard Ferraro, six faculty members and six student representatives. The decision was made for safety reasons and was the result of several fire hazards, which resulted from negligence while smoking, both at the University and at other institutions.

The policy was also instituted in order to ensure a balance between rules of smoking in the residence halls and rules of candle possession.

"The smoking issue is tied into the candle issue," said Daniel Remley, director of housing and residential life. "The fire safety issues are the same for smoking and candles."

Currently, a student caught with a candle in his/her room is subject to a $100 fine, loss of off-campus housing privileges, loss of on-campus room selection priority number, 10 hours of University service and a letter of censure.

It had been argued that, under these provisions, a student who had previously signed a lease for off-campus housing and was found to have a candle in his/her room would be forced to pay the lease even though he/she would lose the right to live off-campus. In order to prevent this from happening, new penalties have been instituted for both candle possession and smoking in the residence halls.

Under the new policy, a student caught with a candle in his/her room or in violation of the smoking ordinances will be subject to a $100 fine, loss of on-campus room selection priority number, 20 hours of University service and a letter of censure. There will no longer be a loss of off-campus living privileges in these situations.

"The new policy is more balanced, student to student," Remley said.

The new policy was not adopted to address health issues, but specifically relates to fire safety issues. However, students who wish to seek help with smoking addictions are invited to visit the Student Health Service.

Chris Rivera—The Bucknellian

Due to safety reasons, students will not be permitted to smoke in residence halls in the fall.

"This ban on smoking in residence halls nevertheless may spur some folks—especially those who need to smoke constantly—to seek assistance in order to stop or curb a tobacco habit or addiction," Ferraro said in an address to the campus community. "Individuals interested in smoking cessation or limitation should consult with staff of the Student Health Center on campus. There is a lot of good help available there."

The recent decision by the campus community to ban smoking in the residence halls was a response to many recent situations in which smoking indoors resulted in fire safety issues. "We don't need other instances of student loss," Remley commented. "We need to be responsive to that potential for loss."

Students express mixed reactions about room selection process

By JOHN WESLEY
Staff Writer

The Office of Housing and Residential Life (OHRL) has been bustling with excited and anxious students for over a week, indicating the start of the room selection process. It began last week with block booking and finished this week with regular selection.

Many nights from 5-9 p.m., OHRL staff members, as well as volunteers, can be found in the bottom of Vedder Hall assisting the rising classes in the room selection process.

Room selection priority is based on class year and a lottery system for room-pick numbers within each class. Priority numbers are distributed by random assignment separated by gender for the three rising classes.

Many students use their friends' lottery numbers and block-book, securing a cluster of rooms so they can live together. The Gateways and Bucknell West are booked during this process, in addition to certain rooms within dormitories.

Despite benefits like block-booking, students are frustrated with single-sex halls that limit groups of students from living together.

"It is unfair to deny my friends and I a mod when there are mods open but they are specifically set for the opposite sex," a concerned student said.

However, Director of Housing and Residential Life Daniel Remley explained that room selection is solely based on class year and gender does not affect the option.

Other students complain that block-bookable areas fill up too quickly due to random students joining upclassmen with high priority numbers. Groups of students join together and use one priority number to get the best available outcome, however, a portion of the group is not necessarily affiliated with the rest of them.

Rising seniors on the first night do not necessarily have to choose members of their own class with whom to live. For example, they can choose rising sophomores causing a reduction in the choices for upperclassmen. Frequently there is a mixture of students from all classes that receive their rooms the first night of block booking.

After the entire block-booking procedures have ended, regular selection begins. Again the rooms are chosen based on priority numbers separated by gender. Immediately, students notice flaws within the process.

"Halls that are usually considered for women or men only are a result of only one bathroom on the hall and it is not part of Residential Life's position to push for co-ed bathrooms or force students to walk to another hall for the facilities" Remley said.

While some students argue over the establishment of single-sex halls, others complain about the Choosing Healthy Options in Community Environments program and residential colleges taking rooms that they wanted. Students feel that their choices should not be limited or hindered based on the establishment of these groups.

While other concerns are raised about students who are currently abroad, all students who need a room will have one waiting for them.

Chris Rivera—The Bucknellian

This past week, students selected their rooms for the next academic year.

World Briefs

Estrada: "The truth will come out"

MANILA, Philippines (CNN)—Deposed Philippine President Joseph Estrada has lashed out at his opponents, saying corruption charges against him are a total fabrication and a violation of his civil rights.

Speaking exclusively to CNN following his dramatic arrest by Philippine police Wednesday, Estrada said he doubted that he would get a fair trial under the current administration.

Nonetheless Estrada, who is the only Philippine president ever arrested for graft, said he remained confident that "the truth will come out in the end."

The former leader who was forced to quit office amid a wave of popular street protests in January added that he believes he remains the legitimate leader of the Philippines and his arrest was part of a political conspiracy against him.

"As far as I'm concerned I'm still the duly elected president under our constitution," he told CNN from Philippine National Police Headquarters in Manila where he's being detained.

New human foot-and-mouth scares

LONDON, England—Two more cases of suspected foot-and-mouth diseases in humans are being investigated by health officials in the UK.

The latest suspected cases come a day after emerged tests were being carried out on a slaughter man from north Cumbria suspected of contracting the disease.

A spokesman for the Public Health Laboratory Service (PHLS) confirmed on Tuesday that tests were being carried out to confirm whether two more people have the disease.

The spokesman would not say where the latest suspect cases were, or who could be affected, but said they were not in north Cumbria.

Koizumi begins Japan's political shake-up

TOKYO, Japan—Prime minister-in-waiting Junichiro Koizumi has started his hotly anticipated shake-up of Japan's ruling Liberal Democratic Party.

A day before he is due to be sworn in as Japan's 11th prime minister in 13 years, Koizumi began Wednesday to replace the old guard of LDP lawmakers with allies more likely to help him make good on promises for reform.

Local media reports say Koizumi, who executed a shock win in LDP leadership elections on Tuesday to replace hugely unpopular Prime Minister Yoshiro Mori, was expected to name former Defense Minister Taku Yamazaki as his second-in-command in the LDP.

Yugoslavia charges 200 over Kosovo

BELGRADE, Yugoslavia—Almost 200 Yugoslav army officers have been charged with committing war crimes during the Kosovo conflict, military officials said.

The soldiers are accused of a variety of offences, including murder, harassment and assault and that trials of some have already started.

A United Nations spokesman welcomed the arrests, saying they were an encouraging sign that Belgrade is committed to bringing to justice those guilty of crimes in Kosovo.

An army statement said the military prosecutor had ordered investigations against "soldiers, non-commissioned officers and officers ... for crimes resulting in deaths and injuries of civilians as well as deprivation of their basic human rights during combat activities in the province of Kosovo in 1998 and 1999."

Rescue mission leaves South Pole

AMUNDSEN-SCOTT STATION, Antarctica (CNN)—A small plane on a daring rescue mission took off from the South Pole on Wednesday, carrying an ailing doctor on the long flight across the frozen continent.

The pilot of the rescue plane delayed an earlier scheduled departure while assessing the bitter Antarctic winter weather.

The plane left Amundsen-Scott Station at the Pole, bound for the British Antarctic Research station at Rothera, Antarctica. A six-hour hop across Drake Passage to Punta Arenas, Chile, would follow the 10-hour, 1,346-mile flight to Rothera.

The eight-seat Twin Otter had arrived at Amundsen-Scott Station on Tuesday, with flaming debris marking an icy landing strip, following a 10-hour flight from the Rothera base, in the midst of a polar winter.

Bush vows "whatever it takes" to defend Taiwan

WASHINGTON (CNN)—U.S. President George Bush said Wednesday he would defend Taiwan from a Chinese attack but said he still opposes independence for the island.

"I also want to send the message that I think this can be resolved peacefully," Bush said in an interview with CNN.

During an earlier interview with ABC television, Bush said he would do "whatever it takes" to defend Taiwan from any Chinese attack—comments that appeared to change long-standing U.S. doctrine toward China and coincided with rising tensions between Washington and Beijing.

"We gave more faith to the Administration and, ultimately, a committee with support staff participation to reach fair labor conditions for the workers of Bucknell University," Sorber said. "This is different than putting our stamp on their numbers, which are fiscally contradictory to students' needs."

BCEJ and BSG Congress member for the Class of 2001 Jeff Rogan feels that the University can in fact implement a living wage. He voted against the motion to not support the Fair Labor Campaign.

"The living wage is something the University can institute," Rogan said. "We do have the money and the ability to implement a living wage, but the University lacks the will to follow through on this student-driven issue."

Rogan is pleased with the other two motions passed by BSG—the formation of a University Fair Labor Committee and the addition of three support staff to the UCPS.

Compiled by Laura Day, courtesy of cnn.com

Harvard students protest for a living wage

By JASON RUBINSTEIN
Features Editor

Last Wednesday, nearly 50 Harvard University students stormed Massachusetts (Mass.) Hall, angry about the administration's lack of action over their Living Wage Campaign. Prepared with cameras, computers and cell phones, the protesters vowed to remain in the building, which houses administrative offices and first-year residences, until the administration budges.

Entering its eighth day on Wednesday of this week, the sit-in built momentum through numerous protests in Harvard Yard as well as appearances by prominent politicians such as Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass.

For two years, the Harvard Progressive Student Labor Movement (PSLM) has demanded a minimum wage of $10.25 per hour, which is already the minimum wage paid by the city of Cambridge. Harvard, the wealthiest university in the world, declared that it would not cave to demands for this wage.

"There are a group of students who think that nothing less than $10 is fair ... we don't agree," Harvard University President Neil L. Rudenstine told The Crimson, the Harvard student newspaper.

This group of students' includes 30 student members, all eight Harvard interns, 150 Harvard faculty members, 2000 students and 100 alumni according to The Nation.

"I have never seen our campus so pumped," said Colin Eyre, a Harvard sophomore and supporter of the living wage. "The campus is very supportive of the movement, but there have been recent criticisms of the tactics of the PSLM. There was a brief anti-PSLM protest, but very few students took part."

There is an enormous amount of support outside the building, including student concerts, a capella, vigils, religious services, and teach-ins. Professors taught students occupying the building and dining workers brought food to the protestors inside Mass. Hall, according to The Crimson.

"It's impossible to be on campus and not notice the sit-in," Angie Thebaud, a Harvard first-year student, said. "People have pitched tents and are taking up a good quarter of the yard."

Despite a few protestors leaving, about 40 remained inside Mass. Hall over the weekend. The PSLM protestors have committed themselves to non-violent direct action and are attempting to keep a working relationship with the service workers and police officers.

"It's an amazing environment in here," Stephen Smith, a student leader of the PSLM protesting in the building said. "The campaign and the cause is growing by the minute, and the energy and camaraderie inside is so thick you can feel it. It's great."

The administration, however, views the sit-in from an entirely different angle. The University had implemented programs to improve job skills and expand health benefits instead of increasing wages. It feels that the PSLM's tactics are extreme and that the group is not acting in a non-violent manner.

University Spokesperson Joe Wrinn told The Crimson that the administration will not cave to outside pressure and will not negotiate with students while the sit-in continues.

"Harvard University Police Department (HUPD) and administrators say University workers inside Mass. Hall are feeling increasingly harassed by the protestors," Garrett Graft of The Crimson said. In addition to the disruptions to workers and students in Mass. Hall, Police Chief Francis Riley said the group is "straining" the HUPD's resources.

The Undergraduate Council (UC), Harvard's student governing body, voted on a resolution Sunday objecting to the current sit-in tactics. The UC passed a resolution two years earlier calling for Harvard to adopt a living wage.

"The UC still urges students to continue to fight for a living wage through the ordinary channels of communication with the administration," Council President Paul Gusmorino said.

Outside supporters have continued to do just that. The Associated Press reported that American Federation of Labor-Congress of Industrial Organization (AFL-CIO) Union President John Sweeney issued a statement endorsing the cause and Senator Kennedy made a surprise appearance at Mass. Hall.

Kennedy believed that the protest was going to be successful and agreed to call Rudenstine to ask for a living wage.

"(Kennedy) doesn't feel that someone who works 40 hours per week, 52 weeks out of the year deserves to live in poverty," Kennedy spokesman

Courtesy of thecrimson.harvard.edu

Students, protesting for a living wage, are conducting a sit-in at Mass. Hall at Harvard University.

Jim Manley said. Students echoed Sen. Kennedy's sentiments.

"I think Harvard's unwillingness to provide its workers with a living wage is shameful. Harvard reasons that working at an illustrious institution with such prestige makes up for a lacking salary," Thebaud said.

The PSLM slogan reads, "Workers Can't Eat Prestige: Rally for a Living Wage." According to The Crimson, "one worker making less than minimum wage said at the protest, 'We are hard workers and you treat us like garbage.'"

The PSLM is similar in efforts to the Bucknell Caucus for Economic Justice (BCEJ), as well as more than 75 living wage campaigns across the nation.

Associate Professor of Geography and member of BCEJ Paul Susman supported the sit-in at Harvard, and hoped to present a similar situation at Bucknell University.

"I hope that lessons from other places and moral convictions should prevent such a problem here," said Susman.

VP From page A1

served as head of the Department of Biological Sciences from 1986 through 1995. He was named associate dean of the College of Sciences and Arts in 1995, then was appointed to the newly created position as vice-provost for instruction in 1997.

"Michigan Tech has been very good to me over the years," Bowen said. "I've enjoyed the camaraderie and support of many wonderful colleagues in teaching, research and university leadership. Michigan Tech students are a very rewarding group to work with, and I'll miss the friendships and the community."

Pollock, who has been an administrator at the University for three years, accepted the position with enthusiasm.

"I'm grateful to President Rogers for his confidence in me, and to the Search Committee for seeing what I can bring to the role, my nontraditional preparation notwithstanding," Pollock said.

Rogers welcomes Pollock as a full-time senior administrator.

"Charlie Pollock has been a strong member of the central administration ever since I arrived and I am just pleased to have him now in a permanent position," Rogers said.

Laura's going abroad. Rachel got promoted. Natalie needs help. Write for news in the fall. Email Natalie (casp@)

Public Safety Log

April 18, 2001
REPORTED ACT 64 VIOLATION—Public Safety responded to Smith Hall for the report of the odor of marijuana. Upon investigation, the source could not be located. The RA was requested to monitor the area and contact Public Safety if the source could be located later.

VANDALISM—Public Safety and East Buffalo Township Police Department responded to the parking lot of Public Safety for the report of vandalism to a vehicle which was scratched while parked on Moore Ave. There were no witnesses or suspects located.

UNFOUNDED ACT 64 REPORT—Public Safety responded to Roberts Hall for the report of the odor of marijuana. No odor could be located in a search of the area and the report was determined to be unfounded.

April 19, 2001
UNDERAGE CONSUMPTION / OPEN CONTAINER ALCOHOL—Public Safety responded to Vedder Hall to meet with officers of the Lewisburg Police Department who were returning an underage intoxicated visitor to his student host. The visitor was cited for underage consumption and possession of an open container of alcohol.

DRIVING UNDER THE INFLUENCE / UNIVERSITY PROPERTY DAMAGE—Public Safety responded to assist Lewisburg Police Department at Moore Ave. with a traffic stop and found that a University student had driven his vehicle into a campus light pole located near the entrance to Bucknell West Mods. The student was placed under arrest for DUI and taken for blood alcohol testing. University and criminal charges will be filed pending the blood test results.

UNDERAGE CONSUMPTION / OPEN CONTAINER—Public Safety was informed that the Lewisburg Police Department returned an intoxicated student to his residence at Sigma Chi after he was cited for possession of an open container of alcohol and underage consumption.

MEDICAL ASSIST—Public Safety responded to the Langone Center for the report of an ill student. The individual was transported by ambulance to Evangelical Community Hospital Emergency Room and later returned to campus.

INFORMATION / ASSIST CONSTABLE—Public Safety responded to Bertrand Library with a Pennsylvania Constable to serve an arrest warrant on a non-University student (visitor).

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF TO A VEHICLE—A student reported to Public Safety that his vehicle was damaged while parked on Moore Ave. East Buffalo Township Police Department responded and the incident is under investigation.

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF—A University student reported to Public Safety that unknown person(s) damaged her car while it was parked at Theta Chi Fraternity. The incident is under investigation.

April 20, 2001
INFORMATION / POSSIBLE ACT 64 VIOLATION—Public Safety responded to Larson Cottage for the report of the odor of marijuana. No odor could be found and the report was determined unfounded.

INFORMATION—Public Safety responded to Trax Hall for the report of a male sleeping on the hallway floor. The male student was returned to his residence.

PROPERTY DAMAGE—While on routine patrol, Public Safety observed that unknown person(s) had removed seven signs from the monitored lot at Bucknell West. All the signs were recovered.

PUBLIC DRUNKENNESS / MEDICAL TRANSPORT—Public Safety responded to the Fieldhouse for the report of an unresponsive female at a concert. The individual was identified as a non-University student that had consumed alcohol. She was transported to Evangelical Community Hospital Emergency Room by ambulance. Citations are pending.

UNDERAGE CONSUMPTION / MEDICAL ASSIST—Public Safety responded to the Fieldhouse for the report of an ill person at a concert. Upon further investigation, the individual was identified as a prospective female student, under the age of 21, who admitted to consuming alcohol. She was cited for underage consumption.

April 21, 2001
MEDICAL ASSIST—Public Safety responded to Malesardi for the report of an ambulance dispatched to an alcohol overdose. The student was transported to Evangelical Community Hospital Emergency Room for treatment and later returned to campus. Citations are pending.

UNDERAGE CONSUMPTION / NON-UNIVERSITY RELATED—While on routine patrol, Public Safety observed a male walking in front of Larson Cottage carrying a bottle of beer. Upon investigation, the male was identified as a non-University student, under the age of 21, who admitted to consuming alcohol. He was cited for underage consumption.

UNIVERSITY PROPERTY DAMAGE—Public Safety responded to Kapka Sigma for the report of a broken window caused by three unidentified males throwing rocks at it. The incident is under investigation.

April 22, 2001
INFORMATION—Public Safety responded to Trax Hall to assist the Lewisburg Police Department who returned an intoxicated student to his residence. Citations are pending.

UNDERAGE CONSUMPTION / POSSESSION—While on routine patrol, Public Safety observed a male holding a can of beer on Fraternity Road. Upon further investigation, the male was identified as a student, under the age of 21, who admitted to consuming alcohol. Citations were issued for underage consumption and possession.

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF / POSSESSION OF AN AIR RIFLE ON CAMPUS—A student reported to Public Safety that unknown person(s) damaged her vehicle while it was parked at Theta Chi Fraternity. The incident is under investigation.

April 23, 2001
HARASSMENT—A student reported to Public Safety that unknown person(s) have been harassing him by telephone in his Vedder Hall room. Someone also entered his unlocked room and damaged some of his personal property. The incident is under investigation.

PROPERTY DAMAGE—An employee reported to Public Safety that the lampshade on the light behind Chi Phi Fraternity was damaged. No witnesses or suspects were located.

VEHICLE DAMAGE—Public Safety responded to Lit Road for the report of a vehicle accident. Two employee vehicles collided when the individuals were attempting to back out of their parking spaces. There were no injuries and only minor damage to the vehicles.

LARCENY / UNIVERSITY CELLULAR TELEPHONE—An employee reported to Public Safety that unknown person(s) had removed his cellular telephone from his unlocked vehicle while it was parked at the rear of the Fieldhouse. East Buffalo Township Police Department was notified of the incident, which is under investigation.

April 24, 2001
ASSIST RESIDENTIAL LIFE / UNDERAGE CONSUMPTION—Public Safety responded to Larson Hall for the report of an RA needing assistance with a disorderly student. Upon further investigation, the male was found to be under the age of 21 and admitted to consuming alcohol. Citations were issued for underage consumption and disorderly conduct.

TRESPASS / INFORMATION—Public Safety responded to the New Residence Hall for a report of two males entering an unlocked room. The female caller stated that she was awakened by one of the males drawing on her leg. Upon further investigation, Public Safety received reports that the two males had entered two other unlocked rooms for the same purpose. East Buffalo Township Police Department was notified of the incident, which is under investigation.

FORGERY / UNAUTHORIZED PARKING DECAL—A Public Safety dispatcher, assisting in the removal of vehicles from the Seventh Street parking lot, discovered the decal on a vehicle did not match the vehicle to which it had been issued. Upon further investigation, it was discovered that a student had forged an unauthorized decal. Citations were issued for Traffic and Code of Conduct violations.

VEHICLE ACCIDENT—An employee reported to Public Safety that her vehicle was struck by a student vehicle as the student backed out of a parking space on Coleman Road. There were no injuries and only minor damage to the vehicles.

Smoking banned in dorm rooms

By KRISTI JOHNSTON
A&E Layout Editor

The Office of the Dean of Students released a statement Tuesday saying that smoking will be prohibited in residence halls beginning next semester. Smoking will be allowed outside of the residence halls, excluding specifically designated non-smoking areas.

The new policy was finalized by the Committee on Complimentary Activities (CCA), which consists of Vice President of Student Affairs Elect Charles Pollock '70, Dean of Students Richard Ferraro, six faculty members and six student representatives. The decision was made for safety reasons and was the result of several fire hazards, which resulted from negligence while smoking, both at the University and at other institutions.

The policy was also instituted in order to ensure a balance between rules of smoking in the residence halls and rules of candle possession.

"The smoking issue is tied into the candle issue," said Daniel Remley, director of housing and residential life. "The fire safety issues are the same for smoking and candles."

Currently, a student caught with a candle in his/her room is subject to a $100 fine, loss of off-campus housing privileges, loss of on-campus room selection priority number, 10 hours of University service and a letter of censure.

It had been argued that, under these provisions, a student who had previously signed a lease for off-campus housing and was found to have a candle in his/her room would be forced to pay the lease even though he/she would lose the right to live off-campus. In order to prevent this from happening, new penalties have been instituted for both candle possession and smoking in the residence halls.

Under the new policy, a student caught with a candle in his/her room or in violation of the smoking ordinances will be subject to a $100 fine, loss of on-campus room selection priority number, 20 hours of University service and a letter of censure. There will no longer be a loss of off-campus living privileges in these situations.

"The new policy is more balanced, student to student," Remley said.

The new policy was not adopted to address health issues, but specifically relates to fire safety issues. However, students who wish to seek help with smoking addictions are invited to visit the Student Health Service.

"This ban on smoking in residence halls nevertheless may spur some folks—especially those who need to smoke constantly—to seek assistance in order to stop or curb a tobacco habit or addiction," Ferraro said in an address to the campus community. "Individuals interested in smoking cessation or limitation should consult with staff of the Student Health Center on campus. There is a lot of good help available there."

The recent decision by the campus community to ban smoking in the residence halls was a response to many recent situations in which smoking indoors resulted in fire safety issues. "We don't need other instances of student loss," Remley commented. "We need to be responsive to that potential for loss."

Chris Rivera—The Bucknellian

Due to safety reasons, students will not be permitted to smoke in residence halls in the fall.

Students express mixed reactions about room selection process

By JOHN WESLEY
Staff Writer

The Office of Housing and Residential Life (OHLRL) has been bustling with excited and anxious students for over a week, indicating the start of the room selection process. It began last week with block booking and finished this week with regular selection.

Many nights from 5-9 p.m., OHLRL staff members, as well as volunteers, can be found in the bottom of Vedder Hall assisting the rising classes in the room selection process.

Room selection priority is based on class year and a lottery system for room-pick numbers within each class. Priority numbers are distributed by random assignment separated by gender for the three rising classes.

Many students use their friends' lottery numbers and block-book, securing a cluster of rooms so they can live together. The Gateways and Bucknell West are booked during this process, in addition to certain rooms within dormitories.

Despite benefits like block-booking, students are frustrated with single-sex halls that limit groups of students from living together.

"It is unfair to deny my friends and I a mod when there are mods open but they are specifically set for the opposite sex," a concerned student said.

However, Director of Housing and Residential Life Daniel Remley explained that room selection is solely based on class year and gender does not affect the option.

Other students complain that block-bookable areas fill up too quickly due to random students joining upperclassmen with high priority numbers. Groups of students join together and use one priority number to get the best available outcome, however, a portion of the group is not necessarily affiliated with the rest of them.

Rising seniors on the first night do not necessarily have to choose members of their own class with whom to live. For example, they can choose rising sophomores causing a reduction in the choices for upperclassmen. Frequently there is a mixture of students from all classes that receive their rooms the first night of block booking.

After the entire block-booking procedures have ended, regular selection begins. Again the rooms are chosen based on priority numbers separated by gender. Immediately, students notice flaws within the process.

"Halls that are usually considered for women or men only are a result of only one bathroom on the hall and it is not part of Residential Life's position to push for co-ed bathrooms or force students to walk to another hall for the facilities," Remley said.

While some students argue over the establishment of single-sex halls, others complain about the Choosing Healthy Options in Community Environments program and residential colleges taking rooms that they wanted. Students feel that their choices should not be limited or hindered based on the establishment of these groups.

While other concerns are raised about students who are currently abroad, all students who need a room will have one waiting for them.

"We certainly know how stressful housing can be, especially when concerning the students' association with their fellow peers," Remley said.

Although there are a few procedural issues contested by students, they are happy with changes that have already been implemented including the removal of "dingles," the new residential hall and replacement of old furniture. In contrast, students are not hesitant to point out more changes that they would like to see being implemented, primarily when it concerns their limited time. These students are looking forward to see future alterations of the process and OHLRL is always receptive to suggestions from students.

Chris Rivera—The Bucknellian

This past week, students selected their rooms for the next academic year.

World Briefs

Estrada: "The truth will come out"

MANILA, Philippines (CNN)—Deposed Philippine President Joseph Estrada has lashed out at his opponents, saying corruption charges against him are a total fabrication and a violation of his civil rights.

Speaking exclusively to CNN following his dramatic arrest by Philippine police Wednesday, Estrada said he doubted that he would get a fair trial under the current administration.

Nonetheless Estrada, who is the only Philippine president ever arrested for graft, said he remained confident that "the truth will come out in the end."

The former leader who was forced to quit office amid a wave of popular street protests in January added that he believes he remains the legitimate leader of the Philippines and his arrest was part of a political conspiracy against him.

"As far as I'm concerned I'm still the duly elected president under our constitution," he told CNN from Philippine National Police Headquarters in Manila where he's being detained.

New human foot-and-mouth scares

LONDON, England—Two more cases of suspected foot-and-mouth diseases in humans are being investigated by health officials in the UK.

The latest suspected cases come a day after emerged tests were being carried out on a slaughter man from north Cumbria suspected of contracting the disease.

A spokesman for the Public Health Laboratory Service (PHLS) confirmed on Tuesday that tests were being carried out to confirm whether two more people have the disease.

The spokesman would not say where the latest suspect cases were, or who could be affected, but said they were not in north Cumbria.

Koizumi begins Japan's political shake-up

TOKYO, Japan—Prime minister-in-waiting Junichiro Koizumi has started his hotly anticipated shake-up of Japan's ruling Liberal Democratic Party.

A day before he is due to be sworn in as Japan's 11th prime minister in 13 years, Koizumi began Wednesday to replace the old guard of LDP lawmakers with allies more likely to help him make good on promises for reform.

Local media reports say Koizumi, who executed a shock win in LDP leadership elections on Tuesday to replace hugely unpopular Prime Minister Yoshiro Mori, was expected to name former Defense Minister Taku Yamashita as his second-in-command in the LDP.

Yugoslavia charges 200 over Kosovo

BELGRADE, Yugoslavia—Almost 200 Yugoslav army officers have been charged with committing war crimes during the Kosovo conflict, military officials said.

The soldiers are accused of a variety of offenses, including murder, harassment and assault and that trials of some have already started.

A United Nations spokesman welcomed the arrests, saying they were an encouraging sign that Belgrade is committed to bringing to justice those guilty of crimes in Kosovo.

An army statement said the military prosecutor had ordered investigations against "soldiers, non-commissioned officers and officers ... for crimes resulting in deaths and injuries of civilians as well as deprivation of their basic human rights during combat activities in the province of Kosovo in 1998 and 1999."

Rescue mission leaves South Pole

AMUNDSEN-SCOTT STATION, Antarctica (CNN)—A small plane on a daring rescue mission took off from the South Pole on Wednesday, carrying an ailing doctor on the long flight across the frozen continent.

The pilot of the rescue plane delayed an earlier scheduled departure while assessing the bitter Antarctic winter weather.

The plane left Amundsen-Scott Station at the Pole, bound for the British Antarctic Research station at Rothera, Antarctica. A six-hour hop across Drake Passage to Punta Arenas, Chile, would follow the 10-hour, 1,346-mile flight to Rothera.

The eight-seat Twin Otter had arrived at Amundsen-Scott Station on Tuesday, with flaming debris marking an icy landing strip, following a 10-hour flight from the Rothera base, in the midst of a polar winter.

Bush vows "whatever it takes" to defend Taiwan

WASHINGTON (CNN)—U.S. President George Bush said Wednesday he would defend Taiwan from a Chinese attack but said he still opposes independence for the island.

"I also want to send the message that I think this can be resolved peacefully," Bush said in an interview with CNN.

During an earlier interview with ABC television, Bush said he would do "whatever it takes" to defend Taiwan from any Chinese attack—comments that appeared to change long-standing U.S. doctrine toward China and coincided with rising tensions between Washington and Beijing.

Bush said he did not consider his comments a change in policy, though no other president has made such an explicit commitment to the defense of Taiwan.

Davenport, on the brink of the Mississippi, readies for cleanup

DAVENPORT, Iowa (CNN)—The 1,200-foot dike keeping the Mississippi River away from downtown Davenport, Iowa, was holding Wednesday morning as the swollen river stayed at a crest level inches short of a record.

With days to go before the water recedes, residents looked to cleaning up the debris carried into the city by the brimming river.

Early Wednesday, the river at Davenport was at 22.5 feet, the third highest level ever recorded. The record, 22.6 feet, was set in 1993.

"It could stay above flood stage well into May," said Lt. Cmdr. Tom Thomas of the U.S. Coast Guard. "We'll be here as long as we're needed."

Rogan is pleased with the other two motions passed by BSG—the formation of a University Fair Labor Committee and the addition of three support staff to the UCPB.

Compiled by Laura Day,
courtesy of cnn.com

Harvard students protest for a living wage

By JASON RUBINSTEIN
Features Editor

Last Wednesday, nearly 50 Harvard University students stormed Massachusetts (Mass.) Hall, angry about the administration's lack of action over their Living Wage Campaign. Prepared with cameras, computers and cell phones, the protestors vowed to remain in the building, which houses administrative offices and first-year residences, until the administration budges.

Entering its eighth day on Wednesday of this week, the sit-in built momentum through numerous protests in Harvard Yard as well as appearances by prominent politicians such as Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass.

For two years, the Harvard Progressive Student Labor Movement (PSLM) has demanded a minimum wage of $10.25 per hour, which is already the minimum wage paid by the city of Cambridge. Harvard, the wealthiest university in the world, declared that it would not cave to demands for this wage.

"There are a group of students who think that nothing less than $10 is fair ... we don't agree," Harvard University President Neil L. Rudenstine told The Crimson, the Harvard student newspaper.

This "group of students" includes 30 student groups, all eight Harvard unions, 150 Harvard faculty members, 2000 students and 100 alumni according to The Nation.

"I have never seen our campus this pumped," said Colin Eyre, a Harvard sophomore and supporter of the living wage. "The campus is very supportive of the movement, but there have been recent criticisms of the tactics of the PSLM. There was a brief anti-PSLM protest, but very few students took part."

There is an enormous amount of support outside the building, including student concerts, a capella, vigils, religious services, and teach-ins. Professors taught students occupying the building and dining workers brought food to the protestors inside Mass. Hall, according to The Crimson.

"It's impossible to be on campus and not notice the sit-in," Angie Thebaud, a Harvard first-year student, said. "People have pitched tents and are taking up a good quarter of the yard."

Despite a few protestors leaving, about 40 remained inside Mass. Hall over the weekend. The PSLM protestors have committed themselves to non-violent direct action and are attempting to keep a working relationship with the service workers and police officers.

"It's an amazing environment in here," Stephen Smith, a student leader of the PSLM protesting in the building said. "The campaign and the cause is growing by the minute, and the energy and camaraderie inside is so thick you can feel it. It's great."

The administration, however, views the sit-in from an entirely different angle. The University had implemented programs to improve job skills and expand health benefits instead of increasing wages. It feels that the PSLM's tactics are extreme and that the group is not acting in a non-violent manner.

University Spokesperson Joe Wrinn told The Crimson that the administration will not cave to outside pressure and will not negotiate with students while the sit-in continues.

"Harvard University Police Department (HUPD) and administrators say University workers inside Mass. Hall are feeling increasingly harassed by the protestors," Garrett Graf of The Crimson said.

In addition to the disruptions to workers and students in Mass. Hall, Police Chief Francis Riley said the group is "straining" the HUPD's resources.

The Undergraduate Council (UC), Harvard's student governing body, voted on a resolution Sunday objecting to the current sit-in tactics. The UC passed a resolution two years earlier calling for Harvard to adopt a living wage.

"The UC still urges students to continue to fight for a living wage through the ordinary channels of communication with the administration," Council President Paul Gussomino said.

Outside supporters have continued to do just that. The Associated Press reported that American Federation of Labor-Congress of Industrial Organization (AFL-CIO) Union President John Sweeney issued a statement endorsing the cause and Senator Kennedy made a surprise appearance at Mass. Hall.

Kennedy believed that the protest was going to be successful and agreed to call Rudenstine to ask for a living wage.

"[Kennedy] doesn't feel that someone who works 40 hours per week, 52 weeks out of the year deserves to live in poverty," Kennedy spokesman

Courtesy of thecrimson.harvard.edu
Students, protesting for a living wage, are conducting a sit-in at Mass. Hall at Harvard University.

Jim Manley said.

Students echoed Sen. Kennedy's sentiments. "I think Harvard's unwillingness to provide it's workers with a living wage is shameful. Harvard reasons that working at an illustrious institution with such prestige makes up for a lacking salary," Thebaud said.

The PSLM slogan reads, "Workers Can't Eat Prestige. Rally for a Living Wage." According to The Crimson, "one worker making less than minimum wage said at the protest, 'We are hard workers and you treat us like garbage.'"

The PSLM is similar in efforts to the Bucknell Caucus for Economic Justice (BCEJ), as well as more than 75 living wage campaigns across the nation.

Associate Professor of Geography and member of BCEJ Paul Susman supported the sit-in at Harvard, yet hoped to prevent a similar situation at Bucknell University.

"I hope that lessons from other places and moral convictions should prevent such a problem here," said Susman.

BCEJ From page A1

probable effects of this plan's implementation.

BSG President Nate Sorber '02 explained that BSG, while in moral support of the BCEJ's initiatives, must keep the students' needs in mind.

"We are consistently approached by numbers of students with a never-ending wish-list of desired improvements on campus," Sorber said. "Students need to understand that for this plan to occur, there would need to be either major increases in revenue or decreases in current or planned expenditures. BSG did not feel comfortable in supporting an initiative that could lead to higher tuition or decrease the quality of student life."

The second motion resolved Sunday night—the creation of a University Fair Labor Committee—suggests BSG's support of the Campaign on moral grounds.

According to the resolution that passed unanimously, "This Committee would be charged with drawing up a list of recommendations about how Bucknell could best construct and maintain fair labor practices permanently, and thereafter would regularly meet to hear complaints concerning the infringement of workers rights on campus. The Committee would make its initial recommendations to the entire campus as soon as it is feasible to do so."

Sorber acknowledged that there appears to be a contradiction between supporting a committee that would work towards implementing a living wage and then voting not to support that living wage. The reason for not supporting the living wage aspect of the Campaign, according to Sorber, is strictly monetary.

"We gave more faith to the Administration and, ultimately, a committee with support staff participation to reach fair labor conditions for the workers of Bucknell University," Sorber said. "This is different than putting our stamp on their numbers, which are fiscally contradictory to students' needs."

BCEJ and BSG Congress member for the Class of 2001 Jeff Rogan feels that the University can in fact implement a living wage. He voted against the motion to not support the Fair Labor Campaign.

"The living wage is something the University can institute," Rogan said. "We do have the money and the ability to implement a living wage, but the University lacks the will to follow through on this student-driven issue."

Rogan is pleased with the other two motions passed by BSG—the formation of a University Fair Labor Committee and the addition of three support staff to the UCPB.

"In situations where the debate is heated, the proper function of the chair is to mediate the discussion rather than become a part of it," Richardson said. "I don't feel that Nate's conduct was appropriate for such a sensitive, heated discussion."

Student Affairs Committee Chairperson Kerry O'Donnell '04 disagrees with Rogan and Richardson.

"I believe the vote was done in a fair way that expressed the voice of the elected members," O'Donnell said. "We have dedicated over four meetings to discussing this issue. I do not consider that an issue in any way."

Conrad, as an unbiased administrator who witnessed the meeting, feels that although parliamentary procedure was not followed precisely, the vote still accurately represented the congress' opinion.

"The bottom line is that Nate Sorber's resolution would not have passed if that was not the sentiment of the congress," Conrad said. "Thus, in my opinion, the final result accurately reflected the majority of the student congress."

Conrad, who has been involved with BSG for three years, believes that the seriousness of this issue sparked much of the resentment between members on both sides.

"I believe that this is a very important issue to students and they are extremely passionate about their beliefs," Conrad said. "Given the passion and emotion for this particular subject, I think it was more difficult for them to 'agree to disagree' as happened in most other situations this year with BSG issues."

Regarding the discrepancies in parliamentary procedure, Conrad said that because BSG's academic year is over, the vote will remain intact for the time being, if not permanently.

"Although a new congress was elected as of this past Tuesday the issue certainly could be raised again next year," Conrad said. "Certainly the new congress would have to spend more time learning about this complex subject again, but if students want to address it again, it is their prerogative."

Ultimately, Sorber maintains that BSG members were as informed as possible, given the nature in which the BCEJ presented the Fair Labor Campaign to BSG.

"I am very pleased that BSG saw through BCEJ's petition of signatures and the incorrect way that they were collected," Sorber said. "The presentation BCEJ made, when asking for support, only addressed the moral argument and never offered possible consequences of such a plan. We, BSG, had to try to discover those consequences on our own to decide what was in students' best interest."

VP From page A1

Served as head of the Department of Biological Sciences from 1986 through 1995. He was named associate dean of the College of Sciences and Arts in 1995, then was appointed to the newly created position as vice-provost for instruction in 1997.

"Michigan Tech has been very good to me over the years," Bowen said. "I've enjoyed the camaraderie and support of many wonderful colleagues in teaching, research and university leadership. Michigan Tech students are a very rewarding group to work with, and I'll miss the friendships and the community."

Pollock, who has been an administrator at the University for three years, accepted the position with enthusiasm.

"I'm grateful to President Rogers for his confidence in me,

Two men, one Celtic pub, many spirits

By REBECCA ROWLAND
Editor-in-Chief

With the closing of The Lewisburg Inn, a French restaurant that shut its doors last fall, Lewisburg is not losing a fine dining opportunity, but gaining a Celtic pub.

The Highland Pub, owned and operated by Schuyler Patton '01 and Lewisburg resident Michael Bishop, will open in about six weeks, adding to Market Street's somewhat limited bar scene. While the opening will occur when the bulk of students are home for summer vacation, Patton and Bishop are confident that the delayed introduction to University students will not hurt the Pub's business.

"We hope to get a large Lewisburg crowd at the Pub," Patton said. "The businessmen in town we have talked to are totally excited about it."

Students, too, are excited at the introduction of an authentic Celtic pub to the off-campus nightlife; rumors of the "Irish pub" have been circulating campus for months and while the spring break opening did not happen, the Pub is prepared to become fully operational. It took only nine months.

The Beginning

As a chemical engineer, Patton is not in what you would call "a people field." Yet while the connection between chemical engineer and bartender may seem fuzzy to the average person, Patton sees it as a logical step.

"After all, I am serving alcohol."

Interesting point.

The Highland Pub is not the first time Patton has decided to put his pending chemical engineering degree to good use—he spent last summer working at the bar of the Candlelight Inn Bed and Breakfast in County Waterford, Ireland.

"It is in a little fishing village in rural Ireland, the most beautiful place you will ever see," Patton remembers fondly.

Patton and his Irish friend and co-worker Tony Boland eventually decided to open a cocktail bar in one of the bed and breakfast's empty spaces. It was a success.

"You have to remember, this is a tiny fishing village and I am trying to get these Irish guys to drink Long Island Iced Teas," Patton explains. "They'd be like 'What is this? There's no alcohol in here!' But sure enough, they'd want another!"

Patton left Ireland at the end of the summer to return to Lewisburg and the University. The experience of running an authentic pub was never far from his mind, however, and he eventually proposed the idea to his friend Michael Bishop.

Bishop is a permanent Lewisburg resident, attends Susquehanna University and majors in psychology. In addition to The Highland Pub, Bishop is also a local landlord, making him an experienced business partner.

"Mike was outside washing his dog and I sort of drove by and said, 'Hey! Wanna open a bar with me?'"

The invitation understandably caught Bishop by surprise.

"At first I thought, 'you're nuts!'" Bishop remembers. "Dealing with the Liquor Control Board alone seemed to make it too difficult to be practical."

Patton, however, worked at the Lewisburg Inn and knew that the property and its liquor license were for sale.

"We met with the realtor, what seemed like the next day, looked around and bought the place," Patton said.

And thus began the nine month journey.

You need a permit for that too? Tales of a small town business

While neither Patton nor Bishop mentioned the phrase "red tape," there were understandably some barriers that needed breaking.

"A lot of our planning went into meeting with different organizations; there are a lot of people here to deal with," Bishop said. "It wasn't hard, there were just a lot of them."

Although one of the most difficult permits to get—a liquor license—was part of the property of The Lewisburg Inn, there were, and still are, many permits the Pub needs to acquire before it can operate at optimal capacity.

The Pub hopes to eventually host live bands and have a dance floor, although both require entertainment permits. They will also need a special permit to host bands out on the terrace.

"We were also targeted as gullible because of our age," Patton said. "We had people telling us that we absolutely needed a $10,000 deep fat fryer."

They wisely declined.

Making The Highland Pub a reality

After purchasing the Lewisburg Inn in September, Patton and Bishop began designing the Pub. Earl Travers, the designer of The Lewisburg Hotel, The Watonsontown Inn and 79 other bars around the country, is working with them.

"The Pub will consist of mainly dark oak wood, glass, brass and mirrors," Patton said. "It is going to have dark lighting and a real, authentic feel."

The actual building the Pub will call home is a rambling Victorian structure; the bottom level will hold the bar and three rooms for table service, while the upstairs will be turned into apartments for rent. Perhaps one of the most interesting features is the outdoor terrace, which will also hold seating for customers.

The food menu has not been solidified, however both Patton and Bishop mention classic Celtic food and big sandwiches as potential entrees. The bar menu, conversely, is quite extensive; 12 beers on tap including Celtic favorites such as Guinness, Harp, Bass, Caffrey's and Bell-haven will accompany seasonal drafts and popular domestics. The bar will also boast 250 bottled imports and a fine Scotch selection.

To Patton and Bishop, the goal of the Pub will be to function as a local hangout with a genuine Celtic feel. "I hope it becomes the town's main hangout," Patton said. "It's a place where people can go, know the owners and have a good beer."

Bishop agrees, saying, "It's a place that will be the way a pub should be with the right social atmosphere, good food and properly served beer."

The art of serving beer is incredibly important to Patton and Bishop; the intricacies of how to pour a beer, which glass to serve it in and the general ambience in which a Celtic beer should be consumed weighs heavily on their minds.

"If the service is right and everything is done correctly, our customers will have a good experience," Bishop said.

The Highland Pub experience

To correct a misnomer, the Pub is actually not completely Irish but Scots/Irish.

"People can think it's Irish or Scottish, as long as they think about it!" Bishop mused.

The Pub's logo will bear the Scottish crests of both the Patton and Bishop families, as well as the Scottish flag. Pub merchandise will be sold.

The Pub, while authentic in every aspect, will also have many specials; half price beer nights will be a staple and a way to cater to students. However, Patton and Bishop realize that the most solid customer and employee base will be permanent residents.

"We will hire both students and non-students, although non-students will be our reliable workforce since students have holidays and vacations," Bishop said.

Schuyler Patton '01 and Mike Bishop conceived, planned and finalized The Highland Pub in only nine months.

But for University students, signature drinks for fraternities and sororities, senior nights and hopefully a deal with Aurora Taxi will let them know that this bar is for them too.

Those of them who are over 21, that is.

After the food service stops, the entire premises will become 21 and over; if you think these two guys are joking, the liquor store ID scanner posted at the door should stop any laughter.

"Sometimes you have to be strict about things," Bishop said. "I would love to let everyone in, but it is our business on the line."

Patton agreed, saying, "It will be difficult as a recent graduate to say 'no' to my friends, but I will have to. Mike and I will observe our crowd to try and stop underage drinking and make sure everyone is safe."

With the recent troubles of The Bull Run Inn involving a 21st birthday celebration gone awry, Patton and Bishop plan to be extra vigilant.

"I am not about to let people get absolutely wasted here," Bishop stated firmly. "Go somewhere else to do 21 shots—it's my conscience."

Community Reactions

Although The Highland Pub is located in a somewhat distant location, their immediate neighbors are thrilled at the prospect of more foot traffic.

"I think this is a marvelous idea," said Danny O'Neill, owner of The Celtic Exchange. "The shops this far down on Market Street lack business. The opening of The Highland Pub will bring new customers down to our end of the street."

Any rumors of neighborhood competition between the Pub and The Lewisburg Hotel are completely unfounded.

"Everyone has their own niche and everyone does what they do well," said Dale Walize, manager of the Lewisburg Hotel. "This end of town needs a break business-wise and I wish them the best of luck."

Patton and Bishop also see The Highland Pub as a way to attract students to the less traveled end of Market Street.

"This should help businesses in town as it exposes them to students who probably didn't even know they were there," Bishop said.

Any day now...

This weekend marks the first time the Pub will open its doors to the public; Patton and Bishop will turn their terrace into a beer garden at the Lewisburg Art Festival, allowing students to learn about the Pub and its owners.

The feeling in the air is one of excitement and anticipation; the more the community learns about the Pub, the more these feelings will grow.

"The purpose of a pub to the Irish and the Scots is to be a place where the ambience is good and a feeling of community pervades," local Irishman O'Neill said. "I wish them the best of luck."

Videotape surfaces in vodka death case

By KRISTA REISDORF
A&E Editor

A recent court videotape revealed that a Bloomsburg University student was warned as he chugged a fatal bottle of vodka, The Daily Item said last Saturday.

The videotape shows Jared Drosnock, 18, chugging a bottle of Nikolai vodka in a contest with another student, while a fraternity member, among other pleading voices, said, "You're going to die tonight, Jared. Stop it."

The tape was seen in court last Thursday during the preliminary hearing of Bucks County man, David S. Klimowicz, who produced the videotape and is being tried for manslaughter on the grounds that he supplied the alcohol.

Friends found Drosnock dead after the party, which occurred in an off-campus house on Jan. 28. A coroner also found traces of cocaine in Drosnock's system.

Police say that Klimowicz's voice is heard on the videotape, saying, "That's my bottle. Take it. Take it, man."

Meanwhile, others were saying, "Stop it, dude! You're an idiot. You're a moron."

Fraternity member John Motesney said he took the bottle from Drosnock multiple times, but Drosnock kept getting it back.

"A few of us were trying to tell him to stop," Motesney said. "He was being an idiot. I pulled the bottle away ... somehow he got it back."

The Daily Item said that Drosnock's blood-alcohol level was found to be 0.35 percent, more than three times the Pennsylvania legal driving limit of 0.10 percent.

Klimowicz said he was not aware that Drosnock was only 18, since he was just visiting some friends at a Bloomsburg University fraternity house that weekend. Klimowicz attends Bucks County Community College and is majoring in criminal justice to become a police officer.

If Klimowicz is convicted of involuntary manslaughter, the repercussions would be a possible five-year sentence in prison and a ruined opportunity for a law enforcement career.

Cole and Pollock: Newsmakers of the year

COLE From page A1

I did not get the spot. That's kind of frustrating because they don't know me or talk to me and have never even seen me, other than at Borough Council meetings. But the Council seemed very pleased to have a student interested in the position."

Borough Council President Yvonne Morgan appreciates Cole's dedication in working to improve the relationship between University students and Borough residents. Morgan met Cole through an engineering course that examined "traffic calming" in Lewisburg.

"He impressed me as being very motivated and was willing to engage me, unlike several of the students," Morgan said.

Morgan began working with Cole further when he attended a Borough Council meeting that addressed code enforcement.

"I was impressed with his opinions on these sensitive issues which affect students' lifestyles," Morgan said. "He did not take the typical student attitude of 'just leave us to do as we please, whenever we please.' He really wanted to come to some compromise with the residents."

Part of that compromise was Cole's proposal to implement an ongoing community service project for Greek students—picking up trash on Thursday, Saturday and Sunday mornings in the residential portions of Lewisburg, specifically South Sixth and Seventh Streets.

"I ran my idea of the downtown cleanup by Yvonne Morgan, which she thought was somewhat over ambitious to do three times a week," Cole said. "However, the Greek community is so large, it's somewhat of an easy task. Each chapter only has to do it about two to three times a semester."

Professor of Civil and Environmental Engineering Richard G. McGinnis '68 attributes much of Cole's success in both his improvements of the University-town relationship and in his academic work to his outgoing, selfless attitude.

"I think Matt's interactions with the Lewisburg community, in particular the Lewisburg Borough Council, have demonstrated many of his good qualities," McGinnis said. "He is mindful of the community's needs, desires and prejudices and he is also determined that the students' side of issues should be heard. I know he has won the respect of at least several of the Borough Council members and the press and he has even encouraged him to put his name in the pool to fulfill the unexpired term of a council member who resigned."

McGinnis sees the same perseverance continue in class, adding a positive influence in that sphere as well.

"Matt adds a lot to the class through his subtle (and sometimes not so subtle) humor," McGinnis said. "He enjoys life and learning and contributes this enthusiasm to his classmates. He also makes significant intellectual contributions to class discussions, many times indicating a thorough understanding of the topic being discussed."

McGinnis first met Cole while counseling him about the Bucknell-in-London program that Cole participated in the fall of his junior year. He helped Cole address some of the academic concerns he had as an engineer wanting to study abroad.

"Matt seemed to be eager to broaden his education

On the academic front, Cole organized an independent construction safety course through one of his engineering classes. More than 40 students were certified to Occupational Safety Hazards Association (OSHA) safety standards in the ten-hour course.

"Academically, he saw the benefits civil engineering students could get from OSHA safety training when looking for internships and employment," Larson said. "He found a professor with the credentials, publicized the class and purchased the materials at risk to himself."

Larson, who has worked closely with Cole on a number of town initiatives, considers Cole's personality as a catalyst to productivity.

"Matt's a kid that makes things happen. He is a constant learner and a go-getter," Larson said. "Apparently it is not in his vocabulary."

Making things happen keeps Cole busy, though he does not allow his success to override his focus on improving situations, according to Larson.

"Matt is dedicated to continual learning. He is constantly reading up on things he finds interesting or will prove beneficial in the long run," Larson said. "As a result, he's an extremely talented kid, both with his hands and his mind. However, modesty characterizes his talents. You only see them when they are needed."

Matt Cole and Matt Larson in Florence, Italy in the fall of 1999.

Larson attributes much of Cole's success to the opportunities provided by the University.

"I've seen Bucknell do great things for Matt," Larson said. "He is a perfect example of what Bucknell does for its students. He is a cultured, caring kid with motivation and drive to succeed outside of Lewisburg."

Originally from North Eastham, Mass., Cole chose the University because of its strong engineering program.

"My search for colleges was concentrated on engineering schools, specifically strong civil engineering programs. Bucknell's name stood out, having the fourth ranked undergraduate civil engineering program in the nation," Cole said. "As soon as I visited the campus, I was sold."

The example Cole has set, along with his love for the campus, has also inspired other students to come to the University, hoping to follow in his footsteps. First year student Joe Hartung, a longtime family friend of Cole's, partially chose to come to the University because of Cole.

"He's helped me with my transition into high school and now into college," Hartung said. "He's a real down to earth guy, easy to talk to about questions and concerns. As the 'new kid in town,' Matt did his best to involve me in life here at Bucknell."

Boyer echoes Hartung's sentiments.

"Matt is a friend you can count on," Boyer said. "No matter how busy he is or how hectic things get, he always has time to lend an ear or help friends out."

Friendships, in addition to classes and working on the relationship with the downtown community, have created many memories for Cole.

"Some of my best memories come from those days when it's out on a terrace, filling the hill," Cole said. "There's nothing better than watching our team, yelling at the other team and sitting on the hill with all your friends ... or any random day at SAE, hanging out with everyone, hearing about the crazy things that happened the night before, and talking about what is going to happen tonight. Those are the days that I will miss next year."

After graduation, Cole will have his "first relaxing summer," and will then move to New York City. He accepted a job as an engineer with Turner Construction, a national construction management company in Manhattan.

"I am very excited to be working on some challenging, large-scale projects in Manhattan," Cole said.

Cole's engineering aspirations spawned from interest in his father's profession.

"I've grown up in the construction industry," Cole said. "My father owns a custom building company, a company that my grandfather started, so I think it's in my blood."

With just a few weeks left on campus, Cole is trying to maximize his time with friends and enjoy the remainder of his career at the University. His contributions to the campus community have touched many people and he will be missed by many.

"This might sound true, but Matt is just a great person," McGinnis said. "He always has a smile, is seriously concerned about people, and is a delight to have as a student and as a friend. He's the kind of guy parents would love to have their daughter meet."

POLLOCK From page A1

"But, these are not just my issues. There are so many people that make it go on a daily basis, like Ian Oliver, Mark Davies, John Hardt, Vince DeCerio and Richard Ferraro."

Being his first full year as Interim VP&A, Pollock has yielded to the expertise of other directors and given them an opportunity to lead in their respective fields. Although Pollock oversees student life and athletics, with both a new Dean of Students and Director of Athletics, he hoped to be more of a counselor than a superior.

"I'd like to think that I'm a source of support and a good sounding board for their decision making," Pollock said.

Pollock spends much of his time balancing the needs of various constituencies and negotiating compromises. "The fundamental part of my job is credibility ... it's being honest, not over-promising," Pollock said. "I hope more than anything else to be considered a straight-shooter."

Professor of Management Tim Sweeney, a longtime friend and colleague of Pollock, knows the positive influence he has had at the University.

"Based on my 21 years at Bucknell, Charlie Pollock rates an 'A' on character, leadership, integrity, work ethic and institutional loyalty," Sweeney said. "He is always patient and evenhanded in dealing with a variety of constituents, some of whom clearly fall into the 'high maintenance category.'"

Inevitably, Pollock cannot please everyone at all times, however, his capacity as negotiator and his well-rounded knowledge of the University have helped make him a respected and admired administrator.

"In the midst of some of the toughest issues on campus (athletics, Greek life, relations with the Board of Trustees, religion, etc.), about which people often have the strongest opinions based on the least information, Charlie somehow keeps an open mind and is able to balance concern and respect for each group with the need to make decisions to move Bucknell forward," Oliver said.

Oliver has developed a working relationship with Pollock, who provides guidance for and supervises religious and spiritual life on campus. They have worked hard to further develop the religious programs on campus, including the addition of a full time rabbi.

Pollock has also worked on improving the perception of and relations with Public Safety.

"I found Charlie Pollock to be a knowledgeable and astute administrator, one with a special background and feeling for Bucknell. One aspect of his management style, which impressed the public safety staff, was his constructive support of our mission and goals and his understanding of the difficulty of our work," Director of Public Safety Vince DeCerio said. "His praise, listening skills and calm demeanor have helped us through some tough times. It's been a pleasure working for him."

Paralleling his desires to provide an optimal atmosphere for all constituencies, Pollock has also worked extensively in improving town-gown relations. He serves as President of the Lewisburg Downtown Partnership, which is made up of the University, local businesses and the Borough Council. The Partnership strives to maintain a vibrant main street in town.

"The Partnership is showing wonderful signs of promise," Pollock said. "The University has also been in a mode of finding new ways to collaborate with the town."

President of the Borough Council Yvonne Morgan has been continuously impressed with Pollock's dedication to the surrounding community and the time he manages to devote to all constituencies.

"From the beginning, Charlie's leadership as president of our board was outstanding and his love of our borough apparent. He has given the time necessary to birth this organization. At times, his efforts seemed super-human in light of all of his responsibilities at the University," Morgan said.

To maintain strong town-gown relations and provide more hands-on learning for students, Pollock hopes to expand the community service program in the next few years.

"Bucknell is ready to make some huge strides in service learning," Pollock said. "[Improved town-gown relations] will in the final analysis depend on a constant coming to the middle on reasonable behavior and expectation."

Pollock is very proud of the improvements in town-gown relations and commends the students that have participated in the "downtown cleanup project" and other community service activities.

"[Pollock's] eloquence and diplomacy have greatly influenced the positive image Bucknell now enjoys in our community. There is no one in this town who doesn't love Charlie," Morgan said. "Because he is so loved and respected, he is everyone's first contact when delicate situations arise. We all know from past experiences that Charlie will come through for us. I cannot recall any Bucknell administrator earning as much respect and affection as Charlie."

While Pollock works diligently to mend and advance the rapport between students and the community, he realizes that much of his work must begin on campus. Although his busy schedule only allows for limited contact, Pollock loves his opportunities to connect with students and really understand their needs.

"One of the delightful things about this job is the opportunity to be with students," Pollock said.

Pollock interacts with students through the Bucknell Student Government and various committees, such as the Committee on Complimentary Activities and Greek Strategic Planning Team.

"Charlie Pollock, I can say with the deepest sincerity, is perhaps the truest advocate of the students," Marsha Lewis '02 said. "During my term as the VP of Operations and President of the Bucknell Student Government, I met with Mr. Pollock on almost a weekly basis. Whenever we came to him with our concerns or suggestions, which he would just hearing what we said, but he listened with an open mind. Regardless of what his personal opinion may have been, Mr. Pollock never hesitated to lead us in the right direction to achieve our goals or find solutions to the problems that we were facing."

Among all his accomplishments this year, Pollock said his highlight has been a conflict resolution situation with Panhellenic Council's decision to move the date of House Party weekend which conflicted with Passover was a display of "cooperation and sensitivity that's my highest hope for the way we live and the way we learn at Bucknell,"

Davies and Pollock have been friends since their student days at the University. Today, their relationship continues to grow. "[Pollock] has a wonderful intuition as to what students and faculty are interested in. I've really enjoyed his guidance and counsel," Davies said.

Widely admired and respected, Pollock has been a source of support for countless people, including first-year University President Steffen Rogers.

"Charlie has been a right hand man ever since I walked in the door," Rogers said. "He fully understands the culture of Bucknell and his skills in dealing with students and community members are among his best accomplishments. Your choice of him as person of the year is an excellent choice."

Throughout the past year, Pollock has also found guidance in Rogers' leadership.

"Our relationship has progressed wonderfully. For this position especially, the rapport that [Rogers] has developed with students is such an asset," Pollock said.

Soon to be the permanent VP&A at the University, Pollock looks forward to continuing his relationship with the administrative staff, his new colleagues and the campus community.

"I'm deeply honored and excited to have been given the chance to continue the work I've been doing the past two years. It's challenging work, but with huge rewards when done at one's alma mater," Pollock said.

Pollock's work has touched the lives of all members of the campus community, including his family. Pollock's wife and Admissions Officer Gayle Pollock knows first-hand the impact Pollock has had.

"It has been wonderful for Charlie to be back at his alma mater. I have never seen him so enthusiastic about his work," she said. "The combination of responsibilities this year has been extraordinary, but each one has given him a different way to contribute to the place he loves so much."

"I hope that we can keep taking

Pollock on stage in 1969 at the University.

said. "We need to all agree, or at least have consensus, on the mission of athletics at the University, and then we can ask: 'what does it take?'"

Constantly working closely on an array of athletics issues, Pollock spends much time with Director of Athletics John Hardt.

"During my first year as Bucknell's Director of Athletics, Charlie has demonstrated his strong support for the special brand of scholar-athletes that we have in our Bison Athletics programs," Hardt said. "As a Bucknellian, Charlie has a true appreciation for Bucknell's values and culture that make Bucknell so special, and he recognizes the importance of athletics and recreational opportunities for all of our students."

Continuously gaining an appreciation of all aspects of student life through his position, Pollock is then able to use his knowledge to oversee the Admissions Office and help market the school to prospective students.

Dean of Admissions Mark Davies '74 recalls the day when he heard that Pollock would be returning to the University as an administrator. "He was always a very active and visible alum," Davies said. "What a great catch for Bucknell!"

Davies and Pollock have been friends since their student days at the University. Today, their relationship continues to grow. "[Pollock] has a wonderful intuition as to what students and faculty are interested in. I've really enjoyed his guidance and counsel," Davies said.

Widely admired and respected, Pollock has been a source of support for countless people, including first-year University President Steffen Rogers.

"Charlie has been a right hand man ever since I walked in the door," Rogers said. "He fully understands the culture of Bucknell and his skills in dealing with students and community members are among his best accomplishments. Your choice of him as person of the year is an excellent choice."

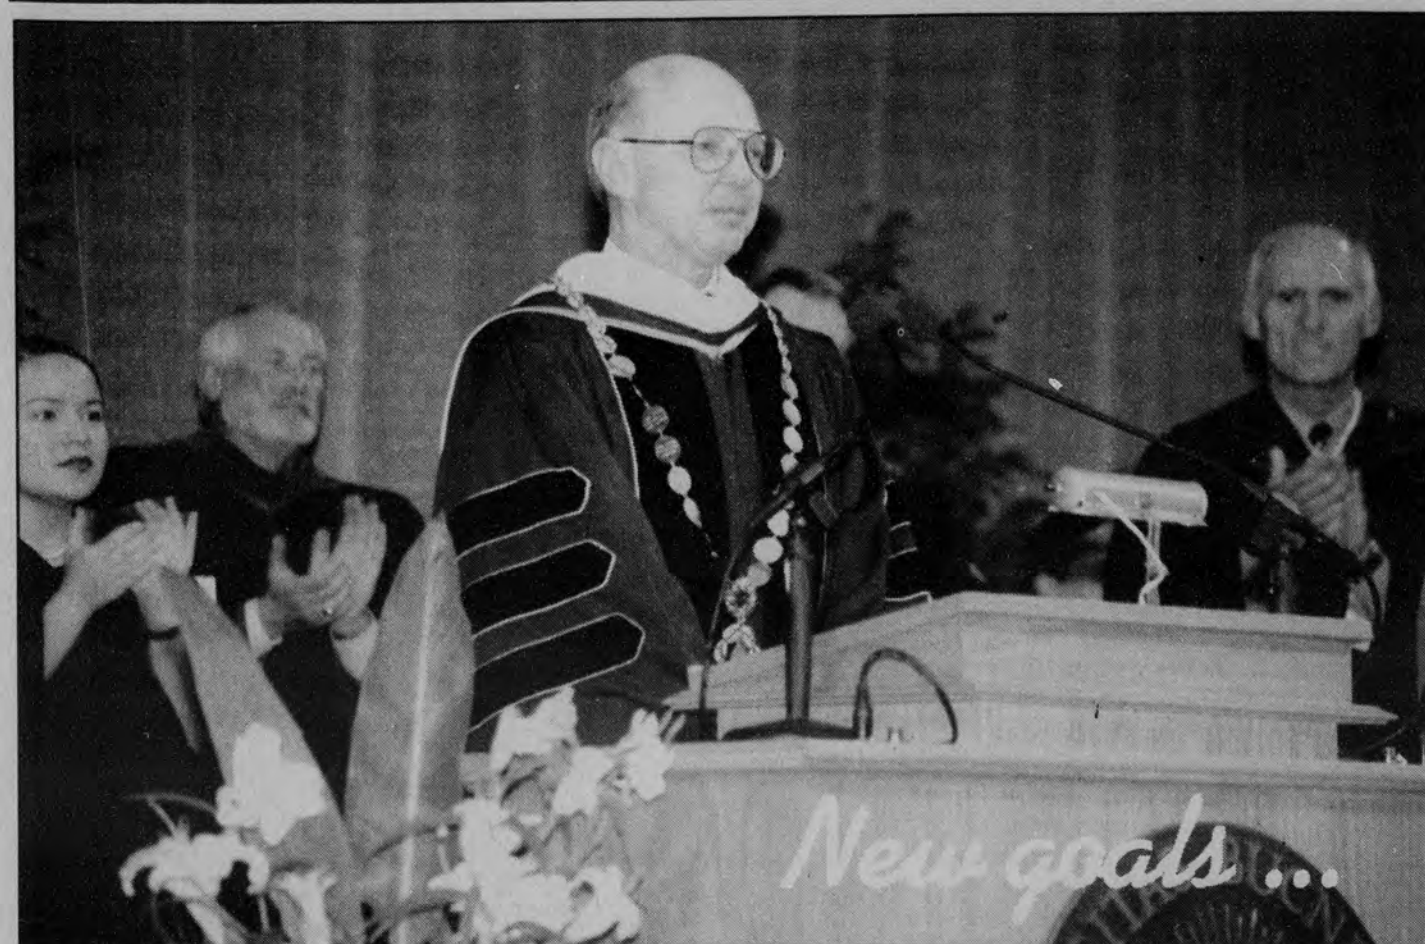

Throughout the past year, Pollock has also found guidance in Rogers' leadership.

"Our relationship has progressed wonderfully. For this position especially, the rapport that [Rogers] has developed with students is such an asset," Pollock said.

Soon to be the permanent VP&A at the University, Pollock looks forward to continuing his relationship with the administrative staff, his new colleagues and the campus community.

"I'm deeply honored and excited to have been given the chance to continue the work I've been doing the past two years. It's challenging work, but with huge rewards when done at one's alma mater," Pollock said.

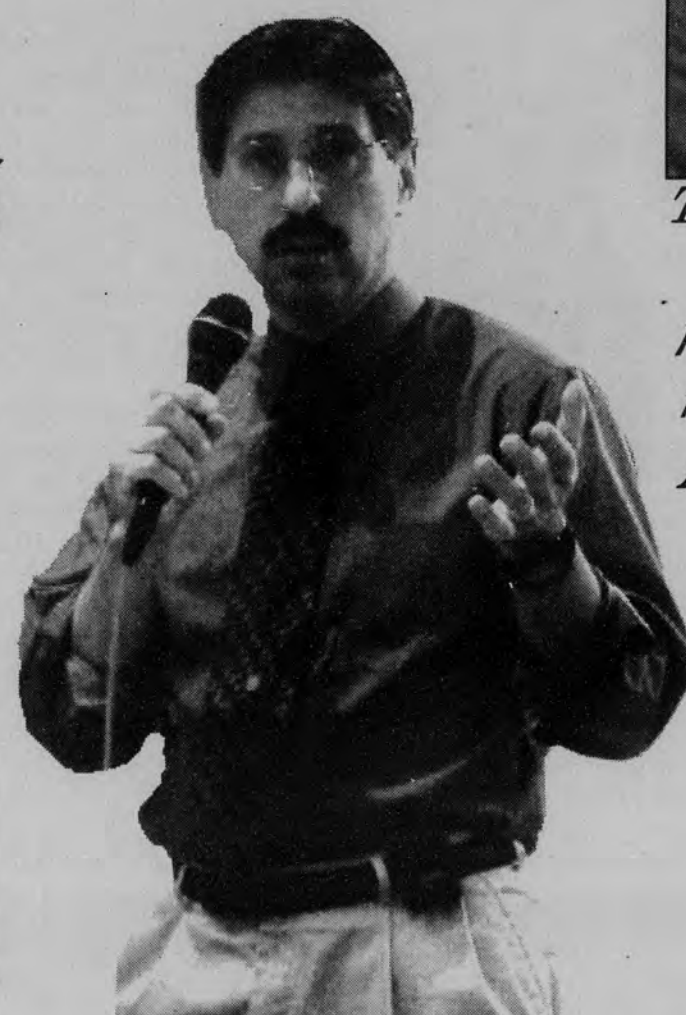

Pollock's work has touched the lives of all members of the campus community, including his family. Pollock's wife

New beginnings

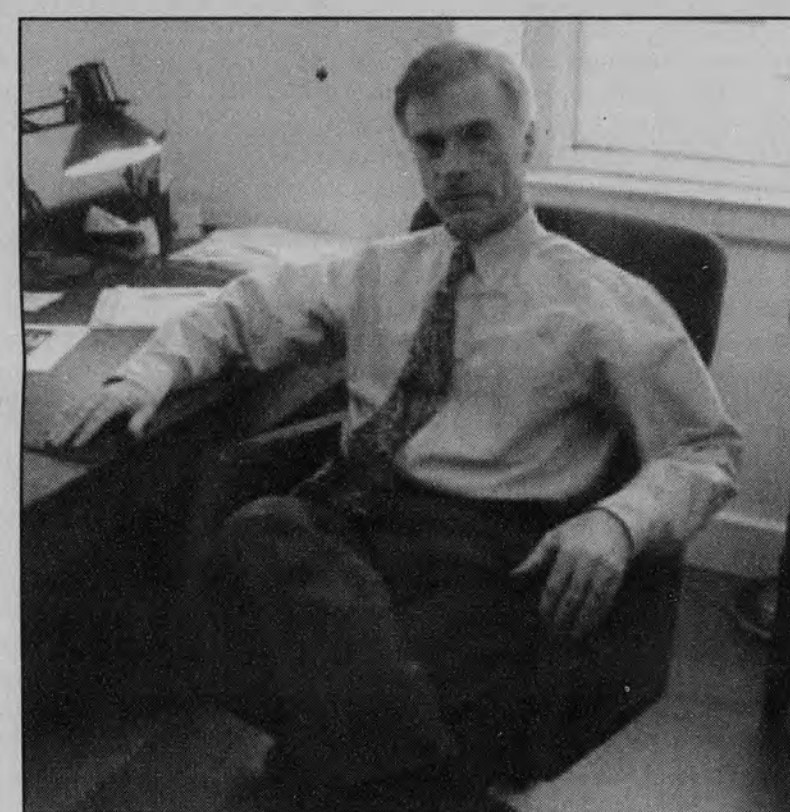

Serena Fujita
became the University's first full-time Rabbi last July

Richard Ferraro
worked to improve student life and town-gown relations during his first year as Dean of Students.

The University rewarded Charles Pollock '70 for his longstanding dedication by naming him Vice President for Student Affairs this week.

Wayne Bromfield became the University's new general counsel

New challenges on campus...

Fraternity troubles, added with increased tensions downtown, proved to be a heated topic all year. Relations with Public Safety became a concern and SAE (left) and Kappa Sigma (below) faced sanctions.

Former Poet Laureate Robert Pinsky graced the campus with a poetry reading and several class visits.

Jeff Greenfield
of CNN will deliver this year's Commencement address on May 20.

Former Presidential Candidate Ralph Nader
spoke to a packed Weis Center audience about global issues, activism and economic justice.

Esteemed sports author John Feinstein honored Patriot League student-athletes in his latest book, The Last Amateurs. He visited campus in December for a book signing and an open forum.

New views

THE Bucknellian

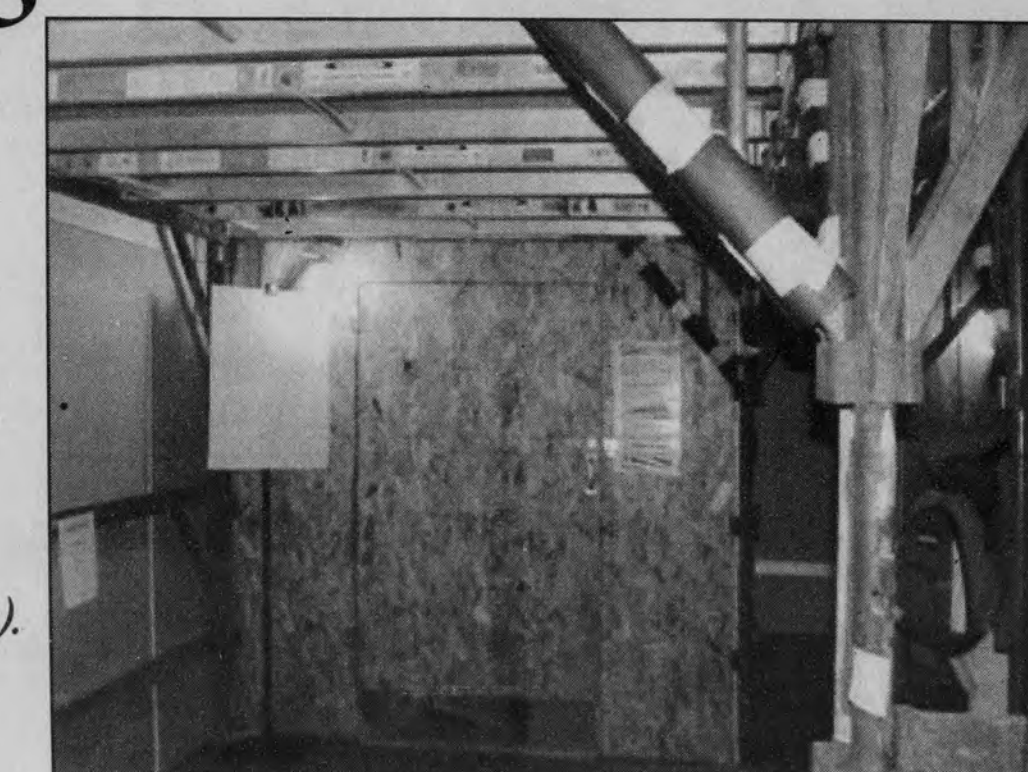

YEAR IN REVIEW 2000-2001

Photos by:
Chris Rivera '02
Paige Cull '01
Tim Choate '01
Dan Blair '01

New looks

Visible changes around campus included the new Weis Music Building (above), LC Mall renovation (right), and general utility-related construction, near Rooke Chapel (left).

Two graduating seniors accept non-profit positions

Through the Bucknell Public Interest Program, seniors can work with alumni in the non-profit sector

By JENNIFER JENCHURA
Staff Writer

The Bucknell Public Interest Program (BPiP) recently offered two qualified graduating seniors job opportunities in the non-profit sector. In its first year, the University's program is modeled after Princeton Project 55 (PP55), established in 1989 by a group of Princeton alumni from the class of 1955.

Although not directly affiliated with Princeton, the BPiP encourages other schools to take advantage of their yearlong fellowships in the non-profit sector. Through PP55, the University had three positions available to graduating seniors, along with one position here on campus.

The program places a student-fellow in contact with an alumni mentor. The mentor acts as a support person to bounce ideas off of and also helps the fellow make the transition as a student into the working world. All the opportunities place a University senior with an alumnus.

This year the program filled one of the original three Princeton opportunities and the job position at the University. Stephanie Novello '01 will be working with Medical Rights Center, a PP55 opportunity and Katherine Kennedy '01 will be managing the program at the University. Recently, two more opportunities emerged from Princeton and it is still possible that more University students will be placed in a PP55 position.

"Alumni will uncover public interest opportunities, then act as mentors if any graduates are selected for these opportunities. We think it will be a real win-win for both alumni involved and the graduates," said Director of the Office of Alumni, Parents and Volunteers David Flinchbaugh '82.

The alumni association created the opportunity at the University to build the necessary infrastructure to further support the program in the future and build Bucknell's own opportunities for public interest work among alumni. The fellow will report to the overseer of the program, Laura Denbow, and work to promote the program with faculty, students and alumni. After interviewing nine qualified candidates, Katherine Kennedy was selected for the position.

"I was thrilled to represent the alumni committee in the interview process for the Bucknell fellow because we had a great pool of candidates and the work this person will be doing is so critical to the success of this program," Flinchbaugh said. "All alumni involved were thrilled with the high caliber of young men and women that applied for the initial positions."

Denbow looks forward to working with Kennedy in the near future. "Kathy can enhance the exposure of these (non-profit) opportunities prior to the application process so those students are more informed when they apply. The position will entail tinkering with the current program model and will be a really significant opportunity to reach out to disengaged alumni working in non-profit organizations," said Denbow, director of the Career Development Center.

A key factor in the program is getting Bucknell alumni involved.

"The Alumni Committee believes BPiP will involve many new alumni in an entirely new area of volunteerism," Flinchbaugh said. "We have many new alumni who have dedicated their lives to the public sector and we think they will enjoy helping young Bucknell graduates move into this special world of work."

For several years the alumni board was hoping to bring a public interest program to the University.

"Through the generous support of both time and money the Office of Alumni, Parent and Volunteers had the program ready for discussion in January 2000," Flinchbaugh said.

Right now the funding is for a one-year fellow, but could potentially be extended.

"The position is one of self-prophecy where you are responsible for your own future by working to build interest in the program," Denbow said.

Kennedy's interview process began in mid-March with David Grossman '84, a member of the alumni board of directors, overseeing the process for the University fellowship position. Because of his experience in public interest through working at the Civil House at the University of Pennsylvania, he will be the mentor to the Bucknell position.

"There is no structured way in which the fellow and the mentor will communicate; but I will be there to bounce ideas off of and provide support for Kennedy and the future of this program," Grossman said.

Once Grossman screened the nine candidates and passed on recommendations, Denbow and Flinchbaugh did a second round of interviews and made the final decision.

"I interviewed nine very strong candidates and I was very pleased with the quality of students who stepped forward. I hope we can encourage future students to pursue these public interest opportunities," Grossman said.

Novello will be working with mentor Mary Jo Ward '78 while completing a yearlong fellowship at Medicare Rights Center in New York City.

"I heard about the program through email," Novello said. "I was excited because it's hard to find non-profit jobs on your own because they do not recruit on college campuses."

Novello says the mentor aspect is another attraction to the program.

"I think it's a really good idea because it can be a difficult transition from school to work. Interviewing with a mentor helped me get a better feel for the opportunity," Novello said.

Denbow was pleased with the turnout for the program's first year as all organizations accepted recommendations given by University alumni and then interviewed on site. Because the spring semester was the trial run of the program, the BPiP Committee members worried that students not fully interested with non-profit organizations would apply as a last ditch job offer.

"All the applicants to the opportunities were qualified individuals and we were very pleased with the number of students who applied for the fellowships," Denbow said. "Although not all students accepted the offers, all positions received applications and many offers were extended to Bucknell students. That's exciting."

Although Princeton still keeps its doors open to letting the University use their opportunities, next year Denbow hopes to work with Homecoming as a way to interest alumni.

"The program is a way to bring back alumni who aren't members of the alumni board and expand alumni relations at Bucknell," Denbow said.

Denbow is driven to competing against other schools to ensure University students are considered for the opportunities. She even went so far as to drive three students to New York City on Friday April 30 of House Party Weekend, so they could look at one opportunity and interview before Georgetown students.

"If we are going to compete, we are going to compete," Denbow said.

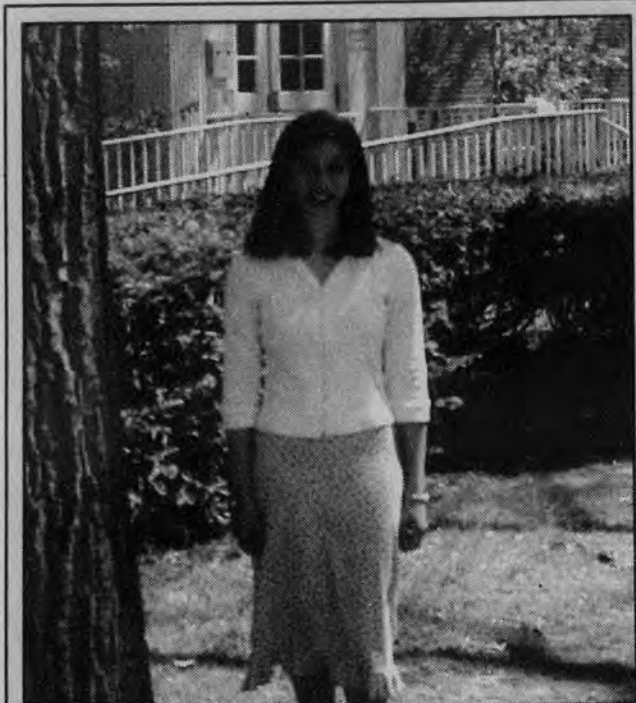

Faculty supported the program from the beginning by helping promote the program's opportunities to their students. In the future, Denbow hopes the program will move to the intern level where current students can work with professors and bring their experiences to the classroom.

"There is no way we can put effort into the program without the support from faculty. Eventually we want faculty to say 'here are the opportunities; how can they affect the classroom?'" Denbow said.

Excitement for the program is growing and Kennedy is looking forward to starting her fellowship.

"My interviews were pleasant experiences. After my second interview I felt that I would be perfect for the position, and that the program couldn't help but be an amazing success. As soon as I was offered the job, I accepted it."

—Katherine Kennedy '01

Stephanie Novello '01 will be working with Medical Rights Center after she graduates.

Jim Leahy—The Bucknellian

The Bucknellian staff reloads

Although The Bucknellian will be losing many seniors, few sweeping staff changes will be otherwise apparent.

Saying goodbye to such involved editors as Brian Watson, Matt Trunnell, Matt Albert, Paige Cull, Heather Napolitano, Tim Scheu, Lynne Waldman, Debbie Ruggieri and Kim Luedee will be difficult. The staff appreciates all of their hard work and tireless dedication over the years. Returning to the helm will be Pete Van Emburgh '02; Rebecca Rowland '02 will step aside as editor-in-chief in order to pursue other interests. She will stay on as a senior consultant.

A change in our internal structure brings Rachel Laskow '03, former News layout editor to the newly created position of Associate editor.

Jim Leahy '03 will remain as managing editor and will be joined by Maureen O'Connell '03, former Business and Politics layout editor.

News will lose editor Laura Day '03 to study abroad, but Natalie Casp '02 will stay on as editor. Accompanying her as News layout editor will be former Features layout editor Jason Rubinstein '04.

Michael Boland '03 will continue to edit the Business and Politics section. April John '03 and Peter Hackeman '04 will stay on as Forum editor and layout editor, respectively.

Features will lose Jolene Hart '03 to study abroad for the entire year; co-Features editor Sandi Jo Galati '04 will remain onboard.

Josie Cetta '04 and Lauren Wohl '04 will stay at the helm of the Science and Technology section.

Krista Reisdorf '02 and Kristi Johnston '03 will continue their tenure as Arts and Entertainment editors.

Sports will lose Carmen Mauriello '02, a driving force for four consecutive semesters, to the Washington semester program. Although he can never be replaced, Brooke Rea '02 and Andrew Burr '04 will continue their work as Sports editors and will be joined by a new face, Aaron DeRosa '03.

Business manager Mark Langer '02, ad representatives Amy Pelouin '03 and Bryan Prins '04, circulation manager Brian Klotz '03, production manager Nick Olson '02 and photo editor Chris Rivera '02 will all be returning in the fall.

Jim Lee will return for his fifth year as the adviser to Admissions day, held this past weekend, welcomed prospective students to the University. Various clubs, organizations and offices on campus promoted their groups to prospective students and their families at Saturday's activities fair.

Chris Rivera—The Bucknellian

GOOD LUCK TO THE CLASS OF 2001!

Program remembers Holocaust

By MICHAEL BOLAND
Business and Politics Editor

Hillel, the University's Jewish student organization, recently sponsored "In Our Own Words," a Holocaust remembrance program featuring Steven Spielberg's film Survivors of the Holocaust.

The presentation began with a brief introduction by Risa Salsburg '02, president of Hillel, discussing the origins of Holocaust Remembrance Day.

This year, it fell on April 20th which, as Salsburg noted, "is ironic because [April 20th] was Hitler's birthday. Our program this evening is somewhat of a slap in the face to him, for he did not achieve his 'Final Solution'."

Several students, Jewish and non-Jewish alike, then read Holocaust-inspired poetry to the audience.

Hillel member Louis Blau '03 read "The Garden" and was followed by works "The Butterfly" and "A Letter to Daddy."

The selections were made by the individual readers, providing a variety of moods and perspectives.

"At the beginning of the program, I gave the book to everyone and they just picked a poem that moved them," Salsburg said.

Produced by the Shoah Visual History Foundation, Survivors of the Holocaust is a collection of interviews with Jewish Holocaust survivors, taken from around the world in dozens of languages. Filled with graphic video footage and stirring first-hand accounts of concentration camp life, Spielberg's film recounts the Jewish experience under the Nazi regime.

One survivor witnessed a son beating his weakened father to death in order to take his food, while another tearfully confessed to cremating alive a fellow prisoner, on the order of a German guard. Several organizers of the event had seen the video before, but still were shaken.

"Preparing for the program was difficult," Salsburg said. "We hear the experiences of survivors each year but that doesn't make it any easier. The footage is still disturbing ... it's hard to know that my family had to go through that."

The evening concluded with a few more remarks from Salsburg and a brief reception.

Michael Dudzinski '03 helped organize the event, though he is not involved with Hillel.

"Regardless of race, genocide is something that still continues today and affects all people directly or indirectly. Only through recognition by all people can we maximize the efforts to cease such outrageous acts," Dudzinski said.

Despite the lower-than-expected turnout for the event, organizers were generally pleased with the presentation.

"The message of the program was that the Holocaust of WWII was real, people experienced it. It was a horrible thing, and out of respect for those who died we need to remember. I think that we were able to affect those who attended," Salsburg said.

Dudzinski agreed: "It was great to see people of all backgrounds attend and show their respect to Jewish victims. It shows that everyone should realize that only together can we stop expulsion of cultures and that everyone, no matter what race, religion, or culture, has something great to contribute to society."

Hillel sponsored "In Our Own Words" to support Holocaust Remembrance Day.

Michael Dudzinski—The Bucknellian

Seniors reflect on college experiences

It's scary to think this is the last article I'll ever write for The Bucknellian. The assignment is simple, but drastically difficult: summarize my feelings about my Bucknell career without writing a book.

So here goes everything. Nearly four years ago, as an incoming freshman, I had no idea how my college experience would turn out. I dragged through my first year, getting sub-par grades and exercising general laziness, but never really finding my niche in anything besides week night parties.

I can't say that I didn't enjoy it—that year was the only time when I allowed my social life to take precedence over everything else—but something told me I needed to do things differently.

But still it was hard to imagine anything different back then. In fact, if anyone had told me I'd be writing this article, recounting my various experiences, I would have called them crazy.

But the past four years has taught me that a little craziness goes a long way. In the last three years I've transformed from an easy-going, carefree freshman to an active, over-committed senior. My friends wonder why I put so much time and effort into The Bucknellian, my fraternity and my work, and all I can offer is one simple answer: If I ever reverted to being the reckless freshman that hummed around Veder Road West, I probably would have failed out long ago.

So that's been my story—stay as busy as possible and the chips will fall into place. A lot of them did, but plenty didn't. As I look back I know that realizing one major lesson—that nothing can be perfect—was probably the most important lesson I learned at Bucknell.

Classes were always somewhat challenging, but I rarely let them challenge me. Maybe that's a bad attitude—especially at a school with such a stress on academic achievement—but, in reality, it's been my guiding principle at Bucknell.

I've had the opportunity to take some amazing courses and interact with some truly inspiring professors, but I learned far more outside the classroom. Ironically, those same professors taught me more about life by being my friend instead of my educator.

When I decided two years ago to pursue journalism as a career, I came to the realization that, because the University finds no academic merit in the subject, I would have to learn on my own time. And now I know the University couldn't be more wrong: my endeavors in journalism, most notably with The Bucknellian, have been the most educational experiences of my life.

Interacting with students, faculty and administrators on a weekly basis gave me real world experience that no English or political science class could ever dream of achieving. If I hadn't had this opportunity, I never would have gotten to know people like Gary Sojka and Charlie Pollock '70, two of many who have made such an impact on my life. But those two in particular helped me realize my abilities through their service as Bucknellian advisors, but, more importantly, as friends.

And it hadn't been for The Bucknellian, I wouldn't know the meaning of time management. Few obligations on this campus compare to the precision and dedication that the newspaper requires. In my endless hours in the Roberts basement—writing, editing, planning, organizing, advising—I came to learn so much about the meaning of hard work.

Oddly enough, this effort, which deprived me of sleep on so many nights over the past few years, often leaving me in an absolute daze, has given me an immeasurable focus and clarity.

And it also allowed me to meet some truly amazing students, people who sacrifice their other interests—with no desire for credit or recognition—to produce the newspaper that has become my passion and education.

But it was never easy. When I stepped in as editor-in-chief after a semester abroad, I wanted to take the paper to new heights. I encouraged my staff to strive for perfection, but soon learned that my aspirations were simply too much for a staff of volunteers. I learned that perfection was not an option.

But we did the best we could, and, in the end, I know we did a great job. I can't give myself credit for that; I can only thank—with undying gratitude—people like Matt Albert '01 and Pete Van Emburgh '02, who went above and beyond their responsibilities to the paper and helped me accomplish every attainable goal we could muster out of our busy schedules; and E.J. Crawford '99 and Brett Tomlinson '99, my first editors, who saw some potential in a slacking freshman and took time to show him the ropes and lead me on my way to a career.

But my biggest influence in my Bucknellian endeavors was the paper's adviser, Jim Lee, whose unending guidance and motivation have helped me and so many others to keep our heads up through some of our most challenging times. Without his help, I never would have gained the knowledge and ability—or the spirit—to perform my duties.

My experiences in my fraternity, Delta Upsilon, have had an equally dramatic impact on my growth. In three years I've become so close with people I never would have met and gained countless memories that few other opportunities can offer. Every one of my brothers—from the hardest worker to the biggest slacker—taught me a valuable lesson: they taught me about unconditional friendship and support and how to contribute to a huge organization filled with conflicting personalities.

But, most importantly, they helped me learn more about myself. My involvement in my house—from pledge to vice president to pledge educator—was just as enlightening as any other experience this campus has to offer. But it's a shame to see so many students and faculty members condemn the Greek system simply because they subscribe to stereotypical beliefs and refuse to recognize our value to the campus community.

Frankly, it's disappointing to think that such narrow-mindedness exists at a University that those same people believe to be a pillar in the intellectual world. The Greeks never claim to be infallible; all we ask is that our critics open their minds to see our positive effect through the University.

They might learn something if they did, because I learned more from my Greek involvement than any textbook could hope to teach me.

I've seen the good, the bad and the ugly sides of so many things here because of my pursuits, but when it comes down to it, I think I wouldn't be ready to walk away from here if it hadn't been for a select group of people. I have to thank Jeff Sharpe '01, Erik Arena '01, Carr Kratoch '02, Greg Misko '02, Mark Langer '02, Pete Van Emburgh '02, Heather Napolitano '01, Matt Albert '02, Jim Lee, Charlie Pollock '70, Gary Sojka, Richard Chapman, John Richard '75, and Clyne Griffith for their momentous contributions to my life. I know I wouldn't be the same person without their guidance, encouragement, and, above all, their friendship.

I know I probably missed out on a lot, but I also had opportunities to do more than most people here. Maybe my college career wasn't perfect, but I don't regret one minute of it.

I'm glad I never returned to my freshman ways. I'm glad I can look back without reservation and know that my experiences helped me grow.

Four years ago I was so eager to take on a new challenge. I was ready for college then. I'm ready to move on again, but only because of what I've learned here.

Looking back, I think that one of the greatest aspects of my life at Bucknell has been the variety of experiences that I have accumulated and the person that those experiences have subsequently allowed me to become.

While we may complain about the lack of options that exist in the area, the one positive result is the strong sense of community that Bucknell exudes among the students.

Overall, I suppose that I am reaching the point where I am ready to move on. Yes, it will be difficult moving beyond an extremely comfortable life in "The Bubble."

However, I feel as though I'm finally ready to meet whatever challenges lie ahead, as I have survived four years at Bucknell and am certainly a better person for it.

Friends here that will undoubtedly be my friends for life.

While we may complain about the lack of options that exist in the area, the one positive result is the strong sense of community that Bucknell exudes among the students.

Overall, I suppose that I am reaching the point where I am ready to move on. Yes, it will be difficult moving beyond an extremely comfortable life in "The Bubble."

However, I feel as though I'm finally ready to meet whatever challenges lie ahead, as I have survived four years at Bucknell and am certainly a better person for it.

Friends here that will undoubtedly be my friends for life.

While we may complain about the lack of options that exist in the area, the one positive result is the strong sense of community that Bucknell exudes among the students.

Overall, I suppose that I am reaching the point where I am ready to move on. Yes, it will be difficult moving beyond an extremely comfortable life in "The Bubble."

However, I feel as though I'm finally ready to meet whatever challenges lie ahead, as I have survived four years at Bucknell and am certainly a better person for it.

It took me two full days to make "the" call. It was a simple process, really: pick up the phone, dial the number, accept the job.

Steps one and two were manageable, but it was the third step that I had some trouble with.

Of course, I should have been eager to make the call and finally put the painstaking process of finding a job behind me.

However, I found myself a bit overwhelmed by the idea bit, by accepting, I was committing myself to a new life outside "The Bubble."

Scared to leave? I suppose that, in a sense, I am. Instead of spending five hours a day in class I'll spend at least ten sitting in an office. Instead of making what I consider to be a long walk from Sixth Street up to the library, I'll be trying to navigate across New York City.

My family thinks I'm crazy. They tell me to look at the perks. I'll be moving from one of the quietest towns in America to one of the most populous cities in the world. I'll be able to spend my weekends going to museums or shopping in the city, instead of watching marathons of movies that I've already seen countless times.

I'll be able to have lunch options other than the Bison or Larson. Of course, I'll also have a more diverse set of choices than the Bull Run Inn in terms of nightlife.

But while all of that may be true, I have to admit that I will simply miss Bucknell.

It would be accurate to say that I'll be sad when I leave campus next month. I'm finding myself in disbelief about the fact that my time here really is over, and I suppose that the rapidly approaching graduation day has caused me to do more thinking than usual about my time here.

Looking back, I think that one of the greatest aspects of my life at Bucknell has been the variety of experiences that I have accumulated and the person that those experiences have subsequently allowed me to become.

While we may complain about the lack of options that exist in the area, the one positive result is the strong sense of community that Bucknell exudes among the students.

Overall, I suppose that I am reaching the point where I am ready to move on. Yes, it will be difficult moving beyond an extremely comfortable life in "The Bubble."

However, I feel as though I'm finally ready to meet whatever challenges lie ahead, as I have survived four years at Bucknell and am certainly a better person for it.

Friends here that will undoubtedly be my friends for life.

While we may complain about the lack of options that exist in the area, the one positive result is the strong sense of community that Bucknell exudes among the students.

Overall, I suppose that I am reaching the point where I am ready to move on. Yes, it will be difficult moving beyond an extremely comfortable life in "The Bubble."

However, I feel as though I'm finally ready to meet whatever challenges lie ahead, as I have survived four years at Bucknell and am certainly a better person for it.

Friends here that will undoubtedly be my friends for life.

While we may complain about the lack of options that exist in the area, the one positive result is the strong sense of community that Bucknell exudes among the students.

Overall, I suppose that I am reaching the point where I am ready to move on. Yes, it will be difficult moving beyond an extremely comfortable life in "The Bubble."

However, I feel as though I'm finally ready to meet whatever challenges lie ahead, as I have survived four years at Bucknell and am certainly a better person for it.

Friends here that will undoubtedly be my friends for life.

While we may complain about the lack of options that exist in the area, the one positive result is the strong sense of community that Bucknell exudes among the students.

Overall, I suppose that I am reaching the point where I am ready to move on. Yes, it will be difficult moving beyond an extremely comfortable life in "The Bubble."

However, I feel as though I'm finally ready to meet whatever challenges lie ahead, as I have survived four years at Bucknell and am certainly a better person for it.

Friends here that will undoubtedly be my friends for life.

While we may complain about the lack of options that exist in the area, the one positive result is the strong sense of community that Bucknell exudes among the students.

Overall, I suppose that I am reaching the point where I am ready to move on. Yes, it will be difficult moving beyond an extremely comfortable life in "The Bubble."

However, I feel as though I'm finally ready to meet whatever challenges lie ahead, as I have survived four years at Bucknell and am certainly a better person for it.

Friends here that will undoubtedly be my friends for life.

While we may complain about the lack of options that exist in the area, the one positive result is the strong sense of community that Bucknell exudes among the students.

Overall, I suppose that I am reaching the point where I am ready to move on. Yes, it will be difficult moving beyond an extremely comfortable life in "The Bubble."

However, I feel as though I'm finally ready to meet whatever challenges lie ahead, as I have survived four years at Bucknell and am certainly a better person for it.

It took me two full days to make "the" call. It was a simple process, really: pick up the phone, dial the number, accept the job.

Steps one and two were manageable, but it was the third step that I had some trouble with.

Of course, I should have been eager to make the call and finally put the painstaking process of finding a job behind me.

However, I found myself a bit overwhelmed by the idea bit, by accepting, I was committing myself to a new life outside "The Bubble."

Scared to leave? I suppose that, in a sense, I am. Instead of spending five hours a day in class I'll spend at least ten sitting in an office. Instead of making what I consider to be a long walk from Sixth Street up to the library, I'll be trying to navigate across New York City.

My family thinks I'm crazy. They tell me to look at the perks. I'll be moving from one of the quietest towns in America to one of the most populous cities in the world. I'll be able to spend my weekends going to museums or shopping in the city, instead of watching marathons of movies that I've already seen countless times.

I'll be able to have lunch options other than the Bison or Larson. Of course, I'll also have a more diverse set of choices than the Bull Run Inn in terms of nightlife.

But while all of that may be true, I have to admit that I will simply miss Bucknell.

It would be accurate to say that I'll be sad when I leave campus next month. I'm finding myself in disbelief about the fact that my time here really is over, and I suppose that the rapidly approaching graduation day has caused me to do more thinking than usual about my time here.

Looking back, I think that one of the greatest aspects of my life at Bucknell has been the variety of experiences that I have accumulated and the person that those experiences have subsequently allowed me to become.

While we may complain about the lack of options that exist in the area, the one positive result is the strong sense of community that Bucknell exudes among the students.

Overall, I suppose that I am reaching the point where I am ready to move on. Yes, it will be difficult moving beyond an extremely comfortable life in "The Bubble."

However, I feel as though I'm finally ready to meet whatever challenges lie ahead, as I have survived four years at Bucknell and am certainly a better person for it.

BUSINESS & POLITICS

World leaders gather for free trade summit; riots ensue

Quebec meeting produces endorsement of 800 million person free trade zone

By MICHAEL GORMAN
Staff Writer

Last weekend, leaders from nearly all of the countries in the western hemisphere agreed to endorse a free trade agreement.

Under the proposed arrangement, the hemisphere would be transformed into a free trade zone, allowing membership to all democratic states. The proposed zone would allow for the free flow of goods through a market of about 800 million people.

The endorsement came at the end of a tumultuous weekend involving an estimated 30,000 protestors. While there were numerous clashes with the police, the majority of the protestors participated in non-violent protests. According to CNN, the weekend ended with 403 protestors in prison, 46 police officers injured, and 45 protestors also hurt.

Many of the protestors worry about the ramifications of an economically integrated western hemisphere.

Pete Zawadzki '01 echoed the concerns of many protestors, saying, "I, personally, am against the concept of free trade. I feel that it, like Communism, is theoretically an excellent idea that sounds wonderful in academic settings and think-tanks. However, when this concept is applied disastrous results tend to form in the real world. I feel that the Free Trade Area of Americas (FTAA) would only further increase the social exploitation, economic consolidation and environmental degradation that has occurred under NAFTA." Similar concerns have been continuously raised regarding the World Trade Organization (WTO) and its practices.

While many are worried about the social and economic impacts of the new agreement, there is also concern regarding the new trend towards non-democratic, super-national organizations and their political impact. Especially in the United States, many dislike the idea of subverting our legal system and legislators to the policies of an organization with unelected leaders and poorly balanced voting rights.

Courtesy of Reuters

Some protests were peacefully conducted, but others required the services of riot police.

While the summit resulted in a unanimous endorsement by the leaders in attendance, there is still a great deal of doubt surrounding the agreement. The President of Venezuela, Hugo Chavez, has declared publicly that it is unreasonable to believe that all of the countries will have agreed upon a single pact and ratified it by 2005.

According to CNN, one of the biggest obstacles is the US Congress. Until it allows Bush the authority to negotiate and compromise, other nations are unlikely to make any concessions of their own. Bush promised to press Congress to give him authority to negotiate.

He told reporters that the FTAA was a "logical extension" of NAFTA, and that "[NAFTA] is a positive example for the doubters to look at, for the skeptics to see that wealth can be spread throughout our hemisphere."

Aside from the major economic issues being discussed, there was one other reason many nations and leaders were following the summit very closely. While the incident with China may have been Bush's first foreign policy test, the summit was to be his debut on the world stage. It was his first large-scale interaction with numerous world leaders, and the entire world was watching his performance. Many leaders met the President for the first time, and they likely carry their impression of him throughout his term in office.

Although there were no definitive actions taken this weekend—the FTAA is still far from implementation—two important steps were taken. First, with their endorsement of the FTAA, leaders took an important step towards integrating western markets.

Second, Bush took another large step towards complete global legitimacy. With his competent performance at the economic summit, Bush further quelled any doubts regarding his aptitude that remained after his deft handling of the incident with China.

Little has changed in the Middle East

Despite new leaders, more peace talks, another round of violence erupts

By MICHAEL DUDZINSKI
Staff Writer

Although Israeli Prime Minister, Ariel Sharon, was elected primarily on his assurance to bring peace, conflict with the Palestinians continues. Extensive hostility continues between Israelis and Palestinians as Israeli troops attempt to secure territory in the disputed area of the Gaza Strip.

Sharon will not engage in any negotiations until the Palestinians cease bombarding Israeli troops and accept new territorial borders that Sharon designed. Israel would offer consent by giving no more than 42 percent of the West Bank to the Palestinians. According to the Associated Press, this would be slightly more than they already have. The Palestinians, however, refuse to submit to Israeli demands which they consider humiliating and excessive.

As the conflict continued, both countries agreed to meet for four hours on Monday night where diplomats proposed ways to reduce violence. Peace talks did not occur during the meeting. Both sides blamed each other for the escalation of violent behavior. Diplomats agreed to hold another conference today to in order to find satisfactory means to initiate the proposed suggestions that would reduce conflict.

The following day, Israeli tanks pushed forward into the Palestinian-controlled town of Rafah. No deaths or injuries were reported. The offensive proceedings have prompted the United States to issue a firm warning to Israel. Washington continues to mediate conflict in the Mideast from a distance, preferring to not become directly involved. President Bush noted that a main concern is the prevention of hostilities toward the United States from the Israelis and Palestinians.

The United States is inclined to stay involved in Mideast affairs due to its reorganization of Israeli in 1948 by Truman. From the time of the Suez crisis in the 1970s until the end of the Clinton presidency, peace between the Israelis and Palestinians was a primary concern. With the turn of the twenty-first century, peace has become increasingly elusive in spite of U.S. involvement. On Tuesday, Israel confirmed that it would remove its blockade in the Bilibi-cas, West Bank city of Jericho. In the meantime, two Palestinians were killed and an attack on a Jewish settlement occurred. An army spokeswoman stated that Israeli soldiers shot an approaching Palestinian, whom they warned not to cross a border fence. Another was killed by gunfire for throwing stones at Israeli troops.

Advisors to Sharon ascertained that Israeli citizens would not be allowed to enter Palestinian territory unless rebel actions come to an end. Entrance into Jericho has also been forbidden although many Israelis have illicitly entered the city to gamble.

The blockade was originally issued in order to protect Israelis from Palestinian attacks. The Palestinians were in opposition because the line of defense resulted in the termination of economic ties with Israeli citizens. Israeli Foreign Minister, Shimon Peres, has signified acceptance and optimism regarding continued security talks but remains skeptical. He also suggested that Palestinian President, Yasser Arafat, has a good reason for bringing the shooting to an end. Arafat expresses a need to meet with Bush who is ready to invite him to the White House once violence has subsided between the Israelis and Palestinians.

President Bush had already convened with Sharon in Washington prior to the most recent escalation of conflict in the Mideast.

BSG Election Results

Class of 2002

President: Marsha Lewis
Vice President: Sarah Endyke
Secretary/Treasurer: Jessica Adickes
Congress Alternates: 1st-Angela Belbo
2nd-Jessica Salloum

President: Hannah Young
Vice President: Omar Zalattimo
Secretary/Treasurer: Sharif Kotb
Congress Alternates: 1st-Cliff DeMattia
2nd-Jessica Pardus

President: Cisco Sanchez
Vice President: Katie Michaels
Secretary/Treasurer: Maggie Nadar
Congress Alternates: 1st-Kerry O'Donnell
2nd-Jim Ritter

Congress: Meredith Atkinson
Sara Blumenthal
Jessica Briski
Sean Elliot
Maura McEwan
Jakita Price
Katy Timer
Tim Van Houten

Class of 2003

President: Hannah Young
Vice President: Omar Zalattimo
Secretary/Treasurer: Sharif Kotb
Congress Alternates: 1st-Cliff DeMattia
2nd-Jessica Pardus

President: Cisco Sanchez
Vice President: Katie Michaels
Secretary/Treasurer: Maggie Nadar
Congress Alternates: 1st-Kerry O'Donnell
2nd-Jim Ritter

Congress: Meredith Atkinson
Sara Blumenthal
Jessica Briski
Sean Elliot
Maura McEwan
Jakita Price
Katy Timer
Tim Van Houten

Class of 2004

President: Cisco Sanchez
Vice President: Katie Michaels
Secretary/Treasurer: Maggie Nadar
Congress Alternates: 1st-Kerry O'Donnell
2nd-Jim Ritter

Congress: Meredith Atkinson
Sara Blumenthal
Jessica Briski
Sean Elliot
Maura McEwan
Jakita Price
Katy Timer
Tim Van Houten

Class of 2005

President: Hannah Young
Vice President: Omar Zalattimo
Secretary/Treasurer: Sharif Kotb
Congress Alternates: 1st-Cliff DeMattia
2nd-Jessica Pardus

President: Cisco Sanchez
Vice President: Katie Michaels
Secretary/Treasurer: Maggie Nadar
Congress Alternates: 1st-Kerry O'Donnell
2nd-Jim Ritter

Congress: Meredith Atkinson
Sara Blumenthal
Jessica Briski
Sean Elliot
Maura McEwan
Jakita Price
Katy Timer
Tim Van Houten

Class of 2006

President: Hannah Young
Vice President: Omar Zalattimo
Secretary/Treasurer: Sharif Kotb
Congress Alternates: 1st-Cliff DeMattia
2nd-Jessica Pardus

President: Cisco Sanchez
Vice President: Katie Michaels
Secretary/Treasurer: Maggie Nadar
Congress Alternates: 1st-Kerry O'Donnell
2nd-Jim Ritter

Congress: Meredith Atkinson
Sara Blumenthal
Jessica Briski
Sean Elliot
Maura McEwan
Jakita Price
Katy Timer
Tim Van Houten

Class of 2007

President: Hannah Young
Vice President: Omar Zalattimo
Secretary/Treasurer: Sharif Kotb
Congress Alternates: 1st-Cliff DeMattia
2nd-Jessica Pardus

President: Cisco Sanchez
Vice President: Katie Michaels
Secretary/Treasurer: Maggie Nadar
Congress Alternates: 1st-Kerry O'Donnell
2nd-Jim Ritter

Congress: Meredith Atkinson
Sara Blumenthal
Jessica Briski
Sean Elliot
Maura McEwan
Jakita Price
Katy Timer
Tim Van Houten

Class of 2008

President: Hannah Young
Vice President: Omar Zalattimo
Secretary/Treasurer: Sharif Kotb
Congress Alternates: 1st-Cliff DeMattia
2nd-Jessica Pardus

President: Cisco Sanchez
Vice President: Katie Michaels
Secretary/Treasurer: Maggie Nadar
Congress Alternates: 1st-Kerry O'Donnell
2nd-Jim Ritter

Congress: Meredith Atkinson
Sara Blumenthal
Jessica Briski
Sean Elliot
Maura McEwan
Jakita Price
Katy Timer
Tim Van Houten

Class of 2009

President: Hannah Young
Vice President: Omar Zalattimo
Secretary/Treasurer: Sharif Kotb
Congress Alternates: 1st-Cliff DeMattia
2nd-Jessica Pardus

President: Cisco Sanchez
Vice President: Katie Michaels
Secretary/Treasurer: Maggie Nadar
Congress Alternates: 1st-Kerry O'Donnell
2nd-Jim Ritter

Congress: Meredith Atkinson
Sara Blumenthal
Jessica Briski
Sean Elliot
Maura McEwan
Jakita Price
Katy Timer
Tim Van Houten

Class of 2010

President: Hannah Young
Vice President: Omar Zalattimo
Secretary/Treasurer: Sharif Kotb
Congress Alternates: 1st-Cliff DeMattia
2nd-Jessica Pardus

President: Cisco Sanchez
Vice President: Katie Michaels
Secretary/Treasurer: Maggie Nadar
Congress Alternates: 1st-Kerry O'Donnell
2nd-Jim Ritter

Congress: Meredith Atkinson
Sara Blumenthal
Jessica Briski
Sean Elliot
Maura McEwan
Jakita Price
Katy Timer
Tim Van Houten

Class of 2011

President: Hannah Young
Vice President: Omar Zalattimo
Secretary/Treasurer: Sharif Kotb
Congress Alternates: 1st-Cliff DeMattia
2nd-Jessica Pardus

President: Cisco Sanchez
Vice President: Katie Michaels
Secretary/Treasurer: Maggie Nadar
Congress Alternates: 1st-Kerry O'Donnell
2nd-Jim Ritter

Congress: Meredith Atkinson
Sara Blumenthal
Jessica Briski
Sean Elliot
Maura McEwan
Jakita Price
Katy Timer
Tim Van Houten

Class of 2012

President: Hannah Young
Vice President: Omar Zalattimo
Secretary/Treasurer: Sharif Kotb
Congress Alternates: 1st-Cliff DeMattia
2nd-Jessica Pardus

President: Cisco Sanchez
Vice President: Katie Michaels
Secretary/Treasurer: Maggie Nadar
Congress Alternates: 1st-Kerry O'Donnell
2nd-Jim Ritter

Congress: Meredith Atkinson
Sara Blumenthal
Jessica Briski
Sean Elliot
Maura McEwan
Jakita Price
Katy Timer
Tim Van Houten

Class of 2013

President: Hannah Young
Vice President: Omar Zalattimo
Secretary/Treasurer: Sharif Kotb
Congress Alternates: 1st-Cliff DeMattia
2nd-Jessica Pardus

President: Cisco Sanchez
Vice President: Katie Michaels
Secretary/Treasurer: Maggie Nadar
Congress Alternates: 1st-Kerry O'Donnell
2nd-Jim Ritter

Congress: Meredith Atkinson
Sara Blumenthal
Jessica Briski
Sean Elliot
Maura McEwan
Jakita Price
Katy Timer
Tim Van Houten

Class of 2014

President: Hannah Young
Vice President: Omar Zalattimo
Secretary/Treasurer: Sharif Kotb
Congress Alternates: 1st-Cliff DeMattia
2nd-Jessica Pardus

President: Cisco Sanchez
Vice President: Katie Michaels
Secretary/Treasurer: Maggie Nadar
Congress Alternates: 1st-Kerry O'Donnell
2nd-Jim Ritter

Congress: Meredith Atkinson
Sara Blumenthal
Jessica Briski
Sean Elliot
Maura McEwan
Jakita Price
Katy Timer
Tim Van Houten

Class of 2015

President: Hannah Young
Vice President: Omar Zalattimo
Secretary/Treasurer: Sharif Kotb
Congress Alternates: 1st-Cliff DeMattia
2nd-Jessica Pardus

President: Cisco Sanchez
Vice President: Katie Michaels
Secretary/Treasurer: Maggie Nadar
Congress Alternates: 1st-Kerry O'Donnell
2nd-Jim Ritter

Congress: Meredith Atkinson
Sara Blumenthal
Jessica Briski
Sean Elliot
Maura McEwan
Jakita Price
Katy Timer
Tim Van Houten

Class of 2016

President: Hannah Young
Vice President: Omar Zalattimo
Secretary/Treasurer: Sharif Kotb
Congress Alternates: 1st-Cliff DeMattia
2nd-Jessica Pardus

President: Cisco Sanchez
Vice President: Katie Michaels
Secretary/Treasurer: Maggie Nadar
Congress Alternates: 1st-Kerry O'Donnell
2nd-Jim Ritter

Congress: Meredith Atkinson
Sara Blumenthal
Jessica Briski
Sean Elliot
Maura McEwan
Jakita Price
Katy Timer
Tim Van Houten

Class of 2017

President: Hannah Young
Vice President: Omar Zalattimo
Secretary/Treasurer: Sharif Kotb
Congress Alternates: 1st-Cliff DeMattia
2nd-Jessica Pardus

President: Cisco Sanchez
Vice President: Katie Michaels
Secretary/Treasurer: Maggie Nadar
Congress Alternates: 1st-Kerry O'Donnell
2nd-Jim Ritter

Congress: Meredith Atkinson
Sara Blumenthal
Jessica Briski
Sean Elliot
Maura McEwan
Jakita Price
Katy Timer
Tim Van Houten

Class of 2018

President: Hannah Young
Vice President: Omar Zalattimo
Secretary/Treasurer: Sharif Kotb
Congress Alternates: 1st-Cliff DeMattia
2nd-Jessica Pardus

President: Cisco Sanchez
Vice President: Katie Michaels
Secretary/Treasurer: Maggie Nadar
Congress Alternates: 1st-Kerry O'Donnell
2nd-Jim Ritter

Congress: Meredith Atkinson
Sara Blumenthal
Jessica Briski
Sean Elliot
Maura McEwan
Jakita Price
Katy Timer
Tim Van Houten

Class of 2019

President: Hannah Young
Vice President: Omar Zalattimo
Secretary/Treasurer: Sharif Kotb
Congress Alternates: 1st-Cliff DeMattia
2nd-Jessica Pardus

President: Cisco Sanchez
Vice President: Katie Michaels
Secretary/Treasurer: Maggie Nadar
Congress Alternates: 1st-Kerry O'Donnell
2nd-Jim Ritter

Congress: Meredith Atkinson
Sara Blumenthal
Jessica Briski
Sean Elliot
Maura McEwan
Jakita Price
Katy Timer
Tim Van Houten

Class of 2020

President: Hannah Young
Vice President: Omar Zalattimo
Secretary/Treasurer: Sharif Kotb
Congress Alternates: 1st-Cliff DeMattia
2nd-Jessica Pardus

President: Cisco Sanchez
Vice President: Katie Michaels
Secretary/Treasurer: Maggie Nadar
Congress Alternates: 1st-Kerry O'Donnell
2nd-Jim Ritter

Congress: Meredith Atkinson
Sara Blumenthal
Jessica Briski
Sean Elliot
Maura McEwan
Jakita Price
Katy Timer
Tim Van Houten

Class of 2021

President: Hannah Young
Vice President: Omar Zalattimo
Secretary/Treasurer: Sharif Kotb
Congress Alternates: 1st-Cliff DeMattia
2nd-Jessica Pardus

President: Cisco Sanchez
Vice President: Katie Michaels
Secretary/Treasurer: Maggie Nadar
Congress Alternates: 1st-Kerry O'Donnell
2nd-Jim Ritter

Congress: Meredith Atkinson
Sara Blumenthal
Jessica Briski
Sean Elliot
Maura McEwan
Jakita Price
Katy Timer
Tim Van Houten

Class of 2022

President: Hannah Young
Vice President: Omar Zalattimo
Secretary/Treasurer: Sharif Kotb
Congress Alternates: 1st-Cliff DeMattia
2nd-Jessica Pardus

President: Cisco Sanchez
Vice President: Katie Michaels
Secretary/Treasurer: Maggie Nadar
Congress Alternates: 1st-Kerry O'Donnell
2nd-Jim Ritter

Congress: Meredith Atkinson
Sara Blumenthal
Jessica Briski
Sean Elliot
Maura McEwan
Jakita Price
Katy Timer
Tim Van Houten

Class of 2023

President: Hannah Young
Vice President: Omar Zalattimo
Secretary/Treasurer: Sharif Kotb
Congress Alternates: 1st-Cliff DeMattia
2nd-Jessica Pardus

President: Cisco Sanchez
Vice President: Katie Michaels
Secretary/Treasurer: Maggie Nadar
Congress Alternates: 1st-Kerry O'Donnell
2nd-Jim Ritter

Congress: Meredith Atkinson
Sara Blumenthal
Jessica Briski
Sean Elliot
Maura McEwan
Jakita Price
Katy Timer
Tim Van Houten

Class of 2024

President: Hannah Young
Vice President: Omar Zalattimo
Secretary/Treasurer: Sharif Kotb
Congress Alternates: 1st-Cliff DeMattia
2nd-Jessica Pardus

President: Cisco Sanchez
Vice President: Katie Michaels
Secretary/Treasurer: Maggie Nadar
Congress Alternates: 1st-Kerry O'Donnell
2nd-Jim Ritter

Congress: Meredith Atkinson
Sara Blumenthal
Jessica Briski
Sean Elliot
Maura McEwan
Jakita Price
Katy Timer
Tim Van Houten

Class of 2025

President: Hannah Young
Vice President: Omar Zalattimo
Secretary/Treasurer: Sharif Kotb
Congress Alternates: 1st-Cliff DeMattia
2nd-Jessica Pardus

President: Cisco Sanchez
Vice President: Katie Michaels
Secretary/Treasurer: Maggie Nadar
Congress Alternates: 1st-Kerry O'Donnell
2nd-Jim Ritter

Congress: Meredith Atkinson
Sara Blumenthal
Jessica Briski
Sean Elliot
Maura McEwan
Jakita Price
Katy Timer
Tim Van Houten

Class of 2026

President: Hannah Young
Vice President: Omar Zalattimo
Secretary/Treasurer: Sharif Kotb
Congress Alternates: 1st-Cliff DeMattia
2nd-Jessica Pardus

President: Cisco Sanchez
Vice President: Katie Michaels
Secretary/Treasurer: Maggie Nadar
Congress Alternates: 1st-Kerry O'Donnell
2nd-Jim Ritter

Congress: Meredith Atkinson
Sara Blumenthal
Jessica Briski
Sean Elliot
Maura McEwan
Jakita Price
Katy Timer
Tim Van Houten

Class of 2027

President: Hannah Young
Vice President: Omar Zalattimo
Secretary/Treasurer: Sharif Kotb
Congress Alternates: 1st-Cliff DeMattia
2nd-Jessica Pardus

President: Cisco Sanchez
Vice President: Katie Michaels
Secretary/Treasurer: Maggie Nadar
Congress Alternates: 1st-Kerry O'Donnell
2nd-Jim Ritter

Congress: Meredith Atkinson
Sara Blumenthal
Jessica Briski
Sean Elliot
Maura McEwan
Jakita Price
Katy Timer
Tim Van Houten

Class of 2028

President: Hannah Young
Vice President: Omar Zalattimo
Secretary/Treasurer: Sharif Kotb
Congress Alternates: 1st-Cliff DeMattia
2nd-Jessica Pardus

President: Cisco Sanchez
Vice President: Katie Michaels
Secretary/Treasurer: Maggie Nadar
Congress Alternates: 1st-Kerry O'Donnell
2nd-Jim Ritter

Congress: Meredith Atkinson
Sara Blumenthal
Jessica Briski
Sean Elliot
Maura McEwan
Jakita Price
Katy Timer
Tim Van Houten

Class of 2029

President: Hannah Young
Vice President: Omar Zalattimo
Secretary/Treasurer: Sharif Kotb
Congress Alternates: 1st-Cliff DeMattia
2nd-Jessica Pardus

President: Cisco Sanchez
Vice President: Katie Michaels
Secretary/Treasurer: Maggie Nadar
Congress Alternates: 1st-Kerry O'Donnell
2nd-Jim Ritter

Congress: Meredith Atkinson
Sara Blumenthal
Jessica Briski
Sean Elliot
Maura McEwan
Jakita Price
Katy Timer
Tim Van Houten

Class of 2030

Sports figures

Male Athlete of the Year: Kevin Eiben '01

By ANDREW BEVAN
Senior Writer

Bo Jackson, Deion Sanders, and Kevin Eiben: What do these three individuals have in common? Are they all multi-million dollar professional athletes? No. Are they all students at Bucknell? No. Are they all double sport superstars? Yes.

Eiben has emerged as a stellar performer in both football and baseball over his four-year career at Bucknell, as well as a top achiever in the classroom. Eiben set five Patriot League and Bucknell football records and led the team in three defensive categories as a starting free safety this past season. He also became the 13th Bison football player in history and first since 1997 to be named an All-American. In December he was named an AP Division I-AA All-American. For his efforts in both football and baseball, Eiben has been selected as The Bucknellian's Male Athlete of the Year.

Eiben has always been successful at whatever he tries. Fellow baseball teammate Gregg Farmery '02 said, "He basically wins at everything he does. Whether it's checkers or bowling, he is going to beat you."

"He is one of our best competitors and that is what I think makes him such an outstanding football player," Baseball Head Coach Gene Depew said.

In his senior season Eiben had, by far, his best season on the gridiron. He led the League and team with eight interceptions and set a single-season record of 150 return yards on his interceptions. Eiben tied a school record when he picked off four passes in the Orange and Blue's contest against Duquesne this past season. He was also the Patriot League's top punt returner, averaging 12.2 yards per return and he set single-season and career marks with 366 yards and 626 yards respectively. Eiben set another League single-season mark when he returned seven punts for 126 yards against Towson this past season and set a school record with 51 punt returns over his four-year career.

In addition to being named an All-American, Eiben was named the American Football Coaches Association All-American and was an All-Patriot League first team selection. He was also voted a member of the ECAC All Star's first team and selected as the Patriot League Scholar Athlete as well being voted MVP of the football squad by his fellow teammates.

"Kevin immediately made a contribution. He played right away and took over the free safety position," Head football coach Tom Gadd said.

Eiben made 12 tackles during his rookie year, as well as recovering one fumble and grabbing an interception. He secured a starting role the following season as strong safety and would be one of only two sophomores to start on defense. That year, he finished first on the team with 91 tackles, including 59 solo stops. He had nine or more tackles in five games and recovered one fumble and had one interception.

Eiben switched to free safety his junior year and finished third on the team with 94 tackles and was the recipient of the Clare Hinkle award as the team's outstanding linebacker or defensive back. He led the Bison with three interceptions and seven pass breakups and was ranked 20th in the nation in punt returns, averaging 12.4 yards per return.

Kevin Eiben '01 bat .320 and had 26 RBIs in his final season.

"He is big and physical and his ability to tackle in the middle of the field and knock balls loose is very important and often overlooked statistically. He was someone everyone looked up to and they knew he would erase the mistakes on the field. Losing his leadership will be as hard to replace as his physical tools," Gadd said.

"Kevin is a real hard-nosed, tough player, never concerned with the glitz and glamour of the sport. Despite his myriad of accolades and accomplishments, his personality has always been down to earth. He's a leader by example; always came out and did his job, day in and day out, and his actions spoke louder than words," defensive back Alex Blacksmith '01 said.

"He had the ability to change the game and did things on the field this season no one has ever done here at this university. He was awarded first team All-American, and as his teammate I am very proud of him," wide receiver George Cowan '02 said.

While Eiben confesses that football is his first love, baseball is not that far behind. After playing spring football his freshman year, Eiben went out for the baseball squad the following spring.

Similar to his start in the football program, Eiben made an impact right away, winning a starting outfield position his sophomore year and proceeded to have what is most likely his best baseball season for the Bison. He hit .378 on the year, good for second on the team and fifth in the Patriot League. He scored 54 runs and cracked 12 doubles, one triple, one home run, and had 19 RBIs. His 24 stolen bases that year led the team and the conference and he started all but one of Bucknell's games. He was named an All-Patriot League second team outfielder.

Even after an injury early in his junior year season, he returned to bat .320 and hit three home runs and had 26 RBIs.

"When we need a runner on base or an RBI, I'm glad Kevin is at bat because I know he will try to succeed in that situation," Depew said.

Eiben said he would remember the team most. "The camaraderie and the friendships is something I will never forget."

His teammates feel the same. "It has been a great experience to play three years of baseball with Kevin. He is one of the best athletes I have played with in many years of involvement in organized sports. You don't come across too many people with the natural ability of a Kevin Eiben. It has been a joy to have Kevin as a teammate and a friend," third baseman Jeff Peck '01 said.

"Kevin really is an amazing athlete. He has an unlimited amount of natural ability, and he works extremely hard to develop his ability in both football and baseball. I really don't think there's a more deserving male athlete at Bucknell," pitcher Sean Magee '02 said.

Despite the huge demands of playing two collegiate sports, Eiben has done extremely well in the classroom. "It is all about time management and getting your work done when you need to," Eiben said. The business management major is a deans' list member.

As far as his future plans, Eiben is waiting to see how things pan out in the Canadian Football League draft this coming Friday. If he is not selected, he plans to attend graduate school to attain a master's degree in sports management.

"These four years have been the best time of my life, academically and athletically and it something I will look back on when I am older," Eiben said.

Eiben is not only an exceptional athlete, but an extraordinary person. It is for this that not only will his name be remembered in the record books but also by everyone who had the pleasure of associating themselves with him.

Coaches of the Year:

Men's Lacrosse Coach Sid Jamieson

By BRIAN KLOTZ
Staff Writer

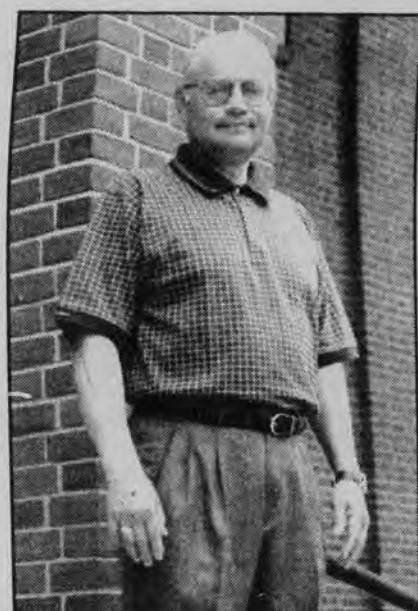

There is a display case that sits in the shadows of Davis Gym. Housed within its glass doors is the history of the Bucknell lacrosse program: objects such as plaques and battered lacrosse helmets adorn the shelves. But what will jump out first to the casual observer takes the form of a black mold of Bison with the inscription: "200 Lacrosse Victories - Sid Jamieson."

Jamieson, the Bucknellian's pick for Men's Coach of the Year, is the embodiment of Bucknell's lacrosse history. Ever since he came to Bucknell to visit a friend one weekend in 1964 during his senior year in college and left that weekend with the head coaching position of the club lacrosse team, Jamieson has been firmly rooted in Lewisburg. Seeing the transition from a club team to lacrosse as a varsity sport, coaching the undefeated 1996 team that was passed over for a berth in the NCAA tournament and reaching the 200 win mark in the 2000 season while becoming only the 13th Division I coach ever to do so are only some of Jamieson's experiences during his 34-season tenure at the helm. However, this year adds something new.

With his infamous defense-first approach to the game of lacrosse, Jamieson has led the Bison lacrosse team to its first ever NCAA tournament appearance this season. Amidst much doubt and speculation early on about Bucknell's strength as a team, "quiet elevation" was a term coined of the season's progression. "It's fun to sneak up on people," Jamieson said. "But as soon as we beat UNC, the sneaking was over, and that was only our first game!"

After graduating 14 seniors last year, 14 letter winners returned this season. But Jamieson was not worried because of the underclassmen's experience last year. "Most of the freshman last year were not given the chance because there were seniors who could get it done," said Assistant Coach Frank Fedorjaka. "Last year we had the number two defense in division one, and this year's players played against them all last year. They grew up fast."

With that in mind, Jamieson set up the most aggressive schedule this season that Bucknell had ever seen with such teams including Maryland, Georgetown and North Carolina. That doesn't include games against teams like Notre Dame, Johns Hopkins and Towson in the fall.

Jamieson has made BU Lacrosse program one of best in nation.

"The key ingredient was to challenge ourselves as far as what we wanted to do," Jamieson said. "The fall gave us tremendous confidence by playing those types of programs. It led us to a certain sense of where we are."

Jamieson has a certain presence on the practice field that keeps the players on their toes. "He's relentless as far as staying on the players," Fedorjaka said. "He's always on top of them, never lets them let their guard down, drop a pass, or make mental errors. Then in the game our team does not make too many mistakes."

"He's a real easy coach to get along with because he has personal relations with the players," Michael Florio '01 said. "He can get on you sometimes, but he's on your side; he really believes in you."

Coach Jamieson always impresses the importance of the game of lacrosse to his players. Stemming from his Native American heritage, Jamieson believes that the game of lacrosse was given to the people by the creator as a way for them to express themselves. "It means preparation in all facets of ones being: mental, physical, and spiritual," said Jamieson. "I tell my players that it is an expression of who you are, shows the level of commitment you have, and that it is an honor for those who can play this game at a very high level."

With a current career record of 212-207, Jamieson has seen just about all there is to see in the game, providing unmatched experience to pass on to his players. "He has been coaching for 34 years in one place and in one system and he really knows the game," Michael Cheng '01 said. "I personally have a good relationship with Coach Jamieson because we understand each other's strengths and weaknesses, but he definitely coaches to the team's strengths."

Jamieson conveyed a similar belief of why his coaching brings success and what he changed this season. "I think I really clearly understand the game, because I can look at it and analyze it fairly quickly," Jamieson said. "I think I have learned through years in a certain sense to fit schemes into the types of players you have rather than to try to fit players into your schemes, and in that sense, what we do today is different than what we did last year. But probably the biggest thing is continuity in the program and alumni, parents and players realizing that the accountability is all with me."

Jamieson's heavy stress on academics within his team is important to note. All of his players will sign a contract with him at the beginning of the season that in short states that the player will attend all of his classes and be the best student he can be, and if that is not happening the player may not be able to continue doing the sport.

"I don't worry about graduation rates or any academic troubles at all," Jamieson said. "The players are very good students, and they are here because they have the ability to do the work."

This year, Bucknell enters the NCAA tournament with the fifth best defense in the country, allowing an average of only 7.42 goals per game, and a 12th ranked mark down defense by only allowing scores 33% of the time. "It's a function of what my philosophy is," said Jamieson. "You can get on you sometimes, but he's on your side; he really believes in you."

With a strong sophomore class and senior leader, the Bison also have a strong offense, bringing the second of the ingredients of a national caliber team. With Cheng ranked 18th in the nation in assists, and Dennis Geraphy '03 seventh best in the nation in goals per game average, Bucknell packs an offensive punch.

Coach Fedorjaka most admires Jamieson for his professionalism and his work ethic. "He cuts no corners and would never ask you to do something that he wouldn't do," Fedorjaka said. "He's a great role model, and his passion for lacrosse and coaching is unmatched."

By BROOKE REA
Sports Editor

If you ask Head Women's Soccer Coach Chrissy Findlay what she loves about her sport, she'll answer, "Have you got an hour?" Findlay's passion for soccer is what has given her the edge she needed to become one of the best coaches at Bucknell and, with her knowledge and leadership, she has built the best women's soccer program that the University has ever seen.

The 2000 season marked Findlay's fourth year as head coach at Bucknell, and the team's third-place finish at the Patriot League tournament was its most successful campaign under her leadership. At the end of the season Findlay was honored by the Patriot League as Coach of the Year.

"One of Chrissy's strengths is knowing her own as well as our weaknesses," co-captain Anna Hall '02 said. "As a result, she has improved so much as a coach over the past three seasons, and she's gotten to the point where she is truly deserving of such an honor."

Findlay's history with soccer goes way back and is highlighted by the time she spent at Division II powerhouse Wheeling Jesuit College in W.Va. During her time there, Findlay added to her wealth of knowledge and discovered that soccer was one of the most important things in her life.

"In college I realized that soccer meant so much to me because it really balanced out my life," Findlay said. "I had a wonderful team that only made me love soccer more, and the success I had in college made me feel like everything I had worked for my whole life was coming together. That's why I coach now so that I can give back the college experience that I had."

When Findlay has to say what the best thing about coaching at Bucknell is, it comes down to the players. "I am very fortunate to have the most well-rounded team I have ever been part of as a player or as a coach," Findlay said. "These girls are competitive, they're fun, they work hard and they know what it takes to be the best student-athlete they can. But most of all, they give everything. Win or lose, they give me everything and that means the world to me."

Findlay believes that brightest years lay ahead for this team, a young squad consisting of eight freshmen, nine sophomores, six juniors and only one senior, and she has worked hard to build a strong foundation.

"Chrissy puts so much effort into the team," co-captain Ali Chandler '02 said. "She pushes us to do well and succeed, not only as a team but as individuals. Chrissy has always had faith in me on the field."

"We are succeeding now because of the depth and strength we have built over the last few years," Findlay said.

Findlay has made an impression with her players and the league.

she's not planning a community soccer clinic, she's working on game tactics or schedules and recruiting for the next year. Chrissy has a vision for the future of the program, and she is steadily developing the program, and each of us, into the best we can be," Hall said.

Aside from soccer, Findlay somehow finds time for her husband Jim, who coaches soccer at Susquehanna University, and their daughter Caitlyn. Findlay admits that finds lucky to be a part of such a strong Bucknell tradition.

"I work alongside some excellent coaches, and I love to learn by listening to their feedback," Findlay said. "I have really absorbed a lot this year by watching other coaches and going beyond soccer to look at sports in general. I am lucky to be surrounded by such great people and amazing coaches."

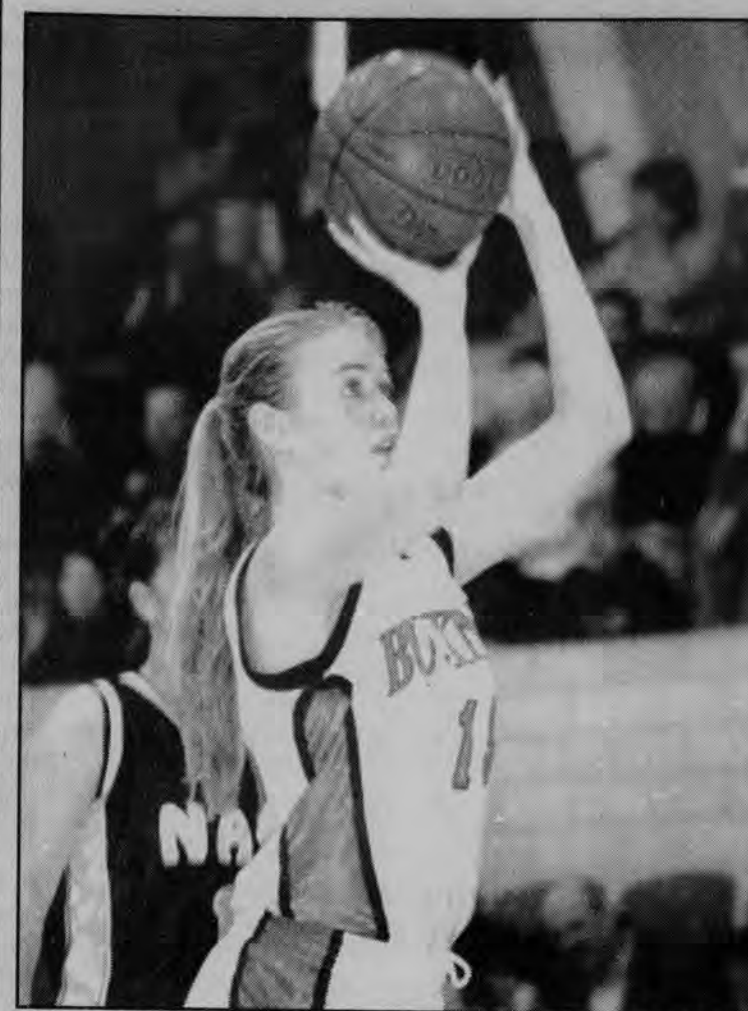

When Findlay has to say what the best thing about coaching at Bucknell is, it comes down to the players. "I am very fortunate to have the most well-rounded team I have ever been part of as a player or as a coach," Findlay said. "These girls are competitive, they're fun, they work hard and they know what it takes to be the best student-athlete they can. But most of all, they give everything. Win or lose, they give me everything and that means the world to me."

Findlay believes that brightest years lay ahead for this team, a young squad consisting of eight freshmen, nine sophomores, six juniors and only one senior, and she has worked hard to build a strong foundation.

"Chrissy puts so much effort into the team," co-captain Ali Chandler '02 said. "She pushes us to do well and succeed, not only as a team but as individuals. Chrissy has always had faith in me on the field."

"We are succeeding now because of the depth and strength we have built over the last few years," Findlay said.

Female Rookie: Desire Almind

Desire Almind '04 was named Patriot League Rookie of the Year.

By ANDREW BURR
Sports Editor

Strictly by the numbers, you might think she's at the top of her game. 15.1 points every time you step on the court, after all, will usually draw some attention from opposing coaches. Now add fifth in the Patriot League in free-throw percentage and twelfth in the League in offensive boards and shooting percentage, and the picture becomes clearer. Can't you just see the headline splashed across the sports section: Almind leads team to first 20-win season in Bucknell history.

Numbers, as they say, are deceiving. The truth about Desire Almind is that she's not at the top of her game—nowhere even close, if you ask Head Coach Kathy Fedorjaka. "The big thing I say to her is not to get caught up in freshman success," Fedorjaka said.

That's right, she said freshman success. This time last year Almind was preparing to graduate from North Warren Regional High School in Blairstown, N.J. Wrapping up an illustrious, 2,281-point high school basketball career, there were still months before she would garner a white and orange jersey and call Davis Gymnasium home.

"I had a real good first impression of Bucknell," Almind said. "It offers a great education and the basketball team is just awesome."

Her enthusiasm towards the team has certainly showed, as she has put up numbers in her first Division I season that leave most third and fourth year players salivating.

"She was definitely a highly touted recruit," Fedorjaka said. "Some kids take a year to adjust, but Desire's athleticism allowed her to fit right in."

"Fitting right in" may even have been an understatement, as Almind proved in her very first game that she was more than ready for whatever tasks laid ahead.

In the season opener against American, Almind combined with Molly Creamer '03 for the final 11 points as the Bison rallied from a late tie to win the game. Finishing with 21 points off the bench against the Eagles, Almind started the next contest against Hampton and scored 25 points. She scored in double figures in her next four games as well, tallying 120 total points through the first six games of her collegiate career.

"I was scared to death in the first game—it's hard going from playing with people you know to playing with a group of entirely new people," Almind said. "The first couple weeks I was down, but my teammates made it so much easier to adjust. They helped me keep my head up."

Fedorjaka also credits the players around Almind for making the adjustment a comfortable process. And of course, it never hurts to be surrounded by players like Creamer, selected the 2000-2001 Patriot League Player of the Year, and Vicki Quimby '02, a three-time All Patriot League selection.

"Right from the beginning, we knew she was a great player," Creamer said. "She's a pure shooter, she doesn't miss much, and her confidence is growing. Coach says she hasn't even tapped into her full potential yet, which is kind of scary."

Scary indeed for the rest of the League, but a true asset for the Bison. In just her first season, Almind is already part of basketball history, helping the team to the previously uncharted 20-win plateau. Recognition of her accomplishments serves as direct testimony to just how important to the team she has been. Almind was named Patriot League Rookie of the Week six times, named to the 2000-2001 All Patriot 2nd Team and All Patriot Rookie Team, but more significantly, earned the Patriot League Rookie of the Year.

"I think one thing in terms of recruiting," Fedorjaka said, "is pressure on that player to fulfill expectations. I give lots of credit to Desire, she's been an impact-level player and such a big factor this season."

But while critics have been lauding her on court achievements, Almind is content to play second-fiddle to players like Quimby and Creamer, at least while they're still here.

"She's very humble—she loves to deflect attention to other players. She has so much ability to really take over a game, but at the same time she doesn't want to step on anybody else's toes," Fedorjaka said.

Despite early success, Almind has made improvements throughout the season. Fedorjaka remembers in the two preseason scrimmages the team played in, "We couldn't get her to shoot the ball—she had made four points. Then all of a sudden in her first game, she really came out and played like we knew she could."

Almind's contributions to the team showed in many ways, not the least of which were several offensive benchmarks for the Bison. The 2000-2001 squad set school records for points in a season (2,139) and points-per-game (76.4) and led the Patriot League in shooting percentage (45.6 percent). The team also finished 25th in the nation in women's Division I scoring.

An early, first round exit from the Patriot League tournament stunned Bison players and fans alike, putting an unfortunate end to an exciting season. But, according to Almind, "We're all pumped for next season, and the fact that it hurt so bad will help make sure it doesn't happen again."

of the year

Female Athlete: Shannon Walker '02

By CARMEN MAURIELLO
Sports Editor

It'd be easy to justify the selection of volleyball middle hitter Shannon Walker '02 as the Bucknellian's Female Athlete of the Year by her outstanding individual achievements in the 2000 season: Patriot League Offensive Player of the Year, Scholar-Athlete for volleyball, leader in hitting percentage and kills ... the list goes on.

But Walker wouldn't want that. She'd like her season to be defined by her team's success: winning 15 of its last 20 games, capturing the Patriot League crown and advancing to the NCAA Tournament for the second time in three years.

The volleyball team's season hung in the balance at several critical junctures, and Walker helped guide the squad to calmer waters by repeatedly elevating her play and that of her teammates. "When Shannon is out there, it is like she is possessed," co-captain Nicole LaMothe '01 said. "She wants a win, and she makes everyone on the court want it as well."

Walker set the stage for a breakout 2000 season by committing herself to a rigorous off-season training schedule. "Each year she's come back in better shape," Head Coach Cindy Opalski said. "Incrementally she's improved more than any player I've had here at Bucknell."

But the Bison would falter early in the 2000 season and, after three weeks of out-of-conference play, found themselves with a 2-10 mark. The squad rebounded to 5-11, but the true test lay in a road matchup against pre-season favorite Colgate on Oct. 3.

Walker pounded 15 kills on 30 attempts to help lead the Bison to a 3-1 upset of the Red Raiders. She followed that performance with a nearly flawless outing against Army, where she registered 21 kills and a spectacular hitting percentage of .500 as Bucknell pulled out a 3-2 win. The next night Walker smashed Holy Cross with 23 kills, energizing the Bison to a 4-0 League mark and sole possession of first place.

Walker's consistent play in this stretch provided a needed spark for the Bison offense. "While I never say that one person makes a volleyball team, Shannon obviously was a serious key to our offense ... her drive to excel contributed to the offense tremendously," LaMothe said. "If she pounded the ball for a side-out, it motivated the other hitters to do the same."

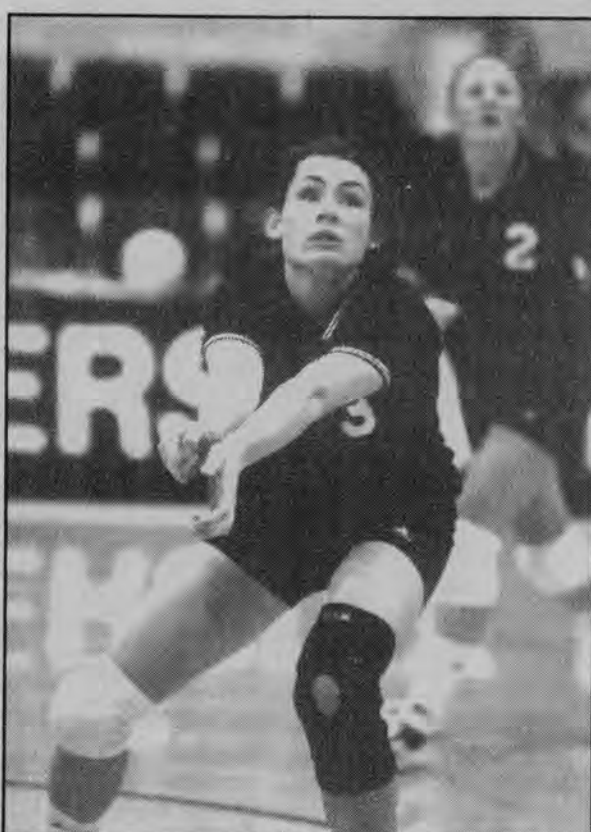

"Whenever we needed to put the ball down, we went to Shannon," outside hitter Brandi Trappaso '04 said. "It really put me into a more comfortable position because she took on all that pressure to help our team."

Walker was named Patriot League Player of the Week for her central role in the three victories; she would earn that honor twice more as the Bison ran up a 10-2 League-best record and earned the right to host the Patriot League Tournament.

But, though the top seed, the Bison faced a major roadblock to the NCAA Tournament in Lehigh, who had handed Bucknell its only two League set-backs. The Bison had the recent 3-0 sweep that they suffered at the hands of the Mountain Hawks fresh on their minds when the teams squared off for a semifinal matchup, but Walker played a key role in maintaining the team's confidence.

"After the (Nov. 5) loss at Lehigh, Shannon's assessment of the match and what we needed to improve on was accurate," Opalski said. "It helped the team realize what it needed to do to win."

"Our biggest obstacle (against Lehigh) was psychological," Walker said.

Shannon Walker was the BU's offensive weapon.

"We had to get over ourselves making mistakes and let our play take over," Walker said. "However, Shannon never wavered. She never talked back, she always backed up myself and the other captain and she made others listen as well. She was such a leader by example."

In a season full of ups and downs, Walker's positive mentality may have been just as important as her physical prowess. "If I was messing up, she was right there to pat me on the back," outside hitter Brandi Trappaso '04 said. "She never got down and was a great inspiration to all of us."

Though not one for individual accolades, Walker is most proud of her selection as Patriot League Scholar-Athlete for volleyball because it recognizes her achievements on and off the court. Walker, a sociology major with a concentration in legal studies, currently holds a 3.5 GPA. She is studying abroad this semester in Dublin, Ireland.

"This award" shows that Bucknell's not just athletes ... you have to do other things as well," Walker said. "It's great to be honored for both (academics and athletics)."

"Shannon's a great role model for our younger players," Opalski said. "She was able to do well athletically and maintain the discipline."

Walker has set the bar even higher next season for herself and for the Bison. "We definitely have a new attitude for next year. We have more knowledge in what has to get done," Walker said.

As a senior, Opalski expects Walker to step into an even greater leadership role in 2001. "In terms of leadership, Shannon needs to continue to step forward and be the person out front and to continue to lead by example," Opalski said.

Male Rookie: goalkeeper Steve Whitaker

By AARON DE ROSA
Sports Editor

Steve Whitaker came on in the sixth game for BU and provided a needed spark.

Six games into the 2000 season, the Bucknell men's soccer team was in dire need of a hero - someone to step up his game and propel the Bison forward from their 1-4 record, in which they were outscored 12-3. After losing their proven starter in goal to graduation last year, and the desire to be a major threat in the Patriot League in 2000, Coach Brendan Nash needed his goalies to step up their level of play. In the sixth game of the season, Coach Nash got his wish, and The Bucknellian found its Men's Rookie of the Year.

Freshman Steve Whitaker, in his first collegiate start, went head to head against the St. Francis Red Flash in a defensive battle. Blocking eight shots, Whitaker ultimately recorded a shutout in two overtimes and 120 minutes of play, leading the team to a tie and initiating a streak of five straight wins that put the Bison back into competition with the other teams in the league.

Whitaker started the year off with spectacular results. In his first five games between the pipes he smothered opposing teams, tallying four shutouts and a save percentage that would make Mariano Rivera blush with embarrassment.

Backed by a stellar defense, including Regional All-American Bill Epley '01, Whitaker earned Patriot League Defensive Player of the Week honors for his first week in action and at one point had reached as high as third in the nation in goals against average.

Whitaker credited his performance to stellar team play. "I don't want anyone to think that I could have achieved anything this year without the people in front of me, and I would not have had success unless the team scored goals and won games," Whitaker said.

With Whitaker starting in the goal position, the Bison's record stood at 8-6-2. Of those six losses, four were decided by two goals or less, and five matches were decided in overtime. Overall, Whitaker maintained a 17th place national ranking for saves per game (6.00).

However, getting to that point was an interesting chain of events. With the dumb decisions or miss a tackle. The perfect example of this is when we played no. 25 Stony Brook, and I played a ball back to Steve that was not easy to handle. Steve cracked a joke about my terrible pass, and then within the next two minutes he stopped an absolute bullet from getting into our net."

Whitaker's excellent relationship with the other players has helped the team immensely.

"Steve has a very outgoing personality and great leadership skills," Nash said. "He interacts with his teammates constantly. It is very important to have a vocal goalkeeper, keeping the team organized and focused throughout the game. Steve does that for us, but more importantly he keeps everything light on the field. He will joke around with our defenders and even players from the other team. This helps take some of the pressure off the team knowing the last line of defense is relaxed and confident."

In addition, Whitaker has learned much from his teammates. "(Goalkeeper) Keith Sheldon and Kevin Clifford were big factors for the way my season went, because day in and day out they never gave up, and they pushed me harder, and forced me to play at the top of my ability," Whitaker said. "I think all three of us pushed each other to that next level and in doing that had a lot of fun."

"(Epley) was one of the seniors on the team, and probably the guy I learned the most from," Whitaker said.

With a solid season under his belt, both Whitaker and Nash are looking towards the next season with high hopes and great anticipation. Nash chose not to recruit any goalies this offseason, confident in Whitaker and his two backups, Sheldon and Clifford.

"If Steve develops into the player he has the potential to become, the best goalkeeper in the Patriot League, it will be no surprise when Bucknell wins its first Patriot League title," Epley said.

RETIREMENT INSURANCE MUTUAL FUNDS TRUST SERVICES TUITION FINANCING

Why is TIAA-CREF the #1 choice nationwide?

The TIAA-CREF Advantage.

Year in and year out, employees at education and research institutions have turned to TIAA-CREF. And for good reasons:

- Easy diversification among a range of expertly managed funds
- A solid history of performance and exceptional personal service
- A strong commitment to low expenses
- Plus, a full range of flexible retirement income options

For decades, TIAA-CREF has helped professors and staff at over 10,000 campuses across the country invest for—and enjoy—successful retirements.

Choosing your retirement plan provider is simple. Go with the leader. TIAA-CREF.

THE TIAA-CREF ADVANTAGE

Investment Expertise

Low Expenses

Customized Payment Options

Expert Guidance

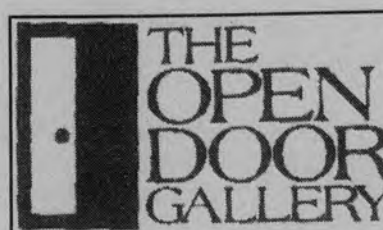

Ensuring the future for those who shape it.™

1.800.842.2776

www.tiaa-cref.org

For more complete information on our securities products, call 1.800.842.2776, ext. 5509, for prospectuses. Read them carefully before you invest. • TIAA-CREF Individual and Institutional Services, Inc. and Teachers' Personal Investors Services, Inc. distribute securities products. • Teachers Insurance and Annuity Association (TIAA), New York, NY and TIAA-CREF Life Insurance Co., New York, NY issue insurance and annuities. • TIAA-CREF Trust Company, FSB provides trust services. • Investment products are not FDIC insured, may lose value and are not bank guaranteed. © 2001 Teachers Insurance and Annuity Association—College Retirement Equities Fund, New York, NY 01002

Call us for a free information package

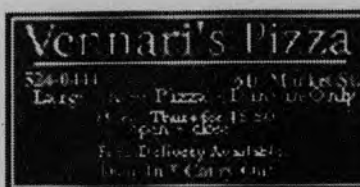

221 Market Street
Lewisburg, PA 17837

Now Featuring

Antique Images of Bucknell $25.00 to $45.00.

Selected Fraternity
Prints $5.00

Come Party at the:

ARIZONA CAFE

Outdoor Patio and Fireside Dining

Quesadillas Chicken Soft Tacos Monster Burritos

Enchiladas Seafood Steaks

Most Meals $9 - $13 No Charge Cards (Checks Accepted)

Bring in this Coupon for 1 FREE virgin margarita with each entree purchased.

From Bucknell: Take Market St (Rt 45). Cross bridge and stay straight until ends. Turn Right. Exactly 4.0 mi on Left.

Open Tues-Thurs 11:30-9, Fri & Sat 11:30-10, Sun 11:30-8

Reservations Recommended

BYOB

BIRTHRIGHT of Sunbury

Free Pregnancy Test
Confidential Counseling

AN ABORTION ALTERNATIVE

Hours: Mon - Wed - Fri 12:30 to 4 pm

351 Woodlawn Ave.
Sunbury, Pa. 17837

570-286-8560
1-800-550-4900

BEAR STEARNS

The hot investment picks of 2001 have just been announced.

Because everyday is the perfect occasion for casual fine dining at...

The Victorian Lady

115 Old Turnpike Road
Lewisburg, PA 17837
Lunch: Mon.-Fri. 11:00-2:00
Dinner: Thurs.-Sat. 5:00-9:00
Phone: (570) 523-8090
www.victorianladyrestaurant.com

5 minutes from campus

TANNING

Full New Nail Services Manicure
Weekly Tanning Specials
Credit Cards Now Accepted
Call for an Appointment

1716 West Market Street, Lewisburg, Pa.
Tel: 570-522-9636

First Impressions Salon

April Special: FREE
Paraffin Wax Dip with Manicure
Service. $5.00 Savings!

Located between
A-1 Lock & Key
And Dominoes
PIZZA

Congratulations to Bucknell's newest additions to Bear Stearns.

Brian Blue
Jeff Gould
Michael Ritz
Andrew Wenner

www.bearstearns.com

© 2001 The Bear Stearns Companies Inc. Bear Stearns is a registered trademark of The Bear Stearns Companies Inc.

Sports

Adam Feldman: the heart and soul of BU ultimate

Ultimate frisbee captain brings a style all his own to the field of play where he works hard and has a little fun on the side.

By JUSTIN WHITE
Contributing Writer

Adam Feldman '01 fully extended his body to "d" the disc, deflecting the frisbee off his opponent down to the turf. Unlike the countless other layouts Feldman had experienced, this one ended in injury. The player from RPI who Feldman was guarding fell to the ground and rolled over Feldman's left arm, leading to a compound fracture. The Bucknell men's ultimate frisbee team was shocked into silence as their co-captain was taken away in an ambulance. The Mudsharks had just lost the "heart and soul" of their team.

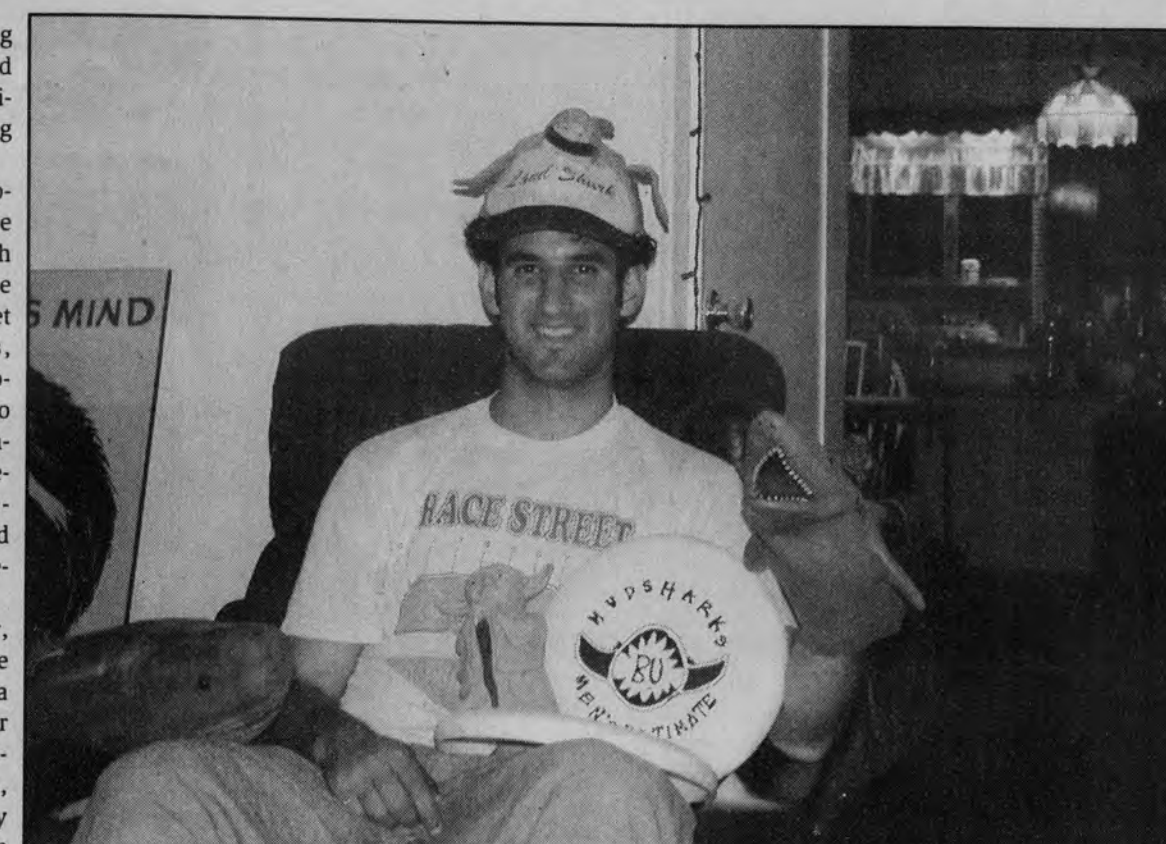

The injury came in the third point of the first game of the Spring 2000 season. Feldman was sidelined for the remainder of the season, relegated to a splint. However, the injury did not prevent the then junior from continuing to leave his mark on the team.

Feldman's competitive fire and dedication to the team came out in the next several weeks. Although he could not participate per doctor's orders, he continued to attend all Mudshark practices and tournaments without fail. His enthusiasm and overwhelming spirit provided much needed inspiration for the young Sharks.

Riding his emotional high, the team swept through sectionals. In the process, they upset two key rivals, Penn State and Upenn to advance to the Regional Championships in Princeton, N.J., something they had failed to do the previous year.

One year later, the Mudsharks are still a team on a mission with their sights set on Nationals in Boston, beginning on May 26. Feldman has since returned from his injury to mold the current season into an intense, integrated and intimidating frisbee force. His secret is simple: he is the hardest-working, most dedicated member of the team.

Captain Adam Feldman '01 has led the Mudsharks to Regionals for the second consecutive year.

The greatest intangible that Feldman brings to the Ultimate field is his uncanny ability to motivate. As Carmen Mauriello '02 described

Feldman, "He is Bucknell ultimate." He is one of the primary reasons that the team has made such tremendous progress in a short amount of time. Two years ago Bucknell, then ranked no. 13 in the country, was upset at sectionals, signaling the end of a Mudshark Ultimate era.

That year the team graduated 12 of its top 15 players. Left with a whole new team of inexperienced players, Feldman, along with co-captain Matthew Fisher '00, had the daunting task of teaching the game to a host of new players.

The team two years ago left me with a message," Feldman said, "and that was: do not let this team fall apart. I believe that I have done that."

In reality, Feldman has rebuilt the current Sharks team with the potential and the opportunity to accomplish more than its predecessors ever did.

This past weekend the team took a giant step toward these goals. Bucknell battled some good competition and Mother Nature at the University of Pittsburgh in Johnstown on Saturday.

On fields saturated with standing water and pits of mud, Bucknell began its quest for Nationals by going 4-0 in pool play to secure a spot as the no. 1 seed heading into Day two. On day two the team easily disposed of two lesser teams to march into the finals. These games included a 15-6 massacre over an unopposed UPitt team.

In the finals were Bucknell and Penn State, a team the Sharks had outworked and outplayed the previous day, in part thanks to a stellar performance by gutsy senior Tim Scheu. Tired from two days in the slop and heat, not to mention only two healthy subs, Bucknell ran out of juice in the finals to lose by a margin of 15-9.

The second place finish gives the Mudsharks a birth to Regionals again in Princeton. This tournament represents Feldman's first game ever in Regionals, a fitting way for the captain to finish out his career. Feldman was also recently recognized as a Callahan Award nominee, handed to the college player of the year.

Bucknell is poised to dominate the rest of the Region on May 5 and 6. The rest of the Region better watch out for Bucknell's furry, pesky captain.

Women's tennis prepares for postseason

Bison Tennis is 4-9 overall.

By CAITY SELLECK
Staff Writer

The Bucknell women's tennis team finished up their regular season Patriot League schedule with a tough loss to Lafayette on their home courts on Monday, April 23. The loss gives the team a record of 0-3 in league play and 4-9 overall. The Bison are now preparing for post-season play, starting with two matches against Millersville and Bloomsburg this week.

The Bison lost a difficult match 6-1 to the Lafayette Leopards with Laura Maisel '03 being the lone winner for the day. Maisel defeated Shannon Rowe in the third singles flight with a score of 6-3, 1-6, 6-3.

Of Maisel, Head Coach Rebecca Helt said, "Laura has the ability to hit a variety of shots and has become an effective all-court player." Maisel has the most number of wins for the Bison this season, with a record of 9-3 in singles play, and 7-2 in doubles action.

The Bison are now preparing for the Patriot League finals which will take place on their home courts, starting on Friday, April 27 and ending Sunday, April 29.

"We've all been working really hard this season, especially as of late. We've been working on trying to get our games together as well as possible, despite the bad weather limiting our practice times," Maisel said. "I think we all know that we can do really well this weekend too. Our record may not reflect it, but we are a very good team that is going to come out and play our hardest this weekend."

As of now, the Bison don't know whom they will be playing, as the League seeding has not yet been decided. The team is looking forward to having the tournament at home though.

"It will be really nice having the tournament at home," Beth Wurzburg '01 said. "Hopefully we'll have some fans to cheer us on at the last tournament of the year."

GOLF From page B1

In fact, it was those middle, split-up 18 holes that proved to be Bucknell's downfall in the tournament.

Overall, aside from those middle 18, the Orange & Blue played well, something they did not only do in the Patriot League Championship, but throughout the season as well. After starting off the spring with a rather discouraging 22nd-place finish at the George Washington Invitational, the Bison improved to finish 10th at the Navy Invitational, before again stepping up to place fourth in the Patriot League Championship this past weekend.

"We started out slow, then definitely improved," notes Kosteva, acknowledging the fact that the brevity of the spring season makes it "difficult to get out on the course and get a lot of practice in," and thus attributed to the slow beginning. That being said, the Bison performed impressively considering the limited amount of time and proper conditions to prepare for matches.

Yet, are the success and improvements the team made during its spring session overshadowed by its having done so well in the previous fall season (essentially winning the championship if not for the scorecard mishap)?

"The bar was raised and there were higher expectations - I think we ran into a little bit of that in the spring," admits Kosteva, but they were also still happy they "got the opportunity to go down and have a shot at winning the championship [again]."

So, while the clubhouse closes shop for this year's Bucknell team, many are wondering: what will the future look like for next year's squad? Considering they are only losing two starters to graduation - Kosteva and Horton, whose presence will be missed - the Bison will remain strong, especially with freshmen Markey and Leeder having another three years ahead of them.

Freeman, who will be a junior, is a prime prospect to lead the team, as he has done throughout the past season, and advancing senior Leibowitz will provide the team the experience it will be losing in Kosteva and Horton. Thus, all things told, it looks to be a bright future on the links for Bucknell, coming on the heels of a successful spring season.

Crew teams competes in Murphy Cup Regatta

By JEFF BOLLE
Contributing Writer

Last Saturday, the Bucknell men's and women's Crew teams participated in the Murphy Cup Regatta hosted by Temple University on the Schuylkill River in Philadelphia, Pa. The Novice Men's eight (freshmen Justin Faden—coxswain, Kyle Goodwin, Will Hart, Mark Harris, Matt Albrecht, Raphael Crowley, John Luthi, Ryan Sexton and Rob Tidmore) rowed to a third-place finish in their preliminary race and easily advanced to the final round of racing.

In the final, the freshmen men rowed strong but finished sixth out of a field of 12 boats. The men rowed in the final with a time of 6:43.88, and the event was won by Marist.

The Novice Women's first eight (freshmen Cristina Meng—coxswain, Karen Schuyler, Rebecca Newman, Kate Boschen, Meggie Coates, Maura Kroh, Laura McWilliams, Lynn Hootman and sophomore Lisa Baranik) won first place in its preliminary race and advanced to the final round of racing.

In the final the women rowed a time of 7:19.05 for third place. The freshmen women lost to Temple in first place and George Mason in second place in a field of 12 boats.

The Novice Women's Lightweight Eight (freshmen Cristina Meng—coxswain, Amie Larson, Jill Harrington, Katie Barreira, Emily Smith, Jacquelyn Mitchell, Joan Wendler, Nicole Tomlin and sophomore Maggie Cook) raced in the Women's Varsity Lightweight Eight as there was no novice event. In this event, the women performed very well coming in third place in a field of five with a time of 7:39.27.

The women fought a close battle with Villanova's novice boat in that event, the same boat they raced at the Knecht Cup three weeks ago, but unfortunately lost by two seconds as Villanova finished in second place.

The women did beat William and Mary's Varsity Eight who finished fourth place by 0.33 seconds in a very tight race. Marist won the event.

The Varsity Lightweight Men's Four (Nikhil Menon '03, cox, Jeremy Urban '02, Trevor Gibson '03, Aaron Bates '03 and Brian Albert '03) faced heavyweight competition in Philadelphia as there was no Lightweight Four race. In the Men's Heavyweight Four event, Bucknell raced in the preliminary heat finishing in fourth place. The boat missed advancing to the final by four seconds to a heavyweight boat from Penn State.

This weekend the team faces stiff competition in the Metropolitan Intercollegiate Championship Regatta hosted by Iona College in New Rochelle, N.Y. on Saturday, and then the Patriot League Championship Regatta hosted by Holy Cross in Worcester, Mass. on Sunday.

The crew team will finish out its season with Mid-Atlantic Regional Championships on Sunday May 6 on the Occoquan Reservoir in Fairfax, Va. and then the final race of the season, the Dad Vail Championships on the Schuylkill River in Philadelphia, Pa. on Friday and Saturday, May 11 and 12.

Track takes first, second at Metro Invite

By ROSE SEDO
Senior Writer

The Bucknell women's track team posted a first-place finish at the Metro Invitational, while the men's team finished runner-up to St. Francis at the meet hosted by Mount St. Mary's this past weekend.

The Bucknell women had five first place showings and finished with 154 points, besting runner-up UMD-Eastern Shore by 35 points.

The Bison men posted five first-place finishes and scored a team total of 152.5 points, falling behind by just three and a half points.

Bucknell's long distance runners fared extremely well. Bryan Johnston '03 and Lou Palma '03 each won their respective events. Johnston won the 3000-meter steeplechase over three of his teammates by finishing the race in 9:26.7h. In the longest race of the afternoon, Palma took first place in the 5K with a 15:07.6h clocking.

The field events proved to be the Bucknell men's strongest events as three first-place finishes were recorded by the Bison.

Freshman Emory Strother was victorious in the long jump with a distance of 23' 8". This jump is a personal record for Strother and also the third best leap all-time at Bucknell.

In the discus throw, senior Shawn Mathews continued his dominance by winning with a final throw of 155' 8".

Rounding out the first place finishes for the BU men was Ryan Stairs '01 in the hammer throw with a toss of 191' 1".

Recording a first place finish for the plate, going 2-2 while Doyle went 2-3.

"We played really well this weekend and came together as a team," Demetriades said. "We strung some hits together to get the wins, unlike before when our hits were more scattered and we couldn't pull it together."

Tuesday's match-up against St. Francis tested the Bison offense, but a slow start in game one kept the Bison from gaining momentum. Although they were the first to get on the board, it wasn't until the fourth inning when Doyle tripled and Junior Kathy Zeevak earned an RBI single to right field.

In the fifth St. Francis answered with three runs, notching a two-run lead, and then earned another run in the top of the sixth. Without much time the Bison were unable to come back from the 4-1 deficit and the Red Flash came away with the victory.

"Weekday games are tough because people aren't really in the right mindset to play," Demetriades said. "Everyone was running to the field from class, and we started off pretty slow."

But in the second game BU avenged that loss, coming out with a run in the first inning that would be the only score of the game. Junior Lauren Trus, Dugan, Ford, and Demetriades combined for the run that eventually gave BU the 1-0 victory. Dugan stood out with a 3-3 performance in the contest.

"In the second game we came out really strong and put away the hits that we needed to," Demetriades said. "It was a good confidence builder to show us what we are capable of doing before we go into this important weekend against Colgate."

Bucknell's record stands at 17-22-2 overall and they will travel Colgate this week-plechase over three of his teammates by finishing the race in 9:26.7h. In the longest race of the afternoon, Palma took first place in the 5K with a 15:07.6h clocking.

The field events proved to be the Bucknell men's strongest events as three first-place finishes were recorded by the Bison.

Freshman Emory Strother was victorious in the long jump with a distance of 23' 8". This jump is a personal record for Strother and also the third best leap all-time at Bucknell.

In the discus throw, senior Shawn Mathews continued his dominance by winning with a final throw of 155' 8".

Rounding out the first place finishes for the BU men was Ryan Stairs '01 in the hammer throw with a toss of 191' 1".

Recording a first place finish for the plate, going 2-2 while Doyle went 2-3.

"We played really well this weekend and came together as a team," Demetriades said. "We strung some hits together to get the wins, unlike before when our hits were more scattered and we couldn't pull it together."

Tuesday's match-up against St. Francis tested the Bison offense, but a slow start in game one kept the Bison from gaining momentum. Although they were the first to get on the board, it wasn't until the fourth inning when Doyle tripled and Junior Kathy Zeevak earned an RBI single to right field.

In the fifth St. Francis answered with three runs, notching a two-run lead, and then earned another run in the top of the sixth. Without much time the Bison were unable to come back from the 4-1 deficit and the Red Flash came away with the victory.

"Weekday games are tough because people aren't really in the right mindset to play," Demetriades said. "Everyone was running to the field from class, and we started off pretty slow."

But in the second game BU avenged that loss, coming out with a run in the first inning that would be the only score of the game. Junior Lauren Trus, Dugan, Ford, and Demetriades combined for the run that eventually gave BU the 1-0 victory. Dugan stood out with a 3-3 performance in the contest.

"In the second game we came out really strong and put away the hits that we needed to," Demetriades said. "It was a good confidence builder to show us what we are capable of doing before we go into this important weekend against Colgate."

Bucknell's record stands at 17-22-2 overall and they will travel Colgate this week-

plechase over three of his teammates by finishing the race in 9:26.7h. In the longest race of the afternoon, Palma took first place in the 5K with a 15:07.6h clocking.

The field events proved to be the Bucknell men's strongest events as three first-place finishes were recorded by the Bison.

Freshman Emory Strother was victorious in the long jump with a distance of 23' 8". This jump is a personal record for Strother and also the third best leap all-time at Bucknell.

In the discus throw, senior Shawn Mathews continued his dominance by winning with a final throw of 155' 8".

Rounding out the first place finishes for the BU men was Ryan Stairs '01 in the hammer throw with a toss of 191' 1".

Recording a first place finish for the plate, going 2-2 while Doyle went 2-3.

"We played really well this weekend and came together as a team," Demetriades said. "We strung some hits together to get the wins, unlike before when our hits were more scattered and we couldn't pull it together."

Tuesday's match-up against St. Francis tested the Bison offense, but a slow start in game one kept the Bison from gaining momentum. Although they were the first to get on the board, it wasn't until the fourth inning when Doyle tripled and Junior Kathy Zeevak earned an RBI single to right field.

In the fifth St. Francis answered with three runs, notching a two-run lead, and then earned another run in the top of the sixth. Without much time the Bison were unable to come back from the 4-1 deficit and the Red Flash came away with the victory.

"Weekday games are tough because people aren't really in the right mindset to play," Demetriades said. "Everyone was running to the field from class, and we started off pretty slow."

But in the second game BU avenged that loss, coming out with a run in the first inning that would be the only score of the game. Junior Lauren Trus, Dugan, Ford, and Demetriades combined for the run that eventually gave BU the 1-0 victory. Dugan stood out with a 3-3 performance in the contest.

"In the second game we came out really strong and put away the hits that we needed to," Demetriades said. "It was a good confidence builder to show us what we are capable of doing before we go into this important weekend against Colgate."

Bucknell's record stands at 17-22-2 overall and they will travel Colgate this week-

plechase over three of his teammates by finishing the race in 9:26.7h. In the longest race of the afternoon, Palma took first place in the 5K with a 15:07.6h clocking.

The field events proved to be the Bucknell men's strongest events as three first-place finishes were recorded by the Bison.

Freshman Emory Strother was victorious in the long jump with a distance of 23' 8". This jump is a personal record for Strother and also the third best leap all-time at Bucknell.

In the discus throw, senior Shawn Mathews continued his dominance by winning with a final throw of 155' 8".

Rounding out the first place finishes for the BU men was Ryan Stairs '01 in the hammer throw with a toss of 191' 1".

Recording a first place finish for the plate, going 2-2 while Doyle went 2-3.

"We played really well this weekend and came together as a team," Demetriades said. "We strung some hits together to get the wins, unlike before when our hits were more scattered and we couldn't pull it together."

Tuesday's match-up against St. Francis tested the Bison offense, but a slow start in game one kept the Bison from gaining momentum. Although they were the first to get on the board, it wasn't until the fourth inning when Doyle tripled and Junior Kathy Zeevak earned an RBI single to right field.

In the fifth St. Francis answered with three runs, notching a two-run lead, and then earned another run in the top of the sixth. Without much time the Bison were unable to come back from the 4-1 deficit and the Red Flash came away with the victory.

"Weekday games are tough because people aren't really in the right mindset to play," Demetriades said. "Everyone was running to the field from class, and we started off pretty slow."

But in the second game BU avenged that loss, coming out with a run in the first inning that would be the only score of the game. Junior Lauren Trus, Dugan, Ford, and Demetriades combined for the run that eventually gave BU the 1-0 victory. Dugan stood out with a 3-3 performance in the contest.

"In the second game we came out really strong and put away the hits that we needed to," Demetriades said. "It was a good confidence builder to show us what we are capable of doing before we go into this important weekend against Colgate."

Bucknell's record stands at 17-22-2 overall and they will travel Colgate this week-

Sports

It's that time again: The 2001 Schen Awards

Harry Carey: Welcome, sports fans, to the best commentary of the semester: the 2001 Schen AwardsTM. I'm your announcer Harry Carey. I want to wish you all a pleasant evening, but I don't want to delay the festivities any longer. Without further adieu (dumroll) I give you host, former Bills' kicker and Schen award winner in the category biggest bastard of all time: Scott Norwood. (Applause)

Scott Norwood: Ha. Ha. Thanks a lot, Harry. In the spirit of Maxim and the variety of magazines that appeal to man's less thoughtful side, I would like to kickoff the fourth, and last, annual Schen awards in the field of excellence. A SchenTM, affectionately referred to as The single greatest honor in the history of the universe without hyperboleTM, has been given to the most deserving candidate in a variety of categories, ranging from best facial hair in sports to the most creative way to dress as a lacrosse stick. And as the biggest bastard of all time, it gives me great honor to introduce the categories for the 2001 Schen AwardsTM.

The SchenTM for the most competitive and intense show on TV that isn't considered a sport but should be goes to The Iron Chef.

If you haven't had an opportunity to tune into this dynamo on the Food Network, it is about time you did. In Kitchen Arena, two men stand, waiting to display their culinary prowess. One is a challenger; the other is the Iron Chef, a man who carries with him the reputation of being the premiere chef in all the land. When the grand master of operations starts the show, a secret ingredient, anything ranging from bamboo to piglets, is lowered from the ceiling, and the two competitors have an hour to prepare the most exotic and tasteful dishes they can. The show is jam packed with instant replays, sizzling with which the NFL was a little slow to pick up on, and a variety of fires and spills. It culminates in a taste test featuring a panel of Japanese celebrities, which is so intense that it could get anyone's adrenaline pumping, and/or you licking your lips. On New Year's day, when I was lucky enough to catch three hours of the 24-hour Iron Chef marathon, I knew it was going to be a hell of a year. (laughter)

Speaking of a hell of a year—that is exactly what Comedy Central had with their shows South Park and The Man Show. But they also had their blunders. That is why the SchenTM for the worst pseudo-sports show in television history goes to Battlebots.

If you were unfortunate enough to keep the TV on after The Man Show on Sunday nights, you probably caught this. I know what you were thinking. "How could fighting robots be boring?" Simpler: there were only two or three fights in a half of an hour, and they were so durable that little damage was done. My advice: if you want to see machines get destroyed either watch Office Space or take a sledgehammer to your toaster. It is good aerobic exercise and you want have to get their CEO and shed a few pounds at the same time. (laughter)

You know who could lose a few pounds — that Charles Barkley. Boy, he is something. (laughter) But it is his personality, more than his weight, that made him the Schen AwardTM winner for The biggest goof in basketball history. This year we have a similar award, but with a more derogatory nature. That's right. This year's SchenTM for the biggest clown in sports history goes to Daryl Strawberry.

I was a Mets fan back and '86. Between he and Doc Gooden, the team, and/or crack industry, (laughter) had enough talent to keep it going for years. I was heart broken when Strawberry was traded to LA, and I was equally saddened when I heard that it was discovered that he had cancer. But between all of his drug convictions and suspensions from baseball, I have become a little more skeptical. His latest maneuver: kidnapping himself and demanding ransom money. It sounds like something a little kid would do because he was grounded and didn't get his allowance.

And in our studio audience today we have a few distinguished members of the Clown School honor role: Boxing rapist and all-around loose cannon, Mike Tyson (applause); Lawrence "I'm not smoking all the crack" Taylor (applause); and cork-battling child-abusing slugger, Albert Belle (standing ovation as all three bow to the audience).

And speaking of Albert Belle's intolerance, our next award winner would probably be just the type of guy Belle would beat up. He is known not only for his scoring on the links, but his style as well. The SchenTM for best dresser in all of sports goes to Jesper Parnevik.

Tiger has his red Nike official sponsor, so their name had to appear at least once in this commentary) shirts on Sundays and Greg Norman has his own line of clothing, but they have nothing on this guy. I don't care how he plays — as long as Jesper is wearing pink pants and tipping the bill of his hat up, this guy is a bad ass. What would you think if you saw him on the first tee of the Bucknell golf course and had never heard of him before? You would point and laugh... maybe even hit a divot in his direction. Yet he has managed to do it. Apparently, this guy has three walk-in closets of clothes in his Florida home. Not only that, but he once ate sand to cleanse his digestive system. I don't know what that has to do with clothes, but it is pretty cool.

But you don't know cool until you see the starting five for Schen-Nike-Taco Bell Cooldest names in Basketball team. Introducing the men who keep it real, keep it exciting, and take their names to a whole new level: God Shamgod, Scoonie Penn, Nyambi Nyambi, Bootsie Thornton, and Boobacar Aw.

And when you think of names and sports video games, one should come to mind. That's right, the man who once attached four extra legs to a turkey so he could diagram it on FOX, John Madden. (applause as Madden salutes the crowd) The SchenTM for the best video game commentary goes to Madden 64.

This was a close call. We considered NHL 99 too with its "Welcome to the roadkill cafe" and "northbound on a southbound freeway," but Madden took the cake. The classic, "With a hit like that you should be equipped with lights and a horn," is fun for everyone. And Madden was never one to shy away from pointing figures. In many a close game with friends, I would have the ball, third and goal on the three-yard line only to get sacked and hear Madden cheerfully proclaim, "he'll remember that number." On the ensuing play, my quarterback overthrew my receiver, and I hear, "that was just a bad throw." In both cases, the mockery caused me to throw the controller at the TV, knocking the remnants of my suppersies fries to the ground.

Anyway, I hope this awards show cleared the uprisings, and didn't sail wide right like the Bills' Superbowl hopes in 1990. (laughter)

Harry Carey: Thanks Scott, you did a terrific job. It is good to see you finally took up a profession in which you can be successful. (laughter) Anyway, I'm Harry Carey signing off for Tim Scheu and the rest of the folks here at the Bucknellian. It has been a great four years, and I'll miss it tremendously. Goodnight.

COMMENTARY

TIM SCHEU
Senior Editor

Bison steamroll the Nittany Lions

10-6 victory over 19th-ranked Penn State marks last lacrosse game at East Field

By PAT EVANS
Staff Writer

The tenth-ranked Bucknell Bison Men's Lacrosse team hosted the nineteenth-ranked Penn State Nittany Lions on Wednesday, April 18, besting them 10-6 in the last lacrosse game ever on Bucknell's East Field.

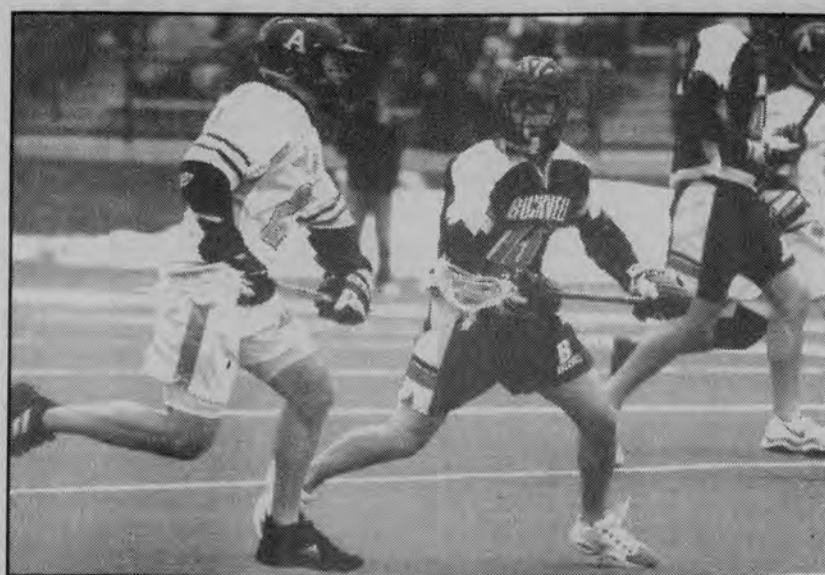

"Anytime Bucknell plays Penn State in anything it's always a highly competitive situation," Head Coach Sid Jamieson said. "I don't care if it's Tidley Winks."

Kelly Hogue '03 led the way for the Bison, and helped the team jump out to an early lead by scoring two goals in the first five minutes of play, followed by John Terracciano '03 who increased the lead to 4-1 by the end of the first quarter.

"My teammates play the most important role in my scoring," Hogue said. "I was just taking advantage of great opportunities."

Penn State refused to quit despite its early woes, and tied the score at four in the second quarter. Both the Lions and the Bison traded goals until the start of the fourth quarter where they remained knotted at six, before the Bison finally pulled out ahead.

Michael Cheng '01 fed Dennis Geraghty '03 who scored his 37th goal of the season, a game winner, to take the lead 7-6. It was all Orange and Blue from then on as they went on to score three more goals in the fourth to take the victory.

Courtesy of Athletic Communications
Midfielder John Terracciano '03 tracks an opposing attacker.

Hogue got many great opportunities in the transition game and ended the game with five goals. It was these fast break opportunities that left him alone with the goalie that gave the spark that Bucknell's offense needed to take care of the Lions.

At the other end of the field the Bison were able to stifle the few opportunities that Penn State was given. Helping the team hold the Lions to just six goals was the outstanding defense anchored by goalie Justin Sussman '03 who tallied 16 saves in the game.

"I was thrilled with our performance because we did what we needed to do," Jamieson said. "We took the air out of the ball, and our defense continued to make it difficult for the opposition to generate offense."

The win over Penn State just adds to the historical season that this Bison team has created. For the first time ever Bucknell will compete in the NCAA tournament. They have clinched the Patriot League crown for the first time since 1996, but their sights are on its sole ownership. As it stands, a loss in their last regular season game against Lehigh would force them to share the championship with Hobart, a team that they beat earlier in the season.

The final game also has implications for seeding in the tournament, but the Bison don't need any extra motivation. "Every time you go out on the field you have to prove yourself again," Jamieson said. "Regardless of seeding or the Patriot League championship."

The squad has met its preseason goal of sweeping the Patriot League and moving on to the NCAA tournament, but the Bison refuse to slacken their intensity. In 1996 Bucknell felt that it should have been admitted to the NCAA tournament since they won the Patriot League championship. Now that they have, they know that the only way to know for sure if they belong is to win games in the postseason.

"It's been an unbelievable season," Geraghty said. "I just hope we can come together as a team and go far in the tournament."

Women's lax wins last two of season

By CHUCK VICENTE
Staff Writer

The Bucknell women's lacrosse team ended its season on a high note, winning their last two games behind the strong defensive performance of goalkeeper Nicole Kallis '03.

Kallis was selected as the Patriot League's Defensive Player of the Week for the third consecutive time. She recorded an impressive 26 saves over the weekend against Lehigh and Drexel; her save percentage against the former was 72.0. Her overall save percentage of .617 ranks Kallis fifth in the nation in that category.

The Orange and Blue played two back-to-back, away games on Saturday and Sunday. In order for Bucknell to make it into the Patriot League Championships, they had to beat Lehigh while Colgate had to beat Villanova. Unfortunately, Villanova won knocking the Bison out of the tournament.

"There were a lot of circumstances riding on the Lehigh game. We played together as a team and pulled through with a victory. It's just unfortunate that we did not make it into the PL Championships," tri-captain Ashley Evans '01 said.

Bucknell set the pace on Saturday by scoring three unanswered goals against Lehigh. Lehigh scored a goal of its own, but Jen Holiday '01 found the back of the net to retain the three-goal cushion.

After Lehigh scored another goal, tri-captain Karl Evans '01 tallied goal one in a series of three in the game.

The Bison led 5-2 at the end of the first half. Scoring two goals half way through the second half, Paige Brewster '01 and Melissa Montefusco '02 added two more to give the give Bucknell a good lead.

However, Lehigh managed to score two more of its own, but two more Bison goals and the impenetrable Kallis in goal sealed Bucknell's win. Kallis saved 18 shots, and the Bison won 11-7.

Afterwards, the team did not have very long to rest, facing Drexel the next day in a long battle that spilled over into two overtime periods.

"It was a tough game because it was back-to-back, but we came through on top. It was great to end the season on a strong note," K. Evans said.

Drexel led in the first half 6-4, but Bucknell notched two in the beginning of the second half to tie the score. One intense moment in the game came when Bucknell was trailing by one goal as Amy Hasler '04 found the back of the net with 23 seconds left in the game to send it into overtime.

After a scoreless first overtime, the second overtime favored the Bison. After a big save by Kallis, the ball was sent on the attacking end for Bucknell. A. Evans made a run at the goal and found the back of the net, winning the game for Bucknell.

"It was incredibly exciting. The team did a great job of sending the game into overtime and then on the defensive end, Nicole Kallis had a huge save. The ball then went down to our attacking end, and Ashley Evans took it to the goal nailing it was awesome!" Head Coach Barb Jordan said.

Defensively, tri-captain Annie Richards '01 and Kallis split time in goal. Richards '01 and Kallis split time in goal. Richards '01 and Kallis split time in goal.

See Lacrosse, page A

Softball fights for place in tournament

By BROOKE REA
Sports Editor

In a week leading up to their most important doubleheader of the season, the Bison softball team stepped it up 4-2 in two doubleheaders against Lafayette and one against St. Francis. This weekend the Bison take on Colgate and a sweep of the Red Raiders will guarantee Bucknell a place in the Patriot League Tournament, as they are currently in a three-way tie for second place in the league.

Over the weekend BU hosted Lafayette for four games, taking two on Saturday and splitting Sunday's pair. The first game of the weekend was all Bucknell, as they hammered out 14 hits against the Leopards en route to a 10-1 victory.

Although Lafayette scored one in the top of the first inning, they were kept at bay by sophomore pitcher Brandi Porter who struck out two. In their half of the inning BU scored three runs off as many hits, and from there they held Lafayette to one while going on a scoring run.

Three runs in the fourth and four in the fifth sealed the game for the Bison due to the eight-run rule. Porter's excellent play continued, as she allowed only four hits and struck out five batters.

In the second game of the day neither team got on the board at the start. It wasn't until the top of the fifth that the Leopards notched one run, and they carried that lead into the bottom of the sixth when Bucknell finally came alive. Off of four hits BU tallied five runs, giving them a solid 5-1 lead.

In the seventh, Lafayette made an attempt to stay in the game, scoring three runs before BU's defense put an end to their play. Sophomore Lauren Box pitched six innings and struck out two, earning the win, while Porter came to the mound in the seventh to get her first save of the season. Ford was once again big at the plate, going 2-3.

On Sunday the Bison were ready to make the weekend a sweep, taking a 3-0 lead in the bottom of the third. It seemed like the game was in the bag, as BU carried the lead to the top of the seventh, but Lafayette scored three runs in the frame off of two hits and one error. BU couldn't put one up in the bottom of the inning, so the game went into extra innings.

Porter tallied her eighth win of the season when she took down three batters in the seventh. She pitched the whole game, giving up seven hits and earning five strike-outs. Dugan was big

With the momentum in their favor, Lafayette notched three runs in the top of the eighth, and BU couldn't answer back. The Leopards came away with a

See SOFTBALL, page B5

Sports Trivia

By Justin McCarthy

- 1) Who was the only MLB player to play for the Braves in Boston, Milwaukee, and Atlanta?
- 2) Which NHL goalie has the most career playoff victories?
- 3) Which MLB player has the longest active streak of consecutive seasons hitting over .300?

Bison Calendar

CREW		MEN'S LACROSSE
Sat.-Sun., April 28-29	Sat. at Kerr Cup	Sat., April 28 at Lehigh	1:00 p.m.
Sun. at Patriot League Championships
WOMEN'S TENNIS		SOFTBALL
Sat.-Sun., April 28-29		Sat.-Sun., April 28-29
Patriot League Championships		Sat: 1:00 p.m. at Colgate (2)
		Sun: 1:00 p.m. at Colgate (2)
OUTDOOR TRACK & FIELD		BASEBALL
Fri.-Sat., April 27-28		Sat.-Sun., April 28-29
Fri. at Penn Relays		Sat: 12:00 p.m. vs. Army (2)
Sat. at Penn Relays		Sun: 12:00 p.m. vs. Lehigh (2)
at Millersville Metrics

Arts & Entertainment

Symphonic Band and Orchestra perform concert

By GRACE ANNIS
Staff Writer

While many University students were lining up outside the Fieldhouse in eager anticipation of the Shaggy concert last Friday night, many others were performing in the Symphonic Band and Orchestra Concert in the Weis Center. About 300 people attended the concert, which showcased the talents of many University students.

The Symphonic Band, under the direction of Dr. William Kenny, performed first and began its program with a piece composed by Karl L. King, "Barnum and Bailey's Favorite." The rousing opening led into a consistently energetic piece with brilliant dynamics and well-pronounced crescendos. The brass section was especially strong in this piece. Kenny then gave an introduction to the next piece, and welcomed the audience to "the Shaggy concert."

The second piece in the program was a contemporary composition by Yasuhide Ito, called "Festal Scenes." The beginning of the piece was very soothing and contained a fine flute solo by Erin McLaughlin '01. This piece was also characterized by the gradual entrance of the brass section behind the woodwinds and the slowly building percussion, giving the premonition of the powerful ending. The gong and drum rolls loudly concluded the piece.

Following this performance, Kenny recognized the 18 seniors that will be graduating this year, telling the audience that in the course of their membership in the Symphonic Band, they have spent an average of 500 hours rehearsing and performing their music.

The band then performed Percy Grainger's "Irish Tune from County Derry." This was a very moving piece that featured the strong woodwind and low brass sections of the band. Grainger also composed the next piece in the Symphonic Band's program, "Shepherd's Hey." This interesting and lighthearted composition featured the mallet percussion and was a good contrast to the wistful character of the preceding piece.

The final selection was "Lorva Horovel (Songs from Lorva)" from Alfred Reed's "Armenian Dances." This was an uplifting addition to the concert program. The orchestra began the piece with "Overture to Pique Dame," composed by Franz von Suppe, a composer of several lesser-known operettas. The piece was full of what Dr. Para called "lighthearted gaiety" and was an uplifting addition to the concert program. At the conclusion of this performance, Dr. Para also took the time to individually congratulate 10 seniors who contributed their time and talents to the orchestra. The orchestra ended the concert with the famous Aaron Copland work, "A Lincoln Portrait," composed as a tribute to President Abraham Lincoln. Copland is also known for such works as "Appalachian Spring" and "Fanfare for the Common Man." The most interesting thing about this work is that it incorporates spoken word with the music. In the form of excerpts from Lincoln's Inaugural and Gettysburg Addresses, interspersed with biographical information, President Rogers provided a moving reading along with the music, most accurately described as "pensive" by Dr. Para.

Another interesting aspect of this piece is that it features parts of songs from Lincoln's time. The most recognizable of these was "Camptown Races." After the original introduction of this theme, variations on it can be heard throughout the rest of the piece, which equally featured all the instrumental sections of the orchestra. The performance of this work was a strong ending to an evening of music by the University's students and faculty.

Shaggy graced our campus with his "oh so amazing" presence last weekend and I hope that the entire University community has learned its lesson.

Our star took the stage right at 9 p.m. and wasted no time in banging out all of his greatest hits. If you were there early enough, you would have caught radio favorites like "Angel," "Boombastic," "Mr. Lover," "It Wasn't Me" and a few other familiar reggae-pop tunes. For Shaggy fans, this must have been the climax of the concert, although there was no build-up whatsoever.

Shaggy, after pumping his audience with a quick fix of number one hits, proceeded to make an attempt at prolonging the show. Much to the audience's dismay, all to be heard were Santana covers and other not-so-great music.

I speak for the majority of the University campus, which was certainly not the majority of the crowd, in saying that Shaggy was a bomb of a concert. Since the show was held in a manner unlike the usual campus concert—without an opener—many students missed the beginning of the show, which was all that the $15 was worth. Those who missed the first half an hour were offered mediocre entertainment as compensation. Even some out-of-town die-hard Shaggy fans that have traveled all over to see him were disappointed with this performance.

I hope that the Bucknell Concert Committee will learn a few things from this experience. First, the Fieldhouse is a terrible place to have a concert. With the understanding that it is the largest space possible for such an event, higher ticket sales and profits resulted. That should not be the reason for having such events. The acoustics are simply awful and surely students will pay more to see a band that they like in order to have the show in a nice place, like the Weis Center.

In a case such as the Shaggy concert, "sure, we sold out," great! But the crowd at the concert was overwhelmingly non-University people, which clearly shows that Shaggy was not a popular choice among the student body. Isn't the point of having this concert, one in which tickets are sold to University students first, to be an event that lots of us want to go to? Shouldn't our votes take priority over a committee's financial and commercial interests? I believe I would be hard-pressed to find many in disagreement with these claims.

I did not hear one single positive comment on the concert this weekend and I made an effort to speak with many different people. It is well-known that the Fieldhouse has terrible acoustics and why we keep having concerts there baffles me. Although not as many students will be able to attend, I think that concerts at the Weis Center should be considered. I believe that students would pay double the present ticket price, which would still fall short of the average concert ticket price. If the entertainment we hire is so popular that it will need the use of the Fieldhouse, the group ought to be popular among University students, not just among local teens.

Since my arrival at the University, I have seen some good music performances, but none of them were at the Fieldhouse and none of them were part of a big event. The Concert Committee needs to make more of an effort to find out what we, the students, want, and find a better place to hold such events. The ideology behind planning large concerts right now is flawed and inconsistent of those whose opinions should be most respected.

The highlight of the night was when classic rocker Neil Young, who opened the show, joined the band onstage for a unique rendition of Bob Dylan's "All Along the Watchtower," one that stands above the other versions that DMB has performed.

If nothing else, the night showed that Dave Matthews can, in fact, play an electric guitar with ease and that no matter how much a new album may disappoint, nothing beats a live performance. While this was not the best Dave Matthews Band show ever, it was certainly one to remember.

ticket sales to charity, the boys returned home for what was probably the most anticipated gig in their 10-year history.

However, the problem with a show that has as much hype as this one did, is that unless the performance is perfect, people will say it was disappointing or just plain bad. DMB surely knew this and from the moment the band walked on the stage, it was clear that they were a little nervous about the experience. Fans had been criticizing their new album, Everyday, and people were not sure how these songs would carry over live.

Truth be told, they played beautiful and low brass sections of the band. Grainger also composed the next piece in the Symphonic Band's program, "Shepherd's Hey." This interesting and lighthearted composition featured the mallet percussion and was a good contrast to the wistful character of the preceding piece.

The Symphonic Band provided a well-chosen program of unique and varied music, and clarinet player Megan McCarthy '04 said she thought the concert went well and the group was prepared for it.

The University Orchestra performed next, under the direction of Dr. Christopher Para. In addition to students, the Orchestra also contains several members of the faculty.

The orchestra began the program with "Overture to Pique Dame," composed by Franz von Suppe, a composer of several lesser-known operettas. The piece was full of what Dr. Para called "lighthearted gaiety" and was an uplifting addition to the concert program. At the conclusion of this performance, Dr. Para also took the time to individually congratulate 10 seniors who contributed their time and talents to the orchestra. The orchestra ended the concert with the famous Aaron Copland work, "A Lincoln Portrait," composed as a tribute to President Abraham Lincoln. Copland is also known for such works as "Appalachian Spring" and "Fanfare for the Common Man." The most interesting thing about this work is that it incorporates spoken word with the music. In the form of excerpts from Lincoln's Inaugural and Gettysburg Addresses, interspersed with biographical information, President Rogers provided a moving reading along with the music, most accurately described as "pensive" by Dr. Para.

Another interesting aspect of this piece is that it features parts of songs from Lincoln's time. The most recognizable of these was "Camptown Races." After the original introduction of this theme, variations on it can be heard throughout the rest of the piece, which equally featured all the instrumental sections of the orchestra. The performance of this work was a strong ending to an evening of music by the University's students and faculty.

Shaggy graced our campus with his "oh so amazing" presence last weekend and I hope that the entire University community has learned its lesson.

Our star took the stage right at 9 p.m. and wasted no time in banging out all of his greatest hits. If you were there early enough, you would have caught radio favorites like "Angel," "Boombastic," "Mr. Lover," "It Wasn't Me" and a few other familiar reggae-pop tunes. For Shaggy fans, this must have been the climax of the concert, although there was no build-up whatsoever.

Shaggy, after pumping his audience with a quick fix of number one hits, proceeded to make an attempt at prolonging the show. Much to the audience's dismay, all to be heard were Santana covers and other not-so-great music.

I speak for the majority of the University campus, which was certainly not the majority of the crowd, in saying that Shaggy was a bomb of a concert. Since the show was held in a manner unlike the usual campus concert—without an opener—many students missed the beginning of the show, which was all that the $15 was worth. Those who missed the first half an hour were offered mediocre entertainment as compensation. Even some out-of-town die-hard Shaggy fans that have traveled all over to see him were disappointed with this performance.

I hope that the Bucknell Concert Committee will learn a few things from this experience. First, the Fieldhouse is a terrible place to have a concert. With the understanding that it is the largest space possible for such an event, higher ticket sales and profits resulted. That should not be the reason for having such events. The acoustics are simply awful and surely students will pay more to see a band that they like in order to have the show in a nice place, like the Weis Center.

In a case such as the Shaggy concert, "sure, we sold out," great! But the crowd at the concert was overwhelmingly non-University people, which clearly shows that Shaggy was not a popular choice among the student body. Isn't the point of having this concert, one in which tickets are sold to University students first, to be an event that lots of us want to go to? Shouldn't our votes take priority over a committee's financial and commercial interests? I believe I would be hard-pressed to find many in disagreement with these claims.

I did not hear one single positive comment on the concert this weekend and I made an effort to speak with many different people. It is well-known that the Fieldhouse has terrible acoustics and why we keep having concerts there baffles me. Although not as many students will be able to attend, I think that concerts at the Weis Center should be considered. I believe that students would pay double the present ticket price, which would still fall short of the average concert ticket price. If the entertainment we hire is so popular that it will need the use of the Fieldhouse, the group ought to be popular among University students, not just among local teens.

Since my arrival at the University, I have seen some good music performances, but none of them were at the Fieldhouse and none of them were part of a big event. The Concert Committee needs to make more of an effort to find out what we, the students, want, and find a better place to hold such events. The ideology behind planning large concerts right now is flawed and inconsistent of those whose opinions should be most respected.

The highlight of the night was when classic rocker Neil Young, who opened the show, joined the band onstage for a unique rendition of Bob Dylan's "All Along the Watchtower," one that stands above the other versions that DMB has performed.

If nothing else, the night showed that Dave Matthews can, in fact, play an electric guitar with ease and that no matter how much a new album may disappoint, nothing beats a live performance. While this was not the best Dave Matthews Band show ever, it was certainly one to remember.

ticket sales to charity, the boys returned home for what was probably the most anticipated gig in their 10-year history.

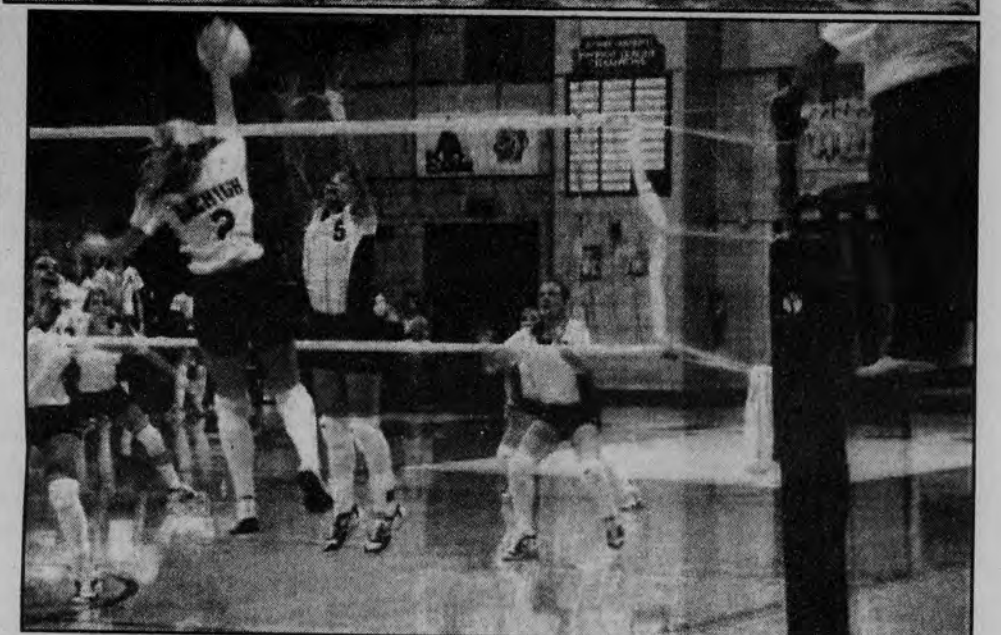

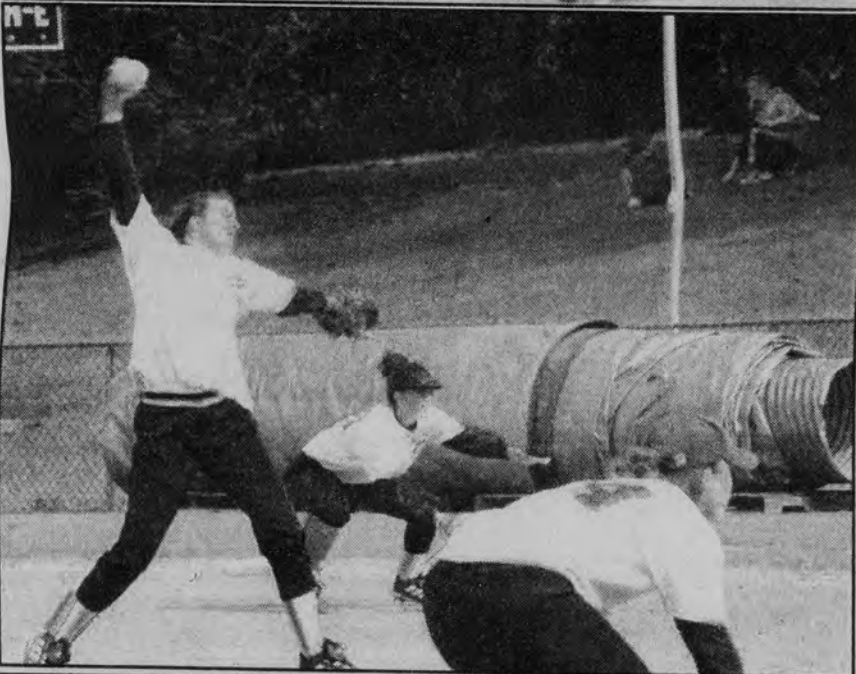

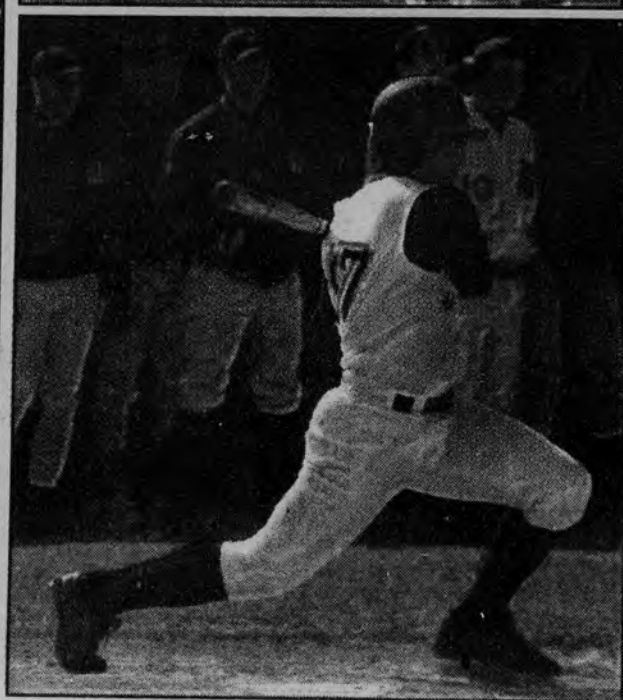

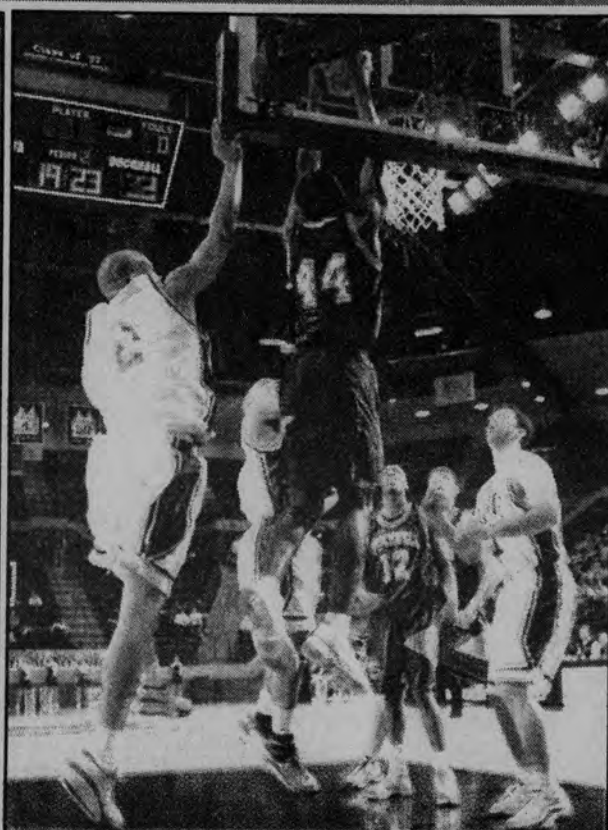

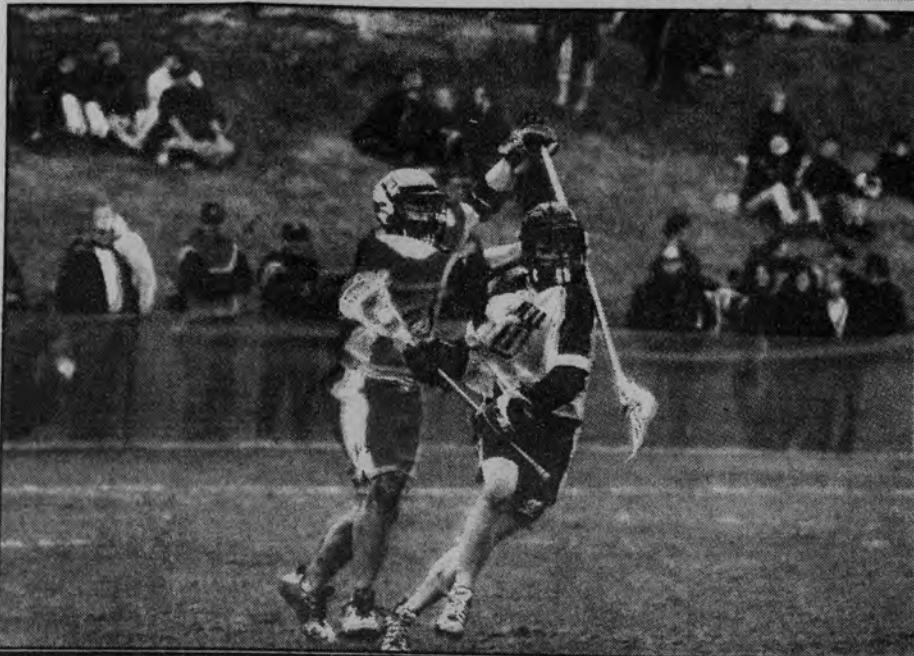

However, the problem with a show that has as much hype as this one did, is that unless the performance is perfect, people will say it was disappointing or just plain bad. DMB surely knew this and from the moment the band walked on the stage, it was clear that they were a little nervous about the experience. Fans had been criticizing their new album, Everyday, and people were not sure how these songs would carry over live.

Truth be told, they played beautiful and low brass sections of the band. Grainger also composed the next piece in the Symphonic Band's program, "Shepherd's Hey." This interesting and lighthearted composition featured the mallet percussion and was a good contrast to the wistful character of the preceding piece.

The Symphonic Band provided a well-chosen program of unique and varied music, and clarinet player Megan McCarthy '04 said she thought the concert went well and the group was prepared for it.

Sports

The year in

Bucknell Sports
2000-2001

Spread compiled by Adam
Haas '01

Photos are file photos or courtesy of Athletic Communications

